A society where there are only sellers and buyers; with everybody out to rob and cheat his neighbor: and no givers but only takers is an insane, negative system which makes no human sense and will not last long and is guaranteed to fail. The fact is, in our modern paper economy, nobody feels good about what they buy or sell. The addiction and craze of buying and selling has exploded into a global frenzy, a feeding frenzy of the now-globalized masses copying the filthiest customs of the richest people on earth. EBay, the world stock exchange markets, global trade, globalization: turning everything into a commodity which can be bought or sold; is fomenting a worldwide culture of such insane greed and spiritual sickness: mankind will soon die from its own corruptions.

Why is helping people better than using money?

One: it makes everyone more honest and more equal. Then you don't have people believing they are better than other people simply because they have more paper money than others do anymore. The culture of worshipping the rich and famous disappears. No more billionaires no more movie stars no more idols to worship.

Two: it prevents the abuse of money and selfishness. It prevents addictions. A coffee junkie looking for his 3rd cup of coffee that day will be recognized and refused service. Cocaine addicts will not be given any cocaine for their habit. Fat people will not be given ice cream and Twinkie bars and foods filled with fat: instead they will be lectured on the unhealthy ways they eat and told to do some exercise and be given healthy vegetables to eat instead of hamburgers and coke. People who like helping others will not knowingly do anything to injure another living soul. Only if the request for help is reasonable and intelligent and the person asking for help does indeed need it will any help be given.

Three: It prevents excess. It prevents all the excesses of waste and laziness and bad living habits. People asking help to clean out garbage from their homes will not be helped after their neighbors find out they are hoarders and are collecting all kinds of useless junk in their basements and garages and homes. Instead they will be given lectures on the evils of avarice and hoarding, and soon everyone who sees them coming will not give them anything period; and they will be left with all the useless filthy rotten shit they already have, and be exposed as empty selfish greedy people whom nobody will want to have anything to do with.

Four: it prevents secrecy. People helping people do not hold secrets from each other, in fact the most hidden secrets will be exposed as each person is forced to ask for help with something they cannot handle or control. Secret failings and weaknesses will no longer be hidden behind a false façade of dollars and paper money and false wealth and false status. People will be valued for what they can contribute to their society: not for how well they can rob all the rest of society of its wealth.

Five: It raises the entire level of equality by allowing those who are actually good at something to shine and never be held down by any competitive cunning unfair capitalist sneakery and behind-the-scenes, behind closed doors swindlers planning their sneaky little dirty tricks to amass more money for themselves. It will enhance both the natural equality of all human beings and give people the best examples to live by and follow. It will improve society instead of worsening it as the capitalist system has always done and continues to do so.

Six: every criminal element, every unhealthy addiction and practice will be starved to death because nobody will want to help gambling addicts more money to gamble with or give alcoholics more booze to get drunk on, or pornography addicts any help in their filthy habits whatsoever. The entire culture of legalized pornography, legalized gambling, legalized drug addictions will be wiped off the earth and the human race will be better off for it. Meat eater will not be given meat to eat... Farmer will not be helped to butcher and kill animals by anyone. People will be forced to live clean, healthy decent good lives and not waste their time on things like entertainment and computers and the internet. People will not help their neighbors to import goods from overseas: all global shit trade will disappear and countries will stop eating pickles from Poland and tomatoes from Mexico and grow their own fucking pickles and tomatoes and have fresher better produce as a result. All of the international cartel rich bankers will go out of business and they will become extinct as will all corporations. Self-sufficient communities will only help other self-sufficient communities IF what is asked for is something they agree is needed and only IF the community which comes to them for help passes their rigorous standards on what is a good community and what is a rotten bad one with a bad reputation that cannot be trusted or dealt with.. As a result community values and ethics and morals will be raised to such a high degree that any community not looked upon favorably by all of its neighbors will shrivel and die: as it should.

Seven: When you honestly need help for something: and cannot do what you need yourself: this forces you to become as self-sufficient as an individual and as a community simply because going hat-in-hand begging for help from anyone is a shameful thing to do in the first place... That is unless what you are trying to do is shared by all people on earth> in that case, you will not be asking for help anymore, you will be cooperating with millions of people who agree with what you want to do and want to do it too... No more will the idea of being a volunteer be the lowest most sneered unpopular human activity on earth. Volunteering to help out of the goodness of your heart will be raised higher than any other moral good on Earth: and the entire system of values based upon consumers stuffing their faces with whatever they can find by buying and selling crap using money will be wiped off the earth as it should and the world and human beings will be the better for it.

The point is: when human beings stop sharing: they stop being human. They become rotten pieces of immoral unethical amoral, greedy selfish filth, and the only reason people can get away with not sharing anything: and I mean NOTHING: not their lives, not their emotions, not their thoughts, not their worldly possessions, not their time, not their presence, not their fucking paper money... is because the system of paper money and buying and selling is the only fucking human culture left in the world, and that norm allows them to get away with it.

Before the Protestants

Before Martin Luther changed Europe for what he thought was for the better; and which in his own lifetime, he came to see his mistake... there was an older evil; the church. The church which Martin Luther railed against and criticized. A church that had become so bloated with corruption, so venal and fat with riches, so powerful; that it was more powerful than the most powerful kings in Europe. A thousand volumes could not do justice or describe all of its crimes and sins and atrocities. It could excommunicate Kings from Christian society, it could even excommunicate Popes from Christian society.. The only reason that Martin Luther succeeded in his rebellion against the church he was a part of was because the northern Kings took his side in the matter and decided to authorize his criticisms as having validity. It was a fight for power at the very height of European political-religious society; nothing else. The secular northern Kings and aristocrats against the entire Catholic Church.

How had the church become so powerful? The answer is: the confessional. The idea that you had to confess all of your sins to your priest. Even kings were supposed to practice confessing their sins. The lords and ladies were all supposed to do it. All of Europe, regardless of class, had been brainwashed from birth into the idea that the church was the only power that could absolve them from sin. By confessing their sins to the church: they could go out and live; cleansed and free of sin... to sin again, and again, and again, and again, and again... comforted by the knowledge that all which was needed to absolve themselves of a particularly gruesome murder or rape or theft or betrayal or atrocity or massacre... of innocent children, girls, women, their friends and family,, all they had to do was confess themselves as a sinner to some priest, and be forgiven of their sins.

Why was this a crucial advantage? Simple. Through the practice and tradition and custom of the confessional, the Church came to know more about every nefarious plot, every underhanded deal, every secret crime, every secret sin, crime, evil... than the great Kings did. Because of the confessional; they knew what was going on at every level of society before anyone else knew of it, and they used this secret knowledge. They used it to enrich themselves, until the church owned more land and controlled more wealth than the kings did, until the powers behind the throne were Cardinals: not dukes or princes or royalty. They used this belief in being absolved of your sin by confession to the utmost. Rich powerful men and women on their deathbeds... confessed their sins to the church, and gave all of their earthly possessions and wealth and property to the church just to escape going to hell, just so they would not burn in hell for eternity. And what did the church do, when a dying terrified soul begged to be allowed to give his confession of his sins before he died? The church refused to even listen to their confession... unless he bequeathed all of his worldly possessions to the church. Only then did the church know that the confession was a sincere one of contrition. This cunning form of religious blackmail continues to this day. The religious belief that this final act of atonement on their deathbed would absolve them of all the sins and crimes they committed in their entire life. Why do you think it is so important for a priest to be at your side just before you die? Where do you think this custom came from, eh? From Catholics confessing their sins every Sunday? If they confessed their sins every fucking Sunday of their lives as obedient brainwashed Catholics: why did they need this extra final confession just before they died, eh? It came from the Catholic church using fear, the fear of dying, the fear of death, as a form of blackmail; that's where it came from.

You can't take it with you when you die anyways; so when you know you have only a few more hours or days more to live... and all your wealth and land and castles will be of no more use to you... why not invest it in your future spiritual after-life? Why not invest all of your worldly wealth in your after-life, eh? Any greedy selfish investor would see the shrewdness in this. Any avaricious soul, any greedy little hoarder, anyone with larceny in their heart would see the wisdom of it. That is... as long as they loved the church and loved god more than they loved their family and children. Any parent who loved their family and did not want to impoverish their own loved ones would not see the wisdom in this idea. Only if you believe in the God of the Old Testament: and like Abraham: be willing to sacrifice your living sons to an imaginary invisible god, can this seem like a 'good idea'. Only if you have nobody who loves you, only if you have nobody who you care for just before you die does this sound like a 'good idea'. Only when you are an evil hoarder, only when avarice and greed and selfishness fills your rotten soul is does this sound like a 'god idea. Only if you are totally corrupted into the evil religion of self-interest does this sound like a 'good idea.' In other words: only if you are a total hypocrite and are not a true Christian does this sound like a 'good idea'.

Anyone who had spent their entire life amassing as much property and money and jewels as they could;... could be persuaded to give it all to the church. There was just one more ingredient that was needed to make it work: whoever the rich person was... they had to be afraid of dying; they had to be afraid of death, they had to have a guilty conscience, they had to be evil, they had to be made aware that they were evil and that the church knew that they were evil. And at the weakest, most vulnerable moment, just before they were about to die was the time to strike... and into the coffers of the filthy rich church went another property, another pile of gold coins, etc. ad-vomit. It was a form of spiritual terrorism.

Rich landowners with no sons or daughters were cajoled to leave all of their worldly possessions to the church, rich people who were hated by their own families and who hated their own family were artfully convinced of this idea, and were assured that they would be sitting on the right hand side of God almighty himself if they did so. Why of course they would. From the highest positions on earth> straight to the highest positions in heaven!

Confession, secret knowledge: in how many ways did the church use all of the secrets of the confessional, to blackmail, threaten, intimidate, bribe, hold-over one's head,... as a tool to gain evermore power and more wealth, in all of its political tactics and dealings and battles with the secular powers? There are almost no historical records of religious confessions. Confessions were almost never written down; they were supposed to be a secret kept between the confessor and the Priest... as if these secrets were ever kept secret? Bullshit.. What the church does with all this secret knowledge remains buried to this day. As for those who believed that their confession would never be used against them, or against others to further the interests of the church; that their secrets would never be divulged to anyone else but the one they were confessing to... history shows the proof..

Fear makes people do stupid things. The Church was very adept at its use of the confessional and the idea of eternal damnation, and the concept of being forgiven one's sins just before you meet your maker, just before you actually die. To atone for a sin: great lords had churches built, they bequeathed woodlands to the church. Anything given to the church was seen as an act that would get them into heaven. This was how the church corrupted the words of Jesus. This was how the church of Europe grew to become the most wealthy, the most corrupt human institution in Europe. This was the corruption that Martin Luther wanted his church to correct. And when they didn't. When they posted a papal bull excommunicating him from the church. The fight for supreme power in Europe between the kings of Europe and the church of Europe split Europe into two religious-secular camps: Roman Catholic, and Protestant... And the new idea of having a personal conscience, and a personal relationship with the Lord God Almighty was quickly poisoned and corrupted into a system that was even more corrupt than the old church had ever been.

Unions

Read the histories of all the popular movements of the 1800's and the 1900's. Read about how hundreds of millions of people in Europe and America fought and died and starved to gain the 'god-given rights' which every affluent American and European enjoys today and takes for granted. How these hundreds of millions of poor were oppressed, lied-to... manipulated. How they were all cheated, and butchered, and terrorized by the rich upper classes. Read how all of the workers movements in Europe and America were systematically corrupted. Read how all the supposed God-given Rights that Industrialized Nations have now sanctified into their legal statutes... were earned by the struggles and suffering of all the poor people who fought bitterly and passionately against the rich scum of the Gilded Age. And finally earned a pittance... a token meager bit of legalized rights. A meager amount of the wealth. That these Robber Barons; like insane loons...had fought for centuries, and for thousands of years... just to keep everything for themselves forever; and never share any of it ever with anyone else. These rich scum are still active. The aristocratic rich of the 1900's managed to splinter and destroy all the workers movements by dealing with them piece-meal. They made offers to each guild, each class, each station: differently... according to their hierarchy and status. They successfully corrupted them with exclusive rights and privileges of hierarchy. Read how the first common-sense manifestos these workers movements called for ALL worker to have EQUAL rights. And not just a few, lucky, specialized workers. Read how the elite managed to poison all of these common-sense ideas and turn them back into an insane system of exclusive Medieval Guilds called Unions.

Compare the status of a restaurant waiter in France and the U.S.A. The French middle class outnumbered the poor until there were not enough poor Frenchmen to work as waiters in expensive restaurants. So the wages of all waiters rose. Their status rose. Being a waiter in France became a respectable profession. They unionized themselves. They became part of the very middleclass they served. They owned houses, bought cars and sent their children to University. Being a waiter in America is regarded as a low-class menial job. It is regarded as a temporary job. For college or high school students living at home to work at: since their slave-salary can barely pay for rent-food and clothes... never mind a car. Or a buying a house, or getting married, or supporting a family and sending children to college. Like it is in France.

Why? Because France does not allow huge waves of poor immigrants into France to work at these menial low-status jobs, but America does.

However... the draw-back in France is that French waiters hate their lower-class status. They hate all lower-class menial work. And they hate the people they serve. French waiters are famous for their snobbery throughout the world. Because once they rose up against their masters. Because for a brief instant they experienced freedom from slavery. Because they became a nation of upper class bourgeoisie. Because they aspired to be like the very elite class they butchered and killed during the Reign of Terror. Because they are still living inside a caste system of class privilege. Because their revolution failed. Because the old order, the Ancien Regime they had ousted returned and was reinstated.

While the lower-class, lower-status American waiters; serve their customers cheerfully. Why? Because America has a lower-class culture that is more egalitarian than the class structure and culture of France. Because in America: it is not considered as degrading to be of a lower servile class than it is in France. Because they Americans admit it is a low class job, and have not tried to pretend that it is a high-status job. American culture has been lowered so much: that there is almost no class status in job titles; except money and fame. Jobs are jobs: and mean nothing per se: as indications of class; except in how much money they make, or in how famous or notorious or well-known or recognized you are. American cultural status is based mostly upon money and almost no social-cultural standing elite class privilege: except for the richest: robber baron families: the Roosevelts, the Astors, the Rockefellers, the Rothschilds. French cultural status is based upon money and social standing and job title.

Instead of Workers Unions helping each other to destroy the power of the rich and the owners: these unions fought each other in keeping out all other workers from their exclusive, specialized guilds. The most exclusive, the highest class guild-unions won the most power and the most money. The most brutal guild-unions won. The best killers and gangsters won the best contracts for the most corrupt work jobs. The most corrupt union bosses gained the most power. The only reason the teamsters union managed to get a decent salary in this war; was because they controlled all the smuggling going on both before and after prohibition. The elite were too addicted to their smuggled goods and wealth to lose their hand-in-glove involvements with all the criminal elements of the transportations industries.

Look what happened to the workers movement in Russia. Taken over by corrupt gangsters within their own ranks... before the poor peasants even knew they had a movement they could have easily led themselves. Turning Russia into the worst, most corrupt government ever created by human scum. All any nation of Workers have to do to gain complete control of their entire Nation; is to stage a National Strike where no workers show up for work...

Without one worker showing their face in public. So the entire Nation becomes as peaceful, quiet, and silent, as Xmas Day. When all working class families stay inside. So all the streets and stores and cities, and towns are empty of people on the street. So there are no workers working at any job. So all the national infrastructures of electrical power, mass media, all forms of transportation, all governmental agencies, all business, all stores, all public mass activity comes to a grinding halt. Simply as a united, mass, coordinated demonstration of non-participation in the corrupt system that oppresses them.

What can the elite power mongers who depend on these millions of obedient slaves to do their jobs without questioning the necessity for doing so; do about that?

Nothing. Not one fucking thing. They rely on brainwashing these millions and billions of uneducated sheep so successfully: that once they become workers: they not only would not dare defy or disobey any authority. They are not only incapable of even harboring the thought rebellion... But they actually are so in love with their masters, and symbols, and lies. They believe in these lies so implicitly and unquestioningly... that they will be the first to destroy any sane organized attempt to pull these high and mighty human filth from all of their high places of privilege and power and wealth. The only way any revolt by the lower classes can succeed: the only way the masses can take back their own power... is for every motherfucking one of them to be properly educated in the truth about their own society and how it actually works, and its actual hidden, secret history... which is carefully kept out of the mass education they all are brainwashed with.

How can the lower class take back their power? All working people need; is to recognize the crucial difference between someone who gets another person to work for them, and profit from their labor... without having to work themselves. And a person who works for themselves, without working for anyone else. And a person who works not for themselves: but for the community they live-in.

But the upper classes have poisoned, and twisted, and deleted the actual truth about all of the lower class movements and revolts and rebellions that have sprung up spontaneously all over the Earth for thousands of years... ever since the filth system of pyramidal civilization was ever invented.

Repeatedly in their ignorance: the lower classes merely find other leaders and follow them just as humbly and submissively as they did their former masters. All lower class rebellions and revolutions have resulted with the lower classes choosing leaders who automatically become corrupted by their own power. Once the old guard is swept away: these new leaders find they have even more power than the old rulers did. So they institute even worse oppressions upon the masses. Humans have not yet learned, or been taught how to organize and form societies that are not hierarchical. If any majority ever learns how to live their lives and run their everyday affairs without institutionalizing power into a few hands... without giving all of their own power to others. They could oust any elite easily. But this means that all people must be educated first about power, how power works. They must be trained and educated about responsibility. They must first learn how to crush every attempt for power in the bud. They must learn first how to be more ruthless than the power mongers in their own circles.

You can see the dynamics of cowardice and courage played out in Nature. Herd animals have become victims and have been preyed upon for hundreds of millions of years. The conformity of massed herds breeds stupidity and cowardice.

As a Nature documentary showed. One small Meer cat fights and outfaces a jackal that is trying to take possession of one of the colony's dens. After the fight: the jackal is gone and the brave Meer cat is mortally injured. Its entire colony of brothers, sisters, aunts, uncles.... Watched the fight without helping the one brave Meer cat. They try to comfort the dying brave one. The dying brave one refused their comfort, and went and preferred to die alone. Without any of their hypocritical comfort.

If even some of them had gone to the aid of the brave one he would not have died. The jackal would have been outfaced on too many fronts. He would have been vulnerable on too many sides. The cowardly Jackal was brave enough to fight a tiny Meer cat one tenth his size... but even that was too much for the jackal. He left after the fight. The tiny Meer cat won the fight because he refused to run away like the jackal. But the genetic stupidity of cowardice was so ingrained into all the other Meer cats: that even after the dying one had fought to save their dens for them: they still began leaving the den... to a nonexistent jackal who had been chased off during the night by the brave one. After the fight: the dying brave one despised his own brothers and mother so much: he chose to die alone without their filthy hypocritical show of sympathy as he was dying. Where were they when he was fighting for all of them?

So he went off to die alone: as a pointed insult to them. In public. They were leaving the dens which the brave one had won for them from the jackal anyways. They only stopped to wait for him to catch up with them. They were not interested in helping him, or staying by him. If he was too injured to come with them: fuck him. They were not going to wait for him... Only his mother came back a few feet, to showed him some fake sympathy as he was dying. He didn't want to be near her as he died. He went off a few feet away from her, and then he died. The cowardly troop did nothing, and showed no signs of grief at his death. After he died: they walked off never to return to the scene of their own public humiliation, and the memory of the one Meer cat who was braver than all the others. To live lives of fear for the rest of their lives. Because they were too stupid to understand that all of them could have found the same courage as that one brave Meer cat had found. And never run away from a jackal again for the rest of their lives. And been proud of themselves, instead of being ashamed of themselves. And chased and killed any jackals that dared to attack them.

Civilized humans are no more intelligent than these Meer cats of Africa. They are no braver than Meer cats. They watch the bravest amongst them pulled down and killed. And do nothing to help. And slink off afterwards, as the cowards they are. And remain powerless victims for the rest of their lives. Teaching their own cowardice and stupidity to their children. And they teach it to their children. On, and on.... Ad nauseum.

If any child shows too much courage, or too much spunk: then their own parents rape them, or ostracize them, or let them be raped and killed. Because they cannot stand to be questioned by their own children. Because they have no moral or ethical rationale or justification for how they live. Because rather than be forced to face and see their own child successfully flaunting their own hypocritical false values in their face: they rape and kill that child before he or she becomes a serious threat to their sick lives and sick souls.

Civilized humans let killers kill them without a whimper. They let themselves be robbed and cheated without a whimper. The richest corporations in the world pay no income tax. Yet poor people are forced to pay income tax. Do any of these billions of poor cowards ever get together and force corporations who have millions of dollars; pay any tax at all? No. Why? Because that's the way they usually do it? No; because the millions of poor are not organized and the corporations are.

If the majority of poor humans ever organize intelligently against the owners. Then you will be amazed at how fast the rich will expose themselves and show their true colors. Then you will see the true social interplay of unvarnished hate, envy, and jealousy, and plotting, and treachery, and skullduggery explode into the open instead of being hidden behind closed doors and closed hearts and closed minds. Once there is any threat to the status quo of the elite... then you will see people drawing battle lines of privilege and non-privilege much more clearly. Then people will no longer feel guilty or feel that they are not as deserving of all the privileges that the rich have. Then you will have to educate the poor workers of the world to refuse to become corrupted by the wealth and affluence and power of the rich.

But; the masses have been sold on the white lie and hypocrisy of democracy as the highest form of human equality possible. Supposedly: there is no other kind of equality that is better. Democracy is supposed to be the only kind of equality that exists. Equality? The hypocrisy, the lie; the shit idea of one man...one vote... being the highest possible form of human equality...! Is one of the biggest bullshit lies ever invented.

Giving all of your voting power... by the millions! to a few elite, privileged, wealthy, representatives. The masses giving all of their power; to a few elite. So these elected masters and leaders can exercise an automatic legalized authority over them, and legally enslave them!?. And then these suckers called voters... are supposed to love their elected representatives? And somehow make sure that these elected power mongers do not abuse the use of all this freely given power!?. While the voters who elected them: are poor and broke and working, and afraid of being fired, and are constantly tired, and overworked, and do not have enough sleep, or time, or energy to do anything but veg-out and collapse after working all day? How in hell can voters find enough time and energy to watch over the hundreds of politicians they voted into office: when they are already enslaved by their own work and their own bosses and companies and corporations? The institution of modern day democracy is a guaranteed fuck-up; whose only guaranteed result is one of increasing and worsening unbridled, uncontrolled, ungoverned, uncensored, unsupervised, corruption; period.

Millions of people giving all of their voting power to one single person? One congressman? One

The Path of Splitness
Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1085

senator? One president? One prime minister? That is not equality. That is the epitome of inequality. That is a farce. And this is the ultimate form of civilized equality ever invented? How fucking stupid can you be.

But... Civilization is too complex to be run all by yourself. So instead of making it more complex than it already is: simplify it, you idiots!

But... it's too much trouble to do everything for yourself. Let other people do everything for you. You can't do everything. You are too busy working.

Working for who?

For someone else.
Huh?

'But... but... that's the way we usually do it... it, it's normal...'

Oh. In that case. Fuck all new ideas. Fuck anything else. Don't change a thing.

Over the period of a few thousand years: the raiders, the killers, the Robber Barons, and their Kings, and Emperors, and Presidents, and Knights, and Lords, and landed gentry, and owners, and shopkeepers, and citizens, and voters of Europe and America; have not only legalized robbery and rape and killing. They have created a global culture, where all of the poor;

have given them:

Their own unquestioning vote. Their own unquestioning lives. Their own unquestioning work. Their own unquestioning sweat. Their own unquestioning minds. Their own unquestioning hearts. Their own unquestioning allegiance. Their own unquestioning obedience. Their own unquestioning submission.

Why? In the hope of becoming rich. Nothing else.

Because the masses did not ask why this was being done to them... because the masses did not develop their Sense of Pure Wonder. They give them their hard-earned money unquestioningly... to be unquestioningly put into Robber Baron banks. They give them their own unquestioned power, their own unquestioned wealth, their own unquestioned knowledge, their own unquestioned status... freely. We have done this both individually, and collectively... by the millions... by the billions. Until now today: rulers feel that they are due all their given powers legally... as a God Given Right. Until banks feel that they are legally due to amass all the money of the poor. Until the corporations feel they are legally due all the knowledge and sweat of their workers. Until all the rulers in the world believe that they legally own their power as a God-given Right. Until all of the banks legally own all the wealth of the masses. Until all the corporations legally own all the patents and rights of modern technology. The upper class legally owns the lower class in so many ways and on so many levels ... of things... that the lower class believe they legally owe to their rulers and owners and masters... everything!!.

The masses owe it to their government to legally pay taxes legally. They legally owe it to the landlords to pay rent. They legally owe their banks interest off their own money. They owe legal allegiance to a National Government that is supposed to represent them. They legally owe the credit card companies trillions of dollars of debt money..., which has been borrowed from the mass wealth, created by them.

1085

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

They owe obedience to laws that oppress them legally. They owe obedience to police thugs who brutalize and rule them by fear legally. They love their superstars who legally rip them off for billions of dollars.... They love their leaders who legally oppress them. They love their legalized Nations; that keep them poor and ignorant. They love and worship the brainwashing systems called legalized education. They love all of the legalized elite cultures. They are in love with their own legalized elites. What difference is this kind of lower class brainwashing from the Medieval peasants, who once loved and worshiped their beloved Kings for thousands of years? Kings were once just as legal.

What is legality? It is a leg up from equality. It is the hypocritical equality of upward mobility. It is the hypocrisy of Equalness which all upwardly mobile human societies parrot, spout, and believe-in. It is the official religion of all modern Robber Baron Capitalists today.

From one thousand years of voluntarily giving Robber Barons and oppressors your power. You and your ancestors; have all willingly given away your own humanity and your own power and your own autonomy. Until now: this insane condition called: legality, has become a legalized normality called Robber Baron Capitalism, or Globalism. With millions of rich, greedy, insane people... all busy trying to buy up, and own the entire Earth. What the lower class, and the masses do not understand is that moral and ethical authority is more powerful than any legal authority ever invented.

Every human has the moral authority and ethical right, to kill anyone who tries to kill them... All humans have the moral, ethical, karmic and spiritual authority; to oppress anyone who tries to oppress them. That authority is universal. All Evil intent; should be answered with a thousand times more Evil against that evil.

If one Nation attacks another Nation for no good reason, and kills one thousand people. The attacked Nation has the moral, ethical and Spiritual right and Authority to attack the attacking Nation and kill one hundred thousand of their people and wipe that Nation out of existence. They have the Spiritual Authority to attack and exterminate every person in that attacking Nation until they are all wiped out and completely extinct... That is: if they refuse to stop attacking you. If they stop attacking you, you still have the moral and ethical right to keep on attacking them until they admit that they were WRONG. The only time you should stop killing killers: is only when they all admit consciously, and publicly... and personally, that they are wrong and were wrong. And then; prove their sincerity by their actions. Actions speak louder than words. By their voluntary attempts to make amends and beg forgiveness. The entire problem with violence is that it solves nothing unless the people being violent learn not to do it; and the only way people will stop being evil if they stop being dishonest. Only when hypocrisy and deceit and false words are not tolerated: only when there is a zero tolerance for falsity and dishonesty will human society stop being evil.

Even then; you should never trust anyone who attacks you for no reason. Or forgive them; ever. If a person has once had the evil intent of killing someone else, and actually done it: they should be marked for life. And punished for the rest of their life by the rest of their society. This includes all legalized killers. Every policeman, every soldier, every member of a government that supports and uses violence and force to gain, or retain power: should be marked for life with their crimes. This does not involve imprisonment of any kind whatsoever. Instead: there is a much simpler form of punishment. They should wear the medals of their crimes for the rest of their lives. Whether this is done by tattooing, or wristbands, or wearing the medals of their crimes pinned onto their clothes: they should be sentenced, and condemned to wear their medals for the rest of their lives, and be buried with them. This way every decent human who is not a murderer, or a rapist, or a thief, or an embezzler: will know who they are dealing with; and treat them accordingly. According to their actions: not their word. Then killers and rapists will not be able to get away with anything anymore. Then they will not be able to lie about what they did, or did not do anymore. Then they will not be able to hide anymore. Then they will be branded for life. And nobody will need waste their time punishing these branded criminal. Then there will be no need for prisons. Then there will be no need for armies. Then there will be no need for Governments. Then there will be no need for any kind of idiotic inefficient law enforcement except the personal enforcement, the moral enforcement, the enforcement of ethical responsibility by every living individual to not allow any evil to go unnoticed, or unpunished and unrectified. Then all the people who escape their social responsibility by saying nothing, and doing nothing... should also be branded with medals signifying their cowardice, silence, and dishonesty, and irresponsibility. Then our societies can use the trillions of dollars this simple Law will save; for millions of better uses. Like educating all people, and all children; about the ethical and moral sins of cowardice and dishonesty. Not whitewashing the moral sins of killing and violence as a necessary good. It is morally good to violently butcher a butcher more brutally than he wants to butcher you. It is morally good to kill a killer more violently than he wants to kill you.

Does this sound too good to be true? I challenge any society to make this kind of punishment legal, and put this form of punishment into effect without any exceptions. And see what happens. One basic reason legal Laws are not respected and not followed, and not obeyed; is because they are selectively enforced. They are not enforced equally. If you enforce any Law equally without exceptions whatsoever: that Law becomes instantly respected, obeyed, and feared, followed and used. And your society will change so fast: your head will spin.

Why has this never been even thought-of before? Because civilization has successfully corrupted and poisoned the morals and ethics of all its lower classes to prevent them from ever rising up and discovering their true moral ethical power.. It is only because the masses have been brainwashed to believe in their own powerlessness, that elite scum can commit more evil... more crimes and atrocities and sins; than all the lower classes put together... and successfully get away with it. Simply because it has been legalized and traditionalized into a normality.

How can the masses, the lower classes, these billions of unaware ignorant, craven, conformist, civilized, human sheep; ever get together as a single, united people against the very things they have been brainwashed into sanctifying, worshipping, and loving? This is the problem that every human on this Earth who does not want to be Evil; faces. This is the responsibility every human who hates Evil must face.

For if the ignorant masses ever wake up. There will be hell to pay. All it needs is all of the non-owning tenant renters to organize nationally and internationally as a single class of renters... without trying to topple the powers that be. No conflict whatsoever at all. Merely ignore the owners as if they do not exist. Merely do not speak to them, do not use them at all in your communities. What is an entire Nation of owners going to do if suddenly zero rent checks show up one month? Send out 200 million eviction notices? Jail 200 million non-paying renters? Prosecute 200 million cases for nonpayment of rent? Which cases will be tried first? The entire backlog would take thousands of years to process. What if every renter demands a jury trial? What if Congress enacts a bill not allowing jury trials for evictions? Then you will find out for once who your friends are in Washington. Then the renters can vote every fucking special-interest politician out of office and vote in renter-politicians who rent, and do not own property. Then you will have a Congress of poor people passing bills for poor people. But before that ever happens: the elite owners will call out the army and stage a military coup and declare martial law. Then renters will know who their enemy is... But most soldiers are renters. The army will defect to the renters. The rich will be torn down from their high places and shot and hung, and their mansions will be razed to the ground. And anyone who tries to own property will be jailed and fined. And that will destroy the rich billionaires. They will be killed. And any person showing too much wealth will be shot as an enemy of the state.... Presuming of course that renters can organize themselves nationally in secret; without letting a single owner know what they are planning.

What are the owners going to do? Go personally to each of their buildings; and try to throw all their tenants physically? And if they do that... yes, they might have the satisfaction of throwing out non-paying renters.

But they still not get rent checks. What is to stop an entire Nation of renters from moving back into their dwellings even after they have been kicked out? Can the police handle this level of civil disobedience? Most policeman are renters themselves. Most of the security police, and office workers of these owners are renters.

But which culture do the police identify with? The powerful rich? Or the powerless poor? What do they worship and obey mindlessly? Legalized Authority and Power.

The question is... who do you actually work for. Eh? Where do your actual loyalties lie? Who would you rather die for? Who would you rather work for? For your own family, or for some property owner? For your wife? Or for your boss? For your children? Or for a dead abstract idea called a Nation? Or for an dead abstract idea called a culture, or religion?

Who would you rather work for. Who are you. A slave? A wage slave? An employee? Or an owner; who has other people working for you. Which class do you belong to? Which class do you want to belong to? Do you want to become richer than the people you live with? Do you want to leave where you live, and live in a rich expensive house, a rich expensive society? An elite group of owners, eh?... If you worship the rich, and want to be just like them, and despise and hate all people of your own class... and look down upon people around you...

Why then; you are a fifth column inside your own lower class. You are a traitor to your own class. You are a traitor to every poor person who ever helped you, or loved you, or cared about you, or spent time with you. You are an active saboteur and spy; living secretly inside the lower working class: doing the upper class's dirty work for them. Without them even asking you to do it! Without them even trying to win you over. You are a worker ready to betray and lie and cheat and steal and double-cross your own fellow workers under the sanctified motive; of upward mobility. The fucking fact is, that the only way you can be a social climber: is if you betray the ones you step-on to climb higher. Upward mobility is a religion of betrayal. Read history! Every bastard who ever became powerful: did it by betrayal. History is made up of nothing but tales of betrayal.

Why was the Empire of England maintained effectively for hundreds of years? Because the landed gentry. The middle class, the bourgeois, the rich, the lords and ladies, the elite of England... the mothers and fathers of the upper class... the killers and hypocrites, and cheaters, and haters, and power mongers, and all the greedy cold-blooded Robber Barons, and politicians... the Royal Families, the Dukes and Kings and Queens... Did not give a shit about their own children. For hundreds of years: they have sent them away to expensive schools and academies, to be taught and trained and raised by other upwardly mobile servants and underlings.. They hired poor, lower-class tutors and nannies to look after their own children: because they themselves are much too important and have much more important things to do: than to bother wasting their time on raising their own children.

The Path of Splitness
Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1089

The lower-classes worship everything the upper classes do to such an extent: that they copied this uncaring attitude towards their own children. They now send their own children away to mass cribs called public schools... where their children learn almost nothing. Sending your own children away from you so you do not have to educate them or teach them anything: is an obscene abandonment of your own responsibility towards your own children.

Until the obscene tradition of child neglect and child abuse became a ritual. Until children were not only supposed to be seen and not heard: they were put away and ignored. They did not exist.

This is how most civilized parents treat their own children. They ignore them as much as possible. The lower classes do not treat their children any better than the elite anymore. They sent their children by the millions as slaves into the factories to work for the rich industrial Robber Barons. They trained them as pickpockets and professional thieves by the bowery scum that ruled the slums of London. They were sent their own children to poorhouses, and orphanages, and prisons.... For no reason: except it was socially normal to hate children with a viral, passionate hatred all through England when the Industrial Revolution began. Charles Dickens wrote whitewashed fairytales about how children were actually treated. At the time; his mild, toned-down stories were too offensive to be read by the English Aristocracy. But he found readers in the lower classes: and made his fortune from mass publication.

Children have been treated abysmally ever since civilization was invented. In medieval Europe and England: they were fed rum and gin while squalling in their cribs before they could even say the words: 'Da-Da'. Because their drunken mothers and fathers did not want to look after them and did not know any other way to shut them up except to addict them to the alcohol they themselves were already addicted-to.

One reason why the English Elite managed to maintain their Empire for so long, was because poor mothers and old maids of the lower classes, who were doomed to never marry and never have any children of their own: sacrificed their own lives and futures; caring-for and loving the children of the rich elite.

If the poor class had recognized these rich Lords and ladies were their mortal enemies, and if they had refused to look after their babies and their children; the English Empire would have crumbled so quick, it would have made your head spin. It was only because many rich babies had a loving lower class nanny who loved them and cared for them, that the British Empire ever developed any kind of Humanity at all.

So if you want to give credit to the English for their Empire not being as completely rotten as other Empires: then give credit to the poor unknown, faceless, self-sacrificing nannies and tutors of the lower class: who taught the upper class a little love. Who taught them virtues of self-sacrifice, humility, modesty and generosity; by their own living examples.

This advantage of being raised more humanely made enough of the English Elite smarter, and more intelligent than the elites of other Nations and Empires. Do you think the novels of Dickens are fiction? On the contrary... they are whitewashed fairy tales and lies, compared to how truly horrible and inhumane British Industrialized society was in his time. The poor of England were brainwashed into worshipping and aiding their own masters and slave drivers. They went like docile sheep into the stinking factories to die and they worked themselves to death like sheep. They coddled and loved the infants of the rich and the powerful. These coddled babies grew up not even remembering their nannies names. Because they had to block out the love they had been given. They had to block out their own guilty consciences. Their nannies were brainwashed to give up their love-babies, and send them off to boarding schools and finishing schools. Where any humanity was quickly beaten out of them as harshly and as brutally as possible. A tiny token bit of humanity still managed to survive the nanny-private school system of child raising of the elite of the British Empire. This tiny, teeny incremental improvement in their humanity created and produced huge positive results. This was quickly drowned out and poisoned by the rest of civilization which is 99.9999% evil

1089

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

The poor have always been enablers of the rich. The poor help the rich get richer, and the rich help the poor get poorer. Every civilized culture has this dysfunctional dynamic. And until poor idiots stop coddling children of rich idiots. Until they spend their love upon their own poor children, and let the rich go fuck themselves: the rich will continue to raise rich people who are better-raised, and more intelligent, than the poor. Get this through your stupid heads. Unless they are willing to help you. Unless they treat you as an equal in all ways, and on all levels. Anyone who is richer than you are: is your fucking enemy. And if you want to become rich: you are the enemy of every poor person on Earth.

But it was not always this way. The rich in many ages and places once lived cheek-by-jowl with the poor. In many cultures; they were fiercely hated and despised. Read the early tales and legends and fairytales, and myths of Europeans. The evil person in almost all of these stories is a rich greedy cruel person. Until so many Europeans became well-off and greedy: that poor Europeans followed their examples... and the moral bar of normality was lowered to make higher levels of greed acceptable, and eventually taken for granted. All without one word being spoken or written of this cultural change. Now: these old fairy tales and stories have been buried and censored and twisted and corrupted into lies. Read the oldest original fairytales and legends of the poor of Europe. And see what morals and lessons they teach. It will shock you.

Class, Networking and Cooperation

How Capitalism works is simple. It makes all of us greedy because the only thing everyone respects and values is money. Since all workers are actually would-be, wanna-be owners, the owners have already won you over without even having to fight at all by brainwashing you and corrupting you without you even knowing they did it to you. How? By keeping the lower classes far too busy fighting amongst themselves for the dregs of wealth leftover from their riches... to ever to bother fighting against their beloved, worshipped, revered, rich elite owners. 99% of the human race fighting over 5% of the wealth. While the 1% of the rich, sit back and get richer and cheat the poor more obviously, and rob them more blatantly. Isn't the gullibility and stupidity of the human race a wonderful thing? What would happen to the buying power of an ordinary worker: if they no longer had to pay rent? If they never had to worry about being evicted from your rented apartment? How much better could you live if you did not need any money to pay rent? Your sense of security, and self-confidence would rise. Your money could be used for other things. You wouldn't need to work 40-50 hours a week to make ends meet. You would become more affluent. Businesses would boom. Your shopping power would increase.

Would corporations like this?

No. They would be shitting in their pants in sick fear. Because a silent majority they cannot fight... has just overturned the entire legal basis of Western Civilization which is greed and the sacredness of property being more valuable than human Life. Because the sacred right of ownership... the sacred right of property is suddenly less important than human lives, and human beings. Then the entire basis of power and wealth: the exclusive legal rights of ownership will vanish. Then people can use factories, or skyscrapers, and business offices as they wish: even living in them. Then all ownership becomes questionable. Who owns what. How much. Why. Who has a better god-given right to own anything. An absentee landlord. Or a person living on the premises 365 days a year?

What has determined the ownership of land throughout the 12,000 years of civilization? The ones getting there first. The ones with guns. The biggest gang with the biggest guns. The ones already in possession. The first squatters. Why would this nonviolent form of revolution be impossible to defeat?

Because it is non-pyramidal.

For 12,000 years, all the people who wanted a change... all the revolutionaries, the revolts, and uprisings: were stupid enough to try to defeat a pyramidal hierarchical oppression, by replacing it with another pyramidal hierarchical system.

This automatically makes destroying any budding opposition to all existing corrupt authority easy. All the people in power have to do is lop off the top of the resistance. Kill the leaders. And all the terrified cowards, all the resentful mass instantly give up, and crawl back into their holes. Because the stupid fools are looking for a leader, a hero, a savior to save them. Because they are unwilling to do it themselves. Because they gave their power to a leader. And once their leader is killed, or deposed; they automatically assume that they are powerless again.

The intelligent way to defeat any pyramidal oppression is to mount a non-pyramidal resistance. If millions of workers refuse to show up for work... all in unison. All coordinated. Cooperating together as a single class of workers. The elite rich cannot stop it. Why? Because you have no leaders who can be killed.

If you are stupid enough to have leaders; then you will automatically lose whatever you are fighting for. Either by your own leaders being corrupted by their own power, and oppressing you even worse than your former owners and masters. Or by those still in power; jailing and killing your leaders and instituting even harsher oppressions, because you dared to threaten them. The only way you can avoid this kind of warfare and retaliation is by having no leaders.

If your movement and revolution has no leaders. Then those in power are instantly powerless. Then they have nobody they can fight. Then they have no head they can decapitate, no leaders they can kill to terrorize the masses into submission. Then the very fact that they are powerless against this kind of opposition; will emasculate them and reduce them to such weakness, fear and helplessness... that they will destroy themselves without any of you even going out of your domiciles. But what if those in power panic; and try to use random meaningless violence and terrorism as a way to keep themselves in power?

First: this tactic does not, and cannot work. That only will make the working majority stay even longer in their homes. And begin a swell of massive resentment and anger against them. They will in effect have been forced to show their hand. They will be exposed naked... as brutal killers and haters, and murderers and criminals. Their root of their authority will be destroyed. The only authority they will have left is the open practice of killing and terror.

Then... once the entire population realizes just what kind of scum, those in power actually are. Once the masses realize these scum will stay in power: then they openly become exposed as the mortal enemies of all the millions they are trying to oppress.

Once this hypocrisy is washed away. Once the masses have the wool lifted from their eyes. Then it will become a battle. With no quarter given and none asked for on both sides. Then the rich elite become sitting ducks: to be killed at every opportunity... whenever they leave the safe confines of their elite compounds. Then they will hide and cower inside their wealthy compounds, and wealthy castles and wealthy mansions.

Then the power of the rich elite will be reduced to the range of their own guns. Then the instant they leave an area where the masses live: their authority will disappear. Then the effect of their power will disappear also. Because all of the myths built up over thousands of years of lies and lying, will be stripped from them. And they will have nothing left to clothe themselves with except naked fear, and naked hate and naked lies, and naked cowardice and naked killing.

They can come out and terrorize people as many times as they want to: but there will be no effect. And then these elite will go into hiding. And they will be hunted out of their holes one-by-one. And they will die. And be killed one by one. And be eradicated from the face of this Earth. But this kind of revolution is the most extreme possible scenario of a non-violent revolution that has no leaders at all. This extreme will not even happen: simply because a non-violent revolution that has no leaders and has not used violence to oppose violence: has not created any violent energy that could reflect back to them, as a backlash, a reaction, a reflex to any instigated violence. The ones in power will not be threatened at all by any violence. They will instead be threatened by their own fear and terror of not being in control. Not having any power over their subjects. They will have only two choices. Either do nothing, and demonstrate to the entire world how powerless they actually are. Or panic and show to the entire world how scared they are of no threat, and no violence. By not creating any violence, this kind of non-violent resistance and passive-active revolt gives the owners and Robber Barons only two choices. Surrender, or fight. If they choose to fight: they will be killed by their own violence. They will destroy themselves. They will commit suicide rather than surrender. And good riddance to them then.

In either cases. They will be spiritually, emotionally and mentally emasculated, humiliated, shamed and ostracized by their own Nations lower classes. They will become enemies of the state. The entire Nation will treat them as enemies and hate them and despise them. They will lose all of their social status. And become ripe for being deposed, toppled and removed harmlessly.

The effectiveness of a nonviolent mass revolution against a violent military Totalitarian state has already been demonstrated by Poland's Solidarity movement in the 1970's. A mass worker revolt against a Russian dictatorship with a huge military army to back it up. But the Polish workers were ignorant. They were all Catholics. They needed a leader to lead them. They were conforming mindless sheep. And so into this power vacuum, anybody could have stepped in and become their leader. And that was what happened. They let an ordinary card carrying electrician become their leader simply because everybody else was too much of a coward to even want the job. And when they won, they elected him into power.

They let their leader: Lec Walenka, become their replacement oppressor. He simply replaced the Russian model with a corrupt hierarchical capitalistic government. Almost nothing actually changed. And the reason Poland's mass revolt succeeded was not because of their leader. It succeeded because even after he was arrested and jailed for six months: the entire Nation kept the general strike in working order. Nobody worked. Why? Because the Polish workers had enough courage to win the fight by themselves without their leader. Working on local levels. Even though the authorities arrested all of the workers leaders: it made no difference in the strike. After over a year of this National strike: the Government finally grudgingly agreed to have a series of talks. The Union workers held tough. They refused all forms of supposedly attractive conciliatory offers by the government that kept the actual oppressors in Power. As a result, all of those in power were forced to resign. The first democratic election was held and naturally Lec Walenca became President. After Walenca becoming a puppet leader for another gang of corrupt elite: the Poles sat back: fooling themselves that they actually accomplished something. All they did was exchange masters. Poland is still a corrupt 3rd world country. And the Polish workers were too blind and stupid to realize that it was not their leader who had toppled the regime, but it was all of them acting together and cooperating together as they had never done before. And after they toppled the regime... instead of taking their own power back from their oppressors, these blind fools went home and let another regime oppress them.

This is the incredible stupidity of the human race. It took thousands of years of men going to war and killing each other, for the Romans to discover how to gain a permanent upper hand over other people: by shifting their entire society into a permanent war economy. They changed warfare forever by not going home after the killing was over. They stayed around all year fighting and killing, until they became full-time professionals... full-time killers. A Roman soldier was not allowed to go home for 17 years. That was the stint expected of a Roman Foot soldier to serve. Because they were patriots? No. It was just a way to get out of paying them any money. Roman soldiers were almost never paid even after successful campaigns. Only after their 17-year stint was over was the Roman State required to pay them their few measly hectares of land and few measly draft animals. However... after 17 years: most of the Roman soldiers who had enlisted were dead. And so... the Roman government conveniently did not have its own soldiers for all the years of their faithful killing, butchery, rape and slaughter. Why did these Roman soldiers kill for years, and finally die without being paid? Just so their masters could become filthy rich and powerful. Just so their general could have his triumph, his parade. Just so he could personally retire, as an old man: in glory and in honor... as a winner!!. Just so one general could advance his upwardly mobile career up to the highest level of Roman society... over the backs of how many butchered, killed, raped, and cheated innocent villagers, and tribes and lands. Over the backs of his entire army. Who were not even allowed inside Rome, or allowed even near it, to see his personal triumph. The religion of betrayal, the morality of betrayal. The ethics of betrayal: were so sanctified and unquestioned and unspoken, and secret, and cunningly practiced by all the elite: that the brainwashed Roman soldati were easily kept on the leash of their own corruptions and betrayals. Why didn't the soldiers revolt and demand to be paid and disband themselves? Mass cultural brainwashing. The same mass cultural brainwashing which every human culture and civilization has programmed its babies into ever since civilization was invented.

Besides: once inculcated into a Roman army they had become addicted to the slaughter of innocents. They had become addicted to raping people, and killing them. They had become addicted to their own homosexual military culture. Why do you think they all wore short skirts? So they could flash their bare thighs at each other all day long; as they marched. So their secret sodomy could be practiced easily without a trace of needing to dress or undress to do the deed. Because they were all uneducated brutes to begin with: coming from a corrupt culture that worshipped killing and winning. They had become addicted to looting and stealing. Many soldiers became enormously wealthy without ever getting paid by the Roman state. Their main occupation was gambling and stealing from each other. Why do you think Roman Generals tolerated their armies going on looting rampages, and raping and killing rampages? It was how they avoided paying them, and how they kept them hungry for loot, and submissively in their appointed ranks until they died and did not have to be paid off.

The Roman elite supported the gambling of their soldiers...while giving lip-service to how evil this vice was. Why? Because it kept most of their soldiers broke, eager to fight and kill and rampage and get more loot. This is one source where our modern addiction for Gambling came from. This was also where the entire Western concept of a profession comes from. The idea of doing only one thing all the time; came from Romans soldiers doing only one thing all the time. Killing. And we have been doing it for two thousand years.

It is the same repeated, stupid vicious cycle with social revolts. For thousands of years; billions of humans have revolted against their cruel oppressors. But they never knew what to do after they had won... except to replace their old oppressors with another hierarchy of new leaders who oppressed them even worse than the old ones did. So far, in human history: humans have only put up a token resistance against their social enslavement by their masters and owners. Nobody, no group has ever had the courage to do away with their own slavery.

The same kind of token revolt happened in South Africa by the South African Blacks against the Boer Racist, Apartheid Regime. Now there is no Apartheid. But the poverty and corruption and the wealth of the elite in South Africa remains basically unchanged. Humans have not yet been educated or trained how to effectively change their old obsolete social models. If you want to change how you live: you can't just rise up and fight for a few months or a few years... and then sit down and do nothing after that. Each person has to become not only active in changing how they live by changing how their society is structured. But they have to maintain it actively all of their life. That means growing up and taking care of your family, taking care of your house. Taking care of your neighbors, your street, your community, your city, your nation, your lands, the water, the air, living things, trees: as equals.

If that is not done: then you have to revolt again all over again. The reason civilized history has been a vicious cycle of oppression and revolt is because we have been too stupid to learn from our own mistakes. Once you revolt against any authority you can never give back that authority. That is even more of a crime than someone taking that power from you and using it to oppress you with. If you give back the authority you won: you deserve to be oppressed, until you learn that giving power to anyone is stupid: period.

But that merely shifts the responsibilities of ownership from a few elite owners to the majority: the renters. Will lower class workers shit in their own buildings? Will they let their buildings deteriorate and turn into slum ghettos? Or will they take pride in their new class rights and responsibilities, and rights of ownership: and kick out any person who does not abide by their majority votes and maintenance standards. Suddenly the renters will be forced to become not only democratic voting citizens cooperating with each other...actively involved in their own communities... not just temporary resident strangers who do not even speak to their neighbors. But having and exercising responsibilities and powers they never knew they had. Suddenly you will see the birth of living-functioning communities on every street, and in every apartment building. Suddenly people will be only be able to move, if they can find another renter who wants to switch places with them. Suddenly you better make damn sure you do not trash your apartment, because if you do, you could be thrown out in the street by your own apartment organization. Suddenly you better make damn sure you are nice to your neighbors; or else they will vote you out of that building and you will find yourself homeless regardless of how much money you make or have. Suddenly, you better keep your apartment clean and nice, if you want to switch apartments with another person; because if they come and see that you are living in a dirty dump... you will be forced to live in that dump for the rest of your life. Suddenly renters will be forced to become even more responsible than the owners who once rented these places to them, and who once screamed about how irresponsible their renters were.

What could the elite do about this? Shut off all the power in the Nation? Shut off all the water in the Nation? Then their public utilities would go bankrupt, and the entire Nation would become a stinking foul mess. Then the government would be toppled; along with every rich, powerful elite hanging on its coattails. Then it would be a fight to the death between property owners and renters; for control of the nations armies and law enforcement institutions. Then they would have to re-draft their entire Constitution. And throw out all property rights.

Suddenly the entire Nation of renters will become more professionally responsible and organized, and powerful than the lazy, privileged elite; who once thought that they were the best educated and best trained of people... who knew what was best for their Nation. Suddenly the owners will start trying to become renters, by switching places with them... because the renter communities will be better run, happier, have better schools, have nicer people in them, smarter people in them, than the communities of the now-defunct owners.

Suddenly: all upward mobility stops being just a matter of money. Suddenly: people will have to earn their own status in their own communities...they will no longer be able to just buy their way into any social status. Suddenly: people will no longer be able to run away from their problems, their communities, their own families: unless they want to become ostracized, spat-upon, despised, irresponsible homeless bums.

Suddenly: a person who is homeless will be so despised and spat upon, that the old-style vagabonds who thought they could freeload their way through an affluent uncaring system by screwing people and accepting handouts from the guilt of the affluent, will find themselves actually starving because nobody will feed them. Then they will have to face the choice of either having to actually work for a living, or starve. Many will starve to death rather than work. Good riddance to them. The ones who do work can gain back some part of their damaged self-esteem, and if they work long enough in one place... they might be accepted into a renters organization that know them personally.

Then there will be almost no moving mobility in society. People will not be able to instantly pack up, and move to another city to get a better job... unless their renter organization Okays it. Why? Because society will no longer be made up of a pack of total strangers jammed together in anonymous, alienated powerlessness. Nobody will want to have strangers who they do not know personally moving into their community. Unless the renters of that other city agree to let them move in. Suddenly the hiring power of all corporations becomes renter power. Suddenly the corporations will have to go hat in hand, and knock on the renters apartments, and places... and try to offer them some inducement to move out and switch places with another person in another city. They will have to vouch for these new immigrants. And be held accountable if their employees are irresponsible and do not pull their weight in the community they move into. Suddenly bulletin boards of renters who want to move somewhere else; will appear on the internet... and people will do individual deals, agreeing to switch places... even complicated three, or four party swaps... that is, only if they learn how to cooperate with each other as equals.

All this can happen simply by people organizing together as equals intelligently, in order to create a better life... Oh, yes: and just not mailing in your next rent check... as a single, organized, National class of renters and equals.

All majorities are more powerful than minorities, you idiots! The only thing that stops the lower class majority from becoming not only equal to the upper class elite, but superior to them; is organization and intelligence... nothing else.

Suddenly the number one social learned ability for success in civilized societies will be cooperation: instead of competition. Suddenly you have changed the entire fucking bedrock of the kind of society you live-in... just by organizing a single majority of equals, and not sending in your rent check.

Is this safe enough for you? Is it easy enough for you?

Oops. I forgot. Rather than organize themselves and become a socially cooperating class of human beings; and a hundred times more affluent and powerful and rich in things that actually matter... instead of their token-fake consumer symbols of token-fake exclusive status. Mass produced: for the masses. As identically as possible.

Renters would rather waste their entire lives working just to pay rent. Working their asses off for the rest of their lives, and paying rent for the rest of their lives: just so property owners can become richer without lifting a finger. Huh? You don't mind this? Why don't people ever rebel against this system? Because they hope to work and save for half their life... to finally become wealthy enough to put down a mortgage for a house they can own themselves. Just so they can have a token ownership of a house called a mortgage.

The word 'mort' means; 'dead' in French. It means you are bound by debt for the rest of your life. The word 'engage' means bound. Engaged till death. Meaning that you are bound with the debt of your mortgage until you die. It is a cunning way of the rich: staving off poorer upwardly mobile people who wanted to own their own homes like they did. From ever becoming as wealthy as they are. They were given instead merely a small token of ownership called a mortgage. Not full, actual ownership. And the lower classes were so brainwashed, so corrupted by the idea of ownership, so poisoned by the example of the criminally greedy upper elite class: they bought into it hook, line, and sinker. They swallowed the idea of ownership. And they have been sick ever since from this abstract insane idea.

They became work slaves, debt slaves. Borrowing to buy what they cannot afford. Actually; they are working and slaving away upwardly one-half of their working lives; for the privilege of being in debt for the other half of their working lives. Renters rent because they cannot afford to own a house, and because they hope to own one. What a perfect way to addict everyone into the corruption of ownership.

Can this corrupt system ever be changed? In order to ever change it; every worker would have to stop trying to be upwardly mobile. And what's more... they would have to be satisfied with what they already have, and where they live... Every worker would have to stop being greedy.

Oh. In that case: never mind. You have already been persuaded by professional persuaders. The professional, upwardly mobile, the Advertising Industry. Whom the property owners and Corporations, and Media, and Entertainment Industry, and politicians pay Trillions of dollars to: in order to manipulate and brainwash all babies, children, and adults in affluent industrialized Nations: into the unspoken cultural belief of consumerism: the sacred unquestioned right of exclusive ownership.

You, the reader of this revolutionary book: have been exposed to millions of subliminal messages and opinions and attitudes, and assumptions, and norms, and normalities, values, ideas, that brainwash the ordinary consumer and the ordinary voter, and consumer, and home buyer, and student, and child, etc... This brainwashing has sold you every lie the corrupt upper class can invent and get away with. And the masses gobble this up, and walk around proudly with the logos of their owners and enslavers and manipulators on their chests: as proud mass-produced tokens of their upwardly exclusive lifestyles. When this illusion is all a transparent scam.

See? I'm wearin' a t-shirt with the logo: ----- This means I'm special. I'm different from other consumers. . I'm not just one of the faceless masses. I have a unique mass identity, by wearing a unique mass-produced item; that sets me apart from other consumers who buy mass-produced items. Their mass-produced items are not as special, or as unique, or as expensive, or as good as mine are. These mass produced items are custom-fit for my unique personality, my unique tastes, my uniqueness. I like it. Therefore it must be good. I shall ignore the fact that now there are thousands-millions of the same 'unique' mass-produced logo-product. I shall pretend it is only a small exclusive clique that wear these mass-produced items...

Or... I shall become a conformist, I shall become a slave of the majority. I shall be like everybody else. Everything the majority does: I will do. Everything the majority wears: I shall wear. I shall be accepted by the majority, because I am wearing and doing what millions of other people are wearing and doing. I shall be proud of my conformity. I shall be smug about it. I shall be arrogant about it, it's normal, it's the thing to do...

How can you convince yourself that you are an exclusive one-of-a-kind genius-snob... and also be a blatantly smug conformist, with no originality whatsoever at the same time? By ignoring the millions around you exactly like you? By ignoring the hundreds of millions who are just as addicted to the same consumer products as you are? By working your entire life away to get rich as they are?... By distancing yourself as much as possible from your own past? By renouncing the culture and values you were born into: and pretending that the billions of poor people from whence you came no longer are worth helping? By being as selfish as possible? Simply because everyone else around you is also as selfish as possible? By being as stupid as possible? Gosh: so that's why mass consumer society creates mediocrity.

Consumers use these kind of rationalizations to justify what they buy, why they buy it. They buy what is expedient, what is the most convenient, what is cheaper, what is easier, what is newer, faster, etc. They buy whatever gratifies them at the moment.

But they do not ask themselves why they buy. They do not ask themselves inconvenient, unpleasant questions. They do not ask themselves root questions. They do not question themselves. They do not question their own normality. They do not question what is being sold. Or how it was made, or where it came from, or why it was made. They do not question why it is being sold. Or how it is being sold. They do not question their own motives . They assume other people's motives are based upon the same ethic of self-gratification and greed as theirs is. They do not question anything. They are the most uncurious, unquestioning bunch of idiots the human race has ever spawned. Their only superiority lies in the smugness of their affluence. Their buying power. Their ability to gratify themselves better and faster than anyone else because they have more money than anyone else ever did on Earth before as a single social class of one culture: consumer culture.

Try to analyze exactly what each message is saying, what exactly anyone is trying to sell you. See if it is selling hate, fear, or mistrust, greed, lies, deception, immorality. See if it is trying to sell you snobbery, elitism, flagrantly false exclusivity and specialness. See if it is trying to sell you instant self-gratification. What is the norm they want you to assume? Do they want you to assume it is normal to badmouth everyone around you, and walk around like a pompous ass all day? Do they want you to assume its normal to act like an asshole? That it is normal to gamble away your hard-earned money? That it is Normal to hate members of your own family? That it is normal to be a snob? That it is Normal to despise others; because....? Because you have a better car? Because you have a better job? Because you make more money?

See if they are pandering to your own selfishness, your own fears, your own hates, your own anger and resentment. See if they are pandering to any of your addictions of self-gratification. See if they are pandering to your greed. To your desire for safety and security. To your fear of poverty. To your greed. To making something easier. See if they are pandering to your laziness. See if they hide the real reasons they are selling you something. See if they are lying to you. See if chemical companies that only manufacture poison death; show ads trying of their companies trying to save wildlife species. See if oil companies sponsor racing cars: so spectators will automatically associate winning with their product. See if you can uncover all their lies and misinformation physically. Go to their offices and see who they are. If everything you are exposed to has already been commercialized; then by definition: you cannot have been exposed to truth.

You cannot be truthful and sell at the same time.

As long as you try to sell someone on something: you are lying. By omission or commission, the fact is, you cannot sell something without lying, without not telling the truth.

As a general norm: Truth and Honesty: has simply stopped existing inside consumer societies. Truth has become non-existent in consumer society. The result? The vacuum has been filled with endless lies and meaningless trivia. This is what consumer society is full of. Nothing else.

This is one basic problem in all industrialized societies. Everything is processed before it reaches the consumer. Including Truth. All Facts. All Perspective. All Logic becomes poisoned and distorted beyond recognition. Until all facts, all perspective, all truth, all logic, all understanding becomes so toxically poisoned and processed: that all human awareness becomes a poisoned insanity of artificial norms and normalities that are actually insane.

Humans have not yet learned the first thing about their own humanity, or how to be human. Neither the civilized upper class, nor civilized owner classes have ever learned how to relate to each other as equals. Civilized humans have never learned how not to be oppressed slaves, how not to be rulers and oppressors. The only way you can avoid being a slave is by not submitting to any authority period. By not bowing down to anyone, not submitting, not going on your knees before anyone who does not love you personally. By not giving your own power to anyone else. By not giving your authority, your wealth, your knowledge, to anyone: except as an equal.

If you are stupid enough to bow down and worship an abstract idea. If you are brainwashed enough to submit to your own greed for money. If your love for money and greed and power is stronger than your love for yourself and for other living things... then you are not a humane person. You are a slave to your own greed, your own addictions, your own cravings for self-gratification. Allowing people who do not love: to use you as a tool and as a slave. Allowing other people to profit from your work so you can be slightly affluent yourself.

As long as you allow any human to bow down to you. As long as you take authority given to you by other people without loving them personally in return: then you cannot be a humane person.

The accepted normality of the Protestant Worth Ethic and the accepted normality of work itself is insane. The entire idea of being forced to spend most of your life working, and slaving... just so you can have a few hours, or days with no work: is insane.

What are people working for? The worship of work, the worship of dead things, keeping busy, keeping yourself distracted with all kinds of addictions...

That is not living. That is slavery. That is being a slave to work. That is being a Slave to dead things. That is the enslavement to dead things called possessions. That is being a slave to the idea of ownership. That is being a Slave of owners. That is being a Tool of owners. That is Doing their Bidding. That is Obeying them. That is being enslaved to them.

If you did not have to work for someone else... would you work at all?
Or would you work simply because you do not know what else to do with your life?

Where did the idea of rent come from? From Europe. For thousands of years in Europe: poor people lived wherever they could, in whatever hovels or cottages they could find or make for themselves. They died, but they at least they died in their own poor homes. Then Holland became rich: so rich, its population exploded. The masses became so rich: they could afford to pay money to live in better houses. They could move out of their hovels and become upwardly mobile. Big mistake. Before they had been poor: but at least they were not at the mercy of greedy, inhuman, grasping, landlords to provide them with shelter.

The richer peasants welcomed them and charged them as much as they possibly could to live in rented abodes. Rent prices soared. Rich people found a new way to get rich even quicker without lifting a finger. Rent prices went out of control. Poor people found that they could not afford to live anymore. Everything cost too much money. They were thrown out of their rented hovels, and died on the streets of Amsterdam and Potsdam. The rich guild members were outraged that such a sight could be seen on their newly cobbled roads. Poor people dying on the street in plain sight of them? Insufferable. Something must be done to clean up their streets. So... they invented something called: Hostels. They paid good money to keep these places of dying running so they would not have to see their own homeless poor dying on the street. That is how modern western homelessness was invented, and how hospitals were created. Hospitals evolved out of hostels as places where poor homeless dying people went to die. All because a country, a people who had been poor for thousands of years: suddenly became rich as a single nation. All because they instantly took on, and copied the worst practices of their social peers... and outdid them.

Before Holland became overpopulated and over rich: the poor were part of the land. They were considered as much as a part of owned property as the numbers of cattle or trees on the lands of the rich and mighty. But the rich had not dreamed of ousting their own poor from their own land because they had no money! That idea was as foreign to them as ousting the trees that grew on their lands because they could not afford to pay any 'rent'. The poor in Europe lived and died and were easily ignored by the rich... as easily as they ignored which trees grew and which trees died in the forests they owned. The poor were not allowed to hunt in these forests: any poor person caught poaching on a rich man's estate was a criminal.

Then Europe's poor exploded and poured into cities. Then Holland found a way to rob them by forcing them to pay 'rent'. Then homelessness was created. When every square inch of land is 'owned' in the abstract sense which the Dutch created for themselves; the poor have no place to lay their heads anymore. Before: in the middle ages: there were always places the poor could find to eke out a niggardly existence that was not avariciously and jealously guarded by an insane property owner who demanded 'rent' from the poor living there. All the ills of modern western poverty are created by the dynamic of one-sided accumulation. Over population, over-rich, are the same dynamic. Greed and over-population are the same dynamic. Greed is merely an inevitable result of the intensification of overpopulation. The more crowded humans get: the more they fight amongst each other for every scrap. The sicker their living conditions become, the more inhuman they become, the more indifferent they become to the suffering of others, the more competitive they become, the more corrupt they become. The harder they have to slave away working all their lives just to keep from starving to death, the more miserable they become.

Upward Mobility-Progress-Hope

What supposedly makes people happy?... Hope. Upward mobility. As long as you feel that you are climbing up in status position wealth, power, knowledge: you feel you are getting somewhere. As long as you are climbing up and not sliding down: you feel hopeful, you feel better, you feel positive, you feel you are making some kind of progress. Without hope: many people would kill themselves. Even when there is no actual hope: people create imaginary hope. Just in order just to keep from dying. Just to keep from giving up struggling against hopeless odds. Where does this come from? As long as an ape is climbing up a tree, and not being dragged down to its death screaming in terror by a predator: it has a hope that it can still live.

But what are you struggling against today? The eco system of Africa? What are you climbing? A tree in Africa? You are struggling to climb inside an artificial, unfair context called civilization. If you take away that artificial unfair context and replace it with the actual context of the Universe...: then what are you struggling against? What reason is there to struggle and fight against anything? Then you have to find out what is actually fair and what is actually unfair. Then you are forced to create and live by your own values and morals.

Linear reality... linear abstraction: gives people the imaginary idea of progress. The pyramidal pile of civilization forces people to struggle along a single linear path. Linear Hierarchies for people to climb higher in that pile just to attain a higher self-esteem. The very concept of self-esteem has been semantically corrupted by the upward mobility of civilization. Most humans are doomed to fail in this civilized system. Most people in this pyramidal pile are doomed to fall lower, not higher, because the lucky, privileged few seek to pile on as many disadvantages onto everyone else beneath them as much as possible. So people go along their single linear abstract paths, with imaginary hopes... using every kind of self-delusion and self-deception possible to keep themselves from being aware of how actually hopeless it is to make any progress or get ahead in the basic unfairness of pyramidal civilization. If you just took away this one idea of pyramidal, upward social mobility, this idea of civilized progress. And replaced it with the idea of becoming a better human, instead of becoming a better machine. Then most of the unhappiness in the world would disappear.

And moreover.... People would no longer need to hope. or be hopeful about anything. People would no longer have to strain and struggle against impossible odds just to scramble a bit higher in their life-station, up the physical totem of physical well-being, etc.

Hope has supplanted actual meaning. The blind lying optimism that things will be better in the future has replaced actual meaning. It does not matter if your life is completely meaningless, and you cannot find any actual meaning to your own life. It does not matter if you are forced to suffer under oppressive meaningless systems you hate. As long as you have hope: then you will endure the meaninglessness of your life and the meaninglessness of the oppression you are forced to live-in. The only meaning civilized humans have left is the hope that things will be better in the future. There is no other meaning except the bullshit meaning of the bullshit lie that things will be better in the future. All human meaning has been destroyed and replaced with hope and optimism.

If people lose hope and optimism that things will be better in the future. They commit suicide. They kill themselves. They live in a permanent state of rage and unhappiness. Basically if people lose meaning in their lives they kill themselves. Hope and popular optimism has become the mass drug replacing actual meaning to civilized existence. They are perfect moral and ethical deflectors and deniers of all actual truths. They are the perfect mental-emotional means by which all civilized people can lie to themselves and avoid all actuality. People shun and avoid anyone whose energy is not hopeful and optimistic. People crowd around charismatic optimistic, hopeful leaders.

Optimism and hope are emotional-mental drugs. Optimism and hope distorts and poisons all understanding. They are pure evil. All unpleasant truths have been ignored because people prefer to be optimistic and hopeful instead of realistic and practical and honest and courageous. Human horror, human oppression, killing, rape, bitchery, hate, fear, sickness, weakness... every human vice and failing and sin is overlooked in favor of optimism. But what kind of optimism? The bland bullshit hope that things will be better without anyone doing anything about anything. As peace negotiators like Jimmy Carter the former U.S. President hobnobs cheerfully with human scum and sick diseased rapists and mass murderers, racists, bigots, hypocrites, liars, thieves, con men... trying to get them to be better by appealing to what? To their better instincts? When all the instincts of all these scum are motivated purely by personal advantage? When every starving oppressed human on Earth is only motivated by the instinct of personal advantage? And you think things will get better if you believe that by cooperating together you can gain a personal advantage by it? Cooperation based upon personal selfishness by capitalist Robber Barons building huge corporations with the willing cooperation of their wage slaves in nothing new. The old Robber Barons persuaded their poor peasant scum to support them also so they could get richer. The Scandinavian hordes of Viking Robbers were based upon robbers cooperating with each other to raid and rob people in other lands. Did the English and French think this kind of cooperation based upon personal selfishness was good for them? Oops. What does a thousand burned villages matter... as long as a few Vikings got rich from it.

The same pyramid scam has been sold and bought; ever since humans started cooperatively killing and robbing each other. Now it is called Capitalism. Now it is called optimism, and hope. The myth of Capitalism and machines giving you a better state of physical well-being: is pure crap. Capitalism gives you less physical well-being, not more. Using a machine does not make you physically better off. Using a machine makes you more physically out of shape: not less. Until you become a sick, pale, bloodless ugly, weak, Capitalist monster like Dick Chaney. Kept alive by three expensive heart operations and expensive drugs.

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1102

You cannot have social mobility or hierarchies in a society of equals. Once you define society by the idea of equality... anything that destroys equality automatically becomes evil and suspect. And it should be. Because all upward mobility keeps people slaving away, fighting, manipulating, lying, cheating, against each other. It keeps people deceiving, betraying, deluding themselves and each other... continually trying to gain some advantage over other people. Treating other people as inhumanly, unfairly, and as badly as possible.

One way to rationalize this is the selective insanity of hope. The addiction to hope is a mental narcotic... Thinking happiness is just around the corner; if only they work harder, sell their souls to a company, do anything no matter how unethical or immoral to succeed. Because if you do not have any hope: you give up and stop fighting. You stop being upwardly socially mobile.

What is the Protestant Work Ethic, but the false ethic of pure upward mobility for all humans? What is it, but a creator of egos? What is it; but an idea that forces people to work their whole lives away: in misery and unhappiness... to die old, senile, bored and useless... with millions of accumulated, useless dollars in their bank accounts: that could be better used for young children to have decent lives. And why is this insane tradition upheld? Because old people are terrified dying poor and alone. Because they are terrified of dying broke. Because they know that if you have no money when you are old and weak, and unable to work; nobody will give a shit about you. Because your entire life's self-esteem is based upon how much money you managed to amass, how much status you managed to amass, and how much exclusive knowledge you managed to amass. So the one who dies with the most money, the most fame, the most status: wins.

What do they win, except the right to die? They win a more expensive coffin. A bigger pyramid, a bigger burial mound. They win not dying alone. What would happen if not one human gave a shit whether they died alone or not? What would happen if humans actually preferred dying alone? What if humans were not cowards? What motivation would be left in them to be socially upwardly mobile then?

Great rulers never died alone. They had huge retinues caring for them. Unless they are hated so much, that the instant they die: their body is stuffed into a sewer... like Stalin's body was...

Except... his mystique had brainwashed his entire Empire so thoroughly; that his dead body was retrieved and placed into a casket. For fear of the masses killing anyone who did not treat his corpse and his glorified personality cult-Myth with religious sacredness. The terrified, brainwashed peasants wept over the Father of their Country having forsaken them. They had been kept by him in a frozen state of helpless fear and immaturity all of their lives by being told what to do by the same filth mass murderer whom they wept for so openly after he died.

Once a slave population loses their masters: they become even more terrified, than when they are being beaten down and oppressed and starved and killed. They miss the normality of that inhuman oppression. They miss the authority they have been brainwashed to worship. They are terrified of thinking for themselves. They have been brainwashed into not thinking for themselves.

Stalin lived safely... happy in the knowledge that everyone else in his Empire was terrified of him. Once hundreds of millions of people bought into his deceptions, and his lies... he genially set about enslaving them in every possible way he could think of. During his reign in the USSR: Hundreds of millions of poor people were killed, tortured and lived lives of unspeakable suffering, degradation and hopelessness: just to feed the sick subconscious cravings and urges of this one sick individual. Why?

1102

Because they wanted a leader. And they got one.

But that is civilization. Whether this dynamic is played out in the life of a hairdresser trying to amass enough wealth and social position to become one of her society's peers; by manipulating everyone around her, and treating everyone as being less than she is. Or whether it was Stalin: who treated everyone around him as being less than he was. It is the same dynamic. The only difference is one of degree.

Who has ever lived in a condition of chaos? When you never knew if you were going to be jailed, or killed, or if you would be fired, or if you were going to starve to death? Talk to the hundreds of millions of soviet citizens who lived under Stalin's rule. Talk to the one billion Chinese who lived under Mao's rule. Talk to anyone who lived under a ruler who had the total power of life-and-death over all of their subjects. Talk to anyone who lived under a dictator. Or a ruling military junta. Chaos exists only when the ruling class accumulates too much power. And you are stupid enough to want a more powerful leader? You want a stronger leader? Then vote for blustering, pompous strongmen like Mussolini, Teddy Roosevelt, and George Bush Junior... who never admit they ever did anything wrong. Don't vote for more honest, reasonable, cooperating men who admit their own weaknesses. Vote for someone who acts like a GOD, who is never wrong, who is all-powerful, all-wise. And do not dare to criticize them.

What happens if you try to tarnish a polished idol of the masses?

'Mr. Leader... isn't it true that your government has-'

'Shut up!'

'Mr. President isn't it true that your entire cabinet has been chosen from the corporations you once worked for-'

'Shut up! We don't want to hear this. We don't want to hear your questions. We don't want to hear the truth. You are not showing the proper respect for authority by criticizing it, and asking it questions.'

That is the usual reaction of the masses.

'Tell us what we want to hear. Tell us lies. Don't tell us any unpleasant truths. As long as we can believe in your lies; we will be happy. Tell us what we want to hear, and we will vote you in.'
Once you allow any person too much power: they use it against other people. Not for other people.

That is why democracy is a total lie, and a hypocrisy. Because it tries to create a society where everyone is fighting against everyone else. Because it sells the idea that everyone can become socially upwardly mobile. Which only goes to destroy all families, all intimacy, all honesty, all courage, all wonder, all love, all humanity in these 'democracies'.

This is one reason why any ruling dynasty becomes dangerous. They start thinking they have an automatic God-given right to their power and wealth. The accumulation of too much power at the top becomes inexorable and inevitable. Liberties and freedoms of the masses are slowly eroded bit-by-bit... until each diminished level of less freedom becomes normal and unquestioned. Once you allow any dynastic family to pass on its power from generation to generation; they start thinking that they have a God-given right to that power. And from there it is one tiny step back to Dictators, Stalin, Hitler and the Divine Right of Kings. And you are back right in the same old medieval oppression you thought you were too intelligent and too modern to ever fall for.

If ordinary workers ever become enlightened as a single class. If workers ever understand the they power they actually hold. Ruling classes will be wiped out forever. There will be no rulers left. And you all will be amazed how chaos and anarchy does not ensue. These words will go into the book of superstitious fairytales. As just another lie, just another myth, just another fairytale that was once used to scare workers into slaving their entire lives away for their mortal enemies. And you will no longer be fed on a lying diet of success stories about the positive good of capitalism.

Where do you hear these myths from? Only from the lucky few. The exceptions to the rule. Never from the millions of losers. From success stories about the upwardly mobile, from the ones in power, from the winners, from those famous and rich enough to get on TV. From the smug, arrogant, privileged elite. All congratulating themselves on how great the system is. Why? Because they have indeed succeeded. Over the backs of millions of more deserving, harder working, less fortunate losers. But what's a few million losers compared to one rich success story. Hey. There's still hope. See. He did it. He succeeded. Why not me?. If I work all my life like he did, if I slave my entire life away just like he did... if I work harder than he did, when then I must succeed also. I will succeed.

Then you work all your life and consider yourself to be a miserable failure. Is anyone going to interview you after you die: so you can tell others you wasted your entire life for nothing? You mean nobody ever interviewed a worker who died after working twice as hard as his bosses, and was twice as intelligent as they were, but was never promoted. So he could never tell his children or the world that the hope of success was all bullshit? And all the other billions of unsuccessful failures who never managed to be upwardly mobile never got to tell their children after they died not to make the same mistake as they did. Only the rare, few, success stories are interviewed. The millions of failures are never interviewed.

Oh. You mean this one-sided brainwashing actually works because people simply do not want to evaluate the actual mathematical chances of success realistically. Oh. I see. Rather than be realistic and intelligent. People would rather be stupid and live lives based upon false hopes and self-deluding fantasies, rather than face the unpleasant truth. Oh.

What does this reveal of the human race? It reveals that humans are a race of emotional cowards and mental cowards. Afraid of facing any emotional truth, or mental truth that is too unpleasant. Humans are also a race of physical cowards. They can only kill after they have been brainwashed into becoming mindless robots, filled with drugs and poisons. Only after they have been brutalized, only after brutalizing themselves; can they become killers. But killing is not a sign of courage. Living is. And no human ever born yet has had the courage to live without fear of dying.

The lower classes are hoodwinked by scams because they want to be lied to. The Upper classes are no different. Except that they are doing more of the selling, and the lower classes are doing more of the buying and consuming of cultural and religious lies. The lower classes need someone to worship and adore. Famous personalities phoning ordinary people on TV, visiting their homes. Trying to prove that they are just like them. That they are just like their audience. Being loved for this common touch: that they would even deign to stoop down and mingle with ordinary people. Makeovers for a few lucky poor people. Their exterior bodies, houses, faces, clothes made over and re-modeled. Just to raise their lousy sense of outer, low self-esteem.

The lower classes have been sold the scam of wanting to become just like their mortal enemies. They have become their own worst enemy. By being given just enough of a glimpse of elite status, wealth and power to want it for themselves. So they willingly and gladly enslave themselves: straining greedily for the carrots that the Elite hold out for them just out of reach. Which makes them strive and compete against each other, and work, and slave all the harder to reach the top.

The hypocrisy of the Protestant Work Ethic is the hypocrisy of all upwardly mobile societies. Work is worshipped as being intrinsically good. Yet the entire reason people work is to become so rich, is so they do not need to work. Workers worship the idle rich. They worship the billionaires and multi-millionaires who do not work, and do not have to work. If these billions of hardworking people truly valued and worshipped the virtues of work: they would spit upon the idle rich as corrupt, lazy, evil scum. But they do not spit on them. They idolize the wealthy rich who do not work. They want to be just like them. They want to accumulate billions of dollars also and become rich and wealthy. Only: these corrupt, rationalizing, self-serving, hypocritical workers do not want to sell their souls as completely to the Gods of Greed and Avarice, as the truly upwardly mobile rich have done. The reason these envious poor workers are poor: is not that they do not have enough money to become rich. They are simply not greedy enough, not corrupt enough to become rich. They simply do not understand the culture of wealth, they do not understand the corruption of wealth. Unless you start smoking cigarettes: you do not know what it will do to your health. Unless you smoke cigarettes all your life: your lungs will not become completely black and ruined. Most of this corruption is not visible, but it exists inside your body as a blackness of your spirit just the same.

The corruption of wealth and greed is just as intangible as the corruption of smoking cigarettes. It is just as destructive to the human soul. The hypocrisy of poor people, and workers wanting to become rich, the hypocrisy of poor people worshipping rich movie stars and billionaires: is the same as if non-smokers worshipped the Marlboro Man for smoking cigarettes... even after he died of lung cancer from smoking cigarettes. It is the hypocrisy of non-smokers worshipping black lungs, and doing everything they can to have lungs just as black as those of cigarette-smokers.

Slavery

Slavery was created by the first humans to enslave something for their own advantage. The definition of slavery is taking something out of its natural, proper context, and putting it into a context that is an advantage for you: not for what you enslave. Humans took sticks, bones, rocks... they took them out of their natural context, and used them for their own personal advantage. This is the basic principle of enslavement and slavery. This is the basic Dynamic of how Slavery works. All tool-use is a form of slavery and enslavement.

What the first human who enslaved things to do their bidding did not realize and understand was... that the same degree to which you enslave something... it enslaves you also.

Once humans became enslaved to using tools: they could not live without them. Their tools enslaved them more and more and more. That is what humans are: we are tool slaves. We are slaves to our own tools. We are slaves to everything we own, we are slaves to the idea of ownership. We are slaves to abstract dead ideas.

The history of pre-historic ancient human societies was one of enslavement. All human societies before civilization was invented lived by the idea and Dynamic of slavery. All human societies practiced enslavement on hundreds of different levels. They enslaved themselves. They enslaved each other. They enslaved their women and children. The men enslaved each other. Whole tribes enslaved other tribes, whole clans enslaved other clans. From the smallest to the largest human social structure: from the individual to the couple, to the couple with children, to the extended family, to the band, to the extended band, to the clan to the extended clan, to races, ethnic peoples, peoples of one culture, down to sub-cultures, down to the individual. All prehistoric human bonds were bonds of enslavement and slavery.

The more people enslaved each, the more they enslaved tools, the more they enslaved animals, the more enslaved everything they saw, touched, used... the unhappier they became, the stupider they became, the duller they became, the sicker they became.

There are many kinds of slavery. But the pyramidal slavery of civilization is basically all the same. It is the slavery of upward mobility, the slavery of pyramidal accumulation... is basically the slavery of an ant struggling to get to the top of a shifting pile of sand. As every upwards struggle of the ant cascades sand down upon the ants below it... that struggling ant is not even looking behind to see what its upward struggle is doing to all of the ants below it. The ants below... are also trying to struggle upwards, and are being buried under huge avalanches of sand created by the ants above them. Making the lower ants below them; work and struggle and strain a hundred times harder, just to keep from being killed and buried by the cascading sand: created by the ants above them. This endless, unending cascade of sand: tosses the lower ants farther down the pile of sand, so they must struggle a hundred times harder; just to get back to where they were before the avalanches of sand crashed down; to send them reeling down the Pyramidal sand-heap. If none of the ants wanted to climb up that pyramidal pile of accumulated sand: there would be no struggle, no conflict and no constant crisis to keep the ants busy struggling.

Do any of the ants have an awareness of the greater context they are in? No. Are any of the struggling ants aware of what they are doing to other ants? No. Do they cooperate with each other? No. Is there any point to all this struggling? No. Are any of the ants aware of how they wasteful and destructive their struggling up the sand-heap is? No. Struggling up the sand pile is the normality of their existence. They do not have brains to compare, and evaluate living on sand that is level; instead of accumulated into a pile. Humans have brains. Do we use them? Or do we live just as mindlessly as ants? The pyramidity of civilization answers that question unpleasantly. Humans act like ants. Civilization is nothing more than a glorified ant-heap.

How do humans connect with each other? They form bonds. How do humans describe forming connections? By a process of bonding. How old is this word? It is as old as the slavery of bondship that humans first created when we first enslaved each other, and other animals, and domesticated them. Are there any other form of human connectivity except the connections formed by bondage and slavery? And the sale of bound slaves? 'Where are you bound?'... Meaning: where are you bound-to? As a slave that is bound and sold and transported somewhere else to a new master. Boundaries are a form of bound bondage. James Bond. Enslaved in unquestioning servitude to the Crown Government. The roots of our own language effectively brainwashes us into cultural attitudes and assumptions that we unconsciously absorb. Until they become a part of our unthinking normality.

The intrinsic concept of connection itself, has been poisoned by a tradition of human bondage, human slavery and human domestication for so long: that no other word exists in any human language that describes humans forming a connection with anything... without defining it as a form of bondage and enslavement. If any linguist can find an older word in any language that describes connection without it meaning bondage, or a form of enslavement or domestication: I'd like to hear it. Even our concept of travel and freedom is poisoned by the root meaning of bondage and slavery.

The Slavery of Ownership

The slavery of ownership works by a simple principle of Dynamic Balance: That Universal principle can be stated simply. The principle is:

“The degree to which you own anything... whatever you own... owns you to the same degree.”

This means that the more things you own, the more they own you. The more you own things: the more they own you. The more selfish you are about the possessions you own: the more you care about what you own, and the less you care about anything else including yourself; the more you time and energy you spend on what you own instead of spending it on yourself or other living things. The more dead things you own: the deader your soul becomes.

Within the pyramidal ant-heap of civilization; there is the slavery of the workers:... then there is the slavery of the owners. The owners? Yes. Until you become the owner of anything: you do not know what work it is to maintain whatever you own. Do you own a car? Then you know what I mean. Do you own a house? Do you own a mortgage? Are you in financial debt? Then you really know what I mean. Do you own a company? Then you really know what slavery is. Because you are more of a slave to that company than you are to your own wife, or your own family.

That is: unless you are so filthy rich that you have literally all your work done for you by other slaves. Unless you are that filthy rich: you will end up working even harder than the slaves under you. And that is precisely the uppermost layer of the Crème de la Crème that all people aspire to. The ultimate dream of no work at all. The dream of having human slaves to do all your work and your worrying and your planning and your thinking and figuring for you.... Oops: that is exactly the system of human that civilization had for 10 thousand years. The ultimate dream of pure ease and no hardship whatsoever. The ultimate dream of pure self-gratification. Which can only be achieved by having as many human slaves doing your bidding and looking after you as possible.

It would be wonderful for every human to have all their work done for them by slaves. But... that means they need more human slaves to work for them. And this insane, vicious cycle of this insane impossible, unworkable dream never ends. The destructive dynamic of upwardly mobile people trying to make slaves out of everybody else. Slaves enslaving slaves. Who will enslave the enslavers? They are already enslaved to the evil of enslaving others.

That is until machines were invented. Now human slaves can have machine slaves working for them. The glory and wonder of civilization is the steady improvement of the condition of human slavery. And as an owner: you are enslaved even more. You are enslaved even more Spiritually, emotionally, mentally, culturally, religiously than the lower class. And you will not enjoy your ownership.

Unless you have been trained early on; to treat and use other people like slaves, tools and machines. Unless you have slaved all your life to learn how to be an owner: you will work yourself to death under the burdens of your own ownership. Never forget this universal truth: Whatever you own, owns you to the same degree that you own it. The more things you own: the more responsibilities you accumulate, the more miserable and unhappy you become. That is the idiocy and insanity of accumulation. Owning hundreds of things does not give you happiness. Having to maintain and repair dozens of machines does not make you happy. They own you; you do not own them. They are enslaving you to work for them. Instead of a few masters: you become the slave of dozens and hundreds of mechanical machines who demand your attention every time they break down or don't work properly, or wear out.

Why do you think humans practice slash-and-burn farming? Why do you think corporations practice slash-and-burn business tactics? Why do you think humans who own anything never live up to their responsibilities? Because it is simply too much work. We take on more responsibility than we can handle. We own more things than we can maintain. We own more things than we can afford to maintain. Nothing we own is ever properly maintained. Nothing we own is ever properly looked after. Our eyes are bigger than our mouths. What we see; we want. That is Greed. What we see we want to own. But we do not look at the consequences of ownership. We do not consider all the responsibilities ownership entails. All the dead possessions and property we own have a hold over us. Our love of dead things has a hold over us. Our love of power and wealth has a hold over us. That hold is more powerful than love.

Once you create that sick bond between you and a dead thing or a dead piece of property... Once that dead thing becomes yours: that dead thing will not let go of you. Once you become addicted to the greed of ownership: You will fight to the death to keep it. You will never let go of it. And moreover; if you lose it, you will never be satisfied until you have regained it.

This is the curse and slavery of all ownership and all owners. The more things they own, the more they want to own more things. It is an addiction worse than drugs or alcohol. The addiction of collectors, buyers, owners, is all the same basic sickness. It is an addiction of selfishness. Wanting something that is all yours. And the more property you own; the more you have to work to maintain it. Until you have to pay a company to maintain your buildings for you because the work of fixing all the plumbing and wiring and painting, carpentry, and the aggravation of fighting with renters and tenants... is simply too much work. And the more property you own: the more property you want to acquire. The more property you own; the more you have to fight to keep what you own. The more your allegiance is to the dead pieces of property and not to people living in them. The more you are owned by your own property. The more your life is controlled by what you own. The more you are defined by what you own. And the more you look down on people who have less than you do. The more your humanity is defined and determined by your level of accumulated ownership of dead things. Until the only reason you deal with living humans is to get them to maintain your dead pieces of property. Until you only deal with people as slaves to do your bidding. Until your entire humanity is derailed and poisoned by owning dead things. Using living humans as slaves to look after your dead possessions. Spending most of your life and your time worrying about your dead possessions, maintaining your dead property, your dead car and your dead house. Loving your dead things, and not loving anything that is living.

That is the lifeless, sick, boring, meaningless existence, which civilized affluent ownership gives you. See what millionaires and billionaires do with their life. See how they live. See if you can find any love for living humans in them. See if they smile, or laugh. See if they are happy. They are walking machines; barely alive. Surrounded by their dead possessions, and their dead worries, and dead responsibilities, and dead chores. Pale, sickly, weak, things... using artificial crutches to make their meaningless existence easier. Using living humans and machines to feel slightly better.

Do they consider themselves to be evil? Not at all. In fact if you ask them: they would think you are deranged. They have done nothing illegal. All they are guilty of is: looking after their own concerns.

They do not see themselves as responsible for the well-being of other people. They reached their pinnacle of accumulated wealth and property by being selfish most of their lives. Inside a society where selfishness is lauded and admired: how could this socially rewarded virtue be evil? They sit on their piles of accumulated selfishness, and are admired and envied for it. Their social status is higher than people who are poorer than they are. As far as they are concerned: they earned their selfish piles of ill-gotten gains rightfully and honestly, by working for it all their lives. Working and slaving to own and accumulate dead things. Owning and accumulating money and property is a God-given right. The right of ownership is good. Ownership is good. Owning things is good. Owning things makes them feel good. Accumulating things makes them feel good.

But their effect upon Billions of humans poorer than they are, is exactly the same effect of the ant struggling up its own accumulation of sand ... inadvertently sending huge landslides of destruction and oppression down upon ants below it.

Try and tell that ant to stop oppressing the ants beneath it, and stop struggling to climb higher. Try and tell a rich, selfish, affluent, property owner to stop owning more property and make more profit. Try and tell him to stoop down and help the people beneath him to become as wealthy and rich as he is... And he will look at you like you are crazy, and laugh at you.

Capitalism corrupts civilized humans through ownership. It forces people to develop the awareness level of an ant. It forces people to act like ants. This is one effect that civilization has upon humans.

Ownership and Caring

The only people who own anything are those who care about what they own. The only true ownership which exists is the ownership of caretaking, the ownership of Love, of caring for each other... The degree of that ownership is dependent on how much you give of yourself to what you care about. True ownership is not about possessiveness, or taking or selfishness: it is about giving unselfishly. The only thing you can truly own is what you give to another living creature. You cannot give love to a rock. Rocks are dead: they don't know what love is. A rock cannot love you back. Loving someone who is emotionally dead is the same as trying to love a rock: you get nothing back from it. If you truly care about someone or something, you do not try to possess it or own it. Possessiveness destroys caring; ownership destroys love. That is why marriage ends up in either divorce, mutual dislike, or emotional death. When people try to own each other exclusively, they do not truly love each other. Each living creature has a right to its own Life. If you care enough to take care of living plants and living animals and living people unselfishly; the only reward you will get of your caretaking is the satisfaction of helping a growing living organism grow and flourish. Life creates Beauty. Humans are designed to help Life create more Beauty. Humans are meant to make living things more Beautiful by caring about them. When you can make living things more Beautiful, when you can make everything around you more Beautiful; then the gratitude of all the living things you helped, and the love you create, and the beauty you create will be more rewarding than the selfish possessive taking and using and having of ownership.

The Slave Culture of Civilization

What is the Progress of Civilization? Why is there an almost universal assumption that the progress of civilization is a good thing? Why is the history of civilization seen as progress? And not as a regression?

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1110

The unspoken assumption of the Western idea of civilized progress: is a progress that is making humans more humane, more caring. The unspoken assumption of the Western idea of the progress of civilization, is the freeing of humans from slavery, oppression, ignorance and poverty. The unspoken assumption that Western civilization has freed humans from slavery, oppression, ignorance and poverty.

That unspoken assumption: is a complete lie. It is a complete reversal of the actual truth. The slave culture of civilization has not gone away. The slave culture of civilization has not vanished. It has not been banished. It has not been conquered.

Instead: the slave culture of civilization: the civilized culture of slavery: has flourished, and spread, and mutated, and multiplied into new kinds of slavery, while preserving all the old ones. Instead of freeing humans from slavery, oppression, ignorance and poverty: civilization has increased it and accumulated more kinds of slavery..

The buying and selling of slaves has not vanished. It has only mutated from the buying and selling of human slaves to the buying and selling of wage slaves and the buying and selling of cars and the buying and selling of everything else. The Western capitalist culture of buying and selling has spread like a crazed fad all over the world. Everyone is buying or selling something. The Internet and E-bay has exploded the culture of buying and selling into a worldwide culture. The capitalist culture of buying and selling has swallowed and taken over all older civilized cultures. The slave market has not vanished. It is merely called the labor market instead of the slave market. People are now selling and buying cars instead of horses and cattle. The buying and selling of humans that do the most important work of a civilized society has been replaced by the buying and selling of machines that do the most important work. People are trading in older models for newer ones, people are treating each other like slaves that can be bought and sold.

In the 1800's, the white elite of the Southern states became so lazy and so corrupt: nothing was being produced or created industrially except industrial agriculture. Everything they had: they were selling for expensive imports. Until there were so many slaves, and so little productivity: that most small slave owners went bankrupt. The slave culture of the south became so corrupt: that the only way they could make a profit was by selling their own slaves. They invented a system of racism: 16 skin colors from dark black to near-white... the lighter the color: the more money they could make from selling a slave. Then began a slave culture that is so horrible... so rotten: only a few books have ever chronicled this untold evil. White slave owners began selling their own half-white children into slavery: as a business. They began fucking black slave girls as a business and raising whiter slave babies as a business. Until it became an industrialized process of raping, giving birth and raising human babies to sell for profit only. Until the white owners could not stand the horror of their own inhumanity... and began paying white studs... handsome devils... whom they hired to work as overseers in these baby factories called cribs: to rape black slave girls for them, and raise their babies and sell them: for a profit.

Modern Western affluent parents are now raising their babies the same way. They are raising them for only one purpose: to be hired in the job market. Everything they do is to get the highest possible price when their baby is put on the job market. The difference between black slave girls being raped to raise babies and raise them and have them sold, and modern western parents: is that today: we are doing it willingly. Babies raised from birth to become good little corporate slaves, good little obedient conformist employees. Babies raised from birth for only one purpose: to work for somebody else. That is modern slavery. There is no basic difference between how Southern whites raised the babies of their slaves, and how modern whites are raising their own babies. The culture of modern civilization is slave culture. It has always been slave culture. The only difference between today and the past: is that we have enough perspective to see how enslaved humans were then. But we don't have perspective to see our own slavery. Future generations will look back on our time and see the same thing. Slave culture is the normality of human civilized existence. The normality of human civilization is what you take for granted. The only time you can become aware of it, it when you don't take it for granted.

1110

Domestication and Slavery

The basic issue of domestication and slavery is free will. Human Slavery is based upon the idea of one human forcing their will upon another human being: forcing them to do their bidding. The same applies to domestication; humans domesticated animals by taking away their free will. Humans enslave other humans by taking away their free will. How is this done to a human slave? by breaking them: by breaking their will to resist your will. By putting them in chains, by robbing them of their freedom. All domesticated animals before they were robbed of their free will were once free and independent of humans. Most wild animals born free cannot be broken or domesticated. Only if they are born into slavery can they be unknowingly be enslaved. In this way, they do not resist their enslavement simply because they do not know any better condition they were born into: an artificial condition of captivity and enslavement. If you are born into any condition of enslavement, slavery: domestication, oppression, repression or suppression, it becomes normal. By normalizing the condition of their enslavement; by capturing wild animals and raising them in captivity, by their babies being raised inside a normalized condition of domesticated captivity: humans have enslaved animals and used them as domesticated slaves for thousands of years.

The domestication and enslavement of wild animals came from human enslavement. Humans had been enslaving each other long before they ever got the idea to enslave other species. The moral and ethical evil of domestication and slavery is the issue of inequality. The fact is: All inequality is evil. All domestication is evil. All Slavery is evil. They are all the same thing. They are all based upon robbing another living creature of their freedom, independence and free will. If you don't want to be a slave driver: if you don't want to be an owner of slaves: then you must treat all other humans as your equal. You must allow them to be free and independent. You must allow them to exercise their free will. You must allow them to be free to live their own lives without robbing them of their free will. Humans are not gods. Humans are animals. We are just another animal amongst thousands of other species of animals. If you want to be have free will: then what right do you have robbing other animals of their free will? "Do unto others as you would have them do unto you" is a universal moral truth. If you don't: you become a slave owner; you become a hypocrite: you end up disliking yourself, you end up hating your life, you end up unhappy, miserable and alone and evil.

The only intelligent way of treating other living animals: the only sane way of dealing with all living things on earth: is to treat all of them as your equal. The only sane way to treat all living things on Earth is through friendship and cooperation. Not through making them your enemy. Human civilization is evil because it has become the enemy of all living creatures on Earth. Human civilization does not nurture and support Life. Human civilization is evil because human civilization kills Life.

Advertising

How can advertising be explained without analyzing and tracing and understanding the snarled rationalizations of each consumer's subconscious mind; and how and why each consumer's subconscious reacts on subliminal levels to the barrage of millions of commercials, symbols, messages, etc?

You would first need to understand human psychology. How the reptilian brain, or instincts interface with the subconscious, and conscious mind. How your urges, addictions interface with your emotions and thoughts.

Advertising is popular culture. Popular culture is advertising. They work in a vicious cycle of negative feedback... a cyclic system of self-gratification. Feed the people what they want. The people want what is fed them. The more you eat; the fatter you get. The fatter you get; the bigger your stomach expands, the emptier you feel, the hungrier you feel, the greedier you become, the more you eat, the less you exercise, the unhealthier you get, the weaker you get, the more spoiled you get, the lazier you get, the more you eat... etc, etc... Popular culture, and Capitalism, and advertising, and self-gratification, and exclusivity, and upward mobility is all the same thing supporting and feeding off of the same negative vicious cycle.

By twisting the semantic meanings of words, by replacing semantically accurate words with lying mental with emotional trigger words that evoke subconscious reactions on a subliminal level. By saturation bombing of commercials and ads so you are overpowered by the peer pressure effect of the impression that everybody else is buying this product. By selling something as a lie. Selling a product or service as being the best, or newest, or most exclusive, or has magical properties, and can do magical things like making you popular, or powerful, or loved, or envied, or special, or smart, or whatever you want to be or become... instantly without having to earn it or work at it. By seamless introductions of products into movies, CD's, TV, etc. By understanding how and why cults are formed and spread. By supplying ready-made identities to people who have never developed their own. By supplying ready-made values, beliefs, morals and ethics to people who have never developed their own. By creating whole meaning systems, and entire cults and cultures to replace the lack of meaning systems in the fading and more meaningless schools and churches of America.

By using every filthy underhanded sneaky tactic and strategy... the advertising companies try to find the consumers who spend the most and have the most money, and separate the rich from their money. So the richest can get the rich to make them even richer, and so-on down the line. By using tribal cultural thinking and messages. By selling the individual consumer the bullshit belief that they are the most important thing in the Universe. By nurturing every destructive negative evil vice and selling them as a glorified sanctified good. By normalizing people to this poisoned saturation of advertising in society. By using misinformation, misdirection, deflection, politically correct code-words. By nurturing and encouraging ignorance, stupidity, fear, hate, selfishness, greed, envy, antagonism, and every human corruption and rot... advertising is a crucial component of destroying the very fabric of marriages, families, communities and all human and humane life energy on this Earth.

Until American humans do not, and cannot, and do not know anymore how to form a marriage, or a family, or a community. All they know is how to become a part of a commercial enterprise or activity. The corporate culture is so widespread that Americans no longer even jog; unless they are training to enter a commercially sponsored competition... If a social activity is not commercially sponsored: then it is not worth joining or doing. All they know is go to a commercial mall and mingle anonymously with other faceless strangers and consumers... each one parading around acting as if they are the most special consumers, most exclusive snobs, better than all the others... as they buy the same shit and eat the same shit. All they know how to live is by seeking out crowds of shoppers and spectators and joining these crowds.

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

In America: the only places people get together is where they can compete against each other as enemies, or gratify themselves as consumers or mass together as spectators. The things they love the most are consumer products, brand labels, and commercial identities... They love inanimate objects like cars and houses, money, status, fame, winning, greed, and specialized cults that have nothing to do with being human. Except that each specialized polka cult, and folk-music cult, and racing cult, and jogging cult and car cult etc, can proudly prove to themselves that they are different and unique and better than all the other faceless consumers. Even though they buy the same shit, eat the same shit, and watch the same Media shit as all the other consumers who do not polka or go off-road driving, or off-road camping, or off-road racing. So if you sail: you join a sailing cult. A sailing club. If you dance. You join a dancing cult, a dancing club. If you folk-dance, you join a folk-dance cult, a folk-dance club. If you bowl, you join a bowling cult, a bowling club.

The only problem with this kind of insane one-dimensional activity-culture: is that if you bowl dance, ski, sail, camp, swim, roller-skate, play volleyball, chess, bridge, and play music. You have to join fifteen different cults and clubs to do it. Unfortunately: there is not enough time or money for anyone to afford this. This forces people to become one-dimensional in what they do. It forces them to do only one thing. It forces them to develop one-dimensional identities, one-dimensional cultures, one-dimensional personalities, one-dimensional interests, one dimensional lives, and one-dimensional careers, one-dimensional interests, one-dimensional hobbies, one-dimensional brains, one-dimensional activities. This turns affluent humans in affluent Nations and societies: into the most boring, blind, stupid, uncaring, specialized, blinkered, bunch of narrow-minded idiots in the world. All unconnected to each other. All alienated from each other. All convinced that they are better than the others. Or in the words of the school-rant that states the hypocrisy of human egotism accurately:

“Don’ mess wid de bes, cause the bes don’ mess...”

“We may not be de bes’, but we’re better dan de res.”

In other words. Don’t even think of messing with us. We are the best. We do not associate with the likes you. You are not the best. We are the best.... And since we are: we are so superior, that we do not even have to prove it to you by competing against you, and beating you honestly.

Oh. If you insist on forcing yourselves on us and prove to us that you are indeed the best. We may not be the best, but we’re better than the rest. Which also includes you. Even after you have proven that you are better than we are: we will insist on keeping the conviction of our superiority intact. So even if you are acclaimed a world champion and receive the Gold Medal. Even if the whole world acclaims that you are the best in the World. We will keep our conviction that we are still better than the rest. That we are better than all other humans. And not even the proof of being better than we are will change our tribal exclusiveness and snobbery. Nothing will change that. We will live and die by this conviction regardless of the truth. Regardless of anything and everything. We would rather believe our own self-delusions of superiority than believe anything else... Does that sound like the basis of every teenage clique and every adult clique and club, ever human community and social group ever formed? It sounds like that because this is how stupid humans actually are socially. Take them as individuals, and they act and think much more intelligently. Put them into any group, and they become conforming idiots. Conforming to idiotic, dead ideas and traditions that are thousands of years out-of-date.

Advertizing hides the basic secret from the masses: it hides the fact that everything you buy is bad for you... and everything you sell is also bad for you. Advertizing hides the fact that buying and selling is a corrupt activity which dehumanizes both the seller and the buyer into avaricious greedy, selfish, lazy.

self-deceiving morons who believe in money. The idea of turning everything in the world into dollars and cents makes no sense; but that is exactly what advertizing does. It sells you on the assumption that money can buy happiness: that money can buy meaning in your life; that money has meaning, that money is worth something. The exact opposite is true. It has been only by taking everything out of human society except the commercial corruption of money/profit; buying/selling and screaming out lies nonstop for 100's of years that advertizing can sell people on crap they don't need Advertising tries to sell the idea that if you buy this or that you will feel good. When you buy it: you don't feel any better: you feel worse. But you become addicted to the buying, and lying to yourself, and fooling yourself that you will feel better if you buy something. It is an unspoken social lie that everyone participates in. Everyone knows it is a lie, but humans still do it. To find out why each individual consumer does it: you would have to go into that person's reptilian brain, into their subconscious mind and conscious mind and examine their entire lives and analyze and understand which lies, which reptilian urges, which subconscious impulses control the buying habits of that individual consumer. And then analyze why that person even has a buying habit, and where that addiction comes from. And the study the entire history of human brainwashing, human peer pressure, human conformity, and human masses. And find out just how the mass culture, mass religion, mass society, mass community, city, Nation, town, family, parents, neighborhood, schools and work normalities of that consumer affected and still affect him or her. The general dynamics of advertising, and its effect on humans are easy to understand. The details of how it actually works are irrelevant. Advertising works because people are afraid of dying. And do not want to experience anything unpleasant. So they fill their lives with the most meaningless useless crap. They are sold this crap because they would rather believe lies than any unpleasant truths. Which only makes their emotional and mental cowardice worse. And makes them lie to themselves more. And swallow more lies. And buy more crap. And become addicted to consumption more; as the only way they can stand living with themselves. Until the idea of not buying paper towels becomes unthinkable. Until the idea of not buying a Mercedes Benz becomes unthinkable. Until they become spiritually linked to consumer brands and products. Until they become spiritual consumers. Until their entire spirituality becomes corrupted and poisoned by their consumption. .

Water

The idea of being cleansed, or cleaning yourself with water, is simply a process of dynamic balancing. Water is the most dynamically balanced liquid known. The act of washing or cleansing merely rids one of accumulated imbalances: be it external or internal. Since this liquid substance is the basic vehicle for literally all of the dynamic balancing of life, and its ecosystems: the natural act of washing or cleaning in a natural eco- system is taken for granted. Because this balancing dynamic-medium is so universally effective: no matter what substances are mixed with it, it will find a proper use for them. It will find the proper balance for them. It will find the proper place for them. This natural cycle of water-life is itself a self-purifying process... cleaning itself of all its own impurities over and over again.

But the civilized attitude towards water and its use goes completely against the life-principle of dynamic balancing-cleansing. It assumes that no matter what impurities are mixed with water, nature will find a way to continue this cleansing-purifying-balancing process. Which is not the case when you introduce poisonous non-natural substances. Or ones that are not naturally found in this process. Or if the level of a certain substance exceeds the amount found in nature.

By using water to clean civilization of its toxic poisons and waste: we are poisoning the rest of the planet: including ourselves. Simply because we are using this process out-of-context: by trying to make it do what it was never designed to do. People have the strange idea that no matter how much toxic waste is dumped, that the earth-water-life cycle, will somehow magically find a way to process all of these artificial chemical compounds, and re-balance itself and purify itself. Humans actually expect nature to remain spotless and pure... regardless of what humans do it. When humans step out of their polluted cities and houses... they expect to find nature pristine in spite of what mankind does to it. This naive belief is held in the face of all scientific evidence: that we have already polluted the entire earth so full of poisonous compounds, that the air blowing all the way across the Pacific Ocean is polluted. When that air hits L.A: it is still contains smog that China has dumped into it. Which only adds to L.A.'s smog pollution: making it even worse. People going to the west coast beaches of America can no longer escape the smog of their own cities by breathing in the air coming in from the pacific ocean. They end up breathing China's smog.

But do humans do anything about this? No. Not unless some crisis threatens their life directly. By the time the Earth's water cycle becomes so polluted that its purifying-balance dynamic no longer works: to the point that this directly threatens civilization as an immediate crisis, it will be far too late for humans to fix.

We have already polluted so much of the limited amount of fresh water on this planet and increased our population to the point; that the next century's power struggles will be geopolitical conflicts over who has control of the limited supply of fresh water left on this planet that is still drinkable and not hopelessly polluted by industrial waste. Already there has been a huge trend by private corporations scrambling to buy up water rights in order to profit from the inevitable shortage that is getting increasingly worse. Already a large part of the world's human population has no access to clean drinking water. The ensuing health problems are destined to become catastrophic as diseases and epidemics spread from drinking polluted water.

Now there is the elite fad of exclusively pure bottled water. Why? Because the water that comes out of your tap tastes so horrible, and had so many chemicals in it: that people cannot drink it anymore. Now even the richest nations do not have clean drinking water. People have to buy filtered water in plastic bottles. Expensive imported water in plastic bottles. Now rich people drink water exclusively out of a plastic bottle. Because civilization has filthied nearly all but the most remote aquifers in faraway places. So companies make fortunes shipping expensive bottled water to all the industrialized cities in the world. Literally hundreds of millions of people drink water out of plastic containers, and then throw those containers in the garbage.

What would the world be like: if every living thing, every living creature, every living animal did the same thing? What if every cell in your body left behind a deposit of plastic every time it drank water? What if every ant, every bird, every animal left behind a deposit of plastic every time it took a drink?

Oh. Only human beings need clean water. Only human beings need to drink water. Only human beings leave behind plastic every time they drink water. Why? What for?

A single plastic container can be re-used safely thousands of times, if all you put into it is clean water. Oh. Its too inconvenient to save your plastic container. Oh. The plastic industry and water companies design the bottles to be used only once. Oh. You might get someone's germs if you use a used plastic container.

Milk bottles were re-used for decades because they were glass and could be easily sterilized. Then plastic became so cheap: that the idea of use glass bottles became outdated. Plastic bottles could easily be re-used millions of times even more easily than glass bottles. But affluent humans live in a sterilized consumer culture where everything must be sealed at the factory. Throwing away plastic bottles is as common today as spittoons were when chewing tobacco was popular. But when hundreds of millions of people throw something away that is not biodegradable: we are leaving this poisonous material in landfills for the next million years. To slowly poison the Earth so nothing will grow on it.

But hey! Who cares about the future? Throwing away plastic bottles after using them only once: is normal. Throwing away plastic bottles; is common. Throwing away plastic bottles; is taken for granted.

If every other living thing did it... we would suddenly be inundated in so many millions of tons of plastic that there would not be a foot of land that was not covered in plastic containers. We would be wading through piles of plastic containers anywhere we went. They would end up blocking out the sun. And all civilized people would become outraged that other animals dared to poison our living area. But of course... as long as we do it to other species... it's okay. Because we can get away with it. Because other animals don't have guns to kill us with; when we do it to them. Because other animals do not make plastic containers. Because they do not use something once and then throw it away.

The sacredness of water: its cleansing-purification-life principle has been lost due to civilized culture becoming increasingly alienated and insulated from nature. Only in a state of pure wonder can the awareness of the air you breathe, the water you drink, and the earth you live on, become sacred. Otherwise: they are only used as receptacles for human waste and accumulation. Water is designed to be shared by all the living things on this living earth. Not just used once... by humans... and then thrown away as useless.

Originally, our ancestors were designed to share everything they had: with not only their own kind, but all other living things also. The idea of selfishly using water only to wash yourself with, and then dumping that almost clean water that could be easily re-used for drinking water, and mixing it. With tons of polluted toilet water and industrial waste water and street run-off water is one example of how we not only selfishly use a precious resource for our own selfish needs, but then poison it further so no living thing can use it without being killed by it.

Spend money to have two separate sewer systems? Yet this would pay for itself simply from the savings any city would get from not having to pipe in vast amounts of fresh water that end up wasted in showers and bathtubs. It would pay for itself from the cheaper processing that could return that water into a recycling system, which would be a godsend to community water bills. There are many other advantages to this idea: cities could use non-drinkable water for toilets and industry; thereby reducing the cost of re-processing that water to an unnecessary level of purity. There could be a realistic cost placed on each system, and taxpayers would be billed more honestly. Industry would have to foot the bill for its own water, and not be able to shake it off onto the ordinary citizen. The cost of ordinary people's water bills would drop significantly. Farmers should also have their own less expensive system instead of like now: using expensive drinking water to water plants that can easily thrive on less pure water. Then they would not be able to push the cost of their own water onto the ordinary taxpayer. But we do not even think of this even as a possibility because our entire consumer culture is based upon waste: not thrift.

Beyond this, the basic ecological, evolutionary and genetic life-truth remains that all resources on this planet were meant to be shared. No species, no animal, no individual, no human, no Nation, no city, no community, no taxpayer has the right to use any resource only for their own use... much less poison those resources so other living things are killed by it. The whole idea of using the entire earth's natural resources for the benefit of only one species, or even more insanely, only one nation; is what civilization has developed and created. It is merely another example of linear functionality. It is merely another invented, created, imagined, a given, a normality. It is an unquestioned legal right. Coming out of the arrogance we develop by using tools.

All tool-innovation, no matter how evil; remains unquestioned. Why? Just because we can do it. Just because there is no greater power to stop us from doing it. This inane excuse for bad technology has been spouted repeatedly:

'But if I don't do it, then somebody else will....'
That is not a moral argument. That is a thin excuse, which really means:
"If I don't get some advantage from it: somebody else will."

This is the rationalized morality of all Science, all Technology, all industrialized Nations, all Governments, all weapon manufacturers, all makers of nuclear bombs and reactors, all space technology...all evil: all over-intensive tool-use.

However: is this rationalization valid? Is it moral? Ethical? Sane? Yet every scientist. Every business person. Every corporate president. Every dishwasher, every human on earth: uses this rationalized excuse. Basically saying:

'Hey. We're all corrupt. We're all greedy. Show me someone who isn't.'

And when a protester finds that nobody will agree with his objection. When the few people who are not quite that corrupt; find a majority outnumbering them. Their voice disappears from history, from the media, from books, from newspapers, from everywhere. Because nobody will let them speak out against things that the majority is guilty-of en masse. No majority of any class has ever willingly admitted to anything. All that is required is to have more than 50% of the elite to be at a certain level of normalized corruption, and it will stay hidden for centuries. All that is needed is for 51% of the entire human population to have a certain level of normalized corruption: and it not only will never be spoken of because it is taken-for-granted: for that corruption automatically to get worse, and worse, and worse. The level of corruption due to the mechanized progress of civilization, which we have reached today, is easy to explain: simply because it is so obvious. People no longer even try to hide it. It is blared out in the media by the ton. Nobody bothers to notice the difference between corruption levels thirty years ago and corruption levels of today. Nobody bothers to notice their own normalities changing and worsening.

Cleanliness

How sanely do humans practice the principle of cleanliness? Affluent people who keep their homes spotless, go to movie theatres where they slop all of their food and drink containers onto the floor. The insides of factories are kept spotless while dumping their poisonous waste outside the facilities. Cities spend huge budgets to beautify and keep their streets clean while dumping all of their filth elsewhere. People demand clean drinking water, while releasing all of their bodily wastes into the same water supply and pouring it out of sight into rivers and oceans.

Even the idea of using water to pour waste into: is an insane concept. Water is the most sacred substance on Earth. It should be kept as pure and unpoisoned as possible... not as filthy as possible. To put the filthiest substances into the purest substance. Where did that idea come from? Where did the idea to mix piss, and shit, with water come from? Who were the first humans to get rid of too much accumulated piss and too much accumulated shit by mixing it with water and shunting it somewhere else? No other living animal does this except us. It is a sacrilege against all living things. It is a sacrilege against all life. It is a sacrilege against all of nature. Yet, that is what civilization does and has done for thousands of years. The hypocrisy is obvious. Because humans practice cleanliness unsanely: you have the endless repetition of irresponsible dirtiness, and the endless conflicts of:

'Not in my backyard you don't. Not in my neighborhood you don't. Not in my city you don't'. Etc., etc.

Well, um... gosh. Um... but every turd you defecate... goes into clear water. Why into water? Because it is more convenient? Or because it is more wasteful? There are thousands of better, easier and cheaper ways of dealing with human waste products. Every piece of toilet paper you use... has to go somewhere. So why shouldn't your own turds go into your own backyard and not someone else's?. Wouldn't that solve all the pollution problems in the world?... Then you would not be dumping your waste into someone else's yard, and nobody would be dumping theirs into your yard either. Then everyone could be personally responsible for their own waste.

Oh. You mean this is too unpleasantly honest. Does this make too much sense. You mean you don't want to face the problem of what to do with your own waste. You mean no human alive wants to deal with the problem of their own bad waste habits and bad lifestyle. You mean 6 billion humans do not want to deal with their own waste, or smell it, or face it, or admit to it. You mean that there is no possible solution to human waste; unless we all stop living bunched up with other people in one place all the time? You mean the only sane way to live is by not living in cities or towns.

What if all people lived by an ethic of responsible cleanliness; instead of the selective irresponsibility we live by today? What if every person made sure that no matter where they lived or what they did... that they left a place cleaner than when they found it? Instead of dirtier...? How could Capitalism survive then? By only using biodegradable, natural processes? By not using any unnaturally created or produced chemicals or substances? How can you even hope to live up to any form of sane, global environmental responsibility, any form of sane cleanliness: unless you do not accumulate anything? How can you hope to have a sane spirituality unless you have a sane ethic of cleanliness?

The most revered holy men, the Pope, the High Lama of Tibet still sit on the same toilets you do; and their feces goes into the same sewers as yours does. If they are physically no cleaner than you are: why should you believe that they are spiritually cleaner than you? The idea of upholding them as more pure, or more spiritual is not even a hypocrisy... it is a dirty, shitty joke.

Why do you think 50,000 years ago: the original walkers killed every settled cave dweller they could? Because they stank of their own feces. Because their entire surroundings stank of their own accumulated filth. Because the walkers who did not eat much, and whose feces were relatively small, dry, and odorless could smell the rotting of feces of the cave dwellers. In the beginning it was easy to find them simply from their overpowering stench of their filth. There is a reason for everything.

Cleanliness has become a cultural assumption that is taken for granted. All western civilized logic is poisoned with it. Anyone with clean clothes is better than someone with dirty clothes. Anyone who is dirty is bad. Anything dirty like earth; is revoltingly ugly; so we must all buy tons of bleach to make our clothes as sanitary, and white and sterile and as dead as possible. If there is a mouse in the house? A spider? Any living thing? Eek. It's dirty. It's alien. It's alive. Kill it.

The codeword of cleanliness is actually an insane reversed logic of unclean people trying to lead absolutely clean lives... It is a simple case of psychological projection. So the slightest speck of dirt called 'earth' becomes unacceptable to live with. As a result; people grow up feeling revulsion the Earth they live on. Hating all dirt, all Earth. Dirt is Earth. It is the true clean source of all our food. It is good: not bad. It is clean: not dirty.

The English language is semantically poisoned, and polluted by so many meanings that have crept into its words. The word we use for the earth that grows our food is called: soil. But when our children go out to play, they come back all happy with soil on their clothes. Then their clothes are soiled and must be cleaned of that soil... until soil became synonymous with dirty. Until soiled means dirtied. Until they mean the same thing.

In that case... every farm on Earth is full of dirty soil. We must wash all this dirty soil off our farms. It is dirtying our precious, sacred, clean farms. Go tell all the farmers they must get rid of all their dirty: ugh, soil. All our farms are made up of nothing but soiled dirt. Dirty soil. Now the term dirt means soil. So now today.... All dirty-soil, and all soiled-dirt, all dirt, all soil, all earth-soil in English words; are used to brainwash children onto revulsion for the earth we live on! Soil is dirty... dirt is soil. Instead of being the cleanest source of all living things that all living things need and grow in. Black soil is the cleanest thing on earth. It is the only true black gold there is. In it; thousands of different kinds of organisms live and prosper and flourish all alongside each other, living off each other's energy. Properly mulched organic matter with vermiculture creates the sweetest most life-giving substance on this Earth. We call this planet Earth because this black gold is the most sacred life-giving, life nourishing substance there is. If you think of soil: as being dirty, this planet as being dirty then your entire outlook on Life and the world you live in has been twisted into lies. This is one small example of how we have been brainwashed by our culture, and our civilization into insane attitudes towards the world we live-in. And especially towards Nature... and all the Earth. Earth is soil. Earth is dirt. We live on it, and by it and for it. Our bodies are made up of earth and water. How can an animal made of earth and water have a revulsion of earth, and a disdain for water? We should love earth. Not hate it. We should love all living things that are made up of the same elements we are made-of. Earth, and soil, and dirt, should be loved.

But not to clean freaks who are obsessed about their own selfish, superficial, artificial cleanliness. Their entire life and lifestyle is mainly about hate and revulsion of all other living things, and a fear of death. It is only in the sterility of a dead environment that they ever feel safe. That is what happens to a common-sense concept such as cleanliness; when you try to apply it in an absolute fashion.

Cleanliness is supposed to be next to godliness. But what kind of Godliness? The godliness of reason? What kind of reason? Balancing a clean earth with a clean lifestyle? Or the godliness of power. Arrogance. Smugness. Blindness. Non-awareness.

What is cleanliness anyways? Anything that is pure? Or anything that is balanced. Is cleanliness an absolute? Or is it relative: as Einstein said. Is anything relative; clean? Is cleanliness a matter of relativity, or is it an absolute? All processes of cleansing are balanced relative processes. There is no process that cleanses which is absolute. The insanity of a species trying to keep itself spotlessly, physically-mechanically clean by dirtying the entire planet it is living on... is so insane, so absurd, no words can describe it.

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1120

Instead of conveniently getting rid of our waste, so it filthiest some other place: what if each person was forced to live with every piece of trash they ever created? There is only one sane form of cleanliness, there is only one sane lifestyle, there is only one way we can be cleanly, clean, healthy, and happy. And that is by not accumulating anything to begin with in the first place. Then, there is no conflict, no destruction, no pollution, no unhappiness and no irresponsibility.

All filth comes from imbalanced, one-sided accumulation. Nowhere else. If humans did not accumulate anything, then there would be no dirt. Most human diseases are caused by the accumulation of waste. Civilization creates filth. Civilization causes filth. Civilization is filthy.

Nature is clean. There is no filth found in Nature. How can anywhere you go in Nature where civilization has not yet reached; be so clean, fresh, and pure? How can it be like this for billions of years? Because there is no one-sided accumulation in Nature. Because in nature; its ecosystems, all its living organisms are continually evolving, regenerating and recycling. While civilization only accumulates dead things and tries to love these dead things and evolve them by killing living things and turning them into dead things. Civilization does not recycle dead trees back into living trees. It uses them once. And then throws them away.

Where did the first filth, the first poisonous waste come from? When did it first come into existence? With the first processed, corrupted food we ate. Not before that. Before that, our ancestors did not process their food at all. They ate what they could find. And their feces were just as clean and free from modern, chemical toxic filth; as all the other feces of all the other animals and organisms and organs and living cells on this planet.

How do you solve the problem of filth? Do not process anything. If you process nothing; then you have no filth problem, no waste problem, no pollution problem, no poison problem... and also... no civilization.

Oops. That's too hard. That's too extreme. That's too drastic. That's too simple. That's too inconvenient for me. Let's just separate paper from plastic in our garbage... it doesn't change anything, it's not too inconvenient... only a small minority does it... now THAT we can do. It is simply a matter of selective focus. You can see this selective focus happening every time you wash yourself. What are you doing when you wash yourself? What are you focusing-on? Yourself..... Not the water.

But if you focus your awareness onto the water... and not on yourself.... Ah. Then you will become aware of an amazing realization.

You are not cleaning yourself. You are just filthying the water.

What if you suddenly realize that water is more sacred, and more important to the Earth than you are? Can a one-year old baby live without its parents? No. Without its parents; it would die and starve. But before it ever starved to death it would die from lack of water. The parents can get along without the baby. Newly wed couples don't need that baby in order to survive. They can have another baby. That's life. The smaller needs the bigger to survive. The bigger does not need the smaller to survive. It is the other way around. The smaller need the bigger to survive. This truth is universal. There are no exceptions

1120

Can humans survive without water? No. Can water survive without humans? You bet your ass it can. Water does not need humans to survive. We need water to survive. Water is more important than the humans who drink it. The planet is more important than the species who live on it. All the living species on this Earth are more important than the human species. Civilized people carefully avoid this logic. Because it cannot be disproved. So it is simply never mentioned.

If you use any context that is larger than the skin around your body: you will not be able to disprove these facts. Yet we civilized humans look at this planet, at other animals, at all other living things, at water... as only as things to be used, and manipulated for our exclusive convenience, and then thrown away. The non-awareness of human normality is logic turned upside-down. It is logical insanity. That is one effect of civilization upon human awareness. All you have to do is change your focus. All you have to do is change how you use your awareness: and your whole reality will change. If you are in the shower...or taking a bath, or whenever you open up a faucet, or tap, to use that water...just ask yourself: 'What am I doing to this water. Where is it going. Where did it come from? Is it right that I am using this water at all for these purposes? When all the other living things on the earth also need this water... Is it right for me to waste it; for only my benefit, for only my advantage. Is it right for me to dump all of this filthy water down a drain, along with millions of other people and mix it up with clean water that has not been filthy yet?. Maybe this is not the right way to use water. Maybe I can use less of it. And waste less water, and throw away less water. Maybe I can save all the uncontaminated water from being poisoned. with this waste water by simply not adding it to clean water which is unpolluted. So other living things can live. So others can drink also. So fish can swim in unpolluted water and not die from my waste water'

Using water only once; and then throwing it away?

If you merely change the focus of your awareness from yourself to what you are using... and ask yourself if it is right to use it this way... your entire awareness will change. You will start feeling guilty when you open up that tap. You will try to use as little water as possible... you will start disliking the fact that you are using it so wastefully and unintelligently. Your entire attitude towards water will change. The way you look at the whole world will change. The way you look at yourself will change. But. If you believe that your culture... Your human progress... Your human civilization... Has more of a god given right to that water than any other living thing on this planet. And only needs to use that water once... before throwing it away as being polluted, poisoned, useless.

Ah.

Then God exists only for humans. Then God gives humans the God-given right to destroy and kill all other living things, and use all the water on Earth only once, and then poison it, and then throw it away... so this poisoned, thrown-away water can poison the rest of all the clean water on this Earth... so nobody else, so no other living thing can use ever it again. How wonderfully intelligent we are to invent modern plumbing... oops. But then, consumers are not intelligent. All they care about is their immediate self-gratification and convenience.

Then using water and wasting it and polluting it with every imaginable foul filth, is no problem. Hey. Millions of other people are doing it too. So, you can hide your own waste and filth... and mix it in anonymously with all the other consumers and polluters. This way, nobody can point the finger of blame at anyone else. Oh. You mean a consumer is by definition the worst polluter on the face of this earth? You mean no consumer has the right to point the finger at any other consumer being a worse polluter because all consumers are guilty of it? Oh. Well in that case, lets just have a silent agreement. Lets have a tacit, mutual, conspiracy of silence by one billion consumers carefully looking the other way as each one of them pollutes the Earth every week... by throwing out more than one ton of garbage per-person per-year.

Talk about a convenient way of deflecting and avoiding all responsibility. Talk about successfully corrupting children and people by forcing them to be born and live all their lives inside modern houses. Where they have no choice but to pour all their wasted water down a drain. So once they have lived like this all their lives? Expect them to have a religious change of heart? And suddenly change how they live by ripping out their convenient faucets and showers? The building inspectors would condemn the buildings as unlivable. Water conservationists that tried to practice what they preach would be thrown out on the streets.

But. If you simply change your focus. If you simply change your awareness... into a state of Pure Wonder... that is exactly what will happen. You will begin to become more aware of things that you never thought of or knew existed. And you will change how you live. And you will change how you use water. And how you feel about water.

Think about it... if you go camping in a pristine natural setting. If you go canoeing through lakes, and make a camp, and build a fire by the lake... When you have to go relieve yourself in the woods. Where do you shit? In the forest, or in the lake?

You are supposed to leave your feces for the rest of Nature: to use as a renewable energy-source. You are supposed to leave your remains for other living things to us and feed on. That is... provided your excrement is not poisoned by so many toxic chemicals and filth; that no living thing wants to process them except the lowest microbes. The solid wastes and urine of all animals were designed by Nature to be re-cycled and re-used... on the land they used... returning all the energy they did not need; back from where they took it. Acting responsibly... unselfishly, naturally... by not accumulating that energy. Instead we have become addicted to energy. And to food. And to eating. And we are fouling the cleanest remaining resources as fast as we can find them and despoil them.

Other animals do not seek out watering holes, or lakes, or rivers, or streams to shit-in... We do. Other animals keep their water clean: by not mixing it with waste products were never designed to be processed by water. This insane notion of getting rid of human waste... by mixing it with water. Was only created, when too many people accumulated into one area and stayed there. This obscene practice was created by cities. It was created by civilization. It was created by humans living in one place, and having to hire poor people carry away their own wastewater and feces. It was created by the shit wagons of cities. That came every day into the city and slopped their filth over the shallow sides of these shit wagons, befouling all those nearby... spraying them with their own shot, even as it was being taken away. That was how modern plumbing was invented. Trying to find an easier way to get rid of their own accumulating feces, than having somebody else carry it away for them on a shit wagon. They found that they did not have to hire other people to do this for them. They found that by dumping their offal into moving water... the water could carry their waste away without having to pay the water to do it every day. For thousands of years; Human cities have suffered plagues and epidemics and diseases before they found a way to conveniently get rid of their own waste products and dump it somewhere else. Somewhere where they were not living. Out of sight, out of mind.

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

If you go swimming in a pristine, clean lake: you will not only come out refreshed, invigorated, and cleansed by it: the tiny bit of dead skin, and hair and body oils, will be diluted to such a minimal level in that water: that you will not hurt the purity of that lake, or the cleanness of its water. Even if you fill that lake with thousands of people every day: you will still not be able to seriously pollute that water. Because if the lake is deep, and you only swim on the surface: then the slight bit of waste from your body will still be so minimal that most of the water will be untouched, and the rest will sink down and biodegrade into useful bacterial agents that feed on small organic things in the water. But if you shit into it, and let one thousand other people shit and piss into it while they are swimming in it... then your nice vacation pristine lake will have turds floating in the water and start stinking.

Even if you do not shit into that lake, even if you only use a little soap, or any artificial chemicals to clean yourself with: then you have a big problem. If one thousand vacationers wash themselves with soap in their Vacation Lake every day... you will end up polluting all of the water in it. Even if that soap is 100% naturals: made of potash, lye, and vegetable fat like oatmeal, or animal fat like lard: then the bacterial agents in that lake will only be able to deal with all of the soap and biodegrade it into useless energy... If these vacationers go away and do not come back for ten months. That will give your vacation lake a chance to clean itself of your filth. Once these thousand human swimmers and washers are gone. Their extra bacteria will die out and the lake will go back to its normal levels of bacteria. But if you dump any artificial chemical whatsoever that these lake bacteria either do not recognize, or were never designed to consume, or is actually poisonous to these bacteria and kill them. If you dump any oil or gas from an outboard engine's exhaust system, or any detergent that is not biodegradable, or any trash, or cans, or garbage that the lake bacteria cannot process... then you have seriously damaged the entire ecosystem of that lake.

The point is: that no lake. No body of water. No running river or stream; is designed to handle animal waste. No Natural ecosystem in the World can sustain any huge, one-sided accumulation of animals living in one small area without moving. No lake was ever designed to have thousands of humans swimming in them. Or snorkeling in them, or boating on them and depositing poisonous minerals, and subterranean oils so impregnated with heavy metals: that they kill all living things on contact. We were not designed to use water this way. Nor was the water designed to be used and polluted this way. The Earth is not designed to support six billion humans. It is not designed to support any kind of large animal who pollute in such massive numbers and on such a high level of chemical toxicity..

The entire principle of eco-system cleanliness is based upon bio-feedback systems. If you want to be immaculately clean: all you have to do is keep the eco-system you live in clean also. Not the artificial eco-system you live in. Not the eco-systems of civilization. But the eco-systems of Nature. Keep Nature immaculately clean, and it will keep you clean as well. Dirty her and she will dirty you as well.

Civilization has created a complete arrogant disregard for Nature. Living inside the artificial eco-system has kept us ecologically stupid and irresponsible. The whole idea of being clean; reduced down to a personal level of selfishness is in itself dirty. It is morally dirty, ethically dirty, spiritually dirty and ecologically dirty. True cleanliness begins with having clean intentions. If your intentions towards all living creatures is clean, and not dirtied by envy, or fear, or hate... if your intentions towards Nature are clean; and not dirtied by selfishness, arrogance, insensitivity, indifference, etc: the Nature and all living creatures will treat you as you treat them... This is why wild animals do not need to shampoo their hair, or wash themselves to clean themselves of parasites. Nature does it for them. If people lived cleanly in Nature, and not inside an artificial monstrosity which creates and manufactures toxic poisonous chemicals that kill all living things including us: then we would have no subconscious obsession to clean ourselves and the artificial caves we live in, because Nature would keep us as clean as we keep Nature. Until humans are educated to understand how all bio-feedback systems work, until we learn to expand our awareness beyond that of our personally owned possessions; mankind will continue to filthy the world it lives in, and will be rewarded with and punished by its total disregard for the Earth it depends on for Life by ever-increasing levels disease, weakness, sickness, and unclean living habits. Cleanliness is a universal issue. You cannot limit it. The idea of giving humans free reign to do as they please; the idea of personal liberty; the idea that you can take all the liberties you want with the Earth you depend on to live, and not expect a payback in kind: is the narrow, segmented-fragmented, irrational, insane attitude which civilization fosters. We have two choices: either clean up the shit our civilization has spewed upon the Earth: or be poisoned by our own waste. Until we face this as a species: all personal cleanliness will remain a form of filthy moral-ethical selfishness.

As the dominant predator animal on Earth: we are not giving other animals a good example to live by. Other animals live much more sanely, and more responsibly than we do. We are destroying their ecosystems, and forcing them to scavenge amongst the poison-filled waste-dumps and land-fills all over the Earth. So their bodies become filled with so much toxic chemicals that they develop cancers, and diseases they never had. Just as we are developing.

Why is toilet paper white? We whitewash our own uncleanliness everyday. We try to cover up and hide our own feces every day with white paper; and wash it away with water. We try to pretend that we are squeaky clean. We try to pretend that inside... we are not dirty.

Movies

The attractiveness of vicarious violence goes back much farther than the Roman Arenas hundreds of years ago. Identifying or connecting to anything that is full of hate-violence-anger-rage, the act of safely viewing this vicariously; is only a reflective projection of the inner self. There is no point in trying to address any social symptoms of this, be it violence on the news or in the movies, without addressing the state of each person's psyche and trying to find out just why each person happens to like watching such things. This of course entails the exploration of each person's subconscious... And that is what civilization will never do: focus upon the root problems of individual identity and motivation.

No sane person watching a car blow up on TV would blow up their own car. No sane person watching a house burn down on TV would burn down their own house. No sane person watching people get killed in movies would wish to travel to another country where people actually are killing each other and be forced to face the actuality and truth of such horrors. But as long as it is a safe, abstract reflection of actuality; then it is okay.

Why? Because that is how the human brain works. Your memories and your experiences are merely frozen abstract reflections: and if there is something in your subconscious that connects you to certain scenes, images, feelings... Then you will be attracted to them. As long as the vacuum of emptiness and boredom exists in people's lives and souls, the artificial replacement of ersatz excitement will continue to be sold and consumed. Why do people want to watch other people being killed? Yet because people do like to vicariously watch all kinds of violence, it is accepted as normal and pandered to. What would happen if there was no way for people to live vicariously? Then they would have no choice but to face the boredom of their own lives. Then they would actually have to entertain themselves. Then they would have to create their own fun, then they would have to develop their own creativity. Is that so horrible? But civilization does not allow this; it requires that people spend most of their time functioning like a tool, a machine: working at boring, non-creative jobs.

Movies are ever increasing purveyors of vicarious violence and destruction and meaninglessness. Why? Where do these images of insane ravaging monsters come from? Why are plots of hate, murder and death, not only acceptable but expected? In countless movies, the plot is the same: something is out to get you...Something is out to get the hero... something is out to get all humans.... Other people, enemies, villains, the universe, nature, is portrayed as being inimically hostile towards us. Why? Because civilization is becoming more and more destructive towards all people, towards all living things with each passing year. But it is doing so blindly, unconsciously... on a subconscious level.

So what happens? The subconscious of each person absorbs this actual truth and creatively reflects it outwards as a cultural norm... Acting out... As a projection of inner reality and outer normality. Rather than admitting the fundamental hostility of humans towards all living creatures: our movie culture turns this around to portray all living creatures as hostile towards humans in the form of monsters. It is a classic case of reverse cultural projection. Instead of honestly projecting out our distaste and disconnection from Nature, our fear of Nature and the Universe we live in: we perceive all of Nature and the all of the Universe as hating us... Which rationalizes our own fears and justifies us in hating the Universe we live-in.

As crazy as it sounds: that is how the imbalanced, distorted reflectiveness of human reality and normality works. The obsession with death, the fear of death is universal for all humans. It is no accident that most fictional plots contain murder and violence. The same dynamic can be seen in racism. The Nazis made the Jews the hated enemy; and tried to exterminate them... when in actuality, the Jews were the richest, most creative, most intelligent, most cultured and most productive ethnic group in their entire nation. People always hate what makes them feel guilty or ashamed, or feel less-than.

And why do such movies draw millions to see them? Fear. Excitement. Capitalizing on the subconscious need to vicariously and safely experience what we lack, or do not dare face. The fear of one's inner self, the subconscious, is universal for all humans. But humans are not trained to see themselves and their own cultural norm in perspective or in any wider context. We just worry that movies are becoming too violent for the younger generation to see because their children are not jaded, deadened and inured to it yet. While adults can apparently absorb these images safely because by then they are numb, and can easily disconnect themselves emotionally from what they are watching. Has anyone ever asked the question:

‘If it is not good for our children to watch... is it maybe not good for you to watch it either...?’

But who bothers to ask: ‘Why do humans like viewing violence in the first place?’ Nobody. Think about that. How a simple question like that is never asked. Why? Because humans do not want to find out their own inner truths; if they are in the slightest degree unpleasant. That is why all consumer culture, all bestsellers, all blockbusters are based upon the consumer ethic of cowardice, and not courage. They are all based upon what people want, not what they need. As a result you get a very simple market truth:

Nothing Unpleasantly True Sells.
Or...
Anything Unpleasant Must Be Avoided

This basic fact distorts everything. It distorts all of human awareness.

Modern History books are quickly being denuded of all unpleasant historical facts. All facts and truths about the past are quickly and completely obliterated. Ten years after the final fall of the communist regime in Russia: a teenage girl in Moscow comes home and ask her mother:

‘Mother...what’s a communist?’

The mother marveled at her daughter’s ignorance.

But did she hold herself accountable and responsible for teaching her daughter the horrors and evils of living under a Communist Totalitarian Regime? Did she bother to tell her own daughter what she lived through? Or tell her daughter about anything that happened in her past? No. She expected society to educate her daughter, She expected govt schools to educate her daughter.

What wonder is it that our children learn nothing except propaganda? What wonder is it that they have no true perspective, and no true understanding the past. Their own parents shut their mouths about their own past and observe the tradition of keeping a tacit, unspoken silence about their own past. Their children absorb this unspoken taboo from birth. They learn never to ask questions about the past. They learn never to mention the past. They learn one of the sickest traditions of upwardly mobile societies. They learn from this GUILTY silence and avoidance of the past by their elders... that the past is not important. They learn to put things behind them and never look at it. Any issue, any question, any trauma, any hurt, any mistake, anything that is unpleasant: is not faced. It is put behind them. What is important is what is in front of you, not what is behind you. What is important is getting ahead, not looking behind you. What is important is looking forward, not looking back. Never look back.

What is the unspoken religion of upward mobility? What do all upwardly mobile civilized humans do? Anything that is in front of them: they put it behind them; and pretend that it does not exist. As far as civilized humans are concerned: the past does not exist. Truth does not exist. Facts do not exist. The entire global media is terrified of upsetting or insulting any person of any background by giving them any unpleasant facts or truths. The slang word for this new kind of censorship is called: ‘political correctness’. Anything that is unpleasantly true, civilized people rebel against, avoid, get angry about, become insulted, outraged, incensed about. Because anything that is unpleasantly true brings up too much pain, too much shame, too much anger, too much hate, too many things they do not want to face or deal with.

All civilized governments, all purveyors of restricted or privileged, or classified information, all the media: all newspapers, radio stations, TV stations, journalists, all publishing houses, all editors, all authors, all schools, colleges, universities around the world are carefully editing out unpleasant facts and truths: and trying to report things as blandly, blamelessly, and as meaninglessly as possible. So nobody will ever find out what actually happened, who was actually responsible, why it happened or how it actually happened.

The bottom line is that civilized people want to be left in the dark. They don’t want to know or understand anything which may cause them any unpleasantness whatsoever. The entire point to leading a civilized existence instead of an uncivilized one is to lead as blinkered a life as possible. To live as safely and as cowardly and dishonestly as possible. By erecting as many separations and walls, barriers, insulations as you can between you, and everything you find to be unpleasantly true.

By erecting as many artificial separations, walls, barriers, and insulations as you can between you and Nature, you and the world, you and the Earth, you and the Universe, you and other living things, you and the weather, you and the sun, you and the trees, you and the birds, you and the animals, you and the insects, you and the valleys, you and the mountains, you and the sea, you and the rivers, you and the forests, you and the grass, you and the earth, you and the soil, you and the air, you and the rain, you and the sunlight, you and the snow, you and the clouds, you and other humans, you and the truth, you and actuality,, you and wonder, you and questions, you and uncertainty, you and risks, you and danger, you and excitement, you and living, you and life, you and death, you and fear, you and love, you and pain, you and pleasure, you and joy, you and curiosity, you and feelings, you and thoughts, you and yourself, you and your subconscious, you and your instincts, you and your consciousness, you and your awareness, you and your sensitivity, you and challenges, you and anything new, or strange, or different.

Anything... anything that brings up pain; is avoided.

If it is success that brings up too much pain, then they will avoid success. If it is failure that brings up pain, then they will avoid failure. If it is love that brings up pain, then they will avoid love. If it is rejection that brings up pain, then they will avoid rejection by not even daring to risk even the possibility of acceptance. If it is acceptance that brings up pain... then they will do something to make sure they are rejected. If it is being alone that brings up pain, then they will never let themselves be alone. If it is any kind of hardship that brings up pain, then that hardship will be avoided.

Consumerism has developed this imbalance to an incredibly insane degree of pure cowardice, so nothing the slightest bit unpleasant is allowed to mar the ease of their affluence. If a piece of cheese is not exactly the right kind, it is sneered at or treated with revulsion because the taste is not pleasant enough to eat. If any apparel is the wrong style or color, it is thrown out. If the consumer finds anything that makes it easier, more convenient, they switch instantly to throw away the other product and only use the easiest. If they have the slightest unpleasant thought, they throw it away as unacceptable... never to be thought-of, or mentioned, or spoken-of. If there is any topic or issue that ends up in any unpleasantness of disagreement, that issue is never brought up again in public.

Consumers develop tons of secret ideas, secret prejudices, secret hypocrisies, secret opinions, secret convictions, secret vanities, secret self-delusions, secret rationalizations that they keep totally secret. They walk around as if they are the most intelligent human on Earth and all other people are stupid, misguided and ignorant. They walk around continually unhappy, continually angry, insulted... continually thinking that they are fine. Happy. Smart. Educated. While being reduced to not being allowed to speak about anything that really matters. So most of the conversations consumers have becomes an exercise in exclusion and snobbery. Simply because there is nothing else left for them to practice their minds on, or their social skills on except selective brand elitism, or human elitism. The ordinary happy, smiling consumer; if faced with any honesty: will flee in fear and anger and outrage at how uncouth the other person was. And make their secret value judgments of the other person... and never tell them of it... and hold all that animosity inside themselves. Just for the pleasure of telling some other friend about: What he said... And: 'How dare he say that.'. Just so they can show how they are right and the other person is wrong. Most consumer society conversations are about insulted egos talking about how insulted they were. Or alcoholic cultures talking about how drunk they were. Or sport cultures talking about who won and who lost. All this meaningless jabber, this trivia, this fake politeness, this fear, this dishonesty and this cowardice: is merely a way of venting secret anger and hate and distastes, and judgments of others. After having secretly piled up all of this secret stuff... which they never tell the persons involved about ever... only other sympathetic people who automatically agree with them, and schmooze-massage their ego-energy, telling them mostly in effect:...

“Yes... You are right and the other person is wrong.”

It is so easy to insult a consumer. They are the easiest people to insult, and the biggest cowards about it. You can say anything to them and they will automatically lie to you. If you ask them to be honest about anything at all and they voice any opinion that you disagree with, they will stop the conversation and change the topic. Simply because it is too unpleasant to honestly disagree about anything. Ultimately... all honesty becomes too unpleasant to practice. As a result, the only kind of conversation allowed is meaningless trivia that cannot possibly insult anyone since it is meaningless. That is how fear and cowardice limits the awareness and thinking processes of the average consumer.

Trivia, and meaninglessness, are the only allowable topics for affluent consumers. Nothing else. They are the only acceptable content for conversation. Anyone wanting any intelligence in the conversation will find no place for it in consumer society. Simply because all intelligence has already been leached out of every topic or issue as too unpleasant to speak of. Everyone becomes so boring to each other, they develop such an aversion to each other, they develop an aversion to all humans... that they end up having no love in their hearts for others at all, and no love in their hearts for themselves. Consumer societies are loveless, stark, empty, societies where people constantly try to appease each other, please each other, please themselves and become as lazy, arrogant, smug and selfish as possible. The second any person who does not care about this idiotic secret, rigmarole appears: they flee, hide, lie and develop every possible negative assumption, rationalization, defense, idea about that person in private.

Tools supposedly, were originally used by our ancestors in order to insure their survival. Instead, they evolved to protect us from all kinds of hardship regardless whether we needed it or not. We have become so successful at surviving, that now the purpose of using tools has changed. Now, the main reason for using tools is to make human existence safer and easier. They train people to develop value systems based only upon expediency, convenience and ease. But this kind of training develops cowardice: not courage. It develops dishonesty: not honesty. The result is; a global civilization of civilized emotional cowards, who are not willing to face their own pain.

The further development of tools in human society only makes any human development more, and more unnecessary. The more people depend on their tool-skills: the less dependant they are on developing human skills. Until you have people spending most of their life glued to TV's, computers, movies, videos; until you have a culture and technology that worships ease and instant self-gratification. All advantages... all wealth-power-status-knowledge, is merely a way for people to protect themselves from any unpleasantness. They are merely insulations to protect people from unpleasant hardships, unpleasant truths, unpleasant conditions, unpleasant feelings, unpleasant thoughts and unpleasant pain.

Civilization has had one universal effect upon us humans. It has turned us into a species of emotional cowards, mental cowards, physical cowards and spiritual cowards. It has turned us into a species of emotional liars, mental liars, physical liars and spiritual liars. It has turned us into an unloving species. This basic imbalance has been progressing and worsening ever since humans developed a settled existence. However, if what is most convenient is also less healthy and less good for us, and the Earth we live on; then the entire reason for using tools, the entire principle and idea of progress and technology is put into question. Then the logical conclusion is, that we need to discover and create an entirely different way of living.

What has Consumerism created? Look at America. It has created the most unsocial society in human history. Where people do not answer a knock on a door, where they put on sunglasses to avoid other people seeing their eyes, where they go out in the open only to ignore everything around them. Where they wall themselves off from each other:... using walls, rooms, cars, cell-phones, TV, Movies, shops, music, Media, sunglasses, cell-phones, indifference, egoism, smugness, affluence, ease, self-gratification, food, drugs, ease, arrogance, narcissism, hate, scorn, revulsion, class distinctions, money, secrecy, privacy, distractions, etc... to avoid each other as much as possible.

In consumer societies: people only come together to enjoy themselves... they only come together in rituals of purely selfish self-gratification: and only in anonymous crowds...where they do not socialize at all... but only focus upon what is gratifying them at the moment. Whether it is eating ice cream, watching a movie, or going to see entertainers in a live performance. Wherever consumers go, wherever they socialize... they carefully avoid looking at each other or talking with each other. They only sit down at a restaurant to focus on the food, or ice cream they are gratifying themselves-with. They only sit together in darkened rooms to stare at a screen to be distracted by it so they will forget that there are thousands, millions of consumers just like them, doing the same thing as they are.

That is one pathetic joke of consumer egoism. Each consumer wants to consider themselves as being unique. So they snob other consumers. Yet they buy mass-produced shit, and eat mass-produced food. And wear mass-produced clothes, drive mass-produced cars, watch mass-produced entertainment, work at mass-produced meaningless jobs. How stupid is that. Are you trying to say that the consumer who buys an expensive car does not know there are thousands of cars just like his on the road?

But the higher you can reach up the pyramidal pile of exclusiveness and upward mobility: the more special you feel. Until you can buy an antique Duesenberg worth millions of dollars that is only one-of-a-kind. So the entire point to upward mobility is becoming so rich; you can afford to buy what nobody else can buy. The definition of machine uniqueness is linear. There can only be one unique car. One unique human. One unique diamond. All the others are worthless duplicated crap. Huh?

But 99% of us humans work at identical jobs. And the more identical our jobs become: the more identical we become to each other. The more desperately we try to convince ourselves how different we are from each other. The more boring our jobs become: the more boring we become. The more empty we become on the inside, the more we have to fill that inner emptiness with consumer goods. The more mediocre we become: the more we are convinced and brainwashed into believing that we are more special, more exclusive, and better than anybody else.

Consumers never question their own lifestyle. Why would the most privileged, most affluent, richest class of humans ever born; question their own affluence and advantages? The very knowledge that they are so pampered and spoiled, makes them too smug and arrogant to ever question themselves. Why should you question the easiest lifestyle ever invented? Why question ease? Everything easier is better. The easier it is; the better it is. mass

The only way to find out what humans actually need; is by finding out how we were designed to live. In what context should human existence be placed? In what environment? Unless different forms of human existence are compared, unless different ways of living are looked at: we will never find out what we are missing or what we are doing wrongly. How do humans need to live? What kind of surroundings do we need to be in? What kind of social structure do we need in order to find happiness and peace? No consumer culture will ever ask such questions.

Farming

To take the miracle life, the miracle of growth, its natural abundance, the effortless with which all living things grow, and turn it into a form of mechanical slavery of mass slaughtering. To value living things only in terms of abstraction-money. To turn living things into money? And then worship and sanctify this kind of existence? To worship this form of machine-tool misery of endless work called farming? Simply because in the process, people happen to be slightly exposed to Nature? Albeit a controlled, manipulated, domesticated, travesty of Nature? Why? Because farmers pity people living in the city since they have no direct contact with plants? Huh?

The obvious mechanization and dehumanization of farming: as it began from the first plow creating the first linear furrow: to the present-day merging of corporate farms into vast, dehumanized, mechanized wastelands cannot be ignored.

If you look at the miracles of modern civilization, whether it is the damming of rivers or the mechanization of farming techniques: every new advancement is always justified by The Greater Good of human society. Meaning that it is only good for the greatest number of people. Not for any other living things: period. Yet, this has always proven to be a fallacy. The only greater good has been for a select few elite, rich, powerful humans; never everybody. But this catch-phrase has been spouted so often that nobody even bothers to check the actual facts and the details of each espoused advantage of technology and tool-use. There has never been a critical analysis of a comparative study done on any tool-use, comparing the facts both before-and-after. Including all the aspects and effects and consequences and comparisons and perspectives and pros and cons of the matter.

Technology has only proven to be beneficial for different kinds of accumulation. If you boil this down to its actual meaning, the basic logic of this kind of ethic is: accumulation is good. More is better. More people, more cities, more factories, more chemicals, more tools, more machines, more chemical fertilizers.

But this narrow human based value system excludes the rest of the Earth and all of its other inhabitants as if they do not even exist. It excludes the very ecosystems that we are dependent upon. Which humans are in the process of destroying. Due to the civilized value-system that holds humans to be sacred above all other things. To farm more acres of land just so you can feed more people what for?! One-sided accumulation? Overpopulation? A chance to overpopulate the earth with more billions of people? This; is exactly the kind of narrow, single-species usefulness that is destroying this living planet. And in order to do that, farmers are becoming more and more addicted to machines, more, and more tool-enslaved. Farming is harming. Farming is harming the earth. Farming creates death and deserts. Tilling the soil is a systematic, mechanized, chemical killing of the soil that is a mass horror of total destruction. Words cannot describe the evil of hatred against all living Nature. Tilling is killing.

Education

There is a big difference between learning how to use your brain linearly: as a knife. Creating separations where none existed before: and as a connecting tool: putting things together, putting things into perspective; in the right context. Learning how to use your tool-brain in a balanced-integrated-contextual fashion.

How much time and energy do people spend trying do make sense of themselves and the world around them? How many years of a person's life is spent trying to understand the "why?" of things? How many people even bother to sort out any values they happen to have?... To connect them?... Figure out where they came from?... And organize it all into an understandable, non-conflicting, integrated whole? Thinking, like living, is an art. If you have not organized your own self-understanding of yourself into a usable tool, how can you understand the world around you? And vice versa?

All civilized forms of education are regimented forms of training designed to teach how to use our tool-brains and tools. All systems of regimentation destroy individual creativity and creative thinking. Regimentation is not education: it is brain-deadening, soul-deadening duplication which leaves all true integrated human growth-potential and creativity undeveloped. What is stuffing young children into a small classroom, forbidding them to speak or even look at each other, forbidding them to have any social inter-action whatsoever and punishing them severely if they do? It is merely training them to become antisocial. What is forcing them they only pay attention to an authority figure for hours, days, years on end? It is merely brainwashing them into the habit of pyramidally focusing upon only one thing until that is the only way they think or feel.

Human children were never designed to sit throughout their formative years, inactive without moving. Forced inactivity produces boredom not just children, it creates boredom in all humans:. If you want to actually educate someone, there is only one requirement needed: don't bore them to death. All boredom creates a craving for meaningless distraction simply because there is nothing else to do. We have not learned how to use our intelligence and creativity intelligently. We do not let children do what they want. We give them nothing to do. Humans neglect children and give them bad examples to live by.

Children learn naturally, by using their genetic Sense of Pure Wonder and curiosity. In order to truly educate people; you must nurture and allow them to develop their own sense of Pure Wonder. This means you must allow them to develop all of their own instinctive abilities, all of their subconscious potential, not just their abstractive tool-brains. No civilized training system does this. To develop only one aptitude, one ability, one talent, is insane. Yet because humans are slaves to their own tool-brains, their own abstractions, their own tools: that is exactly what they do. Moreover, they think that just because they never experience anything else, that this is perfectly fine. It is not. For any human to specialize in anything is to automatically lose the huge undeveloped potential of their own intrinsic abilities and creativity. As one person put it: "Specialization is for ants."

The idea of everybody learning exactly the same things, in the same order, at the same speed, at the same time, is a ludicrous, idiotic, mismanagement of human uniqueness, diversity, potential, and creativity. But the process of mass tool-use, mass production, mass duplication, has evolved us into mass education. Mass education is simply one aspect-example of the tool-dynamic of civilization: trying to make people as identical to each other, and as mechanically non-creatively as possible.

For people to become educated about anything: there is no substitute for comparison. If you want to be educated financially, nutritionally, medically, emotionally, historically, culturally, scientifically, politically, socially: you must do the groundwork of comparison in all these facets of your life and more... Only by comparing things to each other in a proper relevant context, can you find out what works best. Only by experimenting and trying different ways can your comparisons become practical. But this presupposes people possess a level of creative evolving-changing adaptability-fluidity-dynamism heretofore unheard of... Unimagined. It presupposes that all humans exist in a continual state of Pure Wonder.

To truly educate yourself, you must learn how to make your brain function properly. In order to do so, you must apply one of Mark Twain's grammatical rules: 'Eschew Surplusage'. The mere accumulation of knowledge is meaningless in itself: unless you can fit all of the segments together, so they actually work. It is not enough to read a book... you also have to understand what is written in the relevant historical, personal, social, emotional and mental context of whoever wrote it: when, and why, and where it was written and what it means. You have to understand the culture of the person who wrote it. You must read more than one book about one thing. And compare what you know by your own personal experience: to what each book says. Each person has the task of fitting together and connecting every experience they ever had, into an integrated, contextual whole. And the only way you can do this, is through your own sense of e Sense of Pure Wonder. Your sense of Pure Wonder is merely an endless search for connections, an endless balanced exploration of your Inner Reflective Universe and your Outer Actual Universe. Without comparing these two Universes: you cannot educate yourself.

The implications of this book go much farther than how, and what people should learn. The entire body of accumulated knowledge that has been amassed over the last 10,000 years is hereby put into question.

If you have a pile of facts that can never be properly connected: what use are they? Except to make, and use more tools? For human knowledge to ever be integrated into an understandable body of work, it must be translated into its universal components of Totality, DUALITY and Triality. Not only will humans have to look at the Universe completely differently; but also they will have to use different terms to do so. They will have to think differently, feel differently, act differently, be aware differently, live differently.

What is civilized education anyways? Except: selective specialized, linear functions we train ourselves to master. What is the point of learning how to be a carpenter, or a dentist? And then functioning in that narrow, specialized role for the rest of your life as your only way of living? Why not make education universal. So all people who want become educated have the same goal.

What is the universal goal of education? What is it that you want to learn better.

To become a better plumber.

A better doctor.

A better carpenter.

Or... to become a better person. A better human?

If the goal of education is universalized... into becoming a better human... Then how you learn to become better at anything, where, when, with what, etc... all specialization becomes irrelevant.

There is only one requirement for human education: a Sense of Pure Wonder.

If you have that, then you will automatically try to become a better person. And how you do it becomes a matter for your own judgment. So your own education is achieved doing only what you want to do, when you want to do it, with who you want to do it with. Then you will study and explore only what you are interested in at the moment. Then you will explore sports, or Nature, or books, or hobbies, or work, or socializing, or solitude... or whatever... only as an education to make you a better person.. Then all life becomes an education. All living becomes an education. Then there are no teacher or students. Just people trying to live, and learn how to become better people.

This way: all humans can cooperate with each other... and help to educate each other. So all humans can help educate all other humans. So all teachers are students, and all students are teachers. So all people share all of their wisdom and expertise to anyone who wants it. Instead of making knowledge exclusive. Instead of teaching in small exclusive rooms, in exclusive universities, only to a few exclusive rich people... So as many people who want to enroll in the class of any teacher; free of charge; can. So all lousy teachers will have no students; and the best teachers will have classes in stadiums with 75,000 students per-class. Sound impossible? Has anyone ever tried it?

What should schools be used for? There is a use for Schools. Children should be brought together and be taught. They should be taught general Universal principles... Not details.

Why do you think the head of a school is called a principal? Because that is what he or she should teach. Morons. School should be Easy: Simple: Fast. It does not take long to teach general principles; you morons. General principles are not hard to teach; you imbeciles. They are not hard to understand. Once general principles are taught. Then let the children apply these general Principles and use them. If you let them explore and learn on their own: the details will be different for each person. All children should be educated universally by being taught universal general Principles. . Then every child's education will be the same as every other child's. Then every human will be educated equally. Then there will be no hierarchy of education..

But no. We can't have that: can we? We can't make school easy and fun. We have to make school as boring and as stupid as possible. So all children are brainwashed to equate learning with boredom and stupidity. We have to waste as much time as possible of their young lives, teaching as little as possible, as badly as possible; teaching them the worst possible lies and bullshit possible. We have to make learning as boring as possible. Just to make damn sure no child ever develops the unlimited potential of their intelligence. Just to make damn sure by the time they get out of school: every child on Earth has their Sense of Pure Wonder completely fucking destroyed.

The Pyramidal structure of civilization prevents humans from any true teaching or any true learning. The people at the top of the pyramid are interested in, is keeping their privileged positions and keeping the rest of humanity DOWN beneath them. The lower classes are interested in climbing UP the socio-economic ladder. That is not learning: that is competition and conflict. Competition and conflict does not create learning. You do not learn from conflict. The only thing you can learn from competition is that it is stupid.

Competition prevents people from learning from each other. When what is learned is hoarded, and kept secret: when what people learn in their lives go into the grave with them: unshared... because they were trying to get an advantage out of their learning: Then the crucial lessons of life are not passed on to the next generation. Then each generation repeats the same stupid mistakes over and over again, and mankind is frozen into a set of repeated vicious cycles that are becoming evermore insane and destructive. Schools destroy learning. Schools destroy creativity. All humans are equally naturally creative. Schools teach only one thing: how to copy others. Copying is not learning. Copying is not creative. Copying destroys creativity.

The Historical Jesus

Jesus taught a very simple truth that was successfully practiced for a short period of time in a small area of Galilee... It was practiced by the poorest and most powerless, loving people in his small area. That truth was, and still is: 'Love others more than you love yourself.' 'Help others more than you help yourself.' 'Give to others more than you give to yourself.'

At that time in Galilee: due to a brutal, massive taxation by their Roman masters: the physical standard of their lives sank to such an abysmal, horrendous level of poverty, misery and inequity, that the entire population of Galilee experienced a huge change in their living standards, their culture and their lifestyles. It happened so fast... that they actually had a chance to compare two completely different ways of living in one lifetime: first as an affluent, propertied, cultured, educated ethnic community, and then; as a money-less, homeless, starving, educated, cultured ethnic community. And most of them found to their amazement and surprise... that they were happier, healthier and better off, when they were all poor together, and helping each other... than when they had been rich, isolated from each other... and selfish, and oozing with wealth. It was out of this massive change from wealth to poverty of an entire region that in one lifetime that Christianity was born.

However....

The only reason this happened, was before they lost their wealth: they had already possessed a strong, close ethnic community. They had already lived the same way. They had the same religion, the same morals, the same education, the same customs, the same beliefs, spoke the same language, were brought up the same way, lived in the same place, knew the same people and had the same lifestyle. They were already culturally equal to each other in many ways, and on many levels. The increased taxation made them even more equal. Christianity was born out of equality. Nothing else.

What happened was that a very rare, communal level of equality in an egalitarian society... became even more equal by the leveling power of common poverty.

They had built-up a long experience of cultural comparisons when the Romans were too busy with their own civil wars to tax them and burn their villages, and enslave them. Ones without Roman taxation and oppression, and the others with Roman Rule and taxation. Each time they were left alone: their communities flourished and became affluent. Each time the Romans came back: they were impoverished. Each time the Romans left: they started fighting amongst themselves. Each time the Romans returned: they stopped fighting amongst themselves and fought the Romans. This cycle strengthened the inner bonds of their small communities. It forced these communities to cooperate and share with each other many things on many levels on an equal basis. The general social levels of equality in the Jewish communities in Galilee had to be raised so the Galileans treated each other more equally than any other civilized people had ever done before in civilized history: before they could begin to accept and understand the teachings of Jesus. Even then, it still took the equalizer of poverty and the hatred of an outside oppressor and outside enemy: the Roman Empire, before the communities of Galilee were forced into a level of equality high enough to be receptive to the teachings of Jesus.

The Jewish people at that time had a common hated enemy. Their enemy was the Roman Empire that had colonized them, and oppressed them, and taxed them for hundreds of years. They could channel and focus all of their hate upon this outer enemy. Yet even this common incentive was not strong enough to forge them into a single united Ethnic Nation.

Why?

They hated each other too much.

The reason the Romans could rule them, was because the Jewish cliques and sects were still too busy fighting each other to bother fighting the Romans. The Romans were smart enough to leave them to their constant bickering about exactly how their sacred religious texts should be interpreted.

It took a catastrophic level of poverty in one small segment of the Jewish Nation to force them start cooperating with each other and develop a more humane way of living. And even then; it took a smarter, more learned leader; preaching to them for years, before a tiny number of them finally began to try to live as he preached. One reason this kind of community did not last; was because Jesus himself did not practice what he preached. He was given many things, and many advantages which he used and took. He was fed by many people, and traveled from one place to the next without staying faithful to any single congregation. The historical result of this was the first traveling Christian preachers who exhorted people to: "Do as I say, not as I do"... This hypocrisy has never left Christianity. It is still alive today.

The teachings of Jesus were created from larger social forces around him. His preaching were only listened-to when some people finally stopped fighting and hating each other in this one small area. But only inside the tiny poverty-stricken area of Galilee. Nowhere else. Outside that tiny exclusive area: all the other wealthier Jews of Judea kept on as usual. And began hating the Galilean Jews even more for not conforming to conventional Judaism. Their own people, the rich Jews of Jerusalem marked these poor Jews for extermination; because they were not conforming to the conventional Judaism of that Era. Suddenly the followers of Jesus had the entire human World to fear and hate. Not just Rome and Romans. But their own countrymen, their own race, their own cultural and ethnic, and religious, and racial peers and relatives and comrades became their enemies as well. This pulled them together even more as a tight-knit group of poor equals; beset by huge threatening outer forces. That forced them to stop fighting amongst each other even more. But did they ever stop fighting amongst each other? Read the New Testament. The entire dreary story is nothing but Jesus trying to calm and quell all of his bickering disciples; as they hated and envied each other, and refused to listen to him.

They did not even understand what he was saying to them: even after he had spelled it out in the most obvious parables possible. Look at what his disciples did during their last supper with him. They were so blinded by their own hates and prejudices, that it was only after Jesus died and was sanctified into holiness by death: that they grudgingly admitted that what he had been trying to show them, and tell them was actually right and true. Their collective guilt was so bad after his death; that they barely had the nerve to even look at each other or to speak to each other. The entire spreading of his words... while not actually practice practicing it, came from their guilt of not listening to him all of their lives while he was still alive They tried to placate their own consciences. They swore all kinds of promises and oaths which they all, reneged-on later. They all swore to carry on his word. But they never swore to practice what the words invoked. They never swore to live as Jesus did. They never even dreamed of learning from his example, and changing how they lived. They gave up. Except for a few. Who swore only to spread his words to the four corners of the Earth. Only two of them actually tried to do this. The rest stayed in Judea and became mediocre nothings.

They became so ashamed of the sins they had committed when Jesus was still alive: that they refused to even mention what they had done and how they had acted. Only a few surviving written biographies of a few disciples survived. All of them gave their slanted prejudiced versions when they were much older. But one thing they did try to do: They tried to tell other people about their own mistakes... so other people would not repeat them. But only as lip service.

Do you know how rare even that is in any written language? Plutarch attempted to do this in his Lives of the Romans: where he details the lives of famous Roman Citizens; whom he considered to be the most noteworthy. Then after detailing their lives... he summarizes each notable: by listing their virtues, and their vices... And then conveniently: comes up with the most convenient logical conclusion, that the greatest Roman ever born; was the present Emperor whom he lived under... Believe it or not: Modern Historians still agree with him! This is how prejudiced and slanted and dishonest historians are, and how slanted history is in favor of the winners.

The Disciples of Jesus were even more selective in their historical telling. They tried to make Jesus into a perfect, loving, wise-gentle-forgiving-kind piece of mush. Until they had successfully leached all his true humanity out of him, and then they deified him. That is no different from any other form of ancestor worship in any other culture. Plutarch was more circumspect. His Perfect Roman was not dead yet: so he only hinted at the Emperor Augustus becoming a God. Besides: Augustus publicly frowned upon that sort of thing in public, but smiled benignly in private at the flattery of it. Once Jesus was dead: his disciples had full license to tell the most extravagant lies about him. They attacked each other continuously about who Jesus had loved the most. The entire first congregations became a battlegrounds of destructive power groups and power politics. The entire history of the New Testament is filled with the same old idiocies, and stupidities, and sins, and vices, and crimes... committed by the same sanctified disciples who were screaming at people to love each other, while at the same time they hated each other. Only later followers managed to see the perspective of the entire history, and how blind the first disciples had been.

Another historical blindness Jesus, and all later Christians ignored and continue to ignore; is that Christianity only existed in a small exclusive area. A tiny area that had a whole host of rare, exclusive factors, and exclusive conditions; that needed to exist before his teachings could be practiced at all. Trying to spread the words of Jesus without first creating these exclusive necessary conditions: was guaranteeing that each experiment in Christianity would fail miserably.

The historical fact is; that Christianity is spread by preachers and evangelists who prey upon the most ignorant, the poorest, the most downtrodden, the most oppressed, the sickest, most diseased people they can find.

By using the fakery of prayer. By being fake prayers. By being paid to pray. By turning the human prayer into a financial payer. By praying for money. By asking for money. By asking to be paid to prey, er, pray upon, er, for the paying- er praying masses. Praying the a hypocrisy of a predator: a praying mantis prays all the time... for prey... to come closer to its preying claws.

Why do these masses succumb to this? Because they are the most desperate; the most non-critical. Because they agree with the preacher's dogma. In their perversion of Jesus' words and Spirit: they prey upon the most gullible, and the most innocent, and most stupid. They prey upon people who have enough honesty to admit that they need help and guidance... who admit that they are sick and in pain and need help. Who admit they are uncertain, who are seeking answers, who do not like what they find around them.

Because they know that only these people will ever have a desire to heal themselves. They promised them all kinds of Divine, Magical, Instant, Invisible Spiritual Healing. This pattern has not changed for 2,000 years. The earliest proselytizing preachers with social status; found that they could influence rich Romans; who admitted only to having a slight spiritual' malaise. These Romans were far too rich to ever consider giving up all of their riches, and power, and privileged positions in Roman Society for true spiritual happiness. So these preachers compromised themselves and their own faith.

Later followers and preachers followed the same energy-pattern as the first converters of rich Romans did. They became practicing hypocrites. Preaching a gospel... which they themselves never practiced. And as a result these hypocrites called preachers did not expect their congregations to practice it either. Forgiving them easily for anything they did. Dropping down the bar of acceptability to fit whatever group or congregation they were in. Slowly becoming more Romanized themselves. Until you could not tell a Roman from a Christian.

Until after the Roman Empire faded away: they took over the living center of the Rome what was little more than a deserted ghost-town for hundreds of years. Filled with wandering idiots, all calling themselves: 'Peter' each claiming to be the one true ruler of the defunct Christian Church of Rome. In those times no sane person wanted to live in that most hated and raped, and conquered of all cities. But that was after the downfall of Rome happened. When you could be killed outright on the spot if you even admitted to being a Roman Citizen... or worse yet: tried to be proud of that fact.

As a result The entire ritual of a Christian preaching has been, and still is: a hypocritical, fake, history lesson. Does this by any chance ring a bell today? Does any Christian today actually follow these 2,000 year-old teachings and lessons of Jesus? Or are these parables spouted millions of times with no effect? Are these teachings listened to with empty minds, empty heads, empty souls, and then ignored and laughed at? There are historical reasons why Christianity is what it is today.

Jesus did not create Christianity. He was merely lucky enough to live in that time, in those circumstances. He was lucky to be living in a small area where community life was very egalitarian. Where the ethnic bonds of all the people having the same religion-language-beliefs-values-culture-outlook-opinions; had already drawn them together in reaction to the Roman oppression and rule they lived-under and suffered from. He was lucky to be educated, to be literate, to become a favored student of the priests, to gain status and authority enough in his small area: so the illiterate poor would actually respect his hierarchical superiority enough to listen to him. And in the course of all these larger social forces going on: he was lucky enough to discover that a life of hardship was better, than a life of ease.

In order for anyone to follow his teachings: Jesus had one initial requirement before they could even begin to practice this simple truth. They had to give up literally all of their acquired worldly possessions. They had to give up all of their accumulated wealth, all of their accumulated money, holdings, and property... everything.

And it worked... But this was only because there were so many other destitute, poor, hungry, starving people who had been previously affluent inside that area, that they were already creating self-help groups out of necessity. It only worked because nearly everybody was as poor as everybody else. It worked only for a short time: and only in that one, small area. Once their taxes were reduced: the Christian practice of voluntary poverty shrank proportionally along with the returning wealth.

The Bible is full of stories of these backsliders who were banished by their Christian brethren and came begging back... only to be banished again because they could not resist the temptations of normal civilized life as they found ways to improve their physical well being. But they only increased their physical ease, not their health, or well-being. They were easily noticed by the others simply because they had lost their willingness to help others, they had become sedentary, lazy... weaker, in all kinds of ways.

Though Galilee lost its fish communities to the returning affluence; the practice of voluntary poverty was exported to the only places it could be applied practically: in the poorest slums and neighborhoods of the Roman Empire... mostly in other poor, fishing communities. Because fishing was one of the few ways people could get food without paying for it with money. The earliest symbol of these communities was not the cross, but the universal sign of the fish:

This had nothing to do with Jesus. It was a grass-roots movement that grew of its own accord. Only, these grass-root communities were later infiltrated by Christian preachers who started telling them that they were doing it all wrong, and that they should recant their original vows of complete poverty; and exclusively worship the dead martyr of their movement and follow his corrupted sayings as interpreted by the corrupted Christian missionaries. The early Christian zealots, who overrode that grassroots movement of independent fish communities, corrupted it, took it over and made it their own. In effect, they succeeded in standardizing them... destroying each unique way of community-life and culture. These were the traveling Christian ministers who claimed to have magical powers given to them by the original head of the Galilee poverty group who had been crucified, martyred and turned into a worshipped, revered, sanctified figurehead.

Alive: Jesus never allowed people to bow down to him or kneel to him. But the ingrained habit of worshipping something, anything, is so deep in most people, that even though he forbade them to do so, they kept on doing it. Until he simply got tired of pushing them away and ignored them. This only made them worship him more for his majestic indifference to their awe of him. So when he helped them; they immediately attributed all kinds of magical powers he was supposed to have. Until the accounts of his life are so jumbled up into a superstitious mess that no scholar could ever unravel what actually happened from what was claimed to have happened. The further this movement spread, the more it was watered down and corrupted. However: even corrupted, it remained an ethic of enlightened poverty for almost two thousand years. Until industrialization wiped out the lifestyle of close-knit communities so effectively, that today: poor and starving people no longer know how to help each other, or even want to.

The history of Christianity's slow diffusion amongst the poorest of the poor, how it lost its moral power, its slow corruption... as its tenets were watered down to accommodate people who were too affluent and not willing to give up everything; is all clearly told in the many accounts of it's earliest congregations. The spread of Christianity became bastardized from a self-help dynamic; into a venal, preying upon gullible, rich converts. Until the only way Christian congregations could survive; was by a continual influx of rich new converts who gave all their ill-gotten wealth to the church elders; so they could once again have a clean conscience, and be free of other people's envy and hatred towards them... and be free to fall in love again honestly. The attraction of these early, corrupt religion was the temptation of love. Christians told the rich that they were not capable of experiencing true love, true bliss, true happiness. They laughed at what the rich people called love. They sneered at what rich people thought was passion. They challenged rich people to throw away their money and find true bliss.

This is no different from the Hari Krishna movement today, who demand each new convert give up all of their wealth to the elders, who stockpile that wealth and dole out a pittance of it for the brainwashed converts to barely subsist on... Except the Krishna's go even further... forcing their converts to panhandle, hold down regular jobs, and give all of it to them: so it is sucked into the foundation's coffers.

If the first Christian movement were alive today, it would be sneered at and laughed at just as much as the Hare Krishna's are today. Because in both cases: the only thing these corrupt religions give in return for faith, and unquestioning belief, is a sense of belonging to a higher cause or God. Christianity was corrupted by its own growing numbers of affluent converts. It was corrupted by its own power, and wealth, and greed... to become just another corrupt, lying religion. It was corrupted by Jesus' own imbecile disciples... demanding that he be a God.... Otherwise it made no sense.

At its original core: the one truth the true historical Jesus taught: 'Love others more than yourself' is precisely the same root social dynamic of our original ancestors living in small bands as nomadic hunter-gatherers: when the entire function and existence of the individual had to be geared towards the well-being of the group, and the entire function and existence of the group had to be geared towards the well-being of the individuals included in that group. Humans practiced this ethic for at least 90,000 years before civilization corrupted it. The original fish communities of Jesus' time had merely by accident, only partially rediscovered this lost way of living. History has twisted all of its partial truths, and now makes out that it was created magically out of thin air; by a single godlike spiritual genius.

If Jesus had tried to live amongst the earlier prehistoric bands, they would have had to teach him how to live without preaching, or moralizing or lecturing... and he would have found it extremely hard to adapt to their even harsher, more difficult, more primitive lifestyle with its more primitive tools. In that context: even the teachings of the original historical Jesus are corrupt; because he did not find his own food, he did not travel miles each day not just to find food, not just to enjoy the scenery, not just to see what lay beyond the next hill... but to commune with all living things as much as possible. To instill their sense of Pure Wonder into every tree, every rock, every cloud, everything he could sense.

The closest thing to this lost way of living today is what people call Nature worship. However, 90,000 years of our ancestor's hunter-gatherer lifestyle was never really a worship of Nature. It was not even 'Life worship' or worshipping all living things. Early humans did not differentiate in their Wonder between a grain of sand, or a plant, or a tree, or the stars. Pure Wonder is not a religion, nor is it a form of selective worship. It is only how humans are designed to be aware. It is only the optimum level of human awareness. It is only the highest balanced dynamic of human awareness. If you put the original historical Jesus into this context: then he becomes just another human who tried to live as best he could given his own circumstances. Using his own sense of Pure Wonder as best he could.

Jesus taught that you should love others not just as much as yourself, but more than you love yourself. It is that simple. There is nothing else that needs saying. If everyone loved others more than they love themselves, then nobody would want to take advantage of anyone else... then there would be such a surplus of love; that everyone is looked-after, cared-for, nurtured, listened-to, helped. He was lucky: he tried this unheard of principle in the only setting where it could work: among the poorest of the poor... where there had already existed close-knit communities that became even closer when they all became equally poor... amongst people who had no possessions to fight over, or compete for, or steal, or envy, or argue over.

This principle has always been practiced by the most downtrodden, the most uneducated and the poorest of the poor in the poorest nations on this Earth. It is almost never practiced in affluent countries, by those who are considered to be relatively poor. Simply because they are not poor enough. Their relative affluent poverty is not enough of a life-threatening crisis, to force them to band together to help themselves. They have not yet been forced by hardship to the brink of near-death, near-death starvation, near-death dehydration, and near-death brought about by exposure to the elements.

Today, the billions of poor exist with little if any humanizing ethos. These starving masses have no organized self-help groups, no enlightened help from those more educated and no stable, loving, close-knit communities by which to model how they should live. But wherever the three dynamics of self-help, enlightenment and close-knit community exist: the condition of the poor is instantly made better. Unfortunately, today, these dynamics are corrupted by the now-global fear of poverty, and global ethic of greed and the insane Protestant work ethic of work as a religion...being a tool-Slave for most of your life.

The original Christian Ethic was different. The early, original poor Christian communities wanted to stay poor: because they had already, personally experienced the corrupting influences of power, wealth, deceit, greed, affluence, etc. It was only when they were forced into poverty that they discovered its benefits by being forced to be more giving. They had by pure luck... gained a better understanding and perspective on as many different cultures as possible. Only then did they ever develop the wisdom, the 'tough love', to vigilantly banish members if they became too well-off, too affluent, too fat, too deceitful, too dishonest, less giving, less loving, etc...

But 2,000 years later. Now? Now the ethos of pure greed rules the entire human species like an invisible religion... seeping into human souls in many ways. And today, people have no idea, or conception of the true happiness or joy they could have if they only did not believe in this completely untrue, unloving ethic of the goodness of greed... if they simply lived their own lives by helping others, if all people did this simultaneously, the entire world would be changed instantly... beyond recognition.

Today, even if you did want to live like this you could not. Today, most people do not want your help, even if you offer it free. They only want your money. Most homeless bums in America do not want to be helped. They want money for their drug habits, and tobacco, and alcohol. They want free handouts. They have no interest in helping their fellow poor. They are happier remaining victims, with the excuse of their own powerlessness to hide all of their own faults and failings. They wouldn't have lasted for one second in the early fish communities. They would have been well known as worthless vagrants, vagabonds, drifting around looking for others to take pity on them. The early fish communities did not want pity. Instead: they pitied the selfish rich. Originally, they were very selective about who they allowed into their communities. The Christianizing of these communities was based upon the principle that everybody deserved to be happy and be given an equal chance to find true happiness and live poorly, without any possessions whatsoever, as they did. The Christians stopped being selective. They took anyone regardless of who they were: regardless of how honest, or loving they were, or how healthy they were. That was their downfall. The result was that they became barely distinguishable from any other community.

Originally, they were as scrupulously honest with each other as possible... even if it meant publicly admitting their own sins and faults and publicly atoning for them. They practiced the greatest hardship possible, they tried to live without hurting others, without taking advantage of others. They practiced hardship in all of its forms; not just physical hardship. They practiced emotional, mental, sexual, physical, cultural, communal, personal hardship... all as an integrated lifestyle. Who wants to practice such a lifestyle today? Nobody. Because it is too hard, too difficult, too demanding? Or because we have all been trained to be as lazy and self-indulgent as possible?

This kind of life is the hardest kind of life possible. That is why the early fish communities were so rare. They went against every known civilized belief, tenet, and practice... and were nearly hounded out of existence by the warrior cultures they existed in. Until the Christians talked sense into them and convinced them to compromise their strict ethos. That compromise saved the Christianized fish communities from complete extinction. But, the other, true fish communities were wiped out. Civilized people did not tolerate the open derision of their entire society and culture: by what they considered to be mentally deranged outcasts, who were preaching a dangerous insanity that had to be stamped out. And with that organized massacre... the truth of how and why Christianity was born, where it came from, why it even happened: all the historical perspective and understanding of Christianity's origins: was lost in the mists of time... and unrecorded history.

The teachings of the historical Jesus were corrupted by Jesus himself. Instead of actively driving away those who revered him, he tolerated them. Instead of actively denouncing all forms of worship, including the worship of himself: Jesus corrupted his own teachings by allowing people to follow him and revere him. He allowed others to become his disciples, his followers. If he had not become the nominal leader of his own small group, then there would have been no Christianity. It would never have even been formed. And the true fish communities would have had a chance to practice voluntary poverty without being corrupted by the twisted, false teaching of Jesus' followers.

However...it was the corrupting compromises of those Christianized communities; that saved them from being completely obliterated; along with the other purer and poorer fishing communities who did not practice enough civilized principles. The once-affluent, influential members of the Christianized fishing communities still had enough Roman social status and clout to save their own Christianized communities from being massacred along with the others.

Yet... the core truth of voluntary poverty is so effective, and so powerful, that even though Christianity became a personality cult that was almost exclusively obsessed with mythologizing and worshipping Christ as a the literal Son of God... even though his teaching has been distorted beyond recognition by the corrupting influence of civilization and the passage of time: the core truths of what these poor people discovered 2,000 years ago still survives in many partial, incremental, destructive ways.

What did they actually worship? A dead killed, sacrificed God. A sacrificial lamb. A sacrificial token. A meaningless token of a meaningless sacrifice. A crucified deity. Not the actual man. They only worshipped icons portraying death, degradation, martyrdom, submission and resignation. The complete opposite of God. As an example: how sick can you get? How obvious that it was a religion intended only for the sick and dying, and resigned and submissive? They worshipped crucifixion so obsessively they stopped calling Jesus by his name: but only referred to him as 'the crucified one', or shortened to the 'Christ'.

It took almost 2,000 years and tears and suffering before the first person finally realized what the religious symbol of Jesus crucified on a cross meant. It took almost 2,000 years of war and death before Nietzsche finally gained the understanding of what that symbol meant. It took 2,000 fucking years for a few of the most intelligent people to understand what the symbol of Christ on a Cross had been screaming at them. It took 2,000 fucking years of human stupidity before the understanding that the symbol of a God dying on a cross means that God is dead. He is DEAD! He DIED! There ARE no gods! There never have been!

But the idea!...of Christianity. Takes your breath away. The pure arrogance, the unbelievable egomaniacal pomposity. The ludicrous magical superstitious nonsense of it.... That one man... can absolve and forgive, and whitewash, and forget, and cure, and heal, and wipe away.... all the zillions of billions of sins and crimes and rapes and murders, and lies and hates and poisons and destructions and.....!!! of the entire fucking human race!!!

How?

Magic! Pure fucking magic. All you need to do is believe, and hey-presto! Everything is fixed and you are in heaven and happy, and what's more: you did not have to lift a fucking finger to do it. Christ did it for you. All by his lil' ol' self.

Has there ever been a better religion of pure, instant forgiveness, instant freedom from guilt, instant spiritual salvation... instant spiritual self-gratification? Has there ever been a religion that allows you to live a life of pure self-gratification, and then at your death-bed: all you have to say, is.... I believe in Jesus! I confess I have sinned! Now I am forgiven! I can go to Heaven!

Talk about reflective crap. The insanity of human reflectivity.
All you have to do is: Believe in believing.

Semantically: this phrase is meaningless, it has no meaning. Unless you think phrases like: 'run in running', or 'hear in hearing', or 'see in seeing' makes logical sense.

But. However. To believe in believing clearly demonstrates just how absurd and insane and illogical the reflectivity of human abstract thought actually is. Simply create a set of fantasized rationalizations inside your head, and convince yourself that they are more true, more real than anything outside your head. And viola! You have a belief.

All you have to do is believe... and magically, all your sins and mistakes are instantly fixed! Not just yours!! Every damned human on Earth also! And you wonder where and why and the culture of pure self-gratification managed to survive the complete destruction of the Roman Empire: and laid latent in Europe as a mystical religion, until it exploded all over the fucking world? Christianity contains the most self-gratifying, the most self-deceiving religious dogma ever invented by humans.

Christianity teaches Christians how to brainwash themselves. So their church doesn't have to do it. How lazy can you be?.

The story of this movement is a lesson in how anything good can be corrupted into becoming evil. How anything... even the practice of voluntary poverty can be turned into the richest church on earth, into a misleading, corrupting religion. How the smallest bit of power, wealth, status, or knowledge can corrupt anything... incrementally, slowly, insidiously... until it is so corrupt, so unrecognizable, that today anyone can turn on their television sets and watch Christian ministers blaring out the messages of hate and intolerance, screaming at people that they actually can become rich... by following the teachings of Christ. How people can be trained to worship the idea of self-sacrifice embodied in a deified figurehead... but never dream of even attempting to do it themselves. It is a clear story of systematic corruption by the inexorable forces and influences of civilization. Anyone who is killed by crucifixion is a Christ. Christ means crucifixion: nothing else. He was worshipped as a nameless crucified God. A God without any human personality, or any human attributes or characteristics. The actual living Jesus was abstracted and distorted by this inevitable process cultural abstraction and mythification so much: he has disappeared as a person.

But even after two thousand years: people still enter nunneries and monasteries to take voluntary vows of poverty and chastity... and practice voluntary hardship. Buddhist Taoist, Shintoist monks in the East practiced it long before the historical Jesus had ever been born. So did many Greeks, and other cults and religions. But actually; this kind of institutionalized ‘hardship’ is a complete hypocrisy. It is nothing more than a holier-than-thou attempt to escape the uncertainties and hardships and choices they would otherwise be forced to undergo had they not run away from their involvements in their own communities. They are only practicing the art of living on the dole, living off the welfare of others, letting other people work and pay tithes and live off the donations of the rest of their societies. They go into seclusion and are protected by the huge wealth of their mother church. However meagerly: they live off of this wealth and power. They do not earn their own bread. They are considered to be too holy, too spiritual to do that. That kind of life is not a hardship. It is one of the easiest ways of being taken care of. What if these people took voluntary vows of poverty and chastity... and did not enter some safe-secure womb of a monastery or nunnery where they are clothed, and fed, and housed for free?

If they did that? Then they would merely become starving, homeless bums. Unimportant, lowly, despised, scum... The world is full of starving poor homeless people. Are they admired for it? No. Why? Because their hardship is not voluntary.

If the monks and nuns of the church lived voluntarily without any support or help from their Church... How long would they last? Why don't people do this? Why does your personal moral and ethical choice have to be approved by some faceless institution? What do your personal morals and ethics have to do with any orthodoxy? Why do people need the sanctity of some religious rubber stamp? Unless they are too afraid to do it alone. Unless they are incapable of being non-conformist. Why don't the people who take vows of poverty and chastity, go out on the street and live with the poorest people, and try to help them? Instead of sitting warm-fed-safe- and secure in some provided domicile by a rich religious institution that can afford to keep them on their welfare roles?

Mother Teresa became world-famous because she defied the strict orders of her sect to not help the poorest people who were constantly dying on her doorstep. Yet there has been only one of her in a civilization of over six billion people. How many others have dared or bothered to follow her example? Do you know of any? That in itself is an indication of the total corruption of all civilized religions and spirituality. And what does her example actually teach? It teaches people to tend only to the dying and old. Not to the living and the young: who need your help a thousand times more. The only reason she became famous is because her own humanity was already spiritually corrupt enough to tug at the heart-strings of old-rich-powerful-dying men in her city who kept her hostel for the dying alive.

Why is the myth of Christ on the cross; so much more powerful than many other religions? So powerful, that strangers can travel thousands of miles and find converts? That is easily explained by the human subconscious. The fact that every human who has ever lived holds a huge amount of un-experienced psychobiologic pain in their bodies-minds-hearts-lungs-psyches-souls. It is easily explained by the unnatural way we are forced to live, and the many inhuman ways we treat each other, ourselves and the Earth. It is easily explained by our conscious minds saying to us:

‘Oh... I could never endure that much pain. I could never suffer that intensely. Besides... I don't want to. But... I can have all my sins forgiven instantly and easily... as long as I believe in a magical Christ. As long as I give the easy lip service of superficially admitting that I am a sinner, that I am a coward, that I am dishonest and a liar. Then... Not only will all my sins be forgiven, but also I will never have to stop being a sinner, or a coward, or a liar. Because I could never be so presumptuous as to even hope to equal our great savior...Christ ... he is our leader... and he loves me...personally. How a single man-God can listen-to 100's of millions of mortals constantly praying to him all at the same time about their own personal problems is not important... remember: this is religion, not logic.

'I've always wanted a leader who loves me...personally. And he died for me... personally! He sacrificed his one life willingly... just so; for the next two thousand years, all the Christian sinners could go on sinning free of charge. Boy, was he thinking ahead. He died just so he could magically forgive me... personally... each day. As long as I confess only to him all my secret sins to him in private... personally.

Not to anyone else; or else I might have to pay for my sins... I might get punished. But this way I can be a sinner and still be forgiven, and get off scot-free. I can do this because I have a scapegoat, who will pay for all humanities sins. Instant forgiveness. Free sin. No guilt. Just as long as I am a conformist follower of this leader-victim-mother-father-love-authority figure-deity. This way, I will never have to ask myself any unpleasant questions. Guaranteed acceptance into Heaven. No Hell. No later consequences to pay for.'

Huh? To be loved by the victim who is suffering for your sins, and is also the sanctified leader of your religion, and also the Son of God?... What wonder is it; that this kind of corrupt reasoning is so addictive? Only... you have to very stupid, or very brainwashed to swallow it.... Or ... very selectively uncritical.... Very selectively illogical... very selectively irrational.

Or.

All you have to do to believe in any religion; is to be: ...very selectively logical... or very selectively illogical... or very selectively critical... or very selectively uncritical... or very selectively rational... or very selectively irrational.

It is all the same damn thing.

Selective intelligence is what makes us stupid. The idea that you can select whatever you want to believe-in... is the purest, most self-indulgent bullshit ever invented. Try being selective in your belief of gravity. Select what kind of fucking gravity you want to believe in. Select what kind of gravity you want to live under. See if your fucking selective belief systems will work.

Because the culture we live in is sick: its pendulum swings from one extreme to another are also sick. Because civilization is insane, its pendulum swings are also insane. Just look at the practice of crucifixion. For almost 2,000 years: the Persian and Roman Empires crucified millions of the poorest people on earth, then the practice of crucifixion died out, and what happened? A religion worshipping a crucified man dying on a cross happened, and for almost 2,000 more years... one crucified poor person has been worshipped... while all of the millions of other crucified poor people who were crucified are ignored, swept under the carpet, banished from the annals of human history and covered up. This is not sanity: this is insanity on a level so huge and so long that you cannot see it unless you develop a 4,000 year perspective on the evolution of Western culture. From 2,000 years of the most horrible sadistic atrocities... to 2,000 years of the most horrible masochistic atrocities. The entire human species is sick; it has been sick ever since man stood up and began using tools. Until this fact is faced: until we the living people on this earth all face the fact that we are sick, and we need to heal ourselves, and the Earth we have poisoned by our sickness; people will continue to live inside the sickness called civilization walling themselves off from Nature and the world around them.

The Poisoning of Self-Love and Self-Sacrifice

Tools are designed to manipulate things with. Civilization is designed, so a few humans can manipulate the majority of humans. The question of any manipulation is; what does it do? Does it make it better? Or Worse? And for whom? Better for a few elite? Worse for the all the rest of the billions of humans? Worse for all the rest of the Earth?

If you drink a glass of water, can you tell if it is pure? Or has it been processed and toxic chemicals added to it? Does it have chlorine added to it? Does it have Mercury in it? Does it have dangerous bacilli living in it? Is it polluted with industrial waste products? Is it clean or dirty? With your naked eye, and your sense of smell and taste, you might notice something is not quite right. Or... you might notice nothing at all. It may seem like a perfectly clean glass of water and you might drink it without the slightest suspicion that it is chemically poisoned on a level that you were never designed to sense. Only to die from whatever is not quite right because you thought it was okay. Or good enough. 99% of all the human poisons and pollutions that kill people and living things; are not visible or discernable to our crude senses. Yet they are no less poisonous, or deadly. Why?

Because we have created ways of manipulating things on such a microscopic level using microscopes in chemical laboratories: that we are changing things on a molecular level that we have no business touching or even looking at.

Science can stare at molecules for five million more years: and it will not help one single person be any happier or healthier. Science can manipulate molecules. But the molecular poisons they create are killing these scientists themselves with cancer, so fast and so effectively: that in less than two hundred years: there will no longer be any scientists left to manipulate these molecules.

The same truth exists in the moral-cultural-spiritual-religious-ethical poisoning of human souls by civilized societies. When infants and children are not taught how to love themselves properly; then their self-love becomes a form of self-pollution. The pollution is so invisible that nobody notices it. We do not have scientific measuring devices to tell us if we have been polluted by the culture we live in. Or polluted by the beliefs we hold. Or by the way we live. Or what we do. Or what we feel. Or how we do things. How we feel about ourselves. How we think.

Yet civilization pollutes all of these aspects of human existence. One good example, is how the instinctive need and joy of self-sacrifice is polluted in many cultures. How the self-love of girls is polluted. Women have a deep need to be nurturers. They are designed to care for their children. So what do most cultures do in order to enslave and oppress women? They teach them from the womb, that women are less valuable than men. Less important than men. That they are almost completely worthless. And the only worth they do have is only through obeying men. Only by staying home and having as many children as possible. Only by sacrificing themselves for their men and children.

Or? You can be taught to worship anyone. You can be brainwashed to obey anyone. Anything. You can be taught to believe that woe and misery is normal. You can be easily brainwashed to sacrifice yourself for your religion. For your God. For your husband. For your children. For your leader. Your Nation. Your ethnic heritage. Your race. Etc...

How? By pyramidal focus. By focusing all of your attention away from yourself. Because as you have been taught that you are nothing, you are worthless. You are ignorant. You are powerless. You have no status. You are the lowest of the low. You must submit. You must resign yourself to your own personal unhappiness and misery and sacrifice yourself without complaining or whimpering. You must endure all the frustrations and hardships that come from your role as a self-sacrificing obedient, submissive, mindless, non-critical, unaware slave; to whatever higher power or authority that happens to exist in your society. Whom you must never question. Never resist. Never argue with. Never oppose. Never fight against.

This general dynamic of the poisoning of women souls leads to a common theme on TV in Japanese soap operas. Where the woman is put into an intolerable situation of being forced to choose between two masters. Or two sets of ideology. Or two men. Or two loyalties. And whichever choice she makes. She is doomed to be killed by the infuriated, outraged male. For her sin of disobedience. She is punished. Yelled at. Destructively abused. The same stupidity is played out in all male drama in every culture.

However. The moral of these tales is how she purifies herself by her noble selflessness. How she martyrs herself so nobly. Why are hundreds of millions of people addicted to watching soap operas? Because these hundreds millions of people identify with these martyred , weeping victims. They sympathize with being manipulated, powerless victims. They love to reflectively project their own misery onto these endless tales... without ever resolving them.

Do people who take charge of their own lives and deal with their own problems watch soap operas? No. They are problem-solvers who like a challenge. They do not gossip about something.. Instead of talking about it: they do something about it. The minute they see a problem, they fix it. They work at it. They do not waste their time watching how other people screw up their lives. Much less sit and watch actors screw up their fictitious lives on TV. Soap Operas are watched by people who do not believe they have any control over their own lives.

Most owners do not watch soap operas. But their do-nothing, stay-at-home wives do. But those who are owned; watch soap operas. Because they are lazy. Because they do not want to work at solving their own problems. They do not have the courage, or the power, or the wherewithal to solve their own problems. They avoid looking at their own needy, clinging lives, and watch the interesting, distracting glamorous problems of glamorous actors acting out their fake, glamorous lives. Uncritically. No critical thinking... No: 'Huh? Why don't they -----... so that problems is solved?'

Why? Because people do not want to deal with their own problems. They do not want to face them. So they become addicted to watching fake actors, acting-out endless neurotic ways of not dealing with their fake problems. They accept uncritically how a fake plot is magically solved by some handsome stranger who saves the damsel in distress. They accept that this is how life should be. They wish that their own lives could be this glamorous. But the glamour is a total fake: they know it is a total fake. Yet they are still addicted to it.

Why? Because all civilized life is so boring that people are forced to distract themselves from it by some kind of uncritical, mindless distraction or entertainment. Civilized existence is so empty, so superficial... that if you did not have TV, and movies, and coffee, and alcohol, and computers, and video games... then the cities of the world would erupt with the unleashed energy of billions of enraged citizens... who did not have their life-energy adequately stunted, controlled, manipulated, shunted, oppressed, repressed, etc... by their drugs and distractions.

Why do people need martyrs to worship and follow? Why are martyrs so dangerous? Because they spark a universal yearning for martyrdom in the human race by their own personal example of courage, and honesty. They are the rare people who are not afraid of dying. They are people who are not afraid of being killed. They give more than they take. That is why they are so powerful. They are the only people who stand up and fight against authority. That is why the ones in power do not make public examples of their enemies anymore. That is why they were dragged into dungeons, and prisons; where other people could not see their bravery and courage, and honesty, and not be inspired by it.

All human learning has been negative learning. Not positive learning. We have all learned sneakier ways to become weaker, more cowardly, more stupid and more dishonest. None of the positive lessons of human history have been learned. Simply because we do not learn positively. We learn how to become more negative. We do not learn how to become more positive. We learn how to hate better, kill better, and lie better... we do not learn how to be more honest, more courageous, more loving. Instead we learned how to drag the few honest brave courageous dissidents and rebels down into prisons and dungeons so their honesty and courage could not be a living example of how to live and how to die for the rest of the terrified masses. We have learned how to fear better. Not how to be more fearless. We have learned how to jail and kill all fearless people.

Because they stir up universal resentments and hate, and anger, and rage in the masses against their oppressors. So, cultures try to deflect this by poisoning all human instincts for self-sacrifice. Instead of sacrificing yourself for healthy, sane good reasons... civilized cultures hold up all kinds of insane reasons and destructive values and ideas that women and girls are supposed to believe-in and sacrifice themselves-to. Civilization teaches that self-sacrifice to the powers-that-be... is good. That you are supposed to sacrifice yourself to your religion... to your Church, to your God, to your State, to your Leader, to your Husband, to your Children, etc... If you are a female in most human cultures... you are supposed to sacrifice yourself to everybody except yourself.

This can be seen in oriental and Latin American, African, European, North American and Asian, cultures all around the World. Wherever there is tragedy and death. Pain and suffering. Misery and heartache. You will see women wailing and weeping. In love with their own suffering. In love with their own pain. Hugging their own misery and pain to themselves because that is all they have left of themselves. Refusing to let go of it. Refusing to feel better. Hoarding, accumulating, sanctifying and Preserving their unhappiness. Wallowing in it. Why? Because that is almost the only form of emotional expression their society allows them to feel, and show in public. That is the only time they are shown respect. That is the only time people comfort them. That is the only time people notice them. That is the only time they are not ignored. That is the only way they can be noticed. That is they only way they are allowed to get attention.

Do these billions of women ever organize to get rid of the murderers who killed their husbands? The raping husbands who traumatize their own children? The mass murdering dictators who keep them in perpetual poverty?

No. They have been culturally brainwashed too effectively. Their self-esteem has been too systematically and effectively destroyed. They are incapable of loving themselves or anyone; enough to become actively outraged enough to do anything about it. This is one small bit of evidence... one small example... one small discernable evidence of how civilization poisons the souls of all poor women... how in non-western cultures: women are used, and manipulated, and intimidated by patriarchal cultures; who keep them as powerless and as destructively brainwashed as possible.

Men on the other hand, are supposed to be the masters of women. They are given huge powers over them. Men are not allowed to weep or show any kind of sensitivity, which is interpreted as weakness. Men are not allowed to cry openly. They are not allowed to feel pain. Men must be far more unfeeling than women. They must be crueler, more inhuman. This forces men and women to become one-sided copies. All women are supposed to be weak. All men are supposed to be strong. In all ways. On all levels. In all abilities. In all activities. Why? Because men need to function more as tools. They needed to function more as machines. They are not allowed to have emotions or feelings like women who do not use tools as much as they do. They were the ones who did most of the killing. All signs of kindness, love, tenderness, gentleness, love, caring, are considered to be signs of weakness. The only way men can use tools is as unfeeling as possible. That is the civilized code of the macho mystique. Where fathers raise their children without ever giving them one single sign of affection, or love. Without giving them one positive feedback. Without ever saying one good thing about them. And go to their graves without ever saying to them that they love them. And in return the fathers are hated by their children. Who grow up and they treat their children exactly the same way their fathers treated them. For thousands of years this endless unlearned shit has been passed on from father to son in all civilized cultures.

But. The child is supposed to love this loveless, empty, cruel unfeeling parent. And if they do not. It is the child's fault. Not the parent's fault for raising them so badly that for the rest of their life the child does not even know what love is. Simply because they have never felt it, tasted it, or seen it. Then parents complain amongst themselves about how badly their children have turned out. How they rebel. Refuse to obey. How they become ungrateful children.

Has there ever been a tale in any culture about an ungrateful parent instead of an ungrateful child? A bad parent who is punished for being a bad parent? No. Only about bad and ungrateful children. Who are punished for not loving their parent's as they should, as they must. As they are ordered to. As they are forced to. By every human culture for over 40,000 years.

Except in fairy tales. Stories that are designed to be told only to gullible innocent children. And never told or bothered with after they become adults. Except to tell these mythified lies to their children.

These are only a few of the cultural dynamics, which poison human lives in civilized societies. 99.999% of this poison is invisible, undetectable and intangible. This kind of cultural sickness cannot be detected by a machine. You will never ever be able to measure any of this cultural sickness with a machine. You will never, ever be able to Scientifically 'measure it.

You cannot see how polluted any human soul is visibly. Or smell it with your nose. You may see people as being better than you, as having more beautiful clothes, more beautiful bodies, more money, more power.

But the health of a human soul is a very complex thing. Its state of health can be hidden and kept secret in many different ways. Which is one reason why most civilized married couples end up being unfaithful to each other... and why many of them end up in divorce. Only after years of living with someone else as superficially as possible... do you finally find out too late that you married the wrong person. Why? Because neither of you were willing to explore each other's souls to begin with. Neither of you had a sense of Pure Wonder about the other person. Neither of you were honest and courageous enough to show your faults to the other person. Both of you lived in different frozen states of unaware normality. And neither of you thought there was anything wrong with a stasis condition of negative normality. Both of you were operating on a basis of negative morality, and negative ethics. Neither of you had a critical awareness of yourselves or, of the other person.

Why? Because you did not have a Sense of Pure Wonder about the other person. Because the particular mix of spiritual pollution in your soul did not quite match the particular spiritual pollution of your mate's soul. So rather than work at the painful, difficult task of dealing with all of your relationship aspects and problems. All of your life. All of your problems... with your mate. How can you? Both of you are spending most of your lives working doing something else, instead of working on each other. Give married couples enough time together: and they can iron any difficulties out. But they never have that luxury. Modern work, tool-oriented societies make damn sure that married couples do not have that free time and energy. The inevitable result is that you opt for the easier choice of finding someone else who is more compatible. Someone as identical to you as possible. Someone as similar to you as possible. And never venture any deeper into yourselves, or ask yourself any unpleasant questions.

Besides. Both of you are spending most of your time, your energy, your focus, and your life at work. Then you the inevitable result of repeated failed marriages. And nobody grows. Nobody learns. Nobody changes. Do you know how hard it is to get rid of a bad habit or addiction? How hard it is to get rid of a bad way of thinking? A bad habit of thinking negatively? Feeling negatively? Acting negatively? Do people ever want to become better? Or is it just lip-service. And when the hard work sets in, they renege on their promises and fall back into their bad habits.

No human can heal themselves alone. The only way humans can heal from the destructive lifestyles they live, the destructive beliefs they have, the destructive cultures they live in, etc... Is to intentionally try to heal: as a group. Not as alienated individuals without any help from anyone else. But modern civilization has destroyed all group socializing and group activities, and turned modern consumers into paranoid lonely alienated isolated anti-social freaks.

The Need for Community

To begin with: no human can survive alone. Humans living alone starve to death, go mad and become extinct. No human can exist alone and be dynamically balanced and healthy. Humans are designed to be social animals. The question remains: in what kind of society, in what kind of community do humans function best? How should that community be structured? How should it work? Humans cannot survive or remain sane or healthy without cooperating with each other. The psychobiologic health-totality of a person cannot be healed alone. No person can totally heal themselves alone. People must help each other in order to do so.

Meaning: the healing dynamic of all humans is a social dynamic of people helping each other. There is no other dynamic that works. There is no other dynamic that will ever work. Human healing only happens between equals who love each other. Human healing only works between equals with love for each other. But even more crucially... healing only works when each person loves the other person more than they love themselves.

It is only then that you get an actually positive energy-flow, a positive love-flow and a positive healing-energy-love-flow. Loving someone else as much as you love your self is only the necessary beginning equilibrium that needs to be achieved before you can actually start that highly dynamically balanced energy called love flowing, and moving, and changing, and evolving. Humans have never done this. It has not happened yet.

The conditions needed for this to happen must be first intelligently established before it even can happen. And it can only begin to happen by creating a community where all people are equal, where all people interact both socially and personally as equals. Meaning that inside each person's psyche-soul, they never get the sick idea that they are somehow better than anyone else because they have some kind of artificial advantage. If you are truly better at something than someone else... you will be blind to the fact that other people are not as good as you are at the particular thing. And you strain all of your soul to help them be as good as you are. And help them become even better than you are. Without even the concept of you being 'better' in your soul... Unless you are better at having fun. Better at creating fun. Then you will be mobbed. And chased.

Which will only make you have more fun. Be more funny. Until everyone learns how to have as much fun as you do. Until everyone learns how to have fun with everyone else.

But does having more fun make you a better person? No. You only laugh more. It is how you have fun. The intent of your fun is what matters. How gentle, kind, wise, passionate, honest, courageous and outrageous it is. Many of the worst scoundrels have gotten away with murder; because they were so much fun, so funny: that nobody bothered to criticize them for their obvious failings.

Is being funnier than others an advantage? That depends on how you use it. If you use it as an advantage; it becomes corrupted. If you use it to avoid looking at your own faults, it becomes an obvious defense against honesty. Then you start trying to be funny; when it is not appropriate. Then you start to make fun of things, that are not funny. Then you start to act out your failings as a perpetual clown. Then you become one-dimensional, shallow and foolish.

But if you use it lovingly and wisely, and spontaneously... then it becomes a very powerful humanizing force. Then you can spread happiness and fun everywhere you go. And be happy, and have fun, and be spontaneous... and be all things at once. As long as you have a Sense Of Pure Wonder. You can make other people laugh by not being funny. You can make them laugh by simply being yourself.

But people who do not have a sense of Pure Wonder... do not understand people who do. Anyone who does not have a Sense of Pure Wonder: looks at someone who does, as a crazy person. They see them as being abnormal, weird, nuts, stupid, etc. Their entire Normality is threatened by Wonder. They cannot allow themselves to Wonder about anything. Wonder scares them very badly. It threatens all their 'normal' values, habits, prejudices, traditions, customs, etc.

In raising children: The entire goal of normalized adults who have lost their own Sense of Pure Wonder... is to destroy the Pure Wonder of children, and replace that Pure Wonder with their own brand of brutalized, desensitized normality.

Children just innocently being themselves are not laughed with... they are laughed-at. There is a big difference between laughing with someone in joyous approval, and laughing at someone in derision and denigration. They are humored condescendingly, they are objectified, they are made fun-of. By jaded, adults who are bored by any aliveness or wonder in their children. There is a big difference between having fun with someone, and making fun at someone. It is the difference between sharing something as equals with someone, and objectifying the other person and attacking them as an 'it', a thing, treating them as if they were dead objects and not living, feeling, breathing people.

Children who have too much innocent joy and happiness and fun are systematically ridiculed and scorned. They are made to feel ashamed of being themselves. They are made to feel that there is something wrong with them. Why? Because they make all other people who are not joyful, happy, who are not innocent, who are not full of wonder, who are not laughing, who are not smiling, who are not full of energy, who do not know how to laugh, who do not know how to be happy, who have forgotten how to be childlike angry and irritated and threatened, and envious, and hateful, and mean, and nasty.

This form of evil is one of the most common forms of human evil on the Earth. It is practiced everywhere. By people who cannot stand to see other people feeling better than they feel. By people who cannot stand to let anyone else be better than they are. They are practicing the dynamic of equality on a subconscious level. If they feel miserable: then everyone around them must feel miserable. If they feel lonely. Then everyone around them must feel lonely. If they are full of fear and hate. Then everyone around them must be full of fear and hate also.

It is the tyranny of the majority of human cowards. The tyranny of the bigger against the smaller. Brutalized children brutalizing smaller children who have not been as brutalized as they have. Brutalized, traumatized, damaged, mistreated, neglected, abused, raped children externalizing their pain and anger and rage onto someone smaller than they are. Because someone bigger than they were did it to them, they do it in return to others who are smaller than they are.

If this dynamic were a tyranny of human courage, instead of cowardice. Then brutalized, abused, neglected, traumatized, raped children would vent their rage and anger and hate only upon people bigger than they were. If children were taught and trained to be brave and courageous, instead of being trained to be cowards, then every adult rapist, every parent, every adult, all adults, all older bigger people would be forced to think twice before they neglected or abused their children. Because then they might find their children attacking them and hating them and yelling and hitting them even more brutally and savagely than the children who have been traumatized and damaged into becoming bully cowards attack and brutalize smaller children.

But now... we can't have that now can we? Train our own children to stand up against us. That might make them too self-sufficient. That might make them not listen to us. Why not?

Children are brainwashed from birth into conforming and obeying their parents. Into becoming mindless, unfunny, boring, uncreative little robots. Simply because all the fun has been drubbed out of them. Until they no longer know how to have fun. And then they are lost forever. They wander around bored, lonely, sad, miserable... why?

Because the most sacred thing in human society is not fun, it is work. Because adults don't want to have fun:. Adults want to work and make money. And after working all your life: nobody knows how to have fun. Fun becomes a forgotten child-trait that is only tolerated in young children who have not been sufficiently brainwashed fast enough to show no happiness in public. Working people only know how to destroy fun: not how to create it. People are not raised to be creative, or have fun: they are raised only to learn how to work. They are raised to become as uncreative, as boring, as safe and as mindless as possible. As mindless, cowards, liars, procrastinators and conformists who fear anyone else who smiles too much, or anyone else who has too much fun. In civilized society, the very idea of being creative is now only allowed for the elite. Creativity is supposed to be an exclusive gift possessed by a lucky few. A few rare, elite, gifted geniuses.

Once you do not know how to have fun; what good are you to yourself? Then you will only bore yourself, and you will bore others. Then you feel the need to fill that inner emptiness with something. Then you will feel the need to worship something. Then you will feel the need to be entertained by someone else. Because you are empty inside. Because you are not fun to be with yourself. So everyone works until all people feel that way and live that way. When that social dynamic becomes pyramidal: when people get together, and do not interact as equals, when they focus pyramidally, when their values are pyramidal-hierarchical, when a community becomes segmented-stratified: it stops being capable of functioning as a healing dynamic. When people become alienated-isolated-insulated from each other, forced into antagonistic and competitive roles, when they interact only on levels of abstraction, when they become strangers, enemies to each other, when they live in a social atmosphere of fear and unconnectedness: then no healing can happen except incrementally.

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

The structural dynamic of civilization prevents people from being able to heal each other because then the dynamic of healing becomes split-up: then people only try to heal unconnected pieces-bits of themselves. Once the process of living in a segmental split-up society produces a human psyche, which is also split-up and is nonintegrated, there does not even exist an awareness of any need for this kind of integrated healing. Because the only kind of human psyche which functions best in a split-up society, is a split-up, ego-driven psyche.

So: if you are not even aware of the lack of a certain kind of communal existence which you have never experienced in the first place, you are totally numb to that lacking. If you are not even aware of the need to integrate your own psyche because you have never experienced the health of such a level of integration in the first place, your need for that level of healing is totally numb. If you have never experienced what you actually need, you will never ever know that you need it in the first place.

The only way people can expand their social awareness is the same way anyone learns-grows-changes: by using the basic tools of human understanding.

Experiences.	} Equals contextual understanding
Comparison.
Evaluation.
Perspective.

This means that only by experiencing different kinds of communities, by living in different societies long enough to begin to connect with them and understand them, and by comparing them to each other, and by evaluating these comparisons, and finally by achieving an over-all perspective as to the good and bad points in all compared-evaluated communities-societies, cultures. Then you can begin to decide what kind of community you would rather live in, what kind of community you want to help build. But the social-cultural-individual-segmental-frozen isolation of civilization makes this almost impossible. Furthermore: there does not exist any collective awareness of the need to do this.

So even if you want to do it; who else does? You can't build a community alone. People are not aware of their own need for community, nor are they aware that they are all perfectly capable of choosing-comparing-building-creating exactly the kind of community they like best and want most. They are not even aware that this is an unavoidable, intrinsic, human responsibility. They are not aware that they should have been educated and trained to create their own society. That this part of their existence-psyche-potential has been left completely undeveloped. Because they were born into a culture, a way of life, which is mostly dead... that their entire social, communal training was based on preserving that deadness rather than creating any new kind of changing-vibrant creative way of living. So they just take whatever kind of society they live in for granted, do not try to change it... And allow it to become the basis of their own normality. Why? Pure human laziness and practicality. Do you know how much effort-sweat- struggle-conflict is involved in even slightly trying to change any old-dead culture? Any old-dead community? Any old-dead society?

So: if the communal urge to create your own community does not even exist yet. If you were never educated or trained to do it in the first place. If you feel no need to do so. If you are perfectly smug-numb inside your own normality of having no community to live-in. If the means to create a new community does not even exist. If the old, dead ones are too much trouble to bother with because the ensuing changes are so minimal and incremental as to not be worth the effort. If people rarely even get a chance to live in more than one kind of culture-society-community. And even if they do, they never bother to intelligently-seriously-consciously compare them, evaluate them or gain any perspective on them. If they do not ever live in different cultures or communities with the express purpose of comparing them and learning from them. Then of course people will never try to collectively build their own community creatively from scratch: without copying and duplicating the dead, hierarchical models of the past.

Then culture becomes a set of mindless, sanctified imperatives, such as.

‘Anything old or dead: Thou Shalt preserve as much, and as long as possible.’

‘Thou Shalt not question your elders’

‘Thou Shalt obey all authority regardless of how stupid or inhuman it may be.’

‘The past is more important than the present, or the future.’

‘Thou Shalt preserve the past at the expense of the present and the future.’

‘Thou must not change anything.’

‘Thou must spend billions of dollars re-furbishing old, dead, rotting buildings, and old, dead, rotting palaces, museums, churches, city-centers: rather than use any of this money for improving the lives of living people.’

All cultures, all of Science, all civilized people are obsessed with dead things. Scientific expeditions spend 100’s of millions of dollars unearthing old, dead, frozen, mummified, preserved corpses... old, dead artifacts, ships, buildings, tools, bones, skeletons, fossils, rocks... even old, dead air, earth, water, seeds, plants. But while they do this: they completely ignore the living things around them and treat them as if they do not even exist. That is: unless you start developing your own Sense of Pure Wonder, and start wondering about everything around you. Unless you start wondering about everything inside you. Unless you start trying to have different experiences and compare them, evaluate them, and try to find different perspectives.

All learning begins with comparison. If you do not have enough different experiences to compare them to each other: you cannot learn. Even if you have different experiences: if you do not want to compare them, you will still not learn. Even if you want to compare them, but do not have the necessary honesty and courage to admit the truth about your comparisons: you will not learn. Even if you do learn: if you do not have a continual sense of questioning wonder and doubt about what you think you have learned: you will not learn. Absorbing-digesting-questioning-comparing-evaluating different experiences gives you a perspective on things. So does a Sense of Pure Wonder. By trying to expand your perspective, expand your Sense of Pure Wonder: by wondering about your perspective, you end up with an even more intense Sense of Pure Wonder, a wider perspective, with more comparisons, more evaluations, more questions.

If everybody started doing this, then people might want to change-grow-live differently-better-more simply-help each other-start focusing on the need to heal each other. In order for anyone to become culturally aware: that is, not take any culture for granted, or let it become a normality, you need to live in more than one culture simultaneously. So you can continuously compare them side-by-side, as you grow up-live.

Moreover; for that comparative evaluation to be developed into a Sense of Pure Wonder, your cultural experience should not be dualistic but Trialistic. All human cultures should exist like Trialistic carbon atoms, where three different cultures play off each other and balance each other and stabilize each other. Not only that: this cultural Triality should be as globally interconnected as the triangles of a geodesic dome. So instead of a simple Triality:

giving all people a better relative perspective and Appreciation of these different cultures; which makes for even better inter-cultural understanding.

There are many kinds of racism. The most common is monocultural racism, that is: being unable to relate to anyone on a human level except those of your own culture and language. This kind of racism can be seen as it selectively narrows down to including those only of your own nation, or province, or state, or city, or neighborhood, or clique, or gang, or profession, or activity, or interest, or family, or friends, etc... The inability to have anything in common with others of another culture-race-religion stems from separateness and fear: not hatred. Hatred is only an excessively virulent form of the ordinary kind of monocultural racism that afflicts all cultures and all people. The degree of racism merely depends on how deeply or how strongly a person is connected to their own culture or race or religion. The more fanatically cultural or religious you are, the more closely you identify yourself to your own culture or religion, the more of a racist you are. Practically speaking: all cultures are racist and dehumanizing since they make it difficult if not impossible for people of different cultures to understand each other, or deal with each other humanely.

If people only know one way of living, if they have no opportunity to compare different ways of living, different values, different outlooks: then simply due to their lack of perspective; they become blind monocultural idiots; stuck inside their own culture. By taking their own culture for granted, by refusing to question it, by worshipping it mindlessly and placing it above all other cultures without doing any honest comparison or evaluation of any other cultures: they become victims of their own culture. All cultures discriminate against other cultures. All cultures do this. That is the sickness inherent in culture itself. If you selectively practice only one language, one way of living: then you automatically must reject and exclude all other languages and ways of living. All people practice some kind of cultural racism against others merely by their exclusionary view of them due to their own cultural normality or programming. The fact that you are born and raised with a language and culture that is different from other languages and cultures forces you into being a racist whether you like it or not. Essentially: all cultures are racist and discriminating because they alienate humans into fear based, us-them tribal groupings.

No culture can afford to be all-inclusive and expect to survive as a culture. Human culture is a pro-tool, anti-human invention; designed to perpetuate hostility between groups of the same species. The only way humans can ever come together as a species is if they develop enough of an awareness and perspective to value their intrinsic human attributes, more than their abstract, civilized cultural ones. In effect: only by destroying the importance of all cultures, only by refusing to worship any form of culture whatsoever; can people stop the age-old antagonisms and conflicts which human culture creates.

What has been true ever since humans existed on this planet for over 100,000 years is that; any group of people given enough freedom, can and will create their own culture and their own language simply through the creative process of living. The question is; what exactly are the kinds of conditions which are necessary for human creativity to develop and flourish?

How can human cultural values be intelligently improved instead of just preserved, sanctified and worshiped mindlessly? Instead of swallowing your own set of cultural attitudes, beliefs, assumptions whole; you need to learn how to compare them to other cultures, other values, practices, beliefs: then evaluate them, throw out the bad and keep only the good. But in order to do this all the time, with all things, in all ways: you need a sense of pure wonder. Culture should be something you can be continually creative with, have fun with, something you can laugh at: not something that is worshipped and sanctified above the very people who create it... or kept as a dead, preserved pile of accumulated "Thou Shalts" to crush the fun and vibrancy out of all later generations.

All forms of cultural conformity are merely different forms of slavery designed to control and manipulate large, accumulated masses of people that would otherwise be unmanageable without some kind of hierarchal structure and control. All forms of values, ethics, morals that rely upon any hierarchical power structure to rationalize, justify, and enforce them are forms of enforced control, enforced authority, enforced power, enforced wealth, enforced knowledge. All forms of enforcement are forms of slavery. All slavery is merely enforced power. All slavery is enforcement. Not merely enforced labor, but anything you are forced to do-think-feel that you do not want to. All slavery is being manipulated-used as a tool by another human for their advantage instead of your own. Anyone who is forced to do something they do not want to do-feel-think, is a slave. The only social model that has no slavery in it is a model that is 100% voluntary cooperation. It is the only social model that can integrate the needs of the group with the needs of the individual without any conflicts of interest.

Culture

All cultures ever born or created: exhibit classic symptoms of subconscious regression... all the way back to infancy and pre-natal-trauma. That is... as much as they possibly can; given their circumstances. All cultures try to escape hardships whenever possible... but how, and in what way...? They all try to regress back to the pre-natal safety of the womb. That is why all humans see life as being hard, harsh. Each culture fortifies and cocoons itself in as many protective, insulating layers of safety as possible; because all civilized subconscious motives come from a birth experience that is damaged and full of fear and pain. So, each culture tries to physically insulate itself by privacy, numbness and physical warmth...not emotional, spiritual or mental warmth.

Early central Asians nomads wrapped themselves in a material known as 'felt'. Meaning, that they literally wrapped themselves in the dead emotions and traumas of their ancestors, by wrapping themselves physically in the warm, thick matted dead hair of their dead, revered horses. This dead fur-hair kept them warm. Their dead fears kept them warm. Everything that kept them warm was either dead, or feared, or both... the living did not keep these Mongols warm. Under their felt blankets... who needed the warmth of another body? That produced too much heat, and sweat... which is a deadly killer in the cold steppes.

The early aboriginal Eskimos wrapped themselves in the dead fur of the seals and polar bears they killed. And never touched each other physically except rubbing noses? No. During the winter months they spent their time inside their warm igloos naked, and slept together naked: their bodies all touching each other in love. Early uncivilized tribes spent most of their lives naked... living without clothes or furs... Whereas; all early civilized cultures wrapped themselves in dead furs. They wrapped themselves in layers upon layers of rituals and taboos and mystical beliefs of huge powers that were supposed to keep them safe at all times. Whenever these rituals somehow did not work, they instantly assumed that they had displeased their dead ancestors and the dead spirits and mystical powers that were supposed to keep them safe.

Why the difference in two cultures that had to deal with hardship? The Eskimo population was so small in such a harsh land, that they did not need to war against invading tribes. Nobody wanted to live there. They escaped the other tribes who were more warlike. The reason the central Asians were not a touching culture is because they had already been warring against each other for at least 35,000 years. In order to survive that competition, they found that could not show any weakness at all. No love. No smiles. No trust to anyone. Their culture became frozen into rituals and traditions that made sure there was no love at all.

Why are different cultures like this? Because for the Eskimos: their natural environment was harsher than their civilized environment. But for the Mongols: their civilized environment was many times more harsher than their natural environment. The Eskimos could not accumulate herds. The Mongols could. The Eskimos could not form huge tribal clans and political allegiances and carry out huge sweeping raiding parties. The Mongols not only could, but had to do so in order to survive at all.

However... in what way they wrapped themselves is not the point. The North American natives lived half-naked and wrapped their bodies only half-way in dead skins... but they also wrapped themselves into mindsets so blind and stupid, and full of hate, and ignorance... that even as they were slowly exterminated tribe-by-tribe... they still did not have the intelligence to band together and cooperate with each other: as their European enemies were so obviously doing. They refused to form alliances with other tribes. They hated their neighbors even more than they did the white man. The most intelligent of those aboriginal North American cultures: the Iroquois, were systematically exterminated and manipulated into first weakness, discord and then extinction by their allies: the Algonquians, and all the neighboring tribes around them, with help by the white man. Did the North American Indians ever learn the historical lesson of banding together to fight a larger enemy? No. They are still distinct tribes: with only a marginal cooperation going on between them. If the North American native tribes had banded together at any time in the first centuries of European invasion and colonization of their continent... they could have easily ousted them, and kept America unspoiled by more modern civilizations much longer.

Civilization shows itself in the Bible; as an awareness of the shame of a person's nakedness. Living physically naked; but in a mindset of shame... is merely the sign of an early culture; wrapped in different kinds of ritualized, traditionalized shame. Before they enslaved animals and horses; early uncivilized nomads lived with much less shame than later civilized ones. The farther you go back in human history, the less clothes humans wore, the less they had to hide, the less pampered they were.

All cultures try to become all-powerful... all-safe. The early ones attempted to absorb each individual personality and sublimate it so it became a secondary aspect of the greater identity and safety of the collective whole, the collective culture of safety. The first cities were created as walled, insular cocoons-cells of safety and privacy. The first buildings and homes were havens of warmth from the harsh elements of Nature, and were havens of privacy and secrecy from the prying-interference of their overcrowded neighbors who gave them no peace.

The many-tiered mounds of earth called: The Towers of Babylon, were higher and higher levels of walled safety and privacy... built in reaction to the intense compression of their over-crowded city. Today people think of them as symbols of power and glory... when they were actually, an attempt to escape the presence of poor people: who were constantly begging and pleading for the aid of the affluent rich class. The levels of these towers were all levels of hierarchy, power and status.

Early civilized cultures destructively wrapped themselves in as many layers of swaddling clothes as possible. The Persian nobility's formal dress had so many different layers of clothes: that they almost disappeared as individuals. Greek culture was more open, more infantile, rather than pre-natal in nature. They preferred light, open tunics... but they too succumbed to the pre-natal desire to cover themselves completely in white robes and white garments.

The Roman Toga was worn for centuries as the highest visible symbol of adult social status. It was nothing more than a glorified diaper. The lower class, or the Populi of Rome: went around clothed in bunched-up, obscene diapers wrapped around their hips: because they did not have the right, or privilege to put their toga diapers over their shoulders. For centuries; this put them into a permanent cultural mindset of mindless babyhood. Most historians ignore the true cultural reasons for the incredible unpredictability and infantile behavior of the Roman Populi. They attribute it to mass superstitions, ignorance and corruption. The Roman masses acted like spoiled babies because the Roman elite treated the masses as babies for 1,000 years. They were spoon-fed everything from cradle to grave. They were given anything they wanted, or whatever the nobility could procure for them to stupefy them and keep them docile. Their worst appetites were fed, their worst predilections for violence were fostered and encouraged. They were used by the elite in so many ways... manipulated in so many ways... given so much false, misleading propaganda as education... that their reality was mostly a mass of garbled insane superstitions and propaganda. The bloodbaths of the Roman festive holidays is nothing more than a re-enactment of babies being ripped bloody and bleeding... unwanted, and unloved from their mother's wombs... all seeking instinctively to go back to a time before they were unwanted... All seeking to regress, die, go back to the time when they were non-living non-organic energy... back when they were at least useful... not totally useless.

Do you have any idea of the levels and degrees of human pain and trauma existing inside each human soul... when it realizes that it is unloved, unneeded, unwanted and useless? Do you have any idea of the slowly realizing subconscious; as it absorbs and becomes aware-of its own frustration-hopelessness-anger-rage-hate-fear-terror?... what this kind of cuckolding cultural normality produces and reflectively creates... in each infant-soul: when most married couples practiced unfaithfulness and bigamy... as they did in Rome for hundreds of years?

Most humans never realize their own horrible self-truths; they block them out of their awareness; as a result they become less aware. They bury them and never face them and never speak about them. Most humans never feel their own feelings. Most people never feel the emotional pain of sadness, and hopelessness, and anger, and rage, and terror, and inner agony. Most humans never experience the horror of their own horrible truths. They are much too insulated, and numbed, and brutalized, and wrapped in too many layers of protective cultural lies, and myths, and beliefs, and religions, and rituals, and traditions, and customs, and mindsets, and normalities, and realities. Not to mention being insulated by fat cells and ingesting drugs. They are cocooned inside civilization; safe from any unpleasant or painful truths or feelings. Working people, once they retire... once they are no longer useful... die after their retirement, when the slow realization of their uselessness finally begins to seep into their awareness. Only retired working people, who find some kind of usefulness keep on living... never mind love, or being loved, or giving love. That has been extinguished ages ago by making work more important than love most of your adult life. Merely a substitute for working. Which means they go back working at something else. Or spend more time with their families.

Working class people today are only modern affluent society's amalgamation of the swaddling roman babies of the diapered masses of the Roman Populi who did no work, were kept as ignorant, and as spoiled as possible, and were used and manipulated by the land owners.... and the Roman slaves who worked all of their lives for their masters and once they were useless, they were either killed, or sold. Modern workers are a mixture of these two extinct ancient Roman classes.

The peasants of medieval Europe were treated in the same way. All cultures throughout civilized history treated their lower classes this way. Today: the abysmal mis-education of Americans is a good example. The spoiling of children in America is normal. They are given whatever they want. Now: Modern dress has again descended into a three-year-old stage in America. People are wearing pants that are almost falling off their legs. Modern fashion has come to the stage of loose-fitting, sloppy, ugly, ill-fitting clothes. America is fast developing a bum-culture... literally showing-off their bums and navels in public... showing their navels and buttocks in public: just as three year-olds do... completely unconscious of how ridiculous they look. And as the waist lines of fashion fall down ever lower... you will get the next stage of diapered swaddling that the Roman masses dressed-in for centuries.

Regardless of their earning power, or class: Americans generally dress the same. You cannot tell a millionaire from a MacDonald's employee, or a homeless vagrant; except by how dirty their clothes are. The way many affluent people dress is shabby, mediocre, dull, unimaginative and sloppy. They are protected by the media from all unpleasantness. Their politicians lie to them and manipulate them just as successfully as the Roman Elite did for hundreds of years to their Populi. The tastes and proclivities of the American Populi are pandered-to... just as assiduously by the rich; as when the Romans masses were pandered-to and given free bread and circuses. Only today, it is free television, and 99 cent hamburgers. Instead of a complete welfare state: they are put to work in comfy offices as paper-pushers, or given mindless jobs that any monkey could do.

They are fed a host of addictive numbing processed foods and drugs to deaden their pre-natal pain... and are fast becoming just as mindless and stupid and led, and conforming as the Roman Populi was... and just as fat, and lazy, and just as spoiled. The Roman Populi were obese to an incredible degree. Most of them never worked a day in their life. Most of them considered themselves to be the epitome of Roman culture and were all proud of their heritage, and their sacred Republic; which none of them were ever willing to admit had become a military dictatorship. They were the Roman rednecks of their day. The same is happening to America today. History is repeating itself again. Does anyone in modern times recognize this or understand it? A few... and only slightly.

But... why is civilized history nothing more than 12,000 years of cover-ups, wrappings, insulations and deflections from the truth?

Because civilized culture is based upon rape. Civilized culture rapes. It rapes everything. It rapes the Earth it lives on. It rapes all people, all Nations, all resources. It rapes itself. It rapes the children who are born into it. We have no choice but to wrap ourselves and insulate ourselves from this rape... and in that process: by that process... because of that process: we become numbed, normalized, and dehumanized... adapting to our tool-cultures, becoming better tools, becoming less human... while also living in denial, brainwashed, ignorant, unaware, numbed... defending ourselves in a thousand destructive ways, deflecting painful truths a thousand different ways.

Look at how babies are clothed. The European custom for thousands of years was an open cloth that was wrapped around their shoulders, and left loosely open around their bodies. You might think that this would be so their diapers could be changed more easily. But that is pure bullshit. Undergarments were not invented until only recently. Babies were swaddled by a shoulder-head wrap of cloth that blossomed openly and widely around their bodies because it was the perfect way to rape a baby or child at night without anyone hearing a thing except muffled squalls of horror and agony.

The usual excuse to get up at night to tend to a weeping scared baby who had been put away from its parents for the night in the dark all alone, was supposedly to comfort them, so they would stop making noise. Babies were... and still are: kept in cages, and cribs, and separate rooms so they can become frightened and lonely at night in the dark... when they need love the most, and cuddling, and protection the most. This filthy inhuman practice of keeping babies ostracized from their parents at night because their parents are sick and tired of them, and want some peace and quiet is another filthy cultural lie that should be completely exposed and publicly denounced.

Any mother, or father who does not want to sleep with their own children: does not know what love is. They do not know how to love their own baby. Leaving a baby alone in a different room at night the ritual practice of infant torture upon their own children. Not sleeping with your children and babies sends a clear, unmistakable message every night to that innocent weeping, crying baby. It is telling them that not only are they worthless, and do not deserve to be loved, and have been bad. It brainwashes them into believing at a very deep level; that all touching, all kindness, all caring, all affection, all love, all human warmth is bad, evil, sick, and shameful... and to be derided, sneered at with contempt, and ignored and laughed at when they grow up to torture and brainwash their children in even worse, inventive, sickening ways.

The rituals of child and infant rape each night are being re-enacted every night in hundreds of millions of homes. Because civilized Europeans found a nice way to create the vicious cycle of child-rape thousands of years ago. By putting their infants and children away from them at night and swaddling their babies around their shoulders and leaving the cloth blossoming openly around the rest of their bodies.

So when the baby begins crying for mommy or daddy to come for it. When it begs weepingly to be loved and held and cuddled, and not cast away and punished by being ostracized and isolated and alone at night. The supposedly loving daddy or mommy simply flips the loose cloth over the baby's arms, head, mouth, eyes... and rapes the child or infant.

The child is instantly made helpless. Unable to use its hands or arms to protect its genitals or defend against being violated. The child is instantly blindfolded also, so it cannot see the rapist. The child's muffled screams sound only more shriekingly horrible... but not as clear. Muffled. So any other person in the house can easily assume the child is being punished only mildly for the sin of disturbing their parents sleep time.

Then it becomes a sick, normalized cycle. The only kind of love the child or infant gets is being raped at night. It starts to yearn for even this tiny show of attention: even as its entire innocent, clean human psyche is being shredded and tortured, and filthied beyond recognition in secret by the person it loves the most. Even though its soul is being systematically killed each night, until the child or infant's soul dies. And it no longer laughs or smiles, or plays. But merely goes around like a robot. A dead soul with a physical body that has too much growth hormones and energy to die also.

Look at the Greek, and English, and European fashions of young ladies and girls for hundreds of years. They have repeated the virginal bodice for hundreds of years. With its dress open from the below the breasts: why? So the girl can be raped easily. They are mostly copies of the baby-rape outfits they had when they were in their cribs and beds when they were younger. A loose, open garment flowing openly from the just beneath the bosom. So any man or rapist can easily pull their clothes over their heads, make them instantly helpless: and rape them without too much fuss at all.

Look at the garments worn by European peasant women old and young alike for thousands of years. Loose sacks of cloth hanging from their shoulders and arms. With no undergarments whatsoever. Later, these rape-uniforms developed symbolic insulations to make the rape slightly more difficult... and more sexily tantalizing for the raping male by adding more layers called: petticoats: to the female rape uniform. Look at the costume of a female Ballerina...with the barest fluff standing stiffly out from the hips... a stylized invitation to rape, leaving her sex completely exposed. While she holds her legs obscenely apart as wide as possible for long periods of time... striving to show no pain or inconvenience... as she postures her perfect limbs in total silence... as she is visually raped by all the old senile men in the audience.

Look at the clothes of men. Wrapped around their limbs. Supposedly to give them more freedom of movement. Their hips and genitals wrapped, buttoned, buckled, belted against rape. Only recently have women and girls ever worn pants that make it difficult for a man to rape a girl. The only cultures that ever had girls wearing pants are the Amazon tribes of the Steppe in Asia. Even the Mongol nomads kept their females openly robed, and forbidden to ride horses. Because that might be an excuse to wear pants, and infringe upon the male privileges of power, wealth, self-esteem, independence, etc. It might make it more difficult to rape them.

Why do you think all the legends and fables and myths and child's fairytales have evil, nasty boogiemens coming to attack children at night if they have not been good enough? Because they were taught to be good and never cry or make a sound when they were being raped at night. Because they were openly abused and cursed and hit and beaten during the day. Until they became convinced they were bad. This gave parents a perfect excuse to force them to sleep in a separate room alone as a punishment for being bad. And feeling that they deserved being punished and raped at night. Only the filthy rich could afford such extra rooms for their children. Why do you think the richer they were, the farther away they put their babies and children? Because they couldn't stand them.

Why do you think all human cultures have monsters that look horribly ugly... yet are leering, and smiling, and have definite humanoid faces? Because infants and children who were raped at night never actually saw the face of the person who raped them. They used their imagination to create masks of ugly leering monsters, and tales of evil monsters lurking in the night.

And gave them an ugliness... that you can see everywhere... in the ugly, distorted, ruined faces of old people... As people get older; they die slowly: becoming uglier, and uglier... until they become almost perfect replicas of the gargoyle monster-masks their own culture created. They become creatures of their own culture. There is a reason for everything if you look at the truth without the filtered blindness of your own normality and assumptions.

The culture of baby-rape was so prevalent in Europe: that for one thousand years: not only babies... but every human... every man, woman, and child: went to sleep in a ritual baby-rape night clothes called night gowns. With huge grotesque caps hanging from their heads. Marking them as fools. Wearing fools caps every night. So they could fool themselves by clothing themselves first, and even for God's sake: putting huge caps on their bloody heads... which they never wore in the day... that they were not going to get up in the middle of the night and go rape their own children.

Why do you think the Capitalistic rape of the whole Earth today came from Europe? Because Europeans were and still are: the worst human rapists ever born. European cultures were born out of rape. Europeans practiced raping in more ways, they raped more things on more levels in more ways.... More cunningly and sneakily and craftily: than any other human culture on Earth. Western Civilization is still raping the entire Earth and the entire Human race as this book is being written. The scale of ecological rape and genocide rape and cultural rape, and every other kind of rape has accumulated and speeded up to the point where 33% of the world's non-renewable resources have been destroyed in a short 35 years. Do you think the actual truth behind the cultural significance of Europeans wearing sleeping gowns to bed for one thousand years is not important? Do you think understanding the effect of civilization on humans is not important?

Is there any sane reason for adults who fucked each other every night; to wear these kinds of garments going to bed? Why didn't they go to sleep without clothes? Sex would have been much easier. Even today: there is the custom of wearing clothes to sleep-in. Covering yourself up is a sign of having something to hide. Covering up the truth about one thousand years of European history has given us modern consumer Capitalist Civilization. But Kings once wore these kinds of garments to bed. And the masses have aped this now for thousands of years.

Where do you think the word: ancestor comes from? From the word: incest. From ancient, incestuous ancestors raping their children. Why do you think Europeans fled their own families, and hated their own mothers and fathers so much: that they willingly went out into strange lands to colonize the Earth with their poisoned seed rather than remain home and be continue to raped? Why do you think the entire population of Europe descended into insanity and gibbering horror during the Dark Ages? Why do you think Europeans fled that evil so instinctively: that they were only functioning on the reptile level of their brains? Because the inbreeding of families raping their own children spawned such human idiots and deformed sick progeny: that every village had a flock of insane, drooling, genetically damaged, emotionally traumatized, mentally traumatized, physically abused, genetically inbred fools. Europeans were trying to escape their own inbred systems of child-rape and self-extinction. They were trying to escape the subconscious horror of being raped as babies. And they imported this horror everywhere they went. They infected every place they fled to. Until the modern Western way of raising babies and children, has become so sick and so insane: there are no words for it.

All humans need a larger context to be useful in. All things in the Universe have a larger context to be useful in. Civilization has stolen that usefulness from humans... we have stolen it from ourselves.

Every culture, every civilization, every religion, have things they believe-in so deeply: that they are proud of it, and display it openly to the world as something that was normal for them.

Every other culture, civilization, religion, etc. looks at others and goes:

‘What? Are they nuts or what? Weird! Ugh... they’re strange... they’re not normal... My culture is good, my religion is normal, my civilization is good. Theirs is abnormal, aberrant, strange, sick, bad, evil.

Every culture, every hierarchy, every current corruption in the world convicts themselves by their own words, their own actions, their own intent. Because what they practice in public, is believed-in so fervently and proudly...that they actually think it is good.

The normality of every culture, every civilization and every religion is intrinsically evil. Only when you step outside of all these normalities, can you see in perspective how even evil this normality is. The only normality that is not evil is the normality of Pure Wonder. But Pure Wonder is the complete opposite of Normality, so it cannot be a Normality.

Take your own normalities. Compare them to other normalities, evaluate them. Look at them in a relative perspective. Look at them with a Sense of Pure Wonder... and you will find that none of them make any logical sense. That they are all just as irrational and evil as the customs and traditions of other civilizations, cultures and religions that make no sense to you.

Only when you can find something that makes sense universally. Only if you can find something in your civilization, culture or religion that is agreed upon by all other people, all other cultures, and civilizations and religions will you ever find anything that makes true sense.

What would happen if every culture, every religion, every civilization threw out everything that did not make universal sense to all the other religions, cultures, and civilizations?

They would disappear. Because there is almost nothing in them that is truly universal. There is almost nothing in them that makes any common sense, or any universal sense. There is almost nothing they agree on. The only reason they exist at all, is to be different from each other. If they were not exclusively different from each other: there would be no reason to join them. Then there would be no reason for them to fight against each other.

Why is that? Because every culture, every religion, every civilization is a Crutch. They are all identity crutches. They are abstract identities that are forced upon you from the fact that you are born into them. By simply not accepting them. By simply questioning all of them with a sense of Pure Wonder; you will find that you do not need any of them at all. That all of them are nothing but pure meaningless, mental abstractions. That all of them exist in the imagination of humans, and nowhere else. That you can actually live happily, and freely without them.

If you throw out every symbol, every icon, every abstract idea, and belief, and assumption, and negative normality you were ever brainwashed into believing, and using. If you throw away everything you are accustomed to. If you throw out every habit you ever developed. You will be left with nothing but your actual self, your actual identity, your actual potential, your actual personality, your actual sanity, and your actual humanity... you will be left with nothing but a Sense of Pure Wonder. And a huge useless load of emotional, and mental baggage and tools, and symbols. And also a huge pile of useless dead tools and possessions. The question is what do you want to own? What do you want to own up to? What do you want to throw away as useless? Do you want to throw away everything that makes universal sense and hold onto all the senseless abstract baggage that makes you feel better than others? Do you want to hold onto things you are used to? Do you want to cling to what makes you feel safe? Do you want to be included in a special exclusive tribe, or culture, or Nation, or religion? Do you want to be fed and handed an abstract identity by having them wash all your actual personality and humanity out of you, and replacing it with a mass-produced identical identity so you conform to all the same beliefs and practices as those in your group?

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

Or do you want to go outside of yourself. Outside your own normality. Outside your own culture. Outside your own Nation. Outside your own identity. And expand your awareness of what is around you and inside you.

If you develop your own actual, unique culture, your own actual unique religion, your own actual unique Nationality. You will find that you will develop your own actual, unique, Authority, and your own unique, actual Power, and your own unique, actual humanity. And you will become so powerful, and Authoritative, and Humane, and Sane... that you will be able to easily defeat and crush all other powers and authorities that get in your way. Nobody will dare get in your way unless they agree with you. Then you will find that you can use all of this newfound power and authority, and sanity, and humanity to cooperate with other powerful, sane, humans who have thrown away their abstract shit also. Whose beliefs and values are also based upon universal truths. Who also think for themselves, and do what they believe to be right and good.

If enough sane humans get together to cooperate with each other. Not only will their own abstract civilizations disappear. But they will crush civilization so fast, and so effectively. That every civilized human will find themselves following their examples. Once human civilization disappears: that will be the end of all evil. Is this a worthy enough moral ethic to live by? Is this an idea worth pursuing? Is it an idea worth exploring? Is it a goal worth achieving?

Or would you rather remain civilized as a '-----'.... And despise anyone else who does not happen to be a '-----'.

You cannot understand anyone from a different culture unless you have subconsciously absorbed all of its unspoken taboos and norms without ever daring to question all of what is never spoken. You cannot understand anyone from a different culture, unless you have been ritualized by that culture into acting and behaving like everyone else in that culture. Each culture is an accumulated legacy of rituals transformed into normalities. Unless you have been born into a culture, and lived it: you cannot understand it. The idiocy and stupidity of all history books and all historians and all teachers of different cultures: is that they try to understand the meanings and rituals of other cultures through their own without living in them and becoming one of them.

Every human culture is ritualized. Everything a civilized, cultured human says, and why they say it. Everything they do and why they do it: is a hidden and distorted, and twisted maze of ritual. Everything they say and why they say it, and what they do and why they do it; is not what they actually say and why they actually say it... and not what they actually do and why they actually do it.

All human culture distorts the actual meaning and truth of everything you say and do, and why you say and do it. It distorts the actual truth of everything you feel and why you feel it. Human Culture translates and reflects all truth, and reverses them into lies. Human Culture translates and reflects all lies: and reverses them into false truths. On all levels of awareness. Sneakily, subconsciously, consciously, legally, illegally, instinctively, normally, abnormally, personally, publicly, rationally, irrationally, abstractively, concretely, symbolically, actively, passively, etc.

When you are born into a culture: you learn how to translate all actual truths and actual meanings into a specific set of cultural norms-perspectives. Through all the sneaky, cunning, devious, subconscious-unconscious-conscious specific rituals of your culture, and take them for granted as actual, as actually true, and believe in them, and assume them.

The result is haters convinced that they are lovers. Killers convinced that they are life-givers. Liars convinced that they are seers and truth-sayers. Oppressors convinced that they are humanitarians. Moreover.... The other result is: lovers convinced that they are haters. Life-givers convinced that they are killers. Truth sayers convinced that they are liars. Humanitarians convinced that they are oppressors. Evil people convinced that they are good. Good people convinced that they are evil.

Human culture by its blind abstractive reflectivity is a blind reversal and a blind projection of everything around it and everything inside it. Selectively and cunningly turning every actual truth into an abstract lie.

Try translating the written and documented history of the original 13 American Colonies. You cannot do it. It is impossible. What they said they did and felt and thought; was a total opposite of what they actually did felt and thought.

Why?

Because the legacy of their rituals was so abstracted: the meaning of every word they wrote and spoke: was already a complete opposite of its publicly defined meaning. Their entire language was a ritualized hypocrisy of lies and complete opposites. Every action was a hypocritical opposite of what it was supposed to do, and signify. Take any or all of their personal letters and correspondence and if you dig deep enough you will find the truth was the opposite of what they wrote. The idea! That anything written in the past is not a pack of lies: that any written personal documents are not killed with falsity, that anything written down is the sacred 100% unquestioned truth, just because there is no other remaining evidence to prove otherwise is the totally wrong way in which to study History. Rather, if you believe nothing which was written, and assume everything ever written is a fucking lie: only then will you begin to uncover the buried truth of ages long past.

Icons and Tokens

What is an Icon? It is an abstract symbol that represents something actual; by being reflected back into an abstract, two-dimensional medium. What is a token? It is a physical icon: representing a reflected abstract value or idea: be it a monetary value, or a cultural value, or a religious idea, or a mathematical idea.

They also represent abstract accumulations of an abstract idea or value. An abstract icon depicting Jesus can represent 2,000 years of accumulated religious dogma.

What are Icons on a computer screen? They represent large masses of accumulated abstract information. What is a religious icon? It represents a huge religious institution with a huge mass of accumulated abstract power, accumulated abstract traditions, a huge mass of accumulated abstract dogma, a huge mass of accumulated abstract customs, a huge mass of accumulated abstract culture, etc.

Where do you use subway tokens? Inside a huge mass transit system. What is a symbol like a rose supposed to be a token of? A huge accumulation of abstract affection for one worshipped, revered person.

How have Icons, and Tokens been used destructively by humans? How has abstraction been used as a deflection from the actual truth? How has it been used to avoid actually living? How have Icons been used in order to avoid thinking? How have they been used to avoid feeling? 10,000 books could not begin to uncover the untold secret ways humans have used abstract symbols, icons, and tokens, and totems, and words, and writing, and thinking; in order avoid the truth to hide from their own sickness and their own evil.

Do not bother with the actual issues or the actual morals, or the actual questions, or the actual facts, or the actual truth. Just worship your flag. Just worship the icon of your country. Just worship the icon of your religion. Just worship the icons of your culture... It's much easier to live this way worshipping an abstract symbol that's supposed to represent something;. It's much simpler... This way you don't have to do any thinking about what you are actually worshipping. Other people do your thinking for you. You don't have to have any responsibility. Other people take responsibility for you. All you have to do is to conform, submit, obey, fear, and secretly either adore or envy or worship or hate those above you.

Look at how the English language is used and structured. How do you explain why you do anything? How do you explain why you do anything? You do something.... In order to... do something else. The English language explains things only by orders. If you are ordered to do something: why then it must be right. The English language explains things in single, linear, ordered lines. One order at a time. It is impossible to express more than one order at a time, more than one ordered thought at a time in the English language. The English language is ordered like an army. With its icons at the top. Icons have become the semantic general of semantic armies. Destroying all actual individual truths, and actual individual creativeness in their path.

The fact that Icons steal your own power from you, your own self-respect, your own self-autonomy, your own freedom, your own money, your own time, your own life, your own liberty, your own equality, your own society, is not important. As long as they make your life is easier and simpler: who cares about silly little details like that?

Humans live by icons, totems, tokens, symbols, abstractions, representations. Because they represent empty myths, they represent nothing, they represent one-sided accumulations of total empty lies. Humans avoid and hate actual things . We love derivatives and abstract representations. We love dead things and fear death and are terrified of dying. We cannot stand living things and avoid Living and Life..

Look at how the verb: 'to owe' evolved into the verb: 'to own' How the concepts of personal responsibility, and personal debt evolved Negatively into the concepts of personal possession, and personal rights of ownership. Every abstract aspect of civilization, every symbol, every abstract idea, every abstract assumption every icon, every token, has a hidden history. Why is that history so hidden? Because the entire history of civilization is a destructive history detailing the hidden lies of human egos... how civilized humans violate their own morality, their own ethics, their own beliefs. So in order to hide these unpleasant truths from themselves, people lie about everything. All these icons and tokens and worshipped sanctified symbols, concepts, legends and myths and ideas are cultural lies and deflections. Study any legend, any myth: and you will find out that the truth is the exact opposite of what the myth or legend claims to be true. Human culture is just a way to get people from thinking for themselves.

The entire lie, the icon, the token of American bravery in battle is the biggest bunch of shit ever invented. No American is ready to die for their country. Patton said it best. 'War is not you dying for your country: it's making the other sonofabitch die for his country.' He loaded his army with more guns and armor and machines and artillery, and had them run their asses so ragged, they were happy to stop slogging and start shooting. His entire slew of victories came from the same advantage the German blitzkrieg had: mechanical shock and superior firepower: more guns, more firepower, a better mechanical advantage: nothing else: not courage.. It was the Germans rolled up the Americans every time they met them not the other way around. The Americans folded and died. The Americans only won because of their numerical and mechanical superiority and their air force. Their machines won the war for them. There is not one fight the Americans ever won against the Germans when they were evenly matched in all respects.

American air power saved them from losing. Long range bombing saved them. They took what the Germans did and did it back to them ten times worse, at altitudes so high: the German anti-aircraft guns couldn't even reach the better-made bombers. Americans learned the value of long-range insularity... just like the first absentee owners who sent them thousands of miles away to work for them, and kill for them as colonial servants and bonded slaves.

American history is one long story of the using advantage of distance to insulate themselves from their own crimes. They learned how to surround German outposts at long range, call in their planes to blast them apart, surround the dug-in German forces with artillery: and level them safely from a distance with more long-distance shelling. They learned to shell the Germans into such a numbed shock-state so they could not even walk or think... much less fight. Then the Americans marched in with overwhelming mechanical force: acting bravely... as if they had fought and defeated them in hand-to-hand. When if they had tried that: they would have been butchered so fast the entire army would have panicked and fled back to England.

In WWII: American Generals learned how to buffer themselves with so many safety layers of troops and weapons: that they never had to even visit the front. They had improved upon Hitler's grandiose mega-maniacal long-range plans where he never visited his armies either: but stayed safely in Berlin, and let the German Nation fight and die for him. The Allies did the same thing... only they did it better. They did not win because they were in the right, or a better army, but simply because they outnumbered Germany and had more factories and more resources to rape and more factories spewing out weapons of mass destruction.

The Russians learned the same long-distance tactic of command posts held thousands of miles away from the actual fighting. It became a battle of the best armor, the most accurate guns, the best armor-piercing shells, the best tanks, the best planes, the best artillery, bigger guns, more guns, more machines, more massive shock, bigger mass-killings, bigger mass-murdering, more mass-insanity. Until armies on all sides became insane robots...walking sticks... walking killers. The men became walking death machines. Numbed by the overload of so much death and so much killing, and so much horror... they ceased being human at all... and just reacted by trained reflexes like puppets. Never ready for their own death. Dying in worse and worse numbed, shock. Blown apart before they even knew they were dead. That is not bravery. That is the brainwashed stupidity of suicidal. Not even knowing why you are killing someone, or even why you are dying... except for an icon... an idea, a leader, a culture, an accumulation of reflected abstractions.

Why was the 2nd World War so bloody and insane? Because all the leaders who fought it; were the lowest, dirtiest cowards and human emotional-physical cripples ever to become leaders of their respective nations. They were the weakest-fattest, most diseased leaders ever to gain power and wield it. By conning half the world into fighting and killing for them and their class: the class of world bankers

America took the icons and tokens, and symbols, of 17th Century Europe. It took the token ideas of 12,000 year of civilization. And deflected them away more cunningly from the actual truth than any previous culture. America has taken tokenism to the new height of caricatured grotesqueness of commercial cartoons. It has taken one of the few ways the lower class could expose the truth about the upper classes: political cartoons; and turned it into meaningless drivel.

It has laughed at its own sacred tokens by glorification, deflection and re-reflection. It has used laughter as a deflection from actual unpleasant truth. And made laughter more important than truth. It has glorified ease over difficulty.

America took tokenism to new height of pure fantasy and escapism. Hollywood, and then Disney made people sit down and stop living. First it was mass produced books, then it was dime novels, then it was the nickelodeon, then it was silent movies, then it was talking movies, then it was speaking movies, then it was movies in color: then came B&W TV, then came color TV. Instead of living and interacting with members of their own family: Americans started sitting at home and watching other people live on TV. They became spectators: addicted to watching things. They started watching cartoons. Anything that was not instantly funny or entertaining; was not worth watching or paying attention to.

Americans do not mind laughing at themselves. But they cannot stand any social commentary on their own faults and corruption if it is too direct, too honest, too uncomfortably true. And they cannot stand for the Myths of their National Identity to be jeered at; too directly and too honestly. The sacred, sanctimonious Myth of America being 'The Land of the Free and the Home of the Brave'; is still worshipped religiously by the masses. America has become a Nation of such arrant social cowards; that its own mass media censors itself. Politically correct double-speak is now used to avoid all unpleasant truths. Their consumers are pampered and kept as brain-dead and as ignorant as possible.

When Bill Mahr's show: 'Politically Incorrect' after becoming a cable TV success, was shown on National TV for the masses: everything was fine. That is... until he made one, small, tiny, politically incorrect joke... amidst thousands of other politically incorrect jokes. He openly sneered at Americans being 'brave' dropping bombs safely from 35,000 feet to kill innocent Afghani women and children. By American fighter pilots; supposedly fighting unknown, unseen, anonymous international terrorists; bravely bombing unknown, unseen people to death.

Suddenly...outraged families who had sons and daughters involved in the War; lit up the phone lines. Every reactionary republican and arrogant redneck began screaming how insulted they were at this besmirching of American bravery. His show was quickly cancelled.

Why? Because he dared to speak an unpleasant unvarnished truth which was so obviously true, it could not be denied. Because as far as American families are concerned. Anyone who willingly goes into the armed forces is by definition supposed to be brave. Everyone of who signs up on the dotted line is supposed to be taking a risk of being killed in action automatically becomes 'brave'. What a load of self-serving nationalist shit that is.. Everyone signing on the dotted line is supposed to be willing to defend their country to the death. Every signed enlistment is supposed to be a public declaration and proof of personal self-sacrifice and personal bravery. Bullshit.

The fact that these moral assumptions are pure bullshit is not relevant. The fact that only the most naïve suckers ... the most brainwashed idiot-idealists are ever stupid enough to sign up for armed service in the first place: is not relevant. The fact that the American armed services only keep their rosters half-filled by preying on the youngest, poorest, high school dropouts is not relevant. The fact that only the youngest, poorest, most desperate unemployed high school dropouts are ever stupid enough to swallow the bullshit sales-pitch of the recruiters is not relevant. The fact that even then, the recruiters can only get these ignorant youngsters to sign up by lying to them, and promising them that they will never see action. That they will all have comfy well-paid easy cush-jobs; safely behind any line of fire, and even get to choose their own position and job specialty is not relevant.

The important thing is; that anyone who signs up for the American Armed Forces... instantly becomes a National icon, a cultural icon and a token symbol... of bravery for other Americans sitting on their couches watching TV. Just as a son becoming a Catholic Priest instantly gains status for all his family by becoming an icon of religious piety, purity and spirituality. So too does a son becoming a soldier; gain status for all his family merely by the power- connection of the acquaintanceship. This means that they do not have to fight. They do not have to die. Their family token. The family scapegoat. The family sucker. Is sacrificed. The entire family profits from it by whitewashing themselves of all responsibility, all guilt, all shame. This way family pride, national pride, and status, and national arrogance, personal arrogance, national military might, egoism, war-culture, the pride in being able to kill, is enhanced by a false token of bravery which is so hypocritical yet so sacrosanct that Americans cannot afford to laugh at it in public. They can laugh about it in private but not in public.

This way the foreign policies of the rich elite can use lower class idiots to do their dirty work for them. This way: Americans can be assured the exclusive luxury of having the cheapest oil prices in the world. This way: American consumers can buy huge gas-guzzling SUV's with smug impunity while the rest of the world has to scrimp and save to afford a motor scooter.

How dare Mahr say that American Air Force bomber squads are cowards; when Americans have been fed a diet of John Wayne Westerns and every other mythical lies about American Bravery on TV and Movies... about how brave their forefathers were to fight for Democracy? If you join the American Armed Forces... you are automatically swearing to defend Democracy... aren't you? The fact that Mahr was completely accurate in his comment. The fact that he refused to apologize for his remark; made it even worse. Americans cannot and will not admit that they are a Nation of arrant cowards. The National Mystique of America is based upon the false myths of courage. Just as the Roman Myths were. But when push came to shove: the masses of Rome caved every time. Their bravery rested in their armies. Not in themselves. It rested in numbed insane raping killers and a military killer-rape culture that relied upon superior force, superior cunning, superior violence and superior dehumanization.

America's bombing campaign in destroying Afghanistan: one of the poorest Nation's in the world. Destroying its barely existent infrastructure, and reducing it down to a state of poverty, hate, fear, and brutalized insanity... where babies and children no longer flinched when mortars and bombs went off almost killing them... because they had gotten used to it. Was supposed to push out a corrupt government of fanatical Moslems... without one single American ever being physically harmed. And the direct result? Afghani Robber Baron War Lords under American control: have industrialized the drug industry of growing poppies and manufacturing cocaine and opium. Which the Taliban had been fighting against and destroying. Just like they industrialized the manufacturing and sale of military weapons and the global sale of them and turned it into the American industrial military-industrial complex: a mechanical monster of death which has been steadily growing in power and evil and corruption. Now, due to the American bombing and military presence in Afghanistan: drugs are being grown and sold and processed in the Golden Triangle ten times more efficiently for American drug addicts to consume.

The military plan to attack Afghanistan... this tactic was so blatantly a strategy of pure cowardice: that no American Media dared criticize it openly. Because if it was openly criticized: then the entire validity of the bullshit War on Terror would have sparked mass movements of anger and outrage... just as the Vietnam War had done. The Republican warmongers and Neo-Nazi, Neo-Cons saw their chance of creating a new Rome... a new German 1,000 year reign of Terror and Warfare, as Rome had done before... That was why Bush Sr. instigated the first Gulf War. He wanted Americans to regain their National Military dominance and military pride and military culture. He revolutionized war-coverage into a tightly censored Media cult so tightly controlled that everything the American public saw was and still is pure one-sided propaganda. This form of one-sided coverage has since expanded so that the American Media's censorship in peacetime censors all liberal issues and viewpoints out of the airwaves. He let the American Public have their first bloodless TV war. Now America has its factless news media. No facts. No truth. No information. Pure hype and distraction and sensationalism. He brainwashed America into believing in bloodless TV warfare. Where bad guys die unseen. Every American death was glorified to the hilt. Single deaths of one Marine; were blazed out on National Media. Each single one was honored for his bravery. Anyone who dies on your side is automatically brave. Even if they cry like blubbering babies as they die.. Anyone who dies on the other side is not a hero. Even if they die defiant and unafraid and courageously. Of course nobody is allowed to compare and evaluate the actual differences in how both sides die. Because the actual deaths, and how each person died: is whitewashed and censored.

With no film footage of the actual effect of bombs that were dropped on villages, and the dead children and families... already starving to death on the other side. So all the Afghanis were not brave: because they died as victims... not voluntarily. They were killed as inconvenient casualties of War ... and termed; 'collateral damage'. Making the mass murder and killing of innocent people in Warfare more excusable and acceptable; by simply inventing a better politically correct phrase denoting mass murder. And never showing the actual destruction and horror of the mass slaughter those long range bombs actually created.

The concise way Mahr used his words, were slightly too vivid and too truthful for Americans to laugh-at. The blatant cowardice of the richest Nation on Earth... safely bombing the poorest Nation on Earth into near total oblivion... from 35,000 feet in the air, was too obvious. Especially when just a few short years before; Reagan had demonized the USSR for doing the same thing .... and calling them 'The Evil Empire...' specifically because they were bombing and killing Afghani civilians from long range from the air. The Russian bombing and killing of Afghanis' was too recent. That America somehow was doing the same thing... only with worse cowardice... could not be touched with a ten-foot pole by the Media. The American Media did not dare speak of it, or compare it or evaluate it, or face it, or even admit it was happening.

Why was Afghanistan bombed by the U.S. from 35,000 feet up in the air? Because the Americans

Military was too big a coward to risk one American soldier's life in hand-to-hand combat on the ground for something they did not consider really that important.

Mahr's comment was so obviously a politically incorrect thing to say... that it should have been completely ignored. After all: laughing at meaningless things on TV for entertainment has nothing to do with truth, or lies. The trouble is: Mahr did not say it laughingly as a meaningless joke. He meant it.

So Mahr's show was sent back onto cable TV. Later: he tried to come back on National TV with a whitewashed, cleaned-up version that was self-censored, and so banal; its ratings plummeted. He was cancelled again because of viewer apathy. Turning his entire politically incorrect attitude into a meaningless issue: to be ignored and never spoken of. After all: if anyone is cancelled because of lack of viewers: their point of view must be a minority opinion. A meaningless fringe element that has no relevancy to the mainstream of American viewers. Either you become famous by giving American consumers what they want: or you disappear, because what you say they don't like, or are not interested in hearing. That is the litmus test of relevancy and truth in American media. The tyranny of the masses: public approval reigning supreme as the definer all ethics, all morals.

What does what happened to Bill Mahr demonstrate? The truth that Americans like being lied-to wittily, and being told jokes wittily. But to openly sneer at any mythical American bravery in battle on mass media? Nope. Only a short thirty years ago: the mighty America was defeated by one half of the tiny, poor Nation of Vietnam. And since then, has only picked upon the teeniest, tiniest, demonized imaginary evil regimes like Panama. Infiltrating tiny South American Nations with CIA operatives. Until, finally they had their plotted for and arranged to have another 'good war' in the Gulf that all the masses would approve of and support like WW2. Manufactured by Bush Sr. Who never finished the job, and let Hussein stay in Power; because he was too terrified of the fury and rage of the American public if too many American soldiers were killed in a war that was not really worth fighting for and dying for. Die for the freedom of non-Europeans? Never in your life. It is simply not done. But fight for American oil corporations, and American pride in flexing its technological military trillion-dollar military might? You betcha.

Bush Sr. had his token war which made him and his war profiteer cronies even more filthy rich than they were already, and his handful of token war casualties. But he knew the American public would not stand for an actual drag-down, all-out war necessary to topple Hussein. He had no moral right on his side. He knew the whole charade was a planned orchestrated false flag affair. There would be too much actual death and killing and horror on TV for the American public to see how horrible war actually is, and that would turn the entire nation against him. He himself was such a fucking coward... his Armed Forces were such arrant cowards... that even when they found out that Hussein's crack Republican troops were even worse cowards than they were...they did not finish the job. His cowardice: his irresponsibility, saddled Iraq with twenty years of oppression made worse by American sanctions that starved hundreds of thousands of Iraqi children to death while Hussein lived high off the hog from oil profits and kept building up his destroyed war machine. Bush irresponsibility saddled the world with an even worse coward and warmonger: his son George Bush Jr.. Who set out to finish the job his father refused to finish.

Afghanistan was only the stepping-stone to Bush Jr's. plan to attack Iraq again, and topple Hussein for once and for all. Did Americans refuse to support Bush's destruction of the Taliban by the insane, obsolete tactics of mass-bombing a-la World-War II? It worked in the 1st Gulf War. But it did not work in Vietnam. And it did not work in the 2nd Gulf War. They tried to kill Saddam by bombing him.

Instead they destroyed an entire fucking Nation trying to get one bad man.

A blustering pugnacious, arrant coward... The epitome of a blustering coward and bully; like Mussolini in his heyday... drew acclaim and admiration from Americans, by going on a grandstanding, speechifying, public offensive against an unseen, tiny bunch of fanatics. Exactly like Hitler. And declared them a worldwide threat, and declared a worldwide search for them.

He never found their leader. And they never could figure out which prisoners they caught were actually Moslem terrorists, or which Afghanis they killed were actually even fighting them. As long as Americans thought that someone feared them. As long as they could kill others because a few Americans were killed. Their ethic of hate and fear and cowardice was upheld by their military technological superiority.

As long as Americans have a pompous strutting President who is never wrong and never makes a mistake: they're happy. As long as their president is a god: they're happy. But let any American President admit to making a mistake: and they are hated and despised and never re-elected. The mass psychosis of gullible brainwashed sheep demanding that their leaders are perfect, that their leaders are superhuman Gods. That they would never elect a mere mortal to office is a part of the hypocrisy of politics. If a politician does not create a fake-lying mass image of themselves as perfect Gods: they are not elected. If they do create that image: then they are elected. And then criticized for putting up false promises and a false front after the sheep have become disillusioned with the temporary myth of their invincible superiority and infallibility. It is the masses who demand that their leaders are liars. They demand dishonesty from their leaders, And they get it. And then complain about it later.

The mass patriotic paranoia of fear created after 9:11 was a normal reaction of a pampered, brainwashed mass to any destruction of their icons and beliefs. And any attack upon their sins. Americans are supposed to be immune to attack, and never harmed or killed. No matter how many other millions of people they harm and kill through their governments corporate-sponsored policies. As long as their media and their government keeps Americans conveniently ignorant of the facts by turning news into garbage. That is all that matters. Nothing on TV matters. Nothing means anything. Unless your subconscious is prodded by an outright challenge to one of the biggest obscene lies of Americans being brave in battle.

The Biblical ethic of an eye-for-an-eye is still the standard moral human reaction to being attacked. The biblical truth of one sin not wiping out another sin is also true. That one wrong does not justify another wrong. That when one is wronged: it does not justify them to wrong somebody else... unless it is done directly and honestly, and done to the ones who are actually guilty. This truth was never brought up in the five National Media corporations that covered and discussed the planned invasion for months. They never discussed the fact that the people being bombed and attacked: were not the people who were guilty of planning the 9:11 attack. But hey; Since America is angry and can't find the actual culprits... then America went to war and started killing just for the hell of it: just to vent their anger and hate, even though it was against the wrong people.

A new politically correct term: 'Pre-emptive War' has been invented after Afghanistan's destruction. Giving America from now on... a standing politically correct excuse to go to war against any Nation on Earth: at any time... for any reason... without needing to consult its own congress, or its own senate, or its own people.

Mahr exposed the sick hypocrisy and cowardice of America too bluntly, and too unpleasantly, in his one single, 'all-joking-aside' snide remark. The entire Nation did nothing and said nothing, as his show was cancelled because of a few complaining hotheads. Why? Because the majority of Americans agreed with these hotheads. Only they did not have the guts to say so in public. The media itself chose to bow out of the entire affair and refused to defend his right to free speech... While at the same time, treacherously and double faced: it blew up his tiny faux pas into a National scandal. It was the Media itself that freely aired every republican righteous Jesus freak screaming for his head on National TV. The media did not like Mahr's cynical attitude towards them either. So they specifically targeted his show, and with the help of a few republican hotheads: had their token excuse to cancel it. Just as Bush had his token excuse to Bomb and destroy Afghanistan into oblivion.

There was one good reason the elite hated Mahr's show. Elite power structures of all kinds... hate each other just as much as the lower classes hate each other. Mahr was showing too many elites holding opposing opinions about too many relevant issues. His show was getting too close to an actual debate over serious issues. That was not good. He was showing elites arguing with each other. The elite is supposed to show a united front to the lower class. That is how they keep in power. They are not supposed to disagree with each other. It gives the masses a bad example. It gives the masses ideas. That is: except in scripted republican reactionary bullshit shows; that have reactionary right wings screaming and laughing against other right wing republicans... who are disguised as supposed liberals. One reason why it is so easy to tear down any elite power structure, is simply because they waste most of their time fighting against each other, and hating each other. Now Mahr is back on cable TV. Now he has a minority audience; not a majority one. Now he is safely out of circulation? He is more watched now than when he was on national TV.

What does his TV show prove? It shows that there is no such thing as Free Speech in America. It shows how censorship in America is so rigidly self-censored... how the power structure is so terrified of the slightest off-color remark. That a National Television show called 'Politically Incorrect'...can be cancelled for making a politically incorrect comment, you call this free speech?

The Smothers Brothers TV show was cancelled during the Vietnam War because it was politically incorrect also. The organic nature of America's self-censorship is deeply it is ingrained into the fabric of American Media and American culture. Did the Smothers Brothers ever recover from being black balled by the American Media? No. They remained smalltime comedians, and were never offered another National, primetime show-slot again, and disappeared from mainstream media into obscurity.

Americans do not like unpleasant honesty of any kind. They do not like their myths being torn down and laughed-at. Especially when they know perfectly well it is true. It shows how the tyranny of the masses, and the Roman Mob, and the tyranny of the Mussolini's and Hitler's and Caesar's of the world... has not changed one iota in two thousand years.

It shows how the public today is even more brainwashed and misled and corrupted by a corrupt elite; than during the worst excesses of Roman Tyranny... when the Roman mob tore people apart at the slightest hint of disrespect for the endless, insane, illogical Roman Myths, Legends, and Mythical assumptions of the sacredness and holiness of Rome's Republic. Anyone who dared call any Roman a coward was either torn apart by a mob, or quickly assassinated in private. Romans were supposed to have been honest, just, fair, cultured, wise and the bravest of the brave. Just as Americans are now supposed to be paragons of perfection and bravery. All cultural myths sell the same old lie of their people being better, superior, etc the smarter, braver...than other people; ad nauseum.

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

There is no such thing as bravery in battle. There are only insane killers killing other insane killers. And the most insane, the most brutalized, the ones with the best killing tools; winning. The millions who died in the 1st and 2nd World Wars; all died for only one basic political purpose: so the rich Robber Barons of the West could topple the new Germany from becoming an even greater Robber Baron National Power than they were collectively. They saw Germany as a threat to the old world-order of western hegemony. Period. It had nothing to do with freedom or democracy. The world was no freer after these two Horrific World Wars than before them. In fact the opposite was true. After each war, the world was gripped in an even tighter grip of Robber Barons controlling everything they could lay their hands on, stealing every thing they could lay their hands on, destroying everything they could lay their hands on, owning everything they could lay their hands on, corrupting everything they could lay their hands on....

Only after winning a war... they could do it legally. All aboveboard. In full view of the brainwashed masses. Without the slightest fear of ever being toppled again. Because they had brainwashed the entire world into their own sicker brand of Robber Baron legality. They had won. That gave them the legal authority to do whatever they wanted.

Now there are seven billion human suckers these legalized Robber Barons and Owners can fleece; in every legal, illegal, hidden, secret, corrupt, complex, snarled way possible... with endless hidden battles and deals of the rich robbers fighting amongst themselves behind closed doors in secret. While the masses let them do it, and slave and work for Robber Baron Nations, for Robber Baron corporations, for Robber Baron owned and controlled Media, or Robber Baron owners as individuals, etc.

Responsibility and Cooperation

Every person that lives in a larger society or community is directly responsible for the well-being of their community in direct proportion to the degree to which they benefit from that community. That is the unavoidable principle of balance that all individual and social responsibility is based on. And here is precisely where all social responsibility breaks down in any pyramidal structure such as civilization. Because the billionaire who benefits a million times more from his society than others, does not balance his social responsibility by returning that benefit a million times more than others in his society. Instead, they give a tiny fraction of their ill-gotten wealth as charity to others. Most millionaires do not give a single cent back. And this can never balance the social debt of responsibility they owe to their society. All because the masses have been brainwashed into believing in the legality of Robber Baron Greed, culture, selfishness and their endless code-words and icons and token... as the poor betray their own morality, and worship the lies called icons and symbols and tokens of the rich; that civilization has amassed for 12 thousand years.

In order to be even minimally socially responsible to the community you live in: you must give back at least as much as you take. That way, you will not be a negative influence, a drain on the society that raised you. But this is not a virtue: it is merely a necessary functioning principle required for human societies to remain at whatever level of humanity they now exist. Furthermore: in order for the quality of life in any community to actually improve: people need to give back more than they receive.

This principle is diametrically opposed to the billionaire that reaps profits from his society and returns only a fraction of it. All social responsibility boils down to giving: not profiting. You cannot profit from your society and be socially responsible at the same time. The only way people can take responsibility for their own lives is by helping each other. Because giving and responsibility are the same thing. To be truly responsible as a human means to be socially responsible as well. No human community can thrive, grow, change or be healthy, unless it is based upon the principles of sharing, cooperation, giving, love, trust, respect and responsibility. If people are not balanced in their personal and social responsibilities, if selfishness, greed, mistrust and hate are allowed to develop: then you have a poisonous social atmosphere that generates fear, hate and indifference.

Where in civilization is any responsibility taken on freely, of one's own free will? In any authoritarian regime: responsibility is a joke. In elected governments, there are high-paid lobbyists working day and night with the express purpose, of trying to pass legislation that will absolve their interest groups from some kind of legal responsibility. Any profit-based system is actually a criminal culture that rewards irresponsibility. It allows the criminally powerful and wealthy to escape responsibility. Laws are passed to protect the rich and oppress the poor. Prisons are filled with poor criminals, and empty of rich, or powerful criminals. The history of civilization is an endless perpetuation of narrow, destructive self-interests of powerful, wealthy elites.

The history of the huge majority of humans is ignored and untold: except as pawns and victims of this elite. And yet it is the greatest oppressors, the greatest butchers, killers, and thieves: who are held up to be worshipped and revered as leaders, Emperors, Popes, Robber Barons, Kings, Presidents, Billionaires, etc. The history of civilization is an open book that shows how power and wealth creates irresponsible criminals who violate the rights of others, and get away with it. Civilization is based upon the irresponsible wealthy and powerful enforcing responsibility upon the powerless and the poor. Consumer culture is based upon irresponsible consuming. Capitalism is based upon all kinds of irresponsible tenets and customs: but it all boils down to trying to get some kind of advantage over other people. Everyone is busy trying to get away with whatever they can without being caught: and everyone 'tut-tuts' about how things are getting worse and points at figure-heads, leaders, and expects something to be done by anyone except themselves. Has there ever been a politician who ever cared about anything more than their own re-election?

This is the sick joke of civilized society. Since literally everyone is socially irresponsible, there is literally nobody left to point the finger of blame except selectively... carefully avoiding any groups that have any influence or any power. Instead; there are selective scapegoats used as sacrifices so the rest of society can feel they actually solved a problem, or did something. When all we do is do ourselves is nothing, see?

These scapegoats are for the most part; the poorest most powerless in any society. As far as social responsibility goes, we always expect the other person to do it: not us. Who?... Me....? And the easy rationalizations follow.

'What can I do about it? I am powerless. I am alone. I am just one individual.'

And, if there is ever anyone who points that finger of blame unpleasantly, and honestly, without making any exceptions...without even excepting themselves. If anyone tries to even suggest that all people are responsible, that it is all our fault. Then they are cast out. Vilified behind their backs, cast aside, blackballed, ostracized, jailed, banished, killed, murdered, assassinated, crucified, and wiped out. So there is nobody left, to ever remind people of any unpleasant truths. So all the rest of us can escape our own responsibilities; and never be forced to deal with the fact that civilized humans are basically useless, destructive killers who have mostly no meaning to their own lives. That is what the selective use of power and authority does to civilized people. That is how it works and that is why it works.

Nowhere in all this, is personal responsibility taken on voluntarily. Unless there is cooperation. Unless there is true equality. Because only in a cooperating social system of true equals; do people ever actually realize that helping each other ,benefits each one much more than being selfish, or greedy, or powerful, or wealthy. Only in a cooperating social system of true equals; can you create a culture where love, respect, giving and kindness are a social norm. Equality fosters responsibility. Inequality fosters irresponsibility. Cooperation fosters responsibility. Hierarchies foster irresponsibility. Selfishness and self-gratification foster irresponsibility. Generousness and self-denial fosters responsibility.

As long as willing cooperation is not the prime-motivating ethic of human society; people will never be able to get along with each other. All of the crucial human problems and conflicts will remain unfaced, unresolved, undealt-with. Civilization does not allow cooperation to be developed. There are no cooperative social forums or structures left anymore; that allow people to freely aid each other. Instead, there is only the niggardly concept of charity and volunteering. This is practiced by a tiny fraction of the community during a tiny fraction of their free time. Because they must expend most of their energy competing and working, in order just to make a living. Simply the time and energy required for this guarantees that there can be no cooperation except as an incremental facet of society that can never address the huge social ills which cry out for cooperative efforts. The prime responsibility of any member of a community is to become a productive asset of that community. That means cooperating with others.

Yet, civilization only values people's productivity as tools: not as humans. Civilization turns social participation into a competitive antagonistic rat race that prevents people from helping each other. The more socially responsible a person is, the higher they put a premium on cooperation as a necessary part of their life. Because of the entire legacy, structure, and mindset of civilization; people are not interested in making sure others are as well off as they are. They are much too busy working, competing, trying to survive. They simply do not have the time or energy for such altruistic nonsense. Only if you change the most fundamental principles of how civilized societies work; can any alternate noncompetitive model hope to survive... much less succeed. That is why all utopian communities eventually fail: because they are fighting a cultural norm that is yet to be abolished or shown to be bankrupt in its root values. The inertia of 10,000 years of civilized history, the normalized realities of 6 billion people plus the handicap of our own unawareness must be first overcome before we can change how we live.

One root problem with civilization; is that it is based mostly upon people cooperating with each other almost exclusively through the over-intensive use of tools, and not on any intimate, personal level. Tool-using societies simply do not have the time, interest or energy to devote the years of intimacy which needs to be spent in order to develop trust, respect and love for each other on a human level. The wonder of civilization is how all of its machines and tools mesh together and cooperate with each other, while leaving its inhabitants no more humanly cooperative than they were 10,000 years ago. This is an inevitable result of over-intensive tool-use. All of the mechanical functions necessary to keep civilization properly maintained and running and growing continually increase in number and complexity: taking up more and more time, leaving humans less and less time for themselves.

If you separate all forms of human cooperative effort into these two broad categories of tool-based and human based cooperation: you find that it is grossly overbalanced in favor of tools. Working as a tool, making sure your car is running properly, your computer is running properly, your appliances, your house is properly maintained, the plumbing is not leaking, the paint is not peeling, the doors and windows not fitting improperly, etc... the cost of running governments and businesses is spent mostly maintaining their mechanical systems: the infrastructure of all modern industrialized nations is all tool-intensive, exorbitantly expensive, and time consuming. Even our free time is usually caught up in some sort of tool-use, or it is merely a reflex reaction against over-intensive tool-use into some form of escapism; be it a book, or movie, or a concert. The question is: after work and chores, and entertainment: how much time is left over for us to be simply human? By allowing tools to run our societies, by giving up our responsibilities to tools: we fall short of any human responsibility to ourselves and to those around us. Then there is the greater responsibility to all life, all living things... and beyond that: to the universe. Balanced responsibility means universal responsibility: with no blind spots, and no exceptions.

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

In all human dynamics and awareness, it is dynamic balance that counts. Self-love must be balanced by love for others. Self-respect must be balanced by respect for others. Self-trust must be balanced by trusting others. Here the human psyche displays the principle of dynamic balance naturally. You can only love others to the extent that you love yourself. You can only respect others to the degree that you respect yourself. You can only trust others to the degree you trust yourself. But the proper dynamic of any cooperative, loving community is not based upon people trying to balance each other's love for each other. That is because individuals are designed to love more than just one other individual. They should try to love all of the individuals in their own, loving community. This means that they must love others more than they love themselves. Otherwise, their positive love-energy will not move... be dynamic, grow, as all life energy grows... finding more and more ways to turn dead rocks, dead sunlight, dead air, dead things into living things. If you do not give more love than you receive, if all members of a community do not give more than they receive: then that community will stagnate, stay the same, not change or evolve. If people in a community give less than they receive, then that community will start dying, shriveling and shrinking until it disappears.

You cannot change one single aspect of this dynamic without changing all the other aspects. Every single aspect: from giving, to trust, to responsibility is inseparable from all the others. The damage all antagonistic forms of competition does to human trust, respect, responsibility and love cannot be measured: but this invisible, intangible social deterioration is one major reason human societies get worse, not better. Tool dynamics do not balance naturally. Creating a railroad system, or an atomic bomb; does not benefit all people equally. Not to mention how destructive they are to this living Earth. Tool dynamics create human social imbalance in all instances because tools are specialized and not integrated or dynamically balanced as living organisms are. The entire split between feeling and functioning, or work and emotion, is a crippling limitation that squeezes being human into such a tiny window of opportunity, of energy, time, and place; that the effect of dehumanization is inevitable.

Dynamic Social Balance

In civilization: the basic dynamic of accumulation, the need to control large numbers of people through every possible avenue, every possible kind of enforcement: be it cultural, religious, governmental, through peer-pressure, public shame, ostracism, conformity, normality, or the pressures of antagonistic competition, physical force, oppression... it all comes down to one basic factor. What determines how people live and what they do is fear: which is a negative emotion. That is the prime factor in all human motivation: whether it is the fear of poverty, the fear of powerlessness, the fear of starvation, the fear of strangers, the fear of the unknown, or the fear of death. All political decisions, corporate decisions, all military decisions, all power-based decisions are based upon fear, hate and greed. Now: if you reversed this dynamic, if the primary motivation of all humans, if what drives our actions were love-kindness-compassion, and fear was only a secondary factor: then you would have a completely different dynamic of how human societies work. Then it would be positive, not negative. But, in order to arrive at such a dynamic, you need a structure and system that is dynamically balanced rather than imbalanced. You need a system that is not based upon pyramidal accumulation. You need a system based upon voluntary cooperation, not the enforcement of involuntary coercion through power, physical force, violence and fear.

The closest example of social balance in human civilization is the concept of democracy and its attempt to balance only one kind of power (political). But this system leaves out all the other aspects of the human accumulation of knowledge-wealth-social standing. Democracy has merely succeeded in diluting the usual pyramidal process and dynamic of accumulation. This has only slightly hampered the dynamic of accumulation and reverse Pyramidity... Achieving the same basic result of excess power, excess wealth and excess fame at the top: through countless loopholes in this flawed system. If human society truly were to attempt to balance itself, it would need to balance all four of these basic aspects, not just one.

For example:

If the president of a firm wanted to hold more power than anybody else in his company, and found that in order to do so;

He would also have almost no access to information about his own company, (knowledge).

He had to live in a cold water flat and couldn't afford a car, (wealth).

He was sneered at by his own employees and neighbors, as a power-hungry idiot, (social standing).

Then naturally: he would not want to live like this.

You can apply this solution to any of the other four basic aspects of civilization; and the result will be the same. Then human society would balance itself. It would become balanced: naturally. Without people being forced or made to conform to any other artificial rules, laws, regulations, customs, traditions etc.. If humans designed a social system that truly balanced all four of these basic aspects properly: then the quality of human life would improve for all of us.

Not just for the lucky few: not just for the elite, not just the rich, not just the powerful, not just those of high-status, not just for those with privileged knowledge and information. Not just for those with more accumulated knowledge. Not just for those with special knowledge.

In order to truly balance civilization you would need to eradicate any and all processes-dynamics-systems-institutions that accumulate-perpetuate-preserve any form of imbalance. Then human society would balance itself naturally: not through oppressive enforcement of physical violence and power by governments. In short: if you want to live better... you need to invent-create an entirely different way for humans to live.

This dynamic can work easily. But only in small, selfless, ego-less, self-contained communities... or in a series of small, overlapping communities that all share the same, basic ethical and moral values. How do you regulate any society, and stabilize it? By having a single ethic. By having only one rule, one moral, one value. And that moral-ethic-value-concept-idea-truth is:
'Thou Shalt Give More Than You Receive.'

If this is done, then it becomes easy in a small isolated community to notice who are takers and who are givers. If any person in that community should be so foolish as to become greedy for anything... then that community should give it back to them... In Spades....

That is... if the community is wise enough to be selective about what they give... and how they give it. If a greedy person wants more furniture than they need, they give it to them.... But only furniture... and in order to balance their giving to that person, they take away all other giving to that person. They no longer give them their attention, or business, or love, or trust, or respect or esteem. They ostracize that person from their community completely... they stop all giving to that person except giving them furniture.

The entire community simply takes all of its furniture and stuffs their selfless giving down the throat of that greedy person: whether they want that extra furniture or not. Until the greedy furniture person's house is so packed solid from ceiling to floor with that furniture for weeks... until that greedy furniture person starts hating that furniture... and goes around the other houses pleading... begging for them: "Take back your furniture. Please take it back. I don't want it. I don't want to see another stick of furniture for as long as I live."

Then, that greedy furniture person will be forced to humiliate themselves in public... that person will be forced to destroy every scrap of self-esteem they ever had in public... walking around distraught, crazed, weeping openly.

Until the community collectively decides that this greedy person has learned their lesson... and agrees to take back their own furniture, which they had to do without for weeks... And in doing that... supposedly cruel, over-extreme punishment... they themselves are forced into the even greater hardship... of living with very little furniture. And getting used to it!! And liking the extra spaces they find they all like better than cluttered up houses with too much furniture. So when that repentant person starts giving back that furniture... they find that half of the stuff they had they no longer really want or need.

Then they will take it back grudgingly, complaining about it. As the-now utterly thankful otherwise good person is laughing and happy. Suddenly the tables are turned. And the community finds that being forced to take back too much; and taking back their once-loved furniture becomes an irritating inconvenience that none of them really like and so they find themselves resenting that former 'greedy furniture' person.

Then, they all begin to develop a guilty conscience about the harshness of their punishment, and start asking themselves if they overdid it... then... slowly... abjectly... one, by one: by their own decision, and their own accord the individuals of that community who took part in this communal 'punishing come secretly... to apologize to that former greedy 'furniture' person... and that person; who has by then been stripped so cleanly of their badness, finds themselves suddenly in the right... not the wrong. And does not know how to react to suddenly inhabiting this new moral high-ground...because they are convinced that they had been such a bad person, that they no longer knew right from wrong... in other words... they became too humble. They became so selfless and so non-judgmental; that they are mystified why all these people come to apologize to him or her...

Why should this be done? When he or she is now so happy and thankful for their return into their beloved communities good graces, that after thinking and pondering it for weeks and months; they find to their amazement ... that they are grateful. Grateful for the fact that they were punished? So you do not need a prison to punish a person? And you actually get them to admit their sin in public and actually be reformed?

So then... she or he has the wonderful opportunity to give all... all. The community back its own self-respect. And love... personally: through her acts of personal forgiveness. By personally forgiving and loving each one who comes later to her and apologizes for being too harsh with her. If you have ever experienced the happiness of 'make-up' sex after a lover's quarrel, you have no idea of the kind of happiness you can feel after making it up to an entire community that now loves you even more and lionizes you for enduring such a harsh penalty and coming through shining. Suddenly you are their beloved mascot, their heroine, and everyone takes an interest in you and notices you.

Suddenly you become the most important and powerful person in your community. In the parable of the prodigal son: who got more attention? The one who erred and repented publicly. Not the one who did not have the courage to make a mistake. The one who learned from their mistake, the one who changed: that is who got most of the attention, and praise. Until that former furniture person became the most loved and respected person in that community. And also the most loving, and giving and generous one of them all.

Does this story sound like a fairy-tale that is too good to be true? It comes from a real story of a Shaker community. In fact, that community found itself so happy to be rid of all their extra furniture... that they held a bonfire in her honor. A furniture bonfire. Burning all the extra furniture that they no longer needed or wanted... and invited her to the bonfire as a special loving surprise.

Do you know what she did...? She ripped into that entire community. And yelled at all of them to get those burning pieces of furniture out of that fire as quickly as possible. Screaming at them in rage. Telling them that they were not thinking at all. That there were many people who would love to have that furniture. And that the proper loving thing to do was to give their furniture away to more needy people. Who weren't as hardened to the hardships of a Shaker-community life and had no strong, selfless communal safe loving network of friends and relatives to live in.

This was the beginning of all Shaker furniture making. Originally: the pieces of Shaker furniture that are prized, and displayed in museums today, and valued at thousands of dollars were all given away.

For free.

Shaker furniture is more practical. It is simpler. Shaker furniture is easier to build. They almost revolutionized the entire furniture industry. But not quite. Why? Because even the Shakers became greedy and angry. Greedy people kept on coming back to them for 'free furniture'. That selfish greed for anything that is 'free' or 'freely given' forced the Shakers to start demanding money for their furniture. Because they could not distinguish between a person who was truly in need and one who was not. Until they raised the prices so high that only the wealthiest people could afford it. If that community had had wiser heralds... why heralds? The leaders of that community were all her sons; her lads... her heralds: acting as aldermen, and elders of the church. After she had been reinstated into the community, they went around town heralding her as the 'wisest smartest most generous leader of their community.' ... until that power went to her head... and she began using it in an unloving way. Even after most of the people who had punished her had secretly apologized to her... there was still a small part of her that resented the way she had been humiliated in public... why? Because nobody in that community had the courage, and honesty to apologize to her in public. None of them had enough courage to do that. So the eventual downfall of that secret Shaker Community was already fated.. It was sacrificed as a fatted calf in the annals of Shaker History as one sin every Shaker Community must avoid like the plague if they want to survive at all... secrecy. However... no Shaker Community... or any other civilized community for that matter, has ever managed to rid itself of that sin. And because of this failing, all civilized communities become mangy, run-down, dilapidated junk-heaps of secret cliques Much like the books of Edgar Allen Poe: who wrote of secret, unspoken travesties of hidden evils inside ancient buildings. Ancient buildings that hide, and keep old, sick, rotting energy alive. And dampen all of the silent, awed living spirits who dwell in them.

Shaker furniture brought a breath of fresh life into peoples houses. But.... It did not bring it a breath of fresh air into their spiritual lives. Instead it has been used to make people endlessly greedy for more and more hard-to-get pieces of ancient old original pieces of Shaker furniture. It has turned thousands of people into furniture addicts: spending thousands of dollars on this old stuff. Stuff that anyone with a few tools, could make brand new and better. So the spiritual lesson was unlearned. And from one woman learning a superficial lesson of the sin of collecting furniture. By not learning the sin of becoming addicted to money or power. This single Shaker Community has spread its original sin even farther and wider than it ever could have if they had simply left that old lady alone and let her stay miserable and lonely: collecting her useless furniture. Furniture that did not love her, and could not help her. That is what happens when you open up the Pandora's box of human Spiritual sin selectively. That is what happens when you try to teach and punish other people spiritually when you yourself, and all your community are just as sinful in other ways which none of you are willing to face.

What was missing in that Shaker community? Perspective. Wisdom. An understanding of the dynamics of human history and human communities. An understanding of the effect of civilization on humans. They lacked a proper systematic way to deal with any corruption: because they only recognized a few of their own corruptions to actually be corrupt to begin with. If that community had really had their wits about them when her sons started to go around town heralding her fame, they should have given that 'fame' to her... in spades. And taken all other forms of recognition and giving away from her. Because she had still not learned her lesson properly. They should have carried her around town on their shoulders and hailed her, and bowed down to her. They should have obeyed her tiniest whim. She would have become so arrogant and cruel, and corrupt; that the entire town would have hated her. That would have left her without a single supporter. They would have kicked her out of their community, and not let her back.

That would have made that community become even stronger as a cooperating network of families that had been taught a valuable painful lesson: never to allow anyone get too much of anything in their community... be it furniture, money, status... but mostly power. Power is a far more deadly and poisonous form of accumulation than furniture. And it would have taught that lady and her sons a painful lesson. They would have been kicked out as well and forced to begin their own community. And they would have made damn sure that nobody got too powerful in it.

However. If she had had any brains... the instant they started to hail her as famous or asked her advice... she should have been able to see what was in store for her if she got too full of herself. And if she had realized that, after her tirade at their bonfire... she would have found out that she did not know what the right thing was for the entire community. Then she would have had to go around town again. Only this time she could have done it at a community gathering, and publicly admitted her own failings... and let everyone criticize her... as long as it was done. Not lovingly, Not greedily, Not gently. Not harshly. But honestly and courageously and selflessly. For the good of her and the community both. So they all could stand as equals. And not as some Minister who stands higher because of their religious status, and were thus exempt from being criticized or questioned. That is the downfall of all many communities. Any institution or privileged group will always seek to buttress its advantages behind closed doors, because if they do not; others will question and challenge their special status and privileges.

Then what would have happened? The Shakers would have become a community that lived without furniture. They would have found themselves ostracized by all other communities because they were too weird, too whacky. They would have been left alone. And they would have had a much easier time resisting all the consumer goods around them and they would have survived much longer as a community. And not crumbled into middleclass wealth as they so easily did.

But the other side of that particular coin is the fact that if they had never sold their furniture: then they would have never become so well known and famous. Their spiritual wisdom would have been kept inside that community and not given out freely. Like the Hamish... who jealously guard their privacy and never let other people see how they really live. Who tries to live like the Hamish? Nobody. Who reads about Shaker communities and lifestyles and values? Many people. So how do you solve this apparent destructive, vicious cycle-conundrum?

Make all communities and communal living fun, exclusive, hard and successful. Create revolutionary experimental communities which are expressly, consciously experimenting in how they live... right down to which side of the bed they should get out of each morning, and if they should even have beds to sleep-in, or walls in their houses, or houses to live-in. How do I breath-eat-walk-talk...? How can I creatively live so I can have as much fun as possible? And.... How can I intensify my life, how can I have more intense fun, more exciting challenges... how can I experience as much happiness and suffering as intensely as possible? If you do not think you need hardship: trying having a 'party' non-stop, and see how quickly you burn out. In order to balance this, if your energy is pain-oriented you need to be taught in non-suffering ways because you will enjoy it too much. If your energy is fun-oriented you should be told painful truths and learn your lessons painfully. If you are balanced you will want to do both. Voluntary, creative Challenges. Voluntary Hardship, and Voluntary Fun.... The only trick is to find a healthy balance to it.

What happened with the Shakers is that they got it all wrong: They responded negatively to a negative energy. If a person is greedy, and wants more furniture, and cares about dead pieces of furniture more than about living things. Then instead of reinforcing their negative, weak greed and selfishness: the Shakers should have stripped her house of every piece of furniture, and left her to rot in her empty house: friendless, alone, without any human companionship... and also without any furniture to obsess over. If they had done this: she would have either been forced to either realize that human beings, and living things are more important than dead furniture: or she would have gone stark staring mad,: a permanently mentally crippled crazy lady, and died insane.

That is the power of positive feedback.

Positive feedback teaches people the truth whether they like it or not. Positive feedback has only two results: the negative person either is killed and dies... or they are forced to change their entire outlook on Life and become positive also and live positively.

The strength and power of positive feedback: comes from being able to sense energy, and react to it only in one way. The power of positive feedback is positive only when it is direct. Positive feedback only works when it works directly and instantaneously. If you cannot sense or understand the root intention of a person's energy: then you cannot determine whether their energy is positive or negative. But if you can determine whether a person is positive or negative: then there is no problem at all.

For instance: If a soldier has their sergeant come to them and order them to attack another army. And the soldiers asks WHY should he attack other people he doesn't know: this can lead to argument and wasted energy.

But... if the soldier instantly understands that the reason the sergeant is ordering him to attack an 'enemy' is because he wants you to kill them...Then all you have to do in order to react positively... is kill the sergeant and your problems are over. All you have to do, is kill anyone who wants to kill others. All you have to do is kill killers. Not tell them to go kill others themselves. Not argue with them. Not try to explain anything to them. If somebody wants to force to: kill another person: kill them before they get the words out of their mouth. If a greedy robber baron millionaire wants to hire you so you can collect rent money for him: instead of arguing with him or trying to explain how greed and selfishness is evil. Just take all his money. Take the clothes off his back, and leave him naked on the street.

If anyone wants to hire you to do a job you don't like: force them to do the job themselves at gunpoint. If they refuse: kill them. If anyone tries to make you do something you don't want to do: kill them. Don't argue or explain anything. Pretty soon... nobody will ask you to do anything you don't want to do, and nobody will try to make you do something for them. Even if they ask you politely, even if they try to be 'nice' to you, even if they smile at you and lie to you and try to fool you into doing something you know is evil.

If you become a positive person: your inner moral compass will instantly tell you whether somebody I good or evil. You will instantly know whether that person has to be killed or not. This works very easily.

The only trouble is... that there are no positive humans. All human beings are negatively programmed to react in fear and hate and cowardice. All people are brainwashed to react negatively instead of positively. If only one human being is positive instead of negative: the millions of negative people will run away from him, and come back with tanks and guns and kill that one positive person: and be convinced that this one positive powerful, independent human being who was not afraid of death or dying, and was not afraid of killing anyone who came near him who was negative... was a lunatic, a crazy psychotic killer. Just because human beings are brainwashed to believe that whatever culture they live in: the majority is always right. The cultural unspoken norm is never questioned. If all human beings live in a state of constant fear and hate. Nobody can tell them they are living wrongly. If ALL human are blind: nobody can describe the color blue to them. They will not be able to understand that they are living wrongly. They will not be able to understand that they are blind. Simply because they never developed their eyes. They never developed an inner positive moral code of personal conduct. They never looked at themselves critically... to find out whether they are positive or negative.

Civilization brainwashes humans to believe that the exception is always wrong, and the majority, the norm: is always right. But civilization is artificial: its norms are artificial: its norms are the exception in regards to the rest of the entire fucking Universe. The Universe is right. It is civilization that is wrong, it is the exception that is wrong. Humans do not understand this because they have not developed a wide enough perspective to understand what is an exception and what is the rule. In the context of the Universe: a soldier killing their sergeant the instant that sergeant orders them to kill somebody else: is right-normal: the rule: good. In the context of the Universe: not killing the sergeant and going and doing the sergeant's dirty work for him: is the exception-abnormal-EVIL. If no sergeant could order any soldier to kill anybody: then there would be no war, and no armies and no evil.

Positive feedback is infallible: it cannot make a mistake as long as it is applied directly in the context of equality. If Stalin ordered 1 million Russian soldiers to kill you, and they marched on you with the intent to kill you. The proper positive feedback response is not killing 1 million of Stalin's soldiers. The positive response is to kill Stalin first. And then kill any other leader who orders others to kill you, until they learn that ordering somebody to do their dirty work means death for them. Positive feedback is intelligent feedback because it finds the root of the intention and responds to the root source. If every leader that orders anyone else to go out and attack and invade and kill other people were killed by the people they gave these orders to... then there wouldn't be any war. Then there wouldn't be any armies. Then there wouldn't be any invasions or attacks. Then people would be left alone to live their own lives... as long as they did not attack anyone, as long as they do not have any root intention towards other humans that is negative, evil; stinking of hatred, cowardice, envy, jealousy, fear, avarice, covetousness, etc. The human species is ruled and oppressed and manipulated by fear and hate and avaricious greed. If humans were not ruled by these corrupt, evil, weak vices: they would not have any rulers ruling them at all.

The concept of Hierarchy is an evil corrupt concept that comes from the fact that all humans are cowards. Hierarchy is the cunning idea of getting somebody else to do your dirty work for you. Hierarchy is the idea of hiring killers to make you rich. Hire killers to raise your status as a feared king or ruler. Hire killers to rob and kill for you so you can get rich off their evil acts. Then once you are rich: keep killers hired to protect you from those you robbed and raped and impoverished. Keep hired killers for the rest of your life to protect you from the relatives and loved ones of those you killed from coming after you and killing you for your evil deeds.

This tired, old repeated plot, this stupid dynamic: has been played out over and over and over for over 12,000 fucking years and it is getting thin as hell. Modern people no longer watch movies that have this plot anymore because it is too stupid for words. Yet they and all the rest of the human species: still obey their masters, and obey the laws that keep the powerful and the rich oppressing us in their real lives...

Because? All humans have become corrupted or their spirits have been so crushed, they have been brainwashed into such dumbness and passive non-resistance: that they allow others to walk all over them, and rule them... as long as they think they have a chance of becoming rich and famous and powerful also?....

No. Because: they don't know anything else. They have never seen anything else inside civilization except evil winning over Good. Because they have been brainwashed so badly: they cannot think straight. The main reason why we humans cannot be positive: is because we have been born into an artificial negative system that has accumulated negated evil poison for over 12,000 years, and the accumulated negated evil poison of 12,000 years has seeped into our parents and our grandparent bodies and souls... so that when we were born... we were already poisoned and corrupted before we were ever born. Simply because the sperm and the egg of a fetus has to come from a human male and female that is already alive. The reason all humans born are born corrupted: is the causality of human history.

When you realize what has been done to you by reading this book. When you realize that the entire legacy of all humans who ever were born before you... were and are the reason you are not happy. When you realize the entire past of the human species is why you are now in this position of having to deal with atomic bombs and global pollution and wars and rich corporations spending trillions of dollars of brainwashing propaganda to keep you stupid and passive as they sell you the worst shit possible... just to keep you drugged long enough to steal every dime you have... Then you will develop an anger, and a rage against this.

This is the problem.

The ones who are most responsible for your unhappiness and the problems you have: are long dead. The ones who are responsible for your unhappiness who are alive; live in huge protected walled mansions now... guarded by security systems and armies, and have hired thugs called bodyguards protecting them from you.

Then you will develop an anger and a rage against the entire system called civilization.

This is the problem.

How do you destroy the system without killing yourself in the attempt. How do you live positively inside a negative thing that hates and fears and systematically poisons all Positive Energy?

How do you educate other people to the truth, and get them on your side... When all of you are inside a system that forces you to live negatively?

How do you get people to listen to you, when they don't even want to hear what you have to say? Simply because everybody is just as guilty as everybody else of corruption and evil: nobody believes that any living human being has the moral right or power to point the finger at them or anybody else.

Well: fuck all of them:

I am pointing the finger at everybody including myself.

This is the answer: this is how we can change the world. This is how we reflective humans can solve all the problems of the world. Only if you include everyone: including yourself; and deal with everyone including yourself as equals, and be as honest with yourself as you are with others. Only when inner honesty is matched and balanced by outer honesty will humans ever become decent. Only then will you get rid of hypocrisy.

You can develop the same moral and ethical power I have, by doing the same thing I did:.... By pointing the finger of responsibility and guilt at myself first, by questioning myself first... before I ever pointed my finger at anybody else and questioned anyone else.

The only reason I am able to write this book... was because for 49 fucking years... I thought the problem was me... not anybody else. I thought I was the one who was fucked up, and all other people were better than me. I thought that there was something wrong with me: not with other people. It took me 49 years to begin finding out that I was wrong. It took me 49 years to begin figuring out the actual difference between good and evil. I have found out that the only way you can be critical of anybody else is if you are critical of yourself first. The only way you can be honest with anybody else is if you are honest with yourself. The only way you be courageous with others is if you are courageous with yourself. The only way you can love others is if you love yourself. The only way you can love the Good in other people is if you love the Good in yourself. The only way you can hate the evil in others: is if you also hate the evil in yourself.

This means that before you can go out and try to change others: you must change yourself. Before you can change the world around you: you must first change yourself. Before you can rightfully be critical of people around you: you must be just as critical of yourself.

How can this be done, when all of us are living inside this corrupt thing called civilization, and are already corrupted by it? Any attempt to purify yourself of corruption is mostly a futile exercise in putting one finger into a leaking crack in the dyke against corruption, while ten other cracks start leaking.

Nobody can fight the corruption of civilization alone!

People have to get together and create and form their own culture, their own self-sufficient communities: before they can ever go outside and tell others how to live.

By forming your own experimental communities and culture: you will be giving other people inside the corrupt depths of civilization: a living example, a living comparison between what they think is normal, and your way of living.

This is the problem.

How and where to do this, and with who. It can be done. All it takes is more than one person. That's all. All it takes is spreading the word to more than one person. All it takes is spreading your new example to more than one person who never saw it before.

The Dynamic of Positive and Negative Energy

The question is: how can you turn hate into love? How can you turn selfishness and greed into generosity and giving? How can you turn negative energy into positive energy?

You do it by reflexively feeding back whatever you receive... in spades. You do it by giving more love back than you receive.... You also do it by giving- reflecting back more hate than you receive.

If a person yells at you... then yell back at them louder... and they will stop doing it. If a person shows animosity towards you, and hatred in a cowardly fashion... by using only words... Challenge them, dare them to hit you and they will back down and crawl away with their tail between their legs. If they do hit you... you have the authority to hit them back harder. Once. Not fifty blows of your own pent-up rage and emotions about other things in your life.

If a Nation invades another Nation, then that invaded Nation has the authority to invade the other Nation more than it was invaded. If an attacking army kills people of another nation: that other nation has the authority to attack that attacking army... and kill more of them than were killed of their people. But; only so much violence is authorized; as is needed for the aggressor to stop their aggressions...and learn their lesson. If they refuse to learn. Then they all deserve to die. If they refuse to love. Then they all should be unloved. If they refuse to stop killing, then they all should be killed... until the lesson is learned... that power without Love, Honesty and Courage never works. That mechanical violence that is weak, cowardly, dishonest and full of hatred never works. That no matter how powerful you think you may be... there will always be someone or something more powerful than you are. There will always be someone more violent than you are. There will always be someone bigger than you are... etc... But this dynamic only works on the basis of equality and the context of equals... and it only works when the reaction is immediate and direct. It only works when nobody can get away with anything.... Not even for an hour, or a day. It only works when the other side... the weaker side, the more cowardly side, the more fearing side, the more hating side...the ones with negative energy-negative intentions... does not have a mechanical advantage over you.

If one army attacks with modern repeating rifles: and the avenging army only has spears... then that weaker negative energy cannot be balanced. Instead it is preserved, it accumulates... until one nation builds up an empire from its colonized-vanquished-defeated slave-nations. And then later...that conquering nation has to pay for all of its sins over a period of thousands of years. So: because each civilized generation never receives it immediate-positive feedback-justice-punishment-reaction. Every new generation is convinced that as long as you do not get caught red-handed immediately... then you can get away with anything... And even if you are caught... even then, the odds are still in your favor that you will still get away with it. The result is... the curse of : 'The father's sins being visited upon his sons.' the result is... billions of people today paying for what somebody did thousands of years ago... and seeing no rhyme, nor reason for it... no sense to it. Until people accept these insane punishments and injustices fatalistically... hopelessly... and give up even thinking of fighting against them. Until you get a world population of billions of resigned victims who let themselves be hoodwinked, lied-to, manipulated, oppressed, etc. Without a whimper. If all humans were courageous enough to be positive, and always give more back than they receive... then nobody would ever think of doing anything negative to anyone else: because they would know that they would get that negativity back in their faces in spades... instantly... in spades. Not twenty years later.

However, if the positive reaction to any negative energy is too strong, it also creates a negative backlash. Then people go on reacting to each other not only in direct reprisal for the other sides aggressions... they create a negative culture of hate-fear-racism etc, against that other side and perpetuate this negative culture for thousands of years without ever coming to terms with the past or the present. That is why it is crucial to react immediately... and not let the negative effects of hate-violence-racism, greed-selfishness go unpunished.

Before civilization was invented; people lived in small bands. Anything anyone did always came back to them directly... immediately, because they could not run away from those who they wronged. Everyone had to stay together or die outside of the band as a lone-lonely-crazed outlaw who was banished because of their unacceptable behavior toward other people. There was no need for any laws or police or authority to mete out the proper punishments and make sure that in each case, justice was served. They found out that justice was served mostly naturally... that the ones with any negative-evil intent were always punished. They found that something bad always happened to them. There was no escape from justice because they were too connected to each other. The causality of any negative-evil-bad intention-thought-feeling-act... had an almost instant feedback

So... whoever felt hate towards someone else in his band was punished by suddenly all of his group suddenly hating him back violently... he did not receive his positive feedback from just the one person he selectively chose to hate. He received it from everyone. To wake up one morning to find that suddenly all of the people you have lived with for all your life suddenly hate you is a devastating horrible shock.

Suddenly... you are receiving too much hate from all the other people you have known all your life. From your father, mother, brothers, sisters, aunts-uncles-cousins-friends-lovers-comrades. And that kills the hate-impulse inside you not only dead... it not only destroys that hate inside you that you had for one person completely... it makes you yearn for their love instead of yearning for their hate... it makes you suddenly become meek, mild, gentle with others. Instead of re-reflecting more hate back at all of them until somebody gets murdered... And the likelihood is that you are the one who will be killed if you keep on acting hatefully towards others of your band.

That is how negative and positive energy should be used to work in human society. But there is so much negative energy built up and accumulated in people today, that if it were let loose indiscriminately, people would explode into irrational fits of violence and pain and hysteria. Today we are not connected to each other as honestly and directly as we once were. Today military pilots can drop bombs killing thousands, even hundreds of thousands of living people and never have to 'worry' about any reprisal, any causal effect of their actions. Today...in civilized society: the disconnections, the separated spaces between all causal actions are so huge, that for most part... nobody pays for their crimes or sins or acts... the level of corruption of all hierarchies, the level of denial and dishonesty is so huge, that very, very few people ever get what they really deserve. And that includes not only the perpetrators; but the victims also. Very few victims ever get to reflexively... positively pay back their attackers and violators as they should. The result is a huge accumulation of unpaid injustices and crimes. The result is that since most people find they can get away with it... they do it more, and worse... because their communities and societies do not even recognize or admit most negative crimes, and sins, and intentions, at all. Much less deal with them intelligently, selectively, and immediately.

Nowadays: people want not just one thing destructively and selfishly... they want everything destructively and selfishly. They want it all... now. They want money. Fame. Power. Love. Status. Happiness. Expensive cars. Expensive houses. Mansions. An elite profitable respected. A Career. Sex. Drugs. Privileges. They want to be revered. They want to be worshipped. Approved-of. They want jewelry. Appliances. Consumer goods. TV's. CD's. A CD player. Pleasure-food. Restaurants. Clubs. Limos... Expensive Fun. Exclusive fun. Expensive furniture. Exclusive furniture. Expensive clothes. Exclusive clothes. Expensive wines. Exclusive wines. Everybody wants to win. Everybody wants to be Number One. Everybody wants the best. Everybody wants to be World champions. But what kind of best? What kind of number one? How ludicrous can you get? Six Billion fans screaming their team is Number One? Six billion people fighting each other to become World Champions? Six billion people competing against each other, killing each other, hating each other, fearing each other, fearing themselves, hating themselves?

But... you can only reward-punish one intention at a time. And you should only positively, reflectively give back more of one negative intention at the same time. So? Make them choose. Give them a choice. What do they want most. Money, or sex? Fame or power? And then TAKE IT AWAY... And you will see how amazingly fast people suddenly become wiser. You will see how fast people become less foolish, less selfish, less destructive... and less negative.

The trouble with the corrupted negative feedback systems of civilized societies is that they give you negative feedback, not positive feedback. Billions of people slave all their lives to make more money and never save enough to afford a house or a car. Millions of people work all their lives and never get promoted, or recognition, or the money they think they deserve. Billions of people want justice served and never get it.

And the one-in-a-million lucky person who does get anything 'in spades', is not happy, and does not find any fulfillment or happiness or meaning in their lifelong struggle. Look at Bill Gates: after creating the richest corporation in the world and becoming the wealthiest person in the world... he has now decided to give all of his ill-gotten billions away! And only keep a measly few hundred million for himself.

So... if the richest man in the fucking world did this: then what the fuck was he doing it for in the first place, eh? Why was he spending his entire fucking life trying to become as rich as possible, eh? By creating a corporate monster monopoly that has choked off all human creativity in the world, eh?

Then why didn't he stop when he get his lousy hundred million, eh? What did he waste his fucking life making more billions of dollars... that he has now decided to give some of it away, eh? The richest man in the fucking world: has publicly admitted that money isn't everything and excess wealth is basically meaningless and evil by his living example... and still! People refuse to learn or listen or understand. If the richest man in the fucking world is giving all of his billions away... then you idiots who are trying to get richer than you already are... should listen to Gates and follow his example. Because Gates IS smart. He has read about what happened to all the richest men in all the world. He does not want to end up like them... But he has no choice. He is still making billions of dollars profit from Microsoft. His 'giving away' is merely a cover scam, a publicity stunt. He is still accumulating more billions of dollars than he knows what to do with. He stole all this money from you. He stole it from billions of people. He robbed it from hundreds of millions of corrupt humans who love machines more than they do themselves or any other living things and spend most of their time playing with their dead toys.

So... what is the ethical lesson of becoming being the greediest most conniving, most cunning monopoly giant multi-billionaire in the world, eh? That his life is a waste of energy. All his greed was a waste, and stupid to begin with. All of his goals were evil and corrupt to begin with. His entire life: is now a public living example of how all greed and power are meaningless goals. He created an evil empire, an evil huge dominant monopoly... for nothing. For no good reason. For only evil reasons.. Now he is publicly admitting his mistake?

Bullshit. The day he closes Microsoft down, fires all of its employees you are rich as sin anyways and independently wealthy already. The day he fires himself and gives away ALL of his ill gotten millions and lives in a humble apartment and works as a computer programmer for the still obscenely high hourly rate that 99% of humans will never make...

The day he publicly beats his own breast and admits his own guilt and exposes all of the secret crimes he committed behind closed doors, and puts himself into jail as a self-confessed criminal. that is when a rich man will have an effect on the human race as a living example of how to live honestly and how not to live dishonestly. The point is: that in spite of Gates still being the richest man in the world: his token philanthropy proves by his living example: that he is corrupt. That by giving billions of dollars away: he realizes he does not deserve to have all this money. By this fact alone: he is admitting that he got his money illegally and unfairly. He is publicly admitting the bankruptcy of the Capitalist d corrupt realm to all other corrupt wannabe greedy rich people. And they are not listening to him at all: because his token philanthropy is not genuine and is not actually true. It is a cold mental tactic, a cold mental token. And because of this: all the money he is donating is being sucked and stolen by all the corrupt greedy African nations he is giving it to, and ending up in the pockets of corrupt drug lords and corrupt tribal chieftains and corrupt politicians, and not benefiting anybody who is poor at all. Instead it is going to rich corrupt research laboratories, and other scams that suck up all charitable money with no beneficial effect to poor living humans at all. The ultimate truth is money does not solve anything. Giving money to other people just corrupts other people into the love of money.

Bill Gates is a perfect example of how anyone can become corrupt. If you get wealth ...you also get, power status, and privileges. If you become a World Champion; you are also given, and are awarded tons of other bonuses. If you get famous, you get tons of extra things like political and social clout, respect, adulation, free money, everyone wants to do you some favor, etc. This is how every hierarchical system in civilization works destructively... By rewarding only the people who do not deserve it; and never rewarding those who do deserve reward.

This only reflexively re-enforces negative energy... negative intentions... negative goals, negative morals, negative ethics, negative ideas, negative assumptions, negative truths... replace the word: negative with the word: dead, and it means the same thing. Life-energy is positive energy. Anything that has more negative energy than positive energy kills living things. This is what humans do not understand about positive energy, this is what must be made clear. Positive energy is more powerful than negative energy. The positive proton is not actually positive at all: it is much more powerful than the negative electron because it is larger in size. Actually; the negative electron is much stronger than the accumulation of sub-atomic particles which make up a positive proton.

The entire polarized lie of civilized positive and negative values has reversed the perception of the actual truth. Whether these values are ascribed to subatomic particles, or to chemical reactions, to organic processes, to ecological forces, to human emotions, etc... it is assumed that in some magical weird, way, they are opposites. They are enemies. They are in conflict. They are easily identifiable. There is no such thing as an electron being negative, or a proton being positive. There is no such thing as an emotion being either negative or positive. Energy is either stronger or weaker than other energy. That does not mean they are intractable enemies. Nor does that mean they must always be in mortal battle against each other.

The dynamics and laws of Positive Feedback and Negative Feedback are Universal. They work on all levels, in all kinds of ways on all kinds of things... including human society, and human emotions, and the human psyche-personality-soul. Again. The entire terminology of positive, and negative is a bunch of semantic bullshit. They are merely code words for Strong, and Weak that have been switched around. What is actually strong is called weak, and what is actually weak is called strong.

The only way any energy becomes stronger, healthier, happier is by undergoing balanced, alternative periods of hardship and ease: Or Polar Reversals. If you only have one side of this swing; then that energy becomes weaker, unhealthier, and unhappier. It is only by stretching both sides of the Polar reversal dynamic balance; that any dynamic balance becomes more vibrant, more sensitive, happier, healthier, more responsive, more alive. How do you make any rod more flexible? You bend it back and forth both ways. If you bend it only one way, you weaken it at that bending spot so if any strain is put on that rod, it will break. If you bend it too far either way, it will break.

All living things become accustomed to whatever conditions they exist in. If you stretch those conditions both ways, then you toughen the organism and make it accustomed to tougher conditions. If you remove all hardship out of your life; you will find that you will be incapable of handling any hardship when it does come up. If you remove all ease out of your life, you will discover that you will be incapable of handling any ease when it comes up. If you remove all success from your life, then you will find that you are incapable of handling any success in your life. If you remove all failure from your life, then you will find that you will be incapable of handling any failure that does come up in your life. If you remove all intimacy and love from your life, then you will find that you are incapable of handling any love that does come up in your life. If you remove all unloving conditions from your life and only live in a loving close group of people, you will find that you will be incapable of handling not being loved; if it ever happens in your life. We need to not only stretch our limits; we need to stretch both sides of those limits. If you want happiness, you must also want sadness. If you want success, you must also want failure. If you want understanding, you must also want incomprehension. If you want wealth, you must also want poverty. So why is being selfless, the best way to live? Why not be selfless, and selfish? Why not be ascetic and greedy? Thin and fat? Strong and weak? Will this supposedly give you both a wider experience and scope of understanding of all things? No. Because you are mixing up weak Energy with Stronger energy... and thereby diluting the positive effect. Why get fat and unhealthy, if you are slim and healthy? Why become weak when you are already strong? Strong people have nothing to prove. They already know they are strong. So they work more on developing their gentleness to balance their clumsy strength, and keep from being destructive merely from being too strong like a bull in a China Shop.

It all depends what context you put these aspects into. Being selfish for yourself to be healthier and stronger for the greater good of a larger group of people is the same intent, the same direction as being selfless for yourself. Your smaller selfishness does not conflict with your larger selflessness for the larger good of the group. In fact it enhances it. However: if you put your small selfishness above the greater good of your larger social well-being, if you make the smaller more important than the larger...then you will become weaker, not healthier. You will become ostracized, alone, unhappy. Simply by stretching your limits both ways in the proper contexts: your Energy is going in the same direction. Then there is no unnecessary conflict, no unnecessary pain, and no unnecessary unhappiness.

If children only learned how to cope with life by using this simple dynamic... they could turn our world, and our civilization completely around in one short generation. Only... we do not let them change anything. We do not let anyone get any power unless they are old, white, male, and corrupt.

Why do scientists, schools, educators, refuse to use or teach this well-known law along with all the other experts in-the-know? Because it would destroy their own advantages: which they carefully do not list as an advantage and carefully do not look deep inside themselves to find out just what it is they should be doing that they are not doing.

The true semantic meaning of the word negative is: weak
The true semantic meaning of the word positive is: strong

One effect of civilization is that it has created a negative, weak energy feedback system that is unique in the Universe because there are almost no positive-strong feedback systems to balance them. There are no other energy systems in the universe that work exclusively by only negative-weak feedback, or where negative-weak energy is more powerful than positive-strong energy. Only human civilization does this. Only in human civilization, is there generally more destructive negative-weak energy than positive-strong energy.

Every regenerating process... every regenerating cycle in the Universe is based on a predominantly positive-energy dynamic of positive feedback, ... meaning there is always more strong energy than weak energy. From the birth and death of stars to the birth and death of galaxies, to the birth and death of planets, to the weather cycles on positively charged planets like ours, to the eco-cycles of changing climates, to the cycles of evolving different life-forms... including the cycles of our own living bodies... weak energy is in a distinct minority. Civilization is trying to change that. Civilization is trying to make all weak energy, all weakness, all cowardice, all dishonesty, all hate, all non-love, the majority-rule of this planet.

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

Every unique process, every unique cycles does have an up-down wave, of more positive-stronger and less positive-less strong energy. But there is no regenerating cycle, no regenerating process, and no repeating wave-action that is based on only negative-weak feedback. All negative-weak energy processes are death processes... rotting processes, decomposing processes. None of these half-wave energy processes and cycles has the strength or the energy to climb themselves back up to the upper half of the wave... the source, the root of all our industrialized strength and power. Our oil power is merely stealing the accumulated energy reserves of plants that once lived in the past. Every source of industrialized 'power' comes from a positive-strong energy source.

The sin of civilization, the sin of all civilized over-intensive tool-use... the sin of all human technology, is that humans steal-rob positive-strong energy... We take-manipulate destroy-use these resources as if thee are there only for our use: that is the first assumed lie. And out of this lie, we create negative-weak energy by destroying positive Life Energy... creating more dead things by robbing energy from living things... by killing more and more living things to create more, and more dead things. More dead lumber from living trees, more iron ore from devastated ecosystems and mountains, more machines, more tools, more mechanical advantages for us. The effect for us personally, is that we create more negative-weak ions in our own bodies than positive-strong ones. We become sicker, weaker, more unhealthy, and unhappier. We inherit the unhappiness of our ancestors. We inherit their misery. We inherit their guilt, their shame because we inherit their use of tools., we inherit their original sins.

This destroys our biological dynamic balance. It destroys our health, our well-being, and our happiness. We are literally defying all the positive-strong feedback energy dynamics in the universe. We are trying to oppose all the positive-strong energy feedback in the Universe. And deluding ourselves that we can prolong and perpetuate this short-lived, temporary negative-weak feedback-dynamic-process forever... or just one more lifetime. Passing on our accumulating negative-weak energy debt to the next generation, and thinking we have gotten away scot-free with thumbing our noses at all the Universe and all of its Universal Laws... This ten thousand year-old Negative feedback system called: civilization: has literally made humans weaker....

But then, how do you explain the continual breaking of athletic records? Take a human two thousand years ago of the same weight and height, and feed them the same food modern athletes eat now, and train them the same way.... And that 2,000 year older human will beat the pants off any modern human pound-for-pound, inch-for-inch... across the board... in all sports. Sports records are only broken due to earlier training, more training, more advantages, and more undetectable muscle builders in their food. More artificial drugs and methods and techniques... more artificial advantages that the ancients never had at all. We are all as a single genetic species getting more flabby, weaker, less healthy... only it will take another 'x' thousand years to show a large enough contrast. Contrast? The broadswords used by the Scots in the middle ages can barely be picked up by strong-muscled construction workers with huge hands, and a powerful leverage and grip today standing two feet taller and weighing a hundred pounds more. Never mind swinging those things all day.

As an example of this dynamic. Where did wine come from? How was it invented? Wine came from destructive, greedy humans; who found wild grapes growing in the wild. And overcome with their incredible juicy sweetness, they picked all of them... not just a few. This taking of the all grapes. And the greedy saving of them; created the rotting process that produces wine. Because there were too many grapes to eat in one sitting. The grapes were supposed to be shared... they were supposed to be eaten by other species also. They were supposed to be eaten by many different kinds of birds and mammals, and passed through their digestive tracts to fall amidst the energy-rich manure... dropping to sprout and grow. Sharing the richness of each animal's manure with the Earth. Instead; they were selfishly piled up... and saved so they accumulated into a heaping mass to be eaten later. The result was: they rotted, and their rotten pulp became poisonously alcoholic. This poison was loved by the poisoned humans who were already poisoned and intoxicated by their own greed.

The grapevines responded positively to the humans wanting to eat all of them. They grew round. Like the Earth. With a thin skin... like the Earth, with a seed in the center... With a gelatinous, soft, semi-liquid inside. Like the Earth. Responding to Human greed: they grew longer shoots, and gave forth more fruit. Which the humans picked more-of every year... making the growing energy of the grape plant, react with the positive feedback system that all living things function by. In essence: the grape plant was responding to human greed. Saying to humans:

'Oh... you want more of me? Here...! Oh. You want me to become even sweeter and more juicy? Here! Oh. You want to eat all of me? You want to digest all of me? Then swallow the Earth. And digest it.'

Until grape plants now: are huge long vines... that produce thousands of times more seeds than needed. Until the grapes had become so big; birds stopped eating them. The seeds also had become too big for small birds to swallow. Until the grape became a clinging vine, a clinging parasite, an ecologically useless plant; only good for feeding parasitic humans.... And ants. And humans that lived like ants and worked like ants, and ate like ants. Ants are the only other species that is as greedy as humans are: and eat anything they can find. And once they find something they like. They eat all of it.

Entropy and Energy

Energy changes its form by slowing down, or speeding up. It changes by becoming weaker or more powerful. Right now: no energy in the Universe has a bigger rate of deflection than 90 degrees... except the human Awareness-Energy of Pure Wonder. Whether the Energy of the Universe becomes more powerful or less powerful depends on the dynamic balance of that energy. If any form of energy manages to deflect more than 90 degrees...it will become more powerful. If any Energy deflects at less than 90degrees it will become less powerful.

The entire dynamic of walking apes using tools is a dynamic of our tools becoming more powerful, as our life-energy becomes less powerful. The entire dynamic of life-energy has been reversed because it refuses to do what it was designed to do. Which is become a growing power; instead of a waning power. A growing energy-form; instead of a waning energy-form.

Walking apes were supposed to be the 13th totality in an eco-system that had just managed to grow powerful enough to swing itself into an energy-dynamic where its energy would deflect more than 90 degrees. They were the only species that endured both sides of the animal hardship spectrum: the hardship of being a prey animal, and the hardship of being a predator animal. But these walking apes also refused to do what they were designed to do. They managed to escape both of their dual hardships by using tools. As a result: they were re-created over and over for over six million years... in the same eco-system... and over, and over: they refused to step up to their challenges. Over, and over: they escaped out of that hardship... and walked the Earth as useless scavengers and died out, and went extinct. We are the last living line of these walking apes. The more we used tools: the weaker our human lifestyle became. We were designed to take the growing power and energy of a growing fetus, and extend that power and energy into life, into living... and not start getting weaker after our birth.

The human fetus becomes stronger in strength and energy inside the womb, and outside the womb... up to around the age of two, or three. We were designed as animals who are supposed to use the growing energy curve after birth and continue it indefinitely... with no limits. Instead: we have increased the power of our conscious minds only on a two-dimensional abstract level, so they only become weaker with continual use... in all life-energies we steadily become weaker: because we do not bother to develop all of our energy-potentials. The pre-development of any reflective Life-energy dynamic, works like this: This comes from the intersection of living single cells, as they grow and cooperate to form a larger, more complex single Totality-animal. Like this:

As this cell expands... Depending upon which side its natural cycles are re-enforced, and reflected back positively, (Hardship, or ease.), the ANGLE of its direction-flow-Impetus-shape-form is determined.

Like this: Resulting in a net direction of more ease, or as much as possible, recreating the past conditions of ease/hardship

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

But if you live with an expanding reflective sense of Pure Wonder

Then the direction of your energy changes from being oriented towards the past, into the present... And if you intensify that energy of Pure Wonder: then, its direction changes to the future... and becomes able to penetrate itself, and all other Energy. (With other people... you can not do this alone.) Like this

:

But this can only happen if there is more hardship than ease. It is the intensification of the direction of the up-down cycles of hardship-ease, translated into an intensification of the direction-focus of living in the past-present-future.

Look at the wake of a powerboat. All of its power is wasted sideways and backwards. There is not one energy wave that travels ahead of it faster than it is going. Why? Because purely physical-mechanical Energy is not powerful enough to create a forward-moving energy wave in front of it; that is going faster than the thing which is producing-radiating that energy. The same principle applies to light energy also. It applies to all energy except the Energy of Pure Wonder.

The difference between Negative and Positive Energy: is Waves of Negative Energy do not travel faster than the Energy itself. They have no positive Impetus or effect. Positive Energy waves travel faster than the Positive Energy itself. Because they radiate out directly. They do not circle around their own source. As in electro-magnetic Energy fields: that can be detected in all physical energy in the Universe. Even the Energy light does not radiate its energy waves faster than light itself travels.

If humans ever understand and analyzes the difference between Positive Energy that penetrates, and Negative Energy that merely deflects, and pushes things away at 90 degrees or less... All mechanical energy will become worthless, and be debunked.

The Triality of a Balanced Existence

To begin with, having a properly balanced life, means that life must exist in the proper balanced context so it can balance itself naturally by balancing with its environment. The only two environments we can use in comparison to each other are: nature, and civilization. Nature teaches stillness, it teaches wonder. Sitting still allows you time to digest your thoughts and feelings... it allows you to develop your sense of wonder about everything that has happened to you, what you do, and experience. Socializing also gives you the chance to get feedback from others and put everything into a better perspective. But the only environment where humans can be at peace with themselves, doing nothing, being still is Nature. Doing nothing is merely a balance of awareness: when nothing needs doing, one does nothing. Nature gives you that opportunity for reflection: civilization does not. It is only in an environment of beauty and stillness that the condition of stillness and wonder can be naturally evoked in human awareness. In an artificial setting like civilization, there is no stillness: only deadness, sameness, boredom, or busyness, noise, and distraction. Something is always invading your awareness, something is always distracting you, something always needs doing. Stress, noise, pressure, ambition, the need to pay bills etc... but the habit of inner stillness needs to be developed early: without an early and constant exposure to nature, it is very difficult to become more deeply aware of oneself, or more deeply sensitive.

All spiritual lifestyles practice stillness: some call it meditation, or prayer, some use mantras, some go to special retreats... the recluse, the monk, the hermit, the holy man: all practice some form of stillness. In the east, this practice has been refined to sitting totally still for days, weeks, even years. The goal of doing nothing is striving for perfect inner peace and balance. On the other hand; the goal of civilization is to keep its inhabitants as busy and distracted as possible. These two goals are in direct opposition to each other. So: how can you find a balance between stillness and movement? Try dividing your life up into equal thirds. One third of your life you need for sleep, rest, and rejuvenation. One third you need to keep active so your body stays healthy and vibrant. And the remaining third you need to be still; in order to properly digest and assimilate your experiences. That means you need to spend fully one half of your waking life in order to digest the other half. Moreover: you will not even feel the need to do so: unless you are living in a State of Pure Wonder.

But civilization will never allow you to develop such a lifestyle; it will never allow you to balance your life between stillness and action... simply by never giving you enough time to develop a sense of Balanced Inner, and Outer sense of Pure Wonder. If this fundamental Triality of dynamic balance is not observed and practiced, your entire life goes out of balance. Then you no longer spend enough time evaluating your situation, or what you are doing, or why you are doing it. You no longer have an accurate overview of yourself and your life, and what needs changing, and what doesn't. Simply the lack of asking questions, the lack of time to do this puts you off-center. You no longer have a balance point that can be dynamically shifted and adapted to any changing situation. Once you are no longer centered, you lose your innate spontaneity and creativity. You fall into unthinking habits and practices; you no longer question your own habits and practices. This all comes from leading an unexamined life. And that comes from not spending enough time being still.

So: how do you design and restructure a human society using this simple balancing guideline? It would involve drastic changes in every sphere and aspect of civilized life. If this single principle were observed and practiced: then our civilization would be transformed beyond recognition; it would become less machine-oriented and more humane. This is just one example of how important dynamic balance is in everything- not just in your personal life, but also in the basic structure and makeup of the civilization you live in.

Language with Feelings

Humans used language before they used tools in the desert and only because it was used originally in a crisis of life-or-death. As a result, the way our ancestors grew up was mixed up in its order. Instead of raising their young without using language... and instead of using language only for using tools: they sat and tried to use language all the time even without using tools. However, that learned habit came from sitting around all day: making tools... until they were using language as a tool too much. Just like they were using tools too much every day; instead of reserving their use only for crisis situations. If you want to raise a human baby properly, then you should raise them without using language. If the baby speaks to you, you should speak back to the baby in its own language. And use your own language with the baby only when you are using a tool; or only when the baby is using one. That way the baby gets to understand the proper context and tool-function of tool-language, and keep it separate from its own self-created human language. That way it will learn the proper syntax context of how language works, so it will learn its language much faster... adding its own words to it creating its own distinct, but mostly similar language from its parent's language. In other words... Each new generation should evolve, invent, and create their own language.

Wouldn't this create huge cultural, and age separations is all humans? Yes and no. It would make any centralization and accumulation of power and populations impossible. It would keep communities small. Having more than one language in one community keeps all the members busy learning a new language all the time. It keeping our minds always exercising playing with new words! And it keeps even the Sense of Pure Wonder of the older generations fresh.

The way adults should use language is as little as possible. And the only way humans can even get onto a roughly general same wavelength of understanding with each other is to not use language at all... in other words, if you want to communicate with someone, you should just live with them silently... until both of you develop an emotional-mental-physical bond that needs no words. Then, if you need to use language for tool-use... then your emotional-mental-physical energy will not be misunderstood. But if you want to use language in everyday life... without using tools, you need to develop a creative way of doing it and get the others to join in. The same applies to any other game, be it a word game, a ball game, etc... all you are doing using words without needing to use tools is being playful with words... and having fun with language. The same need to develop your word play applies to ball-play. In each game you practice to art of throwing and catching a meaning, understanding or intent-impulse or form or formlessness; as in spraying someone with water as a surprise joke... The other person has to at least understand that you are being playful... and that you want them to throw some word-meaning at you also. And the more artfully you do it... the more gracefully, the more beautifully you do it... the more you can court, entrance, bewitch, the other person with your inventive, loving intent to keep them entertained without using any other tools or energy-distractions destructively.

If you do not spend enough time to gather in silence, and work at trying to understand the other person as deeply as possible without using words... then you will start off on the wrong foot, the wrong word, the wrong intent, the wrong assumptions, the wrong understandings, the wrong impressions, the wrong motivations, the wrong reasons, etc... and you will experience a whole lifetime of constant misunderstandings that were unnecessary if you had only spent the time first to get to know that other persons energy on a much deeper level than merely words.

Of course, this, as you notice would only be practical in a natural setting in a small band of people... any people. Where their art energy is forced to be developed on as simple and basic a level as possible, where they are forced to get to know each other on a deep level without words.... If they only use tools 20 minutes a day... But if they use language all the time... after they have grown up mostly silently besides each other..., then they can use their language as a love-tool, a fun-tool,... and never need to use it destructively.

The other thing this does is to keep all language constantly evolving and changing so each person has their own language... and the art or work of learning any other person's language becomes extremely time-consuming and difficult.

So either they stick to a basic silent way of communicating, or commit themselves to spending their whole lives learning the other persons or groups language...

This automatically forces people to decide whether they want to stay with anyone or not based purely upon love. Then any stranger who wants to join any group will have the automatic understanding that they need to be treated kindly and lovingly and gently in silence before learning their new groups language... and only once an empathetic bond is developed do they start using words sparingly. Until they learn the new language and as a new member be forgiven for not knowing all the complexities and hidden meanings...

The Idea of civilized Equality...

And How It was Systematically Corrupted

The accepted historical idea of equality was a tiny notion springing forth from people who became just as rich as their elite, and demanded equal rights to be recognized that they were just as rich and just as powerful as their peers. The idea of equality in small groups that had almost no power, and no wealth has been completely ignored and swept under the carpet by historians. All of the struggles for equality by the billions of dead poor who are never mentioned in history books never happened as far as conventional history is concerned.

Why? Because all of these revolts and uprisings and rebellions were successfully, and brutally crushed. These billions of powerless poor were massacred, raped, beaten, burned and tortured, and enslaved and terrorized into submission by the victors. The only existing accounts of any struggle for equality in human history, are the ones where the rebels not only managed to win... but their culture, race-culture-religion-creed is still dominant in present Western culture. All other attempts to gain equality. All the millions of atrocities perpetrated by the billions of powerless poor are absent from human history for the simple reason that they failed.

All the examples of ordinary people being generous and giving, all the millions and billions of lives that could be used as examples of giving; are absent from history books; simply because history books are mainly only pyramidal focus-stories of the richest, most powerful people of their time. And all of them were takers, and most of them died horrible deaths because of their sins.

What you need to understand is that the higher up the social ladder of privilege, power, and prestige you go... the more poisonous the hate, the more vicious the infighting, the sicker and more insane these small elite cults are.

What Empire existed after the Egyptian Empire, and before the Persian and Greek Empires? The trading Island cult of Minos... the Minotaur, half-man, half-bull... a copy of the idea of the Sphinx: half-man, half-lion. Which sprouted so many other island Pirate-trading Empires, they all destroyed each other completely; and left almost no trace of their existence. Until they re-appeared like a Phoenix from the ashes of complete destruction; unharmed and twice as poisonous and deadly... as the Empire of the Phoenicians. This time they finally had the courage to actually settle on a Continent, in the safest, least hostile shore of Northern Africa. Exactly as the English did later. Only the dynamic of Empire was played out faster with the English. It did not take the English hundreds of years for them to migrate from establishing outlaw toeholds on islands to invading a continent and spreading their Robber Baron Culture like the Minos pirates did: before they became the modern Phoenician corporate Robber Barons of the 19th and 20th century.

Whatever became of the Phoenicians? They were hounded out of every port, and polis, and town in the Mediterranean; except for Carthage. What did Carthage turn into? A supposedly benign trading Empire, and a Navy that dominated all of the Mediterranean, sucking all the wealth of that area into the coffers of a few privileged elite in that small city. Carthage had a completely integrated military industrial complex. The trading vessels and Military ships were all serviced, funded, and organized by the same government. It was an exact replica in microcosm of the American system. Just as the modern American Corporations have integrated themselves with the Military industrial complex of the American Government.

What happened to the Carthaginians? They became so corrupt and lazy; they stopped fighting for themselves. They hired professional mercenaries instead, to do their fighting for them. That was a major reason for their demise; since paid killers cannot be trusted to stay loyal to any given side.

During the entire time the Greek Peloponnesian wars were going on, and Greece was destroying itself: Carthage was trading all over the Mediterranean, and becoming filthy rich from its trading monopolies. Alexander the Great went a-conquering eastward; not westward. Because he knew he did not stand a chance against the naval might of the Carthaginian Naval war machine. He had to make very polite, and respectful political alliances very carefully in his small corner of the Mediterranean: just to be able to ferry his soldiers to Persia. Only because a few Tyrants of a few polis's were corrupt enough to be bribed, did he ever get his armies over to Asia Minor safely.

Eventually... Carthage was completely destroyed by the Romans. That city was burned to the ground, and its site was sown with salt, so nothing would grow there. This is another example of the Western tactic used to hide its true corruption. The reversal of a lie into a truth. The phrase 'salt of the Earth' does not refer to being poor tillers of the soil, but to being killers of the soil... Hating the Earth, and all things that grew from it so viciously, that they cast corrosive salt over the Earth so nothing would grow there.

The Romans inherited an ancestral hatred and envy of any race or city, or polis, or culture: that were better than they were. They killed off the original inhabitants in their area; the Etruscans: because they were more affluent, they had better pottery, better harvests, and were less warlike than they were.

Rome destroyed Carthage for the same reason that comes from greed: envy. Pure envy. The sick, jealousy and hatred of the lowly brute... wanting to tear down anything finer, or more beautiful. The original Romans were lovers of ugliness. They were the lowest human filth living then. The lowest culture in that area. The most brutalized. The most vicious haters.

Not that Carthage was much better. Recently: 20,000 burial pots with cremated infant bones in them, were discovered at the site of ancient Carthage. Killing 20,000 babies indicates that these people were not very humane either.

Why was Carthage the lesser evil?

If Carthage had triumphed over Rome: then the Global culture of greed without global warfare would have started one thousand years earlier. And it would not have lasted as long as it has.

And a hell of a lot more than 20,000 babies would have been saved from being murdered. From salting the Earth with salt over the burned wreckage of Carthage... Now this modern Romanized Western civilization is salting the poorest nations on Earth with bombs, bomblets, and landmines. Vietnam, Cambodia, and Laos were salted with millions of explosive bomblets. Trying to scientifically and efficiently kill as many poor people as possible. But those bomblets had metal jackets that were detectable by metal sensors. Now: the poorest countries on Earth... like Angola, Ethiopia, Afghanistan, Sudan, and Iraq have been salted with plastic landmines that are virtually undetectable by any sensor made so far. And can only be detected by the Earth; taken apart with tweezers... millimeter-by-millimeter.

So now; the poorest, starving children on Earth can be safely... and impersonally killed, wounded, crippled... by far-off weapons manufacturer's in the West... selling their weapons of to the most corrupt dictators and oppressive regimes on Earth for a tidy profit. Why do you think these Robber Barons are calling their own obscene killing machines with this phrase? They are so stupid: they are now screaming out their ultimate goal to the masses, by telling exactly what the aim of all these weapons are for. The rich are trying to kill all of the poor people on Earth.

Sound unbelievable? Study human history. Study the sins and crimes of every Empire. Study how they tried to kill every living thing they could get their rotten hands on. And find every insane excuse they used to do it. Study how every civilization on Earth wasted all of its manpower and energy and resources trying to build up dead things into huge icons, tokens, symbols of wealth, prestige and power... and how all of these sick, insane people died like flies, and went extinct every time, because they did not put any life-energy into their own children, or into any other living things period. Why do you think the red carpet is rolled out for Royalty? Because the Royals gained their power and prestige by a river of human blood. The Kings of Europe gained their Kingship by killing. The human subconscious does not lie. The royal carpet is not green, or blue, or yellow, or white for a very good subconscious reason. Their Royal history is a history of bloodletting. And that history of bloodletting is rolled out in public for every person to see and understand.

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1200

But history whitewashes the rivers of blood. Until Royalty is whitewashed and sanctified. Until the only evidence left of human atrocities are the plush red carpets rolled out for the elite to walk upon. All elite, upwardly mobile societies hate poor people. All elite upwardly mobile societies hate children. The hatred of the poor, the hatred of children; runs through all civilization, hidden in countless ways, on countless levels. How the West kills children and poor people as another bunch of vicious cycles; which have been ritualized into tradition and history that is so transparent and obvious: it can be explained in one paragraph.

First invade another country. Oppress them. Enslave them. Colonize them. Rob them of all their natural resources. Keep them uneducated, poor. Brutalize them. Kill and rape their women and children. Then; after you have raped and robbed all of their wealth, or if they manage to kick you out... leave them with a destroyed self-esteem, a destroyed culture, a destroyed Nation... And then rob them legally by trade and capitalistic Robber Baron Tactics. Sabotage their every attempt to gain the same level of robber Baron industrialization you have... Using every underhanded cunning strategy from outright assassination, a Coup D'etat, or financing every scam on Earth to rig elections or funding insurgent guerillas... to openly imposing unfair trade sanctions upon all of these the uppity poor countries... and slowly starve their economies until their government becomes just another corrupted regime that is easily manipulated by the money from the Western Robber Baron Corporations and World Bank Robber Barons....

Then call this hodge-podge bunch of destroyed Nations: '3rd World' Countries... and tut-tut about their problems, and do not lift one fucking finger to help them. What wonder is there in one Nation not helping another Nation when citizens of rich Nations refuse to help the poor of their own Nationality? Today poverty is growing at every class level, in every Nation. The sacredness of personal selfishness, or 'Capitalism'... has been excused and ritualized, and normalized in so many ways; that even the idea of incremental aid is a pathetic sick joke. It never works. It has not worked for thousands of years. Yet people are stupid enough to waste their time trying to help other people on an incremental basis. The result is so ineffective and lame, and insincere, and useless: that most intelligent people have come to despise and hate the very idea of giving money to charities.

Another example of cultural Western tokenism; is the complete lie that Western people love children. It hides the truth that Western cultures hate children even more than Eastern cultures do. Age-Racism, the hatred of children, and wealth-racism... the hatred of all poor people: runs throughout all of Western Civilization.

There are reasons why Princess Diana died so tragically, and early. She was trying to get the press and all the world: to focus attention on the horror of landmines killing millions of poor starving children every year, in all of the poverty stricken third world countries around the world. Yet at the same time: she was dating, and planning to marry one of the most corrupt, filthy rich weapons dealers in the Mid-East. Her own soul, her own subconscious could not live with that hypocrisy. She sabotaged herself in so many ways... trying to kill herself; until she finally succeeded in getting the driver of her limo so drunk, and egged him on to outrace the paparazzi; so they would crash, and she would die... and she would not have to face the ugly truths of her own obscenely wealthy extravagance, wasting millions of dollars on her own narcissism, which could have fed millions of these poor starving children she was supposed to be so worried about.

1200

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1201

She cemented again, for the millionth time in twelve thousand years...the Royal Right for obscenely wealthy people, for the Royal Elite to give a pittance of their time, but not one red cent of their own ill-gotten wealth to the poor. Without anyone even thinking to question her hypocrisy. It is the same old story: the poor being suckered into worshipping this sick, hypocritical kind of token charity by the elite. That is why her pleas went unheard. She did not put her own money where her mouth was. Diana spouted her empty words pleadingly and pathetically... but with no conviction and no passion. She begged. She whined. She was a commoner upstart who only knew how to worship the rich and beg for their favors. She did not dare become active. She did not dare become an activist. She did not dare betray the class she had just moved up into. Her job was to be a proper icon, a proper symbol. Her job was to be worshipped from afar. And when she broke all the rules of Royalty by not mixing with commoners, and getting too cozy with the press: every English aristocrat secretly hated her for it. She became so beloved by the poor that she became desperate to do something for them. Her own subconscious could not endure all the unearned honor that was bestowed upon her. She was a fad queen. She was a fad. A craze of the masses. And nobody in power listened to her. And for good reason. She put no money of her own into poor children's mouths. The press and the public humored her and ignored everything she spouted: because they knew she was a filthy rich Rothschild, and did not have one moral leg to stand on. Accusing other people for getting rich from the suffering of poor people... like weapons manufacturers? Never in your life. That accusation would bring her own failings too close to home. She simply pleaded for the powerful and the rich to have more humaneness and more humanity.

This is one example of how corrupt the morals and ethics of all humans are. She was the highest example of Noblesse Oblige; she was the highest living example of elite humanity trying to be more humane in the World when she was alive. Imagine if every millionaire and billionaire had given their time also as she did... while not giving one red cent to any starving child. What good would these empty words do? They would do nothing. Children would still starve.

The world admires and applauds the humanity of obscenely rich people who let children starve, and who like to spout empty words; without giving one penny of their filthy millions and billions to the causes they espouse: while asking and expecting!... poor people to give THEIR money to charity, and be a million times more generous with their meager resources.

Now Diana's cause celebre of eliminating plastic landmines from the manufacturing bases of the rich Western corporate profits is a dead issue. As dead as she is. Nobody took up her cause after she died. Because it was just a token cause for her. A fake cause. A way to make herself suffer. Diana was in love with suffering. She was the wounded deer not hiding in the forest; but bravely braving the interviews of her suffering. Her utter meekness was what had attracted that royal snot to her in the first place. Under that meekness was a girl trying blindly to live. Under crushing pressures of an entire Monarchy and mass and the whole world expecting her to be perfect in all ways.

Besides...the Industrial Military Complex did not like its skirts being besmirched with accusations by rich, affluent pacifists screaming at them to stop selling weapons to corrupt dictators... When the very SUV's and cars these protesters drive, the very gas they buy every week for their cars; the very drugs and goods, and foods they buy... funds the very corporations they are screaming at, who are the only bulwark that keep these affluent pacifist protesters nice and comfy in their affluent Nations.

This is another obvious example of the sick, filthy cowardice and conformity of people. Whining and begging for leaders to show them the way. And once they are shown what to do by a leader, and the

1201

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1202

leader is killed. The entire mass of conformist sheep subside back into apathy, and ignorance. And after she died; not one human took up her by-then Internationally publicized causes. Not one human dared to stand up for the starving, dying children... who were being blown up by landmines, and munitions in war-torn countries all over the world, and are still being blown up, maimed, crippled, and killed wherever there is poverty and poor children all over the Earth. You can trace the bombs and weapons back to the corporations. But if you want to trace the money further, you will come right back to the activists that protest against these bombs, and all the consumers; and all the capitalistic investment portfolios, and all savings bonds in the world today that are based upon corporate greed. You will come down to the poorest starving Africans and Asians buying Western Goods just to survive, because these goods are being rammed down their throats by the greed-energy of the West.

There are no innocents in the civilized Capitalistic vicious cycles of greed, wealth, power, hunger, poverty, misery and suffering, and unhappiness. Whether knowingly or unknowingly... every human being on Earth is actively involved in sustaining the corruption of civilization. Every citizen on Earth is guilty of knowingly or unknowingly; sustaining and preserving the structures and dynamics of civilization. It does not matter one damn whether you know it or not. The effect is still the same. The effect of civilization upon humans is the same. The dynamic of humans piled upon other humans is the same. A pile of billions of crushed humans is a pile of billions of crushed humans.

Study how Republics, and their Rights of Citizenship first began... The Greeks invented citizenship as a way of establishing a permanent upper class that had control over the concentrated wealth of walled societies called 'Polis', which we now call cities. This way; they effectively blocked other people from becoming citizens; regardless of how wealthy they were or how powerful they were. A gang of landowners who wanted to hog all the wealth inside their Polis invented citizenship as a cheap trick. The original concept of citizenship did not have one ounce of equality, or fairness, or brotherhood in it. The first Greek Citizens were just a gang of greedy thieves that could not stand the idea of other people becoming richer than they were. It was used as a selective political tool to oust the really wealthy Tyrants, who usually controlled most of the riches in a Polis; so the police-gang of citizens could literally force him out, and take over his wealth and fight over it like a pack of jackals.

In those days: the really rich Greek equivalent of today's billionaire; usually hired their own armies, and re-invaded the newly citizenized Polis, and instituted a harsher rule. They no longer ruled by suggestion or benevolence. They dictated what they would do and rammed their decrees down the throats of their subjects. They became known as dictators instead of Tyrants. Why? Because the earlier rulers had tirades. Fits of anger. But not a systematic form of cruelty. They would raid others for their wealth, and have done with it. Dictators did the same thing. Only they dictated what was to be done, instead of doing it themselves.

The earlier Tyrants were forced to become more oppressive just in order to survive. The hierarchical culture of dog-eat-dog, and let the devil take the hindmost: forced them into becoming more oppressive. They originally only wanted to be tolerant, kind, beneficent Tyrants, and ruled as gently as possible. They had taken this beneficent example from Cyrus the Great. The first Persian Emperor. He ruled more wisely, and more kindly than all of the Emperors that came after him...

However; crucifixion had been invented by the Persians before Cyrus ever came into power. The relative kindness and cruelty and inhumanity of any rulers can only be understood in the relative context of the times and culture they lived-in. Greek Tyrants were more tyrannical than the Persian ones. But they were less cruel than the Greek Dictators that came after them: and the Greek polis gangs, or police

1202

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1203

gangs that ousted them. Persian Tyrants were more powerful and more tyrannical than the Kings they supplanted. It is all relative.

The Greek Tyrants soon learned that all kindness and gentleness was instantly interpreted by the lower class of landed robbers; as a fatal sign of weakness. Who attacked these kind rulers, and forced them to rule more harshly, merely to keep from being thrown out of their own polis... which they had built mostly with their own money.

These Tyrants found that if they did not keep a standing army in their polis's, the less wealthy landowners always found some excuse to oust them and take over their wealth and their property and their buildings. Because of this reactionary backlash by the rich Greek Billionaires called Tyrants: the winning gangs of citizens appealed to the working poor, and the slaves to rise up in rebellion against the rich tyrant dictators. The losing gangs were stripped of their wealth and driven out of the Polis, and never mentioned in history books.

But many times; the rule of these rich Greek Billionaires was so mild, and kind: that the entire populations of these polis's flatly refused to raise one finger against their beloved tyrants, because they knew the rich citizens were even worse, even greedier, and more full of hate and invented all kinds of jealous reprisals against everyone rich or poor in their fanatical zeal to purify their polis of all corruption. The entire history of Pre-Roman Greece is a snaffle of plots, betrayals, jealousies, hate, and vindictiveness. Anyone who was too famous, too nice, too kind, too rich, or too anything, was ousted and banished from these Polis on some trumped up charge, or excuse, or lie. Envy and jealousy of anyone better than they were was one of the rotten roots of the original Greek citizenships. Why? Because everyone was better than these first scum-citizens were.

The infighting within these cities spread throughout all of Greece. Why? Because there was so much hate and envy and greed inside these Greek cities: that if they did not find an external enemy to project, and vent their repressed fury upon: they would have destroyed themselves. Until finally; the rivalry between these Polis became so savage; that these early cities spent most of their wealth fighting against each other, and destroying each other. After they had nearly destroyed themselves one time too many: some person had the bright idea of fighting ritualistically as a pantheon of athletic Prowess to determine which polis would reign supreme in stature and fame for four years.

This did not stop them from constantly warring against each other in-between the Olympic games as they were called. It simply gave the wars a brief holiday; where all the armies sent their favorites, most lovely, most virtuous homosexuals to preen in front of the admiring homosexual audiences.

The sexuality and the story of Greek sexuality is hidden in so much secret rape, and sodomy of children: all that can be gleaned from records, is that raping young boys was eventually frowned upon when they discovered that the rape-victims turned out to be lousy warriors: because they did not like killing people. The entire dynamic of Republics, and the Greek citizenship they were based upon; destroyed Greece so thoroughly, that it never again became a political power again. By the time the Peloponnesian Wars ended: Greece was an impoverished land, with an elite culture of dilettante homosexuals. Who hid the origins of their homosexuality: as a cultural defense against exposing the ritualized-normalized rape of their own children.

What has the legacy of the Greek Golden Age given the Greeks today? Some still practice their sexual perversions in secret: and reveal their own guilt by how they project their hate. Some still call the Turks who ruled them for over a thousand years: a bunch of dirty cowards and pederasts. This is crucial to understanding and uncovering human corruption. This is extremely important in uncovering and exposing all and any human corruption. It happens everywhere, all over the World.

1203

Accusing somebody else of what you are guilty of; is one of the most common ways of deflecting suspicion away from your own criminality. You escape being suspected by distraction. By making people look in the opposite direction.

If you ever succeed in accurately accusing a guilty person of corruption... strongly and directly enough. If you ever accuse them of something they are actually guilty of. If you ever attack them honestly and courageously enough so they are forced to defend themselves against your accusation. If you ever accuse or criticize them strongly enough so they feel they have to defend themselves. They will almost always point the finger at someone else.

The number one most common reaction of a guilty person accused accurately and directly of what they are indeed guilty of is deflection... instantly, reflexively, automatically blaming someone else doing the exact same thing they are guilty of. If you pursue your accusation against the actually guilty person who was the instigator: they will always try to still evade your accusation by saying that somebody else did it first to them. That they only retaliated. The other person did it first. They only reacted to it. No coward, no criminal, no rapist will ever admit they actually instigated anything. No human is willing to say they cast the first stone.

Why?....

Because if anyone is foolish enough to confess to any crime: then their society attacks and sacrifices the one honest criminal in their midst in order to cover up their own collective guilt and all their collective crimes which they are collectively guilty of. Using the most honest, the most innocent, the purest amongst them as a scapegoat. So they can feel better than him or her; who is burned at the stake or tortured or covered in tar and feathers, or hung, or shot, or jailed, or put into stocks, or ostracized. Using every form of punishment. Using the sneakiest, most underhanded, convoluted, complicated ways; to cement the status quo into a frozen immovable unchangeable hierarchy to feel safe inside its womb of cultural blindness human call normality.

If you try to accuse President Bush Jr. of being a hater, a fear monger and a demonizer: trying to terrorize his own Nation into living in constant fear. He will defend all of his own actions righteously by saying that he was only reacting to being attacked first. If you accuse a Greek man of being a pederast: he will say that the person he raped, raped him, not the other way around. That it was the Turks who did it to the Greeks first. Or whatever excuse or lie they can find. Every human caught in a lie instantly finds a convenient excuse to justify their actions.

Not that Turkish culture is any better: they imported their own oriental forms of cultural corruption long before the Golden Age of the Greeks. In fact: most of what we call Greek culture is actually Persian. The Greeks stole everything they could from the Persians. The Greek Golden Age is merely a pinnacle of 350 years of the exported Persian Empire culture. What did this Empire-culture produce as an after-effect... that has lasted now for 2,500 years?

A hidden hate for all children. A hidden fear of all women. The emasculation of all boys. The hidden, secret, cultural practice of child rape, and infant rape. Greek women who are stronger, more honest, and braver than Greek men. A Macho culture of the lowest ignorance possible. Greek men as braggarts. Strutting, pompous, fat, lazy haters: who preach hate, practice hate, and hate themselves and hate their own women... and are henpecked and browbeaten by them. Greek men who boast of their maleness, and sexual virility, and publicly denounce and hate all pederasts... Tons of sick sexual innuendos about homosexuality, and sodomy... Methinks the Greek men doth protest too loudly. What cultures try to constantly and publicly reinforce how macho they are? They are the weakest, most pussy whipped, most latent homosexual cultures. The lowest, most powerless, most raped cultures. The lowest brutes, the biggest cowards.

Compare the folk dances of Spain to the ones of Greece. In Spain it is the woman and the man who strut, not just the men. The man simply follows her lead. In Greek dances; the women are not even allowed to participate in this age-old custom of homosexuals showing off their wares. In Spain; it is the woman who shows off their wares. Why? Because the Spanish resisted the Roman incursions into their land longer and harder than many others did. Look at the surviving older cultures today. The ones that fought imperial power longer and harder; are the cultures that are proudest of themselves. The ones that succumbed the easiest; are the weakest wimpiest cultures around. There are reasons for everything. If you look for them in perspective, and put them into their proper context.

What is the actual difference between Greek males strutting openly together in public? And Spanish male and female dancers strutting around in public? They barely move their bodies...they are not dancing. They are only showing off their arrogance and male or female machismo in public... how they can crush everything under their feet as they posture themselves into grotesque, ugly, ritualized, physical expressions of pride and pomposity and egoism. Both of these rituals of showing off are symptoms of cultural sickness. Only: Greek strutting is more openly homosexual, and weaker than Spanish folk dancing. The Spanish were an Empire and lived as arrogant snobs more recently than the Greek's. Their strutting pomposity is fresher by 2,000 years.

The Romans admired Greece for their Art, their warrior culture. Their own roots were Greek to begin with. They worshipped Greek History, Greek Culture, and the Greek Language... especially the history of their wars. Rome was a cultural offshoot of Greece. The original Romans came from Greece. The original Etruscans living in Italy were crushed and sublimated into a sterile Greek culture that had its roots in Spartan ideas, culture, and tradition.

Sparta was a Greek military dictatorship. They refused to do any trading or business at all. Relying exclusively upon raids and wars to keep afloat. Big mistake. Whenever their specialized killing-culture went into a dry spell they starved.... So they made a virtue out of necessity; and practiced an ascetic lifestyle that came to be admired by the other Greek warrior cultures. The Spartans became so impoverished when there was no war that they began hiring themselves out to rich trading Polis' as mercenaries... just to make ends meet. Turning their entire Spartan cultural ethic of independence into a hypocritical, public joke. Until the other Polis came to despise them for their blatant two-faced public morality which could not be maintained, or respected by even their own slaves, their own Kings, or their own elite.

Sparta was actually an amalgamation of two cultures. One was a lesbian culture of women who hated men. The other was a homosexual culture of men who hated women. They created a pact, a tolerance for each other by living separately and not socializing with each other for all of their lives. Marriages were formal rituals: created only to perpetuate the tribes. The only time a wife and a husband met: was to propagate to have children. Even this was avoided so much: that the state was forced to making it compulsory. Since neither of the sexes could stand each other: the act itself was allowed only in a completely blackened room where neither could see the other. The woman was supposed to shave her head, and the man had to put a bag over his head. Western culture is based upon the revulsion of sex, and sexual shame. Sex is dirty. Sex is shameful. Why? Only now; are the archeological remains of the waves of Amazon nomadic tribes coming out of Asia being unearthed, and scientifically verified. Burial mounds with Amazon warrior priestesses buried with their weapons and sacred beads are being found all over the Steppes of Russia and Asia.

The Amazon, and homosexual tribes could not stand each other. The Amazons despised all males, and the males all feared the Amazons. The Spartan tribes of lesbians and male homosexuals copulated in revulsion of each other, as the only way to avoid smelling, or seeing each other. Copulating in revulsion, fear, disgust, and hate... touching each other as little as possible in order to have to have children as blindfolded animals. But even this did not work. Many of their marriages did not produce children at all, simply because the couples could not stand touching each other enough to have sex at all. This is the kind of human filth we all worship today as the seed of our own vaunted Western traditions. This is how they had children. What kind of sick monsters did they create from these kinds of unions? Read the history of the Spartans. Sift the truth from the lies and your eyes will be opened.

The ruling class of the Spartans became extinct. They died out so fast: that by the time Rome became an Empire: there were no more elite Spartans left alive. Imperial Rome used Sparta as a sexual tourist attraction... with public displays of whipping naked boys, and other sexual perversions. It was Spartan culture the Romans loved so much. They idolized, and glorified the Spartans even more than they idolized and glorified the Athenians. This is the groundwork of mythical and cultural lies that Western culture is based upon. The Romans added to this filth. Laying the groundwork for our all of our political traditions and culture.

Spartans hated, and despised the greedy citizens of the other polis' in the beginning of the Golden Age of Greece... While at the same time, envying them their wealth. Their own ethic of ascetic sparseness and hardship had grown out of necessity; because of the rocky soil and the harsher conditions they lived in. They were far more vulnerable to attack than the other Greek cities. They were situated at the very tip of the Greek Peninsula. This is one reason why they became more warlike. From constantly fighting off the raiding parties of pirates.

However once they became affluent: they became even weaker and even more corrupt than the other affluent Greek Polis. They hated Athens mostly because Athens was the richest polis of them all. Perennially; the Spartans plotted ways to destroy it. Every year; these two Greek Polis's plotted, and planned...trying to destroy each other. The History of the West was supposed to be born in Greece. The truth is: that the Greek Polis invented and created a more intense level of hate, bloodshed, violence, rape, looting, lying, brutalization and dehumanization as a social norm of human existence.

But because they were more dehumanized... because they loved dead things more than living things. They poured all of their energy into stone. They built more graceful stone buildings, they made more detailed statues of naked muscled homosexual men and boys. Oops.

As far as historians and history is concerned: Greece's actual history of its human beings is not worth one shit, compared to the stone crap it produced. As long as tourists and the Greeks themselves can gape and wistfully at rotting dead stone ruins, and wish for such a Golden Age; to reappear... Who cares how much human hate and practice of deceit, and brutality there was? Who cares what kind of human filth they were? Their revered Stone-art was a result of the homosexualization of an entire culture. Children were raped so badly; that they fled from their own society; to work safely as homosexual artisans, obsessed with the bodies of muscled naked male athletes... so they would not be forced to go out every year as citizens... to kill people in their yearly raiding and wars.

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1207

The word 'police' comes from the paid, organized gangs of armed thugs that the rich city-dwellers of these Polis hired: to keep their own lower classes in their place; through fear, intimidation, and physical violence. Because they were so rich, they didn't want to do their own dirty work.

The historical accounts of Pericles is a perfect example of the basic corruption of Ancient Greek culture. Pericles almost managed to single-handedly improve the life of Athens as a polis.... But he was betrayed, envied, and hated for it; by all of his peers in Athens. They plotted against him; and finally succeeded in destroying him, and destroying all the plans he had for improving Athens as a culture, and as a polis.

The same dynamic happened later to Caesar in Rome. As happened to every Roman after him who was even slightly better than their peers at anything... except in hate, greed, lying, cunning, and fear. The best haters always rose to the top of their social orders. The best lovers were always spurned and laughed at; or raped and killed.

What is the Homeric legend of the siege of Troy; but the hatred of men against a beautiful women, and their need to ravage and rape her? The attempt of an entire Greek male culture trying to rape the most beautiful woman in the Hellenic World. A woman so beautiful: an entire Age was named after her. And we are supposed to be proud of these raping shits as being heroic? This is what historians try to sell us. This is what they try to teach us.. Every worshipped Myth of history is an obscene lie. Every human Myth ever spawned is a complete opposite of the actual truth.

The motivating passion of Homer's tale of Troy: is the hatred of males for female beauty, and the need to despoil it. And the touted, glorified love of homosexual male killers for each other. Homer's Odysseus is the same basic plot. Except Odysseus returns to belatedly, just barely; save his wife from suffering the same fate which had been meted out to Helen of Troy. A fact which no scholar can get around. The rapist's wife should never be raped. Rapists should get away with everything. And never have to be punished by suffering the same fate they inflicted upon their victims. We can't have that in any Myth now; can we?

One reason why that tale is the favorite of all the Greek Myths is because Odysseus was the least corrupt of the Greek raiders. He tried diplomacy. He was the most cunning of the killers. He was the best liar. The best rationalizer. He was the peacemaker. The best betrayer, the sneakiest, oiliest rapist. He invented the tactic of the Trojan Horse. Infiltrating an alien culture and destroying it by using its own weaknesses, and its own destructive Myths against them. The horse was worshipped as a God in Troy. So Odysseus built a huge wooden horse, and hid Greek warriors inside it and left it outside the gates of Troy, while all of the Greeks decamped and sailed away. The Trojans seeing their enemies gone, and leaving a wooden God at their gates hauled in the wooden horse-God. That night the Greeks hiding inside it crept out, opened the gates of Troy from the inside: and let in the rest of the entire Greek army, and looted Troy and burned it to ashes. Killing everyone in it, raping all the females in it. And Odysseus was praised by Homer for his oily cunning. He was worshipped as the wisest Greek who ever lived. Try to worship a human for this kind of obscene cunning today, and see how far you get in public approval of such an act like Odysseus planned, thought-out, led, and committed. But... since blind Homer labeled Odysseus as being wise 2,900 years ago. Since this blind Myth is that old. Every person who blindly reads the Iliad and the Odyssey swallows Homer's propaganda uncritically. The Odyssey is full of blindness. It is full of the dynamics of blindness and deafness. Odysseus had to have his ears stuffed with wax: so he could steer between two rocks and not be wrecked. So he could avoid choosing between good and evil. The one-eyed giant is blinded. His Greek countrymen escape being killed and eaten by hiding themselves under the bellies of sheep. The giant has only one eye in the center of his forehead. Only one perspective: the insane perspective of savagery: eat! Consume! A monster who eats his victims whether they be sheep or men. It is all the same for him. He is the cultural ancestor of the modern consumer. The blinded giant in rage feels for them, he only feels the wool of the sheep the Greeks are hiding under. Wolves in sheep's clothing. They escape death and being eaten by hiding under the bellies of sheep. The Greeks escaped total destruction by pretending to be timid sheep so the Romans wouldn't exterminate them. Odysseus is only recognized by a blind old shepherd. A blind useless shepherd who is too blind and too old to guard his flock. Nobody else recognizes him. Not even his wife or his son recognizes him. Everyone in the story is blind. Everyone back home is blind to his true identity.

1207

The symbols of blindness in Greek Mythology have been screaming and shrieking to whoever wants to listen and learn the truth: that Ancient Greeks were the blindest dupes, the most evil brainwashed, stupidest human fools a culture ever created. Their statues are without eyes. Their lies turn a blind eye to all truth. Their culture is the tradition of turning a blind eye to truth and pretending that truth does not exist. All human civilizations are based upon myths of blindness. Take the Norse sagas. Odin: the King of all the Norse Gods ostensibly gave one of his eyes to the Raven for wisdom. Huh? Make yourself blind in one eye so you can see better? The culture of ancient Greece was a culture of insane mental detachment: their myths of the King of the Ancient Greek Gods Zeus: was born out of the head of Titan. He was not born out of a female God. He did not come from a female womb. He appeared fully-formed out of the forehead of Titan as an idea, a concept.

The symbols of the human subconscious are direct. They are obvious. They cannot be mistaken. The origin of ancient Greek culture came from a huge, older god. A god so huge: that the king of Greek gods came out fully formed from his forehead. This symbol shows how the Greeks handled the brain's big bang of realization of modern human awareness called the Sense of Pure Wonder. Their best defense against the evil of their own culture was detaching their entire fucking culture from the older gods, and inventing a new set of destructive deities from the brain of the older deity; Titan.

This was their new cultural ploy, their new defense against pain and truth. The psychobiologic invention of cutting your brain off from your body so completely: that you were only born as an idea.. Cut yourself off from being born from a mother. Cut yourself from being born from the older Gods. Be born only as a mental idea. Have mental ideas become Gods. Develop a culture of mental detachment that was so insane: it could not be naturally born. This was the new blindness of the Greeks. Blind yourself to everything except a detached mentality which lies to you with every step you take.

Odysseus hid under the belly of a sheep to creep out of the cave of the Cyclops... and blinded him. To escape being killed and eaten like a sheep. In order to survive: Greek culture had to blind the one-eyed Gods, the one-eyed Giants. And hide under the bellies of sheep. Like the worst cowards: even more stupid than sheep, even more frightened than sheep. Escaping their own slaughter by pure cunning and cowardice. The unsuspecting innocent sheep who believed their lies and listened to them: were led to their own slaughter. That is what happened. Greek culture was snuck out of Greece in sheep's clothing. It was actually a devious filthy killing culture of such insane dishonesty and denial: their cherished myths are worse than the crazed dreams of a madman.

Greek culture, and especially Roman culture; was based upon social jealousies of the worst kind. Every Greek citizen had to be a public hypocrite in order to avoid being killed outright by their own Polis. Literally by their own police... Socrates was not even rich enough to be a citizen of Athens; so he was not targeted. But they killed him anyways, because he was deemed a bad influence on the young people who listened to him; as he humorously laughed at the stupidities of Athens's rich citizens. As a matter of fact; he insisted upon being put to death. The city council only killed him grudgingly... and suspiciously. Their suspicions were well-founded. By this one public, publicized, living example of complete scorn and indifference for death and dying: Socrates became the original symbol of all Western mental courage. Until the historical Jesus repeated this mock trial and his example of public scorn and indifference for his own death defined moral courage as the courage of a helpless victim and martyr willingly going to his death without fighting back.

What kind of positive example did Socrates leave behind? What kind of positive energy did he generate after he died? He left behind an example only of mental courage. He left behind an example of token, mental curiosity as being the highest form of courage. Not emotional courage. Not physical courage. Not even moral or ethical courage. Only mental courage. An insane, foppish, dandyism. A spoiled, effete, dry, ironic, removed, abstract, mental curiosity... stinking of mental arrogance and indifference. Without any emotional passion, or physical bravery. He himself could not stand his own son... whom he had mis-raised so badly, that he was a complete idiot, and an embarrassment to the most intelligent human Athens ever had. That is his actual living legacy he gave to the future. Supposedly intelligent parents raising their children offspring to become stupid because they do not know the first thing about babies, or humans, or what it means to be human.

His legacy, his brand of mental curiosity and of mental insanity: comes to us directly from him, down to Plato, down to Aristotle, and ultimately: to all of Western culture. And has become the Evil known as 'Science'. His cultural legacy has been to glorify specialized fields of mental knowledge, as the highest form of human curiosity and courage in Western culture.

Has any living example of courage; fighting actively against evil, with a total indifference and scorn for your own death ever been admired and followed? No. The courage of resistance, the examples of courage in the face of evil, the examples of resisting evil actively do not exist in human history at all. Why? Because they were all killed by the killers: who defined active courage as killing your enemy safely without dying yourself. Meaning that civilized humans have turned the definition of cowardice into a definition of courage. 12,000 years of civilized humans have been brainwashed into believing this bullshit. Until millions of idiots kill each other because others safe behind the lines tell them to.

What if you reversed the order of battle in all wars? Have the highest authorities; the Gods, the Kings, the leaders, fight each other first... before millions of their suckers, robots, slaves, soldiers and underlings fight. It will save a lot of lives, and the wars will be over very quickly. In fact: then there would be no wars at all. Because not one of those motherfucking cowards will ever have the courage to risk their own personal death. Because they are not fighting for anything they actually believe in enough to die for. And even if they do: then good fucking riddance to them and their lot, and their class, and all they stand for. And by their own arrant example of cowardice in battle, by exposing their own cowardice in face of the enemy: then they can then be spat upon, and thrown down from their high places, and lose their privileged positions. Do this all the way down the chain of command...until you come down to the really insane killers. Find the butchers who are so psychotically sick; that they actually enjoy killing people, and are so insane and sick; they do not have any courage or fear or cowardice; but only insane hatred for everything alive; including themselves. Then let them kill each other, until all of them are dead. Then you will have no leaders left and no killers left. And a good fucking riddance to all of them. And no civilization either.

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1210

What is the history Ancient Greek Culture? It is a story of Splitness. It is an evolution of splitting yourself off from your body called mental detachment: the idea born out of the mind of an insane ancient God. Sexual detachment. Emotional detachment. Mental detachment. Physical detachment. Metal detachment. They lived like the flies they worshipped. Wearing metal shells, and then detaching their shells from their bodies. They detached the sexes from each other. They detached their minds from their bodies. They detached their emotions from their thoughts. They did not touch each other. They detached their actions from their souls. They used detached masks to act out their cultural insanity. They created abstract symbols and abstract ideas to detach themselves from Nature. They detached facts from truth. They detached everything. This is their legacy: Western civilization 2,500 fucking years of detachment. 2,500 years of insanity.

What did the concept of Citizenship do to Greece? It poisoned Greek culture and helped to destroy its dominance. Did the Romans learn from this self-destructive culture? Instead, they aped it and made it even worse. They instituted their own form of citizenship even more exclusive, and more jealous and nasty. Roman citizenship became an exclusive right; passed on from father and mother, to son and daughter. If either parent was not Roman: their offspring lost that right. During 1,000 years of Roman Rule; the meaning of the word 'citizen' was not what it means today. Today, it means a proletariat legalization of your status in the Nation you live-in. An oath of fealty and loyalty that you must swear allegiance to. But for hundreds of years, during the Roman Empire, millions of people wanted to become Romans and were denied that privilege. The act of asking for Roman citizenship enraged Romans. Supplicants were punished, or ostracized for the temerity of even asking for such a sacred, exclusive privilege.

For hundreds of years: the other Italian polis'... which are now called cities: hated the Romans with a vengeance. Because they became vassal states of Rome; but were refused Roman citizenship. They were refused the right to share in her spoils, refused the right to share in her privileges, her status and her wealth. Much like America is hogging all her Democratic rights to herself, and hogging all of her own wealth to herself... and becoming more and more envied and hated in the process. Just as Rome became more and more envied and hated.

Because of the stingy meanness of the Roman refusal to give their exclusive citizenship to anyone else, the Italian Peninsula was torn by civil wars, and invasions, and political turmoil for centuries. Finally; after Rome had been almost completely destroyed one time too many by the endless wars and hate of all the other Italian cities; for their selfish refusal to grant them citizenship: they finally caved-in; and granted a few of the Italian cities a measly qualified version of their own super-special citizenship; which was actually only a spurious token of fake exclusivity. But it was still a citizenship that was so selective and so unfair, that it ushered in another wave of wars and hate for the Romans because of the unfair ways in which they granted it. Then ...after more centuries, as Rome weakened, and had to bribe her way out of trouble: the Private domains of the rich in the Provinces; finally garnered a weak, qualified status of her exclusive citizenship also. These wealthy billionaires from the provinces could finally have the privilege of visiting Rome; without being spat upon in perfect legal safety by the poorest refuse of the Populi in Rome.

The Populi were the lower class of Roman citizens. This population, this mass of people... these privileged Citizens of Rome... roamed the streets as legally criminalized gangs... creating havoc

1210

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1211

wherever they went. Even today; most historians agree that the Roman masses, or the Populi, were some of the lowest human filth who ever lived. Their bestiality and coarseness and corruption are famous to this day.

The Roman gangs of the Roman Populi were the first modern mobsters and gangsters that lived only in a city... born out of the polis (police) gangs of the Greek Polis. Who once terrorized the artisans and lower classes of their Greek cities. Roman lower class existence became a culture of mob rule, with mob kingpins, and a mob culture that still survives to this day. The city of Paris had the same kind of beginnings as the city of Rome did. Read the Hunchback of Notre Dame... The King of Thieves with his gangs presiding over the poor and sick, and powerless of the lower class. The King of Paris with his armored Knights presiding over the city in the day... ignoring the rats in the sewers and the robbers, brigands, con artists, gypsies, and lower refuse of the poor in the night.

Exactly as the criminal gangs in Rome controlled the Ghettos of the mass populi and the aristocrats controlled the city by the official army. What is the moral message in that book? That the most humane human in Paris at that time... was a sick, tormented, ugly hunchback. That everyone else may have seemed to be nicer... but they were actually all worse than the hunchback. The hunchback at least showed his ugliness honestly. He exposed his sick soul honestly. All the others: including Esmeralda... were more spiritually, morally, ethically, sexually foul than he was.

This polarized culture of the lowest poor creating their own governments and reigns of terror, and hate, and secret killing, was exported from Rome to Sicily. It was born out of the upper Roman elite not giving a shit about the lower classes at all, and leaving them to rot for centuries. The culture of snobbery, disdain and total disinterest about the welfare of the poor by the rich survives to this day in every elite class.

The title of Roman Citizenship gave complete immunity to the holder. All except for what his Peers regarded as a punishable offense... which was almost never. If a Roman Citizen was dragged into a court of his own Peers: there were so many ways to corrupt the process. There was so much legalized bribery, and collusion, and corruption that had already been institutionalized by the rich for hundreds, and thousands of years... that an actually guilty verdict was only handed down once in a hundred years. Only extremely rich citizens could use the Roman legal system. And only as a political tool, or as a way to attack, or rob someone else. The poor were not stupid enough to expect justice, or fairness from a Roman judge.

Aesop's tale of the dog in the manger pales in comparison to the selfish self-destructiveness of the Romans. If you read what the Romans did; with the jealous-selfish hoarding of their citizenship for themselves..., and the excuses they gave for not granting Citizenship... You will lose all respect for anything Roman. It is one of the longest, most boring historical accounts of Cultural, Individual, Mass, Religious: stupidity, viciousness and meanness ever chronicled.

The reason people slaved their whole lives to get Roman citizenship was because Roman Citizenship effectively established perpetual immunity from most Roman Law and all Roman Justice. Roman citizens were considered to be sacred, inviolate. They could not be touched or harmed in any way by anyone who was not a Roman Citizen. If one Roman citizen was killed anywhere outside Rome: an entire Legion of Roman soldiers would march into that town, and kill everyone within reach, loot the town, rape its women, burn it to the ground, and drag the survivors into perpetual slavery and bondage. The children of any slave; were also slaves for life... including all of their offspring. All because one person in their village dared to threaten or harm a Roman Citizen. This was Roman justice: throughout its 1,000-year reign. This is the legacy we uphold and revere as Western Justice today. What was the legacy of this famous revered legal invention called citizenship? A cultural fiction fairytale that is believed-in by all modern, educated humans. Everyone who becomes a citizen is supposed to become protected by the Laws of the Nation they live-in. Even after Rome faded to a lesser state: the status-myth of being a Roman citizen remained. Long after all the Roman armies disappeared; Provinces, and towns clung to their Roman citizenship even though it was useless.

1211

These emasculated Roman communities became sitting ducks for invaders to ravish and loot, simply because they had lived under a military dictatorship called a 'Republic' for so long; that they had no idea of how to defend themselves at all... They were so used to being law-abiding imbecile-citizens, who were not allowed to bear arms; that they still believed they were living inside an actual democratic Republic.. The upshot was, that the barbarians who did not shave their facial hair every day; shaved the shorn Romans easily of their wealth, burned their towns, and let them slave and rebuild their villas back again. Just so they could periodically come back again to loot and burn them to the ground. This was the beginning of the Dark Ages... When the people of the Mediterranean began realizing that wealth without armies to defend it was an open invitation to being robbed and killed.

The concept of citizenship is still an exclusive right today. It is an efficient way to control Nations by only giving certain people the legal right to travel across National borders. Census takers can determine taxes more accurately. But originally... citizenship was never given freely to anyone who wanted it. Rather, it was the meanest, stingiest forms of status, and most exclusive domain of the richest, wealthiest, most corrupted, greediest, most envious humans ever to walk this Earth. By this historical fiction of special status; Nations have managed to sucker their masses to fight and kill each other... only because they are the citizens.

Because civilization has managed to brainwash humans, this abstract fictional identity is more important than human life. This abstract poisoned identity is more important than any other identity. The instant an immigrant becomes a citizen; they begin hating and despising other immigrants who have not yet become full-fledged citizens, for having the audacity of doing what they did. Or, for coming in and stealing their jobs. Why is it their jobs? Because they got here first. Ownership belongs to who get there first. Legalized selfishness. The legalization of ownership as pure selfishness. The first ones to the plate feast. The last ones to the plate starve. Like snarling predators around a carcass. That is the ethic of modern civilization. Hate, meanness, and selfishness. Fighting over the spoils like vicious beasts.

Citizenship is merely another sick form of legalized exclusivity. It has created a wonderful excuse for people to hate; simply because they have lived in a certain Nation longer than others have. It has created the insanity of National identities. The second you become a citizen: you are supposed to owe your life to the Nation you live-in. Citizenship is supposed to define who, and what you are. You are a citizen. Not a unique human. Not a family. Not a religion, not a culture. Not even your own individuality matters to the legal fiction of what citizenship means in a legal court.

Then there is the sacred right of having a job, and the sacred right to work attached to this abstract idea. While millions of poor in other countries who are also citizens have no work... But citizens in rich countries demand this right as part of their citizenship. Simply because they do not living in a poor country where there are no rights of citizenship at all...

Then you have the hypocrisy of redneck lower class citizens enraged at dirty illegal aliens stealing their jobs... jobs that consist of hard, back-breaking, humiliating, menial labor... jobs which they themselves are far too lazy and far too spoiled to ever lower themselves to doing.

While rich multi-millionaires in Los Angeles hire illiterate, uneducated, poor illegal aliens as maids and nannies: so they will not have to pay them as decent wage. So they can treat them like slaves. So they can treat their servants like shit. So they can hire and fire them at will.

If these rich people hired educated white people as their servants: they would not be able to treat them the way they do. They would not be able to feel that they are superior to their servants. They would not feel they are better than the lower class that serves them. Why don't the hundreds of millions of American lower-class rednecks attack the rich white bastards who are actually responsible for hiring poor illegal aliens in the first place?

This is the hypocrisy of racism. What? Accuse someone of my own race and culture for being responsible for the influx of alien cultures and races trampling on my sacred God-Given rights of Citizenship? Horrors, never! Better to hate the Mexicans and Latinos who are poor and who work harder than I do to barely make a living just like me.

But since 95% of the wealth is already tied up by rich whites of my own race and culture: I cannot attack the rich for being responsible in creating social conditions that let illegal aliens easily into America and have them steal jobs from poor whites. After all: poor people fighting other poor people for the few left-over scraps of wealth that has not already been sucked up by the rich is how rich people keep the poor at each others throats, it is how they escape from being hated and attacked by the poor. This is how the cunning deflection of greed and dishonesty works. Blame a scapegoat. Never blame the people actually responsible. Never blame yourself. Never assess the problem accurately and honestly. Never look for root causes of the problem. Never look at yourself critically. Be carefully selective in criticism. Only criticize scapegoats.

Why?

Because the lower class is just as greedy as the rich millionaires who cause the problems of illegal immigration in America. Because rednecks are just a lower class of the same culture as the upper class: they are all greedy robber barons. They cannot attack another member of their own culture even if they are of another class. If they did: they would be attacking themselves because they identify themselves irrationally, illogically with their mortal enemies. They believe whites should stick together as a culture, they believe white millionaires are the same basic culture as poor whites when that is total bullshit. Rednecks cannot accuse greedy rich people of causing the problem because they are just as greedy as the people causing the problem. If white rednecks attacked rich whites for their greed: then they would be forced to look at themselves and at the corruption of their own lower class greed. They would have to look at themselves critically. They would be forced to share the blame.

This is one example of how the selfishness of civilization affects humans. If you are selfish, if you are a one-sided taker: you will develop a one-sided set of values and a one-sided perspective, and a one-sided outlook on things. If you are selfishly one-sided: you will always blame other people. You will never blame yourself. You will always criticize other people. You will never criticize yourself. This is one effect of the exclusivity of citizenship. You end up fighting to prevent other people from enjoying your exclusive rights and privileges.

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1214

What is the attitude of all affluent citizens in affluent Nations towards the rest of humanity?

‘To hell with these poor, ignorant illiterate, unemployed billions of poor: they aren’t living in my country. They aren’t citizens of my Nation... they don’t deserve my rights of citizenship and my right to work...’

Huh?

‘Its not my problem. They’re not my people. They don’t live in my Nation. Besides... there’s nothing we can do. There’s just too many of them.’

?.....

After the 2nd World War: the American Army could have easily taken every dictator on Earth; and shot them all dead and allowed free elections to be held all over the world but they didn’t. America could have easily made sure that the rest of the world had same freedom to establish their own democracies just like they did. Instead; they only gave that exclusive privilege to their former enemies; nobody else... Europe and Japan. They only gave it to Nations of their own class: modern industrialized nations. Nobody else. It was a class war. Fought between the highest class nations: and fuck all the lower class nations after the war. They did not have to give industrialization to any other nations on earth. They already had it. They only re-built the nations who had already become industrialized. They only helped to build the top industrialized nations into an industrial elite. They only gave it to the 2nd best destroyers on the planet. Just as Rome only gave its exclusive citizenship to the 2nd class cities of Italy, to the 2nd best destroyers in the Mediterranean.

To the rest of the oppressed people of the world: they sold their dictators and mass murderers more guns and arms and weapons of mass destruction to keep their masses in line, and to prevent them from getting ever getting any rights of democratic citizenship like they had.

The number one priority of the American government has always been making money for rich American Robber Barons. It has never been to make sure poor people get a fair deal. The last war that a few Americans citizens individually volunteered to fight for in the name of true democracy; was the Spanish Civil War. And they lost. Badly. Their own government tried to stop them from fighting for the freedom of poor people in another country and refused to give any aid to the people of Spain.

Why do people want to become citizens? Fear. Safety. Privilege. If you are not a citizen; then you are open to attack, and injustice. You have no rights. You have no privileges. You have no legality. You have no legal power. You have no legal recourse. You legally cannot defend yourself. You are not allowed to vote. You are not allowed to travel out of the Nation you live in. What is this kind of citizenship; but a jealous harboring of grudges against people who are not of your class? It is because of this sick, ancient Roman-Greek class struggle: that all the billions of citizens around this world today look at citizens of another country with hostility, mistrust and fear.

How was a more humanized version of Roman citizenship recreated again in France? How was the greatest and oldest absolute Monarchy in Europe transformed from the most corrupt Monarchy in Europe to the first modern humanized Republic that was not a complete carbon copy of Rome? By contact with a New World in the West. By The French Colonial outpost of Quebec coming in contact with the biggest trading Nation in North America. The Hurons. Whose territory and trading contacts covered the entire Eastern Seaboard from Cape Cod, to the Mississippi, to Lake Winnipeg, to Hudson’s Bay. The Hurons traded ceremonial pelts between tribes as peace offerings. Seeking to establish allies against the allied tribes of the seven Iroquois Nations whose territory covered the State of New York.

1214

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1215

Their social structure and culture was not like the European French at all.

In fact they were unique.

Communal values were more important to them than property rights. Cooperation and equality was preferred to war. What was important was the Huron Nation and the Huron communities as a cooperative whole. Not the rights of any individuals living inside their communities. The Hurons became go-betweens in the Fur trade. And for once, European colonizers... the French, did not try to colonize them right away. They were too valuable to the rich fur merchants and Lumber merchants in France to antagonize. There were too many of them to go to war against, they were too well organized, and too intelligent, and too sophisticated to be easily bamboozled by European trinkets and lies and religious propaganda.

News of their social structure, how they lived spread to France. Mainly because so many French peasants and peasants sons were defecting and running away from their seigniorial farms. Where they had become spoiled colonial peasants. Given more rights, a higher standard of living, and more privileges than any French peasant ever had in France.

The intelligentsia of France. The elite of French letters. The most renowned philosophers and writers became puzzled at this. European culture was supposed to superior to the backwards culture of naked savages who did not know how to make guns and cannon. When they heard of how the Hurons lived. They idolized and idealized them as 'noble savages', who lived in a land of that was so pure and natural, whose customs were so pure.. that they had escaped being corrupted by civilized vices. French elite like Voltaire and many others espoused these idealized ideas and values which they had garnered from idealizing the Hurons in America whom they had never seen and knew nothing about. They tried to copy Aristotle's attempt to create an imaginary perfect society in a book. They wrote books about creating an ideal Society, an ideal Nation. But they poisoned the ideas of the Hurons. Instead of taking the new Huron society as the role model for a perfect Republic they took the example of ancient Rome instead as being the ideal model for a Republic and some ideas from the Hurons just happened to get included. They preached three universal National objectives. Liberty, Fraternity and Equality. But they preached them in Roman terms of war and glory: not in terms of cooperation and peace. Not in Huron terms.

This was this European mental spark which ignited the imaginations of the elite French who wanted to do away with the King altogether. This was why the French Revolution happened in the first place. Not because French philosophers tried to recreate the filthy Empire values of ancient Rome. But because the communal values of Huron society somehow managed to leak into their writings. It was America. It was the Amerindians... the least greedy trading Nation on Earth, the Hurons. Whose values were based upon the well-being of their people as a whole from which Europe discovered the idea of Modern Citizenship where all citizens were supposed to be completely and universally and unilaterally equal under the Law. This idea never even existed in the ancient Republic of Rome. No Roman citizen ever dreamed they could have any kind of universal equality under Roman Law whatsoever. The idea of Equality and Fraternity came from the Hurons in Quebec.

This is where Modern Democracy actually came from. What did the French do with these three ideas? They threw out Equality, and Fraternity. They threw out all communal concepts the Hurons lived by from their own Constitution. They only kept Liberty. And what kind of Liberty was it? It was the freedom to take liberties with everything which had once been sacred. It was the European version of Liberty. The Liberty to rob and kill and lie. They were still a European, Robber Baron Nation. And took from these new ideas whatever was most convenient for them, what suited them best. So... from their corruption of the idea and values and lifestyle of the North American Hurons: Modern Democracy was born in France.

1215

And so... History books lie about the original concept of Modern Democracy. It did not originate from Europe. It did not come from ancient Greece. It came from North America. From the most peace-loving, most non-violent, most intelligent bunch of united communities ever to have developed an intelligent communal way of living as equals. History has lied, and hidden, and carefully covered up where the idea of Modern Equality, and Modern Citizenship actually came from. How could they print the truth, when they have branded themselves as spreading European ideas of enlightenment around the world for five hundred years? They had to claim these ideas came from their own history: not from a people who they regarded as a bunch of naked savages, whom they destroyed, lied-to, betrayed, and manipulated into extinction. Modern Democracy never came from Rome, or from Roman Emperors, or from Roman Culture.

Roman History is not the only a History full of lies. The entire History of Western Civilization written in history books is a pack of whitewashed lies. Western Civilization was born from the worst practices of destructive selfishness and hate and violence, and war. The Greeks today are still proud of their tiny moment of dominance 2 ½ thousand years ago. Since then, they have had nothing else to be proud of. Other people have stolen their statues and pottery for thousands of years. Now, the few relics that are left... are in museums... and gaped-at in awe; simply because of their age. If you study the actual culture of Greece during this mythic Golden Age: you will find that every myth and fact printed in history books about that time is a complete lie.

Why did the Ancient Greeks build their homes and polis' right on the shores of the sea? Because this way: they could escape the wrath of the world in their ships. They could escape the earthquakes and volcanic eruptions exploding all around them: as the Earth, and Skies and Oceans rose up in revulsion, rage, and disgust at what they were doing to their own children. Why were the Greeks Maritime raiders? Why did they go to sea? For the lust of gold, wealth, yes: but primarily for an even deeper filthier lust: capturing young boys: whom they could rape and sodomize. Every Greek that had weapons and a ship they could get on, or join: went in search of young boys to rape and enslave.

Why did Greek boys become artists? To escape being forced to kill. To escape the fate of being handed over to Greek soldiers and other Greek men by their own fathers and mothers: to be raped and sodomized and inculcated into the sick Greek culture of homosexuality, and killing and death and hate, and lies.

But they did not escape. They became pawns of Greek homosexuality. They were forced to carve homosexual pornographic statues of naked Greek youths and young men for their homosexual patrons and the homosexual public to enjoy. Because their culture was not interested in anything else. They became homosexuals simply because of the homosexual culture they were immersed in.

At this time the Greeks worshipped carrion flies. They worshipped the insect that was destined to spread disease and plague and death to hundreds of millions of humans in the future. Why did they worship the one insect, which spreads more death and disease than any other? Because at that time... their culture was more diseased than any other human culture on Earth. And it has since spread even more death and disease than the carrion flies it worshipped. The Ancient Greeks considered the carrion flies that fed off dead corpses to be sacred. If any Greek so much as swatted one carrion fly: he was doomed to be pursued by the Fates, and the Furies. He was doomed to be cursed by the Gods and suffer a horrible fate, and die a horrible death.

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1217

Oriental potentates once had slaves stirring the air around them with huge fans and feathers in order to keep flies from landing on their royal personage. Flies were attracted to these royal scum because they stank of rotten diseased flesh. Cleaner lower class people did not attract such hordes of flies about them. Who did the Greeks deal with politically? Their elite masters: oriental Persian aristocracy... swaddled in layers of silk. Their sweating stinking corrupt bodies; hidden by expensive scents and perfumes... with slaves being used as human fly swatters all around them.

What wonder is it: that given this peer example of flies gathering and buzzing around Persian nobility...?

The flies were smarter than the Greeks. They could smell the rotting stinking flesh hidden under the swaddled layers of clothes and perfume. Flies are attracted to rotting things. They are attracted to the smell of rotting flesh.

As the flies buzzed and gathered around these royal Persian scum: the Greeks got the idea that whatever attracted flies was somehow royal and sacred? Assuming anything flies gathered around; must be sacred? In a way... The Greeks were trying to find rational reasons for worshipping rotten concepts that were full of lies. They worshipped lies. They also worshipped flies. All royalty is rotten to the core. The Greeks worshipped everything that was more rotten than they were.

Why did the Greeks of that time worship carrion flies buzzing around dead rotting corpses? Because they worshipped the sacredness of death. Carrion flies are signs of death and rot. The entire Greek culture of that Age worshipped filth and corruption... even the filth and corruption of carrion flies. Because carrion flies have a metallic glitter to them. In the hot sun; they seemed to be armored. They seemed to be feeding off the dead souls of the armored, shining, dead soldiers: and ingesting their courage and bravery into them, and gleaming with a metallic splendor. Just as the dead soldiers they fed off of: once gleamed with metallic splendor before the battle. In that Age; people believed that you took on the qualities of whatever you killed and ate. They believed that armed soldiers glittering with shiny armor just before a battle were the most courageous, and the most destructive humans alive. Why did the Greeks attribute shining armor as an attribute of physical killing courage? Read Homer. Read Greek Ancient history. They all polished their armor and helmets and shields and swords until they shone like mirrors. Every hero who was successful; was a shining hero, his armor shone more brilliantly than all the other killers. He slew more warriors than all the rest. Why? Because all of the killers were using the mirrors of their armor, shields, and swords, to blind their foes with reflected and deflected sunlight. Look at how the design of battle helmets became slits for the eyes: protecting the killer from the blinding reflections of the enemy's armor and swords and shields.

Why do you think Greeks only fought in the noonday sun; and stopped when the sun went down? Why was almost every shining hero of Homer's Epic killed by a shinier hero, whose armor shone even more brilliantly? Because the longer they fought, the more covered in dust and sweat they became, the duller their shiny armor became. So when a new killer, entering the fray with his armor nice and shiny; came up against a less shiny armored killer... they blinded him better with their shinier armor. That is the pathetic, sick secret of Greek Courage in battle. Idiots... polishing their armor for days and months: until it shone like mirrors. Until you could actually shock your enemy: with the reflected image of his own hate-filled face... as he saw himself in the mirror of the other killer's shield, and quailed in fear: at the ugliness, and filthiness of his own hate and insanity reflected back at him.

1217

The warrior cultures of Greece was based upon the dynamics of blindness, deflection, projection and reflection. It was based upon the famous figure Greek blind justice. It was based upon Greek plays, with actors wearing masks that had no holes for their eyes at all. This theme of blindness, runs through every Greek Myth, every Greek fairytale, every Greek legend. Oedipus Rex: blinded by lies, and then tearing his own eyes out rather than seeing the odious truth. Greeks; consciously choosing blindness over insight and revelation. Oedipus... consciously choosing to rip his own eyes out rather than see the actual horrible truth about his parents. The Delphic Oracles... born blind at birth. Blind beggars given a special place at banquets and feasts, on behest of the host. Lest the Gods grow angry for them not respecting the sanctity of blindness. Greek culture was: and still is: the blindest human culture ever created. The legacy of Ancient Greece: Science... is the blindest form of human intelligence ever invented.

The statues the Ancient Greeks made were without eyes. They all were eyeless statues because not even their dead token statues could bear to see the actual rape of young boys which these Greek pedophiles committed upon their own children. They were called Grecks. Not Greeks: for a reason.

And who glorified Greek culture? A blind poet. Homer. Homer the blind poet: glorified things he never saw, and never understood. And for 2,000 years we have loved his blind glorifications and lies. Western civilization is the blindest civilization ever created. Blindly destroying the whole Earth... While consciously choosing not to notice it is doing so.

Western legal systems still flaunt the Greek myth-statue of blind Justice.... Weighing the scales of truth impersonally, blindly, objectively.

That myth is pure bullshit.

If Justice is supposed to be blind: then all jurors and judges should be blindfolded. So they will not be swayed by charismatic lawyers. Then no auditory evidence should be allowed; only written-visual evidence to be examined in private: so they will not be swayed by oratory skills, or what a persons voice sounds like. So no prejudice will be created by what color the plaintiff's or defendant's skin color is, or how they are dressed, or what they look like, or how handsome they are, or how sexy they are, or what accent they have, or which class they come from, or if they are rich and famous, or poor and unknown.

The whitewashed image of a statue of a blindfolded woman weighing scales was the epitome of every honest judge, and every honest politician ever to hold power. An honest politician, is one who stays bought. Once they are bribed; they are not supposed to switch horses in midstream to another applicant who has more money. The bribers were supposed to offer their gold to a weigher of gold fairly... at the same time... In public. Whoever had the most gold; won the legal case in question. The woman was merely a lowly weigher of the gold. She was never the decision maker.. She was a slave: and had to be blindfolded so her own prejudice would not interfere with who had the most gold.

The statue represents the concept of honest bribery being legalized as a concept called: Blind Justice. All the evidence brought forth became irrelevant. Justice became blind to all truth. On sale for the highest bidder. An honest statue representing; blind greed. Misinterpreted and whitewashed for 3,000 fucking years.

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1219

This is where the Western concept of justice comes from.

What has been the result? 3,000 years of every Western legal and Justice system: based upon legalized bribery. So thinly veiled; it is like the garb of the statue of Justice: one nipple indecently exposed. As all legalized bribery of all Western justice systems have been indecently exposed, and then covered up again... for 3,000 years.

The statue also represents the ancient Greek whore. The Greek wife. On sale for the highest price. Blindfolded so she will not see the bidders who put their gold on her scales of blind greed. Greek virgins: exposing themselves indecently to raiders and rapists to distract them from their blind lust for gold. Giving their families some precious time to hide their gold while their daughters are raped and sacrificed to keep their family's wealth. Sacrificing honor and name and status; for Greek and Roman greed. And honored for it. Where do you think the culture of Rome's Vestal Virgins come from? Locked away from would-be rapists. Only the richest Roman families were allowed to hide their gold and their daughters from the envious eyes of the poor.

What is the only other surviving female statue of Greek Antiquity that is famous?
Thousands of male statues.
And only one female statue. Which is not even Greek... but comes from Antioch.

The Venus De Milo. A half-naked woman with her arms broken off. A statue representing pure female helplessness because all women of the ancient world were powerless, helpless victims. A statue representing the powerless women who were raped by the Grec men of that era.

Where does Western civilization come from? From the Greek worship of blind destruction. Attacking the most beautiful woman in the world: Helen of Troy... because they were blind to her beauty? Or because they were blinded by it? From the Greek worship of blind killing. Being so blinded by flashing reflections of sunlight glancing off shields and swords and armor: that you did not even see who you killed, or knew how you killed them? The blind Greek hero Hercules: easily duped and manipulated. The killing of Medusa: a beautiful woman with hair made of snakes. By not looking at her beauty; because the killer would be blinded by it. But using the reflection of his shield to kill her with. So he would not be blinded by her beauty. Exposing the Greek homosexual male hate and fear of powerful, beautiful women. Exposing the Greek Lesbian hate and fear of powerful men.

This cunning tactic came from the shield's mirror reflection used in war. Warriors fooling their enemies; by seeming to attack one opponent: when they were actually using their shields as mirrors to see if some unsuspecting enemy behind them, or to one side of them was vulnerable to attack.

They distilled their worship of War and Warriors from their own weapons and how they used them. From the tactics of deflective reflection, from their own blindness, and from blinding their enemies. From blinding themselves as much as possible to the truth.

From the Greek worship of worshipping the flies that ate the dead flesh of their own warriors. Came the distilling of rotting grapes and getting drunk on its poison. The tradition of drinking wine is still being glorified as a sign of culture, and is even espoused as being healthy and good for you. Instead of eating fresh grapes containing tons of natural goodness.

This is where our vaunted Western Traditions come from. From the ancient Greek worship of the

1219

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1220

reflections of their own hate. From the worship of all the reflective dynamics of rotten corruption. From reflecting, and re-reflecting everything they could: into abstractions. From reflecting and projecting everything they could back out onto their victims and enemies.. Their own hate, their own cowardice, their own rape and their own hatred for those who raped them; was deflected away from the truth by their cunning lies of reflection, deflection, and rationalization.

The Greeks conveniently chose to ignore the fact that carrion flies are not brave. These carrion flies did not kill the warriors they fed on. They fed off their dead bodies as scavengers, as cowards, as insect scum. As the lowest level of insects that clean up the dead rot of other killer scum. Their metallic glitter evolved from having to reflect the hot noonday sun when feeding out in the open on rotting carcasses. These carrion flies had to reflect the heat of the sun...to keep their own insect bodies from frying in the hot sunlight. The Greeks conveniently chose not to notice how their apparently brave and courageous warriors died... screaming in pain, and wailing in fear. They chose not to admit the fact that killers never die courageously or bravely. And that the flies feeding off their bodies; were the biggest cowards of the insect realm. Safely Armored from most other insect predators. Just like the safely armored human warrior scum they worshipped so much.

What surprise is it that the most reflective human scum on Earth should worship the most reflective insect scum on Earth? Water seeks its own level. Reflective scum seek its own level.

What was Western civilization's most honest measurement of wealth for centuries? The Troy ounce of gold. Because when the Greeks went to attack Troy 3,000 years ago: their one honest motive was greed for Gold. All their other rationalized motives were not honest. They were false deceptions. Read Aeschylus' Trilogy: The Oresteia. The most famous remaining evidence of this glorious Greek culture. The story of King Agamemnon returning from the sack of Troy. Where he had spent 7 years laying siege; just so he could rape the most beautiful woman in the World: Helen of Troy. And after burning that city to the ground, and despoiling Helen into a worthless hag, and sowing the Earth of burned Troy with salt, so it would never grow again... his entire fleet tried to return to Greece. So many curses and diseases and disasters beset them, that few of them ever came back. That part of the famous myth by Homer is assumed to be known by the audience.

Then; when he returns his unfaithful wife pretends to welcome him home in a royal Triumph. She quickly murders him. Then she and her lover take over the Kingdom. But long before he even left for Troy., so great was Agamemnon's pride and arrogance and jealousy and hate, and meanness, that he had banished his own son from his Kingdom. Then his son, hearing of Agamemnon's murder by his cheating wife; swears to kill his own mother in revenge. Revenge for what?

Revenge for killing a father who hated him, disowned him, and cast him out, and disowned him from his rightful heritage?

No.

That was only the excuse. Actually: Orestes hated his Mother even more than his father. But as long as his father was alive; he was too much of a coward to fight him openly. He did not even dare return to his father's Kingdom. But once his father was murdered by his mother. He snuck back into the palace in disguise, and murdered his own mother. Then he fled the scene like a dirty, guilt-ridden criminal, and then he fled the Kingdom also. With the Furies chasing him. While the God; Apollo protected him from their hate. Orestes was too much of a coward to even think of regaining the right of his Kingship

1220

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1221

and become King. Because his parents had made sure that he would grow up far weaker, more traumatized, sicker, and more evil than they ever were.

Then a council of the Gods was assembled. Orestes' crime was debated and discussed. By two sides. One side demanding he be punished for Matricide. The other side claiming his innocence. The votes are tallied in secret and it comes out a tie. He is released, and not punished. But neither is he absolved from his crime. In other words: the fix was in. The Gods held a mock trial of a mortal. And let him get away with it. That is the filthy, rotten origin of our modern legal system. It stands today as an exact replica of that 2,500 year-old fictitious myth turned into a Greek whitewashed play.

Ancient Greek culture was a mockery. It was a mockery of Justice. It was a mockery of fairness.

What is the ancient idea of Greek Democracy?

It is a mockery of dethroning the aristocracy.

It is a mockery of the public demonstrations of the masses

Mock, De, cracy... mockery-Demo-crazy: mockery of the crazy. A demonstration of craziness. Mobs demonstrating their craziness. Demonstrations of craziness. Orators standing in front of a mob of crazed people, fooling them with lies.

Crazy rich Greeks making a mockery of the idea of equality. Crazed mobs being fooled into believing they have anything more than momentary power.

To De-throne the King: then the aristocracy is left. The aristocracy is cunning. It changes its name. It changes its culture. But it hangs on to its wealth... it hangs onto its privileges. It never lets them go.

Their plays were all about the forbidden sin of mocking the Gods. Their entire culture was a mockery of Persian culture. They mocked everything and everybody.

The actual horror of this filthy Greek play is a marvel of whitewashed propaganda. It is dressed up in ritualized, sanctified, choruses and songs and poetry. See if you could make a movie of the same plot today. See if wives killing husbands who are rapists and killers themselves, and sons killing their own mothers after their mothers kill their father is something Hollywood can dress up as a normal family today. How can you hide the truth about the human filth that were these people?

But the Ancient Greeks lapped it up. They loved it. It was the most famous Trilogy ever played in Athens. Why?... Because it publicly supported and justified and rationalized their entire culture, their values, their attitudes and their customs.

This is another example of how culturally sick they were. The word: 'play' comes from this ritualized insanity of words spoken behind masks. A Greek play is actually a ploy, a Greek Plot; trying to explain why their own Gods hated them so much. Playing with a plot by using ploys. The first plays were enacted behind frozen masks depicting Greek Gods and Mythical entities. That was the only kind of 'play' they could conceive of. Everyone sitting around: watching ritual masks play-out their cultural insanity in public. Ancient Greek culture was a subconscious scream of pure horror; hidden behind leering, ugly, abstract, inhuman masks.

The fact that Ancient Greeks actually worshipped carrion flies buzzing around dead, rotting corpses in

1221

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1222

the battlefield, and in the marketplaces, and in their Polis, and anywhere dead animals lay dead... is only one small symptom and evidence of the rotting filthy culture that once was Ancient Greece. All of the earliest, most sacred Greek plays are filled with nothing but pure torture, suffering and human corruption so horrible; that if any modern human committed such filthy crimes the characters in these Greek plays were supposed to have committed; they would be placed into insane asylums or be executed as insane psychopaths, and be regarded as worse than all the modern Ted Bundys of the World, and all the serial rapists, and all the murderers put together.

Read The Oresteia by Aeschylus. Read: 'The Flies' by Jean Paul Sartre; It was written after the 2nd World War; by a French Resistance fighter in that war. Sartre could not find any meaning to that War, or his own countrymen, or Mankind, for that matter. Sartre's ultimate rationalization for human civilization was that it was all too absurd for words. It was so absurd... that later in his life, when he tried to put that absurdity into words... he ended up with Nothingness. Or more correctly: his famous existentialist philosophy, which he outlined in painstaking logical detail in his famous book: 'Being and Nothingness'. But Sartre's logic was badly flawed. He did not understand the actual truth behind the ancient Greeks worshipping flies. He tried to logically explain the absurdity of human existence; without using any humor to do so. Try to explain music without using musical notes! That is like trying to explain absurdity without being absurd. It can't be done. It is no surprise people laugh at philosophers today.

Read 'The Lord of the Flies' by William Golding. An English author, who tried re-creating human society from scratch by having an entire group of innocent British School boys surviving a plane wreck on a tropical Paradise Island. Read how the boys descended and regressed into the Stone Age brutality and mysticism and murder and killing: which was the original root of the culture they had come from. Why were the flies in Golding's book so important that he included them in the Title? Why did Sartre name his adaptation of Aeschylus' original Tragedy: 'The Flies'? Because he realized that worshipping carrion flies 2 ½ thousand years ago was no more absurd or insane than what Modern Europeans worship today.

Because all of civilization. The roots of our civilization. All the buried truths of our vaunted, glorified civilization is so rotten, so stinking with rot: that only carrion flies, only the lowest scavengers, only the lowest inhuman filth flourish in it.

How did Aeschylus die? By an eagle mistakenly dropping a turtle onto his bare pate; thinking it was a stone. Why? Because neither the creatures of the air, the sea, or the land, could stomach the filth that came out of his rotten mind. His mind, his brain, his skull were so dead... it stank so much of pure death: that there was almost no energy difference between the brain of Aeschylus and a solid dead stone. He was punished and killed by a combination of animals killing him, that represented the entire World of Nature finally crushing a sick imagination so foul: that unless you have some understanding and perspective on what kind of human he actually was, and who he actually was, and what his life actually was made up of... and what he stood for: his death becomes a freak accident that was too weird to make any sense. Read all of human history. Read all of the history of Western Civilization from Aeschylus up to the present day. And you will begin to get a glimmering of how from his personal legacy: how much human insanity has been spawned from his sick plays. You will not understand why he met this weird, unheard-of kind of death; unless you understand what Ancient Greek Culture actually was, and what kind of human filth Aeschylus actually was.

Where do you think the word 'lies' comes from? From the word: 'Flies'. From the rotten carrion flies of Greece, the lies of Greece... that have since multiplied, and flourished, and spread out over the Earth; by such people as Aeschylus and his rotting words. His words spread as human lies: instead of as insect flies. That is what lies do. They flourish off rotting corruption. They are created by killers. Killers of animals. Killers of truth. They multiply and wax fat and buzz around the dead stinking corpses of truth. Becoming ever more numerous, and feeding from the dead corpses of truth until there is no truth left, but only a host of buzzing lies. That search for more dead carcasses of truth to feed upon. Until there is no truth left. Only lies. Only the lies of history.

1222

The lies of Aeschylus were destined to be worshipped by people 2,000 years later; who have become even more corrupt than the first Greeks watching the first Greek Tragedies. By people watching movies, and watching TV. Knowing consciously that the stars and stories on TV and in Movies is all a pack of fake lies.... And yet still they worship them. The lies of Aeschylus fly around the world today electronically as Flying Lies.... As flies. Only faster, and more effectively, and more numerous than they ever were in Homer's day.

If you do still not believe Western culture is rotten to the core: consider the most ancient Western musical instrument. Invented by the Greeks: it is called a 'liar'... it was used by warriors at night at camp. They passed the 'liar' from one to the other as they sat by the fire. They used it to sing of their exploits and deeds they had done on the battlefield that day. They used it to sweeten the lying words they uttered. Western music is a sweetening of lies. Lies sung by western liars using lyres to make the lies sound nice...

Oh. Excuse me: the name for the most ancient Greek musical instrument is not spelled: liar: It's spelled lyre...as in lyrical ... preserving the older spelling: instead of the modern one... The ancient lyricism of Greece: its legends, myths, words and music, and poetry etc; are all sweetened lies. Sugarcoated lies. Whitewashed lies. A Greek liar, using a Greek lyre: to sing lies... This is where all Western music came from. And ever since then: it has been used to glorify the winners and lie about them. Music has been used to glorify the worst monsters in human history. Music is used to preserve lying fables, lying myths, lying fairytales, lying stories, etc. It is never used to glorify the truth ever. Exceptions to this rule do not exist. You cannot find any. Music spreads lies: not truth.

How did Science learn about human DNA? Where did they learn it from? Where does the basis of nearly all modern DNA scientific data come from? From the DNA of fruit flies. From flying lies. Why do you think Science is the rottenest bunch religious Greek garbage ever to be sold-to, and swallowed by humans? Because that is what all of their scientific beliefs are: pure garbage. Understanding the building blocks of Life. That supposed understanding, taken from the most short-sighted, short-lived insects on Earth. Taken from believing in the rottenest filthiest lies, and spreading them like a disease-religion to the ignorant masses. The ancestors of these scientists once worshipped carrion flies. Worshipping them as the fastest way to spread disease, and lies.

There are subconscious reasons for everything we do not consciously understand.

Just because something is old does; not mean it is sacred. If you look for the uncomfortable truth with a critical and discerning eye, and heart and mind: you will find it. Look at what humans worship mindlessly today. Question everything; but do it intelligently. Make intelligent comparisons that are in a connected context. Evaluate your comparisons. Digest them. Develop more than one perspective. Wonder about everything. Try to understand everything in its proper context. You will be amazed at what you learn.

Look at the helmets of Greek warriors, and how Greeks portrayed them being worn. Stuck up over their heads, tilted at an angle. With a reptilian beak sticking out over their foreheads. They give an impression that their brains are enlarged bubbles. That the blind eyes of the their helmets are staring forever upwards. Blindly. The impression that their brains are bigger is only an optical illusion. Actually: the extra volume that their helmets seem to give to their brains is only empty air under their metal helmets. Screaming out that these men were empty-headed, blind, reptilian killers. With an exaggerated idea of their own intelligence, and the importance of their brain-size.

Look at modern fashion models today. Tyra Bank's skull; is a perfect example of the bubble-headed Greek warrior, shown in countless preserved artifacts of ancient Greece. Her brain has actually become swollen: to the size these images show. Her brain is as empty as helmeted Greek Warriors once were. Only her outer brain is not filled with empty air like Greek warriors pulled-back helmets. It is filled with empty, unused brain cells. The worship of the human brain, the worship of brain-size, brain-power: is over 2,700 years old. It produced Greek killers. Now it is producing empty-headed, brainless idiots like the fashion model; Tyra Banks. Tyra Banks? A bubble-headed, spoiled imbecile: who loves to go on tirades... banking the money she gets from her Tirades on TV. Getting filthy rich from her tirades on TV. A Tyrant who banks their money. A Tyrant who loves power and control. Who loves getting a crowd into an uproar, who loves adulation and fame. Ancient Greek Tyrants loved to do the same thing. The English language still retains the meaning of Greek Warriors who tilted back their helmets; to get a better view of the battle. They were the group leaders of each band of warriors. They were the supervisors.... Super... Visor... If your visor is higher than the others: you must be the supervisor. The one with better vision who tells the others what to do and coordinates activities... Supervisor-Supervision... Better vision. Get it?

What historian would dare to admit that the Greek Golden Age was actually the Age of Pure Selfishness and homosexual narcissism; bordering upon maniacal idiocy. What Historian would admit that Alexander the Great was a crazed, bloodthirsty, egomaniac: who killed his own people in his drunken rages when they refused to worship him as a living God.... Having a childhood friend killed who refused to bow down to him when he became drunk and demanded to be recognized as a God. What kind of Stalin, or Hitler would publicly strip one of his own generals naked, nail his wrists and ankles to a wooden cross and crucify that general for disagreeing with him? Imagine Hitler or Stalin nailing one of his generals to a wooden cross and watching him die slowly... in front of the entire army. Would you worship and revere a leader who not only could do this, but actually did it?

Historians try to play down Alexander's murderous insanity. They tried to make out that Alexander's wishes were misunderstood. That he was actually a nice guy. However... Alexander never punished the murderers who killed his friend for refusing to admit he was a God. What does it speak of the kind of man he was: when people wishing to get into his good graces went about killing anyone he quarreled with, and he does not even chastise them for it in public? Historians have nothing to say about Alexander crucifying of his own generals in public. Except to carefully delete this inconvenient fact from 90% of all historical accounts of his life: this one tiny indication of what a kind of a madman and butcher he actually was.

Do historians or History; ever criticize Alexander for being a murdering monster? Never. He was a winner. All winners are good. All winners are God. He is universally lauded by historians as being a civilizing force for good. He spread the glory of Greek civilization everywhere he went. That's a good thing, isn't it?

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1225

What does the worship of Alexander the Great prove? It proves that the lesson of civilized history is this: It does not matter if you kill, murder, and butcher thousands, even millions of people. As long as you are a winner; you will be worshipped and idolized by your peers, by your society, by history, by posterity, by historians, and all the future generations of humans forever. Your name and fame will become immortalized in legend and Myth. You will be remembered as a mighty killer. Your name will live forever. That is where the cultural birth of all the greedy Robber Barons of the Dark Ages came from. As a matter of fact: the more people you kill, the more famous you become. The more people you kill, the more powerful you become. The more glorious your fame and renown becomes. This is one obvious effect that civilization has had upon humans.

However: the uncomfortable fact that our species will not exist forever is not mentioned. The uncomfortable fact that when humans go extinct: the immortality of these supposedly immortalized names and legends will vanish is never mentioned. The fact that the instant any other culture or civilization manages to win and dominate another culture or civilization: the losing culture is exterminated and all their supposedly immortalized myths and legends and names disappear, and are lost forever; is never mentioned either. So far; our Western civilization has had a run of around 3,000 years. What came before it has vanished into dust. So far: we still preserve the 2 ½ thousand year-old original concepts of Greek citizenship.

These original Polis had no concept of democracy or fairness, or equality, or generosity, or giving. The Greeks themselves were originally Maritime pirates; who invaded Mediterranean shores and supplanted the older less warlike tribes who lived there. The theory that Aryans came from the North and invaded Greece by land does not fit the facts of Ancient Greek culture. Though Aryans did come from the north to invade and dominate Persia. Our Western Civilization has had the unmistakable stamp of their original Greek piracy written all over it for four thousand years: underlain by Aryan piracy by land: and combining both forms of invasion and piracy. That is our historical heritage, which we refuse to admit to and face, because we have no perspective on our own past... because we refuse to judge our own elders. Because we refuse to judge our own past. Because we refuse to honestly compare and evaluate how these humans once lived to how we live today.

Where did the raiding Pirate cultures of the ancient world come from? From two different cultures. From the human walking sticks that came out of Africa. And from the squatters who came out from Africa. From humans who refused to settle down and kept on traveling, while others settled down and became targets for the nomad populations to attack. Until the settlements became so big that nomadic travelers could not destroy them anymore. Until the populations of settlements became so huge that the walkers could only raid the outermost areas, and keep on traveling... picking up more and more cultural corruptions from the settled people they originally despised, then came to use their tools and inventions, and used them better, and more destructively. This is the original reason and root for the two-tiered system of humanity we have today. Walkers, and settlers became robbers and settlers. Until they merged and became Robber Barons and Serfs.

Where do you think the practice of human males shaving their facial hair came from? It came from the homosexual warriors who hated the rough beards of their lovers and wanted to imagine they were smooth-faced women. It came from homosexuals disliking their own hairiness. It came from homosexuals trying to be as hairless as women. It came from women disliking being raped by hairy scum so full of hate that their beards bristled. It came from the hate-energy of the human hate cultures becoming so powerful that the soft down on men's faces began growing stiffer, more thickly. It came from these hate cultures of violence that raided and raped women. Then they raped their own women.

1225

Women began to hate sex. They hated the filthy hairs on their face that stuck out and made any intimate nuzzling and kissing painful.

Males had beards, and never shaved them for thousands of years. That is... until they spent so much time together in ships becoming homosexuals, that they could not stand to kiss each other's bearded faces while trying to pretend the male they were kissing was a woman. So they used their razor sharp killing blades to shave off the hair from their chins and around their mouths. Alexander the Great shaved. He is never shown as a bearded ruler.

How much homosexuality developed in his army, and was perpetuated as a male culture? The Romans despised all facial hair. Facial hair was a sign of crudeness and physical virility. Their model of maleness was the effete girlishness of the Greek men. They aped the Greeks and their practice of shaving their faces. Until they began trying methods of removing it more permanently. Pulling each facial hair out by its roots painfully with tweezers. That was too painful, and too time consuming. So they went back to just shaving it off. Because their women did not like hairiness either. Almost all women do not like facial hair on men. But it took the homosexual and lesbian cultures of Greece to become dominant; before men began shaving off their beards to please others. And by doing so: hiding their actual rage and anger against all women, hiding the fact that they were still killers and rapists. There is a historical reason for everything we take for granted in our own modern cultures.

What are the cultural legacies of these Greek homosexual killers? You can see them everywhere. Like in American football... grown men bending over, with the dominant one standing behind them; hands under their crotch. To athletes using phallic clubs; showing who has the bigger penis, and who are the better fuckers. To the phallic symbols of war... who has the longer penis, the most powerful penis, the most penises, the most explosive orgasming penis, the biggest guns, the most guns, the longest-range missiles, the biggest bombs, etc; ad-nausea.

What was the historical Legacy of Alexander the Great? A brief spurt of bloody wars and conquests. A glory-mad, crazed, megalomaniac; who was finally poisoned by hidden plotters of his own army when he returned to the land of political assassination, intrigue and secret poison: Egypt. Betrayed by his own Companions...his own friends: who secretly plotted his death. Ever since his meteoric rise to power and Glory 2 ½ thousand years ago: what has been his legacy? Two and a half thousand of the same idiotic plots, the same players, the same results, the same outcome. A brief rise to power, and a huge destructive crash afterwards. Battling over the remains of the carcass of the dying Empire writhing in agony... as millions of poor, powerless people *who are not killers...*are killed, starve, die, are dispossessed, torn from their homelands...and have new abstract borders created out of thin air... and having these imaginary arbitrary boundaries dictated to them; by total strangers of an elite class: not even living on their Continent. It would take five thick books, just to go over the endless variations of Alexander's copycat successors, and how these variations differed only slightly from his example; and were re-lived over and over since Alexander died. .

Where did Alexander get the idea of world domination from? From Pericles. Where did Pericles get the idea? From Cyrus of Persia. Where did Cyrus get the idea from? From the Babylonians. Where did Babylon get it from? From Egypt. Where did the Egyptians get it from? From the Ethiopians. Where did the Ethiopians get it from? Nobody knows. Read the history of the Egyptian Golden Ages... read about its Empires... All of them were built-up from stolen wealth, slavery and the invention of the middleman... playing one side against the other. Why did Alexander do it? He was trying to outshine Cyrus. The Greeks were trying to outshine their hated and admired enemies: the Persians; whom they hated with a passion.

Alexander succeeded. He re-conquered almost every territory Cyrus the Great, the first Persian Emperor had: when he invented something called an Empire. The fame of Cyrus the Great faded and was forgotten. Alexander the Great's fame lasts to his day. Why? Because Alexander was a more brutal butcher than Cyrus the Great.

The Persian Golden Age of Empire... its higher ideals, its higher columns, its more beautiful art, its greater achievements, its greater expanse of conquered territory and its longer reign, its wiser rulers... were all burned to the ground, wiped out of history books; and replaced with adulation for this little Greek shit and his fake Empire that crumbled the second he died. Why? Because the Persians were Eastern, not Western. Huh? They were only a few hundred miles apart in distance. The actual reason is Racism. Simple stupid bigotry. Cultural prejudice. Cultural hate. Copied from Herodotus and preserved by other historians for 2,500 fucking years.

Alexander's history has been imitated and duplicated for one basic reason. He intensified all the worst elements of Greek and Persian culture. He intensified the hate Greeks had for each other. He intensified the political corruption and cunning plots between those who had power. He intensified the violence and insanity of warfare. He intensified the insanity of building cities everywhere... in the stupidest of places.

Alexander the Great introduced an entire extra class of humans into the insane scramble for wealth and power. He gave his own soldiers the power to elect their leader. Soldiers could dream and plot to become powerful and rich above their station in life. The class system of Kings and aristocracy was almost destroyed because of this unheard of largess. The priest class lost its former power because of it. This tiny change in the hierarchal structures of civilized cultures... democratizing the military: was actually a regression into the ancient tribalism of clans voting in their own leaders.

The result has been clan warfare in all elite and upper class levels of civilization ever since.

Gaius Marius: the first, and most successful general of Rome re-played and re-created the largess and generosity of Alexander. He was the first man in Rome. He was the first man to dominate Rome.... After him, came pale copies: all were less successful, all were more selfish and not as wise as he was. He was the only roman general to live out his full life without being assassinated. But his success was wiped out of roman history books because he was a commoner. His name says it all. He was a gay. He was married. He was first modern gay married successful civilized killer of today. He succeeded in making the Mediterranean the Marius of Rome. He wedded Rome to the Sea. He wedded homosexual soldiers as couples in his armies. He was not ashamed of his homosexuality. He wedded homosexuality to heterosexuality. He was a bluff, coarse gay person. After him: there have only been pale copies of his energy and courage and honesty and generosity. He spat in the eye of Rome: and Rome never forgave him for that. He dies a slow lingering death. He plotted to sabotage his only successor: his nephew: Julius Caesar, by forcing him to accept a religious post that kept him out of all political power and military involvement.

But he failed miserably. Julius was magically saved from his life-term of religious purity and rose to power and fame far faster than Gaius ever did. But Julius's rein of power was short. He never reached old age. He was vain, foolish, a narcissist so blind: he could not recognize those who hated him from those who loved him.

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1228

Gaius Marius revolutionized the Roman army from a rag-tag bunch of poor landed farmers who made war part time: to a professionally paid-equipped army, where everyone had a chance to become wealthy. He created the huge rush of the poor to sign up to fight. He created the idea of common greed. He created the common greed and rapacity of the Roman population as the greatest filthiest moral-physical poison ever to corrupt the Earth. He gave his soldiers even more wealth than Alexander gave his. He did not parade himself as a fake god... He refused to put himself above others. For the unpardonable sin of being more honest and more ethical than all the selfish stupid Roman aristocracy: he was hated by the elites of Rome forever. Because of his unusual honesty: he was ripped out of all mention in all Roman books. Only recently have modern historians pieced together the missing years of Rome's history before Julius Caesar became famous.

He was ripped out of Roman history as if he had never existed. Why? Because he was a commoner. He was not of noble blood like Caesar was. He was a n'eer do well. He was a social climber. He married into nobility. He bought influence.

But he was also the most cunning, evil Roman who ever lived. Without his greed for gold. Without him spreading this filthy greed to all of his armies. Without all Romans and poor who joined him becoming infected with this sickness. Rome would never have exploded into the most evil. Long lasting human atrocity ever to poison western civilization. He united Romans and all other humans under the common culture of unspoken greed. This culture is still the lowest, the filthiest common culture that all civilized humans share. Yet none of them admit it... except in common laughter. As a common coarse jest, a Roman good-humored filthy joke.

Now today; there is an asinine belief that the Pyramids were not actually built by slaves; because the remains of the overseers graves, supposedly prove that all of the workers there, were Egyptian. Unfortunately they have only found a handful of these upper-class elite Egyptian over seer tombs... They have not found the tombs of the thousands of slaves needed to build these obscene temples to the worship of death, because those slaves when they died were tossed into the river. But the modern Egyptians are proud of their pyramids. They want to believe that the original people building them did so voluntarily. So the question of the missing thousands of other Egyptian graves who were supposed to have built the Pyramids voluntarily is conveniently ignored. The idea that free Egyptians built these Pyramids is a joke. That they gave up 30 years of their own lives to work at the hardest physical labor out of love for their Ruler? Or spent every half-year working on Pyramids? By some system of enforced indentured contract? When it took them all year to work on their own fields to maintain their own farms? How idiotic can you be to even entertain such a notion?

And why were the Semites kept against their will as a race of indentured slaves there for 700 years? Oops. Lets not connect Egyptian anthropological evidence to the Old Testament and the Torah.

The Egyptians became filthy rich from being the geographical midpoint of the traffic in human slaves. Human slaves came from Africa, and were sold in Mesopotamia. Human slavery existed long before Egypt ever became a power. Africans practiced enslaving each other long before Ethiopia became rich from selling them.

Ancient Ethiopians became rich from the lust for Gold and precious gems. They invented the slave mines that had human slaves digging for gold and jewels long before Egypt bought them, and sold them to others for a handsome profit. Where did the idea of mines dug in the Earth come from? From people digging for salt. Salt is in short supply in Africa. It became precious when there was such an overpopulation of Africans, that they traveled miles, even hundreds of miles; to dig in salt-rich areas to supply their community salt every year. So they used their indentured servants to do it because nobody else wanted to do it. Then the indentured servants ran away. They had to be guarded while they dug in the baking heat.

1228

Then gold was found nearby. Egyptians came to prize this useless metal just as much as the salt they prized. Even though the salt was useful, and the gold had absolutely no practical value at all. Except as a proof of status... that you were rich enough with indentured slaves to also have them dig for other stuff.

Why do you think Gold has been so prized before civilization even began? Because it was a luxury item. Useless for anything except personal adornment.

Then the practice of selling this salt to other salt-poor areas began. And they used the same indentured servants to carry it across the baking hot deserts. Only... try to guard an entire caravan of slaves used as draft animals all the way from Mesopotamia back into Africa? When they no longer have their backs laden with something heavy? The slaves either escaped, or killed their owners. They had too much time on their hands to plot their owner's death. Their hands were too free to be used against the owners. This was how the fear of slaves was originally born. The fear of slaves who were not constantly burdened and laden with backbreaking work was born. To this date: every elite is not comfortable unless all the masses of their enslaved populations are working every day, hard... at some backbreaking, menial, degrading toil. Where do you think the idea to build Pyramids came from? From the Egyptians seeing human slaves used as draft animals carrying heavy loads, and then having to find something for them to do when they escaped their African slave masters and sought refuge in their lands. Where do you think the Egyptian love of Gold came from? From seeing salt caravans also carrying loads of useless Gold that was even heavier than salt. This convinced them that Gold had to be sacred. Otherwise: why drag it across the African deserts all the way to Mesopotamia?

Historical Truth is organic.

Do you see how organically simple and easy to understand, the actual, ugly truth of the history of civilization? And how old and how stupid, and unchanging, the vicious cycles of civilization are? Do you see how unchanged; civilized traditions, and civilized customs still are? You do not need expert historians to understand how the whore of history repeats itself. All historians are whores: selling themselves to the highest bidders. Making history beautiful for the highest. Once the basic vicious cycles are identified... you can see them being recycled over and over again... in the guise of something new. Everything that is new is merely a permutation of something old.

You do not need to be a genius to understand the effect of civilization on humans. You do not need to be a professional historian to understand the effect of civilization on humans.

Salt was precious, salt was rare. The Egyptians needed salt. Getting it was hard. So the lowest class was made to work in them. But they could make a huge profit from selling it to other people. So they used the profit from the salt to buy slaves... to work in the salt mines... to make them even richer. Then they traded the salt to others. Then gold was found in the salt mines. Then they traded all three commodities: salt, gold and slaves. It became a new vicious cycle, and it was practiced for thousands of years. Slavery meant working in the salt mines. Then it meant slaving in the gold mines. Then it meant building Ziggurats in Babylon, and Pyramids in Egypt.

Why do you think physical labor has been so despised by all the ruling classes as far back as written history can record? Why do you think work itself has been universally hated by humans? Why do you think the males of North Africa, sit around all day jabbering like women: while treating their women like beasts of burden? Because their North African culture originated from earlier cultures: that marked physical work as the lowest, most dehumanized form of slavery and human degradation yet invented... When African and Egyptian slave masters sent slaves to the salt mines to be worked to death in those North African mines.

Where do you think the practice of working a human slave until they die comes from? Why do you think the Egyptians worked their slaves until they died? Why do you think they constantly needed a continual influx of new slaves? Until they got smart. Until they didn't kill off their slaves. Until they let them raise babies. Until they managed to keep a single tribe of slaves in slavery for 700 years... and from that: the Semites learned every civilized practice of civilized corruption from living in Egypt and working for their hated masters. Until they risked death rather than stay there any longer. Do you have any idea of how much hate pervaded the culture of ancient Egypt? Old tombs unearthed still had enough power to curse the diggers with that hate. The Egyptians knew their tombs would be found. So they installed as many curses, and hidden poisons and warning signs that were supposed to frighten off the robbers.

Read about Egyptian rulers and their families and relatives; who hated each other all their lives. Read about the sons and daughters who hated their fathers and mothers. Read about how almost every successor to the throne hated the one they were supplanting so badly... that they spent fortunes eradicating their names and faces off all of the temples and monuments erected in their honor. Read about their megalomania and addiction to eternal fame and status, their addiction to eternity as a refuge only for the elite... so none of the poor could come after them when they died. Every historical event in Egypt's 7,000 year-long existence as a single unbroken culture and Nation: has been re-played ad-nauseum by every Empire that came after it.

People still flock there by the thousands... Traveling to the middle of one of the deadest deserts in the World; to gape at all this dead filth,. What are the Pyramids of Egypt but Death zones; where nothing is alive. Except tourists; gaping at dead objects. And they all think that gaping is a good thing. Ape. Gape. Good ape. Gaping ape. Get it?

What doe Egypt signify? It came from the term: egg. A -living ecosystem born again every year, a river that never dried up even during the worst droughts. That Name became destroyed. One 'G' was removed from that word and replaced with 'gypt', or... 'Good. Y (Why) question.. Prove Truth?

Take Egg... steal one G away... add YPT to it. And you have Egypt. What is YPT...?

Why... Y Penetrate Truth? Better to gyp people of the Truth and steal the Energy of other's hard work. Better to lie, steal, hate and rule... Better to hide the truth behind lying hieroglyphs. HIGHER... hier... o glyphs. And spout propaganda of Dynasties and carve lies about how glorious they once were. And who were the People Of The Sea, who finally destroyed its Empire-rule? They were the Pirates, the Robbers, whom all future Robber barons have tried to ape. And create an Empire for themselves. As raiders... robbing and running with their booty... getting away with it.

What is the ideal of Robber Baron feminine beauty today? Human walking sticks. Walking scarecrows so emaciated and thin; that they are grotesque. Because 35,000 years ago: these physical types of thin, tall, emaciated women were the peers of the squatting cave people. The settled, lazy cave dwellers worshiped them. Now; after ten thousand years of women not ever being publicly worshipped as icons of beauty... What has the modern robber baron culture created? First it was the cherubic fatness of Rubinesque pampered pigs, which came out of the European terror of starvation. Now it is the emaciated thinness of the older stone-age walking sticks. Now modern feminine beauty is progressing to the lesbian beauty of the Amazon tribes of Sparta. Women who hate and fear men so much; they would rather become as muscled as men; rather than give them to have any power over them. The latest modern ideal of feminine beauty is one of pure physical fitness, pure exterior image; with an empty interior, a vacuous look of stupidity, the arrogance of youth, looking down on all others less slim, less thin, less rich, less privileged, less lucky, less fortunate.

The origins of the creation of the first Empires, and Emperors, and the first God-Kings who were worshipped as actual Gods are lost in the mists of Time, twelve thousand Years ago. The oldest archeological site of Western civilization: that once was a modern city; now lies in almost the exact center of the Mid-Eastern continent, in the middle of one of the oldest man-made deserts on Earth.

The remains of that oldest city is still there in the desert. The first city humans ever built. Its name is: 'Ur' Or Earth. Shortened into 'our' or; 'All Earth', 'All Ours'... Signifying the new invention of territorial ownership and what it has evolved into... in this first human city.

That is; until other cities rose up around it: and completely destroyed the first city of Ur on the Mesopotamian plain.

Why is the meaning of the first human city called 'Ur', or 'our'? Why was the first modern city with writing, called Earth? Why were its walls a perfect circle? Why did the word 'our', or 'all ours' originate from 'Ur'...? Because they were covetous of each other's wealth? Because they wanted to rape and covet the entire Earth? Is the goal of the people who wanted this, still being followed? By the same idiotic, identical, staged re-enactment of Empires and Emperors, and Wars? Is this the actual secret goal of civilization? To carry out this first city's stated goal? Ur. UnReason. Reason . The rationality of a pyramidal heap. Heaping all things into one place for their sanctified god-kings. All for 'U'... YOU... the ruler. All for Us. All to be poured into a single 'U'... as the only Reason for the kind of human destructive existence called cities. Or was it an Error? Was the first city of Ur, actually called Er, not Ur? As in: 'er, oops... we made a mistake!' Er-ror. The roar of royal lions. Erred. Earth. Red. Rage. Roar. Red Earth. Drought. Red sky. Volcanoes exploding in Africa millions of years ago. Fleeing apes: dying as the Earth explodes in rage against them. Reason. Reason for human existence. The sins of the father being placed upon the son. Re-sin. Etc, etc...

Human history has been whitewashed merely by changing how words are spoken and spelled.

What does the entire story of 12,000 years of human history signify? From OURS, to US. From UR the oldest city, to the United States of America, to a united state of global greed. For 10,000 years: the human conscience; has been subconsciously leaking its guilt into the human conscious mind.

Read the lives of the first ancient Sufi masters. The secrets of the ancient Sufis is based on gleaning wisdom from ancient texts by deciphering the subconscious meanings of the letters and consonants in those texts. They found hidden meanings in those texts. They discovered the fact that written abstract symbols hold deep hidden truths.

They developed a secret system of deciphering those hidden subconscious meanings that was totally wrong. They tried to create a system that could decipher hidden subconscious meanings. They did not try to put the letters they deciphered into relative historical context. They poisoned the original subconscious meanings of developed their own system of secret code letters to hide wisdom from their own people. They hid their hidden meanings even more cunningly and secretly than the meanings they deciphered. Moslem wisdom rotted and disappeared because of their elitist practices and elitist culture. The teachings of human wisdom have been taken over by the elite: and held in secret from the poor. It is the same story over and over: a poor person becomes hailed as a wise person. His teachings are stolen by the rich and withheld from the poor... even though it was a poor person who discovered it in the first place. The basic cultural motive of all elite rich: the only way they can exist, the only way they can survive: is to withhold their exclusive power-wealth-status-knowledge; from the poor. Just like citizenship was withheld from the poor for 2 ½ thousand years. Today: only rich countries have citizens. Try to find a starving Bangladesh peasant that has a passport... try to find a starving Somalian woman in a refugee camp that has a citizen's passport that guarantees her legal rights... try to find poor Afghani's that have a passport guaranteeing the right and ability to emigrate out of that destroyed land. Try to find any of the 4 billion poor in the world's supposed nations that have a passport that says they are a citizen of that Nation. You won't find one damn passport. Because citizenship and passports are only for rich people living in rich Nations.

When was citizenship first invented? When the first city-state was created? The first known city called UR: also had the first known official citizens. Who had superior rights and privileges to the people outside the walls of Ur; who were not citizens... who were excluded from all human rights. Their legal status of citizen was a status, based upon pure exclusion also. Nothing else. The word itself explains the principle of its basic exclusion: A Citizen is a denizen of a City. He is a caveman; who lives in a den, or a cave. Who does not allow other cave people to live in his cave. That is where the idea of citizenship comes from. The way we practice our caveman culture has not changed for at least 75,000 years. We still fight off anyone who tries to come into, and live in our cave, or our city, or our state, or our Nation. The curse, and evil, and stupidity of abstract ownership is still with us.

For thousands of years now: every megalomaniac, every idiot, every corrupt, power-mad fool has tried the same thing, and played out the same boring story. From Julius Caesar, to Octavius Caesar, to Genghis Khan, to Kublai Khan, to Tamerlane, to Peter the Great, to Napoleon, to Hitler, to Idi Amin. Has any human ever learned from this repeated stupidity? The Egyptians were not the only ones who tried to rewrite history by each new ruler destroying all evidence of the previous one. Literally every new dynasty, every new culture has buried the past under a pack of lies, and erected their own lies on top of the pile of crap we call history.

Read the famous Oath of Hypocrites. It is an oath of pure hypocrisy. It is so cunningly and deviously worded: that to this day: it cannot be used literally to define good medicine. It is used in courts of Law only to imply the spirit of a meaning of what is supposed to be the ethical practice of medicine... an intent towards good that it is assumed to contain: but does not. Where do you think the word 'hypocrisy' comes from in the first place? From Hypocrites himself. The Ancient Greeks honed and perfected the arts of lying artistically. They were famous for it. They were admired for it. They took their art of oily subtle lies from their closest neighbors, the Persians... who had gotten their artistic ways of creatively lying from the Hittites and Egyptians... and did the Persians one better. The Greeks turned lying into a respectable profession. Different teachers from different schools that taught different ways of how to lie; traveled the length and breadth of Greece. Trying to become famous as the best public liar in Greece. They held public lying matches called harangues and orations. They fought each other tooth and nail, they harangued crowds and other professional liars; trying to get the masses to listen-to and believe in their brand of lies.

Lying became institutionalized by the ancient Greeks. It became an educational institution. It became one of the pillars of Greek society. If you did not learn how to lie well, artistically, with finesse: you were not cultured.

It was at this time; that lying down physically; also became an accepted tradition of how the elite ate their food. Not sitting or standing. But lying down on one side. A most awkward position.

But what surprise is this: when these Greeks were the best one-sided liars of all time? They only argued one side of a question. They never looked at both sides. They never looked at more than one side of anything. They never looked at the infinite sides of actual truth. They invented the art of one-sided lying... mentally, emotionally, and physically. These facts are not a coincidence.

Entire schools were based upon teachers training their pupils a certain cunning ways and tactics of lying. We call one of these famous schools of how to lie 'rationalization' The other schools of thought, of lies... the Sophists, and the Rhetoricists: taught their own cunning, devious way of lying.

Hypocrites was even smarter than the others. He taught lying to his students by the subtle art of Hypocrisy. He taught Greeks how to lie by openly espousing truths... while secretly undermining the very truths he publicly espoused. He, and all the other schools of how to lie convincingly in public became revered, sacred, schools of philosophic thought.

Philosophy comes from the physical Sophist tradition of lying. They tried to prove their lies physically by becoming living physical examples of their own lies. They became more respected than the other professional liars: who only spoke their lies: and did not live by them. Philosophers could be identified by whichever school of how to lie they had gone to; by how they used and framed their words. If you do not believe me: read the history of Ancient Greece. See if the historical facts, and the historical figures of that time fit what I have written about them.

Mao Tse Tsung tried to destroy all evidence that any other Emperor had ever lived before him in China. He tried to expunge all Chinese culture and All Chinese history from the minds of his subjects. Stalin successfully wiped out most of the cultural memory of Czarist Russia; by creating a Myth of himself as a huge father of the entire Empire ... a Christ-God-Icon, father-figure: all rolled up into one. Portraying himself as the Father of the Nation, the Father of everyone. The father of the Russian Empire. The Father of the Nation, the Father of the City, the Father of the Province, the Father of the commune, the Father of the family, the Father of all the Children. The word Emperor was never used by him. Horrors; that might have reminded people of previous Czarist Emperors. After Stalin died, Khrushchev tried to destroy every vestige of Stalin ever existing... After Khrushchev's rule was over: other Soviet Premiers tried to bury all evidence of Khrushchev's part in Russia's history. Etc. etc.... ad nauseum.

Every Roman Emperor for 700 years tried to build for eternity, and destroyed the statues of their predecessors just as assiduously as their Egyptian counterparts had done for five thousand years. The Mayans, the Aztecs, the Persians, the Greeks, all Emperors, and Empire builders; have tried to wipe out their own past as if it never existed. Every mass murderer who ever gained power and crushed people under him has hated the idea of anyone, any ruler ever being bigger/higher/more powerful than he is. The Mayans simply built a higher new level over their old ones with every ruler. Historians have been blind to this universal theme of temple building. These accumulations of dead stone are merely attempts to bury the past under lies and the glory of the latest-greatest rulers.

Why? Because the human subconscious found a very neat trick. It found that you could bury dead shit under more dead shit, and change guilt into glory, into glorified gilt...and sit on top of the latest addition gilded statues and gilded icons and gilded Gods and Gilded Ages...and have human idiots worship the glittering, shiny gilt. Human guilt... screaming out to be recognized. If you look for connections: the human subconscious reveals actual truth everywhere. Gilt is only a microscopically thin veneer of gold; plastered over something to glorify it and make it seem beautiful. Gilt was the microscopically thin veneer of guilt that some rulers still had... so they covered their guilt with gilt and gilded lies... Gold-covered lies.

What are the great, vaunted 12,000 years of human civilization... a boring litany of the highest, most imperial, most powerful rulers and humans... but the stupidest obsession of rulers; burying each other, burying the past, burying the truth, burying their dead, piling things up, and then worshipping what they piled up? New rulers burying all evidence of toppled past rulers, hiding the truth, hiding it by burying words, making old words forbidden to be used.

Where did gunpowder come from?

From China: thousands of years ago.

Why did the Chinese invent Gunpowder?

Because of their culture.

Because of Ancestor worship.

Because for thousands of years: Chinese culture has forbidden the expression of any kind of anger or rage against parents, elders, authority or the Government. Until they invented a way to deflect feelings of anger and rage.

By projecting their exploding emotional rage outwards physically. By exploding their rage symbolically. In the only way that was acceptable in public. In the ritual sacrifices and dances honoring their dead ancestors whom they were supposed to unquestioningly love, honor, and obey. But whom they actually hated. So they invented a way to explode all of their emotional anger in public without showing that rage. They deflected their rage into throwing firecrackers at the Gods and Dragons they were supposed to be celebrating and worshipping.

It was a cunning, sneaky, cowardly way of publicly venting secret suppressed and repressed anger and hate. All the Hate and rage that was culturally forbidden to be expressed found a subconscious way to erupt and explode by exploding gunpowder physically as a vicarious way of venting and exploding your own subliminal urges to explode your emotional blind rage against a stifling culture that is suffocating you all of your life. What did this do? This safe form of projecting personal hate and rage outwardly by deflecting personal rage safely. Instead of yelling and attacking and hitting the person who actually raped you. Instead of attacking all the people who actually oppressed you, humiliated you, degraded you. You attack someone else instead. And you do it as safely and as cunningly and sneakily as possible.

Gunpowder spread across the world like wildfire. People found a safe physical alternative to emotional explosion, emotional violence, physical violence, mental violence, by projecting all of their suppressed, repressed energy out with a gun. All male patriarchal societies found guns to be more powerful symbols of male aggression and manhood than the obsolete sword and spear and arrow.

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1235

The suppressed cultural rage of 12,000 years of civilized emotional suppression and repression on a subconscious level exploded symbolically... in the First World War: and then again in the Second World War. The Second World War ended with the invention and explosion of the Atom Bomb.

Then the Governments of the World drew back from atomic warfare. Atomic warfare is not allowed now. It is controlled and suppressed and repressed and oppressed. Entire Nations are being oppressed simply because they are trying to become equally armed with atomic bombs and missiles as the Western Nations are.

How long will this suppression and repression of human emotions last? Until it explodes again subconsciously? Until it explodes and is projected out as an Atomic War that destroys all LIFE from this planet; and we commit our own final acts of suicide, self-destruction and extinction subconsciously? So we will end up killing ourselves and the entire Earth without ever knowing why we are doing it?

Do you think unaware humans without any sense of Pure Wonder will learn not to repeat the mistakes of the past? Do you think humans who are emotionally dead inside will not find a way to explode their rage? Do you think ten billion humans who are emotionally repressed, suppressed and oppressed will not find a way to cunningly, sneakily, safely, cowardly, stupidly, explode their subconscious rage? Do you think the emotional rage of ten billion people will not finally be exploded by the safest, most stupid way possible? By pushing a button: and launching an Atomic bomb at someone who you are only symbolically and abstractively angry at? Do you really think ten billion unaware, uneducated, ignorant humans will be able to indefinitely bottle up and repress and suppress and oppress their emotional rage sufficiently forever: so not one single person of these ten billion people will ever push a button and start a nuclear war? Do you really think humans can suppress their emotional rage at being oppressed by the civilization they live-in... indefinitely? forever? How long do you think we can hold in our collective urges and feelings? One hundred years? Two hundred? Three hundred? What if there is an exception? What if there is one suicidal maniac who does not care what happens later on? What if there is one human who does not stop and consider the full range of consequences before they do something? How many people like that are needed to start a nuclear war? Look at how few people were needed in Nazi Germany to plan and organize the death camps of mass slaughter and killing. Why because nobody else was looking ahead. Because Germans were looking to their leaders. Their leaders did not look ahead either.

How many humans stop to consider the consequences of what they are doing? How many humans look ahead? How many humans plan for the future? One thing is for sure. We will not be able to control our collective subconscious rage for one thousand years. We could not control our addiction to destruction and gunpowder for more than twenty years after it destroyed Europe in the First World War. We had the Second World War right after it. It took the insanity of two industrialized cities being wiped off the map in two days; to stop the next logical build-up of nuclear bombs so we can kill ourselves all off and destroy the entire Earth into the bargain. But did that stop us from making more atomic bombs? Did it stop us from investing most of the wealth and power and energy of the World's richest Nations into even better, faster ways to destroy the entire Earth? No! Now we have the hypocrisy of Nations who already have atomic weapons... trying to prevent other Nations from developing their own National atomic arsenals of Global Destruction and Mass destruction.

Did the Chinese manage to keep the secret of how to make gunpowder indefinitely so nobody else could use it against them? No. They were attacked and raped by modern nations with modern technology... with the same gunpowder they gave to the world as a safe way of killing others without them being personally harmed or having to use a sword or spear or bow. Why? Because the Chinese had become so inept as fighters: the nomadic invaders slaughtered them so regularly: that they had to find some kind of mechanical advantage..

1235

Oops. Having a temporary tool-advantage does not work. Suppressing emotional rage culturally; by perpetuating ancestor worship didn't work. Have the Chinese changed their culture since then? No. Their Chinese Culture is still more sacred to them than their own life is to themselves. Fuck living humans. Save your culture. Save your Nation. Save your Religion. Preserve your culture. Preserve your Nation. Preserve your religion. Do not preserve living humans. Living humans exist only in order to preserve the dead shit of dead civilizations. They have no other reason to be alive. They have no reason to live except to preserve dead shit, and dead Kings, and squatting rulers who oppress them and crush them. Now there are one billion Chinese living in a state of unconscious, and subconscious emotional repression, suppression and oppression. How long will they be a slave Nation before they have their own bloody revolutions like France and America did?

Now other cultures that condone the use of National warfare as an acceptable release of their mass subconscious rage; do not only have gunpowder. They have atomic bombs. Do you think that one of them will not find a rational excuse to use their atomic bombs? Their National masses are also emotionally repressed and suppressed and oppressed. Public expression of emotional rage and anger is forbidden in their cultures also. They are also forbidden to show anger and rage against their parents, elders, authority figures and Government.

Do you think someone in all of these Atomic Nations will not find a way to project their subconscious rage by pushing a convenient button?

Or: do you want to pretend this will never happen: and you are not an active supporter and enabler of a system that makes the outcome of total nuclear global death and destruction an unavoidable inevitability. That you are not living inside an artificial structure and system called civilization that is doomed to destroy itself over, and over again; until it either destroys itself completely: or destroys all Life on Earth; so no living thing will be alive ever again on this Earth: and our planet will join all of the other dead planets in this solar system another orbiting dead, meaningless ball rotating around a meaningless ball of a Sun that is also programmed to destroy itself in the future.

The first primitive cannons were made out of wooden barrels bound together with iron hoops. Where did the evil of the gun barrel come from? Where did the evil of the barrel of a cannon come from? It came from wooden staves being made into barrels with a small fire inside which is how barrels are made. It came from the art of barrel making, from charring the insides of wooden barrels, from wooden barrels that were burnt inside, leaving behind charcoal. which is the main ingredient of gunpowder.

Where does this evil of explosive fire come from? It comes from 25 million years of African volcanic eruptions: A fire exploding in the middle of a green tropical forest, leveling all the trees around it flat: then binding the trees back together again with iron hoops and building a small fire in the barrel so the insides of the wooden staves are charred. Only the trees around the volcano are charred. A recreation of charred trees around a volcano.

The art of making barrels is a recreation of a past that is millions of years old. It is a literal recreation of a burning volcano in the middle of a green tropical forest that is so lush and moist: only the tree around the volcano are charred black. Barrel making is volcano-making is the evil of volcanic destruction merged with the evil of accumulation. Barrel-making is based upon the evil of one-sided accumulation: it is based upon preserving death, it is based upon the evil of accumulating and preserving the dead legacy of a bygone era of African volcanoes millions of years ago. Preserving and recreating miniature volcanoes surrounded by a forest of staves which have to be bound together with iron hoops. If the hoops did not keep it together: the staves would fall apart; just like the charred trees fell down and away from the exploding burning volcanoes for millions of years in Africa. That is how old the evil of one-sided accumulation is. The oldest evil of one-sided accumulation is human culture itself: it is the accumulation and preservation of the dead memories of death and destruction: from African volcanoes erupting to making barrels to making gun barrels to making modern artillery.

Not the living memories of Life and happiness

This is why human culture and human civilization is evil. Human culture preserves the negative memories of death and destruction: it does not preserve the positive values of life: which is Courage and Honesty and FUN and health and happiness.

The history of the iron rings of slavery comes from the history of human bondage: the ancient cultures that kept humans together in artificial bondage as owned property of their masters. This is also part of the evil of one-sided accumulation; the more slaves one human accumulates as owned property: the more powerful they became and the higher their social status. All truth is organically logical.

You need to dig for the truth, because humans always try to bury the truth and hide from it. Humans always try to hide, and bury their own filth, their own fear, their own guilt, their own shame, their own cowardice, their own hate, their own crimes, their own sins. Because it stinks to high heaven. What wonder is it that humans do not want to uncover the stinking shit of their own past? What wonder is it that these buried truths are buried, kept secret, and constantly re-buried? Every time any people become too enlightened. Every time people become too educated. Every time they find out the truth. It is re-buried and forgotten all over again... lost, and hidden all over again. Forcing succeeding generations to dig it up all over again. Without any help from their elders. Who desperately try to keep their children from learning the truth about anything: especially the past. What wonder is it that adult humans cannot stand to face or deal with unpleasant truths? They are too guilty of too many sins and too many crimes. Animals that despoil their own dens do the same thing. They lie on top of their own feces, hoping others will not find out their accidental 'mistake', and they will escape punishment. The Human race has been shitting on, and despoiling the Earth for 12,000 years now. And sitting on top of each latest accumulation... in the hopes of nobody noticing what they have actually done. Once you see the truth about how all of this one-sided accumulation happened. Once you see that anything which accumulates and cannot regenerate itself is pure shit. Once you see the pile of shit-lies piled up for 12,000 years called the 'glory' of civilization as the true shit that it is... then you will have to change every idea about yourself and what you were taught.

Why did Europe descend into the Dark Ages after the Roman Empire slowly rotted, and crumbled? Because Rome had taught all of Europe for a thousand years by peer example; that the only things that matters, is brutality, greed, and avarice. The superfluous ornamentation of Roman culture itself disappeared. Why? Because any sign of wealth was a sign for others to rob you of it. As the Romans had taught the world for a thousand years. Western culture is based a historical legacy not only upon taking and selfishness: but outright robbery. The entire legacy of the Roman Empire and the Greeks is a complete antithesis of giving and generosity. The entire history of civilization itself is the polar opposite of giving. How can you expect people to be giving, if their cultures have been based upon illegal, and legalized robbery for over ten thousand years? How can you even try and establish a culture that openly approves of giving and supports it; unless you have a relative perspective on what kind of civilization you are living inside today, and where it comes from?

Who were the first explorers? The crews of Vasco de Gama, Magellan and Columbus were almost entirely composed of ex-jailbirds, future murderers and pickpockets out of a job. Why do you think the European colonization of the world was one of the filthiest crimes the human race ever committed? The first explorers, and their crews, and the ones who came after them... were the lowest most diseased filthiest human souls ever born. They were all rapists and murderers, and future murderers, and future rapists. They were all looking to get rich.

The bacteria virus disease of Robber-Baron culture infects every human On Earth today. Every human community, every human society. Humans are full of rape... we are all raped animals who rape everything we can. Human history is one long rape. Human civilization is one long rape. This raping appears everywhere throughout civilized history. The instant there is any chance to rape; it happens. Our beings are filled with raped experiences, raped feelings, raping projections, raping behavior. If you look for the telltale signs of rape: you will find it inside you, inside others, and all around you.

Unless you educate yourself. Unless you de-brainwash yourself from the crap you are living in, and the lies you absorbed from history books, and the culture you have lived-in for all your life. Unless you enlighten yourself. Unless you are honest enough to face the truth. Unless you have the courage it takes to face the truth about civilization. Unless you do not want to repeat the same old stupid, idiotic, boring insanities again. You will never be able to even begin to find happiness for yourself.

Only when people come together wanting to give to each other more than wanting to take from each other. Only when people come together as complete equals; will they ever rid themselves of 12,000 years of all the accumulated shit they do not actually need.

So what has the robber Baron culture come to? The cutting edge of Robber Baron Culture. The United States of America. What is its crowning Glory?

All kinds of Freedom.

But in what context?... What kind of freedoms?...

The Freedom to be spoiled
The Freedom to be stupid
The Freedom to be lazy
The Freedom to be greedy
The Freedom to be selfish
The Freedom to be dishonest
The Freedom to pollute
The Freedom to waste
The Freedom to buy
The Freedom to rob

The Path of Splitness
Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1239

The Freedom to rape
The Freedom to kill
The Freedom to murder.
The Freedom to Lie
The Freedom to destroy

The entire living Earth, all living things and all humans on this planet

To be fair... along with all these hugely increased freedoms... comes a tiny added benefit of slightly more freedom of the media, more artistic and more personal freedom. Which just oh, by the way; is a basic reason why there are no living communities left in America anymore, and also why the huge majority of Americans are egotistical, smug, arrogant, stupid, uneducated, self-rationalizing idiots.

America does have many things that other Robber Baron cultures do not. Their parades of blustering dominance are not as military as Rome's once were: instead, they are marching, uniformed, macho bands: blaring mediocre music to the masses. Bands that only look military. If you look at the progress of Robber Baron cultures, you will see that in some ways, they have become more humanized. Today: Americans demand that the human icons they worship must be superficially attractive. Magazines full of perfect female bodies abound. But even that is disappearing. Now the hypocritical double standard of male ugliness and fatness and female beauty and slimness is being normalized on TV. More and more situation comedies have ugly, overweight husbands married to gorgeous, drop-dead beautiful, slim wives.

When was crucifixion invented? When the first modern Empire was invented. The first Persian Empire created by Cyrus the Great; invented it. It signified a cheap death by the sword: death by the sword holders, death by those who held the sword. Killing lowly peasants who did not deserve to be killed by so noble a killing implement. Only powerful fierce warriors, only other people who had swords deserved to be killed by a sword. The swordless peasants were strung up to their own trees, strung up to pieces of wood that symbolized the power of the sword. They were killed as second-class things that did not deserve to be killed by an actual metal sword. Otherwise: that might give them ideas of revenge. That might give them the awful, unimaginable, er worrisome idea... that they might beat their own plowshares into swords and come looking for the sword holders, and kill them with a sword also.

Now.... We can't have that now: can we? Ancient warriors being killed by ancient low-class peasants? Horrors. So instead of killing peasants with an actual metal sword: they killed them with a symbolical wooden sword. Or what today has been miscast and misrepresented as a cross of two wooden timbers. How fucking stupid, and how fucking blind can historians be about this? And if historians are this stupid and this blind about such an obvious meaning as a wooden sword: how full of bullshit are all the history texts ever written?

Crucifixion was the normal way all warrior, sword-holding elites killed only lower class, swordless peasants. It was a public, cultural degradation of their lowly status. It was the most shameful, and the most painful possible way to die. Only slaves and criminals were killed this way. Because they did not deserve to be beheaded by an actual sword. They were considered to be beneath such a clean, painless form of execution. They were supposed to suffer a thousand times more in their deaths than any elite warrior ever suffered from being beheaded in battle. What kind of hypocritical cowardice: and hate

1239

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1240

against the lower classes does this form of public killing expose? What kind of human scum were these Persians, and Greeks, and Romans?

Why were the first peasants who fought against sword-carrying killers crucified on wooden swords? Because they fought them with wooden swords. They did not have any metal swords. They fought them and they lost. The metal sword holders killed them by impaling them on their own swords. To teach other peasants the futility of resisting any killer with a wooden sword. A Metal sword is superior to a wooden sword. The metal holders reigned and the wood gatherers were their slaves. The origin of crucifixion is not hard to understand if you examine human history logically and look for connections between truths.

Even to this day: the Christian Cross has the exact same proportional length and breadth: as a sword did in the time of Cyrus the Great. The first Persian Emperor who invented the first Empire.

The poisoning of the fish community's first sign of their religion which was the fish by turning it into the cross: has still not been successfully explained by historians. Why should worshipping the idea of the fisher of men, become a worship of death? Crucifixion was not special: it was as common as a drug sentence for the lowest drug addicts in society. They have no explanation for why an entire religious movement should abandon its original sacred symbol; and replace it with another that has no similarity to the original symbol, or any similarity to the original religious meanings and ethics that were the cause and the root reason why they developed the life- sign of the fish instead of the death-sign of the sword.

The answer is obvious. Look at the football team, the Washington Redskins. Do you see any redskins in America anymore? No. They were all killed. They went extinct. The fish culture of Jesus was killed off. The last remnants were crucified. The last of the defiant fish culture: then took over the sign of the murderers who were killing them and crucifying them. Then the government responsible for killing them off took over their sign, took over their churches, and their religion and made it their own. But they did not use the original symbol of the fish. That symbol was too powerful. Just as Washington does not dare try to take over the actual symbols of the red-skinned people they wiped out. Those symbols are too powerful. Plus, there is much too much guilt involved.

Even though there is no historical evidence of how this happened. The basic reasons for why this happened; are obvious. The original poor fish communities and their revolutionary ethics appeared on the edges and fringes of a Roman Empire that ruled the entire Mediterranean world, and that dominant, more powerful, more populous culture: merely absorbed the smaller healthier one: and poisoned its completely right down to its bones. Instead of admiring poor people who fought and resisted the rich powerful Roman machine: they were brainwashed into respecting and worshipping weak, mild, passive, martyrs who went unresisting to their deaths. That was the only form of aberrant worship the Roman Empire tolerated. All other more active cultures and religions that fought against the Romans; were wiped out completely, and made extinct.

1240

The historical lesson Christianity has taught to the masses is: never actively resist, or fight against any worldly authority. Christianity's only claim to having a superior spirituality was, and still is: a mental snobbery of the mind. Spiritual egotism of the worst sort. As long as Christians conformed to all of Rome's laws, and only worshipped their new God in secret: they could be tolerated as no better than any other kind of religious hypocrite. Giving the entire world to this day: the insane idea that if you worship your own God in private in secret, and obey all the Authorities of civilization: you are living a spiritual, ethical life. The Jews still do this. They convince themselves that they are more spiritually ethical than others. And they are despised for their hypocrisy everywhere they go.

All religions except Mohammedanism have adopted this brainwashing tactic into their dogmas. And now: this last religion that is still politically powerful; is being systematically hounded out of existence. Because it is too fanatical, and does not respect Western temporal authority. This is the historical effect that the Christian worship of martyrdom and passivity has had upon the world for 2,000 years now. And how was it done? By turning the symbol of dominance and death: the almighty sword: into a symbol of masochistic love of suffering, and glorifying meekness and obsessing and worshiping death instead of life.

Today: public executions and public crucifixion are no longer normal; as they were in Roman Times and during the Middle Ages. Now, the dominant American Robber Baron elite culture is not the most brutalized, most inhuman culture on Earth. Stalin's USSR, and Mao's China; both vied for that honor: and lost. Now American culture actually laughs at itself, and spoofs itself. As did the British. Something which the Europeans have yet to learn. Americans are culturally more honest in many ways than other Nations or cultures.

Where did crucifixion come from? From an even more horrific form of public execution that was practiced during the Stone Age for 100,000 years before civilization was ever invented. From impalement. From firmly setting a sharp wooden stake upright. And then lowering the victim's rectum onto the sharp point. It was the most degrading public form of execution possible. The victim died slowly: by gravity of his own body. This is where the concept of gravity comes from. It is a concept of slow death. The gravity of their own weight slowly forced the sharp end of the stake up through their bowels, piercing their intestines, their stomach, lungs and inner organs.

Until it finally pierced their heart and killed them. Or if it missed their heart it would pierce their lungs and kill them. Or if it missed their lungs and heart: it would either come out under their collarbone, or go through their windpipe and choke them to death, or slide up along their spine into their brain and kill them.

It was a very simple, very economical form of killing. The victim did not need to be bound or restrained, or nailed in place. All that was needed was a stake securely driven into the ground that was higher than their shoulders. Gravity did everything else.

Why did the baby boom generation after the 2nd World War in both England and America: produce things like the Civil Rights Movement? The women's movement, the hippy love-drug generation, new music, a revival of folk music, the labor movement, gay rights, environmental rights, an explosion of black culture, the Peace Corp, and many other grassroots movements... All of which have been, and are still being, paved over and buried by Capitalistic consumer culture. Until today; many of these creatively humane movements have almost disappeared from existence.

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1242

Because for a brief time in those Nations: there were more young people than old people. At the same time there the highest level of affluence for the masses in history was created in the richest Nations on Earth that actually helped the Nations they destroyed to re-build themselves.

Because on one political level: the Allies had fought a war against a political evil, which was even worse than they were. Because after the Allies won; rather than looting and destroying their defeated enemies; they helped Germany and Japan to rebuild. They actually helped to rebuild what they had destroyed. They were not total destroyers.

What culture has ever glorified its lower classes as America has into mythology and lies? Rome did. Like the famous, much-loved TV show: Taxi... or; All in the Family... or The Honeymooners... even though they were mostly full of cream-puff euphemisms and spoofing, and white washed the worst human vices and evil as being funny. And the show: Northern Exposure: about a small Alaskan town. But now the nitty gritty reality of films about poor people like: Mean Streets, and Midnight Cowboy, and plays about poor people like Death of a Salesman, and On the Waterfront are long past. Books about the sufferings of poor people like The Grapes of Wrath are no longer being written. As a rule: movies and the Media never come close to touching any unpleasant truths or issues about human corruption, or how poor people actually live. Today: Wealth is so worshipped by the masses, that people love billionaires and their mansions. They love their own cars and their own houses more than they do their own children. There are many things that are better in American culture. But these less negative things; are only a few glaring, outstanding exceptions to the general rule of worse corruption.

Good in human society is token, and incremental. Evil outweighs Good by a hundred or a million to one. Every positive idea. Every positive aspect of civilized human society has been systematically poisoned and destroyed and buried by the dynamics and facts of accumulation. Truth is added like a sprinkling of sugar; mixed-in with tons of lies of salt. Both look the same. The sugar sparkles at the top of the accumulating pile for a brief instant before being buried under tons of salt. Good and evil have become so segmented, so mixed up together with each other, so indistinguishable from each other: that both have become invisible. Now today: Good and evil do not even exist. Now there is only Meaninglessness and abstraction.

All America, and the World has been sold the lie, the fallacy, and the fantasy of upwards mobility from endless, hidden, code-word messages used by the Media... trying to sell the unquestioned virtues of exclusivity, shallowness, stupidity, boredom ill health, ill-fitting clothes, ill-bred manners, etc. There are so many good things mixed up with bad things in all cultures. What is the craze for lean, muscled abs: but the urge not to eat too much? How do you get lean abs? By not eating junk food. By not eating candy bars... but the very magazines featuring models who have perfectly slim waists sit right next to all the last-minute impulse junk foods at the checkout counters in supermarket stores. The obvious message is: if you want lean abs: eat more candy bars.

Huh?

How hypocritical can you get? Magazines for lean abs should be placed next to the vegetable and produce section: not next to candy bars. Instead they are put next to the worst junk food in the store. This blears out the hypocrisy of civilized societies: 'Do as I say... not as I do.' Pick up magazines with covers of lean abs; while you buy your junk food and get fatter.

What is American Culture now in the third millennium? It is a macho-bully-bum culture. It glorifies the bully, the winner, the bum, the asshole and the macho killer. Look at beach doubles volleyball: as the waistlines of the players creep lower and lower, as sunglasses hide macho blank faces, as height and size count more and more... as the court for professionals get smaller, while the ordinary players keep the old larger one that is more difficult to play on. As rules are changed to favor the bully, the big man on the beach. And what drives all of this? Commercial advertising. Trying to get the fat couch potato addicted to watching their brand of macho-bully-bum sports. Money. Greed. A complete re-play of the Roman culture of addicting the masses to free bread and circuses. As the Roman Populi got fatter and fatter. While their arena idols became more and more like muscled Greek Gods.

1242

The fanatical Puritanism of American settlers, the puritan fanaticism of the Roman founding fathers, the Puritan fanaticism of Sparta, the fanatical Puritanism of the early founding European cultures... gave us only worse, more, dehumanized mechanized tool-abstract insanity. Now researchers have found that the lost papers of Archimedes... showing that he had actually developed a mathematics for fractionalizing Infinity, as a wedge of a globe, or a parabola... He had himself discovered that the entire Universe was built upon a series of infinite fractions. Did it do him any good? Was he a better human because of it? Yet this kind of Scientific shit is precisely what scientists now worship as the most modern form of humanity. Today, you will find that all scientists worship Mathematics. They worship Pure Abstraction.

Under their rationale: Life on this planet was designed only to create mechanical machines. So spend more time with your computer than with children.

?... You mean it took two World Wars, plus the creation of the Atomic Bomb... to make only a few privileged, better educated, better-raised humans realize for a short brief time: the importance of their own children over and above the trappings of all other civilized shit? And now; even that is fading into complete mass ignorance... as the slide back into universal corruption and blindness continues. Huh? Do you think the American and English and European postwar generations had any appreciation of what had to happen before they reached their own tiny glimmering realizations of humanity? And did they keep it? No. It was quickly forgotten as if it never happened. The inner self of humans still remains a black hole, an inner, unexplored wasteland that nobody wants to look at or explore. The past is forgotten and buried as fast as passable.

But there is an incremental improvement that can be shown to exist in Western civilization. Homosexuality became abhorrent to the mainstream, But Kinsey exposed it scientifically: and made it socially acceptable again to be homosexual; by using the poison semantic word-lie: Gay instead of homosexual. Meaning that homosexuals were happier, gayer than heterosexual people. That homosexual love was happier, gayer than heterosexual love. Why? Because heterosexual men were supposed to be brooding cavemen. Surly, crude brutes with no sense of humor and incapable of having fun.

Western culture now glorifies rich, elite women: as token sex-symbols, as token mother-symbols, and as token love-symbols and sex symbols: instead of using them as beasts of burden and raping them and brutalizing them all of their lives as was once the custom... and still is in many cultures today. But homosexuality is making a comeback. All the old fads and cults are being re-discovered, re-born, re-lived.

But over-all: there has only been a tiny, a teeny bit of a weensy bit of actual improvement... over the last two thousand years in the humanity of humans...

And only at the top of the pyramidal pile.

And even then: only incrementally.

While for 2,000 years: the evils of all the rest of Western culture continue to drown out any of this token improvement. Today: the United States of America... the richest, most powerful Nation on Earth gives the smallest part of its budget to aiding poor Nations compared to all other rich industrialized Nations. It gives only one thousandth of one percent. Or .0001% of their budget. That is all that goes to international aid.

The idea of optimism. The concept of hope. The idea that if civilization can survive another one hundred million years... that this tiny incremental bit of token generosity will eventually overtake the 99.999% selfishness of the human soul: is the biggest bullshit ever conceived. It is no wonder that most ordinary citizens ignore the idiotic optimism of do-gooders.

No human wants to face the truth about this kind of incremental improvement. The truth is: that all civilization, and all humans will be extinct long before this one hundred million years has elapsed. The 99.999% of human selfishness will destroy civilization, and all living things on this planet... long before one hundred million years has elapsed. That is the arrogance of every dominant Empire, and every dominant culture. That is its blindness. Hitler envisioned a one-thousand year-long rule of Germanic power and might as the dominant culture in the world. How long did it last? A few years. And only as a plan. Only as a stupid, arrogant idea. Now humans have the stupid, arrogant idea that Capitalism is the best culture ever invented... and will save the world. But they do not even have a plan. They only have liars who spout optimism, and hope... cynically. With beady frog-eyes... that gleam out in reptilian intelligence and false logic; uttering platitudes that mean nothing, and are ignored. Revealing that these optimists are no more intelligent than the reptiles, who once ruled the world, and disappeared. Why is optimism and hope such a necessary addiction to anyone who are only slightly enlightened about the corruption on the human species? Because if they did not lie to themselves: they would become clinically depressed... or commit suicide, or go out and start killing people. And that would create an even greater conviction that enlightenment and realizing the naked truth is something to avoid at all costs. The problem with civilized wisdom and enlightenment is that it is fragmented, segmented, incomplete. The problem with civilized people is that their thinking is weak, it is not logical, they never get to the root of the problem: and so they jump to the wrong conclusions: they give up, they stop trying to understand, they stop trying to learn. 'A little knowledge is a dangerous thing.' They do not understand the problem because they are missing the basic elements of understanding which are:

Experience
Evaluation
Comparison
Perspective

To experience civilization: you must experience ALL of it: all the way through: you must go through all of civilization all the way and not give up before you have barely begun.

To evaluate civilization you have to evaluate ALL of it, all the way through, and not give up just because when it gets discouraging.

To compare civilization you have to experience living inside civilization and living outside of civilization, and compare both and not give up just because you are stuck inside it and don't know how to get outside of it.

To get a perspective on civilization you have to pull back far enough to see it as a whole, you have to pull back far enough so you can see it in its proper context, , and not give up just because you haven't been able to understand it all yet.

The Art of Giving

Where can you find a history of Giving in civilization? How many people have given what? Over the course of ten-twelve thousand years. Where is giving even recognized publicly as a human good? When has it ever been practiced? When has it ever been socially recognized enough to even be written about? Once in five hundred years by one person? Read all the books of past civilizations; and what do these stories tell you of the generosity of the people who lived then? You will only find generosity in fairytales and fables, and legends designed never to be taken seriously, and to be read only to innocent gullible naïve children. By the time you grow up: all the generosity in your soul has been drubbed out, and you no longer take these fairytales of generosity seriously.

First: the pyramidal structure of Civilization itself insures that generosity of any kind is almost non-existent in the first place: and even if you wanted to practice it: almost impossible to practice. The only way rich people became rich was by being greedy not generous; so you can rule out all generosity by the rich period. If you examine generosity of the rich you will find that it is token giving, and extremely rare, and it is practiced for ulterior motives of ultimate advantage. If you are poor: you envy the rich and want what they have..

But if you examine the rare examples of generosity: you will find it invariably comes from children: not from adults. The one-in-a-million cases of giving by the poor, or middle class are extremely rare exceptions. The very concept of generosity and especially the practice of it... is almost non-existent in all civilized cultures and religions.

Take the highest spiritual human icons: like John Denver: and his song: "Thank God I'm a County Boy"... The last line is about his father bringing him to his side just before he dies. The son says of that last farewell:

'Well my daddy taught me young; how to hunt and how to whittle:
Taught me how to work and play a tune on a fiddle:
Taught me how to love and how to give just a little..... whew!...
Thank God I'm a country boy!'

What does this song reveal of as American icon, a famous, filthy rich billionaire songwriter and singer? On of the worst environmental hypocrites who ever espoused saving the oceans and forests?

It reveals what his LAST priority was. And that it was only a lip-service add-on, that was so hard to even try to do... he got tired just singing that last lie... he had to add: 'whew!' ..... to the song. As a joke. At the idea of him giving anything to anybody. The list of values his dying father gave him begin at In order of actual priority:

- No 1: Hunting-killing
- No 2: Whittling, destroying Nature, trees: by a lazy pastimes like whittling.
- No. 3: work
- No. 4: music

No. 5: Love

No: 6: Giving... Whew! Now that last one is just too much to expect me to do!... the other five? Fine! But give just a little?... whew! Thank God he died and does not whip me when I do not obey that last edict which he never lived by either. It was just lip-service anyways... Thank God I'm a country Boy! Thank God I'm lucky to have all the things rich city people don't have! Boy am I lucky! Boy can I sneer at city folk! I'm rich in other things! He even sneers at wealth and money. While being unable to give anything... except token songs to Americans that he made a fortune from...

The irony of the last two values, is: if he gets tired from just the idea of giving just a little... then what kind of love is he yakking about? The 2nd to last priority was also a lip-service lie. Denver never learned how to love. His marriages were all failed disasters. And no wonder. If you do not know how to give. If you do not want to give anything of yourself in the first place: then love by definition cannot exist. You cannot have love without giving. Giving is even more basic and more important than love. His song is a nice token of a token, of a token of a token, of a lie, of a hypocrisy, of an avoidance, of a platitude, of a lip-service. That is how far removed American culture has abstracted human-tool values... Singing of a lucky life 99% of Americans never lived and never want to actually live.... If they ever found out how much hardship it actually involved. The song ends in a crescendo... dragging out the last word. Screaming out the last word... at the pain and difficulty of even giving love just a LittLLLLLLLLLEEE! .... Whew... Boy. That's HARD! Whew! That's exhausting!

John Denver's song unconsciously reveals how nonexistent giving actually is in American culture. And how in America: the highest moral teaching of their forefathers... is a lip-service hypocrisy of 'giving just a little'. Not a lot. Not all of yourself.... Only a little of yourself. And even the thought of that exhausts Denver: because he cannot even imagine doing such an unheard of thing.. Thank God his father is dead! Thank God he is lucky and blessed! Selfishly counting all of his amassed blessings like a Scrooge counting all of his gold coins. Is smug happiness at being better blessed with luck, and greedily counting one's own undeserved, unearned blessings... any better than a city-person greedily counting his money?

Why does his song reveal all this?

Because he was trying to please his audience. He had to write a song they would like. He did not dare offend them. He had to praise them and agree with them. So his song naturally reflected his audience. This song is merely an honest re-reflection of American culture. While sneering and pitying all other people who are less lucky. Any concern or caring about all the billions of people who are not as lucky as he is? No. he revels in how lucky he is. He sings proudly about his luckiness and all the privileges he has. He is thanking GOD that he is not one of the other seven billion unlucky souls who are not as fortunate as he is. And he is proud of it. He is proud of being lucky enough to be rich in Land, Nature, Hunting, Whittling, Working, Music, Fiddling, Marriage, Love, etc... while all other humans are not as well-off, or as lucky as he is. A spiritual ode of smug-self-satisfied pride in exclusive wealth, that he is exclusively given the right to destroy and kill Nature... as a hunter and a farmer. Having a nice slave wife who cooks him food on the griddle. Pancakes in the morning. The heaviest, most unhealthy, junk shit food you can eat in the morning before you even begin exercising. So you are so stuffed and lethargic: your body is so poisoned: and so numbed with that lump of shit in your stomach. That it takes six hours before your stomach can clean itself of that crap... A token pride song for ignorant rednecks to crow about. Being proud of all your exclusive luck. How many human vices and evils are demonstrated in this song about American consumer redneck culture? Tons, and tons. How many human virtues and values? Only token words stuck on at the end: stuck on as fast as possible; to get it over with..

And then Denver puts in the underlying moral to the song at the end of it. The underlying message that all consumer culture sells and people swallow and buy. He puts in the kicker: the one belief all civilized consumers believe implicitly without ever saying it out loud:

‘Life is just a funny, funny ridddddlllllle!!’

Meaning that life is an unfathomable riddle. That no human can make sense of it. That you should never even try to make any sense of your own life. That ALL life is meaningless. That is his messianic meager message to his adoring fans. That Life is meaningless... AND funny. In fact it is the meaninglessness that is so ‘funny’.

Jean Paul Sartre wrote tomes about the insanity of humans being unable to find any meaning to their lives. The entire existential angst and anxiety of the expanding awareness of Europeanized humans during the 40’s and 50’s was quickly covered up, buried and ignored. The entire Existentialist movement after the 2nd World War: was quickly forgotten, belittled and ignored. The healthier, harder, more honest, less self-indulgent ethos of European Philosophy. The idea of trying to find any rational, sane logical meaning to your own life was washed away as quickly as possible. The Existentialism of European self-doubt, and the urge to question why these two insane obscene World Wars had happened: was drowned out by a cultural tidal wave of American denial. America pretended that existentialism did not exist. It pretended that existentialism was something to be laughed at. America glorified the culture of wallowing in sloth. It glorified the ease of spectatorship, and idol worship, and escapism and fantasy. The American answer to Existentialism is John Denver. Denver reassures his adoring masses that he himself cannot find ANY meaning to his own life. So why should they go looking to find any meaning to theirs if their great god of a pop idol does not even want to, or think it worth the effort? And that furthermore: not being able to find any meaning to life, and life being meaningless is supposed to be funny! It is supposed to be laughed about and laughed-at! So he ends his confession of finding all of his life a supposedly funny, meaningless riddle, and goes: ‘Whew! Thank GOD I’m a stupid redneck who NEVER asks about the meaning of life! Thank GOD I’m a simple-minded idiot! Praise all stupid rednecks for not thinking at all! If anyone asks you about the meaning of life: just laugh at them and say it’s all a funny, funny riddle!’

And all the redneck consumers stomp and cheer him for this. Because he has validated their own meaningless existence and their ignorance. Denver glorified the meaninglessness of life. What can any person say about this kind of validation? The validation of self-gratification as the only meaning in life is the root of every consumer corruption. Consumers believe in the meaninglessness of life. Because THEY know that they do not have the slightest clue as to the meaning of their lives and they are never going to ask themselves one damn question about it. The meaninglessness of the consumer culture: glorified and praised. By a singer whose public image was supposed to be as an anti-establishment naturalist; who loved Nature, and hated all big business and corporate consumerism? How venal and obvious was his sellout to being famous and rich living in the exclusive headquarters of the billionaires of Sun Valley? Fighting against any corporate encroachment of his exclusive Nature setting? While representing environmental interests by blatantly lowering himself to the level of an asshole redneck? He fell in love with the simpler carpenters who just drank beer and worked on his porches. And thought that their simpler life was better than his.

But in what context? In the context of a billionaire pop idol envying the consumer rednecks who buy his records making him filthy rich? Praise all idiots who buy my hypocritical shit records! Is there any pop idol who does not praise and glorify their fans who make them rich? Denver is only one example of the consumer music industry: and how civilization affects both the idols and the masses who worship them. It is a re-reflecting vicious cycle of reflected lies and hypocrisies. Human music is so full of this corruption today: it would take a million volumes to analyze the idiocy and venality of the messages being blared out by pop stars, and the ease with which the masses swallow it, and reflect it back to the Media as the latest fad-crap called modern culture.

I do not include music as a human virtue. It is a tool-skill. Music is not a human virtue. It is an abstract memory-connection to something slightly human. The music is a token idea, a token beauty, of a token memory of a token, slight wisp of a feeling that is slightly human. That is how far removed the necessary value of giving has sunk out of sight in American culture. Listening to other people sing instead of singing yourself.

Giving is 50% of the necessary function of all Energy just to insure a stasis, status quo. As long as half of the direction of energy is in giving. Then the other half of taking can happen. If energy only takes and does not give... like Denver's song.... Then the entire Universe would freeze-rot-fade... into a non-dynamic putrescence, where every atom and quark stank to high heaven of selfishness. Luckily: we humans are the only forms of energy that try to do this. But the cells in our own bodies and our own organs do not follow our wishes. They do not accumulate things selfishly. Other wise; our own bodies would die in one second from not giving anything to its other organs, and not flushing out its waste products, but keeping them inside every cell until all the cells die. Giving is not 'virtue'. It is not a choice. It is compulsory. It is utterly necessary, not only for the existence of Life, but for Energy to even exist at all. Yet Science carefully does not explain this obvious Scientific fact to science students. Without all the energy in the Universe being giving of itself 50% of the Time... the Universe itself would not even exist. We are the only form of energy in the Universe that does not obey this Law of Dynamic Balance.

Giving

The only way you can give anything of yourself: is if you first have something to give. The only way you can do that: is to develop your inner-self. The three basic human qualities that a person needs to develop in order to become a giving person are: Honesty, Courage and Love. If you practice these intrinsic human abilities, you will also begin a process of your own self-discovery. You will end up expanding your own awareness. And you will also begin the process of healing yourself on a psychobiologic level of totality: meaning you will begin healing all of yourself, not just one aspect.

If you practice and develop these three human abilities, you will also end up becoming more creative as a person, you will end up having more fun, you will enjoy living more, you will be happier, more fulfilled and your sense of pure wonder will grow. It is the act itself of giving or love that is healing. But how healing it is, depends on the depth of that love-giving... the intensity of it. To selfishly reserve this for only one person is in itself a limiting, non-healing dynamic. Yet that is what civilization trains people to do: because civilized love has a fortress mentality. By existing inside a system based upon distrust, competition, fear, greed, people wall themselves off into safe enclaves of a couple, or a family: showing one face to them, and another to the outside world.

By this creation of barriers: any love inside these havens is unavoidably corrupted. How much do people dare to give of themselves? How much do they dare to love others? How vulnerable do they dare let themselves be? Love requires courage. How much are you controlled by fear? Again: you have the endless conflict between tool-values and human-values. Between separating yourself from you and others and the world... and connecting to yourself, to loved ones, the World, and to Nature. And as your sense of Pure Wonder develops, you will want to explore yourself and everything around you more, you will discover things that are more new, you will question more things, you will become more curious. You will find that if you develop your ability to love, to be courageous, to be honest, you can give this love, this honesty and this courage, to others. You will find that merely the example of how you live will rub off on others, and that you will affect many around you without even meaning to do it. You will find that the most fulfilling and satisfying form of enjoyment is to give without expecting anything in return. So much so, that you will seek to find new ways of doing it. Until you begin to practice the art of giving creatively. So that your entire life becomes a natural process of giving, fun, love, happiness and creativity... And this way of living will sensitize you more and more to everything around you, and inside you. So you become more aware, so you live with a greater Sense Of Pure Wonder.

What about receiving? Shouldn't there be a dynamic balance between the two? Shouldn't you receive as much as you give? If nothing is given to you, why should you create an imbalanced dynamic? The answer is simple. If there is no energy-flow to begin with, no giving or receiving, you have deadness, non-change: zero. To give; means that you are creating the dynamic of a positive energy-flow:

—————→ which will in turn encourage other energy to flow also.

If you only wish to receive-take-profit and not give, you will end up creating the dynamic of a negative energy-flow which will in turn lessen the flow of positive energy. ←————

In this context, I am using the words positive and negative to represent the different direction of energy-flow between human civilization and the rest of the Universe. In the Universe: energy flows one-way: toward a more dynamically balanced, more powerful, stronger norm, or condition. Whereas in civilization, energy flows towards a weaker, less dynamically balanced, less sensitive, less powerful norm or condition. This effect is hidden, and camouflaged by our use of tools, by us living safe inside our houses, and being warmed by the use of fire, and oil, and wood. It is hidden by our machines and tools becoming more powerful... as our life-energy becomes ever weaker, and less powerful.

The idea of balancing any energy-flow of life into a non-changing status quo is not a living dynamic balance. That is a dead non-dynamic balance where nothing changes. If the same number of organisms that existed 4 billion years ago had never changed: life itself would never have developed and flourished as it has. Only by all living organisms being more life-giving than life-taking, have they produced the splendors which exist today. Life has always sought a higher dynamic balance; not the same balance it had 4 billion years ago. If you do not give more than you receive, you are not acting as a positive energy upon others, you are not allowing your life-energy to flow freely and positively.

The difference between the dead, one-sided energy of tool-use as compared to the energy-flow of life-energy and love-energy can be shown using a car battery. The mechanically dead energy source of a car battery has only one side to its flow, one result to its energy-flow: its energy runs only in one direction: out... nothing goes back in... its has only one result: total depletion of its own stored, accumulated energy. In order to even restore some of its depleted energy, you need to waste gallons of gas to power the alternator. The gas you use to slightly restore the lost energy of the car battery is a process of 100% depletion. The oil taken out of the Earth is never put back in. Civilization is engaged only in a one-way process of depleting the Earth of as much energy as possible.

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

But the energy dynamic of life and love is different. Life-energy not only restores its own battery, it puts back into the Earth more life-energy than it took... because it does not need it. It does not want to save it, or preserve it... as oil or wealth, or power, or knowledge, or status, or anything else.

The concentrated essence of living plants compressed into a liquid called: Oil, allows the tectonic movement of the Earth's crust to become more dynamic. So, the Earth's crust becomes more active, more alive. It is the same with love-energy. When people give more love than they receive, then that love takes on an energy-flow force that creates more love... that goes on to create more love. Life-energy and all love-energy is based upon abundance not scarcity, or the fear of scarcity. It works by giving back more than it receives. As an over-simplified example, think of a car battery that is alive not dead... and is feeding more energy into another car battery than it has for itself... and that living life-love energy once received by the other living car-battery inspires it to send more living-loving energy than it receives; back to the other living car battery... which in turn is inspired to send even more living-love energy back again to the other living car battery. That is the difference between living and non-living energy. That is the difference between Positive feedback, And Negative feedback.

The Universe, all Life-Energy, and you as a living animal: exists in a dynamic balance along with all other energies. The more this energy flows-moves, the more dynamic it becomes. If you take without giving, you are depleting or lessening or opposing this energy-flow. If you give only as much as you receive, you are not improving the flow of this energy or its dynamic balance. But if you give more than you take, you improve this energy-flow. The interconnectivity of all energy in the Universe, especially on the level of organic life, is so dynamic that this increase of energy-flow always, invariably improves your own level of dynamic balance, your happiness, and your well-being. All you need to do is to collect testimonials from people who are givers; and they will try to explain to you how it has never ceased to amaze them how their unselfish giving ends up benefiting them and affecting them in ways that are unbelievable true. 'What goes around: comes around.' Is not an empty phrase. This is how the Universe actually works. Except that many things do not come full-circle in one short human lifetime. Only.. civilization has delayed this dynamic temporarily, by pretending that this Universal Dynamic of vicious cycles does not exist for humans. It pretends this Universal Dynamic exists for everything else in the Universe... with the exception of humans.

This is an unspoken assumption of Science. Science shows how the laws of energy work for all the Universe...: and then proudly brags how humans do not have to obey these Universal Laws. How we are somehow above the Laws of Physics: because they somehow do not apply to us.

Most of the Time... Science does actually come out and say it: Science just assumes it. It becomes an unspoken assumption. It becomes taken for granted. It becomes normal. It becomes invisible. It becomes unthinkable to NOT assume it

Of course; there is no sense in totally depleting yourself so you have nothing left to give. If you have nothing to give, there is no sense in trying to give what you don't have. Your own intrinsic self-balance, self-development comes first. But: if you do develop the three basic human qualities of Honesty, Courage And a Sense of Pure Wonder within yourself: you will find to your surprise, that each act of giving increases your ability to give.

The problem is that all civilization is based not upon increasing energy-flow or giving, but upon accumulation-taking-profit. This creates an unavoidable conflict in all human existence. The general effect of living inside such a system prevents people from practicing what is most beneficial for them humanly: this insures their unhappiness. Civilization does not allow people to fully develop their ability to give, or their Honesty, or their Courage, or their ability to Love. The mere fact that you must earn money to make a living inside civilization stifles your ability to give because it forces you to make a profit. It forces you to be a taker, not a giver. It forces you not to trust your neighbors. If most of your life-energy is devoted to making a profit, to getting more than you already have: it is no surprise that the human-giving part of you is never fully developed. If any giving is reserved for a select few and only practiced a few times a year: it is no surprise that upon these ritualized occasions the quality of giving is so poor.

It makes no sense to be loving only once a year, or once a month, or once a week. It makes no sense to concentrate all of one's generosity and the spirit of giving into one day called Christmas: while abstaining from the practice of giving for the rest of the year. Nor does it make any sense to selectively bequeath that giving only to a small circle of close friends and relatives while walling off the rest of society from that giving. Today: this practice of niggardly spirituality is upheld as normal: just as the rest of the years total lack of any spiritual development or practice is also considered to be normal. After that one day of over-eating, over-consumption, and over-accumulation: it is back to business as usual... meaning after this one poisoned token-ritual of giving... it is back to the business of total selfishness and greed. With Christmas being totally commercialized: its major importance lies in the ability to make a profit from it: the minor importance of giving has become so commercialized and engulfed by the greed for profit, for Christmas sales; that the giving itself has become a meaningless ritual, empty of any sincere generous spirit. So: what is left of any kind of giving spirituality in modern society? Making a profit from the spirit of giving?

What is Christmas for affluent people anyways? It is pure tokenism. Acting out a ritual of family togetherness one day a year. A ritual of hypocrisy hated by most people simply because it is only a token... and therefore meaningless. After this one day: there is no show of love or giving for the rest of the year.

However... if you want to put some this one token day. Why not have all the rich affluent families trade places with all of the poor families on Earth? Have Christmas as a day of voluntary fasting: were no self-respecting Christian who has any wealth or food eat anything at all. Have the poor people live in the rich people's houses for one day a year. Have all the presents, and all the food, and all the decorations and the Christmas tree prepared for Christmas for your family ready for a poor family to enjoy. And then each rich family trade places with the poor family... and not open a single present the poor family prepared for each other. And not eat a single morsel of food in that poor house on that day.

Have the poor people be given the luxury of dining in affluent style and elegance, and have tons of expensive presents for them to open, and tons of rich, expensive food, and live and sleep in expensive beds, and wake up Christmas morning in a rich house with tons of expensive presents... so they will know what it feels like to be rich and wealthy. So they will know what it feels like to eat the best food, and have the most expensive presents... While all the rich families do without for that one day.

Then you would have a token holiday that has some meaning to it. then you would have rich people who will know what it feels like to go to sleep all hungry and cold, and living in ugly run-down, cheap, poor quarters. Then rich people might treat poor people differently after Christmas. Then Christmas might be a positive holiday... because the rich VOLUNTARILY decided to endure hardship for just one day a year.

But that might set off a social revolution. Rich children might stop buying Jaguars and Mercedes. Poor people might grow to hate rich people after seeing all the things they have that they cannot afford.... But we can't have that now: can we? We can't let rich people helping poor people. It just isn't done!

Oh well... it's just an idea.... But that's all civilization is: a bunch of abstract ideas and assumptions.

Legend has it that a Medieval King named Wenceslas was supposed to go out every Christmas and find one poor person and bring them home to share one meal one day of the year... while letting that poor person starve the rest of the year. This mythical King was so rare a giver; that the Catholic Church sainted him... Now, we can't have any greater living example of generosity and giving than this mythic King hundreds of years ago, now.... Can we? I mean we are all modern enlightened educated people today. We are not barbaric ignorant people of the Dark Ages. We are not Medieval Kings. How dare we practice generosity better than this ancient shit?

In Europe at that time: only Kings are allowed to show generosity. And they were only allowed to show it once a year. The rest of the population has to remain as greedy and as mean, and as nasty and as unhappy as possible. Today: we can't be more humane and giving than a Medieval legend of a non-existent King now: can we? Otherwise we won't be able to revere this ancient old dead shit for another thousand years, as being the epitome of the Spirit of Giving on Christmas.

Actually the entire story is pure bullshit. The Kings of that time arbitrarily chose the coldest day of the year and called it a holy day. Christmas comes from this holy day. Then it was called the Feast of Stephen. Kings were supposed to go out on that holy day...in a ritual hunt to find a single poor man to feed and take home for only one meal.

Not the whole village. Not all the poor people who lived around and near the castles. Not the villages of poor people; where Kings knew damn well where the poor people lived... The courtiers of the King carefully planned the route out in advance; so one of them could fake being a poor person: and be taken in from the cold by their King to satisfy the token acting out of the token ritual.

Kings never actually took any poor person into their hall: to feed them on the coldest day of the year. Especially After the biggest snowfall of the winter: which was when these kings arbitrarily called one day: St. Stephen's Day... or Christmas.

The Church changed the holiday from a celebration of new birth: to a celebration of death. The day was used to celebrate the Mass of Christ. The Gravity of Christ dying. The Light of his enlightenment. This is where the insane ideas of modern Science come from.

Why did they practice this fake, token, ritual in secret? On this coldest day of the year after the biggest snowfall? Because they knew on this day; that all the poor people were snowed-in, and slowly starving to death and freezing to death in their hovels. And no sane starving poor person went outside on the coldest day of the year, when the snow was at its highest. And no poor person ever knew it was supposed to be Christmas on that day either. The Kings never told them. The bullshit legend has it that Wenceslas saw footprints in the snow and followed them, when his courtiers were all ready to have their token 'poor courtier' waiting to be conveniently found. And that Wenceslas followed these prints and found an actual woodcutter who was not a member of his court, and took him in.... and the wood cutter disappeared. Because he was supposed to have been actually Jesus Christ himself...!

Think of it. One tiny act of superficial generosity turns you into a saint. It wipes away all the sins and crimes of your whole life... from being a King, a taxing the poor, systematically robbing them of their sweat and food and goods, killing them and oppressing them. Instantly! This one act makes you worshipped and loved by all the poor people all over the Christian world. Not a bad bargain for the inconvenience walking outside once year; eh? How full of secret guilt were the subconscious consciences of these Robber Baron Kings for them to swallow this bullshit in the first place, eh?

This is only one example of how we have whitewashed the truth about these ancient filth called Kings; and enshrined the biggest Christian Hypocrite Medieval King, as a living spirit of generosity... of pure hypocritical tokenism.

His name explains it all. He was named 'whence-is-last...' by his peasants. Because he was the last King to arbitrarily announce the token holiday of Christmas in winter... Because he was always hoping for a colder day with a bigger snowfall that would kill more poor people, and guarantee that he would not be embarrassed by accidentally meeting a poor starving person on that arbitrary day of the last-biggest snowfall of the winter. All the poor people of his region called him that in irony... because it was standard knowledge of him complaining all winter... asking his courtiers over and over again...

'Whence is the last snowfall?'

Why did he want to announce the Feast of Stephen on the last snowfall instead of the coldest day? Because by then, more poor people would have starved to death. Then there was the smallest mathematical chance of ever being embarrassed by actually meeting a poor starving peasant in the woods gathering bark from trees to eat because they had nothing else left.

Because he wanted to celebrate the religious holiday without ever meeting a poor man. And the best way to do it was to declare the holiday on the day after the last snowfall of the winter... when the snow was deepest and no poor person with an ounce of sense went out... when in fact; the entire land was snowbound and all the people; poor and rich alike were trapped inside their dwellings by the highest snowfall of the year. That holiday was then called the Feast of Stephen. Christmas had not been invented yet.

Why did Kings feast on that day? Because they were happy in the knowledge that most of their vassals were hungry and starving. It helped define the difference between lords and vassals. If you were fat and rich, and could afford a huge expensive feast: you had to be a Lord. If you were skinny and poor: you had to be a vassal. You had to be a vessel; pouring your life, and fat, and wealth into the coffers and bellies of the rich feasting Lords.

The legend of Wenceslas grew, and helped to kill even more starving poor people in Europe in winter. They rushed out of their hovels after every huge snowfall; hoping to find a rich person who would take them in and feed them: They never found one. They just froze to death outside, and starved to death faster. But to hide the historical truth of the human filth called 'good Christians' of that era actually lived: this token lie of a legend has been sold to the masses; so modern civilized people will think that: once upon a time... there actually existed generous rich people in Europe.

The actual custom of that day was even filthier than can be imagined by modern civilized humans. Great kings believed that on a certain sacred day: if they went out into the forest and found footprints: they would meet Jesus pretending to be a woodcutter. And they would be blessed, and all their sins of greed and avarice and killing and hate and rapacity would be forgiven. They had been sold this crap by the Church. Convinced that if they could find one poor man and feed him, and it turned out to be Jesus himself returned to Earth... they would be guaranteed a high place in heaven... regardless of how many women they raped, how many peasants they butchered and stole from etc. It was a token holiday. Designed by the liars of the church to symbolically wash away all the sins of every King every Year easily and magically. A free token pass to Heaven. A free guarantee of absolution and sainthood. After all. If you feed a poor man who turns out to be Jesus himself. Then fuck all the poor starving children and vassals you create and depend-on to stay rich. You; the King, are now holier than the Pope himself! Bards and minstrels traveled from court to court... from country to country trying to please the masters of the castles and houses they got their food and lodgings from. The history of songs, music: is a history of people whitewashing the past by creating Myths and lies to cover it up with. Until the sweetening of musical notes added on top of the words made it an even more effective form of cultural propaganda. These propaganda artists twisted every fact they could; hoping to find favor with their masters. If their songs and tales displeased the King. They were killed. They were thrown out on their ear, and starved, and died.

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1254

Not find one song that ever told the actual truth was ever preserved and sung over and over. Not find one honest minstrel who sang the truth ever gained fame, or was ever remembered, and glorified, and recorded to have lived. All ancient songs and myths and history are full of lies.

Read the words of the famous Christmas Carol. It is sick joke. It is cunning Medieval European propaganda. The only way culture was spread for thousands of years was by word-of-mouth. By tales, myths, lies, tall tales, exaggerated bullshit; twisted and manipulated... to please listeners.

The first line of the first stanza goes;

‘Good King Wenceslas looked out’

Good King?... The song is selling you on the idea that there is such a thing as a Good King. The first word of that song is a fucking lie. The song was trying to recreate an even more ancient superstition... that all ancient Kings were Good... that they were Gods... Good Kings... God Kings... get it? Modern historians still treat them as Gods to this day. They do not even try to understand them as human beings. If they did: they would vomit on what they know of them, and what they actually did and what kind of people they actually were.

Any form of mass culture, any idea that needs to be sold to the masses... is automatically a lie. If Kings had actually been good. They would not have needed to sell this bullshit idea in a song. Their good deeds would have been remembered, and told, and retold for thousands of years. Are there any such tales preserved in folk cultures about any King being good? No.

The first line of the first stanza goes; ‘Good King Wenceslas looked out’

It should read: Good King Wences last looked out. That was the last fucking time he looked outside of his castle. He never went out of his castle to begin with. He took one last look at how cold it was and stayed inside.

He was looking out on the last snowfall. The coldest day of winter: when the frost was a cruel as possible. When the snow was the deepest. Deep and crisp and even... even... so there were no footprints. If there had been footprints in the snow... if the snow had not been deep and crisp and even... He would have turned around and looked for some other part of the forest where there were no traces of human habitation. He was making sure that when he went out: he would not find any poor person stupid enough to go into the deepest part of the forest to die of cold.

1254

Why didn't he just go to the nearest village and invite one poor person to his table... EH? Why did he have to go out in the middle of a fucking forest on the coldest fucking day of the fucking winter, when the snow was the fucking deepest, eh? Why all this rigmarole? To try and prove how fucking good he was? Huh?

Does that mean if Americans want to be good, ... and be remembered in song for hundreds of years because of their sacred spiritual goodness. They should make Thanksgiving; the coldest day of the year. And go out into the deepest uninhabited forest, where the snow is deepest... in the hopes of finding one poor person and bring them back, to feed them once on Thanksgiving? But nowhere else? And on no other day? Americans feed thousands of poor people on Thanksgiving. The volunteers who feed them are not remembered in song for hundreds of years. They do not go through the rigmarole bullshit King Wences did. Oh... but Wences was a King. He was an old King... He was a Good King... 'Good King Wences Last looked out... On the feast of Stephen...

Why 'Last...?' ... because he was saying:

'At last! at last! I can eat and stuff myself! And to hell with all starving peasants.'
He was rubbing his hands in anticipation for the feast all prepared for him.

On the Feast of Stephen...'

What does the song say? He was not looking out into the night, or looking outside his castle... he was looking inside his castle... He never left the damn castle... get it? He was looking out on his feast before him... on all the food piled up on his tables...

While on this coldest day he had the comforting thought that all poor starving peasants all over Europe were starving to death, while he could feast his eyes on all this food. The feast of St. Stephen was only a feast for the rich, not for the poor. The poor had no damn feast.

'Brightly shone the moon that night...'

And furthermore, what the fuck was he doing looking for a poor man to feed; in middle of the fucking night instead of in the daytime, eh? Going into the deepest woods in the middle of the fucking night when the frost was the cruelest, once a fucking year?... ... In the middle of the goddamn night?

The Christian holiday of celebrating the birth of Jesus BACK into a pagan holiday celebrating gluttony and feasting one thousand years ago. We think nothing of it today. This song explains how and why the birth of Jesus was culturally poisoned into a feast. Instead of focusing on Jesus and his birth... Ancient Kings became obsessed with becoming sainted to escape the evil they were guilty of. So the peasants aped the Kings. They saved up their food to celebrate the coming of Jesus and had their own meager, private, selfish feasts of gluttony... This ancient song shows how and why Christmas is what it is today. And we sing this shit... we have sung this propaganda bullshit for hundreds and hundreds of years. As an example of the highest form of European Christian charity. Lies, all lies. Bullshit. Bullshit. Vomit. Vomit.

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1256

What is Yule?

Y (Why) U (You) (L) Love (E) Energy.

The burning of wood. The burning of the Yule log. The love of consumption. Consuming wood. Replacing human warmth, with the warmth you get from the burning consumption of wood logs, dead trees. The love of total destruction. Look at how the Catholic Church corrupted the teachings of its own fucking Saints for god's sake. All of the humble, poor martyrs who starved and barely ate anything... their names were used as excuses for holdings feasts. So, in memory of all the poor starving people who were more spiritual than you are... you are supposed to celebrate their spirituality and their hardships and all they suffered... by the gluttony of having a feast in their name, for god's sake. When the living examples of the Catholic Saints: were and still are; the complete fucking opposite of gluttony, ease, and feasting. They became saints by never feasting. They became saints by being more honest, more generous, more kindly, more courageous, more understanding than other people.

Ah... but if you hold feasts every year in their name... then you will guarantee that there will be no more troublesome saintly honest spiritual people that might give Catholics a better example to live by. Then the bishops and clerics and the Pope will not be forced to burn these troublesome heretics at the stake, or excommunicate them or denounce them. Then you will have a nicely corrupted mass of brainwashed Catholics who believe... Now get this: that if they hold feasts in memory of people who starved! They will all become good little Catholics and all go to heaven after they die!

Read history critically and your eyes will be opened.

What did most German and English Kings do? They spent most of their time at their hunting lodges. Why? So they could hunt down and kill animals, and roast them, and eat them. Because they were not allowed to go pillaging anymore like they used to. The modern foxhunt comes from the time when all the gentry and Kings and Nobles could ride anywhere they fucking pleased: hunting animals to kill. And if your farm was in the way? Fuck it. If you had fences? They were ripped down and the guilty ones who impeded their hunt: were whipped and killed, and the girls and women were raped. It was a way of keeping the peasants permanently terrorized by preserving the traditions of raiding the whole countryside whenever they damn well pleased. The foxhunt is the last whitewashed remnant of this true original raiding culture of Robber Baron Kings. They tried to keep on killing and raping and raiding as long as they possibly could. They tried to preserve the traditions and the rituals of hunting and killing and raping and destroying poor farms and eating dead animals as long as fucking possible.

The last Kaiser of Germany in 1912... spent most of his time at his royal hunting lodge... hunting down, and killing living animals. Killing was his supreme pleasure... until he found a greater pleasure in his industrial toys: creating a huge army and Navy, and huge weapons of mass destruction, and going to War... so he could kill more living animals, er, humans, er soldiers... For European aristocracy: armies and huge artillery weapons of mass destruction were toys to be played with. The loss of human life meant nothing to the insane European elite. Modern day technology is no different: machines are toys.

So a million soldiers are killed; so what? they're just toys. Get some more millions and put them on the playing board and play more war games. Oops... You killed off the entire generation of your Nations youth... yawn. Darn it. If we only had 20 million more young men to conscript into the army: we wouldn't have lost the war. What? Hold the entire European elite responsible for the murder of 25 million people? Hold courts of law and try them for knowingly sending people off to death? Execute them for knowingly trying to murder people of other nationalities? Cut all the heads off the top 10% of the European elite? Destroy the monarchies? Destroy the landed gentry and the rich bourgeoisie?

1256

That's not war. That's not acceptable. That is unacceptable. That's CLASS warfare. Mustn't do that. Nope. We are not allowed to fight amongst ourselves. Your Nationality is far more important than what class you belong to. We must allow rich elite to order poor lower class suckers to die for them... that's legal war fare... that's legalized killing. That is traditional. That is customary. We must keep our fucking sick, insane, obsolete customs alive, and kill off all the young people of the world

One of the cultural consequences of these Royal scum, has been the eating of meat. The lower class aping the upper class. Not by hunting. By raising livestock to kill and eat. The mass butchering of living animals. The modern meat industry. The mass religion of eating dead animal meat... for 'protein'. Protein? Bullshit. More lies. Did human hunters killing animals 200,000 years ago worry about how much fucking protein was in their diet? So that's why they killed animals?

No. The preserved traditions and customs of killing animals and eating their dead meat: does not come from any fucking dietary concern. It comes from walking apes making tools they could kill with. It comes from millions of years of using tools to kill. Killing is not sane. It is not healthy. Killing is sick. Study history. Study anthropology. All the facts are there.

The principle of tool-use dominates all human values so completely that there is nothing sacred or valued any more in any human society that is not commercialized or poisoned by it. If the only true value that our capitalistic civilization holds, is the commercialization and profit-making from anything that people hold sacred or value: then you get a bankrupt spirituality that is ultimately empty, worthless and meaningless.

Becoming civilized means developing your tool-abilities: not your own humanity. Civilization is basically an anti-human, pro-tool system. Unless people recognize this, they will never become able to fully develop their own humanity.

What about the apparent conflict between selfishness and selflessness? If you can only give of yourself by spending time and energy on yourself; then you must first be selfish in order to give. How can a selfish person wishing to improve themselves, derive their only satisfaction through selflessness?

Here again, it is a matter of dynamic balance. Being selfish or selfless is actually irrelevant. It is the condition of your psyche and your environment which is relevant. If you live by the human values of Love, Courage, Honesty, Fun... If you exist in a state of Pure Wonder: then your psyche will be integrated and balanced; so there is no separation between doing what you want, having fun, loving, being creative, helping others, and helping yourself.

It is only when a person's psyche is split-up and not integrated... When the imbalances of fear, hate, dishonesty and cowardice corrupt the human psyche, that you get any polarized conflict between selfishness and selflessness. It is only when human society is so split-up that living is no longer fun, that people are forced to become purely selfish just in order to survive inside civilization: that you get the imbalance between giving too much to yourself, and not enough to others. It is no surprise that the less natural our environment becomes: the less healthy our normality becomes and the more unhappy we are. Increasingly: everything our children are exposed to is artificially fabricated or artificially altered. And as this happens: there is no comparison or perspective of different norms, different environments. There is no way of tracking the subtle changes that our rampaging technology produces in our children. The Sense of Pure Wonder stands as the only effective arbiter of human reality and normality because it is the only motivation, the only kind of awareness that seeks to step outside of any normality and tries to gain perspective on different kinds of existence, culture, values and beliefs. Without this trait: humans cannot gain any understanding of what is happening to them, their experiences, their inner selves and their own true nature. Change for the sake of change is a recipe for blind, unknowing, disaster. More and more: people see their own lives and the events in their lives as having no meaning. This pervasive sense of meaninglessness is never closely examined. Yet it afflicts everybody whether they are aware of it or not. The condition of non-questioning normality is by definition a condition of meaninglessness.

To determine the relative humanity or inhumanity of any culture, community, family, or individual: a good yardstick to use, is how children are treated-regarded-valued... Not how the old and dying are treated. How much time-energy-caring-love is spent upon children reveals the true humanity of any culture. Not the lip service of espoused values, beliefs and opinions... while not practicing what they preach.

Civilization's structure makes it necessary for most people to spend most of the time working. What little time is left over: some of this is spent on children. The question is: how much time is that? How much love is that? In the scope of civilization: what degree of importance do children have? How is civilization structured to accommodate the needs of children? In the power-structures of government, business and religion: what priority do children have? Since the priorities of civilization are based upon the accumulation of knowledge, wealth, power, and social standing: what is left over for children is always a tiny fraction of any society's energy-time and resources. How this allotment of energy, time, caring and love is played out inside each family... How much each family lacks any integrated support by a community... How much each community lacks any support from larger social institutions for the care of their children: has been documented many times over.

The number one complaint of all teenagers in modern society is boredom, having nothing to do. No attention is paid to them, they are ignored, left to their own devices, left to rot in a social-emotional-spiritual vacuum. So; all of their pent up energies, frustrations, resentments, and anger erupts incoherently. When all they are doing, is screaming for attention, for love, caring, and guidance;

' I want excitement, not boredom. Give me something fun to do. Something useful. Something meaningful. So I can feel worthy, worthwhile, valued, needed. Let me be a part-of something... anything Pay attention to me. Don't ignore me!'

But modern society has split-up communities and families in so many different ways, into so many separate activities, functions, interests, lifestyles; that now, each separate age-bracket has its own sub-culture. Until you get a split-up family with each person going their own way, until you get chaotic conflict inside what used to be a single, harmonious cooperative unit. Late adolescence is when the human brain becomes fully mature in its development. It is no coincidence that this is exactly the time when teenagers instinctively rebel against the system they find themselves living in. The rage of the adolescent is simple: they are looking for all the things that their society is not giving them: fun, excitement, love, acceptance, attention, meaning, usefulness, happiness.

The end result however: is that children are put last in the general scheme of things. Not enough time, resources, caring, nurturing, or love is ever spent on raising our young, because civilization's values do not place the needs of the powerless above those of the powerful. And the reason you have the factors of power and powerlessness within human societies is because of the dynamic of pyramidal accumulation. Regardless of all the lip service in the world: this fact has never changed. The bottom line is that humans spend more time with their tools, more time being tools, more time using their brains as tools, than raising their children. Simply by the over-intensive use of tools, simply by the evolving dynamic of accumulation within civilization and all of its corrupting effects: all child-rearing practices and norms are hopelessly corrupted and out-of-balance.

What we do not want to admit: is that civilized societies hate children. Civilized adults hate children. Adults hate all children. They despise children. Unless, that is... they can brainwash them and mold them into becoming just like they are: corrupt and sick. Adults ignore dead children. Adults worship dead adults. But they never worship dead children. They neglect children. They cannot stand children. They put them away from us every chance we get. They find every excuse to send them somewhere they do not have to bother with them, or deal with them. Whether it is soccer practice, or hanging out in the hood, or being told to go out and play, or piano lessons, or taking them to a movie where they will sit rapt at something and be still, and not have to bother with them for two hours, or watch TV and not have to bother with them, or play video games and not have to bother with them or the use a computer and not have to bother with them. Whatever it is. Adults have no time for their children, and no interest in their children. They ostracize them from adult society. They alienate them. They have no room for them. They have no money for them. They have no resources for them. Everything else comes first before the interests of children. Children come dead last in all National budgets and policies. Babies and Children are the least important, most abused, most ignored humans in civilized society.

When did our universal age racism first evolve? When our ancestors first stood upright, and their babies still moved on all four limbs. When our ape ancestors sneered at all monkeys and apes that traveled on all four limbs instead of walking upright. When their babies were recognized only when they could stand up. When they were only recognized as equals; when they grew up to be equally as tall as their parents. What surprise is it: that millions of years of this kind of genetic, evolutionary brainwashing; has created the pathological, universal neglect of children? Not until you admit the truth that you actually cannot stand your own children: because they are trying to stand up and you are trying to keep them down. Not until you admit that you cannot stand children who try to stand up against you. Not until you admit that you cannot stand any human person who is not fully grown and threatens to stand up on their own two feet; without your support: can humans ever begin to change how they live, and how they treat their children. The rape of children, the rape of infants and the rape of fetuses: has been normalized for at least 12,000 years. There is no place for children in civilized societies. No civilization makes space for children. Children are not a civilized priority. They are universally considered to be a civilized liability: not an asset.

But... they can be used... as icons. They are used as tokens and spoken of in lip-service: by adults using high-sounding phrases and platitudes... by hypocrites and those in power. But then again: Hitler used this kind of hypocrisy also. He praised the people and the children of Germany. Even though he himself could not stand them, and never married and never had children himself.

Children are a good mass market for corporations to target... as an impersonal mass... as a class... that can be exploited... so the corporations can make their killing off them. In affluent societies; children are sentimentalized by mass media. Books are written for them. Movies are made for them. Sports equipment is made for them. Every gimmick under the Sun is used to brainwash children into becoming a mindless mass of consumers. Disney created an entire new entertainment industry by pandering to all the lies and the myths about adults caring about and loving children. Then he sold the lies to both the adults and the children. So both could sit beside each other ignoring each other completely; while wasting their time staring at a blank screen. Doping people with this curious form of antisocial behavior was merely a continuation of watching TV, or Movies. Only Disney film, or TV show was supposed to be a family activity. What is American family activity? Anything but actually spending time with children one-on-one. People say we love their children. People say it all the time. But they do not prove it. They do not show it.

How do they love their children? As possessions? As toys? So they can have love given to them by their children for free? So they can be loved uncritically, and unquestioningly? So they do not have to earn their being loved? So they can feel safe and loved and secure for the rest of their lives? Gosh such self-sacrificing parents.

How do parents actually show love to their children? People say this lie so many times, and in so many ways: they actually believe it. The cultural lies about children spawned by civilization. The reflective blindness of civilized human adults who do not understand their own bodies, their own feelings, their own thoughts, their own instincts and subconscious urges... is too huge an issue to even begin to expose and analyze in this book.

The truth is that you can barely stand children when they are small and needy.... Yet you need them desperately when you are old and lonely. But you are never willing to admit what you did to them. You demand that parents be forgiven their sins by their own children before they die. Not for the peace of mind of the children: but for the peace of mind of the adults who go screaming in fear into death terrified of meeting a greater power that might hold them accountable for their sins of how they misraised their children. So they can hold the hypocritical fake forgiveness's of their children in front of them as their last defense against what their consciences tell them they are actually guilty of.

How do you get a balanced society that has enough time, energy, and love to devote all of its time, not just a tiny bit, to the raising of its young? How do you reverse the priorities of every social body in existence and place children first instead of last? First: you have to reverse the dynamics by which civilization functions. You have to reverse the dynamic of accumulation. You have to reverse the dynamic of over-intensive tool use. You have to establish a norm where people spend more time with each other and their children, than they do with their tools. You need to spend more time being human than functioning like a machine. How this may be done, is a challenge every society, every community, every family will have to face..

But: unless there is of comparison of norms... Unless there is a cultural comparison, a historical comparison, and an anthropological comparison: there will be no sane context or perspective in trying to decide just how to design a society for humans instead of for machines. The problem is that most people take any larger set of conditions they exist in as a fait accompli. that's just the way things are. Anything of any larger, wider scope: any overall condition-problem, is seen as beyond their personal grasp or understanding and not worth bothering about, thinking about, questioning or challenging. Cynicism, indifference, a host of other reasons and factors... not having the time, or interest, or energy, not seeing how any larger issues or questions affect them, not seeing any direct, personal relevance of these issues. As long as there is a sense of normality, there will be a fundamental resistance to questioning that normality or changing it.

To not develop a Sense of Wonder; is to allow the perception of chaos and meaninglessness to triumph. Once you accept finitude, or any kind of limitation, or any kind of absolute in any form or manner: you have stopped developing in some way as a wondering person. You have stopped asking questions, learning, growing and changing. That is what all kinds of normality do to people. To give up on asking questions is the fatal brick wall of all finite perception. That is the fatal spiritual killer that makes people throw up their hands and say: 'What's the use in asking questions? What's the use in fighting city hall? What's the use in struggling or complaining about unfairness or injustice?' Then the injustices of others is cynically taken for granted, and those who rail against the system are jeered at by others as naïve fools.

All human cultures can be compared and evaluated by comparing the difference of how much time-energy and resources are spent on their young and their old. If any culture spends more time and energy on its old than on its young: then it is a dying culture, a death-oriented culture, a dead culture. If any culture spends more time, energy and resources on preserving its old, dead customs than on creating new, fresh ideas, customs, it is a dying-dead, death-oriented culture. All cultures that treat their old better than their young are anti-human, anti-love, anti-life cultures. They are sick, dying cultures that are slowly dying out... but the obscenity of civilization is that civilization will not let these dying sick cultures die out. It keeps on preserving these sick dying, rotting cultures no matter how obsolete they are, no matter how old they are, no matter how destructive they are. No matter how much these sick-dying cultures damage our children, we refuse to listen to what our children want and need but listen instead to our old-sick-dying elders and worry about their concerns instead of the concerns of our young. That is how intrinsically sick all human culture is. All of it was created only to worship the dead... the dying... the old.... And neglect and ignore the young, the living.

Everything in civilization is designed to keep you down... where you belong... in your appointed place. A MacDonalld's clerk rising to become the president of the firm by being a better worker, more intelligent, through merit? Never in your life. A citizen allowed to enter the sacred confines where public employees process their parking tickets? Never in your life. Millions of Chinese peasants starving in the countryside allowed to enter the new capitalistic corridors of commerce and industry without an expensive, unaffordable license? Never in your life.

It would take millions of pages of actual examples to specifically document just how everyone is kept down as much as possible. One thousand people die from eating disorders every year. Millions of people die from starvation every year. But consumer TV audiences are too affluent to experience death from starvation.... Consequently: the starvation of the millions of poor is never shown to them, never spoken of, never funded: there is no market for it. It is not something consumers want to see. It is not something consumers want to hear about. It is something consumers do not want to know about. While TV documentaries of a few rich children starving themselves in a land of gluttony and plenty are aired to hundreds of millions of overweight obese overeaters. Because for them, it is a mystery why anyone should voluntarily starve themselves to death, when their entire culture screams out the pride of being as greedy as possible, and consuming as much as possible? No. Because it is an Elite disease: suffered only by the most privileged, most spoiled consumers.

Do people who are not starving ever care about the millions who are? No. Do they try to help them? No. Is that logical? Yes... if you are civilized and live inside civilization. But only by the sick, obscene logic of keeping the poor masses down... where they belong... at the bottom of the pile. Anyone who tries to be pro-active, anyone who wants to help-change-give: meets walls... objections, refusals, tons of resistance. They are given endless rationalized excuses and reasons. Basically what they meet, is the normalized reactions, that civilized humans have been brainwashed into:

1. 'What's in it for me... nothing? Sorry; not interested.'

2. 'How can I get something out of it? A better job? Higher status? More Social acceptance? Special privileges that only emergency relief people get? Special passes? A documentary? Me on television? A favor? That I can cash in... or bank on later? Can I get someone to owe me something...?'
3. 'What can I learn from this? Is there any special knowledge I will learn any special 'experience' I can have? So, I can brag later to others about what I did?'
4. 'Is there any special power that will be given to me?' A new job title of assistant manager? That lets me boss others around? Any kind of special status? If I become a cook in a homeless shelter, then I have just been promoted out of the gutter into a respectable job. Now I have status, privileges, responsibilities, and I get to feel useful... But do that job and be sent back to the streets? Never. Unless I prefer being on the street because I can make more money panhandling than being a cook. That is... if money is more important to me as an advantage than the status of cook. If I am more addicted to drugs or alcohol than the other advantage I might get as an unpaid volunteer.'

Try to begin any charitable organization. You need special licenses, special knowledge. Special powers. You need special connections with rich and powerful people. You need money, power, status, knowledge, media coverage, public support, political support and the support of the business community.

You need to become a professional money-grubber. Basically, you go around saying: 'I do not want your caring, your effort, your humanity, your personal ability to give ... I just want your money.'

How many people throw away these appeals to charity in disgust because they know that most of them are complete swindles? But the scamsters are smart. They send out millions of pleas by mail legally, and by pure mass advertising they find the few suckers who are feeling generous and want to do some good, but cannot, because there are no charities that can use their specialized skills. If you are trying to gather food for starving children: you do not need the skills of a computer programmer to buy food with. But the lion's share of this money always mysteriously finds a way to end up in the pockets of the process. The money-process, especially charities, are simply money-laundering operations for people to have nice cars and nice offices so their official charity becomes more of a business, until it is a business. Only the elite have the necessary special connections needed to even create a charity. And how many people with those kinds of advantages ever want to actually do it? One in a million.

This is just one more example of how civilized societies keep the lower classes down where they belong.

Judgment and Measurement.

There are two general kinds of measurement humans use. One is based upon actuality, and the other is based upon polarized absolutes or abstractions. The term abstraction itself is a misnomer. All abstractions have energy. They are not absolutely dead.

The reason all humans never find true happiness is because of how they use their life-energy. They do not use it to nurture and support all the living things around them. Instead, they use their own life-energy to selfishly nurture only themselves. This causes all of their life-energy to diminish instead of increase. So instead of going extinct. Instead of facing the truth that they were no longer useful to the eco-systems they were living in... they avoided extinction by two different strategies.

First: they began sucking as much life-energy away from the other four basic energy levels: plants, insects, animals and the energy base of their eco-system itself.

Second: they stopped trying to fit into any eco-system

The result of all abstract measurement, and judgment... is a dynamic of negative karmic energy. This energy is destructive to all living things. The way it is used; is by people measuring and judging things absolutely... in polarized ways, that are automatically conflicting. By escaping and ignoring all of the subtle, general, actual energies of the universe... humans created an entirely different way of living based upon abstraction... absolutes... because their entire life-energy was sucked into focusing upon using dead tools and creating polarized, conflicting energy-dynamics with them that opposed the energy dynamics of all living things.

The entire basis of the absolute is a 180-degree opposition-conflict... not a 90-degree opposition conflict. This is the latest evolution of humans living against Nature, against their own true nature, against the true nature of all things.

This is why people were taught never even think of judging their judges, their elders. If they were allowed to do that; then they would have rebelled en masse against the whole system long ago. So, they were taught never to judge their elders. And taught to judge other things selectively.. in absolute terms, and values. Using false measurements and scales and values... of false absolutes, false constants, created by our ancestors. They were taught never to judge their ancestors and justify or rationalize away whatever they did...

So that we would have no choice, but to support our elder's way of doing things. We have no choice but to support the past of civilization and repeat it and recreate it.

But even this fails horribly because these absolute measurements do not make any sense; and conflict in so many crazy ways; that people end up throwing their hands up in disgust, and throwing away the idea of measuring and judgments completely. People should use their judgment and measure everything they can as well as they can... actually... generally... what that means is not to merely live your life by what you think might happen... but not to measure anything at all by using any abstractions, any words, any absolutes, any non-actual ways of measuring, judging, or valuing anything.

That does not mean you should not judge, or measure, or use your decision-making abilities at all. It only means that you should only use them to support, nurture and harmonize yourself with all life-energy. That means you must give up all ego-based things and interests. That you must try and keep from ever getting any advantage over anything. Why? Because the only time the energy-dynamic of a species, or an individual animal's 'advantage' works, is when they are already functioning inside a positive-based, life-ecosystem energy dynamic...not the negative energy dynamic of civilization. Trying to get any advantage inside civilization is automatically a negative, energy-dynamic. Small 'e'... very little energy.

Human Wisdom

The wisdom of what Buddha was supposed to have found... his dictum of: 'Do no harm.' is a neutral dynamic. This passive ethic is powerless. It does not actively support and nurture living things. In fact, this kind of selective passivity is actually evil. It is precisely by becoming passive, and not pro-active: that the Indian sages, gurus and mahatmas managed to successfully hoodwink the entire eastern cultures of China and India into a state of resigned oppression and ignorance. For ten thousand years: Eastern cultures have preached that the highest form of spirituality is passivity. It preached the hopelessness of ever fighting against your masters. It preached submission.

The ethic of doing nothing... or the pure lazy cowardice of the masses; was only broken by Western cultures when a little of their oppression was fought against, and they actually saw that they indeed could change how they lived... if they fought hard enough to do it, by working with other people cooperatively. The Eastern unspoken ethical understanding of Buddha is opposed to Western ethics:... It does not preach action. It preaches resignation. In essence, it says:

‘As long as you do not actively fight, or protest: they will not kill you... so shut up and keep your thoughts to yourself. Hell: have no thoughts. Do not think at all. Become a mindless meditating blob staring at nothing.’ In other words: spending your entire damn life contemplating your own navel. And don’t make waves.

That is the actual reason why Buddha’s searching for happiness, and bliss ended up in pure passivity. He did not dare say one word about upsetting the corrupt system of despots and rulers, and traditions his own sick culture was mired in. He was very careful to be apolitical. He never tried to deal with the actual problems of poor people. He simply tried to make their suffering more endurable. He never wanted to change the social reasons for their suffering. He actually thought that their suffering was inescapable, and human society was unchangeable.

India’s touted Spiritual teachings still cannot help the starving, teeming ignorant millions of Indians. If the spiritual legacy of Buddhism has not worked for 3,000 years: then what the fuck is it good for? Yet Western idiots actually worship this imported Eastern shit; simply because their own spiritual culture is even emptier than Buddhism.

The same is true for Chinese Spiritual teachings. If after seven thousand years... Chinese spiritual teaching still does not work ... then what the fuck is it good for?

The Buddhist ethic is based upon pure cynicism. The ultimate achievement of Buddha’s spirituality is called: nirvana or nothingness.

What is this incredibly exclusive form of spiritual awareness? It is the development of complete inner insularity. So that nothing else exists in the Universe, except you. Everything outside your inner self is of no importance. In other words: for all practical intents and purposes... the Universe you exist-in is a void of nothingness. That is what Nirvana means.

Mark Twain wrote nearly the same insight in his last book: The Mysterious Stranger. Was his idea worshipped and revered? No. He was not a philosopher. He was not a religious Guru. He was only a famous humorist. Writing truths humorously is another way to avoid facing them.

Twain was not a famous leader of a religious sect like Siddhartha Buddha; who went around preaching his insights for the rest of his life. Many people have felt alienated and alone as Twain did... many have tried to understand and rationalize why they felt this way... But Buddha was the only person insane enough to make a National Religion out of it. Try to speak to any Indian spiritualist, or guru using Western logic ... and they will casually disdain your logic, as beneath their notice, as being unspiritual... and not even condescend to explain why. They are so far removed from the outer world and from all other living things, and in many cases from their own bodies... that you are not really there as far as they are concerned. As far as they are concerned; the entire outer world is merely a bad dream, which they must endure: in order to reach a state of nirvana. Or perfection.

Every spiritual teaching of every spiritual elite of every pyramidal pile of exclusive spiritual awareness and knowledge is based upon the assumption that: you are not supposed to understand it. As long as you do NOT understand your religion or belief: It is mysterious, it is spiritual. If it is not mysterious. If you do understand it: it is not spiritual! Then it becomes normal. Then it no longer is anything special ALL civilized spirituality is based upon not understanding your own religion. All civilized religion, and civilized spirituality: is based upon being forced to take someone else's word for what you personally believe-in. Taking someone else's explanation for it. All of India's hierarchy of Religions and religious class systems and cultures are based upon people attaining a spiritual enlightenment; that other lower class, less enlightened people; cannot understand.

Then these supposedly superior, more aware, more enlightened asses lord it over all others in their society. They become the most smug, egotistical, blind, dogmatic asses in existence. Then you have naked beggars convinced of their spiritual superiority... living in filth and degradation. Surrounded by millions of teeming Indians who mostly ignore them and their self-proclaimed spiritual superiority. But as far as these naked beggars are concerned: in their own mind: they are smarter, wiser, more spiritual, etc; than all the people around them who are better off physically.

This is basically the same kind of egotistical snobbery that every consumer and snob and egotistical ass has. Both consumers and Indian beggars are just as concerned about showing to the entire world around them; how much they disdain and ignore everyone around them as being less than they are. Only Westerners do not call their state of awareness Nirvana. They just keep their egotistical awareness of how much better they are than others smugly to themselves.

How do Indians from India do it? How do they attain this superior enlightenment? The same way every born-again Christian does it: by going around in public: screaming at less spiritual people: 'I have seen the light! I have become enlightened! I have become wise! I know everything! I have plumbed the mysteries! And they have shown themselves to me! Listen to me and you will have a chance to become enlightened Also! Not as enlightened as ME of course... since I am your Guru and Teacher, and all elder teachers know more than their younger pupils...

In India: this kind of enlightenment is called: 'Nirvana'. Once an Indian goes out in public and degrades themselves and starves and does incredibly stupid things for no reason, except to experience hardships that other sensible people would never do. If they do it for enough years in public. Then they are supposed to gain a personal spiritual superiority over all the rest of humanity. They become self-proclaimed gurus, self-proclaimed wise men. They may be the poorest, thinnest, most impoverished, most uneducated, most ignorant beggars of the lowest caste of untouchables. But once they publicly claim to have reached a religious state called: 'Nirvana': By Indian Law and Indian Tradition and Indian Culture: They are suddenly supposed to be revered and worshipped and listened to as wise men who seers and spiritual masters. Talk about one of the sickest, most filthiest ways of becoming socially upwardly mobile!

What is Nirvana?

It is an exclusive, refined, elite awareness of Nothingness.... You are supposed to believe that Nothing actually exists. In both meanings of the phrase. First: that there actually is something called Nothing. And second: that Everything is actually an illusion, and that the existence of Nothing is more real and more true than Everything that actually exists.

If you have reached a State of Nirvana: you are not supposed to not be affected by anything. If anything bothers you: you are supposed to smile superiorly and pretend it does not exist... pretend it is nothing. Buddhism is at its source: Pure Blindness. It is Pure Numbness. Pure Selective Insanity. Feel-nothing-do nothing-think-nothing-say nothing-hear-nothing-see-nothing..... Hey, presto: Instant happiness. Meaning lack of pain and suffering is happiness. That is like saying taking your hand off a burning skillet will make you happy because you are not suffering pain. And this fucking stupid idea has been believed in for 2,700 years.

But if you are poor and starving... lost and ignored and despised... in the middle of millions of uncaring, cold, indifferent fellow Indians. It is a practical way of numbing your own pain and loneliness and misery and shame by brainwashing yourself. And if other Indians actually start listening to you, and noticing that you actually exist: then what is so strange about spouting crap; so other people believe your own delusions of grandeur, and live like you?

To show you how utterly stupid humans still are: 2,600 years after Buddha died... Nietzsche the German philosopher, wrote: 'Rather than want nothing... Man wants nothingness.'

Which happens to be the exact same idea Buddha had.

What?

Yes. Buddhism is a religion that was born in India two thousand, seven hundred years ago. It teaches numbness as a way of non-feeling, non-thinking and non-doing. This way: instead of living and feeling pain... you can barely exist; and not have to feel or notice the millions of starving beggars who clutch at your robes of affluence, and privilege.

Legend has it that in his later years: Buddha established a monastery that he ruled so rigidly and savagely; that all his disciples fled from him. In it: Buddha sat for nine years staring at a wall. Trying to will himself into total deadness, until his limbs atrophied. He became so irritated, at being unable to control the blinking of his eyelids... that he cut off his own eyelids: so he would not blink. This was how insane he had become. This was how obsessed he had become with feeling nothing, seeing nothing, doing nothing. Modern historians scoff at such legends; deeming them total superstitious nonsense. Are they? If you want to whitewash a spiritual leader: then why keep alive legends describing him as a cruel taskmaster, and an insane, inhuman monster?

The legends were kept alive not by his disciples. These legends are actually true. Why did he cut off his eyelids? Because when you sleep: your feelings come up. You dream. Your subconscious comes to the surface. He wanted to become totally dead to the world around him by staring at a wall for nine years... without sleeping. Today... modern Indian gurus practice this same exact type of insanity. This kind of mental madness has been practiced by Buddhist masters for over 7,000 years. So sitting and staring at nothing and not moving is also a legend? No. It is a Buddhist training all monastic Buddhists practice up to this very day.

Buddha wanted to turn the unwanted masses of the East into passive sitters. He succeeded. But that was not enough. The West also had to be turned into passive sitters. Staring at a flat wall. Doing nothing.

Modern TV: is the Western version of Buddha staring at a wall. Now: billions of people sit on their asses for hours a day, doing nothing, staring at a blank screen... in the West, and in the East.

This was Buddha's solution to the elite class: on how to rule the masses. Teach passivity as the highest form of religious spirituality. Have them sit and do nothing. Teach them that doing nothing is good. 'Do no harm'. (You are doing no good also.) You are doing nothing. Oops. Let's not focus on that. Let's not focus on the fact that Nature hates a vacuum. Let's not focus on the fact that the Universe hates a vacuum. Let us not explain that by doing nothing: you are allowing the worst evil to fill that vacuum. Let us not explain that the Buddhist dictum of 'do no harm'..., the entire idea of passivity, doing nothing... is actually more harmful. In fact it is the most evil, most harmful cross-cultural unspoken belief in the entire world of brainwashed humans.

This was also how he escaped from being killed by the rulers of India for inventing a new spiritual movement. If you sit and do not move. If you give away all of your worldly possessions. Why then... the Robbers and Barons will have no reason to kill you! They will not steal your wealth because you have none! You will escape all the misery of the masses being robbed and taxed and killed and enslaved and working for their masters by telling your masters that you have found spiritual enlightenment and will not do ANY work at all. Buddha's revolutionary dogma was one of the nastiest pieces of brainwashing to hit the poor class. They finally found a coward's way to escape the slavery of their servitude to their own masters. They finally could stop working and do nothing. And sit for years staring at nothing... becoming as dead and as numb to their own bodies and the world around them as possible. Claiming it to be a spiritual religion so they could feel religiously superior instead of low-class.

Buddha's new religion turned all of the unwanted, excess lower classes into budding Buddhas.. The ones who were not needed in the fields: were turned into a Class of Untouchables. They were not forced to work... but also: they were not given ANTHING to live on. They were ostracized from all Indian culture for their sin of claiming spiritual superiority as an excuse to avoid all work. They became human sitting-shitting offal. They were shunned and hated and despised as do-nothings, beggars, outcasts. To this day; their progeny populate India with hundreds of millions of human souls living in squalor, ignorance and misery. This is Buddha's great boon to his country.

Buddhism is not spiritual at all. It is a discipline of selective unawareness and selective numbness. And total passivity. And slavish conformity. It does not even try to be a positive energy-flow. It's entire motivation is trying to escape and avoid as much hardship and pain, and suffering as possible. It is based upon the selfish pursuit of your own negative unfeeling numbness, your own unfeeling invulnerability to your own pain.

The entire view of Buddhism is based upon hopelessness and resignation reigning supreme over all other morals and ethics. Buddhism begins with the automatic assumption, that suffering is unavoidable. That all misery is unavoidable. So why fight it? Give up! Trying to fight is hopeless, and futile... so why waste your time or strength or energy butting your head against a brick wall? It is based upon an unspoken assumption that trying to make things better does not work, and will never succeed. It is based upon hopelessness. It is designed to preserve and perpetuate 7,000 years of corrupt Indian filth. So be as good as you can inside yourself: without helping others... Help others a teeny bit: but don't get passionate about it. Do not become emotionally involved with anyone. Develop as much distance from yourself and all other people as you can. Stop moving, stop breathing, stop feeling, stop living. Just sit in one place and do not move for years. As a result of Buddhism: India has not moved either. It has just sat on its ass. India has not changed culturally, politically, or religiously for seven thousand years. This is how effective Buddha's bullshit was.

Western people are modern Buddhists. They just get fat sitting, staring at a flat screen, watching movies and TV. Indians now are being brainwashed even better; by the greed and the lying hope of upward mobility of Western Consumer Capitalism. They are Asian Buddhists, and they watch TV hoping to get fat. This is how human culture works. This is how it accumulates. Shit piled on top of shit. 12,000 years of it.

On the other hand: the original Galilean fisherman's ethic of voluntary poverty, was positively proactive. Nowhere else in civilization; before or since, has this happened: except incrementally

For instance: Today: a few over-affluent people are going a little against the grain of self-gratification. But only slightly... They are trying to have a little more hardship in their lives, than what they are normally accustomed to. They are doing it very, very, slightly... in selective, exclusive, incremental ways... in blind, uncoordinated, unconnected ways. By practicing yoga. Or moving out of a big city back to live in a small town. Or trying to live more simply. Or giving away a lot of stuff in garage sales and yard sales. Or taking up hobbies or activities that are more challenging: like camping or kayaking. Or living in more community-friendly neighborhoods where they speak to their neighbors more often. Or building new-age houses that are self-sufficient, and manufacture their own power, heat and food.

Only there is no true historical perspective on these sub-cultures. There is no understanding of why they are even happening. They are happening because there is a glut of ease that is so excessive: people are actually trying to slightly avoid it. Civilized people do not understand what civilization actually is. To understand civilization, you must also understand yourself. You need both inner and outer perspective, inner and outer knowledge, and inner and outer wisdom.

The last philosophers of Europe stated that Western civilization is completely bankrupt, meaningless, absurd and insane.

After they died, and became famous: they were proven right by history.

Has anyone listened to them?

The human subconscious is a repository of all the past mistakes that we have failed to learn from. How deep and how powerful is this 12,000 year-old repository?

Critically analyze Taoism. Or the more phonetically correct spelling: Daoism. The most ancient form of Chinese Wisdom in existence today; over 10,000 years old.

Originally: it was a mystical form of Divination. People were supposed to find happiness and fulfillment by following the Tao or Dao... If they followed A God-path of ALL (0)... which was actually A Path of Destruction of ALL (0): they were supposed to become divine, they were supposed to become Gods. The Tao, or Dao: was not logical. It had to be explained to the masses by Daoist Masters. Actually: they were following the path of nothing. They were following A Destructive Path of ZERO. NOTHINGNESS... 0.

D (destruction) A ( of an, a) O (ALL; all the world they lived in, the entire ecosystem they lived in)
Which is completely historically accurate. Every Natural eco-system in ancient Chin was destroyed

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1269 thousands of years ago. By people following the downward path of destruction.

Today: what do people follow instead of Eastern Wisdom? They follow Western Wisdom. They follow the DOW stock exchange. They follow it as a form of divination. They try to divine the purpose of the DOW, and anticipate which way it will go: up or down. If they follow it correctly: they become happy and fulfilled.

The DOW is not logical. There are masters of the DOW stock exchange who explain its mysteries to the masses.

How do people divine for water? By using DOWLING sticks... that tell them where water will be found and how far down it is. So they can irrigate their lands and become wealthy. The art of divining for water is done by DOWling MASTERS. Who are paid by people to find where to dig their well. So they will not waste time digging in the wrong spot.

The Dow puts you into stocks. It harnesses you into an insane linear slavery of trying to get rich fast: by exchanging things.

How was the original Ancient Chinese Tao, or the Dao corrupted?

By becoming a religious-cultural superstition. By the poor masses trying to use it to enrich themselves instead of using it to help the less fortunate.

What is the accumulated effect of not learning the lessons of Chinese Daoism for 13,000 years?

The Dow Average. The Dow Stock Exchange. Capitalism. The worship of personal wealth as the only Way, the only Path to Happiness and Fulfillment.

Do you think this is a mere coincidence? That a 12,000 year-old Chinese system of wisdom called The Dao: just happens to have the same identical-sounding name as The Dow Stock Exchange? The 'o' is changed to a 'w'. Signifying how all civilized humans are complicit in creating a global religion of greed.

Do you think that the Daoist tradition of ringing bells to spread good, healing vibrations throughout the land... and the beginning and ending every Dow Exchange with the ringing of a bell, is a mere coincidence?

What is the full name of the Book of Daoist Wisdom? It is called: the Dao 'TE CHING!' Te-ching! Te-Ching! TE-Ching!... as people swallowed its corrupt messages and became greedier and greedier. Do you think 'te ching' has more than one meaning? Do you think it a coincidence that the wisdom of the Dao has created cash registers going 'te ching! Te ching! With a tiny bell sounding every time they open? When the first bell invented by the Daosists rang: it rang the downward death knell of the human spirit. It rang for all the humble believers to come and worship the Path or Dao.

Today; the Way of the DOW, is more religiously followed, than the Way of the Dao ever was 12,000 years ago. Both lessons have been avoided by humans.

The latest form of Dowism is the computer *DOWn*load.

A LOAD of pure Negative Energy.

The ways of the download are mysterious. You are supposed to find happiness and fulfillment being

1269

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

with your computer; by watching it download a program. You must sit and contemplate the DOWNloading process as it accumulates its zeroes and I's. The ways of downloading have to be explained to the masses by downloading masters. Downloads are created by masters called computer programmers. DOW... Negative Load. Loading negative energy. Accumulating negative O's and I's.... Loading and accumulating O's and I's...Accumulating token decapitated death's-heads, and bodies.

A computer download is the purest form of abstract of accumulation yet invented. It is a completely useless form of accumulation. It loads you down with more machines. It wastes your time. It wastes your life. It is a symbiotic bacterial evil of mechanical accumulation that we have now become addicted to.

It represents symbolically, all the crimes and sins of our ancestors loaded down onto our living backs. It is the insane idea of trying to load every new living generation of humans DOWN with ALL of the accumulated shit our ancestors accumulated. But... that is impossible to do. That is insane. The only way they can try to load the living down with their own guilt has been by doing it subconsciously.. abstractively...loading us down with the most meaningless possible waste of time possible. Loading down computers with zillions of decapitated 'O's... and I's... because they cannot load us down with the billions of human heads they cut off, and the gigazillions of decapitated animal heads and fish heads, and heads of wheat and barely, and heads of decapitated fruit... etc, etc, etc...

What is the Way of the Tao? What is the Way of the Dao? What is the Way of the DOW? What is the Way of the DOWNLOAD?

IT IS THE WAY DOWN. TO HELL. To DEATH, To DEFEAT. DOWN

Daoism is not the way up. DOWISM is the way DOWN. Does it teach humans not to look up at trees, at mountains, at temples? BULLSHIT. It teaches people the downward path to Hell through false teachings that make you develop a false humility and false pride about yourself, and a false view of the world and Nature.

If you study the history of Daoism: you will never be able to unearth the thousands of years of the details about its original corrupt origin... and how it became further corrupted as one of the most snarled masses of convoluted irrational evil ever to be posed as a pinnacle of human spirituality...

BUT: there is one historical legacy of Daoism that compresses its entire evolution of corruption into a nutshell. And that is the name of its originator. His name changed over time.

At first: he was known as: Li-erh
 Then his name evolved to become: Li-Er
 Then his name evolved to become: Lao-Zi
 Then his name evolved to become known as : Lao-Tzu

This history of the evolutionary changing of his name is screaming out the truth. He was a fucking liar. He was a liar who hoped that the entire world would swallow his lies. That hope disappeared. Only a select few ever followed his path into detached insanity. Then he merely became another sanctified liar. Then he became a lazy liar: who was only interested in the 'Zen' of the ego... the 'i' of human souls. Then he became a lazy liar that sold all of his lies as a preacher: telling you that the Truth is u. That nothing else is important except your own truth. He did it by splitting humans apart into an insane dualism that is full of mystical bullshit and nonsense.

Li: lie. Lie down. Do nothing. Be inactive. Stop moving. Become dead. Separate yourself from the living erh: (earth). He invented the art of being a professional liar. His name is pronounced phonetically: LIAR! He was a fucking liar. He was a fucking lazy liar. Lao-zi is phonetically pronounced: LAZY. Then his name had a 'T' added to it. Because by then: the insanity of splitting human awareness apart into two unconnected dualities had become True.

He was the first human to preach the insane evil of detachment from the living earth as a false Path of wisdom. That was the most evil lie, Li-Erh ever invented. His entire teaching is a teaching of detachment from life, a detachment from all feeling, a detachment from all action, all directness. He preached detachment from living. He preached detachment from everything. He preached the insanity of feeling nothing-doing nothing-thinking nothing. He was the first and worst nihilist. Li- Erh preached the insane DUALITY of existence, as explaining everything. He invented and began the insane idea that 2-dimensional abstraction can explain the 3-dimensional Universe. Which is as insane as the idea that a one-dimensional point can explain a two-dimensional universe. But nobody notices this complete illogical irrational fallacy in Li-Erh's teaching. Why?

You cannot explain a line by a point. Unless you connect the points: and then you change the entire nature of the one-dimensional universe into a two-dimensional universe. You cannot explain our three-dimensional Universe using two-dimensional ideas. You cannot understand three dimensions using only two dimensions. That kind of insanity is called dementia. It is the insanity of people who translate 3 dimensions into two. Which is what Li-Erh did. Trying to explain Nature as only a phenomenon of Duality, and not Triality.

His later persona is known as Lao-Tzu the librarian: a collector of abstract knowledge. The most impotent example of passive detached mental insanity possible. He was the Eastern version of the mental detachment of Ammon-Ra... All of the ancient Kings and famous people have names that are split apart into two groups of letters. This splitting apart of a name represented the splitting apart of the human mentality from the human body. The split, the disconnection between the human brain and the human body. HE and Ammon Ra are the two archetypes of detached humans insanity: active insanity and passive insanity. The first li-er was inactively insane: the first man in a rage as actively insane. They personify the civilization of the West as active and the East as inactive. Both are insane.

No matter how much the truth is buried or twisted, or poisoned, or corrupted... no matter how abstracted it becomes, no matter how many different ways symbols are whitewashed and changed: the unexplored human subconscious still manages to re-surface the actual truth and tell the truth.

That is...if you read it rightly. If you interpret words as they actually sound, as they actually work, as they actually are. If you know what the symbols actually meant originally. If you know the code of universal symbols, if you know their universal meanings, if you know which meaning to ascribe to each letter, each word. It is only by tracing back and connecting the history of a word, that you can understand its true semantic meanings. Only this way will you be able to understand how the original meaning evolved to cover-up the actual truth.

It took the worst most evil li-erh of the East to spread the concept of the accumulation of wisdom, the seminal lie of the Path of Dow-ism which is completely false... thousands of years, until that Path of accumulation became the Gordian Knot of evil in the west. Until the first humans who used gourds began celebrating their wealth, and created such a snarl of tangled evil: nobody could unsnarl it.

What is the Path of the Gordian Knot? The Path was and still is: Negative. It points North. The

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1272

Drinking Gourd became the most important star constellation in the world... North was the path of freedom, away from killers who robbed you. North was the path of finding new lands where humans could accumulate in peace. But North also meant hardship. It meant colder weather. It mean death by freezing. North was the Path of Cowardice. It was the Path of avoidance. It still is.

The song: 'Follow the Drinkin' Gourd' was supposed to mean the path of freedom. Slaves escaping their slavery in the south... only to become enslaved even worse in the North by wage slavery, and worse human degradation than they ever experienced in the South. Driven there by the greed of the Gourd: one-sided accumulation. At least in the South the slave system was honest. In the North: a slave and enslavers were all mixed up In the North everybody was greedier and more corrupt.

The Path of the Gourd was evil. It was and still is: the Path of Cowardice. It was and still is: the Path of Hate. The Northern Path of the Gourd was the path of African apes escaping from Africa after they gored it. The exodus from a destroyed Paradise which they themselves destroyed: was the Path of Evil. Sinning apes cast out of their own land because they had become evil. Sinning apes that used tools to kill... becoming so evil: they were not wanted or needed any longer by their own ecosystems. A lost species of sinning apes, roaming the Earth... blindly following the Path of the first Li-erh, the Path of Dow-ism, the Path of the empty Gourd, the path of the drinkin' gourd, the Path of the Gordian Knot, the Path of the accumulation of growing greed... all snarled into a tangled mess that could not be unknotted. An accumulating cunning evil that hid its ends inside itself, so that could not be straightened out and exposed.

The Gordian Knot is the not, the killing knot of the Gourd. It is the evil you must do to create a hollow gourd. You must scrape out a living plant, and gore it to death. You must leave a pile of gore to make a hollow gourd, so you can accumulate something inside it. And that gore will rot. You must empty your mind, and commit a mindless act of violence upon an innocent living plant. Your mind becomes a rotting mass of gore.

If you think the evil of the gourd is not increasing exponentially with the passing of every day of civilized humans corrupting themselves into accumulating more and more useless things: think again. Humans are accumulating useless things so fast: they have to throw away most of it in the garbage every day. The evil of the Gourd has evolved into an evil that is far, far worse than the old gourd ever was. The modern equivalent of the gourd today is the plastic bag. Today plastic bags are used only once and then thrown away.

That is like driving a car only once: and then throwing it away because it was driven once. The reason for this is because the human subconscious guilt about committing the SIN of accumulation had deepened and become so bad: that humans now have, are driven to, cover up their sin, whitewash it, make it as immaculate as possible. The idea that you should not use a plastic bag more than once to put something into it is so insane, so non-rational, so wasteful, so stupid, so crazy: words cannot describe how the level of the evil of human civilization has become normalized to the point where people waste bags not because it is more convenient: but simply because they have been brainwashed into it, and the entire packaging industry is selling them more and more packages they have to get rid of and throw away.

Human packaging. Mass packaging systems. Billions upon billions of packages, bags, boxes, bottles, containers that humans use once and then are forced to throw them away is the best way to historically compare how far the level of human evil has progressed from the first human who used a gourd to put something into it.

1272

NOW: today: humans are drowning in their own garbage. We are drowning in our own toxic waste and garbage... We are forced to find more and more ways to try to cover-up the filth we create every day on the earth... But it seeps back into our lives. But evil cannot be contained. Poison cannot be contained. When you create something that is poisonous to living things: when you try to put these poisonous rotting things into plastic bags so YOU will not die from the toxicity- but hey!... fuck all other living things that die from what you throw away... When you put something into a plastic bag: you are re-committing the sin of the gourd. You are repeating the sin of one-sided accumulation.

The Gordian Knot is the death of all GOOD: it is every good impulse in living humans who feel it and say to themselves: 'I will knot do this. I will knot feel this.' 'I will tie myself up inside in knots: I will suppress every good, direct, simple, honest, courageous impulse to act, I will suppress every good simple honest direct courageous feeling and emotion so I will knot feel it: so I will stay frozen in emotional knots that are so convoluted: I will never be able to understand myself or other human beings,'

When you do this: when you are actively or passively evil; by deciding KNOT to do, or feel the truth: then you are accumulating an evil of knots inside yourself. You are creating a Gordian Knot inside yourself. You are knotting up all GOOD inside yourself until you become incapable of doing any good at all. Then your 'not' is not a good not: A good 'not' is when you say: I will not do this because it is evil: I will not hurt myself: I will not hurt other living things. But if your not is evil: if your will is evil: then your not is not good: it becomes Gordian: it becomes a CORD, the first thing humans invented to bind living things with: then your nots become cords that will bind you into slavery fear and evil and guilt.

Once the truth is exposed: as it has been in this book. Once the truth of our true past is exposed. Then story of the human race becomes understandable. Then all of the cunning, sneaky avoidance and deflections of humans: all the process of covering up the actual truth by twisting the truth into lies called myth and legend and history: become transparently obvious. Then all human history and all human myth and culture can be understood and seen as a constant, boring, endless, unsuccessful attempt to hide from the actual truth. As the truth keeps on re-surfacing, and being re-buried, and re-hidden. Over and over again... ad nauseum.

Bicycle Cards

Consider this: the ancient card called the joker on bicycle cards: shows a jack. Riding a crude early bicycle. But the sign for the Joker is a combined U with an S... not a 'J'....

In some card games... the silliest ones: the joker tops all other cards. In serious card games: it is worthless and not used. In gambling games: it is both: topping all other cards, and used as a replacement for all other cards.

The US: the United States of America is slowly being destroyed by legalized gambling. American culture is normalizing gambling. Gambling in America is supposed to be fun: it is not evil as it once was for thousands of years. The U.S. is the land of the joke. It is the land of jokers. It is the land of gambling, the land of cards.

America is a mobile culture. People move. Americans travel all over their Nation on wheels. The Jack signifies the 'jack-of-all-trades'... the lower class buffoon. He is a sly fellow. A jokester. America is the culture that invented jokes as a nationally acceptable norm. People joke in America, they laugh at everything. America is good at greed and gambling and joking. But in serious things: America is worthless. America is the Joker of the deck. It can top any other Nation. But it is useless and thrown away and not used as a serious cultural icon.

The Card company called 'Bicycle' was created long ago: when the bicycle was invented. New silly games were invented for the masses to play with 51 cards. America has 51 States. Americans are all trades. They are jacks of all trades. Gambling was an integral part of American culture before it gained Independence. Having fun. Making jokes is also an integral part of American culture. Being able to laugh at itself was one of its few saving graces. Now: all jokes are censored. Now fun is only for the rich. Now: even homeless bums buy lottery tickets. Why 51 cards? Why not 48? Because 51 signifies the tipping of the balance: when the human souls becomes more than 50% greedy. More than 50% destructive, more than 50% abstract, more than 50% insane.

This is how the human subconscious works. The Joker card in a deck of Bicycle cards is an abstract icon which represents the U.S. Nation, which represent the human species: us, in many ways on many levels

Intelligence

Science has come up with a perfect explanatory label that describes why we are supposed to be more intelligent than other animals. The reason we are smarter than other creatures is because we have something called: selective intelligence or; selective focus.

However... the problem with all selective awareness; is that it is selective. People choose truths selectively. People selectively choose to deal only with pleasant truths, or only the ones they are forced to deal with. This leaves out all the other truths. All other truths are selectively ignored.

For Example.

Take the Super bowl. The most publicized, most commercialized, most famous American Sporting event of the year. With almost a billion people watching it on TV.

What if you flew a single starving African child that is dying, by a Concorde Jet, from the deserts of Ethiopia in six hours to the Super bowl in America. And instead of the teams running out on the field for the kickoff: have one person carrying that starving, dying African child come out on the field of the Super bowl... and have one billion TV viewers watching, and the entire packed stadium watch that child die What if it took only a few minutes for the child to die. And everybody saw it die.

What if the entire audience went silent. What if the person holding the body of that dead African child began to ask:

'You... you rich athletes. Do you think you could have spared a few dollars of the millions you make; to save this child?'

'You. You spectators. Do you think you could have spent your thousands of dollars on tickets, better; to save this child from death rather than spend your money on a football game?'

'You. The owners. Do you think you could have found in your hundreds of millions of dollars spent on brand new stadiums, a few dollars to spare to save this child's life?'

'You. You advertisers. Do you think you could have spent less than a million dollars on one commercial; to spare some dollars to save this child from dying of starvation?'

'You... you one billion TV viewers. Do you think you could have spent a few dollars on saving this child from dying of starvation; rather than buying all the junk food you are filling yourselves with now?'

'You. The Media industry: do you think you could have spent one minute of TV coverage on this dying child; rather than weeks of media-blitz about the Super Bowl?'

'Does anyone here; think that playing this football game is more important than the life of this dead child?...'

'Am I spoiling your game for you? Is this in bad taste?'

'Oh. I forgot. We are not supposed to be aware of dying-starving children when we are watching TV shows, or football games. We are only supposed to selectively focus upon one thing. And the most important televised thing in the world today is your sacred Super Bowl. Not the small bowl of food it would have taken to keep this child from dying. Fuck small bowls... fuck starving children. On with the Super bowl!...'

What if nobody answered him?... and he continued... as he held the body of the dead starved child in his arms... standing alone in the middle of the field with the hushed crowds staring down at him...?

'I forgot. We are only supposed to be selectively aware of what we want to see. And you all want to see the Super Bowl...right? Not a tiny bowl like this... Nobody here likes seeing a starving child die, right?... am I right? You all want to see commercials, right? You all want to see football, and violence: right?... none of you want to actually see one child die of starvation, non-violently; am I right...? Oh... excuse me: that's not violent enough... you want violence... Safe violence. Vicarious violence.'

'But I forgot... there are one million slowly children starving non-violently to death today even as I speak. And none of you want to see any of them die, non-violently right?... I mean: where's the vicarious thrill in that?'

Oh... I forgot. Since millions of you like it. It must be okay. Right? The majority is always right. The masses are always right. The consumer is always right. Never question what the majority, the masses, the consumer likes: right?

'But what if I flew every starving child in the world here now?... What if all of you had to see one million children starve to death in front of your eyes... Is that too unpleasant a sight for you to look at?... Or would you rather see violence vicariously?'

What if we brought all the starving children into the Super bowl arena and mowed them down with machine guns? Would that be violent enough for you?

Oh. That's too violent. You want just a certain brand of safe violence where men get injured but not killed. I see. Now that's intelligent.

Scientists tell us that the reason we are the smartest animal on Earth.... Is because of our selective awareness... our selective intelligence. Now.... aren't you all selectively intelligent? In preferring to watch a football game... instead of watching one million children starve to death in front of your eyes like this child just did...? Isn't your selective awareness a wonderful thing?'

What do you think the reaction of the entire world would be to such an unpleasant manipulation of pyramidal focus? Would the crowds start booing the man holding the body of a dead child? Would security guards rush him away? Would he be labeled as a raving maniac, and be completely ignored, or derided? Would the Super bowl show resume, and the game be played as if nothing happened?

Would most of the TV viewers turn off their sets in disgust, or switch instantly to another channel? Only to have the same tape of that man asking the world unpleasant questions on every other channel? And then finally be forced to turn off their TV's completely in guilt and shame at having to watch a man holding the body of a dead starved-to-death black child? Because the Media is like a single mindless chicken: pecking at only one thing... the shiniest thing it sees; a bowl filled with people string at a gladiator match.

This is only one example of the sin of selectively awareness, and how insane and unsane and unsanitary and dirty it actually is. This is one example of the sin of all passive spectators. This is only one example of showing how insane human selective awareness, human pyramidal focus and human selective intelligence actually is.

By definition: any selective truth can selectively be a half-truth, or a partial truth, or one-millionth of a truth, or one-billionth of a truth. Why? Because the Universe is Infinite, and Infinitely inter-connected. Our poor limited senses can never connect or understand all of these limitless infinite connections and truths. Any half-truth is actually a selective lie. It is automatically a lie; by its own definition of what it excludes. Selective truths are merely a way of lying by omission... instead of lying by commission. The only truths, which are relatively true, are the one that are put into a relative context. Universal truths; are merely truths that are connected to all other truths. The only truths that are actually true are the ones that are both universal... and also relative. By not selectively excluding any other truth. By including all other truths and connecting them: you get actual truth. Selective truths are merely selective ways of avoiding other truths. Selective lies are selective because of the truths they omit.

If you try to be selectively honest, then you corrupt that honesty with dishonesty. If you try to be selectively loving towards those you do love; you corrupt that love, by unloving, inhumane treatment of other people. If you try to be selectively courageous; then you corrupt that courage by cowardly acts. If you try to have a selective sense of wonder; then you corrupt that wonder with things you take for granted. And if you try to be selectively intelligent; then you corrupt that intelligence with stupidity, and unintelligence. By excluding, by being exclusively aware of only certain things, certain people, certain exclusive ideas, you exclude the rest of the Universe. Is this what is supposed to make us exclusively superior? Smarter?....

Science triumphantly shows how this selective intelligence made us able to make better tools. And making and using tools is supposed to be the prime test of our intelligence. In other words... all animals who do not use tools as we do; are not as intelligent as we are. Or... all people that do not think as we think: are not as intelligent as we are. Everybody else except you is not as intelligent as you are. The entire Universe is stupid... the Universe is a mindless, unintelligent thing that somehow... magically created your intelligence. So therefore, you are the most intelligent thing in the Universe. As opposed to being the stupidest, blindest thing in the Universe. Which truth do you selectively choose to believe? Which truth can be proven and which one cannot be proven? If tool-use is the measure of all intelligence: then humans are the most intelligent things in the Universe. But...if tool-use is not the measure for intelligence in this Universe... then how intelligent are you?

Wrong.

Tool-use is not an indicator of intelligence. All animal intelligence is basically the same. We are merely misguided animals who have lost our genetic animal-intelligence. We have lost the wisdom bestowed upon us by four billion years of genetic experience. And are choosing to replace it with blind-dead tool-intelligence: which causes us to commit acts of mindless, insane cruelty and destruction. We look at the natural world with fear and fascination because we have separated ourselves from it. For us: the actual life-energy dynamic of eating and been eaten is sick-obscene-savage-cold-inhuman. We cannot appreciate, realize or feel the rightness of it. It is not because of our fear of death, our fear of separation, our fear of being eaten, our revulsion at killing and eating another living organism that fights back and does not want to die, that we separate ourselves from the natural world. It is the other way around. It is our separation from the outer world which has created this fear and horror.

Humans have successfully cut themselves off from all other living things because they are perceptually connected more to their own inner abstract experiences; than to the actual world around them. They are connected to their own inner awareness; more than their outer awareness. This is the crucial imbalance. We cannot see that all of this, all of Life: is a dynamic flow of energy. That an animal does not feel terror or horror when being eaten alive. That the animal eating it is not a brutal, vicious, savage beast. That what they are doing is right, and balanced and natural. That we are the fear-filled savage beasts merely projecting and reflecting our own fears onto our Outer Universe. How we view the world around us; is just a reflected mirror of who we are, and what we feel. How we treat the natural world is how we treat each other and ourselves. We are reflective animals: too blind to understand our own reflectivity.

Human stupidity is a function of tool-use. The more humans think-act like tools: the stupider they become. The narrower one's focus, the more linear one's thought processes are: the more stupid one is. While the wider one's focus, the wider one's context of understanding is, the more non-linear one's thinking is: the less stupid a person is. In essence: the highest form of human intelligence is the widest awareness possible, or in other words: the state of Pure Wonder. There is no difference between emotional, mental or physical intelligence. Any level of intelligence is dependant upon how well it is interconnected... how contextual it is. Once any human thoughts, emotions, actions are taken out of context: they stop being truly intelligent. For human intelligence to be universally intelligent, it must be connected on all levels to all things. It must be connected genetically on the physical level to the entire universe. Only then do you get universal intelligence. If there is anything we do, think, or feel, that is in conflict with any other part of this universal intelligence, any other part of the universe: that is unequivocal proof that we are not being truly intelligent.

Pre-History and Ancient History

Anthropologists have found disturbing evidence in their digging in Europe, where modern humans and Neanderthals lived side-by-side, 30,000-50,000 years ago. They found that Neanderthals used flint tools just like humans did. The Neanderthals used their local sources of flint. On the other hand... the modern humans were willing to travel over 100 kilometers; just to get a better grade of flint. The Neanderthals were much more practical than the Modern Humans anthropologists call: 'Cro-Magnons'; Crowing about the Magnitude of their power... after killing a Neanderthal.

Neanderthals did not waste precious resources, time and energy just to get a slightly better grade of flint. But our Cro-Magnon Modern Human ancestors did. What does that tell us about their intelligence and ours? That they-we were more obsessed with making tools than another tribe of walking apes? That they spent more time finding the best possible flint? Why did a more practical race of hominids go extinct, and a less practical one manage not only to survive and supplant them; but flourish and cover the entire earth with 6 billion of its offspring? Because we were better tool-makers and better tool-users... or better killers? Or both?

The Neanderthals living in the same areas at the same time; as our ancestors: did not waste their lives sitting around, making thousands of beads... Also; they did not have ritualized burial sites. Because their brains had not become as abstract as ours did. They did not obsess over death as much. Neanderthals did not have as developed an idea of the future as Cro-Magnons did. They were not able to fear or hate as reflectively and as cunningly as Modern humans did.

Their spears had flint tips. Heavy, and very effective. The Cro-Magnons: our direct descendants at that time; made spear-tips made of bone: not flint. One bone-tip takes hours to make, and making it is a difficult art. Requiring very precise softening of the wood and hours of rubbing the bone tip on a piece of sandstone. The slightest mistake and the wood shaft will split. The Neanderthal's spears could be made quickly, and easily... or as anthropologists call it: 'quick'n dirty'

What was the advantage of bone-tipped spears? You could find bones anywhere. Flint was hard to get. You needed less flint to make weapons with bone heads. AND... they were re-usable. So if you could retrieve your own spear, and use it many times. You owned that spear.

You could get back one investment of time and energy manifold, many times.

A bone spear took hours longer to make them, compared to the simpler spears of the Neanderthals.

What is a return on your investment money: but a huge return of meat for the small investment of first making: and throwing a re-usable spear?

First you make your own money. Then you throw it away on an investment... hoping for a return, a profit. If there is no return: you get your investment back: slightly the worse for wear, and fix it up again, and throw it away again hoping to catch something, to make a killing, and get a huge return...while also recovering your original money... or spear.

Where do you think mass production came from? It came from humans mass-producing token deaths heads over 30,000 years ago. Where do you think Robber Baron Capitalism came from? From the practice of Decapitation. Why do you think the universal symbol of Capitalism, whether it is coin or paper: has a head on it? This abstracted symbol of death's heads: represents the sum total: of all Neanderthals and Humans killed under the Capitalistic system of decapitation. The tactic of cutting off the head of a leader, and ruling the terrified masses through mass slaughter. The tactic of making all humans worship their heads of State. The tactic of brainwashing people into worshipping the abstracted death's heads called paper money, instead of worshipping actual rulers who were mentally detached, whose brains were disconnected from their bodies, who were detached from the masses they ruled. Mental decapitation: Science: abstraction: comes from actual decapitation.

Today; the Decapitation of your enemy's head is almost too brutal a practice to even imagine. Modern civilized humans find it hard to believe that an entire continent of humans actually practiced cutting off the heads of their enemies and sticking them on poles. Yet nearly every tribe in Europe practiced it just one thousand years ago... The Britons practiced it. The Gauls practiced it. The Germanic tribes practiced it. The Scandinavians practiced it. Which means that it took Europeans 36,000, to 50,000 years of practicing this obscene tradition to finally grow out of it. Does this show you how little we humans have changed? And how little we have learned? Where did this barbaric European custom come from?

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1279

Where did Capitalism come from?

From the practice of Decapitation. Cutting off human heads.

Where did the practice of human decapitation come from?

From hunting animals so large: we had to cut off their heads, to drag the meat back home.

From hunting large animals for thousands upon thousands of years; and using their decapitated heads as symbols of status, power, wealth, and as abstract cultural symbols in every meaning can imagine: from fertility to wisdom. Hiding and whitewashing the sin and crime of killing other animals by inventing idiotic myths and rationalized bullshit cultural lies to justify it.

From the expectation of making a small outlay of energy like casting a spear. And not only getting your spear returned to you: but also a nice huge profit of dead meat...a dead animal attached to your outlay of spear-energy. This in essence: is the religion and culture of all Robber Baron Capitalism. It's origin goes back more than a hundred thousand years. It goes back millions of years. From making re-usable spears and trading them for something else; we became accustomed to a return of our investment in other ways. By mass-producing tokens, and trading them for something else: we got used to making a profit. By using tokens called money that are abstract death's heads, and trading them for something else. Thus: getting back your investment of time and energy, plus a tidy profit.

The actual advantage of the bone-spear Cro-Magnons used over the Neanderthal flint spears was that they were lighter... and were used in conjunction with a spear-thrower... or: Atlatl: a mechanical device, which could double the throwing distance of a spear. In other words... our ancestors could launch their spears from double the distance that the Neanderthals could: accurately enough to kill something. And Scientists still wonder why Neanderthals went extinct? Re-usable spears? Doubling the throwing distance, by using an Atlatl? A physical Advantage. Accumulating the dead decapitated heads of killed animals as status symbols? So the more skulls of dead animals a tribe has: the more skillful they are in killing, the more dangerous, the more they should be avoided if other tribes see how many skulls are impaled on wooden stakes around their camp, or village, or caves.

Unlike flint spears: bone spears do not leave any identifiable marks on skeletal remains. Oops. No evidence to prove that our ancestors actually killed Neanderthals. One less Neanderthal. Pick up your own re-usable spear; and leave the old-fashioned spear flint spear on the ground next to the dead Neanderthal. Or take his spear also; and leave no evidence whatsoever. Because you did not bury the evidence. So scavengers and meat eaters can get rid of the corpse for you.

Look at the evidence. 43,000 years ago, modern humans were just beginning to expand out into Asia, and the Mid-East. They met Neanderthals. Who had been living there before them for at least 150,000 years.. They took over their territories. They started killing the Neanderthals They conquered by killing. Then they started overpopulating the territories they had conquered. Because the original tactic of winning territory was overpopulation. Breeding faster than Neanderthals could. Having more fat babies faster. Then they started killing not only Neanderthals... but each other as well. Then after the Neanderthals were all killed off. Our ancestors had no one left to kill: but each other. Even though they had originally fought and killed Neanderthals.

But the Neanderthals were so alike to Cro-Magnons, they were so similar. That our Cro-Magnon ancestors had to invent a good excuse to kill them. Unfortunately... All the excuses they found for killing off a brother-tribe of humans; worked just as well in killing each other. The tradition of finding any bullshit excuse to go to war and start killing other tribes became set in stone 40,000 years before President Bush ever found a bullshit excuse to go to war against Hussein of Iraq. The result of killing Neanderthals for no good reason and justifying it with any bullshit excuse they could find? Oops. Mass killing, wars, genocide and butchery of their own races and tribes and Nations for 60,000 years. Oops. Stupid human apes.

1279

Why have we done this for at least 60,000 years without changing? Because that's the way we did it long ago. Because that's the way it's supposed to be done. Because that's the way we usually do it. Why was this brother culture of humans called Neanderthals? Because they meandered all over the fucking place. They were more nomadic than we were. They did not settle down in one territory like humans did. Accidentally meandering into areas that humans regarded as their own. Not understanding, or caring about the human abstract concept of owned territory. And being killed for their territorial violations as interlopers. Individually. One-by-one. So any human coming home with a Neanderthal head was bringing home a prize. A grisly trophy. A proof of their killing power. And their status shot up enormously because of it. They became the heads of their tribe. Where do you think the idea of being the head of anything comes from? From the practice of decapitation. From coming home with the biggest head of a dead animal and being revered as the mightiest hunter in your tribe.

One Head is designed to belong to one body. They are not supposed to be decapitated and worn by someone else as a trophy, or an icon, or a fake token of human male power and status... and displayed and used to gain power and influence over others of your own tribe by it. Tribes did not need heads because they were not one body. They never needed them for millions of years... until the custom of the taking of heads began; and humans began using them as tokens. Then the practice of having token heads for an entire tribe became universal. As the killers tried to make everyone in their tribe share the guilt of murdering all the animals they killed. Their murders were shared by their tribe, who ate the dead meat: and became enablers and guilty by association and the acceptance of murdering animals as a way of life. Then it was a short hop-skip, and jump to accepting the murdering of other humans.

The entire custom of the abuse of power; comes from tradition of tribes having token heads, and token leaders. Who were not leaders at all. They were only symbolic heads, fake leaders. Filthy cowards and killers. The dumbest and least imaginative idiots became token heads because they were no good at anything else except killing. The entire custom of having the most incompetent idiots as token heads came from the human practice of decapitation. That is why the best heads of State in history were the best killers and mass-murderers. It is the deepest reason for their existence. It is the deepest subconscious justification of their existence as rulers and heads of State, heads of capitalism, heads of corporation, heads of abstracted corporate bodies that are no longer flesh and blood bodies: but only exist on paper as pure abstractions.

To this day; modern anthropologist cannot imagine how any tribe or human society can survive without a head authority figure. The idea of a headless tribe, or a society without a head is unthinkable and unimaginable. These grisly decapitated heads, these trophies: became abstracted 60,000 years ago. The legacy of these grisly decapitated heads have poisoned human culture since, for at least 100,000 years. Our ancestors began to make stone and bone tokens of decapitated heads. After 5,000 years; of the making of token deaths-heads on a mass scale and mass production... became a universal occupation for modern humans all over Europe and around the world. 40,000 years ago: All Modern humans throughout Asia and Europe; began manufacturing individual, hand-cut tokens on a mass scale.... Each human making thousands of them... wasting thousands of hours sitting around, making these completely useless objects... which had no value; except as a symbol of status and wealth and subconscious guilt. The definition of human culture is; the making of artificial artifacts that have no practical use. It began with this horror of killing and decapitation. And we are now supposed to worship this shit idea called culture that has no practical use, and no practical intelligence, merely because it has been around so long; we cannot remember what it was like to live any other way.

Why did this happen? The answer is obvious. 43,000 years ago: human population began increasing exponentially because of better killing tools.

They started cutting off the heads of Neanderthals they killed as signs of their status and power and wealth. Until the rotting heads became too cumbersome to carry around. Until they killed so many people; they couldn't carry all the heads around to show how powerful they were, how good they were at killing other humans. Until the heads rotted and disintegrated. So they carved small Neanderthal skulls out of whatever they could find that was easy to carve. With a hole to show where they had bashed their brains-in, or where the spear went through their throat.

Why does the semantic mix-up of ownership and possession still exist in every human language? In English; the difference between these, them, their, and theirs; is confusing as hell. In Estonian: him and you, are: sina and sinu. In Estonian: his and yours are the same word: tema. In French, mine and yours is Moi and Toi. Why this semantic boggle? Because the human subconscious still cannot tell the difference between a dead carcass of a dead human with its head missing, and a Neanderthal carcass with its head missing. Because a grisly rotting dead Neanderthal decapitated head looks almost exactly like a human decapitated head.

Once these decapitated heads had been abstracted into small convenient miniature representative skulls. They carried them around to show others. The small skulls represented the larger actual skulls. Until humans strung them along sinews, and wore them around their necks; to show their status and power so everyone they met would fear them. Abstraction is a symbol which represents an actual thing. Elected or appointed or hereditary representatives of a society represent the heads of their society. Never all of their society. Only the male heads of each family.

Abstraction is the shrinking of a decapitated head down to a smaller size: taking the bone skull out, and shrinking it down to a gnarled, blackened horror. Abstraction is the shrinkage of symbols down to microprocessors called chips. Abstraction is the first apes that chipped dead stones down to a smaller size, and left abstract stone chips behind, as evidence of their micro chipping.

After decapitating Neanderthals into extinction, there was no one left to kill: then our ancestors began killing each other. They started cutting each other's heads off. Killing other humans became the source of all status, wealth and power in their societies. The root of this evil was knowledge. Knowledge in how to make better killing tools, how to become better killers was how they managed to exterminate Neanderthals in the first place. Who were hairy and dirty all over: dert-als. And stank of killing because they never washed off the blood of the huge Ice Age mammoths and Deer they killed. Neanderthals were not innocent either. The idea that Neanderthals are a distinct, separate sub-species of walking apes; who were not genetically of our own bloodline is pure scientific bullshit. It was just a case of human killers being killed by more cunning human killers.

Our ancestors started cutting off the heads of the humans they killed... so nobody could recognize who had been killed. So nobody could identify the rotting dead bodies from the tattoo markings on their rotting dead faces. So they could pass off a dead human as a dead Neanderthal. Until they began using these death's heads to show how many humans their entire tribe had killed. Until every generation saved the accumulated token-skulls of their dead ancestors, and constantly added to them. To show what powerful man-killers they were to the other tribes. Until all tribes, and all human cultures began carving these token skulls; whether they had killed anyone or not. Until the token itself, the symbol, took on a life of its own. Until miniature carved skulls became forms of nearly all token status, token wealth and token power.

It took 5,000 years for this sick cultural craze of abstract decapitation to spread over Europe and Asia. Until humans spent most of their lives making and carving as many fake-token, miniature-carved human skulls and heads as possible. Until these so-called beads, until these abstracted, identicalized, mass-produced death-heads; became universally recognized symbols and sources of accumulated wealth and power.

What was the result of this mass psychosis of token deaths heads being carved by the millions upon millions? Inflation. The tokens became worthless. This abstraction of the act of killing was not only an attempt to distance themselves and insulate themselves from the guilt and legacy of the past: it was an attempt to stop the killing. But it did not work. They went back to killing each other. The only difference was that they had created an abstract system of status. They not only had to prove their status by killing their neighbors, they had to prove it by accumulating the tokens of the dead and adding them to the ones they had already accumulated. This is where the origin of money comes from. It did not come from trade. Stone age modern humans had nothing to trade except their weapons. You do not trade weapons with another tribe of killers so they can kill you with your own improved weapons. Money originated from the accumulation of deaths heads tokens, and from a tradition and culture of killing and raiding and stealing anything you can from your neighbors. Once you kill your neighbors... then you can add their weapons to yours... not before. Then you can pile up your ill gotten gains and gloat over them. Then you can become greedy and want more useless tokens of killing power and 'wealth' which you can't use and are useless except as a pile of hoarded knick-knacks that become called a 'treasure' that become treasured.

The first Wealth and Power of the first humans originated from secret acts of murder. It came from secret killing. From secret murder. From secret Decapitation. Until it became normalized. Then it became publicly accepted as normal.

Now the evidence is being slowly dug up and exposed by scientists. But it is not being connected. Science still does not have the faintest clue as to why this making of what they call 'beads': became such a universal human obsession then. Or why the more tokens you had: the higher your status as a killer was. Can anyone find one sane reason why humans with the most primitive toolkit suddenly began to mass-produce useless objects that were not even tools and were not even ornamental? Imagine yourself on a deserted island with only a few simple stone tools. Unless you were completely insane: would you spend your entire life mass-producing ugly, identical deaths-heads?

When did the crude Achaean tool kit that had been used unchanged for millions of years suddenly change? When our Ancestors entered Asia and Europe and encountered the Neanderthals who had already been living there for over 70,000 years... Not before.

Why do you think all civilized human cultures are obsessed with who-killed-who? Why do you think so much of history and fiction... facts and lies has been focused on the obsession of who-killed-who? And nothing else? There is an understandable reason for everything. There is an understandable reason for how, and why these abstract tokens that science today calls 'beads' were used.

If you are so rich, that you have ten thousand or-so token miniature skulls. Then you must be somebody. You must be good with tools. You must be a workaholic addicted to tools. Or... a leader who has these so-called 'beads' made for him: to show his status, to show how he can get other people to work for him... Or each person becoming engaged in a mad-crazed competition of token-status... so the one with the most beads wins? Does this sound plausible?

Or... if you have hundreds of token skulls hanging around your neck: it signifies that you come from a long line of killers. And that you yourself are a dangerous killer. And other people better be careful of what they do, or say to you...because if they get you angry: you will kill them.

Would this er, um, kind of be an er, um, universal enough root culture that all our Cro-Magnon ancestors once shared? The cultural sharing of a subconscious guilt and shame that was so universal: there were no exceptions to it across Asia and Europe?

Could 50,000 years of killing a brother tribe; finally force them to try to collectively hide from their accumulated guilt subconsciously?

And by this; invent a new form of hiding called abstraction? By hiding the meanings of their guilt deep in blackened caves using blackened abstract symbols, and then by hiding the meanings of these abstract symbols; by abstracting them even further? Could this, er, um explain why these abstract symbols only surfaced again... thousands of years later: as funerary art in Egypt? That only dead rulers were supposed to see? So the only true killers. The heads of each tribe... were the only people who knew the true meaning of the first abstraction ever invented... knew that they were responsible, and guilty of killing other people? And the entire nauseating tale of how humans developed something called a culture; was human killers tried to hide their sins and crimes of killing; from other people? Gosh. That sounds just like a modern detective novel. That sounds just like a modern history book. Golly.

Look at what our Cro-Magnon ancestors made. What scientists today call beads. They were not made for decoration. They were not made as beads are today. They are not round. They are not crafted skillfully. They were never made round, or creatively different. They are made in the shape of a decapitated human head and neck. They represent decapitated human heads with a hole through the spine to show where the spear penetrated to kill them.

The general, verified, known scientific facts that have been garnered so far about the pre-history of modern humans: is self explanatory: if you put these facts into the right context.

It took us 30-60,000 years to exterminate almost all of the Neanderthals in Europe and in Asia .

Then we had nobody left to kill

Then we started killing each other.

Then we began making miniature death's heads.

It took modern humans 60,000 years to develop a centralized war culture based upon decapitation where tribes were forced to amalgamate themselves into a large clan to survive the killing power of other large clans of killers..

It took 70,000 years of decapitating heads to change the status of killer apes from cutting off heads and wearing them, to storing them, to shrinking them, to accumulating all the skulls... to having too many death's heads, too many skulls to carry around: to making token deaths heads and wearing them around their necks as symbols of power and status.

A leader with 50 deaths heads around his neck was respected and feared. A leader with 200 deaths heads around his neck was respected and feared more: The leader with only fifty around his neck: when he met a leader with 200 around his neck: shut his mouth, and he took his tribe and left the area. Because he did not want to add another 36 deaths heads to the other leader's necklace, and he did not want his tribe to be massacred. Each tribe was well-known by the other tribes in the beginning. Everyone knew which tribe had the most savage fighters, which tribe won all of its battles, which tribe lost its battles, which tribe was easy pickings, which tribe was better left alone...

But after a while when there were too many tribes, and they did not know each other personally... people finally figured out:

'Hey: I can fake this. I can carve three hundred. Deaths heads and put them around my neck... and every bastard who I meet I can tell them to watch their damn step or they will be Number three hundred and one.'

But... then this faker... meets a better faker... who has...500. Carved death's-heads around his neck. Then that faker meets someone who has 1,000! Death's-heads around his neck.

Then... what happens is: inflation. Every tribe inflated the number of people they actually decapitated artificially... Every human tribe was dragged into a race to keep on carving more and more deaths heads every day... just to keep their head above water and not lose status and be regarded as easy pickings by another tribe...

Then... modern humans tottered around wearing thousands upon thousands of worthless death's-heads, until they become insane crazed slaves: sitting and carving death's-heads all their fucking life until they died... and giving them TO their children who were also enslaved into carving more of these 'beads' just to keep ahead of all other insane humans until the entire culture of bead makers and the tribes that did it went completely extinct. This is how the concept of money was invented.

This is why the bead culture of modern man exploded after we had finished killing off Neanderthals. We had nobody left to kill... except each other. So rather than start exterminating each other: we internalized our culture of decapitation, and began to make abstract tokens called deaths heads... which Science calls 'beads'.

Why are they called 'beads' today? Because beady eyed birds are attracted to shiny small objects called beads. Because birds are attracted to small shiny objects. Because human culture is permeated with bird culture.

But this death's head token craze culture did not last. The making of thousands upon thousands of death's head by prehistoric modern man disappeared around 25,000 years ago. After killing off Neanderthals: Modern man overpopulated Asia and Europe so densely: that we went back to what we had been doing for 60,000 fucking years before we developed an abstracted form of form of death and killing: killing other human beings. Except that these other human beings were not Neanderthals: they were just other human beings from neighboring tribes that lived too close to each other.

What happened then: was that both cultures: the non-violent token-making cultures and the decapitating killing war cultures merged. Modern men, warriors, killers, began wearing tokens to show how powerful they were. The tokens became more abstract. They became more individualized. Each tribe developed its own form of abstract tokens that showed the level of status each person had by making abstract tokens out of the most inert, the most dead material possible: until male and Amazon warriors were buried with coins of gold and bone and other things that were the deadest things they could find and value that were showed the status as killers. This is how and why: modern man invented and innovated modern abstract culture. Our modern culture today is based upon two basic things: power and wealth. The concept of wealth comes from decapitation. The concept of power also comes from decapitation. This is how insane our fucking modern 'intelligence' is.

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1285

The point is: that when modern man developed the culture of carving death's-heads: they had nothing to trade. They did not manufacture or make anything they could sell or trade or buy. All they made was death's-heads. The only possible explanation for why this happened is because what they made were not trading beads: they were making abstract tokens representing actual decapitated heads. They were the evolutionary result of a human war culture that had been killing other human beings and cutting off their heads for 100's of thousands of fucking years.

Why did this happen? It happened because modern humans had been decapitating and killing other human beings called Neanderthals for 60,000 fucking years, and they had been killing each other for 30,000 fucking years. It happened because modern humans had accumulated a subconscious collective morphic guilt about decapitation and the status it gave them. Because killing other humans called modern humans or Neanderthals: was the only way they could survive and keep from being killed and decapitated themselves. Survival: had been based upon 90,000 years of decapitation outside Africa. The other fact is: that for millions of years their survival IN Africa, had been based upon decapitation also.

Modern humans coming out of Africa 100,000 years ago: is a meaningless fact. Regardless of how true this is: this fact is of no use and is useless: unless you connect this fact to other facts that are also actually true, and have an actual contextual connection to this fact.

Neanderthals living in Asia and Europe 200,000 years before modern humans came out of Africa... AH. Now you have a contextual comparison. Now you can state that Neanderthals were doing just fine... Until another tribe of walking apes... Until another tribe of killer apes came out of Africa... just as they had.

What is missing... in this contextual comparison is the lack of hard evidence, and the impossibility of finding any evidence of the existence of other killer apes walking out of Africa... before the Neanderthals did.

What is missing is... the question:

How many times did a tribe of killer apes come out of Africa, and overpopulate itself as the preeminent killer of the entire animal kingdom spreading out over the globe...?

And how many times... did another newer tribe of killer apes come out of Africa... and kill off the older tribe that had come out and establish itself over the globe?

How many times did killer apes kill each other off? How many waves of killer apes were exterminated into total extinction by a newer wave of killer apes coming out of Africa? We only have a tiny bit of evidence about the final, last wave of the last killer ape: us. Coming out of Africa... and poof! Neanderthals disappear before us, they just vanish magically, right? I mean... we didn't do anything 'bad' to them right? Just like the American government didn't do anything 'bad' to the native tribes of modern humans living in North America when white Europeans arrived: right? The native tribes... just magically, er 'vanished'! in front of the happy harmless white good sacred mighty powerful white Europeans: right??

1285

It is this kind of solipsistic shit that scientists sell to modern consumers. Weak bloodless, pale little stinking cowards who never hefted a spear or lived in Nature without electricity, or fought against other human tribes that were trying to kill them off... go around trying to tell you: that... the human species is a nonviolent species. And that we are so fucking good and harmless and have such good fucking intentions towards all living things: that we could never ever, ever, ever! Have done anything nasty or bad, or mean or not nice ever! Because of course: 100,000 years ago: modern humans were just like we are today! They had air conditioned cars and computers and had factories killing their meat for them and they never did anything nasty like 'killing' anybody at all... right?? Because they were just as nonviolent and just as big physical cowards: as Americans are who drop megaton bombs on Afghanistan from 35,000 feet: and call it 'collateral damage' and never ever dream of calling such an act 'bad' or mean'... or 'not nice'.

The historical facts speak for themselves: After 200,000 years of living in Asia and Europe: the race of killer apes called Neanderthals: once a new tribe of killer apes called modern humans showed up: it took this new tribe 30-60,000 years to wipe out the older tribe of killer apes.

The pace of extermination was systematic. It makes sense that it took that long for us to kill off all of the Neanderthals in Asia and Europe... Shit: it took us: 30,000 years just to migrate out of the center of Asia into Europe. Because we did not have cars: we walked. And squatted. And scouted out each new area. And when we found a tribe of killer apes who were bigger than us: we had to do something to keep them from killing US... before we could even begin to think of killing them.

This was the Achaean tool revolution that modern man went through. We were forced by war: to innovate better killing tools, better weapons of mass destruction that the weapons the Neanderthals had. Once this tool revolution spread to all modern humans outside of Africa... This was when we modern humans began to slowly, exterminate them: as we slowly took over the land they had occupied for 200,000 years.

We only have the last bit, the tail-end of this story. But if you fit the facts into the right context: then the story becomes crystal clear. After modern humans learned to develop better weapons: then the Anschluss began: the mass extermination of Neanderthals spread out until they were almost completely gone. But it was never a complete extermination! We never killed off 100% of them. We only killed them off until they stopped being a threat to us, and we became so dominant... that we could afford to let the remaining survivors keep on living.

But... here is the problem: with a war: that lasts 30-60,000 years. Here is the problem: when you have developed a war-culture for 30-60,000 years: based upon the single-minded systematic extermination of a cousin-tribe of killer apes who are so near identical to your DNA: that you mistake strangers not of your tribe to be Neanderthals: when they are actually modern humans... who wear different apparel, have different markings or tattoos, have their hair shaved or tied differently...

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1287

Here is the problem after you have finished killing off all the Neanderthals in your region after 30,000 years of a struggle we call WAR: to do it.

You have created a war economy. You have created a war culture. We modern humans created a war economy and a war culture that worked for 60,000 fucking years: because it took that long for us to kill off our cousins, our rivals the Neanderthals. After that we had a big, big problem.

After 60,000 years of fighting killer apes who were bigger, stronger, meaner, more brutal, more powerful than we were: we had nobody left to kill.

we had nobody left to kill... so we started killing each other.

Get this through your head

This was the big, big problem we modern humans faced after we finished wiping out nearly all of the Neanderthals in Asia and Europe. It is also the big, big problem we have today.

We did what the Neanderthals had done: they had been forced to invent a better tool kit to kill off the earlier race of killer apes who they systematically murdered and exterminated. After that: they spread out all over the fucking place

To get away from themselves

Because all they knew, and all they were good for: was killing another killer ape that was bigger than it was: by using better tools to do it with. If they lived too close to each other; they started killing each other and that was a bad thing!

So what did the Neanderthals do after they had exterminated the earlier tribe that had come out of Africa? They spread out... and started killing all big animals that were bigger than they were and stronger and more powerful and nastier than they were.

They did not kill animals smaller than they were.

Get this through your head. The anthropological evidence is absolutely clear on this. No bones of small mammals have been found in any Neanderthal site whatsoever period.

What they did was very, very intelligent. It was more intelligent than we are.

They practiced population control. They did not have more children when there was no more open range for Neanderthals children to go out and stake a claim to. They kept their tribes on a low: non-accumulation rate of replacement: that did not overpopulate Asia and Europe for two hundred thousand fucking years.

The only trouble was: that after they had learned this form of self preservation. After they had learned how to keep themselves just at the right density of population so they would not be forced to start killing each other... which was what they did do whenever their populations became too dense.

They became complacent and fat and lazy just like we have become since we have had no major rivals to challenge the domination of the earth by the tribe of killer apes: us... : modern man. When we showed up: they did not increase their rate of child birth. Even when they were being slaughtered: they did not begin to have more babies the instant there was a war and many of their adults had been killed and their tribes and clans needed desperately to replenish their stock or be exterminated completely.

1287

We modern humans: whenever there is a huge war and piles of dead... all those remaining alive: suddenly start to have more babies and love these babies and have more and more babies! And in a few years... we have come back from near extinction: and are just as populous as ever. The only problem is... that we have become stuck in a state of mass over-crowded hysteria. We do NOT stop making too many babies after a war is over when we are not being killed and massacred in huge numbers very quickly. And since no other tribe came out of Africa and wiped us out like we did the Neanderthals: we have become complacent, stupid, fat and lazy: just like the Neanderthals did.

Our only distinction: is that we are the last of this ape species of walking killer apes to come out of Africa: that is the only reason we are not already extinct.

Also... when Humans exterminated the last Neanderthals...this was precisely the same time that humans also when they began to bury their own dead. Why? They were trying to bury the truth of the past. They were burying their own guilt. The guilt of killing other humans. Trying to hide the grisly evidence: so others would not find the dead bodies, and come looking for the killers. Until these sick killing tribes developed a mass psychosis of guilt so powerful: they began burying their own dead. Burying the past. Burying the killers, just as they had buried their victims... so they could not be found. Until burying their dead became a custom. Created from the fear of dying, the fear of death, secret guilt, secret shame, secret fear, secrecy, burying the truth, burying the past. Human culture is a cover-up. It was invented to cover-up dead corpses. It was an invention to hide death. Human culture is based upon covering up the actual truth.

What is a token? It is something that is taken from something to represent the actual dead body you took it from. The decapitated heads, token from the dead bodies of Neanderthals; became human heads taken from human bodies. And then they were put on poles, and dried, and abstracted into shrunk heads... Which were the first half-abstracted tokens, or deaths head tokens. Which led to carving tokens as abstract symbols of all the decapitated heads your tribe had tokened, or taken from dead bodies. Since the original shrunk taken dead heads, had rotted, and a head count was religiously kept; of how many deaths heads each tribe had killed over its entire existence... That is where our vaunted abstraction first came from. And where counting came from.

How many ways do you want to analyze how and why this happened? Study the evidence; and see how it fits these explanations. The period of 43-38,000 years ago was when what anthropologists call the human brain's 'Big Bang' happened... When humans first began to think abstractively... to avoid facing their own guilt as being killers of their own species... Which is why we call ourselves human beings: not human animals.

Abstraction is a human invention for the avoidance of actuality. It is used to avoid facing the actual truth. Abstraction is used to deflect and reflect away from direct contact with pain-filled actual truth. It is used to avoid penetrating the truth. It is used to avoid insight and oversight. It is the inability of facing actuality and actual truth. The creation of abstract culture was when we humans first began to make artifacts that had no practical use. Artifacts are abstract facts; that are artistically embellished. This was also when ritualized burial of human dead first appeared. This was when modern human culture first appeared. This was when humans first began making abstract images.

Where did they first make them? Down in the deepest, darkest, blackest, holes possible. Hidden... in secret. Down in the blackest depths of ignorance. As far away from all living things as possible. Down in the safest, deadest, most isolated, most insulated places of total safety... Down in the loneliest, deepest, blackest horror: where no living things ever dwell or willingly go. Regressed back to the blackness of the womb. Regressed back to the pre-natal state of a fetus. Where the subconscious awareness is blindly spitting on its own hands because of what those hands did.

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

The dynamic of killing, guilt, burial, hiding, secrecy, denial and the development of abstraction: happened in Europe 30-60,000 years ago. It happened gradually: over a period of many thousands of years. It became normalized into what we call today: human abstract culture.

The burial of our dead marks the emerging of human abstract culture. It also marks when humans stopped living as traveling nomads. It also marks the first human garbage dumps, the first manmade landfills. Created by settling down in one place. Living in one cave, and dumping garbage outside that cave. Letting their dead be eaten by the night scavengers. Then killing off all predators and scavengers in the area... and having no animals to eat the dead corpses. Until their dead corpses became too rotten to eat. Until animals would not touch their dead corpses. Because the bodies were so rotten and stank so much of illness and corruption: that only carrion flies could feed on their dead without dying themselves. Until the stink became so unbearable: they had to bury the rotten things. Try a scientific experiment. Feed any animal human flesh; and see what happens to them.

What is the difference between a graveyard and a garbage dump? Except the semantic lie of one being sacred, and the other being not sacred? None. The actual truth of our past has been buried under 60,000 years of accumulating lies, and accumulating garbage dumps called cemeteries.

Did humans first bury their dead out of worshipping them? They stopped moving! They had to bury things, or move on to get rid of the stink. They had only two choices: move, or dig a hole, and start burying your own shit. Because if you don't bury your own shit: it will stink so bad that you will be forced to move on anyways: whether you want to or not. Anthropologists make a huge stink about how intelligent and caring these humans were; to bury their own dead corpses. It is supposed to be the most sacred universal human custom that marks us as being cultured and civilized, and different from all other animals and superior to them. It is supposed to mark how intelligent we are. The actual truth is a complete reversal of that assumption. The actual truth was reflected. Deflected. Distorted. Avoided. Denied. Hidden. Buried. Kept secret. Until the projected image of a lie becomes seen as the truth. The dynamic of reflection reverses images. It reverses perception. When you have a reflective-deflective awareness: it is very, very easy to lie to yourself.

Humans left their dead unburied for thousands of years; because they did not have to bury them. They did not stay long enough in any one place for them to accumulate the garbage of dead bodies, or the garbage of that cave dwellers piled up every day. It was only later: after the dead were sanctified: to hide the truth that the dead were actually pure filth: that the sanctified custom of burying dead humans made them bury their dead chiefs as a ritual of hiding from their own lies, and their own corruption. They did this by deflection. By cunning. By putting useful valued items in with the dead corpses. This was when humans first began making images.

How did they make these abstract images?

By spitting on the Earth: and all that the Earth stands for. By mixing poisonous mineral compounds in their own mouths with their saliva, and using their hands. Their hands. To control the shapes they were creating. But before they ever began doing that: they spat on their own hands. They spat black charcoal on their own hands so the outline of their blackened hands produced a reversed reflective image... turning a negative into a positive. Reflectively Reversing a blackened charcoal covered hand into a white hand, turning a white surrounding surface into blackened filth. Reflectively Reversing black evil into Good. Reflectively reversing the truth through the process of reflective abstraction. By creating a projected image the reflectively revered the actual facts, the actual truth.

Many thousands of years later: we created photographic positives by a doubled process of reflective reversal. First, by reflectively reversing sunlit images into blackness; turning blackness into transparent whiteness... and then re-reversing the process: so what was artificially blackened, was turned back into whiteness, and what was artificially whitened, was blackened again. Creating two-dimensional, abstract images of three-dimensional objects that are so doubly re-reflected: that it completely hides the actual evil; intrinsic in the very process and idea of all abstractive imagery: an insulated, one-sided process of reflection. The original, the first human abstractions: only hid this intrinsic evil by one reflective reversal. And the actual subconscious reason they did this is understandable.

They were actually spitting on their own hands.... spitting onto dead rock surfaces inside these caves: the poisonous, bitter-tasting blackness inside them. With a small bit of earth, and ashes; mixed with saliva in their mouths. Spitting out their own hate at the dead rocks they were forced to use; in order to survive. They were spitting out the lies they had been spouting. They were vomiting up their own self-hate. The black carbon of death that comes from the bodies of dead trees that had been burnt and blackened into ashes and cancer-causing carbon.

Where do you think the act of prayer comes from? From these humans creating their cave-paintings by spitting between their cupped hands on the Earth, to control their cave-spitting 40,000 years ago. Where do you think the phrase: 'a spitting image-of' comes from? It comes from the first modern humans who tried to duplicate an animal, by spitting its image on a cave wall. Why does the Bible say that man was created in the image of God? Because the concept of a worshipped god comes from worshipping an image, and not an actuality. Because they believed that God is more real and more powerful than man. They managed to hide the truth about God by reversing truth and lie... by a simple trick of projective reflection.

What did the Semites do: after escaping the brutality of Egypt's God Kings. They missed having them around! A huge power vacuum inside their slave culture was created when they no longer had an evil master who they worshipped and feared, and who made them live in terror and fear, and made their lives an unending misery. So what to do?

They Projected the Reflection of being enslaved by a powerful worshipped Master... onto an imaginary God of their own. And created a Slave master-Oppressor-God called Jehovah...

Neat.

If you have been enslaved for 600 years: and have not understood why your master was in a rage. If you have been enslaved by rage-filled Pharaohs who were considered to be living Gods. And you run away. And suddenly there is no rage-filled God of a Master to oppress you and order you around and tell you what to do...

You wander around aimlessly in the desert for 40 years for no reason... Simply because you have not been told where to go, and what to do. You wander around until finally... the God Jehovah becomes so angry at you that He writes down in stone... exactly what you are not supposed to do.

The instant Moses descended from talking to his God. The instant he saw what his people were doing. He broke the stone tablets of the Ten Commandments given to him by Jehovah. Those deified Ten Commandments were broken by the Jews before they were made. The Jews broke them the instant they were created. Those Ten Commandments have not been obeyed by the Jews ever since Moses first broke the stone tablets they were written on.

This is the obscene obvious hypocrisy of the Hebrew religion and their own written history. They incriminated themselves with their own words. The story of the Jewish race is a story of them breaking all these Ten Commandments for three thousand years. All the while... pretending that they were not doing so.

Why did other Hebrews hate the Pharisees more than any other sect?

'Pssst. Don't do that. The Pharaoh will see you and punish us.'

Pharaoh... sees. Phar-I-see.... Far I see. I see far. Get it?....

They were cultural replacements for the missing Pharaoh of Egypt. They were the judges, the accusers, the leaders of the Temple.

Who was the other sect?

The Sadducees.

'Pssst.... Do this... the Pharaoh will not see you. You can get away with it.'

Seduce the people... see? get it?

Two opposing sects. One sect on the side of the Pharaoh, and Law and Order... and the other sect trying to seduce people away from authority.

Both of them openly visible to the entire Hebrew Nation... Pharisee, Sadducee... see? Get it? The two top sects of their ethnic Nation. Acting out an infantile, two-year-old uncertainty of what to do.

What is a sect? a sect is SICK. A sect is a sick bunch of people who SIC other people on other people: Go get'em! Go kill'em! They're the sick ones, not us. We HATE those dirty --- We won't kill them... we want YOU to kill them FOR us. That is what a fucking 'sect' is.

The Hebrews s had two basic sects: Pharisees and Sadducee's; these two basic Jewish cults represent their former slave culture. The seducers doing everything they could to enjoy what little fun they could. Breaking rules and ignoring traditions. The whispering Pharisees warning them that what they were doing was wrong and that the Pharaoh would find out and punish them.

Read the cultural insanity that was the Jews in the time of Jesus. They were raving maniacs. They were insane as a people, as a culture, as a race. If you think they were insane then... read what they were before Jesus.

Create a new culture. Re-Create your own cultural slavery. Self-created cultural slavery. Create your own custom-made God that will replace the power-vacuum of a missing Pharaoh. A race of powerless slaves, who once they escaped: did not know what to do or where to go... wandering in the desert for forty years: without a master or an intelligent leader. Turning the reality of a horrible vindictive master, and the actual living human God-King of Egypt: into an abstract image of an invisible God. That was more real to them than they were. Simply by projecting their inner reflections out onto the Outer World.

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1292

This is what culture is. This is how it works.

And then? Glorifying the most inept, incompetent idiot who led them around in circles aimlessly for forty years as their greatest leader. Creating a religious-communal system of religious political power based upon the squabbling of religious fanatical idiots; arguing amongst themselves about the fine points of their sacred written texts for seven thousand years; without ever being able to come to a unified unanimous consensus about what was right or wrong in the entire drivel that was amassed and written into Jewish laws!

What do Jews do today? They squabble. They bargain. They argue. They refuse to accept any secular authority. They do exactly what they did 3,000 years ago. They still do what they did after they lost their beloved Pharaoh. Even after they replaced Him with an imaginary abstract God-Master called Jehovah... they still don't know what to do. They still are not satisfied with their own state. They still yearn to be told what to do. They still yearn to be enslaved by a cruel taskmaster. They still want to be punished for their past sins. They still want to suffer. They still want to feel guilty. This is the shit they worship called Jewish culture. This is the shit humans worship called culture.

Even after Moses lead them for 40 years of aimless wandering and empty promises: they still didn't know what to do. They still hungered for a vindictive master to come down from his high place and punish them.

Why, may you ask?

Because the entire story of their Exodus from Egypt is a complete obscene lie. They did not flee. They did not fight. They did not earn their freedom. They were expelled from Egypt. As the lowest, most unwanted scum on Earth. The Jews were so despised by all the Egyptians; that that they could not even abide to tolerate them as their slaves. They marked the doors of these Jewish scum as pariah families. But their Egyptian Master was merciful. He did not exterminate them as he should have. He merely expelled them out of Egypt.

Why were they so hated and despised 7,000 years ago? Because during every plague. Whenever there was any famine. They did not starve or die like the other slave families died, and all the other Egyptians died. Of starvation. They were saved. They survived. By the most arrant pile of magical bullshit miracles ever written to cover up the truth.

Why? Because they were secret cozeners. They stole in secret and hid their ill-gotten food and wealth from their masters. They were so diseased already: that the plagues attacking healthy slaves did not kill them. That created a healthy overriding disgust and unease against them. The Jewish Semite tribes were greedier and more cunning than all the other slave-tribes the Egyptian Pharaohs used to build their houses of Death by. And this trademark racist label of Jews being greedier than all other races has haunted them for 7,000 years.

While they all wailed and wept: pretending not to understand why they were expelled from Egypt. Just as they pretended not to understand why the Nazis hated them so much after the German Great depression. When they realized that all the Jews had profited from their Nations most horrible international humiliation and starvation and impoverishment by leapfrogging suddenly into the elite spheres of all German society... while the brown shirted thugs were cast into the lowest dregs of German society, into the beer halls and brothels. To gang together and chew on their hatred against all Jews and plan and plot their revenge.

1292

There are a reasons for everything. You do not get something from nothing. There were damn good reasons for the Egyptians expelling the Jews from Egypt. And damn good reasons for running after them and wanting to slaughter them en masse after the Egyptians realized that they had been robbed by their own slaves. The Egyptians had been gypped by their own slaves. This alone was enough to enrage them to the point that they ran after them and tried to kill them all.

The Pharaoh saved all of the excess grain from all his farmers, and stored it in huge granaries. And saved it to be given to his people in times of famine. Do you think that a race of slaves seeing a god-King saving food, might get the idea to save some of their own, or better yet: sneakily steal from these National granaries? And then when all the Egyptian nation is starving to death: and somehow: certain Semite families do not starve to death. Do you think maybe the Pharaoh might get a suspicion that this race of dirty thieves had been stealing from him? How could he prove that the Semitic slaves were all a pack of dirty robbers and thieves? They had eaten the evidence. Might this be the reason he expelled all of them from his Land in disgust. After 700 years of using them as slaves. Why didn't he kill them? Was the art of stealing and cozening so ingrained in Egyptian culture: that he begrudgingly admired them for being better thieves than the starving idiots who waited for handouts from his royal granaries and never put anything aside for themselves, and never saved anything for a rainy day? Why didn't he promote them? Oops. He did. All of these garbled lies are mixed with bits of truth... But they are too mixed up together to ever accurately separate fact from fiction.

Why did the Pharaoh save all this grain? Because he was advised to do so by Moses; who predicted that famine would come. What happens when you expect the worst? You create your own self-fulfilling prophecy. A sly, slave Nation that had been poor and hungry for thousands of years before they were enslaved by Egypt's rulers; poisoning the minds of Egyptians into living in fear of famine. When Egypt had not had any famine for thousands of years before these diseased slaves infected Egypt with their own diseased culture? Until what they worked for... until all the excess grain rotted and created mutated microbes and bacteria; that attacked and killed the living wheat in the field. How mysterious is this?

What wonder is it that the Ancient Egyptians took into their bosom the worst, sneakiest, wiliest, tribe of hypocrites, cheats and cozeners they could find? Water seeks its own level. They kept this tribe as slaves for 600 years for a damn good reason. Because they were on the same wavelength. They understood how to lie and cheat and fake. They understood how to bargain. They understood greed. They understood corruption better than their other slaves did. They became indispensable to the Egyptian. They knew how to gyp customers better. They knew how to GYP the Truth. They knew how to secretly suck the Energy out of the Egyptians. Out gypping the gypers. Out stealing the stealers. Out lying the liars. Out cozening the cozeners. Until they were finally kicked out. Until even that foul ancient race could not abide them in their midst any more.

What did most of the Semites do after they were kicked out of Egypt? In order to whitewash their own collective National, tribal, communal, familial, personal humiliations. In order to hide all of the obscene, low, dirty facts about the truth of why they were kicked out of the Egyptian Empire as a pariah Nation. They were forced to invent the biggest bunch of magical bullshit ever written on paper to cover their sly, greedy tracks. They stuck so many miracles into their stories; that it stinks to high heaven to this day. There were more damn miracles in this part of their history, than in the whole of the Talmud and Old Testament put together. The Talmud and the Old testament was re-written so many times: they were forced to abandon all of their former writings and begin again from scratch.

And after 40 years of wandering and suffering hardships. They finally came up with a decent ethic to live by; distilled into a simplified code of only ten Commandments. But even that was poisoned and whitewashed. They disobeyed their leader even before he could come down from a private talk with their God. They disobeyed every one of these Ten Commandments the second they were introduced to them. Why? Because they had already been culturally brainwashed to sneakily find some way around the commandments of their own damn religion, because they had survived for 600 years, by sneakily finding ways around the Commandments of their Egyptian Ruler-Gods.

They still do this today. The greediest, most possessive, most envious, most penurious Jews, the most selfish, most rapacious, most cheating, most avaricious of them; cover themselves in layers of public religiosity and sanctity. They publicly proclaim to all the world how deeply spiritual and how deeply Jewish they are. They become Orthodox Jews. They flaunt their Jewishness publicly. As a sign of fear and hatred towards all other cultures. They beat themselves up with their Jewish guilt; while at the same time: practicing every embezzling underhanded sneaky way of cheating others, and getting filthy rich and worshipping money instead of their god. And then hiding in their mansions and under the mantle Jewish religious-cultural superiority; the superiority of oldness... that their culture is older and therefore more sacred and wiser than all the others... and not speaking to Gentiles. Gentiles are still considered to be unclean by Orthodox Jews. They wrap themselves in the robes of their own hypocrisy and shun the outer world as being corrupt... when it is they who are more corrupt than the outer world.

This is one way they have successfully reversed and reflected and projected their own unclean selves upon the rest of the non-Jewish world. By self-rationalizing and ignoring what they actually do and what they actually are. Creating their own Jewish Ghettos all over again and making themselves despised and sneered at and gawked at by the rest of the society they live-in. Jewish culture is a Ghetto culture. No matter how rich you are as a Jew. If you are a traditional Jewish person, you must hold and preserve the mentality of living in a Ghetto and believe with all your heart that all the rest of the world and all non-Jewish people secretly hate you and despise you. A self-fulfilling prophecy that comes true every time. And then when any evidence of anti-Semitism surfaces: the Jews wail and protest and whine about it. What surprise is that? When they make it impossible for anyone to get to know them by never inviting anyone who is not a Jew into their own homes? When they themselves secretly despise and hate all non-Jewish people?

Their tradition of cultural guilt, hiding from all the sins of their past is still being practiced by nearly all people who call themselves Jewish. What made them subconsciously beg to be punished by a great and powerful master 7,000 years ago; has merely been accumulating, and piled up and hidden.

But when they had wandered across the burning deserts of the Sahara for some 40 years: what did they do? What has Jewish religion done since then? Ignore the importance of these original Ten Commandments: and spend 3,000 years; hagging about fine points of their older, stupid impractical traditions and laws.

Look at the history of Semitic religion. It is a recreated duplication of the history of Egyptian religion.

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1295

A single Egyptian ruler declares all other Egyptian Gods illegal, and raises up the SUN as the greatest God of all. The Egyptian GOD of the SUN....

And later: the Jewish sun, er... SON of God? Is raised up declaring all older versions of Jewish religion obsolete and evil.

A simple reflected reversal. A simple mirror technique. Neat. How obvious can you be?

While the following Egyptian rulers tried to destroy and crush this heretical belief system of the SUN and the Ruler of Egypt being one and the same being; in other words a living god. While the Jews of Judea tried to crush the heretical belief in a SON of God existing on Earth as an ordinary man. And the heretical Semites who refused to give up their belief in an overriding all-powerful God: being cast out of Egypt. Because they had by then distilled this all-powerful Sun God into a pure abstraction: so much that they did not even remember that this God was originally supposed to be the actual SUN. So they became a desert tribe of wanderers burned and scorched by the SUN for 40 years. And later they became hated and burned alive; as the killers of the SON of GOD by Christians who believed in this SON of GOD... Unlike some ancient Egyptians who believed in the GOD of the SUN.... What did the Jews call a religious crime? A SIN.

SUN. SON. SIN. ... Get it?

Thou Shalt not disobey your FATHER. No SON is allowed to OUTSHINE his FATHER. That is the SIN of a son who shines too brightly

SAN comes from SAND

Sanitizing the region you live in: turning it into a sanitized desert, a dead blighted destroyed area where all living things have been killed, an antiseptic insane desolation of all Nature.

Sanitizing and whitewashing the se-mantic meaning of words... using words as cover-ups of it being a sin to look directly at the Sun. The sin of calling yourself the son of God... raising yourself up to that height. Being blinded by your own power. Because you are too close to the Sun God of Ammon RA. The word Semantic. Its definition is the Meaning of words... Semen. See Men. see man... seman... get it? see man. SEE MAN, Understand man. Semantics. The hidden reasons behind the meanings of human words... Overpopulation. Male sperm. Male aggression. Exploding out, overpopulating the world.

Is this subconscious, semantic interpretation of Jewish and ancient Egyptian history too unbelievable to swallow? Is the blindness of selective human reflective stupidity; too difficult to understand? Too unpleasant to swallow? Too humbling to admit-to?

If you study the subconscious semantic meanings of words: human history, many hidden truths will be revealed to you.

Take the ancient civilization of Angkor Wat in Cambodia. With temples shaped like huge penises. The rage of the male exploding penis built into, and concreted into stone temples. That is the word used for turning a mental-cultural imagined image into a concrete physical object. The human subconscious was froze into concrete. It was made into concrete, into dead stone images. For 300 years Angkor Wat was a huge civilization: and then it disappeared mysteriously. Nobody knows why or how. Connect the

1295

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1296 subconscious meaning of the Khmer Rouge of Cambodia to the subconscious meaning of Angkor Wat. A genocidal regime that set about systematically killing its own people.

Kh.... KILL mer.... MORE. Rouge... RED inflamed penis.

Ang.... ANGER... Kor... Kill mORe...

What?... Kill more? Oops; end of Cambodian civilization.

Do you think these semantic meanings of these words are mere coincidence? If you look for the actual truth that is buried under the lies of history: you will find thousands upon thousands more of these self-explanatory subconscious clues that expose human cultures for what they actually were, and still are. The modern culture of Cambodia regressed back to the Stone Age: it regressed back to the culture of Angkor Wat. The leader Phnom Pot: was trying to recreate the genocide that was committed in 900 AD. By the Cambodian rulers of Angkor Wat.

There are understandable, explainable causal reasons for everything in human history. All human history is connected. You want more subconscious connections that are logical and obvious?

Phnom Pot...

Nom.... Pot. Nom is name in French. Nom is also Number.

Put numbers in a pot: and kill whoever picks the unlucky number.

Put the names of your victims in a pot and kill the ones you pick out.

Put numbers of killed humans in a Pot and cook them and eat them. Develop a culture of cannibalism. Have that cannibalistic culture go insane and out of control. He was a living modernized recreation of the rulers of Angkor who began with ritual human sacrifice and descended into madness and self-destruction. Just like South American civilizations that had ritualized human sacrifice. They destroyed themselves because of their subconscious guilt, The Aztecs, the Mayas, the Incas... were all filthy child killers. They crumbled fast.

There was a damn good reason Jesus the Sun, er... the Son of God; was betrayed and martyred. There was a damn good reason why his father did not save him. Because Jesus was getting too close to the truth. He was too close to revealing the SIN of God. The fact that his God hated all children and wanted to kill them. Jesus... The Son of God was preaching that the old Jehovah, the old Jewish God of hate and retribution and Punishment... was an Evil God. That his new God was a God of Love, not hate. His own hate-filled father killed him; because Jesus did not respect Him enough. Because he was a rebel. Because he flouted all ancient conventional belief systems of the Jews of his day.. He was too close to preaching that it was a sin to worship an evil hating God. That the old Jewish God was evil. He was too close to enlightening the entire Jewish culture of hate with his message of love and gentleness and kindness.

Look at the story of Samson in the Jewish Bible: The folk group Peter Paul and Mary: a biblical arrangement of names if there ever was one: before they became corrupted by their own fame and fortune, sang biblical songs with PASSION... The song about Samson: The chorus goes:

‘If I had my way in this wicked world I would tear this building DOWN.’

The chorus is not about the temple of the Philistines. It is singing about the evil of all civilized buildings. It is singing about the evil of all civilization. What is civilization? Civilization is lazy:

1296

people lying about in comfort and ease. All people who are 'civil'... meaning polite: have no passion and are lazy asses, civilization is lies civi-lies-ation. All lies come from laziness. From staying in one place and erecting buildings to hoard things in creates laziness and lies.

The song tells of Samson slaying a lion with his bare hands: and comes back later to find bees made a nest of honey in the lion's head. What does this subconscious message tell you? It tells you that Samson killed the lion for the sin of killing and eating living creatures. It is plain case of poetic justice. The jaws of the lion were ripped apart. Because Samson held a truth in his hand: that truth was more powerful than ten thousand men. Samson killed ten thousand men with another jawbone from an ass because those ten thousand man were also guilty as sin of killing and eating other living creatures and because they were all being asses... His incredible strength is not magic. His incredible strength came from moral strength. The bees made honey in the lion's head. Why? Because just as that lion was dying: on its last death throes... it realized why it was being killed. It realized its sin. Its brain realized that truth just as Samson killed it by ripping its jaws apart. Why did Samson rip the lion's jaws apart? There are much easier ways to kill a lion than that Samson killed the lion by ripping its jaws apart because he was enraged at the foul destruction the jaws of the lions. Samson was trying to destroy the root of evil. He saw the jaws of the lion as the most evil part of that lion. He did not kill the lion itself per-se. He attacked and ripped apart the jaws of the lion... What about Samson's hair? That was just a sign of the state of his health. Look around you today... see any men with long healthy hair? No. Most men are prematurely bald, or have hair so short, they look as if they are bald. This song; and the tale of Samson in the Jewish Bible: are subconscious truths and images and messages that were screaming at the Jews for their wicked ways of settling down and erecting buildings and temples and killing and eating other living things. As long as they wandered in the desert and starved and experienced hardship: they were not as evil as when they stopped wandering.

But humans demand idols. Humans must have idols to worship. The instant Moses left them: the Jews erected an idol and began to worship it. . 2,500 years later: humans have still not yet learned to stop worshipping idols. Today: there are TV shows called 'American IDOL' 'Canadian IDOL'. They are very popular with the masses. The Jews did not learn to stop killing and eating living things... They did not stop erecting buildings and temples.

The entire Biblical story of the Semitic Jews, is one long scream of subconscious guilt and hidden truths and lies.

Where do bees usually make honey? Inside the core of the old, rotten trees. Inside the rotten core of the oldest evil on earth, What was in the brain of the lion that Samson killed to attract them? Bees make artificial sweetness out of the youngest natural nectar of flowers. They made honey out of the sweetest thought in the lion's head: It was the youngest, most original, sweetest, most beautiful thought that Life has yet created 'Thou Shalt Not Kill. Thou Shalt Not Eat what you Kill'... What a sweet thought coming out of the core of the most evil creature on earth. Turning the sweetness into an artificial sweetness. Flowers smell sweet because they are not to be killed but appreciated for their beauty. Bees corrupt that sweetness just as they corrupted the sweetness of the last thoughts the lion had before its 'I' died: before its god-ego died. The core of trees that become hollow: lose their god-ego: that insular core that says they all and everything else is nothing. Their inner core rots and dies and disappears. Bees do not kill anything to make honey. They just steal natural sweetness and turn it into artificial sweetness. Trees do not kill? Trees kill each other. Only when the core of that evil disappears do bees make their hive inside the hollow nothingness of that evil dead core. Trees are designed to do away with their inner evil dead cores, and become hollow inside: to house living things in. The lion's last thought was a thought that the bees wanted to live inside: turning the evil of the lion's brain into an artificially sweet thing. Nature is free from evil. Nature is also evil. Man is just more evil than Nature: that's all.

There are damn good historical reasons for everything that actually happened in the past. You cannot separate the past from the present. Everything in the past, and everything in the present: is logically and causally connected on many levels. Yet the most progressive most humane Western concepts of child rearing and humanity come from the Jews. Freud was the first to hint at the fact that all parents violate and abuse their own children. His revolutionary ideas were covered up so fast: they barely exist today as an understood fact. Most psychiatrists and psychologists are Jews. All of the culture of raising spoiled affluent western babies and children come from how the Jews spoiled their children after Germany's Great Depression. They treated their children better than any human culture treated its babies and children before. And that is saying something. The newly affluent Jews of post depression Germany in the 1930's raised their children with so much kindness and parental affection: that they became the shining star of all humanity. They became the world's greatest scientists and the smartest, most creative generation ever born: and the Jews of America did so also after their depression and the war.

So what does this say of Jewish cultures, and human cultures? Was the backlash of WW1 and WW2 a reaction to babies and children being loved too well? Were the 1930's Germans and Jews Really humane towards their young? Germans did not fawn on their children as much as the Jews did? Kindergarten: is a German/Jewish invention. The idea of teaching kindness as a childish virtue to all young children is German/Jewish. Which then re-surfaced even more strongly after the war. The historical fact is that in WW2, the best of the Jewish race and the German race was exterminated and the worst of them survived. All that was the best of the German spirit and Nation was poisoned and the worst survived. This is what war does to humans. This is one reason war is so totally insane. The best of humanity had to be continually killed and stamped out of the Jewish race for 3,000 years because they actually were and are more intelligent and more humane than other races. What this did was it turned the best into the worst and concentrated this worst evil into a culture which could have been the best of all cultures in the world bar none. Jesus was not a Jew for no reason. The point is: if you look at history and include all of the truth and facts, there are logical reasons for everything. Something which is potentially the best can be and has been and is turned and corrupted into being the worst... while something which is mediocre cannot be the best, nor can it be the worst no matter how hard it may try.

Jews were and still are one of the most upwardly mobile culture on Earth. They rise to the top of all corrupt systems and societies. Are they any better or worse than any other culture? They stress education as the key to success Now: all the fucking world is stressing it. And look what that has done. Why do the Arabs hate the Jews so much today? Because the Arabs are Semites also. Herod the Great was an Arab Semite. He hated his own brothers... just like Cain hated Abel in the Bible. Why has the oldest story of the Jewish Bible followed them for thousands of years? The Arabs and the Jews came from the same ethnic race. They are merely different tribes of the same root ethnic race. They hate each other more. The answer is simple: the better you know someone: the more deeply you understand someone: the more deeply you see how full of evil they are. Humans have always preferred to see how evil their brother is; rather than see how evil they themselves are. The only difference between the first Arabs and Jews: is that the Jewish Semites were less warlike a tribe. Where did Arabian carpets come from? From the Bedouin Tribes of the Semitic Arabs who lived in the desert, and had nothing they could kill, nothing they could decapitate. So they wove carpets of millions of cut-decapitated fibers. So they could walk on them and dominate them. So they could feel grass under their feet. The fibers of their carpets subconsciously represent the grass they destroyed by overgrazing the areas they turned into deserts. It represents the guilt of their ancestors who lived in that area. An area that was a paradise: and totally destroyed by them.

One thing both cultures have in common: is their Semitic greed. Jews and Arabs share the same vices. They know each other better, because they are more like each other. The reason they hate each other more: is because each of their cultures mirrors back exactly what they hate about themselves most and cannot admit. Jewish greed is well known throughout the world. Now the Jews have learned modern Western ways to hide that greed from the eyes of westerners. They have learned how to cover their ancient Semitic greed with protestant whitewashing. But the Arabs have not yet learned how to hide naked greed and avaricious lust for money. It shines too much. Their eyes shine too much with the lust of avarice. Arab greed is well known today. Modern Westerners see them come into their culture: bringing their petty haggling and cunning and lying ways with them. The Arabic obsession with money and their custom and tradition of cheating their customers is well-known. The culture of Arab greed and Arabic culture and Arab dishonesty is even filthier than their own culture of whitewashed, meek, Protestant Greed and Protestant Dishonesty. Civilization finally rewarded the war-like Arabs for their thousands of years of preserving their rotten hate-filled culture. After refusing to change their tribal obsolete cultural traditions of betrayal and double-dealing between themselves: one tiny clique of Arabs: have become the most filthy rich stone age Robber Barons in the modern world. While the rest of the Arab world remains mired in poverty, hopelessness, oppression.

Who were the original Protestants of Europe? They were Protesters. They Protested against others being greedier than they were. They wanted everyone to be equally greedy. Once that happened: they stopped protesting. Now they barely protest even if billionaires are caught red-handed stealing billions from them in public. Originally they protested against the greed and avarice of the Catholic Church. Now they have nothing they can protest against. Now they keep their mouths shut. Because they all have exactly the same ethics and morals as the people who are robbing them blind.

Scientists discovered in the 1970's that our Sun has an invisible Corona around it... It has an invisible crown of blazing enraged energy around it, flashing out into different crowns of invisible rage. Why did all Kings that were crowned become worshipped as Gods? As the Sun God Of Ammon Ra? Because their swelled heads, the mental insane auras that radiated menace... were coronas, crowns of invisible rage which radiated invisibly from their skulls... that nobody could see, but could feel. Just like the invisible crown of the blazing Corona that the Sun has... Is ancient history imitating Science? Or is Science imitating ancient History? Are the crowns-coronas of ancient, dead, God Kings just a coincidence? Did Scientists name the energy from the Sun just because it seemed like a crown of an old, ancient King? But how did they know that the mental auras of these King-Gods raged just like the now-visible aura of the Sun? Physicists who study the Sun, do not study paranormal phenomenon like human auras. Nor have they studied the living auras of Kings who died hundreds and thousands of years ago. How can this be explained?... Where are the connections? Recently: Science has discovered that the Sun oscillates and rings like a bell. How is it that our human auras vibrate and oscillate; just like the Aura of the Sun? Is this why we humans began making bells? History and Science are full of undiscovered connections. That is... if you study both of them, and connect the facts which are actually relevant to each other. Instead of studying only one discipline; and remain specialized, ignorant and blind.

Take Egypt 7,000 years ago, in its heyday: the greediest, most covetous Kingdom of all. The most cunning and sneaky Culture ever to exist during that time. And the lowly Semites, sucking up that Egyptian culture from their masters... for 700 years? And you wonder why the Jewish Semites became what they became? Mimicking their hated masters: by out-sinching, out-witting, and out-maneuvering them, and outshining them in cunning and corruption: just as a survival tactic: just in order to survive. Inventing a God that was even more vindictive than the Egyptian Sun god. Inventing mythical Jewish heroes who were even wiser than the Pharaoh. It is all a story of one-upmanship: trying to slyly culturally brainwash and prove that they were better than their masters. That is the story of every oppressed lower class throughout history: finding ways to survive by their wits, under a hated master. It is nothing new. And it is still going on today. Nothing has changed. The lower classes are still stealing every high-class trick and attitude and manner and tactic they can steal from the examples of the rich; to become upwardly mobile and rich themselves.

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1300

The written history of humans... and every fucking human conscious interpretation thereof... up until the present day. Has all been a pack of lies trying to cover up nasty, inconvenient, unpleasant truths.

Including the modern-day explanation that humans began carving trading-millions of beads 40,000 years ago... As a monetary system... When they had nothing to trade.

Thousands-millions, billions of trading beads? Where the hell were the goods they traded for? If these trading beads survived: why haven't the billions of tons of trade goods they traded for; survived? Because they never had any trade goods. They never traded anything.

Because they only had a simple tool kit. A hunter-gatherer society with almost nothing to damn-well trade with? Because they did not make anything in the first place, in enough quantities, that they could trade with. HUH? Cro-Magnons 40,000 years ago never carved beads for trading. These beads: are deaths heads.

Mass-produced deaths heads dated 43,000 years old: have been found in caves in Turkey. Does this mean that Humans lived in caves and made beads after they came out of Africa into the Mid East, or did were they already living like this, before they left Africa? There is not enough data to determine what actually happened that far back.

The only remaining anthropological evidence from sites in Europe shows that Neanderthals of Europe lived as self-sufficient tribes. In separate isolated territories. Without any contact with each other. There is no evidence of them networking with other tribes of their own subspecies.

However: whatever evidence that has survived after 40,000 years: does not necessarily mean it accurately reflects the truth about how Neanderthals actually lived.

On the other hand: the Cro-Magnons, Our direct genetic descendants who lived in the same areas and at the same time as the Neanderthals: traded with each other, did network with each other. They acted cooperatively. Their brains were bigger. Their tools were more sophisticated.

When these two ape subspecies met: what scenarios were possible? The Neanderthals were more muscled, they were at least 50lbs heavier, with bigger, more massive bones. They were stronger than the Cro-Magnons: they could throw a spear farther. But the slimmer Cro-Magnons could run away faster. So to counter-act the greater throwing strength of the Neanderthals: They made slimmer spears. What is dominance in all sports based upon today? A combination: of brute strength, size and speed. Plus a special knack with tools and hand-eye coordination. This was the last lesson humans ever learned as a species. Use tools better; and you will not go extinct. You will survive and be dominant.

1300

But even this was not enough of an advantage for the Cro-Magnons, our ancestors. So they invented the Atlatl; a spear-thrower that doubled their throwing distance. But even that was not enough. They made re-usable spears; with tips that stayed inside the body of their victim, so the body of the spear fell out... to be re-used... as a re-usable body... while the head... the killing part... detached itself from the body. So the connection between the body and the head became separated...so the brain of these humans could invent more ways of killing while the body was detached from it's own killing head... so no more instinctive wisdom from the body told the head what to do. The head told the body what to do and used the body only as a tool for its intention of killing-purpose. Everything scientists have found so far; can be explained if you look for relevant connections that make sense.

In this case: it was a case of brains over brawn. The Cro-Magnons carried more than one spear. The Neanderthal carried only one, or no spears at all... Why? Because they were more intelligent than humans. They did not waste their energy carrying spears around all the time. They only made spears if they needed them, when they needed them. They were more practical. They did not carry spears around all the damn day for nothing. Unless they were hunting. While the Cro-Magnons carried spears with them whether they were hunting or not.

And even if a Cro-Magnon met a Neanderthal who was hunting and carrying a single spear... All he had to do; was to anger the Neanderthal enough to throw his spear, by throwing one of theirs first. How hard is it to avoid a single thrown spear at long range? Not very hard...

Once the Neanderthal has thrown his only spear? Ulp... Then the Cro-Magnon could come closer to throw his other spears ... Then he could throw his spear at almost point-blank range. How hard is it to avoid a spear thrown from close range? Almost impossible. If the Neanderthal attacks with a hand weapon: the Cro-Magnon is faster: he can run away.

What is the most successful tactic in all War? Throwing something, and then running away; so you won't be killed. Fighter planes are the latest technological duplication of this cowardly tactic called: hit'n run. Where do you think the idea of baseball came from? Running after you hit a ball, or someone's hard skull with a wooden bat... Running home into a dugout cave. Where your tribe will protect you from the other tribe coming after you for killing one of their members.

All modern humans had to do; was carry more spears than the Neanderthals. All they had to do was carry a spear around all the time: and every time they met a Neanderthal without a spear: kill him. Kill him easily, safely, secretly. Simply because Neanderthals were not obsessive about killing humans every chance they got. A Neanderthal could make a new spear in 15 minutes... but they did not stockpile them in advance. Modern humans did. 15 minutes is plenty of time for a human carrying more than one spear; to kill a Neanderthal with only one spear, or to kill a spearless Neanderthal; before he can make another spear.

Neanderthal awareness was not as reflective as Cro-Magnon awareness. Their time-awareness was not as developed as Modern Humans. They did not think ahead, and plan ahead as far as Modern Humans did. Why was Modern human time awareness more advanced? Because the Neanderthals were more useful to their ecosystem. They were a specialized breed of walking apes used by Nature to come up out of Africa as the ice sheets melted... and kill off all the huge, obsolete Ice Age mammals of the North, then disappear themselves also... and then go almost extinct. Until another Ice Age melted away: and another temporary race of mammal killers came out of Africa, or up from Southern Asia and Europe to get rid of the huge mammals left over from the Glaciers.

Cro-Magnons had no useful role to play in the eco-systems they inhabited. They had too much time on their hands. They were too good with their hands. They became too reflective. They became too aware of growing old and dying. Because they were not dying at the peak of their prime. They were living longer, and withering slowly, and ... living longer than was good for them, or for the ecosystems they lived in. Long enough for old, withered males to outsmart the strongest healthiest males. Long enough for them to develop cunning long-range plans due to their advanced awareness of Time. Long enough to become better killers than Neanderthals.

All the Cro-Magnons had to do; was get more than one band of them together; and outnumber one isolated Neanderthal tribe. Just surround it, and wipe them out. Simply because the Neanderthals did not think of themselves as a single race, or a single class of humans. They thought of themselves tribally. They never thought of going to some other Neanderthal tribe for help, or joining with other Neanderthals an enemy who was not Neanderthal.

This was the exact, same reason America and Africa was colonized so easily by Europeans. Because the original aboriginal humans have never evolved past a collective social consciousness larger than their own tribe. European humans have kept the advantage of their greater, collective social awareness to this day. That is why today; modern civilization is dominated by Western culture, and not Eastern culture,... or African, or American Indian culture.

How many different ways do you want to analyze this?

Why do you think these first humans spat upon their hands, and upon the Earth? A revulsion of their own hands? A revulsion of the Earth in their mouths? A despicable show of spitting on the deepest parts of the Earth they could find? Making that art-process as distasteful to themselves as possible. Just so they could create abstract images of the animals they had killed and eventually hunted into extinction? The subconscious guilt of these extinctions? Keeping themselves in the dark as much as possible? The guilt of killing animals? The worshipping of the animals they killed? The glorifying of what? The hunt? The killing? The animal? Or the dead animal itself? Or death itself? Or the worship of their own killing power? Or simply trying to bury their crimes. Trying to bury their guilt. Like they tried to bury the bodies of the dead Neanderthals and humans they had killed... as deep as possible under the Earth. The point is: burial itself, is a physical confession of guilt.

All burials are cover-ups.
All burials are confessions of guilt.

There is no reason to bury anything if you have nothing to hide. If you are not ashamed of anything: you have nothing to hide and no reason to bury anything.

And... what has happened since? Humans have tried to hide the fact that all burial comes from guilt and shame by spouting the obscene lie that burial of the dead is supposed to be public evidence of human love. When it was simply the fact that the dead bodies of human killer-animals stink and rot worse than any other dead animal body on Earth. No other animal's dead body stinks and rots as badly, and as horribly as dead human bodies do...

No other living animal bodies are as rotten as the living animal bodies of humans. That is a scientific fucking fact: whether you like it or not. As long as humans stayed on the move: they did not have to deal with this curse of their own stink. They could leave their stinking dead behind them. But once they stopped moving: their own stinking rot caught up with them. Their own accumulating guilt, shame and rot caught up with them. And they had to deal with it. They began burning their ancestors instead of burying them.

What happened then? They started replacing spitting on the cave walls with drawing lines in charcoal. Using a wooden stick that was burned at one end. Using black as the only color. The color of death; outlining the images of animals they had hunted and killed. Using the dead burnt carbon, holding a burnt stick in their hands. To insulate themselves from the terrible insult of desecrating the sacred Earth they lived on. Using the black carbon of burnt-killed-dead trees, to draw an abstract image of dead animals.

Has Science found one sane reason; why humans should go into the deepest caves on Earth, to create the first secret, hidden abstract images? Why didn't they create these images out in the open? What was wrong with creating such images on rocks in the fresh air and sunlight; where they could see what they were doing? And have other people admire it, and see it also? Why this need for secrecy? Does this give you a hint of the depth of subconscious guilt and shame they felt? So they had to crawl into the deepest subterranean caverns they could find? That they had to keep this new ritual a deep, dark secret? Just as their own subconscious was keeping these horrible truths a deep, dark secret from their own conscious minds? What does the term: sub mean? It means subterranean... under, lower. They were submitting to the Earth. They were being reflectively submissive for a reason. They were submissively begging the Earth to forgive them for what they were doing to it by going down into her subterranean depths and submissively begging her forgiveness. Only they could not admit this to themselves. They did not realize what they were doing consciously. Instead: they did it subconsciously. They were not consciously aware that they were doing it.

Do you think there could have been a better way to make these images on the walls of caves other than spitting? What does the act of spitting on something mean to a man or a woman? If someone spits on you... what are they trying to tell you?

It took forty thousand years for this glorified cave-spitting, or death-spitting; to re-surface again, before humans created what we now call; the death-art, or Funerary Art of Egypt 7,000 years ago. In Ancient Egypt; humans made painted images on the walls of tombs for the dead to look at. Thousands of years before the Persians and before the Greeks: only the dead were allowed to look at abstract images. Painted images were not for the living. Abstract painted images were used almost exclusively as funerary art. Art exclusively for dead rulers, exclusively for the dead God-Kings. Because they would have nothing else to look at. They were supposed to be comforted by images of things they had done and seen while alive.

Why do you think the Egyptian Semite slaves had such a superstitious fear of graven images that they forbade themselves the making of any abstract images whatsoever? Abstract images were only meant to be seen by a God. It was meant to be seen only by the dead. Ancient Egyptian Art was meant to be seen only by dead people. Walls were painted only inside tombs, and then sealed up forever with the dead in them. Never to be seen by living people again. Does that fact give you a hint of how sick and how evil this kind of abstraction is? Five thousand years later... human souls became dead enough to actually enjoy looking at this dead abstract art, this death-art while still living.

Where did Egyptian Death-art come from? Where did the invention of drawing abstract images come from? It came from people trying to describe raiders and killers. Drawing faces in the sand and earth and gravel; trying to describe their attackers. The revenge seekers wanted to know what they looked like. So if they ever saw them again: they could recognize them and kill them on sight.

How old are the Myths of the Bible? The first evil in the Bible came from a snake. Chimpanzees are more terrified of snakes than they are of lions. They have a deathly terror of them. The smallest harmless non-poisonous grass snake can send a chimp in paroxysms of screaming fear.

What was the biblical fruit that Adam was given by Eve to eat? The fruit of knowledge... What was the actual fruit he ate? It was not an apple. It was a Pomegranate. A fruit whose seeds are bitter, and, red, and bloody, and segmented...

What is knowledge? Knowledge is a bitter fruit. It is a bunch of useless segmented facts that are spat out. It is a bloody seed... used to kill, and destroy living things. The juice of the Pomegranate is the color of blood. The Pomegranate is a fruit that makes you spit out all of its useless seeds, after sucking all of the bitter juices from them. You spit the seeds out upon the Earth. The act of eating a Pomegranate; forces you to continually spit on the Earth; until you have spat out all the bitter seeds, after sucking all the blood out of them.

What does a ripe Pomegranate look like? It does not look ripe or healthy at all. It does not glow and shine with abundant health. It is an ugly fruit... misshapen, not smooth. It looks old, worn, shriveled, with a grayish hue of approaching death. Its rind is a tough, leathery inedible skin that is streaked with signs of aging, of death. The juice is the color of blood, and very bitter. It puckers your mouth so dry, that you end up thirstier after you eat it instead of being less thirsty.

Why did the English Bible use the word 'apple' to describe the first fruit ever eaten by a man? 'Apple' in French is 'Pomme'. Potato in French is; 'Pomme de Terre', or: 'Apple of the Earth'. Pomegranates were 'apples of granite'. Apples of Stone. Apples of Death. Because of their grey skin: that was so leathery; it seemed the fruit was made of stone. 'Pommes de Granite' became 'Pomegranate' in English. The Fruit of Knowledge was the Apple of Death.

The human subconscious is creative. The human subconscious reveals truth in many symbolic ways. Why was Knowledge; the fruit of Death, the original evil in the Jewish Bible? Using knowledge to kill with. The knowledge of how to use tools: to kill living things with. The first fruit that humans found coming out of Africa: was the apple of death, the apple of granite: the pomegranate. It made them spit out bitter tasting blood. Bloody segments. Spitting out bloody decapitated heads.... By the hundreds... as they carved the same shape of a pomegranate's seedling later... to represent the decapitated heads they would kill... later. The fruit of Knowledge, shame and guilt: that came to represent the entire accumulated guilt of humans using tools to kill, killing their fellow apes, killing Neanderthals...

After sucking the bitter juice from the Pomegranate... so their mouths shriveled. After coming out of Africa: they spat out the bitterness of the Pomegranate: and traveled all the way to Australia. Where later...they spat out the bitter blackness of their own hate... in secret, in caves... in the middle of the Australian Continent. Why do these facts fit together so poetically? Truth is all around you. You can find truth everywhere. That is... if you dig for it. And look for it. Regardless of how inconvenient or uncomfortable it may be.

The shape of a Pomegranate seed is the exact shape and size of a corn seed. They are identical in shape. They both are also identical in shape to all the carved decapitated heads called beads that stone-age humans carved by the millions for 30,000 years.

What was the sin of Adam; eating an apple? It was the sin of destroying a living Globe.

The sin of Adam eating an apple is old. It is the sin of eating. How old is the sin of eating? A Billion years old. We come from a species of lemurs. The Bible tells that story of the first of our species being corrupted by what trees offered. The cultural subconscious goes back a billion years to when that evil was first created: when trees first created edible fruits so they could spread their seeds; using mammals as pawns and dupes to spread their seed. The tree of knowledge was the first evil. Eating fruit from a tree gave: was the first root-evil of our root-species. And the first shame: when the first defecation happened. Suddenly they were ashamed of their bodies and had to cover themselves. Growing fur on their bodies. Trees gave us knowledge. Trees gave us perspective and the idea of upward mobility. Trees gave us greed. Accumulating as much fruit as we could... eating as many apples as we could.

Trees were cunning: they had not done their job of eating the earth: so they passed on the task to humans.

‘Here... here is a round globe... eat all of it...’

Hint-hint...

‘PSST: don’t eat us: eat the earth. Here is the entire Earth in microcosm. See? You can do it... it’s easy... We did not do it. We are passing onto you our sin.’

Trees cunningly tempted the first tree dwelling mammals to eat sweetness. And in so doing: corrupted them. Turning them into greedy, selfish, evil animals. Who developed hands to grasp fruit all the better with. The first tree of knowledge was the tree that taught us Greed. The first humans used hands to create the first abstract shapes of hands in dark caves. Blackening their own hands. Spitting on their own hands.

The subconscious is not abstract. It is direct. It is a billion years old.

Do you think the original acts of cave-spitting by our ancestors signified anything? Do you think the act of spitting on the walls of caves might be connected to the spitting you must do; in order to eat from a fruit of knowledge, or a pomegranate? Are these facts symbolically connected? Are these facts trying to tell us something we would rather not hear or see? Where does the word spite come from? From envying something. From envying the Earth, and all living things that have useful meaningful lives. The feeling of spite... of being thrown out of a Natural order that did not want them or need them: was projected back at the Earth. It was reflected back at the Earth. Only the sin they were committing was so monstrous, so evil, so horrible... they had to hide their hate and spite, and spitting in the deepest, blackest holes they could find. Spitting is an act of hate. Today’s anthropologists try to pretend that these original spitters were not sitting in the dark spitting upon their hands... spitting upon the very tools that had gotten them to a point where they actually hated their own hands, where they hated everything around them.

The idea that they came down with torches. Try keeping any burning flame or candle lit in these drafty cave for the hours it takes to get down as far as these earliest hand-spitting are located at. Try keeping any burning flame lit, while they created these images on these walls... while they spat on their own hands and spat into the red ochre clay so they could use it with their hands, so their hands became reddened with the blood of the earth and spit of their own bodies. Look at how badly they are drawn: in haste before the light is extinguished. If they had used torches to light the caves for any extended amount of time there would be evidence of the torches, they would have filled-up those caves with so much burnt-carbon, that the walls would be permanently blackened. You would have so much burnt wood, and carbon on the ground that it would be still there today to attest to how long it took those first spitters to create these images. Where is all that evidence of burning? There is none.

The only evidence that they burned something is the black charcoal used in some caves to spit on the walls. Otherwise, a few broken scraps of reed, which could have come much later, is the only evidence that these first cave dwellers had any light. But how were the images made so life-like? The large images were done mostly in pure blackness. Formed in memory of loved animals. Those images had some light when they were made. But very little of it. The drawings are elongated, grotesquely out-of-proportion. Only small areas are done in proportion where they could see a few feet. The earliest abstractions were hand-outlines; found all over the World on different continents. Many of them pre-date abstract images by thousands of years.

Anthropologists actually believe that all of this was done with oil lamps, or reeds soaked in oil. This is absurd. Oil lamps were invented much later. And there are no remains of burnt reeds in any of their subterranean finds. Why were these hand-spit outlines made? Spontaneously? Why were they made by different peoples, different tribes all over the World at different times? Was this the great, heralded, Brain's Big Bang? The sudden realization around the world in different cultures that they could sneak down into dark caves and spit on their hands. Huh? Can you see how utterly thin, and venal these rationalizations and explanations suddenly become; when you look at them with a critical awareness?

Ask any artist to create an abstract image by spitting on something. What is the message that artist will leave? They will find themselves regurgitating and spitting hate into their images. Is that what we should worship today? The invention of abstract hate? The invention of abstraction? Or the invention of hate? Or both? How many ways can you analyze this and avoid coming up with the actual truth? They were accusing themselves. They were accusing their own hands. They were trying to absolve themselves from being killers. Instead of blaming themselves: they blamed their own hands. They invented self-hatred. As a way to keep on killing. They obsessed on the dead spirits of the killed animals... as a way of avoiding the horror of realizing that they were killing living animals.

Is there anyone who has killed something with their own bare hands, who do not hate himself? Have you ever seen the way convicted killers in prison look at their own hands? How obvious can it be.

We have abstracted our own hate, our own scorn, our own disrespect, our own revulsion, our own disgust, and our own fear: in so many ways; it would take ten thousand books to show how we abstractively express our revulsion... our hate, and on how many abstract levels, in how many abstract ways we do it by distancing ourselves from all directness and direct truth and direct experience.. We have abstracted our own souls. We have abstracted our awe, our wonder, our love of beauty also... The actual truth is buried under 50,000 years of disassociated, distanced, deflections and lies and denial and ignoring.

What is abstraction? It is a distancing. We distance our awareness away from actuality, by using abstractions. We separate ourselves from actuality, by using abstraction. We detach ourselves from Nature and the world around us by using abstractions. As walkers: we could leave the awareness of everything we did behind us by always walking forward and never looking back. When we began squatting in one place: that awareness caught up to us. We were forced to see and smell what we had once distanced ourselves from by walking and never looking back.

The Human Brain's 'Big Bang', was a basic change of human awareness. A basic change from looking forward: to looking back. We looked back... and saw what we had done. Our awareness changed. It became a realization; filled with bitter guilt and bitter shame, and bitter revulsion... in dark, hidden, secret places.

What has human awareness been since that time, but a backward awareness that never looks back at what we actually did...? This explains why and how the worship of the past happened. This explains how and why burying our dead happened, and how and why we began worshipping them. By a 180 degree shift in the direction of the focus of our awareness, everything changed. We changed beyond recognition. We changed how we lived beyond recognition. We created abstraction. We created culture. We created civilization.

The creation of human culture 30,000 to 60,000 years ago was the complete opposite of a big bang. The invention of human culture did not explode human awareness. It did not expand human culture. It did the opposite. It stuck its awareness into a hole. And covered that awareness up. It hid its awareness in holes, in caves.

What is a cave? It is the outer dead casing of the human skull: keeping in, and trapping inside it all radiating outer awareness. It is a dead insulation.

Humans began going into caves 30-60,000 years ago because they were trying to insulate themselves from all outer awareness of the world around them. They went into caves and holes to hide from Nature. They went into caves and lived there to hide from what they had done outside the caves. They went down into subterranean caves and smeared their crimes and guilt onto cave walls. They confessed their guilt and sin underground in secrecy, in darkness.

They were running away from all the truths of Nature. They were putting stone skulls over their heads and over themselves. They used these caves as helmets: to keep from being too aware.

The creation of human culture was a creation of imploding psychosis. They were going insane with the horrible realization of what they were doing outside in the open fresh air. They couldn't live with what they had done. They could not live with all the animals around them hating and fearing them. They could not stand being ostracized by Nature. So they ostracized Nature rather than letting Nature ostracize them.

Humans still do this. The second any human thinks they might be rejected... they reject the rejecter. It is a race to see who rejects who first. The first one wins. They become the rejecter: not the rejected. They become superior to the rejected one. They look down upon the rejected one instead of being humiliated and looked down upon by the other. Because they could not face the truth: humans did what was done to them.

It would take fifty million books to document in how many ways, since then: we humans have deflected away all the painful truths we do not want to feel or face... and how we have avoided and turned them into whitewashed abstract images, and whitewashed lies and whitewashed distortions. Try telling this to an anthropologist: and watch them attack you for trying to destroying the sacredness of their own precious, sanctified profession... and to hell with actual, proven scientific facts and truths. The truths of the human past are finally surfacing today. They are all around you. But only as segments, as meaningless unconnected facts. Once you connect these facts; you will have an general outline of what happened. And why, and how it happened. Once you do that: you will lose respect for all authority, all scientists and all experts. Once you develop your own critical awareness: you will become able to understand yourself better.

When did human killers use camouflage on their bodies and faces to hide better in the tall grasses of the Serengeti? African tribes today, still sport fake lion-maned headdresses around their black faces: so they will not stand out when creeping up on grazing animals. They still have spots painted on them and white lines mimicking the white lines of grazing antelope. When did this become an abstract art form? When did they mark themselves with black instead of white? When they discovered fire. When they discovered charcoal. And when did our ancestors begin tattooing their skin with permanent black marks of death; that they had to carry for the rest of their killing lives? When their subconscious guilt became indelible. When it could not be whitewashed, or rubbed off any longer. Or when they became Northern hunters with paler skins? Did they tattoo themselves with black tattoos on their blackened skins; because the legacy of their killing had sunk so deep into their souls and bodies that they sank the indelible blackness of Death into their skin on purpose as a sign of subconscious guilt? Or as conscious markings of power and prestige? No matter how you analyze it, or look at it: the general truth is obvious. Tribes that do not kill, tribes that do not have a war cult of killing do not mark themselves permanently with black marks of death.

When did this abstract death-art become so exclusive; it was only supposed to be enjoyed by the best killers hidden deep in secret caves? When did it become a Funerary art-form: only to be enjoyed by the richest most powerful Egyptian elite... and only after they were dead? Clues to the earliest origins of human abstraction have been uncovered all over the Earth. No one has seen fit to connect them. Why? We have not changed genetically in the last 100,000 years. Take the last 10,000 years of historical evidence about how we live today, and project it back 30-43,000 years. How do you want to interpret the existing evidence? What conclusions do you make from it? Is this book a convenient rationalization? Or is it an unpleasantly connective, unpleasantly logical, unpleasantly truthful evaluation? You be the judge. Do your own research. See what conclusion you come to.

What Anthropologists will not tell you is that many human bands and tribes came out of Africa at different times... And that they had distinctly different cultures, and different ways of living.

First there were the Continental Walkers... then there were the Territorial Walkers: who performed the same circular route the Continental Walkers did: except on a smaller scale... and then there were the Squatters. Each had completely different ways of living. Most of the artifacts found, come from the squatters. Because they were the only ones that stayed in any area for a protracted period of time. That is why all ancient artifacts need to be reclassified. Different tools came from these different people. That is why the Neanderthals first met the Continental walkers, then the Territorial Nomads, and then the Squatters. Each with completely different results. The first wave of Walkers were too busy moving, to extinguish them completely. The second wave of Nomads did it in their own limited areas. The third wave of Squatters actually co-existed with the Neanderthals in their respective areas. for thousands of years. These Cro-Magnon Squatters were the stupidest, and laziest of them all: the only surviving evidence is about them. The others waves of walking apes left no evidence behind. As far as Science is concerned: no other walking apes existed except the ones that left behind evidence of their existence.

Which is why it is stupid to demand scientific proof and data before you believe anything. There is no data. There is no evidence. Go back to a forest after 100 year... you will not recognize it. Go back a thousand years later; it will be gone.

Science has sold the lie; that the history of the earth is buried and can be found, and understood. That is a complete lie. Only one zillionth of a billionth of the past still survives. Scientists have no perspective whatsoever on the information they uncover... the. Only the least incriminating evidence survives. One zillionth of a billionth of the past that still survives. This is one obvious reason why scientific evidence on the extinction of the Neanderthals is so confusing.

So far the prehistoric evidence of Modern Man is a one-sided lie. A twisted, distorted pack of lies and rationalizations garnered only from a few select, pre-historic cultures. Leaving more than half the full story completely untold. Which wave of walking apes developed these more sophisticated tools: the Walkers or the Nomads, or the Squatters? Or all three? Or did one invent better tools, and the other cultures steal it from them? Was there any trade at all between the two cultures? Or was there only robbing going on? If so: then that could explain how the stupid, lazy squatters suddenly possessed slim, light, beautiful, efficient killing tools designed for active, traveling hunters who were constantly on the run. Who covered huge distances with ease. This is why all of the anthropological evidence found so far, is so confusing. Because these idiots called scientists have completely misinterpreted the evidence... even though the obvious truths have been staring them in the face.

Why do you think civilization began so late... even though humans had the technology to do it thousands of years earlier. Because the basic human culture of Walkers and Nomads despised and hated the other basic human culture, the Squatters. And the Squatters feared, and lived in terror of the Walkers and the Nomads. At first; the Walkers killed the Squatters every chance they got... But... when the Walkers discovered an even more dangerous enemy: the Neanderthals, they made temporary alliances with the Squatters. But afterwards... they killed the Squatters also. Why do you think Europe remained relatively unpopulated and empty for thousands of years even after the Neanderthals were exterminated? Where do you think human betrayal came from?

Where do you think the Robber Baron tradition of holing up in protected places that could be easily defended came from in Europe? From the squatters holing up on high, defensible hills: to keep from being killed by the Walkers. That is where the original meaning comes from. A keep was a place where you could keep from being killed. Where you could keep yourself safe. What keeps you, makes you feel safe. As long as you are kept: you are safe. As long as you are a kept slave: you are safe. As long as someone keeps you: you are safe: you are not thrown away. We keep ourselves safe selfishly by throwing away everything else.

Why do you think all of the first civilizations emerged from marshlands, and wetlands? Because those were the few areas where human squatters could hide, and still live, without being killed by the traveling Walkers; who never bothered to go into these mud-reed deltas. Until their squatting accumulated so big a population: the Walkers could not easily attack and kill them. Even when they tried: most of the Squatters could run and hide in the reeds and water, and not be tracked down or found...

Because water washes away the scent of fear.... One of the earliest forms of whitewashing. It also washed away the feces that piled up around their settled camps. On dry land: the Squatters were dead men... the Walkers could smell them from a mile away. They stood no chance against the walkers who were not fat, and lazy. But still they did not learn. Because when the settled cave dwellers came out of these swamps, and did not have any water to wash away their feces: they went back to piling it up around them.

What is the earmark of the human brain's Big Bang?... Burial sites. The great 'bang' that created civilization was the evolution of human fear, into the terror of dying, of being killed. It was the birth of human cowardice. Or rather: human cowardice and fear created civilization. Or rather... laziness, fatness, and earlier human corruption; created a higher condition of reflective fear... which was suppressed, deflected and abstracted into lying false images and Myths, and lies by one half of the human race... which then corrupted the other half also. First: the killers killed the liars. Then the liars slowly gained dominance, and killed the killers. Until the basic civilization corrupted humans to become both liars and killers.

The tall Walkers had their own corruptions. However... the corruptions of the squatters were far worse. There is not enough remaining evidence of the Walkers to detail their cultures; in fact it is almost non-existent. But much can be logically deduced.

The brain of a human child only understands deception after it is 5 years old. The window for learning language easily; closes after seven years. The walkers carried their children for 5 years before they were allowed to walk on their own... and think on their own. This guaranteed that every child in their culture was completely brainwashed before they became independent enough to walk on their own. Modern nomads still commit this torture on their children today. They strap them tightly onto the backs of their women, so the child cannot move all day. Using their women as beasts of burden, who are beaten and brutalized. Thus; further traumatizing the children strapped to the backs of the beaten women. So the child never sees what is ahead: but only what is behind... only the past. Another very cruel and devilish way of brainwashing humans into worshipping the past, and their male ancestors as Gods.

Where did Neanderthals live?
All over Asia and Europe.
For how long?

The latest findings indicate that they lived there for more than 200,000 years. They lived there for at least 100,000 years before our ancestors ever came out of Africa.

Why did our ancestors traveling out of Africa: end up walking around the Southern edges of Asia, and end up in Australia?

Duh.

An entire continent already pre-inhabited by tool-using apes... who were stronger, bigger, heavier, and had bigger brains? And outnumbered us? And had already been living there for over a100,000 years!?

Duh.

Try walking into a continent that is already populated by walking apes like you... that is already populated by sadistic monsters, huge savage killing raping brutes. Try walking into their territories... and see how far you get. See how long you last. See what happens to you. Try invading and colonizing a continent that was already invaded and colonized by apes who were bigger and stronger than you, and 1,000 times more numerous than you...

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1311

And you wonder where the instinct for humans to overpopulate our enemies as a form of population warfare comes from?

Duh.

How many tribes of us Modern Humans went into Asia... and were massacred by Neanderthals, before we learned to skirt around the coast and avoid them... and were ultimately chased out of Asia completely, ending up in Australia, eh? This is exactly what happened. Genetic evidence proves it.. How many survivors of these massacres managed to escape and bring back the tale of huge, powerful, taller, ugly, almost-human brutes that killed anyone who dared to come out of Africa into Asia, eh? Where do you think the bogeyman came from? From Neanderthals who lived in bogs. Do you think this just might be a damn good reason why we killed them in the first place, eh? After how many thousands of years of them killing US?... EH? Do you think they were innocent and blameless, eh? If Neanderthals had welcomed modern humans into Asia... there would have been no mass extinctions. We would not have killed them off. If Neanderthals had been non-violent and peaceful: We would still be living with them today.

For 200,000 Thousand years: Neanderthals live in Asia and Europe. Slowly being exterminated by us: in their last 30-60 thousand years of dwindling existence. What do you think they did to any modern human they found: when they were the dominant humanoid race in Asia for at least 120,000 years, EH? Do you think a blood feud that was already 120,000 years OLD... just might be a good enough reason why we killed them all off, eh? Do you think that racial-cultural hatred just might be old enough for us to commit genocide upon another tribe of fellow humans: eh?

For 12,000 years now... we humans have been practicing the systematic genocide of killing each other; over a hell of a lot less cultural and genetic differences than the cultural-genetic differences that existed between Modern Humans and Neanderthals.

Apply the principles of Realpolitik to Archeology. And you will have Real Archeology: based upon practical political dynamics that explain our past a thousand times better than the fairytale bullshit explanations these scientific imbeciles come up with. Put a scientist into a political fight and see how they last. Put a bunch of scientists on a desert island against ANY other group of humans and see how fast they go extinct. We did not survive because we were more scientific. We survived because we were better killers.

The two modern human cultures of The Walkers and The Squatters: were already created in Africa. When they came out of Africa to find all of Asia and Europe already inhabited by Neanderthals, when they met Neanderthals: they did only two things.

They either moved. Or hid.

They had to. They had no choice. Faced by two continents of Neanderthals outnumbering them a million-to-one. They either hid from the Neanderthals. To escape being killed. Or they kept on going. They moved. To get out of their territory. To escape being killed.

These were the two only possible alternatives.

These were the two only possible choices.

These two choices determined their later roots. Their later culture. It turned them from Walkers and

1311

The Path of Splitness
Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1312

Squatters... into Movers, and Hiders....

They became two distinct cultures. With two distinct survival tactics that helped them escape extinction.

The Walkers and the Squatters became:

The Movers. and
The Hiders

After Neanderthals were killed off... they reverted back to their older African cultural roots.... And became Walkers and Squatters... again.

After they no longer had a common mortal enemy: they reverted back to their older cultural-racist-ethnic hatreds. What determined how each band of modern humans reacted when they suddenly came face-to-face with a band of Neanderthals that had been living there already for God knows how long. Was completely different from what determined how each band of modern humans reacted when they suddenly came face-to-face with each other. But the basic factors were the same

The degree of Their Courage.
The degree of Their Honesty.
The degree of Their Love.
The degree of Their Sense of Wonder.

The bands that were braver, and more honest: did not feel any urge to hide. If they could not get along with the Neanderthals. They merely moved.

The Bands that were more cowardly and dishonest: felt the urge to hide. If they could not get along with the Neanderthals: they hid from them.

That is one basic reason why the Movers despised the Hiders so much. They despised their cowardice. They despised their dishonesty.

The Hiders when caught eventually showed their true colors. They eventually revealed what kind of humans they were. So did the Movers.

That is why The Hiders grew to fear The Movers. That is why The Movers grew to hate and despise The Hiders.

For 100,000 years: this fear-hate relationship. Has defined the relationship between all human cultures. Since then: all Modern Human Nomadic Moving cultures have hated and despised all Modern Human Squatting Hiding cultures.

The two different ways we first reacted to Neanderthals: explains everything that happened after that. These two different reactionary dynamics; causally explain 75-1000,000 years of Human History. We are what we are today; is because of how our Ancestors reacted to meeting Neanderthals. And how we interacted with each other in Africa as feuding tribes before we came out.

1312

The Path of Splitness
Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1313

We are a reactive species. We are not a pro-active species. Modern Human culture became two kinds of reactions. Two different kinds of reactive survival tactics. These two basic reactive tactics defined and determined what we did and who we became. Modern industrialized capitalist society has become a mechanical amalgam of movers and hiders. We use cars to move in, and houses to hide in. How long did it take for our ancestors to kill off all the Neanderthals in Asia?

At least 40,000 years.

Where did humans migrate out-of?

From the center of Asia: 40,000 to 60,000 years ago.

And you wonder where our instinct to push other humans out of where they are living: and replace them with your own kind comes from? Duh.

Who were the last human colonizers of the world to come out of the center of Asia? Europeans. The last humans that colonized, supplanted, replaced and destroyed the last existing Neanderthals in Europe.

How long did it take for our ancestors to kill off all the last Neanderthals when they finally arrived in Europe 40,000 to 60,000 years ago?

5,000 to 20,000 years.

Slowly; cunningly: pretending not to notice they were doing it.

This explains why the instinct to colonize the world comes from Europeans; and not other races. Modern Europeans used the same tactics and strategies to destroy their enemies as their Cro-Magnon ancestors did. By colonizing them gradually and sneakily and cunningly. Establishing small outposts in enemy territory. Then using the dynamic of overpopulation to drive the enemy race out by outnumbering them.

These are the same tactics and strategies that ants use to kill other ants. We learned colonization from the ants millions of years ago.

Why is the word spelt two ways? Neandertal, and Neanderthal?

Hal! Hail! Hail fellow well-met!

Neander: meandering: coming nearer... nearer. Meandering Tall people coming nearer. The nearer they come: the more the hackles of modern humans rise..

Tall! Too Tall! Tall meandering people coming nearer; as they realize that these people are bigger than they are. A People who do not understand their hails, a people who do speak their language, a people who not act like modern humans:. As feelings of welcome... turn into feelings of fear.

How many ways do you want to analyze this word?

What does the word enemy mean?

E! Neanderthal! My Enemy meandering, murdering around MY Territory? Tall walkers?... Kill Them! Tal, it! Kal, it!... Ill!... Kill! Kill tall walkers... enemies meandering around my territory!

1313

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1314

Strange people... meandering nearer... nearer... knees. Until our ancestors saw by the way they walked that they were another subspecies... their knees were bowed, they walked differently... they were taller... they were bigger, as they came nearer...nearer...

‘Knees. Tall. Knees and tall. It’s a Neandertal. They are ALL tall. They are Neanderthals.’

Modern humans experienced a reflective shock when they saw Neanderthals. They saw their own killing hate and viciousness; reflected back at them. They saw themselves. They were looking into the eyes of a mirror that told them the truth about what they actually were. And they could not stomach, or digest, or endure this.

You try to kill what you hate in yourself. Not what you love in yourself. By projecting your self-hate out: onto others. Avoiding Killing what you hate in yourself by killing outside of yourself. Where does the instinct for mass Genocide come from? Slaughtering apes with a slightly different look to them, with a slightly different culture.

Duh.

Only. Er, um. We do not have enough physical evidence to actually prove this actually happened. We do not have the smoking gun. We were not there to see it. There is no actual, incontrovertible, physical evidence left. There is no er, scientific proof. There is no concrete evidence. It is all gone.

And you wonder why humans want to bury their own past? Why we have been obsessively burying our own past for at least 12,000 years?

Duh.

Why did both Neanderthals and humans go North out of Africa? After millions of years living in Africa and killing each other?

Well... for one: for six months each year. Their shit didn’t rot, and stink... It froze. Movers couldn’t smell the shit of Hiders. Hiders found animals that were easier to kill.

How does the human subconscious reveal the truth about our past?

In literal non-symbolic ways; that civilized humans are blind to, because we see them only in terms of abstraction: not actuality. We do not try to make obvious direct connections, which explain the truth about our own past. Subconscious images and connections; are direct and universal. The specialized selective cultural abstract meanings we ascribe to them; are not. Humans who live in only one culture are monocultural morons. They have not experienced more than one way of living. They have no perspective on their own lives. They do not understand anything except their own normality. They do not question their own normality. They do not understand anything outside their own culture. They have no cultural or historical perspective.

Who were the Romans? They were roaming... bands of killers. They came by their filthy name because of this. Who started the idea of colonizing foreign lands? Not the ancient Greeks. The set up shop in Greece and never moved. They set up their seaport-forts: always having a chance to escape in case the natives wised up to them. It was the Romans. The Roamin’ Romans who began the insane idea of not only raiding another tribe’s territory... but also oppressing them as absentee landlords. European colonization was invented by the Roamin' Romans. Their cultural legacy was a cancerous mutation between the pre-historic culture of Squatters, and the pre-historic culture of the Walkers. Taking the worst from both cultures; and making it even worse. Everything that has happened in human history... was the worst that could have happened. Human culture is negative energy. Human culture has NO positive energy. Human culture and human civilization destroys all positive energy. Human culture was negatively programmed before it ever came out of Africa.

1314

These original human walkers and squatters came from Africa. Human culture was already split into two distinct cultures before they ever left Africa to colonize the rest of the world. Look at what all the African aboriginal cultures were, and how they interacted; before Africa was invaded by the ancestors of humans who had originally left Africa. When the first European colonizers came into Africa: they found two basic, distinct kinds of cultures: Tall nomadic, warlike African tribes... dominating shorter, settled tribes that were less warlike and less fierce.

These two distinct different kinds of human cultures; were already brainwashed and inculcated and programmed to fight each other and hate each other; before they ever left Africa. Which of the first modern human tribes that left Africa were nomadic, warlike, tall, walkers... and which were squatters: is unknown, buried and hidden by the past. But it explains everything that happened after that.

To try and uncover the actual history of walking upright apes: the actual history of what actually happened over tens of thousands of years: is a complex, inner-woven story of many one-sided stories preserved in tiny bits inside many of the later human cultures. For instance. What about the Neanderthals? Were they walkers... or were they squatters? The evidence seems to suggest that they were both. That they changed their basic culture depending on their environment. That their basic lifestyle was still controlled and determined by their environment. That depending how the Earth's ecosystems changed: they changed with it. During the cold periods of Ice Ages: they became nomadic meat eaters. And during the warm periods of the Earth's recycling eco-systems: they became squatters eating whatever was handy around them.

But then came our ancestors who did not change their cultures to fit the ecosystems they found and lived-in. They traveled out of Africa, skirting all of Asia that was already populated by Neanderthals: and ended up in the continent of Australia. And re-created the drought-ridden devastation of the Serengeti plain: by burning the center of Australia into an arid, lifeless desert.

Only... the ecosystems of Australia: are not the eco-systems of Africa. The animal and plant species, and the weather systems of Australia: are not the same as those of the African plains. They did not regenerate every year as the African ones did, and had done for millions of years. They were not based and built upon a history of volcanic eruptions that enriched the African soil so intensely: that the life-energy of literally ALL African species on and in the African plains can and do regenerate themselves annually every year after a drought that is so destructive: any other ecosystems on Earth are not designed to handle it. So the first Humans entering Australia: ended up in re-creating only one half of the eco-system they had lived in. In short: they were fucked royally. They fucked themselves royally. They screwed up the entire Australian Continents eco-systems so badly: the center of Australia has remained a permanent desert ever since.

Why did the first Walkers that came out of Africa... why did they walk around the Southern edge of Asia? When Asia was populated by Neanderthals for at least 140,000 years before Modern Man came into Asia?

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1316

Simple.

They snuck in unseen. They came into Asia secretly. The Neanderthals never knew they were there. They walked along the edges of Asia: they only walked on sand, they walked along the beaches. The waves washed away their footprints. The rising tide washed away their footprints every 24 hrs.

To this day: we modern humans still love walking on the edge of a beach where the waves come in... We do not walk where the waves do not come in. We do not walk where the tide does not wash away our footprints. We walk where the ocean can whitewash all evidence of our passing.

The first human walkers that came out of Africa were walking sticks. They were following the same age-old pattern of many other generations of walking sticks who came out of Africa, and disappeared, and left no trace of their existence.

The human walking sticks were smart. They had learned the sin of eating. They ate as little as possible. They only ate tokens... that were small enough and powerful enough to energize their bodies.

They had learned the sin of walking upon living things. Walking upon sand did not kill or crush living things... And the sin of their crushing grains of sand... was washed away instantly with every wave... along with every sign of their existence. They had learned to use the natural whitewashing dynamics of Nature to hide their own evil. They did not belong on Earth. They had no home. They had no ecosystem that welcomed them. They were of no use to other living things. They only knew forward progress. They were the first insane humans who believed that as long as they went forward, and never looked back... as long as they kept moving forward: their past would not catch up with them... They were the ones who originally invented Modern human culture... and its insane idea-concept of forward progress, as a way of covering up the past, as a way of running away from their own past.

We modern humans have been running away from our own past, and our own sins ever since.

How old is the wisdom of the Walkers? It is embedded into the English language: Breakfast. If you break your fast in the morning: you will not be as fast as you should be during the rest of the day: it will slow you down. Breaking your fast: breaks your fastness. If you eat in the morning: your body has to send blood and nutrition and energy to digest the food you ate. All that energy and blood and nutrition could have gone to keeping you walking just as fast as ever. Walkers who ate food in the morning lagged behind walkers who ate nothing in the morning. This remains true today. People who jog in the morning before they get up: do not eat before they run. They eat after. Because jogging on a full stomach slows you down and you become tired and logey... logged down, listless, no energy. If you ate nothing before you jog in the morning: you feel light, full of good energy. The less you eat: the lighter you feel, the more energy you get. The complete opposite of conventional wisdom. The walkers knew one thing we do not know: because we live a sedentary life. They knew that the less you eat: the more energy you have, the farther you can travel, the lighter you feel, the better you feel, the healthier you become.

This is also why modern humans do not understand that walkers could and did cover huge distances without needing to stop for food. All they needed was water. They could walk for hundreds of miles without eating food, and without getting tired.

It was no great wonder that they ended up in Australia. They merely kept to the ocean beaches... and

1316

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1317

avoided being detected by the Neanderthals. Whom they could out-walk, and out-distance anyways, if they were seen. Neanderthals did not live by the ocean. These walkers were one of the first tribes of Modern Man to come out of Africa, and survive. Their entire reason for living was circumnavigation. They were the Walkers and the Hiders. They went around everything. But once they did... they owned it. And went in... to the center.

Which is why the pre-history of Modern Man can be traced back to the center of Asia around Lake Baikal... The untold saga covering tens of thousands of years... of how the first walkers ended up in the center of Asia, and began then radiating out from that center on all sides has never been told simply because these people did not leave behind any surviving evidence of their existence.

But they did exist. There is no other logical explanation for the scientific evidence we have now. You do not get a single traceable DNA line. A single, lone tribe coming from Africa, ending up in Australia... And... later on...another huge body of scientific evidence of Modern Humans migrating as traveling nomads out of the center of Asia. Unless you can fit these two completely different, disparate pieces of the puzzle together.

What happened when other tribes of our ancestors left Africa and walked around Asia, or squatted and settled in Asia? How did each different tribe react to the Neanderthals already living there for at least 70,000 years? Did the Neanderthals wipe out and exterminate them at first? Was it war-at-first-sight? Were Neanderthals warlike or peaceful? Or did they react differently to each modern human culture and each modern human tribe: depending on their peacefulness or animosity? Why did the first exodus of modern humans end up in Australia, and the next wave succeed in penetrating the continent of Asia in spite of There being Neanderthals living there for god knows how many tens of thousands of years? The answer is obvious if you look for the tell-tale evidence. The first modern humans that were hunted and chased out of Asia when they left Africa: did not have the modern Achaean tool kit. Their killing tools were not good enough.

They crossed the Red Sea: called the Gates of Grief: they crossed into a blood war: they were killed off. They retreated back into Africa for 30,000 years. The names of their crossing tell the tale. History does not lie. It was not called the Red Sea for nothing. It was not called the Gates of Grief for nothing. Their crossing into Australia was timid: they crossed from Timor. They were born new: they moved into Borneo, their chickens kept them alive: they called the land New Guinea. History does not lie. But you have to know how to read the story...

The next wave had better weapons than the Australian aborigines. Look at the killing tools of Australian aborigines 70,000 years ago, and the killing tools of modern humans in Asia and Europe 60,000 years ago. The difference is huge.

Study the actual historical facts... not the whitewashed bullshit called history: and you will find that humans have practiced human decapitation for 12,000 years all over the Earth. It is still being practiced in Africa. It is still being practiced in the Philippines. Rebel bands in the jungle still behead people; everywhere there is a jungle for rebel bands to hide in. Beheading-decapitation is a universal tribal custom all over the world. The jungles of the Amazon, the jungles of Africa, of Indonesia... it does not make any difference where the jungle is or what tribe or what band, or which century.

Read human history. Read how Tamerlane the Iron Hand, The Limper; the cripple. The man with a club foot: who used his club foot; by turning it into an iron foot, not an iron hand: to crush millions of his subjects under his crippled foot. How he created a mountain, a volcano mountain of decapitated skulls of dead dismembered humans, higher than the highest buildings of his era.... So he could ride his horse over his enemy's skulls.... and show to the world in public how powerful he was. By terrorizing middle Asia in his insane lust for killing; and his lust for decapitation.

1317

Every mass murderer was and is a human cripple. Every power-mad leader who ever lived was a cripple. Tamarlane was a psychopathic cripple, and a physical cripple. Hitler was a psychopathic cripple, and a sexual cripple. Alexander the Great was a mental and an emotional cripple. Buddha and Jesus were both sexual, and mental cripples. Genghis Khan was a psychopathic cripple. Stalin was a cunning psychopathic criminal monster so crippled: human life meant nothing to him. All the leaders in history were mental-emotional-sexual-physical-spiritual-moral-ethical cripples.

Where did the first human Walkers and Squatters come from? Why did human culture split into two adversarial cultures at odds with each other?

The answer lies in the Path of Splitness. All monkeys use their bodies to do two basic things: squat in trees, and move through trees. Our ancestors split the two most basic body functions of our genetic monkey heritage into two different human cultures. At some point in our past: our ancestors split into two groups. One group squatted more than they moved. The other group moved more than they squatted. One species with the same genetic DNA: splitting its instincts into two halves. One species of apes evolving through splitting themselves, splitting tools, splitting words, splitting hairs, splitting meanings, splitting the atom, splitting entire Nations apart, splitting political parties into two halves, splitting male and female roles, splitting vegetables apart for dinner, splitting trees apart for lumber... etc, etc...

The evolution of our past, where we came from and why we evolved as we did can be understood easily by seeing it as a single Dynamic of Splitness.

Burial of the Dead

We today mark the beginnings of modern civilized culture by the burial of our dead. 35,000 years ago, humans first began to bury their dead. This is supposed to mark the birth a new intelligence. We have been brainwashed into believing that people who bury their dead must have cared more for them when they were alive. That is the complete opposite of the actual truth. Burial of the dead: meant that humans began caring more about the dead than the living. Not the other way around. The reason humans began burying their dead was because they had been practicing mass genocide for thousands of years. The subconscious guilt of their sins forced them to bury their dead. It forced them to bury the Neanderthals they killed. The graves of Neanderthals found by scientists were not dug by Neanderthals... They were dug by the first humans who felt guilty about killing the last remnants of a race of humans who had once populated all of Asia and Europe. This cultural legacy of guilt.. beginning with the first burying of the last of the Neanderthals they killed... has been preserved in the burying of their own dead.

This is the horror of human civilization. This is the horror of realizing you have been lied to all of your life. The horror of realizing that what was supposed to be the pre-eminent proof of human civilization's superiority over all less civilized apes and cultures... is actually the opposite of what it is touted as being. This book uncovers this horror. Most human beings will not be willing to admit or accept the truths of this horror. But regardless of this, the fact that burial of our dead originates from humans trying to cover up their crimes cannot be covered up anymore. The logic of this truth is irresistible. It took many tens of thousands of years for one race of apes to kill the other one off completely... During this conflict: there was no burial of the dead practiced by either side. For tens of thousands of years... modern humans did not bury dead corpses... then, suddenly! Just as the last Neanderthals go extinct!...

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1319

This weird inexplicable custom appears. Why? Because humans began drawing pictures in caves? There is no logical connection between the two at all. Yet we take out state of civilized intelligence from these two phenomenon, and try to convince ourselves that one begets the other: which they most certainly do not.. The appearance of the first cave paintings happened in different parts of the world at different times. They mark the appearance of mental abstraction. Mental abstraction has nothing to do with feeling guilty about killing the last pathetic remnants of a dying breed of humans whose only crime was that they were living in Asia and Europe before modern man arrived. And as the dominant killer of those two continents: did not brook any new upstart apes invading their ancient territorial boundaries and colonizing the two continents in their faces whether they liked it or not.

It was only after... it was only after nearly all Neanderthals had been wiped out... only after they no longer represented any threat to the total dominance and control of these two continents... that humans felt guilty about killing off the last remaining ones.

Again. The entire tactic of genocide was an avoidance of admitting it is genocide. If you can leave a small token remnant of a once prolific powerful race of humans alive... if you have not killed 100% of them off into total and utter extinction...! Why then... you really haven't committed genocide, have you? You have only been defending your self against an aggressor. Oops. This is the exact same rationale used by Americans in their genocide of the countless cultures and tribes found to be living in North America before they came there. This was their mistake. If they had not killed the last Neanderthals... they would have been able to rationalize their guilt away, and not feel the need to cover up their crimes. But they did kill them... and bury their bodies... in guilt and shame for the needless slaughter and waste of the few poor young girls still alive who were Neanderthals.

This is where the burial of our dead comes from. It comes from guilt, and shame and criminal acts that had to be covered up and atoned for in a ritual of atonement. How this original act of guilt and shame came to be used as a cover-up for all the destructive crimes and sins they committed, as a general cover-up for everything they did... burying their elders when they died is another part of the evolution of they managed to find a way to avoid the truth of their own past. How they had to glorify their elders... Because if they had not done so... Then the tales of slaughter... of killing Neanderthals for tens of thousands of years... would have to be faced and accepted and digested and the realization that their ancestors and grandparents and parents were all a bunch of murdering savages who were a filthy lot that should have been spat upon and punished during their lives for what they did to not only the Neanderthals, but to their own children... And children growing up to surpass their parents n wisdom and understanding... was and has been forbidden, for hundreds of thousands of years. Children surpassing the insanity of their elders is not to be allowed... We can't have human gentle sensitive children weeping over a bunch of no-good Neanderthals, now, can we? Eh? We can't have them questioning our parental control and parental authority, now can we, eh? We can't have them challenging the lies we have sold them, eh? This might upset the entire established order of all the traditions and customs of Modern humans!

This is how it happened. This is always how it happens. Elders lying to their young... in order to rationalize their own misbehaviors and sins. Using anything and everything to keep from being held personally accountable for what they did. The invention of modern civilized culture... was and is just another sneaky way of avoiding the truth and burying the truth of the past. Nothing else. All civilization... the entire history of human civilization has just been a piling up of lies on top of lies in order to cover up the ugly stinking rotten horror of the past.

1319

Capitation was changed into: destructive capitation, capitation for the sake of capitation: ritual capitation; destructively destroying the whole earth they depended upon for their sustenance

Decapitation is more evil than capitation?
They mean the same thing
Capitalism comes from Capitation
Recapitalization comes from Decapitation

Decapitation

Before European culture colonized the entire world. How many cultures... how many tribes... how many clans.... How many Robber Barons. Now many Kingdoms, and Fiefdoms, and Empires, and Nations actively practiced human decapitation? Every single one of them practiced it.

But European culture had abstracted itself beyond actual physical acts of cutting off human heads from living human bodies.

They had developed a new form of de-capitalization.

They practiced cutting off only the heads of Kings, cutting off the alien non-European Kings, off from the bodies of their Clans and Tribes and Empires and Nations...

It was too tiresome to cut off all of the heads of all the lower classes. Why? Because they found they were cutting off the source of their own wealth. Because their lust for accumulating the token heads called coins of silver and gold became greater than their lust for accumulating the actual deaths heads of their enemies. Because they could use these colonized lower classes to make them richer, and more powerful, while still practicing decapitation even more cunningly... by destroying all the authority figures of the lands and people they invaded and conquered. Read history. Read the damn truth about how Stalin systematically killed every single authority figurehead in the entire USSR. When Russian armies took over Eastern Europe, and Central Asia. They systematically killed all teachers, all policemen, all bosses, all rich people, all officials, all affluent people. He made damn sure that only the lowest, most ignorant, most submissive, stupidest, most craven cowards were left alive. Anybody with an ounce of initiative, intelligence, spirit, life, energy, etc: was shot down: on sight, no questions asked. This was Stalin's formula of decapitating entire Nations of their heads of state, and all community heads, and business heads, and every human head he could find; holding any power, wealth, knowledge or authority or status. By this selective mass slaughter: Stalin instantly terrorized the remaining millions of ignorant idiots into total abject submission. Read of the cunning with which Timur became the greatest mass killer in Asian History up to that time; save for his idol: Timujin. Known as Genghis Khan to the West.

Stalin's own background mirrors the cunning filth that Timur was so closely: there is almost no difference between them in their sneaky tactics, lies and propaganda and how adroitly they manipulated public opinion.

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1321

Instead: the new European Robber Barons; developed a cunning system to suck the life-energy and life-blood out of every living lower class human in the fucking world... as slowly as possible, as agonizingly as possible, as filthily as possible, as cunningly as possible... So they could degrade these un-decapitated humans down to the filthiest state of human slavery and bondage and insanity and stupidity possible before they finally died.

They had learned the fine arts of the Mongols. Who used their horse-slaves as beasts of burden, until their horses died under them. The Mongols lived by sucking the blood of the horses they rode, until their mounts died. And then they hopped on a new mount, and did the same to that horse, and so –on and so-on...Because they were determined to raze human cities to the ground: and create grassland for horses. Horses that they could use, eat, kill and accumulate: as a sign of wealth and status.

The Europeans escaped being destroyed by the Mongol hordes by pure distance and luck. But they learned their own form of bloodsucking. Civilized bloodsucking, called profit margins. And that has poisoned the entire Capitalistic Earth; so even the dumbest stupidest most ignorant most illiterate American teenager understand the worship and sanctity of tokens, money, and counting their pennies. Tokens; with heads of State printed on them, marking their value. Even while they are in debt up to their asses and scrounging to barely make ends meet: the poor of today still act and think and feel like Robber Barons.

The Capitalistic Culture of Europe has overpowered and over poisoned, and overcome, and overwhelmed all other human cultures. There are no more actual headhunters anymore today. Actual Decapitation now is only practiced in the most remote, most backward cultures and backwaters of the world.

But today... the De-Capitalization of the entire human population on Earth:... is being practiced all over the world by Capitalistic Corporations... who want to suck all the money on the Earth, into their coffers-coffins. They do not want to accumulate actual decapitated heads. They want to accumulate abstract Capitalist heads on paper. .

Accumulating decapitated coin-heads in a coffer: is accumulating the life-blood, the work-energy of living humans: and putting it into a coffin of the undead to be preserved.

This is what the insanity of the unexplored human subconscious had led to.

Where does the dynamic of Decapitation originate from?

From the dynamic of Capitulation,

From compromising your own personal values. By giving up your own values, your own ethics, your own morals; to someone who is bigger than you are and threatens to cut off your head if you do not do it their way. From giving up the reasoning power of your own fucking head.... From cowardice. By losing your values, losing your head, losing all the faculties of your heart and mind, and separating the faculties of your heart from your brain. So when heartless cowards compromised their own values and submitted to a killer instead of fighting back. They lost heart. They lost their courage. They lost their honesty. They lost their intelligence. They became subservient slaves, oppressed and terrorized by killers. They became hypocritically, cunningly subservient. And hated the heads, the head killers who ruled them. And found cunning ways to kill them and cut off their heads. It was a dynamic of revenge,

1321

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1322

a dynamic of fighting for power... a dynamic of DE-capitalization. Attacking whoever was taller, better, higher than the rest of their group out of envy and jealousy.

Look at All of human history; and what do you find? A huge empty vacuum. With only bits of the edges outlined. 36,000 years. And no account of what happened inside Asia. Only around the edges.

What do the ancient oral traditions of Asia reveal? The common practice of decapitation; ended only because of European domination invading and destroying their cultures and giving them better ways to kill. It ended only because the more abstracted form of decapitation called Capitalism is even more evil, and more destructive; than the practice of heads being cut off.

Read Asian History: and you will find a long litany of atrocities, betrayals and killings and butchery. Small respites of peace in-between the endless wars and killing. Read how Central Asian Mongol butchery; was absorbed by the civilized edges of Asia... by Chinese, and Mohammedan cultures. Until the Mohammedans developed a warrior class that equaled the Mongols in their bloodthirsty lust for cutting off heads and mass slaughter. Until the once peaceful Mohammedan Caliphs became as insanely obsessed with world domination: as the Mongols had been when they first began razing Muslim villages and towns and cities to the ground. Which then created the bastardized half-breeds called the Moguls... who went and conquered Northern India. And stayed there for centuries as hereditary rulers to this day.

Read what little historical facts there are about the history of Central Asia. it is an unending litany of killers killing killers. Haters hating haters. Asiatic hordes; rampaging and burning and raping and looting and killing. Mass butchery. An almost nonstop litany of the mad fight for power. Every tribal leader, clan leader, clawing at each other in their mad scramble to the top. Only to be poisoned, betrayed, assassinated, defeated in battle, sabotaged, undermined, and killed... in a matter of months! on and on... ad-nauseum.

And barely a word of all this in Western History. 36,000 years of mass slaughter: covering the entire continent of Asia. Completely ignored by Western History. And you wonder why Western History does not make any sense? When the heart of human history, the entire main body of Human History is an empty, unknown, untold black hole. The untold stories of 36,000 years of expanding waves of human killers coming out of Central Asia... finally populating the edges of Asia and the Middle East 12,000 years ago... is an empty vacuum... a censored blacked-out black hole. A completely untold story that Western historians pointedly ignore.

Read all of human history. Put all of the actual facts together. Connect only the facts that are actually true. The general picture and dynamic and story tells itself; without any need for details. What exists today already tells one half of the tale. The facts of the past merely fills in the remaining blanks.

The symbology and culture of decapitation runs so deeply through human history: that we cannot even see it, because it is the very fabric of tradition. We are too close to our own normality and our own culture to have any perspective on it. Only if you stand outside of your normality; can you see it. Only if you look at human history connectively: as a single Totality, and then look at that Totality from a distance, and look at it from many other different perspectives: can you even begin to see what our history actually was and still is.

Why did humans eat corn to begin with? Because eating corn symbolized the decapitation of human heads. Why does a kernel of corn resemble almost the exact shape of the deaths head that Modern man mass produced for thousands of years before humans began eating corn? Each kernel of corn grown and decapitated and eaten: is the human subconscious screaming out to living humans to digest and understand their legacy of mass killing, mass decapitation and the yellowness of their mass cowardice. The number of kernel of corn in existence; today equals all of the accumulated human and Neanderthal heads that were ever decapitated and killed by all of our ancestors. The increasing accumulated kernels in existence each year represents the increasing number of humans killed by other humans every year on this Earth.

1322

Why is baseball the National sport of America? Because it is one of the few sports that still is based upon the decapitation of human heads, and subconsciously represents the Global evil of American Capitalism trying to own and control the entire Earth.

Look at the Hollywood film called: Field of Dreams. A son almost bankrupting himself so ghosts of the past can play baseball in his cornfields. The ghosts disappear into the cornfields and hide there. Just as the ghosts of all the fathers and mothers who ever came to America as alien invaders; hid the truth of what they actually did to their own children and to the people living there originally, and to the Earth, and to the American Continent. And why did he do it? Who was the voice that made him do it? His own dead useless father, who wanted to play baseball. Talk about ancestor worship that is so whitewashed and sweetened with artificial lies and arterial corn sweeteners so the masses will swallow it.

Ask an American if they believe in ancestor worship. They will scoff at the idea of worshipping dead ancestors. Then ask them what they think of George Washington, or their own parents. They will be blind, desperate apologists for their own parents, and they will not dare say one negative thing about them in public ever. You will hear them whitewashing their own parents and apologizing for them and standing up to them... While in the same breath; they will sneer at anyone who worships their own ancestors. This is the kind of mealy-mouthed, double-faced, hypocritical, bullshit; most humans spout whenever pressed to rationalize their own crap. Trying to justify their own opinions-morals-beliefs, etc. The symbols of that film are a fairytale whitewashing of America's past. Where old baseball sports stars are idolized and worshipped. Why? Because the rest of American culture and society is so rotten and vile: these whitewashed figures are the best examples of what it means to be an American that modern Media and modern American culture can offer.

The film skips over the true origins and meanings of baseball. It skips over the decapitation the native tribes practiced on the winner of the original game which baseball came from. The man who triumphantly managed to get one symbolical deaths head into an enemy camp was killed. It was an honor. An honorable warrior death. American natives tribes were obsessed with honor. The film skips over the evils of raising corn, and the actual back-breaking labor it takes to run a farm raising only one staple crop: corn.

However... this film does have one positive message: the idea of fun. Even though the idea of fun has now, been so thoroughly poisoned by consumer capitalism: that it no longer exists in real life: it only exists on film. As a poisoned, watered down, idealized, sentimentalized, mass-produced, copied, boring, bullshit token of actual fun. That is... the American worship of fun; as purely a spectator sport. The worship of having fun. The fun of playing sports just for the fun of it. Not in order to become a professional athlete: no longer exists in American society anymore. This film idolizes only professional fun... and spits upon all children who play baseball without getting paid for it... and who never become professional athletes. But even that idea is obscene. You cannot have fun; if you worship it. You cannot have fun playing baseball; by sitting in a movie house and watching someone else play it. You cannot have actual fun being a spectator. You can only have vicarious fun. Empty, worthless fun.

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1324

Why is that word used for all people who sit and watch anything? Because they are specters at a feast they cannot truly enjoy or eat or digest. Spectators are living ghosts. Acting out the vicarious thrill our dead ancestors acted out when they died; and found they were addicted to feasting on dead things; but could no longer eat or taste them.

How many sports are based upon the dynamic of decapitation?

Every fucking sport that has a ball, or has something that is batted around.

How many board games are based upon the idea of decapitation? Chess, Checkers, Chinese checkers, card games, the throwing of dice, the throwing of bones, etc. North American Natives used Wampum belts, as their most sacred form of abstraction. They were used to commemorate important events. They were used as a sign of prestige. Wampum was used to preserve the details of important treaties and agreements. It was used as a shortened, whitewashed form of their own history.

Take apart any Wampum belt... and you will find that they are made of small shells that are almost identical to each other. They look exactly the same as the so-called beads that European Cro-Magnon used... before the European humans ran out of those exact-size copies of deaths heads. And were forced to make them from larger pieces of shell and bone, and soft rocks. Wampum 'beads' are exactly the same size as Cro-Magnon 'beads'. Wampum 'beads' are the same shape as Cro-Magnon 'beads'. The Wampum 'bead' represents a human head. Each one has a hole in it through the throat. Exactly like the death's heads that Europeans fashioned from scratch, 30,000 years earlier.

Which tribe was the first tribe to be massacred by English settlers in America? The Pequot tribe. The most influential tribe in Eastern North America. 1,500 Pequot were killed in 3 months. Most of them were women and babies. Something American history books carefully delete from the history of 1638 in Massachusetts. Named so because of the infamous massacre which gave them the land of their colony. The Pequot had a monopoly of wampum beads. These identically sized shells were found only on the shores of their ancestral territory. They were the closest thing to European Robber Baron Capitalists in North America before Europeans came. These native makers of stone-age money were the first to try wheeling and dealing with the more corrupt whites. They were the first Native American capitulators. And for the mistake of capitulating to European Capitalists: they were wiped out to the last soul. Read about the white Europeans of the 1600's in America. They were all land-crazed. They were all obsessed with land-greed. Trying to legally own as many thousands of acres of land as possible. Even if they never lived there and never saw the land they owned: all they wanted was the 'legal' deed to the land.. The entire filthy culture of absentee ownership: people owning land which they do not live on and do not use is one main engine of capitalist greed which is destroying the earth. Read about the ways they stole this land. Read about the rationalizations they used to excuse themselves and absolve themselves from their own greed. And how they rationally projected every single vice and corruption that was theirs onto their victims. Indians were evil and white European settlers were good instead of the other way around. Just as the white American South projected their own worst vices and corruptions, and crime... onto Blacks .... Calling them lazy; as a racial stereotype. A race forced to work in cane fields and cotton fields doing back breaking manual labor... being called lazy... by whites sitting on a porch sipping mint Juleps.

The human species populating the Earth today with billions of poor is the human subconscious drive to

1324

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1325

create more zeroes, not more heroes. More powerless humans leading empty lives. Each poor empty life; representing an abstract zero: a death's-head. An abstract representation of all the accumulated billions of previously un-lived empty human lives.

The insanity of human culture is that it repeatedly re-lives the past subconsciously. Without ever actually changing. How long will we be doomed to re-enact the past; without understanding the re-enactments? Until there are as many accumulated, mass-produced baseballs on the Earth today; as the accumulating number of human dead; killed by other humans? Until there are more baseballs, than there are kernels of corn? Until baseballs replace corn kernels; as the subconscious bean-counter of the human races subconscious obsession with the head counting of how many of our own species we have killed so far? Until the obsession with counting money becomes an even worse insanity than counting death's-heads for 30,000 years.

This is what abstraction is. This is where it comes from. Abstraction is the concretion of our accumulated past and all of its accumulated subconscious images and ideas. Turning imaginary ideas into concrete, into stone, and into other dead things: like dead kernels of decapitated corn, and round heads of decapitated baseballs. That are struck with wooden bats. And Golf.

Where can you find the death struggle between the first human walking sticks that came out of Africa, and the first human squatters... being re-created and re-enacted and re-lived? Look at the modern squatters today; living in rich Capitalist Nations: creating walking emaciated sticks out of starving billions of other humans in 3rd World countries... While at the same time worshipping emaciated human walking sticks called fashion models; whose only function is to walk up and down a runway for the pleasure of seated squatters.

How many ways did squatters get their revenge back at the walkers? By systematically starving them to death through pure neglect. Look at the concentration camps of Stalin's USSR, and Mao's China, and Hitler's Germany, and America's Andersonville, and England's Boer War concentration camps. All these modern squatters; killed their enemy by turning them into starving walking sticks. For human squatters: this is a universal sign of human horror. It turns starving people into unrecognizable, distorted, emaciated, gargoyles. It robs them of their humanity. It turns their faces into skulls... deaths heads.

What is the modern atomic bomb?

It is an exploding decapitation of a potential energy inside a head-globe...of two hemispheres being smashed together... producing a blinding realization that ignites pure rage, pure destruction. It is a recreation of the human brain's Big Bang... that was covered up for 36-75,000 years. An exploding realization of horror and rage...at the unfairness of it all. The rage at being unable to rid themselves of their addiction to tools.

What is an atomic bomb?

It is the accumulated killing potential of all the human decapitations and deaths ever committed, that have gone unpaid and unrevenged throughout human history. What is a bomb; but a symbol of potential destruction. A symbol of repressed human rage. Decapitating the heads of billions and trillions of atoms.

What is the Scientific definition of Energy?

An explosion.

1325

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1326

or
A potential explosion.

All energy in our Universe that is not potentially explosive, and that does not explode, or that is not drastically imbalanced and one-sided... so much as to be potentially destructive and explosive: Science ignores as not being useful or important to even categorize it as being called energy. Gee. Oh. So the only useful energy we can use is something that explodes and destroys other things. Gee. So the energy in our bodies and minds and hearts is not important. The energy of all living things on this Earth are not important. We need to find more energy that can explode, or burn, or destroy things.

Scientifically you can only get energy: by releasing it destructively. You can only get energy if you destroy what holds the energy. You only get energy from food: if you destroy a living thing by killing it.

First you have to create an artificial potential of energy that is potentially explosive and destructive like a hydro-electric dam. Blocking all natural flows of energy of an entire eco-system. First you have to destroy an entire fucking river valley to accumulate enough water. Then you can manipulate the water by using gravity so it falls to a lower level: releasing its stored up potential gravitational energy. And if the dam breaks: you have a flood that destroys everything below the dam... just to get something called electricity. Another artificial energy potential that is destructive. The only kind of energy that science manipulates and uses is energy that has a killing potential. That has the potential to destroy and kill living things. Scientific technology is just like the killing potential of the first swords that were used to behead humans with. They both were invented with the same intention. Where did decapitation come from before human had swords long enough and sharp enough to cut off human heads?

From the Stone-Age

From the 100,000 year-old human practice of rectum-impalement as the worst possible way of killing someone. What happened after an impaled victim finally died?

Gravity kept forcing that stake through the heart; eventually reaching up into the braincase. And after predators and vermin had eaten the flesh off the bones, or after the flesh rotted and fell from the bones of the dead corpse. The stake ran up through the skeletons ribcage into its rotting brain. The brain itself could not be eaten because it was completely protected by the skull. So it rotted, and rotted. As the last thing to organically decompose. Until the skull, the death's-head stank to high heaven even after skeleton fell apart.

The last remaining evidence of the obscene torture death was a skull on top of a stake. This gruesome evidence remained for years. Or until some human took it down, or until the stake rotted and fell to the ground. It was a way of marking your territory. Once you found a stake with a skull on it. It was a warning that all interlopers would be treated the same way. It was a way of staking your claim to land. To this day: humans still drive wooden stakes at the corners of land they want to own.

Does 100,000 years of wooden stakes with human skulls littering all of Asia and Europe. And the grisly evidence not going away for tens, even hundreds of years... explain why humans no longer wanted to see this horrible sight anymore? Why once they invented swords: they cut off the head first. Instead of leaving it as a reminders of impending unspeakable agony, death, shame and public dishonor. Gee.

1326

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1327

How was this form of Stone Age death invented? Why was it invented?

75,000 years of hate and disgust of Squatters... by Walkers. 75,000 years of hate and disgust of Hiders by Movers. Catching them. As they shat into their loincloths in fear. Trying to teach them never to squat and shit upon the sacred Earth ever again. Trying to teach them never to shit in fear. Trying to teach them that the smell of shit is the smell of fear and death. Punishing them for their stinking shit, and their stinking fear. What is the last body movement that signifies total death of the body? When the bowels relax, and the dead corpse's shit oozes out from its relaxed rectum.

The Walkers.... The Movers. Their bowels were empty. They were dry. When they died. Their bowels did not ooze out stinking shit. Killing these cowards became too revolting for them. Because even after they killed these cowards. They still stank of shit. Their shit oozed out of their loosened bowels. They befouled the sacred Earth. Which the Movers and Walkers worshipped and held to be more sacred than anything else. So even the act of ridding the Sacred Earth of these foul scum: fouled their Sacred Earth.

They came to see their mortal enemies: The Hiders. The Squatters. As... The Shitters.

This was why, and how: the practice of rectal impalement was invented during the Stone Age. It was practiced first by the Movers. Then by the Walkers. Then by the Squatters. By all modern humans. By all of our ancestors. For thousands upon thousands of years before civilization ever began.

But even that did not stop the dead corpses of cowards from stinking. Even after scavengers had picked the bones clean: their rotting brains still stank to high heaven.

This explains all the rest of the whitewashed history of the invention of abstract human culture. It explains the brain's 'Big Bang' without whitewash, without lies. It explains who we are today.

The Movers, The Walkers. Came to see Squatters, Shitters, Hiders: As.... Rotting Brains. Rotting Decapitated Skulls. Rotten Decapitated Heads. They came to see all Cowards as Rotting Decapitated Heads.

Since that Time. Modern Human Coward Society: has been ruled by Rotten Decapitated Heads of State.

The Body of human society is sick. It needs a complete makeover. But it cannot heal itself as long as Rotten Heads of State keep on rotting. The heads of State are never completely destroyed. Cut off one head of state: and another head of state pops up. De-throne one oppressor, and another pops up.

The invention of Modern Abstract Human Culture was not the beginning of the brain's Big Bang. It was the beginning of the Brains Big Rot. It was the beginning of the Rotting of the Human Brain.

But why would humans invent rectal impalement in the first place? How could have it happened? Put it into the proper context. And it is easily understandable. Tall walking sticks. Called Movers. Short, squat squatters: called Hiders.

Stone Age Mover and Hider tribes living in Asia for 75,000 years. Mover tribes: using multiple spears. A Mover finds a short hider; and spears him, but doesn't kill him. The hider starts screaming in pain, and shitting in fear. So the mover uses another spear to stop the stink. They did not have to make stakes. They already had what they needed already in their hands. A nice sharp, long, spear. Just the right length to thrust butt first into the ground, or dig a hole and jam a few stones into the hole to have what we call a stake.

1327

All they had to do was impale the stricken bleeding hider with another spear up their rectum, and push the screaming victim until the butt end caught the soft earth., and began digging into the Earth. Then they simply raised the Hider up on the rectal spear until the rectal spear was completely upright. As the Hider's own weight forced the butt of the spear deeper and deeper:

Both into his own ass, and into the Earth. And that was the end of the squatting shitter. And the end of his shitting. And the end of his stinking. And the end of his screaming. Because that is how they first found Hiders. By the stink of their own shit. Hiding in the bushes squatting: having a shit. That is what Movers did to a shitter to stop them from shitting. That is why they hated them so much.

What does a person with a spear do with a screaming person, crawling on their hands and knees away from them, shitting in fear of being killed, exposing their rectum openly? Leaving their stink and their shit behind them so even a whiff will make the killers back off in intense revulsion and disgust?

The answer is obvious. The only target they have is the victim's rectum. The source of the stink and the shit. Because they were cowards. Because they hid. Because they squatted and hid behind a bush or a tree, or a rock. Because they squatted and shat. As the first automatic reaction to suddenly meeting another strange human. While the first automatic reaction of the Movers was to Move. Whether forward to greet a friend, or warily around a stranger, smelling them to see if they were friendly or not, or moving forward to kill them: once recognizing them as mortal enemies.

The Hiders did not call the Movers: The Movers. They called them: The Killers. The Movers did not call the Hiders: The Hiders. They called them The Shitters.

This was how easily a huge chasm can be created between human tribes: if there is no Equality between them. Simply because of different lifestyles. A short person meeting a taller person? A coward meeting someone who has courage? A person surviving by hiding carrying no spears; meets a person surviving by hunting carrying spears? A runner and hider meeting a hunter and a runner?

Which one will cower? Lowering their stance and height. Which one will take the initiative and move first? How will one react to the other? What will the consequences be? Causality is Causality. Everything can be understood by Causality and Logic.

How many ways do you want to analyze this?

You can fill books with conjecture. You can examine and evaluate every possibility and permutation and combination. And they will all show the same origin. Rectal impalement with a spear. The Movers never squatted. They either stood up, or they lay down. They were practical. Lying down saves energy. Squatting wastes energy and is uncomfortable as hell and unnatural for the human body. Unless you are traumatized so badly: that you feel less pain squatting in a fetal position. The only position you knew before you were born. The position that has less pain in your muscle-memories. The only position you were in when you felt no pain. The only position you were in before you were traumatized... born screaming in fear and pain by an unnatural birth.

What about the Pre-history of these bands and tribes coming out of Africa to find huge massive Neanderthals; populating and dominating the two continents of Asia and Europe?

What were their histories like? Who were the most warlike? Were they the only ones that survived? Did Neanderthals first kill all walking ape tribes coming out of Africa? Was this the cultural reason that all Modern Man hated them so much and wiped them out? Who was the race that cast the first stone? When did interspecies conflict between hominids escalate to killing? Who were the first killer apes? When were they? What legacy did they create? Did they have long-standing feuds and hatreds already before they ever came out of Africa? Was rectal impalement practiced in Africa before modern humans left Africa?

Modern Human tribes that never went out of Africa: still practice impalement to this very day. They practiced it long before any other non-Africans could have taught it to them. Their witch doctors still carry spears with death-skulls impaled upon them, and sticks with shrunken heads impaled upon them, and sticks with hairy heads. That they use to wave around. As signs of their authority and spiritual power. That are supposed to possess magical powers. Taken from their defeated enemies.

They still practice the ritual of cutting off their enemy's heads and impaling them on stakes. The wooden-stake perimeters of their villages once were adorned with the heads of their victims. They were designed to strike fear into the hearts of anyone who wanted to attack them. To show all who came near; what their fate would be. How many of you reading this will throw up your hands in horror and think:

'Oh dear... our ancestors really couldn't have been such awful... The couldn't have done such er,... um.... I mean... er, that would be a disparaging reflection on me. I'm not like that... er... I don't kill things with my bare hands. I let slaughterhouses do it for me. It's all very, er removed: we removed the slaughterhouses from the suburbs. We removed the um, uh... er, very civilized. I'm very civilized... I'm removed from my ancestors. I'm not like them.'

Let's cut the crap.

Our ancestors. The apes that walked on two legs instead of on all fours. Had and used wooden tools; millions of years before they ever began using stone tools... Just because we can't find any 2 million year-old wooden tools, or 2 million year-old wooden tools: simply because they don't last that fucking long: does not mean they did not exist.

Two-legged apes hunted four-legged apes: used wooden spears, without any fucking stone tips, or spear-heads... for tens of millions of fucking years before we ever started using stones as tools.

Stones?... They didn't need any fucking stones. They didn't need any fucking stone or bone technology to make wooden spears. All they needed was a dead branch that they could break-off the smaller branches from, and rub the tip of the dead branch against a stone or the rough surface of a tree trunk. And they had their killing implement.

They chased four-legged baboons, gibbons and monkeys out of the trees. They shook the trees, and burned them down, and threw stones up at them... until the terrified screaming things fell down or jumped to the ground and ran. Then they chased them down and killed them...

Try facing a terrified gibbon or baboon when it is cornered and baring its killing canines at you, with its powerful arms and hands... ready to rip you to shreds if you come too close. They never killed them face-to-face. They ran them down from behind. What is the easiest target for your spear when you are chasing a four-legged Baboon or Gibbon or Monkey?... Their upraised assholes... flaring red, purple... inflamed with fear and rage. The perfect target for a long sharp spear or branch.

The perfect way to stay safely out of harms way from the four legged ape or monkey's crazed last-stand against an organized man-hunt. With twenty running apes and twenty sharp branches or spears either thrown or shoved up the rectum of that screaming victim.

It is easy; once you surround the monkey in a circle. No matter where the monkey turns to face any single killer. There will be killers behind it; to ram a stick up its ass. No matter how many times it turns to face the threat of a stick being jabbed at it, there will be other sticks or spears rammed up its rectum. Once any ape is caught in a circle of human killers, it cannot escape. It will face a circle of death. It will expose its red-inflamed rectum to the killers behind it, and its rectum will be easily and safely impaled by a spear or sharp stick.

Why did they do that?

Because apes and monkeys in trees hated the apes that were on the ground. Because the apes that walked upright on the ground hated the monkeys that lived high up in the trees. They hated each other. The hatred was mutual

Walking apes were hated by all the higher apes and monkeys. The higher ones up in the trees threw rotten fruit at them, and screamed at them, and cursed them. The monkeys up in the trees spoiled their hunting every chance they got. Any prey they hunted; was alerted and ran away, the second they heard the shrieks of the four legged apes and monkeys up in the trees; screaming out their hatred at their two-legged lower cousins.

For twenty five million years: Walking apes hated their upwardly mobile cousins living safely; higher up in the trees. Because they could not climb that high. They could not catch them. They hated them with a special virulent hatred.... For how many years were the bigger-lower apes unable to catch the higher-smaller apes? Hundreds of thousands?... Millions?

That members of their own species chose to conspire against them: just because they were lower. Pelting them with their own turds, and running safely away up into the upper branches where the bigger apes could not follow.

For how many of those twenty five million years... were the forests in Africa thick enough, so our tree dwelling cousins living higher than us: couldn't be cornered or isolated or hunted down? For how many of those 25 million years did the HIGHER tree dwellers of Africa: get away with murder...throwing things at us and screaming curses at us?

But when the forest began dying. When the trees began thinning out... When they couldn't jump from tree-to-tree anymore and escape us. When they were caught in a single tree surrounded by walking apes. Not by lions or hyenas. But by their own cousins.

Then, the tables were turned. Then, we finally got our revenge. Then, you better believe we killed those assholes. Those asshole who threw their own turds at us and showed us their asses to insult us and rub in the fact that they were higher than we were and we were below the lowest part of their body: which was and still is; their asses... as they cursed us and hated us and threw things down at us from above.

How do you think the Serengeti Plain was formed in the first place: eh? Why do you think it exists at all? It is an ecological anomaly. It has no place in Africa. It shouldn't be there in the first place. It is a narrow strip of land. This kind of ecosystem does not exist anywhere else in Africa. But walking apes; burning trees for 25 million years. Just so they could kill their closest cousins... do you think that just might do it?

Just so they could drop to the ground burnt to death. So we could acquire a taste for burnt flesh. Not all of them burnt to death. Not all the trees could be burned. The monkeys jumped down from the trees and tried to run away. Showing their attackers their red-inflamed asses as they ran.

And that was when our ancestors: the walking two-legged apes that killed them: got their revenge for being pelted with monkey shit for millions of years. Why did we kill them this way? Because even if they want to: once you have a four legged African mammal impaled by their asshole... they cannot turn around to attack you. Unless they are strong enough to break the spear you are sticking up their ass. All you have to do is just keep on shoving that spear up their rectum.... And you will kill that monkey easily and safely... Without any tell-tale blood being spilled as its internal organs are ruptured and hemorrhaging, as it bleeds to death internally. So after you kill it, you can safely drag the carcass away without every damn predator and killer in the African Veldt... Every Lion, Lioness, Hyena, Wild Dog, Leopard, etc being told that there is a free meal there to steal.

Look at the rectums of all four-legged apes and monkeys in Africa. They are inflamed, bare, exposed, hairless. Ours are not. Look at how all four legged monkeys, baboons and Gibbons run.... With their asses higher in the air than their heads... Begging to be speared as they ran away from us...

What is the most common derogatory epithet used in the World? Calling someone an asshole. Who is an asshole? Anyone who runs away from you and shows you their asshole as they do so... in derision... Like the Scots who used to lift up their woman's skirts and waggle their asses at the English... jeering at them. When you call a person an asshole: you are automatically calling them a monkey... a second-class ape, a sub-species we have hated and despised for millions of years.

Meaning they were cowards, and are not ashamed of being cowards. In fact they are proud of being cowards... This is the kind of person who is called an asshole. The kind of coward that runs away and gets away with it.

Which apes do we recognize as being our direct relatives?...The ones who run and move with their ass holes down, not raised up. The Chimpanzee, the Gorilla and the Orangutan.

Twenty fucking million years of this form of killing? Oh gosh. Oh gee. That just might er, um, explain why twenty six million years later: after we ran away from Africa... We killed monkeys, gibbons, baboons, apes, Neanderthals, and each other... by the safest way possible.

By rectal impalement.

Pick up a long branch near some monkeys and see how they react. Then break off the smaller branches, and sharpen the end. See if they do anything out of the ordinary. Surround the tree they are on with humans holding spears or sharp sticks or sharpened branches. See how they react.

But gosh... since we haven't found any twenty five million year-old wooden spears yet... why this means it hasn't been scientifically proven yet. So since we haven't proven this er, scientifically. Since there is no hard physical evidence that this actually happened for 26 fucking million years.... Since the oldest known walking ape bones are only SIX million years old... why this must all be pure conjecture. Just an educated guess...

Bullshit.

Do the research. Study all the geologic evidence, all the climate changes, the tectonic activity, and what little fossils survived... and which areas that are in, and which areas there are NO fossils or geologic evidence going back 27 million years....

The actual remaining evidence is buried too deep, under thousands upon thousands of feet of lava, earth, sediment, rock, etc. Study African cultural symbolisms. See how much evidence there is of our subconscious betraying itself. Look at the evidence. Evaluate it. Compare it. Then make up your own mind. What effect does the original millions of humans, who had their heads cut off... have on us today?

Billions of pieces of paper; with a human head printed on most of them...

Zillions of metal coins with a head imprinted only on one side.

Today, people do not speak: money speaks. Money talks.

Today: we do not listen to people. We listen to money that has decapitated heads on it.
Stand up on a corner and speak the truth without spending one cent: people will ignore you.
Spend one million dollars on a TV ad full of obvious lies and blatant bullshit: people will listen to you.
People are not important. Money is more important than people.
Abstract Decapitated heads are more important than living humans.
The only time people will listen to you today is when you put your money where your mouth is.

Why?

Because the subconscious truth is more powerful than lies. The hidden truth of the practice of human decapitation; is more powerful than all the lies which have been invented to cover up this truth.

How old is the practice of decapitation? At least as old as domesticated chickens. Witch doctors cut their heads off: and tried to read the tracks that their headless bodies made as they ran headless around a yard... spurting blood; until the body died and stopped running purely mechanically: driven by terror-crisis-fear instincts. There once was a famous chicken in America: whose head was cut off: but it did not die. Its body continued to live. The man who had it toured around the states and made money from the headless chicken. The chicken was fed and watered straight through its neck. It lived for a long time this way. It was another omen of the decapitated blind insanity that American culture had risen to. Its precursor was the Legend of Sleepy Hollow; and the headless horseman who had a head made from a pumpkin. Eating pumpkin turns your brains into mush. The headless horseman existed only to kill travelers going through the swamp. It was another symbolic sign of the detached insanity of American culture. Existing only to kill. Mindlessly. Without thinking. Blindly. Cutting off chickens heads until chickens became so used to being decapitated: a freak chicken continued to live even after its head was cut off. A sign that showed you cannot kill anything completely by decapitating it.

Humans tried to read the tracks of headless sacrificed chickens as omens, portents, foretelling the future. The tracks were meaningless scrawls on a bloody dust-covered surface.

Since then: humans have run around the world... in meaningless paths, motivated by terror-crisis-fear... instinctively shedding each others blood; everywhere they went. Trying to make sense of their own meaningless tracks, their own meaningless abstract symbols.

The dynamic of decapitation began first in Africa 25 million years ago. It began with exploding volcanoes losing their heads. It began with our ape ancestors, who lost their heads whenever a volcano exploded. It began with apes who lost their heads whenever a crisis occurred. It began with terrified, traumatized apes losing their mental capacity to integrate their mental understanding. It began with apes refusing to do what they were designed to do. It began with their loss of Pure Wonder.

Why do our heads give off white flakes from the top of their heads; that look like miniature flakes of ash given off from volcanoes? Why does our hair grow thickly; only on the two parts of the body that explode like volcanoes? Sexual organs exploding in orgasm, and the brain exploding with inner awareness- insights, or outer awareness-insights. The human brain's 'Big Bang'. The explosion of human awareness. The explosion of volcanoes in Africa for 25 million years where our ape ancestors lived for 25 million years.

Why do we have hair under their armpits? Where our body heat is the hottest. All other mammals have less hair under their armpits and around their genitals and over their brains than anywhere else on their bodies. Our hair pattern is the exact opposite of all other mammals. Human hair mimics the same energy dynamic as the explosion of a volcano. Wherever our energy is the most intense: we have hair exploding out of our bodies. Not sleekly flattened like other animals. When we feel a foreboding sense of doom or intense fear our hair stands on end; mimicking the volcanic eruption that caused it first to happen.

Does this make any sense to you? Even if you go back millions of years: you can still find understandable, causal, logical reasons for what happened. Human History can be explained. It can be understood. Logically.

Human culture works on subconscious levels. Unfelt pain is detached from social awareness. Pain-filled experiences are abstracted... normalized and turned into concrete symbols: which preserve trauma. The hangers people put their clothes on today represent all the millions of people who were hung by the neck until they died in agony. Before hangers were invented: people put their clothes on wooden pegs or metal hooks. The wooden pegs represented all the millions of people who were impaled on wooden stakes and died in agony. The metal hooks represented all the millions of people who were impaled on metal spikes. Hangers were invented after millions of people were killed by being hung by the neck until dead: not before. Hangers could never have been invented before people were killed by hanging them.

The subconscious Dynamic of Beheading runs throughout all human cultures and all human civilizations: like a deep subterranean river... erupting out from the depths, surfacing, exposing itself, leaking out in many ways and on many levels. From the blowing out of candles, to the practice of doffing hats. From Lewis Carroll's mad queen of Hearts: screaming: 'Off with his head!' To the Kings, mentally, and physically losing their heads. To cutting off heads of wheat. To selectively cutting off the head of everything alive on Earth; as the only part of a plant worth eating and destroying. They are all part of the cultural subconscious legacy of decapitation.

Where does the phrase: 'Go ahead' come from? Inviting your enemy to act first without thinking. What does to be the head of something mean? To be ahead of others...?

Where did the dynamic of Decapitation originate from? From apes decapitating trees of their hanging fruit. Heads of round fruit that were ripe and ready to fall to the ground. Picking up fallen heads, fallen round globes, and eating them. For millions of years.

Today: modern humans are so mentally detached from their own bodies: most people do not even realize they are sick until just before they actually die.

Today: Decapitation has become abstracted into DeCapitalization... Heads are not literally cut off living bodies anymore. Because the head is already so cut off from its body, so far removed from actual truth: the result is almost the same. Mayan writing is made of decapitated heads. Each decapitated head has its own hieroglyphs inside it and under it. Tales of elite rulers and oppressors: are written in series of decapitated heads.

Once: the inhumanity of Decapitation made us civilized.
Then the stupidity of Capitulation made us civilized slaves
Now the inhumanity of DeCapitalization: makes us stupid civilized slaves.

DeCapitalization... Lies... Capital. De-capital the poor of their money by selling them lies... lize... get it? De-capitalize every Nation on Earth of its money, by concentrating all the power and wealth into its Capitals... by politicians and Capitalists selling and spreading lies to the masses...

Throughout human history... what has the response been to people seeking the truth about killers? What response has been to people seeking justice for killers? More secret killings. Killers being killed before they are brought to justice. So the true killers, the higher ups will never be threatened ever. Creating so many levels of corrupt authority, that trying to find who gave the first order becomes buried under the lies of thousands of those who are culpable, who have power.

Throughout human; how many courageous people have been murdered because they dared ask questions of people in power? Millions. Have their true killers ever been brought to justice? Never. Has any of the truth about these killings ever been fully exposed? Never. The same tactics have been used over and over again. Terrorization of the masses. And if that doesn't work: terrorization of the people in lower power positions by the higher ups.

Why does it work? Because they are too guilty. Guilt produces fear. If leaders were innocent of committing any crime: why should they worry about being investigated? Because they know that if the full truth was exposed. Then all of them would be charged and jailed and shot and hung. Then an entire government bureaucracy and military and justice system and enforcement agencies would have to be brought to trial in People's courts; where there is no person who is affiliated with the regime. The masses would be forced to build an entire government from scratch. They would have to create entire prisons and courts and execution squads, and juries who had no dealings with the corrupt regime whatsoever. They would have to create this without one single wealthy or famous or powerful person being involved. They would have to man these institutions with honest courageous poor people who have the self esteem and passion to go after the guilty and hang them and jail them and bring ALL of them to justice. Instead of bringing one low level criminal to a token court for a token lie of token justice. They would have to strictly segregate poor honest people from all liars and cowards and rich and wealthy and powerful people and....

But oops. Humans are emotional cowards. Humans are liars and corrupt. If you start at the top and follow the path of corruption in any society...: you will find that it reaches all the fucking way down to the poorest, lowest human in that stinking pile.

The covering up of truth. Covering up guilt. Covering up responsibility. Every human does it. Look at a dog or cat when it shits. They look around to make sure nobody is watching when they do the dirty deed. They have a shamefaced, disgusted look on their faces when they are doing it. They growl and snarl in hate and disgust afterwards... scraping and scratching dirt and grass over it to cover it up. We human have been covering up our own shit for millions of years.

By Decapitation. By beheading.

Some Examples and Token Icons of Decapitation

Some examples of how our legacy of decapitation in human history has been preserved and expressed by the human subconscious are;

The decapitated stone heads of Easter Island. All tribal, clan, and family totems of the Pacific Islands, North America, Africa, and Asia are icons of decapitation. heads placed on top of heads placed on top of heads... with the oldest head on top. What is the name for the underworld of Ancient Greeks> where displaced human spirits wander after their physical body expires? Hades: The land of decapitated Heads. Just shift the 'e' after the 'd; instead of before the 'd': After you die: your head goes to Hades: the land of shadows, the land of unseen shades. Shadows, decapitated heads: the worship of decapitated heads. Shadows, heads... shadow-heads: Shades, Hades.

All replication: replication was invented by the first humans who replicated icons of decapitated heads that anthropologists mistake as 'beads'. They are not beads: they are duplicated decapitated heads. All duplication comes from tools being duplicated. All tools that were duplicated were used to commit the same duplicated killing act of decapitating a living thing: cutting off its head.

The rosary: the endless counting and re-counting of beads is a legacy of the uncounted dead of the past, the uncounted decapitated Neanderthals and humans who were slaughtered for 200,00 years and buried: covered up, to be forgotten. The abacus: the counting and re-counting of beads. Mathematics: the concept of accumulation. The idea of counting itself, the very basis of all abstract mathematics is merely a legacy of the uncounted dead people that were decapitated, the uncounted Neanderthals that were murdered, the uncounted living animals and plants and insects and birds and fish that are killed by every succeeding generation of humans: increasing the death toll of uncounted dead every generation, every day: until now, people using the idea of accumulation: Banks and the international Corporate corpses, have put the human world into billions and trillions of dollars of debt, while piling up: accumulation hundreds of dollars of wealth. A double insanity. Two sides of the same coin of the human past coming back to haunt them. Each dollar representing 100 copper deathsheds, 10 silver deathsheads, 20 dollars representing one gold deathhead. Representing the pyramidal hierarchy of guilt and responsibility for the sins and crimes of killing living things. The richer and more powerful you are: the more guilty you are of these sins and crimes. From beads made of bone, to beads made of stone, to coins made of copper, to coins made of silver, to coins made of gold, to money made of paper, to certificates of debt, to treasury bonds etc: the whole history of the human species can be understood and explained by these simple universal truths and principles:

Energy cannot be destroyed
All Energy is the Evolution of Experience

The human subconscious mind and the genetic human body preserves and accumulates all unexperienced experiences that have not been digested and integrated and compressed into the energy itself

As humans killed more untold trillions of living things these repetitive duplicated replicated icons of decapitation have multiplied into duplicated, replicated copies of identity. These abstracted representations are token symbols of actual decapitations.

Some examples of abstract tokens of decapitation are: Bags: all things you can put a decapitated head into and hide it from others, all cowls, all head coverings: hiding your thoughts. All bags and packages you can hide things in. All containers that you have to take off the head in order to use, All screw-off caps, all caps that are removable. All Coins, stamps, buttons, the heads of zippers, pins, capitalized letters, hats, neckties. Aiguillettes. Before buttons were invented: the Aiguillette was what was used to keep your clothing together; a most gruesome and obvious form of strangulation; it was a very inconvenient and difficult task that took all 10 fingers and much twisting and cunning to accomplish. During the 1960's, some winter coats still used the Aiguillette as a fastener. Decapitated food, anything you take the head off before you eat it. Anything you only eat the head of: grain, rice, tomatoes, ice cream cones, grapes, raisins, peanuts, M&M's, candy, boxed cereals, muesli, trail mix, nuts, fruit, vegetables. Plates: anything you put on a plate to eat. Heads of state, heads of families. Heads of social organizations, institutions, the concept of a Supreme head-being: God, the making of bread by cutting off the heads of grain, the head of a bed, the head of a burning cigar or cigarette: knocked of as ashes: getting 'ahead', the concept of progress as the most important thing in life, competition: getting ahead of your competition, the concept of competitive elimination: 'heads will fall', 'if you are not up to snuff', snuff: sneezing your head off by taking a pinch of snuff to clear your head, giving 'head' sexually, warheads, bombs, firearms, bullets, artillery: any weapon that shoots something: slingshots, arrows, spears, rocks, the heading of a page, a header in grammar, the heading on a page, the heading on a sentence, the heading on a paragraph, somersaults, head-over-heels, crowns, the crowns of Corinthian pillars, pillars do not have heads: all pillars are decapitated, all segments of pillars: all decapitated columns, the idea of decapitating pillars of the community, the idea of dethroning kings, the eating of fruit like grapes, apples, etc; all edible things like coconuts, papaya,, unpeeling the head of a banana and eating it, all vegetables in the shape of a head like onions, cabbage, lettuce, the picking of leaves, the picking of fruits, the picking of beans: all drug foods the picking of spices: creating every single drug we call food, ice cream cones, all ice cream in the shape of a decapitated head, all food portions in the shape of a head, all toppings on all food, decapitated flowers, the Rose Parade: hundreds of millions of decapitated heads of flowers, all fire with flames that are decapitated, all fireworks, the crushing of spices, the picking of decapitated heads like mushrooms, eating nuts, cracking their shell, eggs, corks and bungs used to seal barrels and bottles, the tops of bottles, the sealing and taking off the tops of bottles, jars; all tools that have a head, the head of a hammer, nails, the head of a nail, pounding

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

the head of a nail, the cutting off of the heads of large trees before decapitating them, cutting off the heads of animals to kill them and eat them, all mathematics: the counting of heads, or I's and adding them up, the using of tools to create decapitated segments, all sports, all balls used in sports, the hitting of all balls, ping-pong, badminton, bowling, bowling pins: the decapitation of bowling pins by a bowling ball, kingpins, kings, jewelry, stickpins with diamond heads on them, canes, walking sticks with metal heads, staffs, any artifact denoting being the head of something, scepters, globes, flyswatters, turbans, musical instruments that blare out sound: decapitating it; using holes in wood and brass instruments to decapitate the natural sound into a shorter wavelength, all fretted and unfretted musical instruments, pressing on a fret to make the note shorter, like a violin or guitar, drums, drumsticks, cymbals, the heads of shoelaces, the detached mentality called the ego: decapitated and disconnected from all the other needs and energy flows of a human being, the concept of life after death as a detached form of spirit, the structure of all hierarchy, all capitalist companies and corporate bodies being ruled and controlled by detached heads of business, the capitalization of letters at the head of a word or sentence or paragraph: especially in ancient sacred Christian texts: where the first capital letter is huge, the eating of fish by decapitating them first, the use of all drugs, narcotics wine, coffee, pills: to create a disconnection between the brain and the rest of the human being, the concept of anesthesia, using drugs to numb the brain or prevent it from feeling the body's pain, all cultures that value stoicism, macho pigs who cannot love, the concept of the hero as a stone face refusing to face the truth, refusing to feel love, refusing to feel any emotion whatsoever, refusing to cry, the stone carvings of all the ancient Kings, the decapitated carvings of all Kings on coins, the insane idea of all kings ruling by only using their decapitated heads as decapitated coins to spread their authority, all stone busts, plaster busts, the stone faces of all heroes in modern media who refuse to feel human emotion, ping-pong, the computer game: pong, King Kong: the King cut off from State: King Kong falling off the Empire State building: all the video games that are based upon decapitated heads decapitating other heads, which are all based on the old arcade pinball machines that shot decapitated heads that bounced around scoring points hitting and scoring on as many stationary targets of decapitated heads as possible, the decapitation of hair... haircuts, shaving daily, cutting your nails, the idea of assassination as a political tool, the concept of character assassination used in all human societies to cut off people who are thought too uppity or stick out too much, and do not conform... the detached form of observation that only use instruments for the eye: microscopes, telescopes, star-gazing, stamp collecting, the collections of anything from bric-a-brac to gold coins, portraits, still pictures of decapitated heads, cameos, brooches, belt buckles, shoe buckles, still photographs of decapitated heads, talking heads, heads on celluloid talking, heads on screens, moving pictures of talking heads, the idea of a leader as a talking head, all pictures on money of decapitated heads, mouthpieces, microphones, the idea of one person speaking for another, speechwriters, lawyers, politicians, amplified music coming out of a loudspeaker, amplifiers of singing-talking heads, the idea of doing nothing but talking as being the only form of social activity allowed in polite societies, the heads of shoelaces, all knots, topknots, tying hair into knots, the idea of cutting up sounds into words, into letters, into decapitated abstract symbols of meaning separated from the body of the meaning by segmentation, all segmented forms of tool-use, all tools that segment things into decapitated heads, all decapitated forms of awareness-thinking-feeling, all forms of specialization, all segmented ways of living-doing-seeing, decapitating the natural order of things into decapitated insane pieces: decapitating a family into age groups, decapitating a community into alienated isolated individuals, all mass butchery of living animals by cutting off their heads, Morse code, ticker tape, all digitalization of signals into meaningless decapitated codes, the invention of the glass tube: the first decapitated head that could mechanically receive and send energy through nerves called wires, the invention of the transistor: the first sold decapitated head that could send and receive signals, the invention of microchips: tiny decapitated heads with their own tiny brain circuits that could perform more complicated functions than the first huge glass-blown giants called vacuum tubes: because there was nothing inside them, all glass blowing, blowing up molten glass with hot air and then decapitating it to make a glass vase or bottle, all containers from bottles, jars, gourds, ladles, to pitchers and teapots with decapitated lids, all containers, chests, holding treasure, wealth, valuables, all spices and decapitated herbs, all furniture made from decapitating trees, all houses made into decapitated heads where the people living inside them only use their heads and not their hearts or bodies, the steam engine: decapitating steam to explode out in puffs of decapitated destroyed power, all wheels, all round wheels used in machines, all watches, with dials pointing at the decapitated numbers of a disconnected circle, the decapitation of all circles into wedges, pie slices, the invention of the wedge, the invention of the axe as a metal decapitated head to stick on a wooden decapitated piece of branch, all idols, all icons, all figureheads, all abstract symbols representing the head, the pinnacle, the top, the apex, the height of anything, all hierarchical awareness and structures that deem the head as the most valuable, the best, the most noble, etc; Jack-in the Box, all boxes, everything that is put into a box or container, FedEx: the obsession of transporting boxes and parcels, the song; 'Pop goes the Weasel', all mass-produced goods that are boxed and shipped, the detachment of specialized labor and work, the creation of holes, digging, all mining, piston heads, engine heads, everything that is called the 'head' of something, the froth on the top of a glass of beer,: to be blown away, the use of all zeros and ones: as in Japanese Zeros decapitating American ships, zeros and ones being created and then decapitated inside computers, the use of all zeros and ones in mathematics, scalping, the taking of heads, the shrinking of heads: which the computer microchip is the latest evolution of, .... Scalping tickets, making a profit, taking money off the top, skimming, all kinds of cheese, the profit motive, decapitalizing the mass-body of society, by cutting off its extra capital by selling people things in boxes that they don't need, the TV, the boob tube that comes in a box, the entire idea of making a profit by skimming off the top, all real estate sales, all selling and buying for profit, all turnovers: turning over stock, turning over houses for profit, all financial deals like rollovers, rolling the head over, and hoping to make even more profit, all capital investment, all business investment, all images of decapitated heads on coins, bills, buildings, all art, all graven images of heads, all pots and pans.... All hooks, everything you use to hang something on, everything you hang onto a hook, all hangings, all public executions that wrings the neck or cut it off. All effigies hanging from ropes: to denote dead souls who once lived.... the abacus; beads on a string: representing token deathsheds. Used for multiplication and adding up others tokens deathsheds because the number of accumulated decapitated living things humans have decapitated cannot be represented individually anymore, they have to be represented by abstractions, abstract numbers, Arabic numerals; to count the grains of sand in the desert known as Arabia: an arid desert: created by man and his obsession with decapitating every living thing he sees and can get his hands on. Mosaic tiles. All the billions of tiny tiles manufactured in the ancient east for thousands of years... all the modern tiles in bathrooms and kitchens, all the tiled floors and roofs; 3,000 years of making trillions of small ceramic tiles the size of a miniature head... balls: made of the deadest material possible: lead balls: pistol balls, musket balls, cannonballs, bullets, the heads of bullets... heads with brass bodies, trillions and trillions of deathsheds designed to kill Life, warheads, artillery shells with deathsheds, exploding artillery shells, machinegun bullets, anti-aircraft bullets, bullets made of white phosphorus... metal jacketed bullets, hunting rifle bullets, handgun bullets, heads made of dead lead... trillions and trillions of them... to name just a few...

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

But the worst one, the most obvious one, the most evil one is money. Coins with decapitated heads on them, pieces of paper with decapitated heads on them. Now you know the true meaning of money. Now you know why money is the root of all evil. The original meaning of money is death; deathsheds, decapitated heads, genocide, mass murder, thousands of years of accumulated hatred, thousands of years of accumulated racism and bloodshed and hatred, the accumulation of all kinds of human evil into one poisonous abstract concept.

Every stone that was ever cut, every brick that was ever made is an icon representing the evil and the sin and the guilt of killing and decapitation. Every stone and brick that was ever laid on top of each other or beside each other to make every ancient Ziggurat, Tower, Temple, Pyramid, or Building that was ever built. Every jewel, every precious gem ever cut and polished represents a dead thing. Every road that was ever built from bricks or cobblestones, every decapitated tree, every piece of decapitated wood called lumber used to build houses, every log, every decapitated branch cut off from a decapitated log... in short: all of Man's labor, all of his sweat, his toil, his effort and time: has been devoted to only two subconscious drives buried in his collective and individual psyche: the need to decapitate, and the need to cover-up the decapitation: termed whitewashing, lying, avoiding, denial, etc, etc, etc, etc, etc, etc, etc, etc, ad nauseum.

All because humans have not developed their Sense of Pure Wonder and refuse to even look at, explore and explain their own past.

Why are you working like a slave? Why are you doing things that bore you? Why are you doing the same things over and over again? Why are you doing things you hate doing? Why...?

The phenomenon of human masses: masses of humans who do not think for themselves, millions and billions of humans who do not use their minds or their brains to think for themselves: the body of a tribe, a nation, a people: the headless body of a mob with no head, the heads of all human societies, the thinking part of human society, the decision part of human society being cut off from the body of human society and not knowing what is good for the body, the masses of humanity, all mass conformity, all military social structures all authoritarian forms of social government down to the head of the family, all detached thinking, all scientific forms of thinking, the decapitation of thought from feeling, the decapitation of the mind from the heart, all detached tools, all attachments that can be attached and detached, all attaché cases, all attachments that can be detached, all human relationships that are detached and attached and then detached,

All human attachments to dead things: that are actually detached.. The insane idea of ownership: the idea of owning dead things, identifying yourself by the dead things you own. Owning a chair: not being able to detach yourself from the ownership of a fucking chair, or a fucking car, or house, etc.

All bric-a-brac. All icons, tokens, plaques, plates, knick-knacks, carvings, pottery, china, glassware, trinkets, trash, junk, all the trillions of fucking dead shit people are attached to. All the paintings, photos, idols, icons, imagos, images, all busts and all portraits of heads with nonexistent bodies decapitated from them, all attachments to physical possessions, all detached material objects people are attached to, yet are actually detached from. If you lost every fucking material object you were attached to: it would not hurt your humanity or your humaneness. All you would lose is your fucking sense of attachment to fucking dead things that are not actually attached to you and never fucking will ever be attached to you.

All the fucking physical objects people give their innocent children called 'toys'. To brainwash them into developing attachments to physical fucking dead objects instead of living connections to living things. As the babies and children throw them away: they are given more fucking toys, and more, and more, and their parents do not throw them away even though their babies and children stop playing with them because the newness of a new toy is fleeting, superficial and worthless. But parents do not stop giving their young toys until: they brainwash their young enough so they develop attachments to toys and material objects... which they never use or want or see. Stuffed into attics and basements and closets and corners and chests... to be ignored for decades: only to be taken out and looked at once in a lifetime. When the attachment they have to the toys and material objects: are only MEMORIES which the objects evoke, nostalgia, love of the past. So throw the fucking shit away and keep your memories. If your memory fades: it is not worth keeping. The attachment to old songs, to all music, to all dead sounds, all old dead buildings, dead cities, the attachment to all familiar things that never change: fear of change, fear of losing any attachment to any dead thing. The preservation of all these fucking dead things humans are attached to. The attachment to old dead memories.

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1340

Why? Because people never lived their lives fully. They never developed their Sense of Pure Wonder. People do not live their lives in the present. They lose the experiencing of life a Sense of Pure Wonder gives you. They lose the wonder, the specialness that living in the present with living things, instead of dead things gives you. The nostalgia of the past, the love of the past is the sadness of never living when you had a chance to live. It is the sadness of all the lost chances, all the destroyed lives and life energy that they lost being forced to live in the dead thing called civilization.

Split-level bungalows, all forms of detached transportation, trailers, trains, cabooses, all detached forms of packaging, all detached containers, container ships, detachable bulkheads, compartments, all buildings with detached segments of areas called rooms, all detached forms of human building, all detached forms of work, all detached commuters driving miles to work and back: detaching their work from their family life, all trips that detach you from where you live and then re-attach you when you come back, all detached forms of furniture, all forms of segmentation, separation, etc. etc...

All mathematical numbers, all abstract numbers, all scores in sports, all point-counting, all head counts, all censuses, all counting of humans, all worship of numbers, all centuries, centurions, all numbers of massed soldiers, all numbers worshipped on money, all number-worship, all mathematical zeros, all mathematical 'ones' that make up the accumulating total of all decapitated living things the human species had killed and is continuing to kill and decapitate in mass numbers, all genocides, all mass exterminations, all mass butchery, all mass processing of all factories, all mass produced goods, all code numbers, letter codes, codes with numbers and letter mixed up together, the counting of everything from stars to leaves to molecules.

In short: literally all of human civilization is merely a creative subconscious concretion of the denied past experiences of the crime and sin of decapitations that humans committed millions of years ago... and have been accumulating ever since into a dead subconscious memory of all the evil crimes and sins ever committed, a legacy of the accumulated negative past, a one-sided memory.

Each crime of decapitation: was a subconscious attempt to cover up the sin of a previous decapitation. This is the energy dynamic of insanity is the energy dynamic of civilization. The more you cover up the crime of a decapitation by more decapitations: the guiltier you become, and the more you are driven to deny your guilt by committing more crimes of decapitation, the more your subconscious finds different creative ways to insulate you from the truth, the more ways you decapitate your own senses and awareness so you will remain ignorant and unaware of your sinfulness and guilt. If we do not do anything to stop it: this entire energy dynamic of accelerating decapitation will explode into a nuclear holocaust that will destroy the entire Earth:

Every fucking decapitation has been covered up by more decapitations. Every fucking beheading has been covered up by more beheadings. Every murder, every killing, has been covered up by more murders and more killings. Every mass murder has been covered up by more mass murders. Every lie has been covered up by more lies. Every crime, every sin: has been covered up by more crimes and sins. The true history of Decapitation and DeCapitalization has never been written. The true history of humans and civilization has been Hidden. Buried. Ignored. Denied. Covered up. Painted over. Whitewashed.

1340

Take the evil of money: for thousands of years: nearly all portable wealth called money was in the form of heavy metals: it was in the form of the deadest metal they could find or the deadest rock crystals they could find called gems. Money was in the form of the most inert, the heaviest, the hardest to find, the rarest metals were used to measure wealth: the pictures of deaths heads were stamped onto round metal coins.

Then... as more millions upon millions of humans became rich: money changed: instead of being heavy: it became light: it was made out of paper instead of metal. It was the same evil, only changed in form from a flat coin to a float 2-diensional piece of paper. It was the same evil of the gourd: the evil of accumulation. Why did money change from metal to paper? Not for practical reasons. It is almost impossible to counterfeit a gold or silver coin unless you cover it with actual gold or silver so thickly... that its slightly lesser gold content is not worth counterfeiting. Money changed from metal to paper because it came to represent the evil of accumulation that all living plants do. Money became paper to represent the paper thin leaves that fall from trees every year. It became paper to represent the worthlessness of paper money. Leaves are used by trees for only one short summer and then thrown away as worthless, to accumulate and rot in piles for centuries. The first living DNA on Earth was pure heavy metal. The first living DNA on land were plants with leaves. The changing of money from metal to paper has many reasons behind it. There is a huge hidden history behind the change of money from metal to paper. Just like the change of the 1st living DNA from metal to organic plants on land that grow leaves has a huge hidden history behind it. Evil constantly changes its form to avoid being recognized and killed. Evil changes its color, its shape in many ways. The evil of money changed its physical form from the heaviest to the lightest. It changed its form from a material that lasts almost forever, to a material that is so short lived, it has to be constantly replaced because it tears and becomes wrinkled and worn after only a few years. The evil leaves of paper money: have become almost as numerous as the leaves of the trees of the earth. Every year: 7 billion people work to make the paper leaves of money, and throw them away on consumer goods: just as the trees of the earth throw away their leaves every year. Is this being more intelligent than a tree? No it is not. The evil of money may change its form and color in many ways: but each leaf of paper money still has decapitated heads on it. Look at the embossed stamps on leaves of paper money: they are made to look as if they were made of solid gold and look like the oldest gold insignia of the oldest civilizations that first used gold as an abstract symbol of power, status and wealth. This is not a coincidence

The fact is: all money, all coins, all paper money with decapitated heads printed on them: are abstract symbols of death. Money is death... The more you handle money, the deader your soul becomes: the more you value money, the less human, the more inhumane you become. The modern system of Capitalization is actually DE-capitalization of the poor on a mass scale of impoverishment and genocide. Decapitalization and decapitation are the same thing.

Tokens of Death

Where do all these deathsheds come from? They come from the first human apes who invented the use of tools by splitting rocks apart into stone chips of death, dead stones being killed and segmented into cutting implements to be used to kill with and butcher dead carcasses.

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

The abstracting of these deathsheds into ‘money’ is the insane abomination of the worship and preservation of death and dead things: nothing else.

When you realize this... when you realize that everything you have been told is the complete opposite of the truth: then you will develop such a rage and anger against this evil thing called civilization that you will not rest until it has been completely destroyed. When you realize how all truth has been buried by humans: you will not rest until truth is raised up and exposed and all the lies and false myths of civilization are completely destroyed.

What are some natural deathsheds found in Nature? Grains of sand. Dust particles, raindrops, snow flakes. They all fall down from a huge distance and then they disappear.

Why do all natural deathsheds disappear? Because they are designed to die completely: they are designed to re-compose themselves into organic Life. Because they are not designed to Accumulate. If all the raindrops and snowflakes and grains of sand had the same one-sided idea that human civilization has, if they all accumulated and did not disappear: the entire Earth would be covered in dead snowflakes and grains of sand and rain drops, and there would be no Life at all. The entire Earth would be DEAD.

Life is a flow of energy. Life is movement. Life is not designed to act as a one-sided accumulation of deathsheds.

This is the basic reason why civilization is evil. Civilization is evil because it preserves and accumulates deathsheds, it does not preserve and accumulate LIFE.

How ancient is this insane worship of deathsheds and death? ‘Ashes to ashes: Dust to Dust thou art’ Taken from the English Burial Service. Adapted from the Biblical text, Genesis 3:19 in the King James Version and can be found in the a text in the "Book of Common Prayer".

It comes from the legacy and history of millions of years in Africa when volcanoes spread their ashes of death and dust, and from the new life that sprang out of these devastated landscapes of horror and complete desolation, in spite of the evil which destroyed the land. It comes from the deserts of sand created by humans over millions of years of ecological destruction, it comes from insane monkeys and human apes worshipping the power of total destruction and death. It comes from volcanoes destroying new Life over and over again in Africa for millions and millions of years turning it back into landscapes covered and buried under Deathsheds of ashes and snow flakes and rain drops and grains of sand. This is how evil the concept of burial is. This is what civilization does. Civilization buries the truth and it buries living things under accumulations of death, dead dust, dead grains of sand, dead snow flakes. The intoning of this at a burial is evil. It speaks of the insane resignation and meaningless of Life; it suggest that your life was all in vain, that all Life is futile and pointless. That nothing you did or felt or discovered or realized or knew or experienced had any value or meaning to it. This is why civilization should be destroyed completely. Civilization is based upon the preservation of death: not Life.

Dynamics of Whitewashing

Human evil is hidden, buried or whitewashed: in one way or another. Little white lies are the most common forms of whitewashing. The thousands, the hundreds of thousands, the millions, the hundreds of millions, the billions, the hundreds of billions of little white lies told and uttered every day for thousands of years... accumulating, poisoning human language, twisting and reversing the original meanings of words... for thousands and thousands of years, burying the true meanings of words, burying the truth, burying the true history of the past under mountains of little white lies until there is nothing but snow. Being snowed;.. a 'snow job', covering the truth and hiding it from view under millions of little white snowflakes of frozen dead water: is all the same dynamic of one-sided accumulation. Actual snow melts every spring, helping to create new Life. Little white lies do not help to create new Life because they do not melt away; they do not melt and become transparent: revealing the true Earth as it actually is. They are preserved and perpetuated. They rot, they accumulate, they pile up, they poison the mind, the body, the soul... they poison the cultures of human, until they become a mountain of lies so huge, so deep, so thick, so all-pervasive; that it takes years of digging to get at the truth, so it takes centuries of digging to get to the bottom of what really happened and why it happened and how it happened. Every human soul is piled deep with mountains and millions of little white lies that accumulate over a lifetime of lying to yourself and to others... and other lying to you... and you swallowing their little white lies, and making them your own. The accumulation of swallowing the little white lies of others and being brainwashed to lie to yourself, and accumulate more and more little white lies has become so huge an accumulation of spiritual poison: that today: newborn babies and infants and children have to be force-fed poisons into their physical bodies: so that they become both physically and mentally and emotionally and spiritually acclimatized and inured and immune to the pile of little white lies they are fed and forced to swallow before: Before they can develop any critical awareness of the shit they are told and fed and vomit out the lies and poisons in revulsion and disgust. The dynamic of accumulating little white lies is merely one of countless civilized human tactics and strategies to avoid the truth about anything and everything.

One tactic of avoidance of the truth is reflective or deflective projection.

Taking something: and changing it, and then projecting that changed image outward. Turning and twisting perceptions around: changing the perception of actual truth around 180 degrees to make the truth seem like a lie. Turning, evil into a twisted irrational distorted perception that makes it seem to be good.

But one tactic that stands out; is whitewashing. Whitewashing is a symptom of human subconscious shame and guilt. It is the human subconscious mind trying to hide its actual truth, trying to wash the past away, cover it up, hide it, bury it, wash it away, cleansing oneself of rotten lies, detaching ourselves from our own awareness, our own acts, our own emotions, our own thoughts. Some examples of subconscious whitewashing are:

Building the Cheops's Pyramid out of white marble and polishing it so smooth that it reflected the sun; it blinded you if you looked at it.

Building all the palaces of Emperors and Kings out of white marble: in order to whitewash their filthy black evil.

The White house. The most corrupt seat of modern Western power, the blackest most evil deeds and decisions committed in a whitewashed house of privilege and power and corruption,.

The whitewashing of Chicago when it became the butchering capital of America: the blackest hell-hole of a city in the throes of greed in the entire world... in its heyday. Using the World's Fair to Whitewash its stink of the millions of animals penned waiting for slaughter, its black evil of the most inhuman human souls ever to be assembled in every vice and crime known, its black grime, the dirtiest most polluted city on earth in its heyday, famous for its black crime, its black pollution, its blackened death, as the worlds largest mass slaughterhouses: killing millions of animals a year... Holding a an entirely white, whitewashed World's Fair. Building an entire city out of white marble, made of white, fake. Greco-Roman buildings. To distract visitors from the blackened ugliness and horrors of the actual city.

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1344

The whitewashing of Rome's guilt in crucifying Jesus by Pontius Pilate; ceremonially and ritually washing his hands of the entire affair. Even though it was Roman soldiers who did the dirty work of killing him. Even though it was a Roman government that condoned the action and the Roman government that carried out the execution.

Humans washing their hands before eating. Ceremonially and ritually washing their hands of the sin they are about to commit. Afraid of becoming contaminated by germs. Not aware that they are actually projecting their own subconscious contamination as dirty killers and dirty eaters; onto what they kill and eat. When it is actually them: the humans who kill and eat, who are contaminating the entire earth by their sins. The idea of needing to wash yourself daily to stay clean.

The farther back you go in human history: the less washing of your own body there is. The more shame and guilt civilized humans accumulated over time: the more often they had to wash themselves in order to feel clean... feeling temporarily whitewashed.

Whitewashing your teeth twice a day by brushing them and then... gargling and spitting out the waste water: much like early men spat on their own hands, and on cave walls.. Brightening your teeth, whitening teeth, brushing teeth with toothpaste; so that white foam drips out of your mouth... Because mad dogs and Englishmen foam at the mouth. Because they are totally mad, insane.

The whitewashing of all European Aristocracy for 2,000 years. Turning evil mass-killers into mythified whitewashed heroes. Turning evil craven cowardly Kings into brave honest, whitewashed noble-minded heroes. Until all aristocrats wore nothing but white: because they were so evil and so corrupt: they had to whitewash everything about themselves. Until they all wore white false Whigs. Until they pomaded and sprinkled themselves with white flour, and perfumed themselves to cover up the stink of their rotting bodies, and the stink of their dirty black souls and their subconscious guilt and shame for all of the crimes and atrocities they committed. Turning themselves into sickly pale whitened corpses while still alive. Their masqued balls: hiding behind costumes and masks: hiding what they actually were from each other.

As European aristocracy declined: it was replaced by the bourgeoisie. At first; they were a relatively lesser evil than the aristocrats. But their numbers and their outdoing thee upper-class turned them into an even worse evil of mass hypocrisy. The whitewashing of the European gentlemen. They covered themselves in black, not white... Actually the layer was a black coat over a white shirt. The whitewashed color of their evil was represented more honestly. They kept the idea of white, and layered black over it. Then the aristocrats and Robber Barons copied their style... and wore the same costume... the really filthy black-handed cheaters and liars also began wearing white gloves.

Look at how the dress of European aristocrats and bourgeoisie evolved and changed. Their costumes are symptoms of their spiritual sickness. In the 20th century: no European gentleman was allowed to go out in public without wearing a hat and gloves. Their culture was forcing them to insulate their hands with gloves from all physical labor. The sign of a man wearing gloves was the sign of a man who did no physical labor. It was a sick hypocritical statement of class. Poor people who did physical labor and needed gloves; were not allowed to wear them. Only rich fops and upper class ninnies were allowed to wear them. The hat represented the increasingly cunning devious sneakiness of their minds: which before, European aristocrats had not needed. Their evil had been more openly evil. Their minds had been more openly devious.

1344

But even here there were class distinctions. The true aristocrats wore white gloves: because they came from a culture that was thousands of years more corrupt and sick. Aspiring bourgeoisie men wore black gloves: not white gloves. Their evil had not descended to the level where they needed to whitewash the evil of their hands that much. They did office work, not physical labor; they were not completely useless and evil as the white-gloved aristocrats were. True Aristocrats wore white gloves as a sign of their privileged class. A mark of pride that their filthy good-for-nothing families had not done a single decent days work for hundreds, nay thousands of years...

The growing of white cotton, as the best way to whitewash humans by wearing a garment made of white fibers. The incredible subconscious craze for cotton garments... using black slaves to grow and harvest it.

All the layers of human dress over the ages... the layers of black over white, over black... red-over-white, etc... are layers of whitewashing. They are all layers of subconscious guilt and shame.

The whitewashing of bread. Bleaching all the nutritional goodness out of it. Following the example of our peers: because aristocrats ate whitewashed food. One of the English Royal family's favorite meals is: white fish with whitened crème Anglaise poured over it, and white watercress sandwiches, with the crusts cut off. As the ultimate ritual of eating whitewashed food.

All layered tastes

The layering taste of a layer cake, the layering of dead meat: cold cuts, the layered taste of haute cuisine food, the layered taste of expensive wine, the layered-look in haute couture fashion, the layers of a sandwich, layers of petticoats, layers of make-up, etc.

The whitewashing of human bodies: The white linen of the Egyptians who whitewashed their bodies with white, the white togas of the Greeks and Roman elite who whitewashed themselves into extinction as did the Egyptian elite. The whitewashing of dead human bodies: burying dead corpses covered in white shrouds, the whitewashing of white marble statues. The use of white marble to whitewash everything as token abstract symbols made concrete, as floors, statues, buildings, pillars, busts, etc.

Why marble? Because for 1,000's of years: all humans were brainwashed to marvel at the deeds of their ancestors and never dream of trying to surpass them. The whitewashing of Cheops's Pyramid. Built Cheaply... out of lousy, soft sandstone... and covered with a thin veneer of shining polished immaculate white marble; polished to reflect and deflect away responsibility and guilt. Polished to deflect away the wrath of the Egyptian sun God: Ammon Ra, from the ruler who was buried in it.

The use of white plaster....on all Mediterranean, and Middle Eastern, and Mayan houses and buildings for over three thousand years... the spreading of buildings painted white, whitewashed with lime, all over the world in many civilizations. Covering up the black evil that made these buildings, covering up the black evil that lives inside these buildings. All patching compounds that are white. All white powders.

The whitewashing of all rooms, apartments, office buildings in the world: by building these artificial walls out of a white paste called gypsum in mass produced wallboards: used to make all the interior walls and ceilings of nearly every modern building. Replacing the older method of making them out of white plaster as a mud that was troweled and smoothed by hand.

Gypsum. The sum of Egypt's cheating lie. That it was better to live inside an artificially made, whitewashed box instead of outside in Nature.

The whitewashing of elite Greeks and Romans: wearing whitened, bleached robes: covering up their blackness of their intentions, their bodies, their souls.

The women of ancient Greece wore toxic lead paint: white lead to whiten their faces. And in doing so: they poisoned themselves, and died early from cancers of the skin and body. Whiteness was prized as a sign of elite royalty. The richest most powerful Greeks were the whitest, palest, most unhealthy, sickly, diseased souls on Earth of their time. The Ancient Greeks poisoned the entire concept of aesthetic beauty by whitewashing their own sick bodies: and replacing true health of tanned shining rosy cheeked youth: with sickly white lead-poisoned painted masks: hiding the old, wrinkled faces of ugly hags. The Greeks replaced the love of living beauty with the love of dead beauty. They preferred to worship dead stone images of beautiful young people: rather than value the living beauty of these youths. The level and intensity of their insane blind evil corruption is proven and shown by how many ways they subconsciously desperately whitewashed themselves and tried to purify their rotten lying hating evil souls.

They invented the cunning seed idea of right is white; is might; is good: is not evil. And plastered every fucking thing they could get their dirty hands on with whitewashed layers of lies and cover-ups to hide the actual blackness of their filthy deeds and souls.

The whitewashing of sick, hating killers: called Crusaders. Covering up their hate and greed with religious bullshit. Covering up their chain mail, with a white sheet. Covering up their evil intentions with the hypocrisy of a Holy War.

The whitewashing of humans killing other humans: as being a holy occupation. All holy wars are whitewashed cover-ups. Hiding the filthy, dirty, secrets of envy, hate, fear, greed, inside each soul who uses religion to sanctify war, hate, fear and killing. Shooting a bullet through the body of another living person, or thrusting a spear through the living flesh of another person is holy. Because it creates a hole... that kills. All Holy things kill. All holy things are evil.

The whitewashing of bleached paper. Covering up lies written on paper by layer after layer of covered up pages in a book. Lies written on white paper with black ink. Black Lies printed on whitewashed paper. Each blackened white page covering another whitewashed page. Made into a book: covered up by putting covers over each book. Millions of book covers. Leather covers. Representing the millions of animals humans have skinned and killed. Billions of whitewashed pages. Accumulating. And then periodically burned. Rotting slowly. Disintegrating into dust. The abstract symbols called writing and knowledge; are whitewashed lies. Every new whitewashed book covering up older whitewashed lies.

The whitewashing of all people ever to hold power over others. The whitewashing of all Kings. Turning mass murderers, sadistic monsters, liars and thieves into heroes. Lauding them to the skies. Praising them as progressive pushers of the advancement of civilization.

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1347

Kings giving their henchmen: 'Carte Blanche'. Awarding them virtual powers of a King. Whitewashing them from any crime they might commit in advance. This is where the license to kill comes from. Legalizing killing by royal decree.

The whitewashing of evil rich aristocrats: by calling them 'nobles'... Cunningly brainwashing the masses into believing that 'Nobles' were nobler not only by ancestry: by being highborn. But that they were nobler in their personality, their motives, their character, their ethics, their morals, their spirituality, their behavior, their manners, their clothes. The white powders used by European aristocracy, pomaded white powder bleaching their faces into pale ghosts, until their clothes became a class-uniform of white silk and white bleached cloth, white pomaded wigs covered with white bleached hair. The Klu Klux Klan. A secret organization based upon racial hatred. Covering up their own evil with white sheets and white caps and white hoods. Just like the Crusaders once did.

Tom Sawyer whitewashing a fence. The fence represents the separation, the divide, the injustice, the inequity between whites and blacks, haves and have-nots. Covering up the true horror and ugliness of it all by turning it into a whitewashed fairytale. Covering up all the hate and killing and meanness that Americans suck on with their mother's milk. Mark Twain's famous white suit which he wore as a trademark on his lecture tours: when he whitewashed American culture and American history to white audiences.

Who are the have-nots? Small people. Have-nots are Little tots. Hottentots. Children. Pygmies. Little tots living in a hot climate. Thrust out of all the good eco-systems into one of the oldest deserts on Earth. The Red Cross. Whitened Wagons and whitened tents and whitened buildings... spreading disease and death. Whitewashed as agents of healing. All dentistry... whitewashing our rotting teeth. Our teeth rot because we eat rotten food. Instead of eating healthier food that does not rot our teeth: we whitewash our teeth and scrub them every night, and go to dentists to polish them and whiten them and fix them and put porcelain caps over them to hide how rotten our teeth actually are, and how rotten our food is. White sails on wooden ships... whitewashing their dynamic of stealing power from the air... for the use of one ape species. Becoming blackened and yellowed with age. Browned, rotting. Falling apart.

Steam locomotives: Black coal fueling huge iron engines... whitewashing their destructive power into white steam. Turning black coal into white steam. Turning black oil into diesel powered locomotives. Oil refineries... turning black oil into transparent gasoline or diesel fuel. Paint. Covering up ugliness and whitewashing it. Hiding dirtiness and uncleanness and ugliness. Covering up blackness. Covering up evil. Covering up corruption by whitewashing it. Containers that cover-up something, to make it look nicer. All layers, all blankets, all carpets that cover-up wood floors. Anything that is put on top of something else is a white washed cover-up of the actual truth.

Anything that is used to hide something... Like make-up. Covering up a girl's faces: to make her look more beautiful. Whitewashing her personality, her skin, her intentions. Bleaching agents. Killing bacteria to create a dead, antiseptic environment. Covering up the true evil that creates these bacteria; by whitewashing it. Killing tiny harmless living things instead of killing the true evil inside them. The unconscious fear and revulsion and hatred of all Life and all living organisms rooted and buried so deep that it has become a common mass phobia.

The phobia of washing out stains. Thousands of different kinds of poisonous products called cleaners in spray bottles and cans are mass manufactured so billions of phobic civilized people can get 'the stain' out of their clothes, upholstery, furniture, floors, windows, decks, etc; out of every artificial civilized surface on earth. The manic, constant, unending need to clean everything around you and outside you instead of cleaning the spiritual mental emotional filth inside you: is a dynamic of civilized projection.

1347

The dynamic of projection is merely a reversal of perception. Whatever is inside you: you attribute to what is outside you. Whatever is inside you; you see as being outside you. This defense tactic of projection insulates you from all awareness of the actual truth. When this defense tactic against all pain, against all painful truth becomes a habit... and then after being repeated thousands of times becomes an automatic unthinking reflex... You lose all control over it. Then the awareness of what you are doing, the actual truth of what you are doing is reversed... and is automatically projected and deflected out instead of being absorbed, and allowed to penetrate in. Once the defense tactic of projection becomes an instinctive reflex; then it becomes a filter, an automatic whitewashing agent that automatically filters out of your awareness, everything that threatens to penetrate your ego, your false artificial understanding and rationalization of both your inner soul and the outer world; protecting you from all unpleasant penetrations of understanding, insight, realization, etc.

When that happens: you become blind to the truth, you become impervious to all unpleasant truth, you cannot know the truth, you cannot feel the truth, you cannot think the truth, you cannot admit the truth, you cannot speak the truth. You become an inveterate liar, and your entire reason for existence becomes based upon an accumulated pack of lies which you are forced to defend to the death, to your last dying gasping breath.

Why? Because if you do not insulate yourself from all the painful truths that are filled with pain and suffering and sadness and loneliness and hate and rage and human emotions which you have suppressed and depressed and avoided and denied and run away from your entire life: those unpleasant pain filled truth will kill you. Why will they kill you? Because you are not strong enough, not healthy enough, not resilient enough to face them, accept them, digest them, understand them, realize them, FEEL them. This is why mental health that is divorced from emotional and physical health is a pile of shit. In order to be mentally healthy: you must also work to become physically and emotionally healthy also.

Anything that is layered over something else... hiding what is underneath... whitewashing it. All layers. All layered things. Round decapitated happy faces that are white... the famous Jack-in-the Box logo: that has spread like a plaque... stuck on car antennas, on toys, on windows. The white decapitated happy faces in all advertising media, used as icons on computer programs. Which then became yellow... All the happy whitewashed logos and icons used by commercial consumer society to brainwash people that you must be happy, that buying, consuming makes you happy, that products with happy-face icons will make for a happy buyer. The brainwashing idea that whatever product this smile-icon is on; means that the product is good and will make you happy. The brainwashing idea that ALL smiling is good and ALL frowning is bad. The insane Capitalist attempt to outlaw unhappiness by media blitzes of showing only happy people, and no unhappy people. The combination of a death's head icon wedded to a whitewash of human unhappiness: as a round circle-head with a smile. The insane idea that you can spread happiness commercially as an identical mass-produced opiate for the masses.

All bags, white bags to hide things in, hide dirt and refuse in, all containers, all packaging, until the entire consumer industry has become an industry based upon the brainwashed idea of immaculation and untouchability... Manufacturing garbage bags to put into the earth: that do not decompose for 3000,000 fucking years: when the plastics industry could easily have manufactured plastic bags that decompose in a matter of months, not years.

Whitened Toilet paper. Whitewashing our own turds. Whitewashing our own asses. Wiping away our own filth and leaving it behind us without looking at what came out of our asses.... Washing the whitewashed toilet paper and our own excrement down the toilet. Whitewashing the sin of shitting with whitened paper and clean water. The first writings were bird-tracks on turds of clay. Then Papyrus was used to write on. Now we write every day; using our own turds... on whitened toilet paper.

The biblical term 4,000 years ago for what we are made-of is clay. God made Adam from a piece of clay. The first cuneiform inscriptions were written on clay tablets in the exact shape of a human turd. Using clay turds to write on.... Because the meaning of the inscriptions were full of shit.

The whitewashing of the entire fucking European race of dirty killers and robbers as being whiter, and therefore better than all other races. The whitewashing of the entire fucking history of White Western civilization. 12,000 fucking years of whitewashed fucking lies. The whitewashing of 1,000 years of European history by wiping out the old histories; and replacing and replacing them with modern whitewashed fairytales and whitewashed legends. Until the tales become so butchered, and insane, and meaningless. Intelligent children hate them. The entire concept of artificial civilized cleanliness. The entire idea of living in a squeaky clean house, wearing freshly washed clothes, washing your hands before every meal, washing your entire body with water every day, washing your car every week, washing your linen every week. The entire phobia, revulsion and fear of all dirt. The psychotic need to live inside an insulated, sterilized-whitewashed environment... is a way of whitewashing your entire environment. Washing the inner and outer walls of your house, cleaning out your gutters, trimming your hedge, cutting the grass, sweeping the driveway... is a way of whitewashing your sterile, civilized environment. Washing the streets, sweeping the streets. Anything that has to be artificially washed; because without this: it becomes dirtier, and dirtier... until it is so filthy: no living thing wants to go near it. The bleaching of flour... whitewashing it such tasteless non-nutritional dust; that even rats won't eat it. The sterilization of all processed food: so most living things will not even want to eat it. The spraying of wax on mass-grown fruits... so it will shine and seem to be spotlessly clean. The endless washing of all mass-produced vegetables. As if water will replace the nutrition they lack. Trying to make them seem fresh: when they are tasteless and bland and not fresh at all.

Defining and treating all new growth, as something that is dirty is a way of whitewashing the artificial environment you live in: the inside of your dead house is clean: everything outside your artificial environment is dirty. Keeping Nature at bay by cutting it back. Whether used in farming, or used in cutting your own lawn: it is a form of whitewashing. Nature is dirty: kill it. Growing living things are filthy. Only dead things, decapitated things, only cut things are clean. Growing things are dirty. Kill them. They have germs. Your living personal body is supposedly not diseased. You are clean. All other living growing things are filthy and dirty. Huh? What is the difference between living things? One living thing clean: and all other living things dirty? One clean species, and all other living species on Earth are dirty? Huh?

The entire attitude of narcissism... The idea that everything with the exception of yourself: is dirty .... Based upon the logic of exclusion: if everything except your own sacred self is dirty: why then you must be clean. Effectively whitewashing yourself mentally by a process of exclusion... A simple self-delusion of Reflective Reverse Projection: if everything is black: then I must be white.

'Don't touch me... don't look at me.' 'Ugh... did you see the way he looked at me...?' A feeling of Revulsion at being touched by anyone. The unspoken concept of the sacredness of the insulated ego; the sacredness of the insulated body, the insulated mind, the insulated heart.

Babies and children love playing in all kinds of things. Parents scold them and brainwash them. And wash them. Whitewashing their bodies and brainwashing them into believing that they themselves are clean, but everything that they touch is dirty. Which is the complete opposite of the truth. Happy innocent babies touching living things is good and healthy. Babies touching dead things is bad-evil. Babies touching the living earth is good. Human parents poison their baby's relationship with the living earth by brainwashing them at very early ages. They teach babies and children to feel revulsion towards all living things and especially the living earth. If parents did not do this: babies and children would grow up loving all living things and loving the living earth.

The entire dynamic of egoism...thinking you are better... cleaner... less dirty... than other people. The idea of being so pure, you are untouchable... That nobody can touch you... the Jewish Princess complex. The entire idea of aristocratic privilege... is basically a form of whitewashing. All concepts of discrimination, racism and prejudice. Trying to label others as dirtier than you... is a sneaky form of whitewashing yourself: by looking at others instead of looking critically at yourself.

All one-sided scientific objectivity is a form of whitewashing. Scientific inquiry IS whitewashing. Science whitewashes itself by being scientific... by observing outward, and never looking inward.

All garbage dumps, all sewer and plumbing systems... all dumping of waste, all polluting of the Natural environment, all air pollution, all water pollution, all pollution of the Earth by civilization; is an attempt to whitewash civilization, by taking the poisonous shit that civilization creates and dumping it outside city limits, into natural rivers and Oceans, into the atmosphere... anywhere but face and deal with what civilization creates... are forms of whitewashing.

The fact is: that if you live cleanly: there is no need to wash. If you are clean: if you do not become dirty in the first place: there is no reason for you to wash yourself. Study the history of humans washing themselves. For hundreds of thousands of years... we only used water except to drink. Then we began to use it symbolically.

Washing was never originally done for hygienic purposes. Washing was a religious ritual, it was a cultural-religious sacred act. It was used as a symbolic ritual to mean something. It was the human subconscious screaming at people: that their entire beings were being befouled by the culture they were living in. That they were dirty morally, ethically and spiritually as a culture, as a people, as a civilization, as a mass, as a species, as a collective whole. As a result: they developed cultures that projected their inner feelings of dirtiness outwards, and only cleansed themselves superficially in symbolical rituals. The cultural symptom of washing and whitewashing is a classic case of how deflect the truth and deny it; by subconsciously projecting the collective guilt and shame of their culture by outward projection. Ritual washing was used by the dirtiest killers, by the dirtiest liars, by the dirtiest rapists, as a ritual-custom-tradition...to ritually cleanse themselves of their own sins and crimes.

The dirtier the inner souls of civilized humans became: the more they washed their outer selves.

The dirtier they became inwardly, where their filth could not be seen, the more they washed themselves outwardly, the more they whitewashed themselves outwardly, the more they whitewashed their clothes white, the more they washed their buildings white, the more they washed everything white...the more they tried to whitewash themselves Spiritually, Emotionally, Mentally, Physically, Culturally. Until they used white lead to make their faces white until they wore white wigs and covered their diseased faces with white powder and sprinkled white flour onto their wigs..

Until their cities were all white, their clothes were all white, their food was all white. The wearing of white garments. Living in white buildings. The dirtier their thoughts became, the dirtier their actions became: the more they washed themselves. The Greeks washed themselves obsessively, trying to purify themselves, their bodies... with both oil, and water. The Semites anointed themselves to purify themselves for sacred rituals. Using Lye to whitewash their homes with: washing their entire past and their entire culture white with lies. Lye is an outward projection of inner lies.

Whitewashing your entire body regularly almost everyday only began with the Romans. Because they were the most evil, the most dirty Empire of professional killers ever created. Even their slaves washed themselves. They even managed to whitewash the entire idea of purification out of washing themselves. They de-ritualized the ritual of purifying yourself for a special occasion, and made it normal, common. They destroyed all Sense of Pure Wonder about the very IDEA of Purity. The idea of Purity almost completely disappeared during the Roman Empire. Because the entire Empire was rotten to the core. Julius Caesar of Rome was obsessive about keeping his physical body hairless and clean. Augustus Caesar was also obsessive about his personal cleanliness. All the ancient Killers of Greece were obsessed with the purifying their bodies. They were obsessed with purification.

One root reason for their rituals of purification is because originally: they were dirty pederasts. They were forced to wash themselves after every dirty homosexual act of rectal penetration. If you study ancient cultural practices: you will find that wherever men regularly washed themselves: there were homosexual societies... Homosexuality is rampant in all elite cultures. Homosexuality was rampant in all ancient old civilizations. Because upper class cultures are always sicker and weaker than lower class cultures.

The idea... that you have to go to church every week: to be washed clean of the sins you committed that week... is crazy! Especially for young children. I remember the idea of going to church every week to wash myself of sin was insulting. I didn't do anything sinful to be washed of for shits sake! If older people committed some sin: let them go, not me. Why go to church to be whitewashed of some imaginary sin if you didn't do anything sinful the whole week? The Christian idea... that you are automatically a sinner? Because Adam was cast out of Eden, and so therefore all his ancestors must be sinners is crazy also. The idea of original sin is crazy. The idea of paying for the sins of your ancestors is crazy. I thought... when I was young and naïve and immature.

But now after 50 years: I see how the idea of Jesus: that you are automatically a sinner: just because you live in a corrupt civilization that forces you to do things that are evil whether you like it or not... just the fact that you are affluent makes you a sinner: makes sense. Jesus cleansed people of their sins by making them throw away all of their earthly possessions and ritually baptizing them with water to symbolize their new cleaner state of being.

But how long did his new way of living last? How many people threw away all of their earthly possessions and followed him, eh? Not very many. And once he died: everybody including all of his former disciples: went back to the corrupt practice of owning and valuing material possessions. What Jesus did: the ritual of baptizing a person by pouring water over their head was also an example of whitewashing.

Except that he used the ritual of whitewashing consciously to represent a washing away of the corruption of civilization. It was not a subconscious act. It was a conscious act. Jesus represented the raising of consciousness. He raised the consciousness of the entire Western world. Until Western humans developed what is known as a conscience. Jesus used a ritual of whitewashing as a way to actually try to make the people he baptized live cleaner less corrupt lives. He did not use the symbol and significance of ritual whitewashing as a way to avoid the truth, but as a way to face the unpleasant, uncomfortable humbling truth that how you have lived all your life before he came to you: was wrong and completely mistaken. But that after you had been ritually baptized by him: you were expected... to go and sin no more. You were expected to not have any more need of being whitewashed or cleansed anymore. You were expected to live a clean life where you did not commit any sins: not go back to your old ways. It didn't work. People found themselves backsliding into their old ways. They came back to him and confessed their sins to him. After he died: the habit of backsliding became an accustomed tradition. Until it became a farce.

But that is not the point. The point is: Jesus raised the bar of human awareness for the whole human race. And until we as an entire race: raise ourselves to his level of conscious awareness, until we raise ourselves to the level of his awareness: so we also consciously see what is actually GOOD and what is actually evil: we will continue to whitewash ourselves subconsciously instead of consciously. This is one of the main aims of this book. To raise your consciousness and your awareness by connecting bridges between the past and the present. If this book helps you to become more aware of what is Actually Good in this world and in your life.... And what is actually evil in this world and in your life: then I have done my job as a writer to help other people become as aware as I am of this. Just because I wrote this book: does not whitewash me or make me any better than anybody else. I live inside civilization. I am a product of human civilization. So was Jesus. He tried to teach people a new way of living by speaking to them in parables and analogies.

I am not a Jesus. I am merely telling you the hard fucking truth. Jesus tried to teach people by having them follow him. He tried to teach them by example. He tried to teach people by becoming a leader who leads by example. That did not work. Humans are not designed to learn by following someone else's example. Humans are designed to learn from their own hard experience. Humans are not designed to have leaders telling them how to live and what to do. Humans are designed to figure out for themselves how to live and what to do... as a society of cooperating equals.

Until people get together and live as a society of cooperating equals: until people stop all competition against each other: no one person, no single individual, no charismatic leader or religious teacher; like Jesus was: can, or ever will ever change human society for the better. Jesus was a botched tiny attempt to cleanse humans of the civilization they lived inside. In one small area of Galilee. This book is not a botched attempt. It contains all of the necessary information for any group of people who wants to have fun; to free themselves of misery. By recognizing all of the shit inside civilization that is not fun. And by recognizing and throwing away and avoiding all the shit of civilized society that is not good for you.

Where does the word to wash come from? It comes from the bible: Ashes to Ashes: Dust to Dust. wash comes from white ash mixed with animal fat. Being whitened by ashes. Soap is made from white ashes: not black ashes.

Nature whitewashes the Earth every year with white snow, it washes the Earth regularly with rain. White Clouds are example of Nature's whitewashing, but there is a HUGE difference between natural and unnatural whitewashing. The clouds of the Earth are necessary: they perform crucial useful functions without which Life could not flourish. So is Snow a natural necessary form of whitewashing. Sea slugs clean the sand naturally. They spend their entire existence eating small bacteria off sand particles. Natural cleansing by Nature is good and serves useful functions. Civilized whitewashing is the opposite: it poisons the Earth instead of cleansing it and keeping it clean.

The Sacredness of the Immaculate Consumer

Middle-class upwardly mobile people try to be as immaculate as possible.

If you are a middle-class person: everything around you must be immaculate. Your clothes must be immaculate. Your car must be immaculate. Your body must be immaculate. Your hair must be immaculate. Your shoes must be immaculate. Your house must be immaculate. Your food must be immaculate. Your dishes must be immaculate. Your furniture must be immaculate. Your rug and your floors must be immaculate. Your TV and your computer must be immaculate. Your cell phone must be immaculate.

Middle-class upwardly mobile people cannot go out the door unless they are immaculate. If there is the tiniest flaw in their superficial immaculate appearance: they become upset. If the smallest spot mars their blouse or shirt, if there is the tiniest run in their stockings, if their hair is not done just-so, if they cannot find the right matching accessories, if they have 'nothing to wear' with a closet stuffed with clothes and shoes... they get upset and worried. Their whole day is spoiled if the ritual of whitewashing themselves is not immaculately perfect, if they can't find their favorite hairbrush, or pin or scarf or if they run out of their favorite shampoo or soap, etc, etc ad nauseum.

Consumer culture is based upon superficiality. The entire advertising industry is based upon selling consumers images of immaculate perfection. Consumer goods are manufactured and made of make consumers look and feel immaculately perfect. The drive, the engine, the motive behind capitalism, mass manufacturing and most consumer good that are sold: is based upon the need-addiction for immaculate perfection.

Middle-class people read immaculate magazines that have immaculate covers, with Immaculate ads, and immaculate features printed on immaculate paper to be put on immaculate coffee tables. If there is the slightest scratch on a middle-class person's coffee table: it is thrown out as not being fit to be used for company.

Upwardly mobile middle-class people have a special room, which they keep as immaculate as possible. It is called a living room. But they do not live in it. They live in every other room except the living room. Because that room has to be kept as immaculate as possible in case guests arrive so they can be received immaculately.

After WWII: middle-class housewives in North America were brainwashed into trying to keep their houses as immaculate as possible by consumer media culture. They were no longer called mothers. They became housewives: the culture of middle-class people changed so drastically: that they were no longer wed to their husbands. They were wed to their houses. They became housekeepers. Their entire profession was to keep their house as immaculate as possible. They were sold every imaginable kind of poison, and every imaginable kind of shit. And they bought it. They still do. Why? Because the purpose of every product they buy is the purpose of immaculation. People buy expensive organizers for their closets. They buy countless things to organize all the consumer crap they have; just so it will look immaculately tidy and neat and clean as possible. They wax everything. They want everything to shine and sparkle. Modern middle-class wives try to keep their houses as immaculately clean as possible.

The Path of Splitness
Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1354

Middle-class people drink immaculate water. Everything they drink is in a bottle that looks immaculate. Everything they drink must be immaculate: pure, pristine, the finest water, the finest coffee.

Middle-class people only go to stores that are immaculate. If a store has a dirty floor: they never come back. Middle-class people only go to restaurants, and coffee shops that are immaculate. Middle-class people only go to malls that are immaculate. Middle-class people live in houses that are immaculate. For middle-class people: everything must be immaculately perfect. Immaculate perfection becomes a normality. Everything must work perfectly. Everything must be perfect. Everybody must be perfect. If there is the slightest imperfection. If there is the slightest scratch. Ugh. Throw it out. If there is the slightest bit of dirt, or soil, or if the earth mars anything they own. Ugh. It's dirty: Throw it out. 'I can't wear that! It's filthy! It's dirty! It's ugly!'

Why?

Because it is not immaculate.

Not because you can't use it. The function of clothes covering your nakedness and keeping you warm is still there. Middle-class upwardly mobile people spend thousands of dollars to fix tiny scratches on the bodies of their automobiles so their car will be completely immaculate. They become enraged if the smallest scratch is made upon all of their immaculate possessions. They go to court and fight legal battles over tiny scratches on their immaculate cars. However, they do not give one shit about how deeply they wound and damage other human souls by their hatred and sneering and derision, and envy. Middle-class people spend thousands hours sweating and exercising so their bodies will be immaculate. Middle-class people spend hundreds of thousands of dollars re-modeling and improving their houses so they will be immaculate.

Middle-class people spend hundreds of thousands of hours hunting and searching and shopping for just the right sofa, just the right end table so their décor in their homes will look immaculately perfect. Middle class people spend lifetimes hunting for, and shopping for immaculate antiques that are all immaculately old and tarnished and rusted and scratched and worn. They spend their whole lives collecting things. They spend fortunes on collecting and accumulating things. So their collection will be immaculate.

If anything is not just the right immaculate style. If their clothes or shoes or car or house is not just the latest, coolest immaculate style or immaculate fad: ugh... get rid of it.

'I can't drive that.' 'I can't have that in my house.' 'I would never drive that.' 'I would not be caught dead driving that'. 'I would not be caught dead wearing that.' 'I'd never go to that place.' 'I'd never eat that.'

Middle-class upwardly mobile people foster and develop an immaculate self-image of themselves. They go through years of university to get an immaculate diploma. They all want to get an immaculate job. They work all their lives to get promoted to an immaculate position. An immaculate job; where they don't get their hands dirty. So they can wear immaculate clothes all day and never get dirty. An immaculate job is a job where you don't touch anything, and you get paid thousands of dollars for doing nothing. The more money you make the more immaculate it is. The less you have to work, the easier it is: the more immaculate the job or career is.

1354

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1355

One example of an immaculate job is being a professional fashion model. Models are paid thousands of dollars just to be immaculate. If you have immaculate skin, an immaculate face, an immaculate body, and an immaculate personality: you can become famous as one of the most immaculate people in the world. Their job is to be as immaculate as possible: so the entire fucking human race can copy them and try to be perfectly immaculate and fucking untouched by all the misery and evil humans create.

Middle-class upwardly mobile people look down at people who are not immaculately dressed. They look down at people whose hands are dirty. They look down at people whose clothes are dirty. They look down at people whose jobs are dirty. They look down at people whose cars are dirty.

Middle-class people do laundry every week so their clothes will be immaculate. Middle-class people change their underwear, and their socks and their clothes every day. Middle-class people take showers and baths every day. They want to be as immaculate as possible.

Middle-class people hate dirt. Everything near them must be immaculately clean. Nothing is allowed to be dirty. They hate dirt. They hate soil. They hate earth. Nature is dirty. The Earth is dirty.

Everything on the Earth is dirty except themselves.

Middle-class people have allergies because they have never been exposed to healthy soil. They are sick because they have never touched the living earth. Because they are never exposed to air and food and water that is not immaculately, antiseptically dead. Middle-class people are allergic to things that are not immaculate.

Middle-class people raise their babies and children in immaculate houses. Middle-class children play in immaculate parks with immaculate toys. Their parents buy them immaculate bicycles and computers. Their mothers make sure they wear clothes that are immaculate every day. If the slightest stain gets onto their immaculate clothes. Their mothers throw their clothes away. If their immaculate toys get broken: they are thrown away. Middle-class children are forced to wash every day so they become used to being immaculate all the time. Until they never get dirty. Until they never touch anything: because they might get dirty. Until they never touch anything that they think might be dirty... whether it's dirty or not is not important. It is the fear of not being immaculate that is important.

Middle-class people try to have immaculate thoughts and feelings. Middle-class people hide their true thoughts and feelings from others: it's called being immaculately polite. Middle-class people try to behave immaculately: it's called being an immaculate hypocrite. Middle-class people hide their true thoughts and feelings from themselves: it's called emotional and mental repression. It's an immaculate sickness.

Middle-class people eat food that looks immaculate: which is actually filled with toxic poisons and chemicals that are cancerous. Middle-class people get cancer because they live immaculate lives. They get sick. When they get sick: they go to immaculate hospitals. They see a doctor who is immaculate. The doctor gives them an immaculate prescription. Then they go to an immaculate pharmacy. The immaculate pharmacist gives them immaculate pills and immaculate chemicals and immaculate drugs that are immaculately boxed and stuffed with immaculate cotton-batten, and immaculately sealed, and immaculately labeled with immaculate printing.

1355

Middle-class people try to be as safe as possible. They are full of fears. Instead of just living; they try to live as safely as possible by doing nothing that is remotely dangerous or risky. They are afraid of doing anything new. They are afraid of thinking anything new. They are afraid of feeling anything new. They are afraid of having new experiences. They are even afraid of things that might happen. Even if the odds are it will never happen. They buy something called insurance so if anything bad happens: they will still be covered and safe. Middle-class people try to control their entire lives in advance.

Middle-class people are afraid of things happening to them. They try to know what will happen to them before it happens. If they even think something bad might happen: they won't do it. If a tree looks too hard to climb: a middle-class child won't climb it just because he thinks he might fall and hurt himself. He won't jump off a porch because he thinks he is afraid. Middle-class people do not talk to strangers because they are afraid of anything they do not already know. They are afraid of anybody they do not already know.

Middle-class people are afraid of everything.

Middle-class people are so afraid of getting hurt: they make their children wear helmets and kneepads and elbow pads and safety wheels just to ride a small two-wheel bike; for cripes sake. Middle-class people are so afraid of other people they do not even look at them when they say hi. Middle class have such a phobia about human contact: they don't even shake hands with each other any more. Middle-class people are so afraid of other people that they will not talk to their next-door neighbors for years: even if they pass each other every day.

Middle-class people have all kinds of phobias about touching. They have a weird idea that if you touch anything that is not immaculate: you will get germs or something. Middle-class people never get dirty. Middle-class people never touch anything that is not antiseptic, or safely dead. Middle-class people never touch anything that is dirty. Middle-class people never shake hands if the other person's hands are dirty. Middle-class people have a revulsion of touching anything and anybody directly. Middle-class people touch only touch each other immaculately. Middle-class people contact each other immaculately. Instead of actually touching each other directly and honestly: middle-class people found ways to communicate with each other by not touching. First they invented immaculate clothes so they wouldn't touch each other's skin by accident. Then they invented immaculate words: so they could make noises to each other without having to actually touch each other. Then they invented immaculate politeness: so they wouldn't accidentally touch each other's feelings. Then they invented immaculate letters, written on immaculately white paper; so they could write to each other without any feeling at all, and without actually seeing each other. Then they invented the immaculate phone. So they could talk to each other without actually touching or seeing each other. The latest form of middle-class immaculate touching is the invention of the immaculate computer: where they only touch immaculate plastic keys. So they can contact each other without touching or seeing each other or knowing each other, or even knowing what the other person looks like, or knowing what kind of person they are.

Middle-class people are immaculate. They live in an immaculate middle-class society. They live in an immaculate middle-class civilization. They have immaculate cars. They eat immaculate food. They drink immaculate water.

Middle-class people do not understand why they are not happy. They do not understand why they get sick.

Actually: the reason why they are unhappy, the reason why they get sick: is the idea of immaculation.

The conception of the immaculate: comes from fear of being touched.

If you feel immaculately: you are afraid of feeling anything.

If you think immaculately: you are afraid of thinking anything.

If you live immaculately: you are afraid of living. You are afraid of touching yourself. You are afraid of touching other people.

The modern idea of being immaculate is the idea of being untouched by everything around you.

The reason you are immaculate is that you have a fear of being touched by anything. It is your fear of touching anything and everything that keeps you sick and stupid.

The modern idea of Immaculation is: never being touched by pain. Never letting any pain touch you. Becoming inhuman: not feeling your own pain or the pain of other living things.

For a thousand years: the Virgin Mary was considered to be immaculate because she suffered in silence when her son was killed. For a thousand years European poor people suffered in silence: worshipping the silent suffering of the Virgin Mary.

Pain does not exist for people in an immaculate consumer culture. It is swept under the rug, it is denied, it is whitewashed, it is drugged out of existence. Parents do not allow their children to experience anything that might be painful or unpleasant. Generations of insane pampered spoiled upwardly mobile children who have never felt pain, do not know what pain is: have become so inhuman, they can spend their entire lives gratifying themselves; without thinking there is anything wrong about 4 billion starving poor people on the Earth feeling pain every day and every night: while they feel nothing.

Immaculate upwardly mobile people do not allow anything to touch them: they do not allow fear to touch them. They do not allow any fucking thing to touch them, They are the most spoiled insane fucking evil shit human scum on the face of this Earth. They do not know what pain or fear is. They do not know what happiness or sadness is. They do not know what anything is. They are emotionally dead, mentally dead, untouched, immaculate, insular, insulated, insane things. Immaculate upwardly mobile people have a fear of being touched by anything. As long as they do not allow anything to touch them: they can avoid facing the fact that they have a fear of anything touching them.

The fear of being touched is a cultural sickness that all immaculate upwardly mobile people have. Being touched is not fear. Getting dirty is not fear. Living in fear: is a state of living immaculately. Fear is a state of immaculation. Fear is an insularity that is so immaculate: you are not aware that you are living in a constant state of immaculate revulsion, immaculate disgust, immaculate snobbery, immaculate hypocrisy, immaculate politeness, immaculate dishonesty, immaculate cowardice... and the fear of not being immaculate. The state of immaculation is the fear of being touched.

Fear and pain is a state of separation. Cut yourself with a knife: and you will feel the pain of separation. Try cutting your skin with a knife: and you will feel the fear of separation. Immaculation is the sacredness of separation. It is the sacredness of insularity.

Being immaculate is sacred. Sacredness is immaculate. Modern consumer culture has made consuming sacred by making mass consumption Immaculate. Mass Consumer products are packaged as immaculately as possible. Consumer products are made as immaculately as possible. The ultimate immaculate consumer product is a product that was never touched by human hands as it is made, as it is packaged, as it is transported, and sold.

Consumers want to own immaculate new things that have never been touched by others. They want to consume new immaculate products. The slightest scratch or imperfection of a product means somebody touched it: that destroys their immaculate conception of it: and they throw it away: because it is no longer immaculate.

The way you can tell middle-class upwardly mobile consumers from 6 billion poor people on Earth: is by how immaculate their clothes are, how immaculate the things they own are, how immaculate their behavior is, how immaculate their bodies and faces are, how immaculately they eat, how immaculately they shit, how immaculately they drink, how immaculate their table manners are. How immaculate their houses and cars are. How immaculate their suburbs are. How immaculate their lawns are.

Modern human civilization created the immaculate conception of consumerism as a form of social sacredness. Civilization has crafted and evolved the culture of untouchability for 10,000 years. Until it finally created the untouchable consumer. The untouchable consumer who can watch bombs being dropped on cities and watch the atom bomb exploding killing hundreds of living humans in an instant... and not be touched by it. Civilization has created the insanity of humans being untouched by LIFE by living as immaculate upwardly mobile consumers.

Modern human civilization created the sacredness of the consumer. In modern human civilization: consumers are sacred. Anything consumers want is sacred. Everything consumers buy is sacred. Everything producers make for consumers; is sacred. Everything sellers sell to consumers is sacred. The sacredness of consumer society remains unquestioned because the idea of consuming is immaculate.

Every poison, every pollution, every toxic waste, every act of destruction, every act of pollution, every act of greed, everything that is not immaculate in modern consumer society: is ignored, denied, swept under the carpet, hidden, not looked at, not spoken of: because it is not immaculate.

World leaders hold immaculate conferences to speak about and deal with the global pollution caused by modern consumer society. They never do anything about the actual problems: because cleaning up the filth and poison that billions of humans have created is dirty: it is not immaculate. People would have to get their hands dirty. They never blame the consumer. The consumer is sacred. The consumer is the source of all wealth. The consumer is good. Anything the consumer wants is good. Anything they buy is sacred.

Human culture and human society can only avoid the horror of its own filth by pretending that all of human civilization: is immaculate. Humans can only be immaculate if they do not look at themselves. Humans only do two things in modern consumer society: they make money and they spend money. Making money and spending money has become a sacred unquestioned ritual of consumer society. Making money and spending money is good.

Money is a way of turning all buying and selling into an immaculate, sacred symbol of sacredness. The unspoken sacredness of the consumer can be seen by the unspoken assumption that all spending, buying, selling, consumption is good. All manufacturing, all producing, the making of all products is good. All money is good. Money is immaculate. Money is clean. Because you cannot tell how it was made, or who made it, or why it was made. Money is an immaculately pure abstract concept.

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1359

Human abstraction is immaculate. Nothing touches it. Nothing can touch it. Abstract ideas cannot be touched because they are only figments of our imagination. We cannot touch our abstract ideas with our hands.

What is the result of all this immaculation? What is the result of the immaculate concept of civilization? What is the result of the concept of civilization being immaculate?

Billions of gallons of poison pumped into rivers, streams, oceans, lakes and ground water reserves: poisoning the entire earth's water supply so drastically that all living things using the waters of the Earth. All the living things living in water are dying off. Zillions of tons of toxic landfill waste dumps. Creating poison zones that leach all the millions of poisons created by an immaculate human civilization into the air, the earth and the water of this planet. Just so upwardly mobile consumers can live immaculately clean lives.

Zillions of cubic feet of poisoned air: poisoning the atmosphere of the entire earth. Even the ozone layer... the most delicate atmospheric skin of this living planet; is being systematically destroyed and poisoned by the concept of a human civilization that is supposed to be immaculate.

All the oceans of the world fished out... fished dry. Now trawlers are scraping the ocean floors and creating huge desert zones with their heavy scraping nets: destroying in a flash, ocean eco-systems that take thousands of years to build up.

Countless species of insects, birds, mammals, reptiles, etc. are being destroyed and going into extinction. We are destroying species we do not see or know of. We are killing species we have never seen. We are killing living things we do not know ever existed. We are killing them off before we can even know that we have killed them off. Because immaculate upwardly mobile consumers do not want to be touched by the truth. Any truth that is unpleasant or painful is considered to be a dirty truth and is religiously avoided and left untouched by them.

The entire race of humans quickly descending into lower and lower levels of energy. 7 billion humans becoming weaker and weaker. So in only two generations of humans: what a child normally did 50 years ago: play outside happily with energy for hours. Climbing trees and running around and giggling happily. Has been reduced to sickly pale fat weak indoor human monstrosities... children who do not know how to have fun. Children whose only fun consists of sadism, and cunning hate and sly evil things. Adults so fat and weak: no full grown human can do a full days work anymore. Human societies full of depressed, unhappy, fear-filled, hate-filled cunning hypocrisies. Humans hating each other on sight. Humans crawling into their holes and despising each other.

Human socializing has disappeared. Humans no longer get together socially for any reason whatsoever. They only get together to make money or spend it. Nothing else. As a result: humans have no reason to live anymore. Life is not worth living. Human life has become so meaningless and boring: people walk around with long faces. Living in states of depression and unfeeling numbness and deadness so thick: they can barely stand up to go to the fridge to eat comfort food.

The result of the immaculate concept we call civilization is that now: the only unspoken activity that humans do today... is consume. Trying to fill up their immaculate inner emptiness with mass produced shits. The result is; 7 billion insane, sick humans: addicted to the consumption of poisonous shit that gives them cancer. The result is; the whole Earth dying, because of immaculate human consumption. The Earth now is diseased with the illness called immaculate consumption. It is no longer poisoned by the insane idea of immaculate conception. The immaculate conception of Christianity has become a cancerous disease called; Immaculate Consumer Consumption.

1359

100-200 years ago: humans became diseased with a sickness called consumption. There was no cure for it: except fresh air, being outside in nature. Living in a healthier environment. Away from the pollution of industrial cities.

Now: there are no healthier eco-systems to go to live-in anymore. All the ecosystems of the world are slowly wasting away and becoming weaker and weaker and weaker.... Because now: it is not just humans who are slowly dying from the sickness of consumption. It is the entire living earth that is dying from this destructive disease. The consumptive disease the earth is dying from: is a virus-bacteria plague called: the immaculate civilization.

It is dying from a bacteria culture on its skin called: the immaculate human species.

A species that has tried to hide its own rot. A species that has hidden from its own rotten practices. A species that turns a blind eye to itself. A species that never questions itself. A species that is blind, a species that is brainwashed, a species that is insanely destroying its own life-support systems. Trying to preserve the concept of its own immaculate origins, trying to preserve the concept of its own specialness, trying to be as immaculate as possible.

The result of the unspoken middle-class obsession of being as immaculate as possible: is the denial of all unpleasant, inconvenient, painful, pain-filled, trite, truths. The avoidance of all unpleasant honesty. The creation of an entire species that try to corrupt each other as much as possible by being as immaculate as possible. 7 billion self-enablers... enabling 7 billion others to become as addicted to as much immaculate consumption as possible...

Why?

Because its unspoken assumption. The unspoken idea of consumption. Is that it is immaculate. Consumer goods are immaculate. They are sacred. They are new. They are untouched. That is why they are called 'goods'; to brainwash you into the unspoken religious assumption that all manufactured consumer products are good.

Eating. Self-gratification is more than good: it is sacred

Eating: is consumption
Eating and self-gratification: is sacred

Not eating; all pain; hunger; suffering, feeling any kind of emptiness: is avoided or covered up.
.By eating and active self-gratification, and distraction and entertainment: upwardly mobile people do not allow themselves to be affected by:

Not eating and digesting their own pain hunger suffering, and their own inner emptiness.

They have cut themselves off from all people who suffer pain from hunger.

They believe that all immaculate consumption is good. As a result: they have become culturally insane as a class.

The consumer mentality and culture of self-gratification and egoism has its own perfect defense against its own insanity: middle-class upwardly mobile consumers will never develop a mass awareness of their own sickness: they will never come together as a single class. Each single one of them is only interested in their own selfish self-gratifying greed and addictions. Fuck everybody else... I want what I want now: and to hell with anybody else. Even though middle-class upwardly mobile consumers are more identical to each other than any humans ever born... they have created a hierarchy of differentiations based upon personal tastes and preferences... which they use to discriminate themselves from others. They discriminate between different brands of consumer products. They discriminate against every other human on the planet... who is not immaculately identical to them. They only socialize with others who have identical tastes, identical clothing, identical cars, identical bikes, identical houses, identical interests, identical personalities, identical bodies, identical faces.

They are the most boring empty identical morons ever born... while they uphold their snobbery about everyone else not being as immaculate as they are.

They ignore the fact that the Universe works by the principle of dynamic balance. Whatever goes down: must come up. Whatever goes down: must come up. Whatever goes in: goes out. Whatever goes out: goes in. The principle of dynamic balance works as a natural pendulum. The dynamic has two directions. Dynamic balance has two sides to it. Not only one side. We have been ignoring this dynamic at our own peril: and reaping the whirlwinds of destruction.

As an example of the two sides of dynamic balance: the natural reaction to purity-virginity-untouchable immaculate beauty: is the urge to penetrate it, despoil it, rape it.

If beautiful girls and virgins let themselves be touched and penetrated... and thought nothing of it: girls would not be raped anymore.

This exposes one aspect of how insane the immaculate concept of civilization is.

The insane dichotomy, contradiction of the concept of the immaculate is seen in upwardly mobile immaculate sex. Girls walking around wearing rape-me sex costumes... While at the same time... walking around pretending they are immaculately untouchable. Girls want to be touched. They want to be penetrated.... But only immaculately. This exposes the insane hypocrisy of being immaculate, and humans being immaculate and girls being immaculate. Girls want to have their cake and eat it too. They want to be raped and treated roughly; and they want to be treated like immaculate, untouchable, sacred pure virgins also. Consumer girls want to have their cake and eat it too... and have it and eat... when and where and with who they want to.

But you cannot gratify your desire to be raped by gratifying your desires. You can only be raped if you do not want to be raped. This sets up an impossible dynamic that leads to frustration and unhappiness. This sets up the hypocrisy of girls being attracted to bad boys, while at the same time: wanting to be treated like sacred virgins. If you can control when the boy when you are raped: then it isn't rape! Then girls feel unfulfilled. They get bored with their nice boyfriend. So they find a boy who treats them badly.... But bad boys don't treat girls like sacred virgins. So they go running back to nice boys. Neither one satisfies them completely. Because middle-class upwardly mobile girls have been brainwashed into having an immaculate self-image of themselves. They walk around wearing clothes that scream out:

'I am sexy!! I want sex! Rape meee! I want to be raped!' While acting and behaving like prim, sacred immaculate virgins. This double message confuses boys. It screws up human male-female relationships completely because it is pure two-faced hypocrisy.

An immaculate civilization: where girls are always treated like sacred virgins and never treated roughly and never raped is insane.

A despoiled civilization: where girls are never treated like sacred virgins, and only treated roughly and raped is also insane.

You can't have it just one way. It doesn't work just one way. It works both ways.

A one-sided immaculate human civilization in the middle of a raped despoiled planet cannot last. Civilization saving itself: while killing and destroying all other living things on earth does not work.

In 12 short thousand years: we have destroyed what 4 ½ billion years of evolving life has built up.

A one-sided immaculate civilization destroying the whole Living Earth it needs to live by: does not make sense. Humans not touching each other is insane.

A one-sided bombed out human civilization that has been destroyed by nuclear bombs also does not make any sense. But that is where we are headed. We have immaculate leaders of rich nations who have thousands and thousands of atomic and hydrogen bombs capable of wiping out all life on this planet a thousand times over and above what is needed to destroy all life on this planet.

And these immaculate leaders are screaming and pointing to the poorest most oppressed people on earth: as their mortal enemies. You are defined by your enemies. And guess what? 4 billion other people are also conveniently just as poor and living in the same areas as these enemies of civilization. Gosh. Do you think killing 4 billion humans will bother them? Heck.... There's 3 billion left! This way: there won't be any poor people at all! Only rich people! All the poor people will be dead!

This is one example of how sick the one-sided concept of an immaculate civilization is. The concept itself is insane.

Unless we humans become two-sided: instead of one-sided. Unless we balance our selves dynamically on both sides. We will not only destroy ourselves. We will not only kill ourselves off so there will not be one human being left alive on this Earth. We will also kill all living things also: and be responsible for killing off all life on Earth.

Do you want this responsibility? Do you want to be an enabler of a one-sided immaculate civilization? If you want to be immaculate: you are by definition: helping to destroy all life on Earth by being a one-sided hypocrite about the effect human civilization is having on the living Earth. Immaculate middle-class upwardly mobile people are destroying the Earth. The idea of the immaculate concept, is destroying the Earth. Trying to cut yourself off from Nature and the outside world and the Universe around you by pressing a cell-phone to your ear is what is destroying all life on Earth. Talking busily on a cell phone pressed to your ear while in public; is what is destroying all love, all caring, all decency on Earth. These people are screaming to the world the insanity of their immaculate untouchability. E-mails and cell-phones are the latest Cultural Consumer Symptoms of immaculate untouchability. 'I don't want to see you. I don't want to hear you. You do not exist. The Universe does not exist. The sun does not exist. All the people in the world do not exist. Nothing else exists except this cell-phone; and the person I cannot see or touch who I am. talking to, or e-mailing.'

In other words. Do not touch me, Get as far away from me as possible. I will only talk to you if I cannot see you. I will not let you touch me. Nobody can touch me. I am untouchable. I cannot be touched. I am untouched by all human pain and suffering. Since I am untouched by all other humans. Since only God is completely indifferent to human suffering. I must be a God.

This is how fucking sick the fucking filthy, obscene idea of middle-class upwardly mobile living immaculate lives, wearing immaculate clothes, using immaculate cell phones that work perfectly every time... and immaculate computers that never break down

The only thing is, darn... the human subconscious is a strange thing. The latest fads in clothing are wearing clothes that have already been pre-worn. Cool, hard-to-find, hand-me-downs found in thrift store. Clothes that have holes in them and are ragged at the edges. Now the latest immaculate hairdo's are designed to look like the wind just blew your hair into a tousled tangle. Now we are finding that the old computers we threw away worked ten times better than the new ones. Now we have to throw away the expensive computer we bought because the new ones are cheaper and supposedly better, and our old ones are obsolete. Now we have to buy a new car every four years because they break down too much after 4 years and cost a fortune to repair... whereas the old cars that were made before they started sticking computers into cars for gods sake: that the old ones are lasting 20-30-40 years and running just fine thank you.

Try computing how much it costs to buy a new car every four years, and compare the cost to buying only one car and repairing it for 40 years. Find out how destructive it is to the Earth... trashing 10 cars in 40 years. Instead of just keeping the one you already have; running and out of the landfill.

Find out the hard-core actual reasons why auto parts for old cars disappear from the market. Because auto parts are based upon the dynamics of mass production. Because they cannot make any money from it. Even if you want to keep your old car: you can't find parts for it anymore. Find out how much living things are being killed because of the middle-class addiction to lateral mobility, and the industrialized nation's addiction to oil. We are all a part of this thing called civilization. We all live inside it. We cannot afford to pretend that we are not a part of anything any longer. We cannot afford to think that we can do just as we damn well please and gratify our stupid, spoiled wishes as randomly and irrationally as possible.

We cannot afford to live immaculate lives any longer. If we want to live: we are going to have to get our hands dirty. Why has this happened? Why has it come to pass like this? If you want to understand why: you must study and understand the past. Humans hide from the past. We ignore the past. We pretend the past never happened. We refuse to learn from the past. We refuse to change our ways. We refuse to learn from the mistakes of the past.

What is the engine that is driving the human species and all living things on Earth into extinction today? The sacredness of the Immaculate Consumer. Consumers are sacred. We middle-class consumers assume we have the right to buy whatever we want, whenever we want, anywhere we want from whoever we want, to do anything we want, gratify ourselves anyway we want, drug ourselves anyway we want, eat anything we want, drink anything we want, throw away anything we do not want, ignore anything we do not like, turn a deaf ear to anything we deem unpleasant, and avoid every unpleasant.

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1364

What is all human status and class and prestige based on?
What is all human power based upon?

The sacredness of the Immaculate Conception. The more Immaculate you are: the higher class you are. The more untouchable you are: the higher status you have. The higher you are: the more untouchable you are. Until you are above the Law.

'I'm immaculate! Nobody can touch me! I'm safe! You are not allowed to touch me! I am immaculate! I am untouchable! I can get away with it! I'm rich! I'm powerful! I'm famous! You can look at me but you are not allowed to touch me! I am an immaculate ----- !! On the surface. My shirts are immaculately clean. They are washed. I wash myself. I am clean! On the surface.

What if there were consumer police? What if you were fined every time you were caught buying something you did not actually need? What if you were fined and went to jail every time you bought and ate or drank something that was not good for you? What if other people despised you as a filthy criminal if you were caught buying things whose manufacture destroyed living things?

The sacredness of the consumer: is also a tyranny of the majority. It is also the tyranny of conformists who scream that everybody must live as they live, and no other culture or values are allowed to be supported in public except theirs. It is the tyranny of global capitalism. It is the tyranny of oligarchic monopolies and outright monopolies. Regardless of what you want to buy: you have no choice. You buy what capitalist corporations want you to consume: period, end of story. Small businesses are being systematically destroyed and becoming extinct because of the predatory business ethics and underhanded illegal practices of larger multi-national global corporations.

This is the sick, pathetic joke about the sacredness of the consumer. The sacredness of the consumer is supposed to be based upon choice. But everyone knows this is pure bullshit. Large companies have long ago bought out the shelf space of all supermarkets. No small business products can even be stocked on these shelves. The products that are stocked on the shelves for consumers to choose from are what the largest multinational corporations decide to sell the masses of ignorant spoiled idiots called consumers.

Consumers can choose between Coke and Pepsi. They can choose between Ford and Chevrolet and Nissan. They cannot choose a car that is made by a small local business. They cannot choose anything, except what they are FORCED to buy: the rigged global international capitalist products that are sold all over the world. No matter where you go in the world: consumers are buying the same shit. Because they do not have any choice. This is one truth consumers do not like to admit. That their sacred Right of Consumer Choice is actually a complete farce. That they actually do not have any choice. That they are consumers slaves and consumer addicts.

The concept, the belief in consumer choice; is merely an attempt to live an immaculate life by pretending that you can choose to be untouched. The actual fact is that consumers have no choice whatsoever. Consumers are manipulated and cheated outrageously and openly by producers. Consumers are manipulated and cheated and sold lies. They stand for this because they have no choice. They have no choice but to put all their life's savings into global corporate money-pockets called banks because all the small banks have been bought up. They have no choice but to buy gas for their cars and buy cars because the entire economy is geared only for this kind of life-style. Middle-class consumers are the biggest suckers and the worst slaves to their consuming addictions in the world... But try and

1364

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1365

tell them they have to be more responsible in what they consume; and they laugh at you. They walk around with this stupid, blind, idiotic conviction that they are the most fortunate, most affluent generation of humans to ever live on this planet... and oh, yeas: by the way... they believe implicitly that they are also the most intelligent humans ever born also. They have a smugness an arrogance, and a stupidity about them that is so obscene: it makes you want to vomit.

Where does their secret smugness come from? It comes from the belief of their immaculate untouchability. It comes from the belief that they cannot be touched by any unpleasant truth. It comes with the belief that they can choose not to be touched by any truth they choose to deny. It comes from their religious belief in the sacredness of consumer choice as a form of untouchability. It comes from their idiotic notion that if you have a choice, why then... you must be intelligent! Only intelligent people can make choices!

If you point out to them that they have chosen the worst, the stupidest choices possible, and that what they chose proves how stupid they actually are. They laugh at you. Why? Because they can get away with it. They can lie to themselves until the day they die: and die: and remain still convinced of their invisible mysterious superiority to every other human ever born... because they had a middle-class advantage called: 'consumer choice'. They are smug because they have more choices walking down the aisle of a supermarket: than a roman emperor ever did in his entire life.

They are smug because they have the luxury of choice. Choice is a luxury. It is not a necessity.

If you choose to eat healthy food responsibly: you do not have any choice in the matter. You eat fresh green plants and vegetables and nuts and seeds and fruits... that are not processed or frozen or boiled or canned, or picked 3,000 miles away or 2 months ago.

But if you choose to gratify yourself by buying what is not good for you. If you choose to lie to yourself and believe that buying a sugar product that has no fat in it, or a fat product that has no sugar in it is healthy. Why then... you have millions of products to choose from. Because 99% of all consumer food products are unhealthy and not good for you. But hey... everybody else is buying this shit. So it must be good; right?

Everybody else is also dying early from colon cancer and diabetes, and other illnesses created by eating and consuming processed food... but hey! As long as you all die together! It's all right. Er? No. You will die early. Before your time. You will die alone... because you were stupid enough not to think critically when you were alive. Because you did not make the right, intelligent, healthy choices that were good for you. Instead; you chose what gratified you; not what was actually good for you.

What is good for you does not taste good, and does not gratify your crude physical senses. What is good for you is what is hard for you. Not what is easy for you.

Consumers: by the time they get old... are so weak and so pale and so sick and so stupid and so addicted and so stuck in their old addicted unchanging ways: that for all intents and purposes: they are senile, gibbering, insane apes: barely able to walk or eat or talk or think. They have become so rotted and so rotten by a lifetime of pleasing themselves: that they have no stamina, no fortitude, no energy, no intelligence, no resilience, no energy. You could push them over with a feather. The only thing that keeps them alive are the hundreds and thousands of chemical, physical, mechanical consumer

1365

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1366 advantages they have; so they literally do not have to raise one of fucking finger to live or eat. All they are able to do is crawl on crutches and canes from the car to the restaurant and back... and then go home, lie down, and watch TV. Old modern consumers are sickest the weakest, the most diseased, unhealthiest humans ever to live.

They are living horrors that are screaming out to all the young consumers...

Do not live like I lived. Do not eat what I ate. Do not do what I did.' Their watery-eyed unstable weak, unhappy miserable eyes so full of unhappiness and fear, and cunning hate and cynicism, their wrinkled unhealthy skin that is so thin it is like paper, their flaccid fat, corpulent, twisted, deformed bodies are so ugly... their bodies and eyes are all screaming out to those who pass by them:

'I am sick. I am afraid. I am afraid of dying. Why is this happening to me. I am stupid. I do not understand why I am sick. Ugly misery is now normal for me.

In spite of this: they are still smug. They still believe they are living the good life. They still have something that makes them superior. They have: consumer choice.

The fact that they have no choice but to live inside the rotting diseased unhealthy bodies they created for themselves by living as consumers: is something they conveniently choose to ignore. They have no choice; but to live in fear and misery and secret envy and secret hate. They have no choice but to fear dying and live in fear all their lives. But... they still have something called consumer choice. Somehow: this makes their meaningless consumption and their meaningless lives somehow worthwhile: as long as they live in the middle of other consumers, as long as they conform. Even though they do not have any choice in other things. Even though they are enslaved to their machines and enslaved by civilized systems that use them like cattle on a labor market that is nothing more than a butcher shop of destroyed human potential, even though they have no choice but to knuckle under to every authority, even they have no choice but to follow thousands of rules and regulations and customs and traditions and fads and fashions. Even though they are enslaved by the very things they buy. Even though they cannot do without their precious consumer goods and products... they still have options of choice. They can move laterally in cars and jet planes and trains. Carried by their precious mechanical machines that give them such an advantage of freedom of motion. They can move up and down the hierarchies of civilized societies. They can choose what to buy. They can choose how to live. They have endless choices. But above all: they have the power of wealth. They have the power of money. They have the reflective power of consumer choice. They can actually think about what they should buy before they buy it. They have the luxury of making a hundred pointless choices every day.

Hmmm. Let's see. Which tie should I wear with what shirt? Which shoes should I wear with which pants? Which cereal should I eat? Which radio station should I listen to? Which bus should I take to work? Oops. Which route should I take to work? Should I work all my life until I die? Or should I have fun?

Oops. Ever see an old consumer having fun? The only 'fun' they have... is consuming something. Eating is their only fun.

One problem with the idea of living an immaculate consumer lifestyle is if you are immaculate: you cannot blame yourself even though you are to blame. The hypocrisy in the one-sided concept of the immaculate is that you cannot let yourself get dirty even though you are dirty. Middle-class upwardly

1366

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1367

mobile consumers are living out the fairy tale of the emperor who had no clothes. They are blind to their own nakedness. They are blind to their own dirt. They are blind to their own responsibility. The finger of responsibility is pointed at everyone except themselves. They cannot see themselves as guilty or responsible for anything that is dirty: because they have been living a life of ritual cleansing and separating themselves from all dirt their whole life.

The sacred right of consumer choice is supposed to be preserved. Nothing is supposed to be polluted. Corporations who pollute are supposed to clean up their own dirt and not dump it into the air that consumers breath, or water that consumers drink, or land that consumers are near.

Yet this is exactly what consumers do to themselves. They pollute their own air by the cars they use. They pollute their own water by dirtying it with their own feces and urine and their own bodies. They wash themselves by dirtying water and then dumping the dirty water somewhere else. They use landfills to dump their consumer garbage in which they create by the tons every year per-person.

The producers who sell them this shit are not supposed to do the same thing they do because their pollution is in larger quantities. Their pollution comes from manufacturing and producing what consumers want and need, and buy.

The consumer-producer dynamic is the dynamic of the immaculate. It is the dynamic of the hypocrite. It is the dynamic of every hypocritical parent who says to their child: 'Do as I say. Not as I do.'

Every parent... every consumer... every producer of consumer goods, services and products: suffers from the one-sided concept of the immaculate.

If a hard working parent spoils their child so the child does not want to work hard like the parent works: the parent does not blame himself for spoiling his own child. He blames everybody else for it. He blames society for it.

If a consumer does not want producers to pollute the world by producing consumer goods which he buys: the consumer does not blame himself for buying the consumer goods that producers are producing. He blames everybody else for it. He blames society for it

If a producer does not want consumers to pollute the world by consuming products that create this pollution. The producer does not blame himself for producing the goods they sell to consumers. He blames everybody else for it. He blames society for it

They are all immaculate. They are all without blame. They are all without responsibility. They are a part of society. They are all part of civilization. They are all part of the immaculate concept of human society. Hear no evil: see no evil: speak no evil. That is the only actual choice they have. The concept of the immaculate forces them all to act this way.

Middle-class upwardly mobile conversation has been reduced to a careful ritual of avoiding all unpleasantness. The only topic allowed is trivia. The only content allowed in middle-class conversation is trivia. Because every middle-class person is being immaculate. You cannot be immaculate if you speak of anything dirty. You cannot be immaculate if you say anything unpleasant. You cannot be immaculate if you are honest. You cannot be immaculate if you are passionate about anything. You cannot be immaculate if you have courage. You cannot be immaculate if you are not a conformist. You cannot be immaculate if you are not pleasant. You cannot be immaculate if you are angry. You cannot be immaculate if you feel anything deeply. You cannot be immaculate if you are dirty. You cannot be immaculate if you are honest enough to admit that your hands are dirty. You cannot be immaculate if you are responsible for the dirt you create. You cannot be immaculate if you clean up your own dirt unless you dump it somewhere else and pretend it is not yours, or unless you ignore it and pretend it does not exist. One way how middle-class people stay immaculate is: out of sight. Out of mind. Put your garbage in a black plastic bag so you can't see it. Put it into a garbage can behind the house. Put it outside the house, then have it hauled away so you can't see it, and can't see where it goes, or what it does to the environment.

1367

Fart your car exhaust out behind your car as you are driving the car forward so you cannot smell the poison fumes you create by being upwardly mobile on a lateral plane. Shit your feces into clean water under your ass by sitting on a toilet and flush your feces away without even looking at it. Do not look at your own shit. Pretend your shit does not exist. Pretend you do not have an asshole. Wipe your shitty asshole with white paper: and do not look at the shit that is smeared on the white paper. Throw the white paper in with your shit and flush it down the drain without looking at it. So you cannot smell your own shit or see it or admit that it comes from your body.

Dogs and cats do the same thing. They scrape dirt over their own feces without looking at their own feces and walk away from it: pretending they never did it. All animals do this in one way or another. Their feces decompose organically: but ours doesn't. Our feces cannot be organically decomposed because it is permeated with all kinds of things that bacteria cannot eat. In fact human feces kills living bacteria designed for this process. We need to let our shit sit inside septic tanks and decompose it chemically first: before it can be allowed contact with living bacteria. Even then, our shit is still poisonous.

The same problem exists with every artificial process human civilization uses. We create and manufacture artificial poisonous chemicals that kill living things. Hundreds of millions of tons of pure toxic poison is being created every year by immaculate humans.

The immaculate concept of civilization has become a huge population of 7 billion mechanical dogs: who are carefully pretending it they are not shitting billions of tons of artificially man-made chemicals and toxins and poisons and waste products onto a living earth that was never designed to support a 7 billion human dogs.

The Earth was not designed to process the artificial shit created by our immaculate civilization. The Earth cannot process man-made shit. The Earth is dying from it. It is being poisoned by it so fast now: you can see the rot taking over entire forests and whole eco-systems in a few short decades. Healthy eco-system organisms have been completely destroyed. The remaining ones that are left are being driven into total extinction so fast now: that there is no way to measure the ongoing death because it is happening too fast.

Everything on Earth is getting sicker and dying.

Humans are getting sicker and dying.

All living things are getting sicker and dying.
Oceans are dying and getting sicker.

Valleys are getting sicker and dying.
Lakes and rivers are getting sicker and dying.
The weather is getting sicker and dying.
The air and the atmosphere and even the ozone layer; is getting sicker and dying.

Because we have an immaculate concept of civilization: we are pretending that none of this is happening. We are fleeing the country and crowding into our artificial cities. We are huddling inside our artificial houses and buildings and homes and not going outside at all. We are not going out into nature. Millions of people who once spent time outdoors: are huddling inside their artificial houses and barring the doors and battening down the hatches and fighting off all awareness that the whole world and the nature they once knew a few short decades ago; is getting sicker and dying so fast: they cannot stand to go outside and see how horrible the trees look. How twisted and rotten and weak all the trees are: how all the trees are covered with rotting mold. Even the granite outcropping of the Laurentiens... the oldest, hardest rock on Earth is rotting away and being covered with mold and green algae.

The actual truth is that consumers are not sacred. The Earth is sacred.
It is time middle-class people stopped trying to be so fucking immaculate.
The filthiest thing on Earth is the Immaculate Upwardly Mobile Middle-Class Consumer.
The filthiest concept ever invented by humans; is the concept of Immaculate Conception.

Ever since the upwardly mobile middle-class of consumers was invented: they have been layering themselves, insulating themselves, isolating themselves, protecting themselves: in countless consumer ways, cultural ways, physical ways, moral ways, ethical ways, abstract ways, etc. The ways they do it are both subtle, cunning, sneaky.... And openly obvious.

For instance: gone is the old car. Consumers cannot stand to drive a car that is not as immaculately new and as expensive as possible. The insulating qualities of the interiors of these new cars have been improved. The interiors of modern new cars insulate the driver so completely from the outer world: that no noise, no vibration, no smell, no sound, no sunlight... nothing is allowed into the interior: except the bare minimum information needed to drive the car safely.

These new cars have been made so safe and so easy to drive: they almost drive themselves. The interior of these new consumer cars have been made into a baby cocoon, a fetus-sac of total comfort and safety and convenience for the driver. The materials used, the design, the comfort of the seats, the convenience of the instruments and dashboard. The many new comfort-convenience devices, the improved sound systems: all have been improved.

The new consumer lives in comfort, and cleanliness... that is so immaculate: if there is the slightest blemish on almost anything they have: they will throw it away as being soiled, or broken, or blemished... when it can easily be repaired and fixed... and could give years and years of service: before it stops working. The new consumer is not concerned with functionality. They are concerned and obsessed with immaculation. The level of immaculation is constantly rising. What once was acceptable: even though it was not immaculate: is now unthinkable. The idea of not being able to buy the exact soap you prefer, the idea of not finding the exact jacket, the exact shoes you like: is unthinkable. New consumers do not have the concept of settling for what is available. They are used to what in their minds they consider to be the best. Whatever they like: is the best.

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1370

The entire idea of only buying the best: comes from ancient robber baron cultures. Poor peasants had to settle for straw huts. Rich powerful barons could build huge stone castles. Poor peasants had to walk on foot. Rich barons rode on horses. In fact the rich robber barons tried to monopolize riding a horse: as a privilege that was only allowed to the landed aristocracy. Any peasant caught riding a horse was punished or killed. Until the only people riding horse were robber barons with their cavalcades of robber knights: who did their killing for them. The same cultural dynamic exists today. You cannot buy, and own, and drive a car: unless you are a rich robber-baron consumer who can afford the insurance, the registration, the cost of repairs, the gas and the exorbitant cost of the car itself.

Robber baron culture in Europe tried to whitewash their killers as much as possible. Until their heroes became knights. Until the bastards who oppressed the poor brainwashed the poor to worship and idolize the very killers, rapists and robbers who oppressed them and killed them. The same thing has happened in modern consumer culture: all upwardly mobile, middle-class consumers: have been brainwashed by the consumer media to worship and idolize the very bastards who kill them and jail them and fine them, and oppress them: doctors: the hospital killing machine. Police, law: the justice-killing oppressing machine. The armed forces, the government. Banks. Credit card companies. Corporations. Authority figures in consumer cultures have been whitewashed. They all have countless layers of immaculate outer images.

Upwardly mobile, middle-class culture has become a global example to all other cultures of how to live. Upwardly mobile, middle-class culture is being copied by every other culture and every nation that does not have it yet. It is the modern mass robber baron culture of today. It is the most immaculate culture in the world today. It has been whitewashing itself into higher and higher levels of sterile, immaculate, antiseptic deadness and whiteness, and goodness, and mediocrity, and identity.

Where did the concept of immaculation come from? It came from the middle-class concept of the first lowlander Dutch people; who were the first people on earth to develop a mass middle-class culture that did not have a higher elite culture on top of it, which they could ape and follow and conform to.

The Protestant belief of 'cleanliness is next to godliness': comes from the idea of leading a clean life. Not a morally or ethically or spiritually: just physically clean. Nothing else. The reason the lowlander Dutch became obsessed with keeping everything around them and their houses: as immaculately clean as possible. Was because: they had already been morally-ethically-emotionally-mentally-spiritually-culturally dirtied and poisoned by the elite robber baron cultures which had ruled them for hundreds of years, and the dirty poor robber baron culture: which they developed and tried to emulate their rulers.

After the Protestant Reformation of Northern Europe: Protestant Europeans had nothing to cling to anymore. They had nothing to look up to anymore. They had no authoritarian church to cling to and look up to. They had no royal monarch to cling to and look up to.

They only had their own dirty middle-class morals and ethics of greed and secrecy and hypocrisy. They could not make it into a religion. They could not make it into a monarch that ruled them. But they tried. In Holland: they tried to have corporations of the richest foulest greediest sickest most corrupt Dutch robber baron traders and burghers to rule them. They invented their own personal gods. They invented their own culture. They regressed to the idiocy of stone-age nature worshippers: worshipping everything around them. Attributing spiritual qualities to everything they touched and bought and sold and made and saw. The worshiped vases, tables, anything they could polish and revere as an icon representing their new affluence. This is still true today. It's called materialism.

1370

The dirtier their inner souls became. The more immoral, unethical, unspiritual they became: the more they became obsessed with keeping themselves as immaculately clean as possible, and insulating themselves from all of the dirty truths about how they actually gained their affluence as much as possible.

The process of immaculation created by upwardly mobile middle-class people: has become the insulated insanity of middle-class consumers insulating themselves as much as possible from all facts that are dirty, all truths that are unpleasant, all things that are unpleasant or considered to be dirty:... are wiped clean, wiped out of the mind, forgotten, lost, ignored, avoided, denied, etc, etc. Their minds are immaculately wiped clean of all true facts, all true intelligence, all true feelings, all true thoughts, all true passion, all true intelligence.

Upwardly mobile middle-class people are immaculately clean empty shells. They are also the most boring fucking people on earth. They are the sneakiest, the most underhanded, the most cunning, the craftiest, the wiliest human filth on earth. They are the most mentally detached insane people on earth. They have wiped out all of their connections. Because these connections were deemed to be dirty. They have wiped out all of their past. They live in a culture of complete amnesia. They forget the past the second it happens. The past does not exist for them. They are the most one-sided upwardly mobile people: never looking back ... only looking ahead, and finding out the sneakiest, safest, most cunning ways to gain an advantage and get rich. They are the users and takers and consumers of the world.

In modern consumer culture: using, taking and consuming: is sacred. In modern consumer culture: giving, making, working: does not exist. Upwardly mobile middle-class people do not know how to give more than they take. Upwardly mobile middle-class people do not know how to let themselves be used more than using others. Upwardly mobile middle-class people do not know how to make more than they consume.

This is the cultural result of the one-sided blindness of the one-sided concept of immaculation. This is the insane result of the idea of keeping yourself as physically immaculate as possible... while indulging in every kind of moral, spiritual, ethical, chemical filth and poison and addiction and crime and sin possible. This is the insane result of the mindless concept of the middle-class ethic that the majority is right. What the majority wants: is given to them. But only physically. Only in consumer products. Only as a way to make a profit. Upwardly mobile middle-class people believe that profit is sacred. That you cannot, and must not give more than you receive. At the same time... the stinking hypocrisy of their sacred belief in the sanctity of profit... is based upon robbing and stealing from others. It is based upon taking from other humans more than giving back to them.

The only way: modern upwardly mobile middle-class people can exist as a class today... is by having six billion humans on this earth whom they take from and rob and steal from.... Safely... by using the legalized system of robbery known as the capitalist system of business and profit. The only way they can exist; is by sitting on top of 6 billion other humans and sucking their lifeblood out of them as cunningly as possible, as safely as legally, as illegally, as immorally, as unethically as possible. And then.... Pretending that the 6 billion people they rob from: do not exist, while hiding behind the millions of insulating layers of secrecy of the poor-creating producers manufacturers, corporations etc-and their consumer addicts they pander to. Upwardly mobile middle-class people are so obsessed with comfort and ease: that nothing else exists for them. Upwardly mobile middle-class people are so obsessed with distraction, and entertainment and self-gratification: that nothing else exists for them.

Their societies and communities have disappeared. They have no social networks or organizations whatsoever. Their cliques of backstabbing gossipmongers are shrinking and shrinking. Their only form of social behavior is commercial activity. The only thing they do anymore is buy... or sell. The only thing they do is make money... or spend money.

They do nothing ... except consume and consume and consume.

They do nothing but waste and waste and waste.

They do nothing but pollute more and more and more....

They are becoming a mass of alienated individuals: each one insulated by the commercial filth they live-by, live-for, and work-for.

They do this... as immaculately as possible.

Upwardly mobile middle-class people do not want to know anything. They do not want to be educated about anything. They do not need to be educated about anything. They do not want to be enlightened about anything. Their pandering media gives them the lowest, the filthiest possible shit. And every time: the lowest shit is swallowed by upwardly mobile middle-class people: the pandering media tries to sell them even worse lower shit. Just as the corporate capitalist system tries to lower the level of quality... so they can make more profit. Just as all upwardly mobile middle-class people lower their own standards and give back less than they did... and become greedier, and stingier, and more filled with selfish motives and selfish obsessions, and fear filled neuroses, and envy, and hate... until they have destroyed themselves so badly that they are empty shells. They are only alive physically... and that: just barely. They are only alive mentally; they are emotionally dead inside.

The entire idea of civilization comes from the idea of immaculation. Civilization is merely a concretion of the idea of immaculation. The idea of humans separating themselves from nature: is the idea of immaculation.

What is the concept of the immaculate? How did the idea of immaculation develop? Why did it develop? How and why was it invented? Where did it come from?

The immaculate concept: the concept of immaculation... is normalized separation. Immaculation is created when you become used to being separated from things. When you become used to living inside an artificial shell called a house. When you spend 97% of your life indoors: you become immaculately separated from the rest of the universe. You become immaculately separated from the entire earth. You become immaculately separated from the sky, the stars, the clouds, the trees, the animals, the insects, the fish, the lakes, the rivers, the plants. The air, the rain, the wind, the weather, the sun, the moon, the land.

The answer is simple. The truth is that the immaculate concept came from tools. We got the immaculate idea of being immaculately separated from things by using tools. We got the immaculate idea of being separated from nature by using tools. We got the idea of separation from using tools. We got the idea of immaculation from using tools.

Our ancestors used tools to separate things with. They used something called a tool to hit a flint stone with. The flint stone separated immaculately. It was a clean break. For millions of years our ancestors made clean breaks, clean separations by using tools made of bone and stone and flint.

They made a clean break with their past. Every time they wanted to do something: they picked up a tool and they made a clean break. They made immaculate separations.

We became used to creating immaculate separations for hundreds of thousands of years with tools. Then we started using our brains like tools. We developed a mental tool called language. We became used to making immaculate separations called words. The immaculate separations in our minds called ideas: come from the mental tools of immaculate separation called words. We used the mental tools of immaculate separation called words and ideas to create immaculate separations called culture.

Then we used the physical tools of immaculate called knives, arrows, axes, swords... and the mental tools of immaculate separation called words, ideas, culture... to create the immaculate separation from nature called civilization.

We used the mental tools of immaculate separation of words, ideas, culture: to create artificial abstract immaculate separations called religious-ethnic-cultural-tribal-clan-national racism, discrimination, bigotry, hate, fear, snobbery, etc. We piled ourselves into cities. To immaculately separate ourselves from nature. Then we created class racism and class hierarchies to immaculately separate ourselves from other people in the pile who were not exactly identical to us. As a result of millions of years of the practice of immaculate separation: upwardly mobile middle class white people can look at poor black people starving on TV.

The upwardly mobile middle class white people are immaculately separated from poor starving naked black people by thousands of miles of immaculate distance. They can look at naked black children starving to death on TV and feel nothing because they are immaculately separated not only by the immaculate separation of thousands of miles of distance, and the immaculate separation of watching something thousands of miles away on TV. They can look at naked black children on TV starving to death and feel nothing because they are immaculately separated from their own feelings. They are immaculately separated from their own thoughts. They are immaculately separated from their own words. They are immaculately separated from their own ideas. They are immaculately separated from so many things... it would take me ten fucking pages just to list what they are immaculately separated from.

The state of immaculate separation. The condition of immaculate separation of middle class upwardly mobile people: is so sick, so insane, so abstract, so crazy: that middle-class upwardly mobile people watch meaningless crap on TV to fill up their empty lives with.

The function of abstract distraction is insulation. It insulates human awareness from everything outside you and everything inside you. You become an immaculately empty-insulated-insane-unaware thing that is barely alive.

The artificial human condition of immaculate separation: is emptiness. The artificial human condition of immaculate separation is death. Middle-class upwardly mobile people who are immaculately separated from each other: middle-class upwardly mobile people who are immaculate. Middle-class upwardly mobile people who drive immaculate cars, who wear immaculately cleaned clothes, who eat off immaculately clean, immaculately smooth tables, who live in immaculately clean buildings, who sit on immaculately constructed chairs, who work on immaculately abstract computers, who have immaculate thoughts, who use immaculate words, who write on immaculately clean-white paper, who make and use immaculate coins and bills called money, who go into immaculately clean stores to buy immaculately packaged consumer products, who use the immaculate concept of money as an immaculate abstract replacement for all human intercourse, all human giving, all human closeness....

The Path of Splitness
Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1374

Are dead inside. They are all empty inside. They are all immaculately dead and empty inside. This is why all upwardly mobile middle-class people do not want to look inside themselves. Because there is nothing there. They look outside. They look for distraction, for entertainment.

They do not look for truth. They do not ask questions. They have become used to living immaculately clean-empty-meaningless lives that are so artificial: they live inside a civilization that has become so immaculately cleaned out of all meaning, all truth, all feeling, all intelligence: that they have literally become walking tools, they have become machines. The only reason they live is to function mechanically like a tool... to support and enable and maintain the immaculate machine-idea of human civilization as an immaculately environment that is immaculately separated from nature, the earth, the galaxy, and the universe.

Civilized upwardly mobile middle-class people have developed immaculately separated self-images of themselves called egos.

Nothing can touch them. Nothing touches them. They are immaculately separated from everything except their own ego.

As a result: middle-class upwardly mobile people do not touch other people. They do not touch anything that is not immaculate.

A dirty naked starving black baby in Uganda?... Ugh.... The baby is not immaculate. The skin of the naked black baby is not immaculately white like their baby's skin. The dirty naked starving black baby is not washed immaculately clean every day like their baby is immaculately washed. The dirty naked black starving baby in Uganda is not immaculately clothed in expensive baby clothes like their white immaculately washed-clean baby is. The dirty naked starving baby in Uganda is separated from them by the immaculate distance of thousands of miles.

If that dirty black starving baby in Uganda were in their living room. Oh... that would be totally different. Then they would maybe feel something. Then they might maybe do something.

The concept of the immaculate... is the concept of distance. If you want to be immaculate: you have to distance yourself from your fans. Immaculate movie stars distance themselves from people who want to touch them. If you want to be immaculate... you have to distance yourself from yourself.

If you want to be immaculate: you cannot afford to touch anything directly. You cannot afford to feel anything directly. You cannot afford to think anything directly. You cannot afford to say anything directly. You cannot afford to act directly. You cannot afford to live directly. You cannot afford to be honest and direct. You cannot afford to be passionate about anything. You cannot afford to have direct honest emotions of rage anger curiosity love kindness etc.

The concept of the immaculate is based upon exclusion. If you want to be an immaculate middle-class upwardly mobile person: you have to exclude every fucking thing and every fucking person who is not immaculate. If you want to be an immaculate middle-class upwardly mobile person: you have to practice the snobbery of exclusion to such a sick insane degree: that you become a vile dead soul inside. I live inside this immaculate piece of shit called human civilization. And I fucking hate it. I hate civilization.

1374

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

I am not as fucking immaculate as upwardly mobile middle-class people. I despise them. I had no choice. I did not ask to be born into this piece of immaculate shit called civilization. I am middle-class myself: and I hate it. I am upwardly mobile myself: and I hate it. I hate having to pay the fucking rent to live in a fucking immaculate building. I have to make fucking immaculate money to pay the fucking immaculate bills they send me so they can make their fucking immaculate profit off me. And I hate it.

There are better ways to live than being fucking immaculate. I do not give a fuck about immaculation. I do not give a fuck if I am not immaculately washed and immaculately clothed and driving an immaculately new car. Because of this. Because of the way I feel and the way I live... upwardly mobile middle-class immaculate people can easily ostracize me from their societies using any convenient excuse they want to. At the same time I cannot stand their fucking immaculate meaningless, boring societies or company. This does not mean I am anti-social. It merely means that I cannot stand the antisocial immaculate shit I am forced to live inside. Only after living inside it and living outside it have I gained an understanding and perspective on this. People who do not critically inspect their own environment and culture remain monocultural idiots simply because they have been programmed and brainwashed into accepting everything around them as being normal and because they have lost their Sense of Pure Wonder. There is no such thing as normality. This is why all people who believe in the religion of normality are idiots. People who believe there is nothing wrong with civilization only believe this because they have been dumbed down to the intelligence level of a dead post: nothing penetrates their awareness.

The Immaculate Caste System

What is the idea of caste anyways? It is the idea of the immaculate. It is the idea of how far you have caste other people away from you in your mind... it is the idea of type-casting people into roles and levels, and classes. It is the idea of how far you have physically removed yourself from other people. It is the one-sided idea of living high up on a hill and casting stones down at other people. It is the idea of living high up on a hill in a castle so other people cannot cast stones at you, but you can cast stones at them.

It is the idea of superior advantage, it is the idea of the advantage of superior height. It is the idea that if you are up a tree: you are superior to those on the ground. The actual truth is: the reason monkeys are up a tree is because they are afraid to come down and meet other living things on their own level.

The idea of superior height is the idea of how far away from the earth you have managed to raise yourself. People living high up on a hill in stone castles... going: ugh: those dirt peasants... always grubbing in the soil and getting themselves all dirty... ugh. How spotlessly clean you live... how immaculately you live: how effectively you have immaculated yourself from everything around you... rich people... living insulated empty lives in huge, empty insulated houses... driving insulated cars that insulate them from nature. Everything in their house is immaculate. Rich high-class people spend fortunes to keep their houses and homes as immaculate as possible. Rich people live as high up on a hill as possible. Rich people live as far away from other people as possible. Rich people are obsessed with living as immaculately as possible. Upwardly mobile middle-class people do the same thing.

Rich, powerful people living in castles: living in insulated comfort: while their peasants starve and freeze and die. That is the immaculate concept. Insulating yourself from other people. Insulating yourself from the woes of other people. Insulating yourself from your own woes. Separating yourself into insulated layers of classes: so each class does not touch another class. That is what upwardly mobile middle-class people do.

There is no difference between the idea of caste, the idea of class and the idea of the immaculate. They are all abstract ideas that attempt to separate you from everything.

The concept of the immaculate is the one-sided concept of separation. The concept of washing yourself is the idea of removing all soil from your skin. The concept of the dirty lower classes is the concept of washed, clean, immaculate people despising the dirty lower classes. The concept of the masses is the concept of the unwashed, the unclean, the dirty. The concept of soil being dirty is the concept of the immaculate. The concept of earth being dirty is the concept of the immaculate. The concept of the revulsion of nature is the concept of the immaculate. The concept of separating yourself from nature is the concept of the immaculate. The concept of civilization is the concept of the immaculate.

All of these concepts are not actual. All of these concepts are not actually true. All of these concepts are lies. All of these concepts are wrong. All of these concepts are sick. All of these concepts are dirty. All of these concepts are unclean. All of these concepts are revolting. All of these concepts are filthy. All of these concepts are obscene. All of these concepts are one-sided. All of these concepts are abstract.

One-sided separation does not actually exist in the universe. One-sided separation only exists as a filthy concept inside people's reflective minds. As words. We think in terms of words. We use separate words to describe a tree. A tree has roots, a trunk, branches and leaves. But that is a lie. There are no actual separations in a tree. There is no actual separation between the roots of a tree and the trunk of a tree and the branches of a tree and the leaves of a tree. You can search and hunt: and you will never find the spot where the root of a tree becomes the trunk. You will never be able to find where a trunk of a tree becomes a branch. You will never be able to find where a branch becomes a leaf. There is no such thing as absolute separation except in your mind. There is no such thing as the concept of the immaculate except in your mind.

You can try and try to separate yourself absolutely from Nature. You can build a house and paint it and seal the windows and doors. But air still gets in, ants get in, insects, bacteria gets in. Dust gets in. Dirt gets in. You have to clean your house all the time to keep it immaculate. You become a slave to the concept of keeping yourself immaculately isolated from everything. You become sterile. Your thoughts become sterile. Your feelings become sterile. Your life becomes sterile and boring.

Let's see... is the floor clean enough? Is it immaculate enough? Does the table shine immaculately enough? Is there any dust? Is there any dirt? Any soil? Any earth? Ugh! Get rid of them! Kill the ants! Wipe away the soil! Wash the floor! Dust the furniture! Clean your clothes! Wash yourself! You are dirty!

That is what the idea of the immaculate does to you: Everything has to be immaculately organized. Everything has to be immaculate. Everything has to be high-class. You have to cast stones at other people. You have to talk about them behind their back. You have to distrust people. You have to guard your immaculate boundaries. You have to have an immaculate ego that is never wrong. You have to be insane.

The Cunning Insanity of Human Immaculation

Can be seen in Canada.

People own acres of land in the middle of hundreds of square miles of natural forests. They buy immaculate squares of land called acres. Sacre acre they buy sacred earth abstractly and immaculately own it.

They do not own the land all around their immaculate sacred acre. They do not own one inch of land beyond their immaculate sacred square of abstractly owned land. You can see these immaculate squares of cleared land from the air. They are insane abstract designs destroying the natural beauty all around it.

They come in and bulldoze every living thing and destroy every fucking living thing that has lived there for millions of years.

Then once they have killed everything on their sacred acre of owned land: including the Earth, the insects, the trees, the animals, the birds nesting there, the reptiles, the worms, the bacteria and the living organisms in the earth.

They start digging holes called septic tanks: to poison the rest of the land with an accumulation of their own feces and urine and toxic chemicals poured down drains and laundry detergent and motor oil. So the entire square acre of sacred Earth becomes septic and rotten and will not support any other life on it after they leave.

Then they dig holes called basements and wells. Using the ground water for themselves only once: then poisoning that water irretrievably with their civilized waste products and pouring back into the sacred acre of earth... to leach slowly into the streams and watersheds and rivers until the entire earth's oceans have become septic, toxically poisoned by the chemicals these acres of poisoned land seep into the waters of the earth.

Then they build dead artificial things called houses onto that sacred acre of earth and put artificial domesticated grass and artificial domesticated tress and plants on that sacred acre of earth. Then they sculpt that raw naked raped square abstract piece of own and that they destroyed... and try to created an artificial beauty out of it.

In stark contrast to the natural beauty of the wild forest all around their squares of raped destroyed earth. Except that most of the natural forests they build their square plots of abstraction in: has already been systematically raped and lumbered and destroyed systematically and repeatedly for hundreds of years before they ever bought their abstract square of owned earth.

So as a result. The actual beauty that these natural forests once had... has been actually destroyed and raped and uglified and defiled and destroyed so many times... that today: we cannot even dream or imagine how beautiful their natural beauty actually was before the white man came and began systematically destroying it 300 years ago.

Even so... even as destroyed as most natural forests are today from human intervention called human destruction of all natural wildlife and wild eco-systems... the natural grace and beauty of the wild forests all around these weird unnatural squares of artificial ugliness, as destroyed as they are; contrast the difference between natural beauty and insane human concepts of abstract beauty. The insane idea of a few straight lines cutting linearly to define a few boring, unchanging abstract designs or shapes.

In order to maintain this artificial ugliness in the middle of natural beauty: humans spend thousands and billions of dollars: fighting off Nature, as the enemy: and killing nature and all living things that live around them, and dare violate their immaculate artificial square of abstract boring ugliness. -Every natural living thing that does not recognize the abstract imaginary boundaries of these insane animals: is killed. Every plant that encroaches on their insane ideas of abstract ugliness: is cut back and killed and poisoned and rooted out.

People living on these abstract squares in the middle of a natural forest: regard nature as the enemy. They regard all.... All the living animals and insects and mammals and reptiles and bacteria and most other living things around them as the enemy... whom they kill every chance they get.

They see nature as constantly encroaching upon their sacred acre of earth... their artificially cared-for, maintained land, their sacred abstract lines and boundaries. They erect fences, they cut down trees, they plant domesticated grass. Those who do not have any aesthetic taste or sensibilities do not bother with noticing their own abstract uglification. Their acres are raw sewage dumps, garbage dumps, with a rotten dead house on it where they hole up in and never go out of.

These people living in the middle of Nature... secretly hate Nature, ignore it... do not give a shit about it... take it for granted... and do not regard Nature as being beautiful. These people who live in Nature regard Nature as being a nuisance, as a distraction from the everyday normality of their humdrum, abstract-oriented ugly civilized environment

And these civilized consumers living in the woods: 'tsk-tsk' about how lumber companies are destroying natural forests: while they sell their own 100-year-old healthy tall unblemished healthy trees to any person who wants to cut them down for the money they can make off the lumber. They build artificial sewage waste holes called artificial ponds that are artificially damned and created by artificial holes that have no business being there in the first place. Their insane idea of living a civilized life. Their insane idea of civilized existence: is replacing natural beauty with abstract civilized beauty. Their idea of living is: replacing nature with the artificiality of civilization.

One person immaculately owning one immaculate acre of sacred earth: the idea, the human concept of immaculate ownership. The human idea... the human concept of abstract ownership. Is killing the Earth today. The insane idea that every human has the sacred right to own a piece of land that is immaculately separated from all other land by the insane use of abstract lines: is destroying all life on the Earth. This systematic destruction of nature piecemeal.... This process of immaculate destruction is going on as i write this.

The insane concept of immaculately abstract boundaries does not work. The concept of immaculately clean linear lines defining boundaries abstractively is insane.

7,000,000,000 humans owning 7,000,000,000 acres of land. 7,000,000,000 destructively sneaky, cunning, insane humans: cutting down and killing every fucking natural living thing on Earth. Blaming Brazilian farmers for doing it: while doing it themselves even worse where they live.

This is the insanity of immaculate ownership

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1379

This is the insanity of human immaculation

'Oh! I am immaculate! I am without sin! I am immaculately innocent! It is they who are the dirty &#%^%$. Not me! I live an immaculately insulated life. My plot of destroyed Earth is immaculately gardened and lawned! I do not cut down thousands of acres of Nature... I only cut down one acre! That's all! Of course there are hundreds of millions just like me who cut down one acre of Nature... but its not my fault there are so many of us! I am only doing it so I can live inside an immaculate house! I own this land! Legally! I can do whatever with this land I want because I own it!'

'It's all those other 7,000,000,000 dirty%^%$ who are responsible! Not me!! I am immaculate!!!! I clean my car! I shower every day! I wash my food! I wash my hands every day! I am clean! I am not a dirty (liar-hypocrite, cheat, coward, unfaithful, cuckolding, etc.) People who wash themselves with water are not dirty liars!'

The forests of northern Canada are being destroyed by acid rain. The acid comes from cities hundreds and thousands of miles away from the forests. Who is blaming anyone for this? Humans cannot blame any abstractively selected scapegoat for acid rain: because we are all responsible for it. We all contribute to the creation of acid rain. So.... since we cannot artificially find an immaculate victim to blame and demonize for the pollution of an entire continent... we do nothing about it. Why? Because if humans in North America wanted to do anything about acid rain....

Everybody in North America and in Asia... every man, woman, child and baby would have to change how they live.

And when it comes to a choice between the ease of not changing: and the destruction of an entire continent's natural eco-systems. Fuck da eco-systems! We're too lazy to change one fuckin' thing man. The forests have been destroyed by over cutting, lumber companies killing the healthiest trees for 400 years... until now the only trees left in the natural forest are the ugliest, sickliest most diseased, weakest specimens that nobody wants anymore.

The natural forests have been so systematically destroyed by lumber companies coming in every 2-5-10-20-50 years of repeated destruction: that now.... These companies do not want any more lumber from these diseased natural forests because the trees there are all so full of pus-sores, open wounds, rotting dead, half-dying-half-living twisted gargoyle ugly shit unusable lumber: that now... only after 99% of the natural beauty has been destroyed, only after 90% of the natural wildlife has been destroyed: it is only recently that choose to not rape it again.... Only because they cannot make enough profit from it anymore. But!.... Let them find one acre of unspoiled trees that escaped some previous rape-lumbering? And they are in there like flies to kill and cut and run the dead logs to the mills.... And fuck da future. Profit today is all we want and care about.

What if humans stopped creating abstraction? What if humans stopped importing abstraction into natural eco-systems? We can help nature instead of hate it. We can help nature instead of fighting it. We can help nature instead of killing it and destroying it. We can help living things instead of hating and fearing them.

All we have to do is stop behaving immaculately...

If you are dirty... then admit it. Wear your dirt honestly. Do not try to wash it off artificially.

1379

Own your own dirt. Every dirty thing you ever ate or did or thought: every dirty thing you ever felt. Own it. That is called actual honesty.

When you are actually honest with yourself: then you will not be able to live with yourself unless you behave immaculately to all other living things; not just yourself.

What if humans had no immaculate boundaries? Where would their owned land end? What if people cut down all dead trees and let all new growth grow? What if people drained all the septic cesspools called swamps and created lovely healthy breezy forests and natural clearings where all kinds of living things could use and live in-on-under-inside-over?

What if humans stopped killing natural things? What if all humans stopped killing all natural living organisms?

What if humans only destroyed dead things instead of living things? Then the living lands of the earth would become so healthy and clean and full of life and happiness: there would be no more ugliness in the world anymore. Then all the earth would be pure beauty....

And if you get dirty cutting down rotten dying dead trees? Own your dirtiness. Be dirty. Be a dirty killer of dead things.

And if you work hard enough and long enough... after 100 years: your children will be able to live clean lives... because there will no longer be any dirty things to kill anymore after you have destroyed all the death which you already have created by living your fucking insane immaculate lifestyles of civilized abstraction-distraction.

Humans must learn to know the difference between natural beauty and civilized abstract insane ugliness. We must educate all babies and humans to be sensitive to the Natural Beauty of the Earth. We must sensitize all humans to heal the Earth.

Pine needles kill grass. So do leaves fallen from deciduous trees. Grass was not designed to grow under trees. Grass is designed to grow in natural clearings and meadows. The true structures and dynamics of Nature's destructiveness towards itself should be obvious. They are based upon hierarchy. Tall trees hate short, small green living things. The old hate the young. The tall hate the short. The large hate the small.

Trees hate grass plants. Trees do not want to let them grow. Both hardwood and softwood trees cover the earth around them and under them with dead leaves and dead needles. They cover the living earth with their own dead bones and dead leaves and dead needles and dead corpses of dead rotting tree-trunks.

All of the rotting bones and waste that fall onto the living Earth are only meant for the selfish use of the trees themselves. That any green living thing uses some of their rotting vegetation to feed on and live on is not due to the generosity of trees. They do not give life to other plants and living creatures. Living creatures and other smaller plants steal their ill-gotten food, their rot-food from the tall silent lonely giants of the plant world.

The entire hierarchy and dynamics and structures of nature are nothing but robber-baron cultures. All of them... robbing and raiding and fighting each other...

They go out of their way to deny food from other living things. Trees go out of their way to deny shorter plants sunlight. They go out of their way to deny them water by growing taproots so deep that only they can drink when the water table gets low. They suck as much water into their roots as possible so other plants cannot have it. The roots of trees fight each other. That is how old robber baron culture is. Roots are grim constrictors. They are remorseless. They are without pity. They attack all things by slipping in-between. And then expanding and cracking open. They constrict things they cannot slip in-between.

Trees make food for themselves. By eating the corpses of their dead. They are cannibals. They recycle their own waste. But they cannot recycle all of it. The excess is washed out to cover the ocean floors with silt; useless waste. Earth that could be used to grow living plants is wasted every time it rains.

Yet we think that cannibalism is the filthiest thing there is. Humans eating humans is morally spiritually wrong. Yet trees are cannibals. Trees create their own food. They create more food than they need. Their roots crumble rock and mineral deposits and the earth's crust so other things can crumble it and rot it and turn it into soft moist earth. The corpses of trees are clean and healthy. Their bodies are good to eat for many living things. Human corpses are poison. They are full of poisonous elements and toxic chemicals and trace elements so toxic: anything that eats a human body dies and goes insane. This is the only organic reason why human cannibalism is spiritually evil, and plant cannibalism is healthy.

Jesus was honest enough to encourage his disciples to eat his flesh. Why? And drink his blood. Because then... they would be cured of eating. Then they would become honest killers. Then they would be forced to face the fact that they indeed did kill him. And ate his body and drank his blood as the true cannibals they were and still are. Heinlein saw the same hypocrisy in his book: 'Stranger in a Strange Land'. Food is food. Some food is healthy: other food is poisonous. Lichen eats rock. Rocks rot. Trees rot. Animals rot. Humans rot. Everything rots. Decomposition. Down to the smallest level. This is one side of the vicious cycle of life.

The other side is Composition. Taking separate notes and putting them together to make a beautiful melody. Nature takes separate decomposed elements; and re-composes them into beautiful living things again. Except it does the same thing over and over. It does not compose new melodies. It just makes different permutations of the same basic structure and theme. One bird species sings the same basic melody over and over differently: with the smallest of permutations possible for millions of years. Millions of generations of birds singing the same damn song over and over.

Where does the idea of untouchability come from? It comes from the getting away with it. It comes from the criminality of human culture. It comes from criminal humans getting away from their crimes, It comes from guilty consciences. It comes from the subconscious guilt of killing. It comes from the subconscious need to avoid painful truths.

Oh. Well.... if you want to put it THAT way.

Is there any other way to put it?

Oh... You mean don't want to get at the root of the problem? You don't want to expose a root truth?

Why not?

And what is the result of all this immaculate living? What is the result of the concept of the Immaculate?

Worldwide inequity. Worldwide unfairness, inequality, injustice, privilege, oppression, starvation, war, envy, etc, etc...

And what is the result of the concept of the Immaculate Beauty? What is the result of the concept of the Immaculate Untouchable Virgin?

Worldwide cultures of hatred and envy. Worldwide cultures of rape and violation. A worldwide culture of pornography. A worldwide culture of sexual guilt and shame. A worldwide culture of the worship of Immaculate Beauties. A worldwide culture of rage and anger against the Immaculate Untouchable Beauty you are allowed to look at; but never be allowed to actually touch with your hands. The culture of the Immaculate Untouchable beauty creates the concept of rape by its very existence. The culture of raising children so Immaculately that they are innocent and untouched by the corrupt civilization they live in: creates the desire and urge and rage to rape them. It has created cultures of Violation. It has created cultures of Violence. It has created cultures of Hate and War and Fear and Envy.

If females were not considered to be Untouchable. If females did not believe they are Untouchable. If girls allowed themselves to be touched. There would be no rape in the entire world. Then fucking would not be forbidden. Then touching would not be forbidden. Then sex would not be anything special. Then there would only be touching and hugging and kissing and love.

One would think this would cause an epidemic of overpopulation. Wrong. Then human population would shrink. The obsession with sex has been created by the idea of the Immaculate Beauty. If people were allowed to touch each other physically... then they could finally begin to explore each other in deeper ways than just physical penetration. Then people who are attracted to the physical exterior of a physically Immaculate Beauty... would find all kinds of ugliness under their immaculate hides. Then, people would find all kinds of immaculate beauty under superficial skin that is not perfectly Immaculate. Then people would finally begin to grow up enough to realize and understand that there is more than one kind of Immaculate Beauty. Then they would understand that there is more than one kind of Beauty. Then, they would understand that it is the Totality of a person that is important. It is the Totality of a person that is beautiful. Not just what kind of fucking skin they have.

Do you have any idea of how insane it is for most beautiful girls with the smoothest skin, to be untouchable? It should be the other way around. The most immaculate untouchable humans should be the ones with the ugliest souls and the ugliest skin. The unhealthiest humans should be immaculate. They should die out and go extinct. Instead: there is one healthy girl for a thousand unhealthy ones because civilization does not allow natural selection to function in human society.

Beauty is more than skin deep. When girls with beautiful skin are touched: they develop beautiful loving, generous, happy souls that are beautiful inside as well as outside. When touching is not a form of self-gratification, when it is a form of giving: it becomes radiant, beautiful. When it is done selfishly: it becomes insular, boring and ugly, and stupid. What is the point in having a skin that is made to be touched, to go through your entire life making sure nobody touches you? What is the point in being immaculately beautiful if you do not share your beauty and spread love and energy around to other living things? Humans learn by touching. If you do not allow yourself to be touched by other humans: you do not learn anything about other humans. If you do not touch other humans: you do not learn anything about yourself.

Look what the concept of Immaculation has done to birds. Birds are the most immaculate creatures on Earth. They do not touch anything with their living flesh. They do not touch the living Earth with their living flesh. They do not touch the things they kill with their living flesh. They are grotesque monsters that have evolved so they cannot touch anything with their living flesh. They are evolutionary gargoyles. The only things they can touch with; are their dead talons and dead claws and dead beaks. They cannot feel what they touch because their dead beaks and dead claws cannot feel anything. They only thing they can touch, is the dead air with their dead feathers. That is the fate of species that become immaculate. They become useless. They become detached from the living Earth. They become insane intelligence. They become insane observers detached from what they are observing.

Do you want to have a dead beak for a mouth? So you cannot kiss anyone? Do want to have a dead beak, so even if you fell in love, you could not kiss them? Do you want to have claws for feet? So you cannot feel what you stand on? So the only thing you can do with your dead feet is to grip and rip things with? Do you want to have arms that have no hands? So the only thing you can do with your arms without hands is flap them?

Why do humans only touch dead things with their living hands? Why do humans refuse to touch each other? So we can be a stupid as birds? Birds never touch each other. They are fucking immaculate. All they do is be immaculate and fuck: one second a year. They do not understand love. They fuck as little as possible, as shortly and as unfeelingly as possible. Do you want to fuck like a bird? For only one second? Only once a year? Do you want to be incapable of feeling any love? Do you want to be unable to hold anyone in your arms? Do you want to live like a bird? Do you want to have the awareness of a bird? Do you want to waste your entire life just observing things vicariously instead of actually doing-feeling-thinking-laughing-loving-living?

The entire culture of civilization is based upon the Immaculate concept of Untouchability. Civilized people do not touch each other. The Immaculate culture of Untouchability is also the Immaculate culture called: Vicariousness: look-don't-touch. Don't touch anything unless it is Immaculate. Go to Museums and look-don't touch. Read about it, don't live it: libraries. Read about it, don't actually do it-feel-it-live -it. Watch it on TV, movies: don't actually do it. Observe sports-don't actually play them yourself. Be inactive, passive, do nothing, do as little as possible, gratify your greed; gratify your inner sense of emptiness by filling yourself up with meaningless, temporary temptations. Drive a car-don't walk. Push a cart-don't carry anything. Sit-don't move. Talk-don't act. Conform-don't create. Follow-don't lead... Why? Because you believe you are Immaculate. You believe you are an ego. Your reflective awareness is limited only to yourself. You do not have an expanding active awareness that wonders all the time. You take things for granted; you leave things unspoken, you are afraid to act-feel-do-live. You live in a subconscious state of Normality of fear and hate and selfishness.

The entire culture of civilized Sacredness is based upon the concept of look-don't touch. Everything that is Sacred is not allowed to be touched. Everything that is believed to be Sacred is supposed to be Untouchable, Unreachable, out of your reach, above you, beyond you, higher than you, better than you. So the higher you want to get, the more you want to succeed, the better you want to be... the higher you must be, the more Untouchable you must be, the more Sacred your selfishness must be, the more Sacred your ego must be, the more Selfish you must become, etc, etc... ad nauseum, vomit, vomit, vomit.

You must never explore anything with your hands: 'Don't touch that!' You must never explore anything with your mind... Don't say that! That idea is Sacred! You must never question anything with your mind: because if you do... you might find out what it actually is, you might understand it, you might stop wondering about it, it may stop being a mystery, it may stop being Sacred! Only things you are not allowed to touch or question are Sacred! Only things you don't understand are Sacred! Only untouchable things you cannot understand because you are not allowed to touch them are Sacred!

If human shit was never allowed to be touched, or questioned. If human shit were put into museums and churches and nobody was allowed to understand where it actually came from, or how it came into being, or where it came from, or why it was made... then all the human shit in the world would become so Sacred: people would turn their toilets into Museums and Churches, and bow down and worship their own shit... which is what they do now.

We cannot do that with our own shit because we know where it comes from. But we can do it with old, dead shit. Because we do not know where it comes from. Because we are not allowed to touch it. We do not understand where it came from and why it was made. If we did: we would not worship dead shit as being Sacred.

The concept of immaculation is the concept of one-sided separation. It is exactly the same idea. It is exactly the same dynamic. It comes from the first human ancestor who separated something one-sidedly. It comes from the first ape that stood up on their feet so their hands would not touch the earth. It comes the first apes that used tools: so their hands would not touch anything except an immaculate dead thing called a tool. It is the reflective dynamic of tools-using humans-using tools-using humans: until we began using our brains as a tool, until we began using our thoughts as tools, until we invented abstraction, until we separated ourselves one-sidedly from the Earth and the Universe to such an insane degree:... that girls and women are not supposed to be touched at all, until the reaction to the idea of virginal untouchability, vaginal untouchability became envy-jealousy-frustration repression-suppression-rape-violation-abuse-hate- etc. Until the Greeks went to war over one girl because they thought she should be immaculate.

This idea of: 'Don't touch that!' 'You're not allowed to touch that'

Is stupid, evil, and has no rational sane basis for existence. If you could touch something anytime you wanted: then what would be the big deal? The negative psychology of: 'no' doesn't work. It has never worked. If 'no' and 'yes' are not used in the first place: then the split of separation is not created to begin with. Then there is no wound. Then there is no trauma. Then there is no pain. Then there is no fear or hate or awe, or worship, or any of the other insane concepts created by civilization.

To only create a 'no' without a 'yes' is plain crazy. Why create a separation where it did not exist before in the first place? Why split something apart? Why use a tool to separate something one-sidedly? Why separate anything?

If you do not tell a child 'no' they cannot do something, or 'no' they cannot touch something, or 'no' they must not say something, or 'no' they should not think something or 'no' they should not feel something: then they will not be driven by their natural curiosity to obsess over what is forbidden, then they will not be brainwashed with negativity all their lives, then they will not learn how to fear, then they will not learn how to hate.

Civilized culture is an accumulated pile of negativity, a pile of forbidden taboos, 'Thou Shalt Nots'. It is an accumulated pile of rules that say: no: you are not allowed, you do not have the right, you must obey your parents, you must obey rules, you must follow the rules, you must follow the abstract lines you must not cross the line, you must not violate abstract lines and abstract rules. Civilization is a pile of immaculate untouchable crap that is not allowed to be questioned or looked at or explored, or touched. Look at the effect of this accumulated immaculation, look at the result of this accumulated immaculate untouchability: it stinks to high heaven.

Take away the idea of one-sided sacredness: and what is left? What is left is Pure Wonder. Take away the idea of one-sided worship and what is left? No more gods or kings: just people. These ideas of immaculation are evil. The effect of these ideas are evil.

So what is to be done with this pile of crap? How can it be fixed? The answer to all artificial immaculation is simple. Instead of living in a way that you need artificial immaculation: live in a way that you do not need it. In other words: do not accumulate filth or dead things. If you live cleanly: then you do not need immaculation in the first place. This does not mean finding other living organisms to clean up your mess for you. It means living in such a way that nothing needs to be cleaned up because nothing that is dirty is accumulated. All humans have to do is eschew artificial living habits.

This means living in a State of Pure Wonder. Living in a state of questioning and doubt all of your life. Re-evaluating everything all the time, changing your understanding all the time, learning new things all the time.

Whitewashing

One example of whitewashing is the washing of hands. For hundreds of thousands of years: modern humans did not wash their hands. The concept of washing did not exist. The idea of washing the human skin did not exist. The idea... that you were somehow getting dirty every day... that you were somehow accumulating an invisible kind of dirtiness on your skin did not exist? That after living every day of your life: you felt somehow...dirty. That just living one day of your life automatically makes you dirty. Or you just feel dirty? Why? Where does the Western need for immaculate cleanliness come from?

It comes from the need to wash away guilt. It comes from Pontius Pilate ceremonially washing his hands: absolving himself of any responsibility for the persecution and execution of Jesus of Nazareth.

By performing the ritual of washing his hands in the trial against Jesus: the most loving, kindest Jew in Judea: he absolved himself of his death. By doing this in public: Pontius Pilate legitimized the personal absolution of responsibility and guilt...He legitimized the washing of hands as a ritual way to absolve oneself of all responsibility and guilt: with the full knowledge of knowing what he should have done, and did not do: which was throw the entire case against Jesus out of his court. As a result: the entire Western civilization began washing its hands in ritual absolution from sin every time they sin and eat living creatures which have been killed and butchered for their bellies to be filled.

As Western civilization steadily became morally-ethically-spiritually-physically-culturally-religiously filthier and filthier; as the evil of Western civilization grew and grew: the subconscious need to absolve oneself of all guilt and responsibility for the evil you commit each day which you know is evil... grew and grew: until the daily washing of human skin is now almost a universal cultural norm for all western civilized people. The washing of human skin: is a ritual way of absolving yourself of the sins you commit which you KNOW are sins, and KNOW you should not do them. It is one way civilized people subconsciously hide from their own consciences. By using cultural norms of immaculate personal; cleanliness.

People hide from themselves by using the Dynamics of Reflective Normality and Reflective Reality. By avoiding looking at their Inner Self, by taking their Inner Self for granted: their Inner Self becomes frozen into a state of Inner Normality. Which they are not conscious of. Their Inner Self exists on a subconscious level of awareness: their Inner Self exists below their conscious awareness; because their conscious awareness is focused mostly outwards, not inwards. Then that subconscious Inner Normality is projected out, and made concrete, it is turned into outer reality: not inner reality. It is made real in the outer world: not the inner world. For the most part: this does not happen consciously. Most humans are not consciously aware that they are turning their Inner Normality into their Outer Reality. The state of their Inner Normality is projected out into a state of Outer Reality... which reflects their Inner Reality, which re-reflects their Inner Normality, which is re-re-reflected out into a state of Outer Normality... and on and on...

This entire subconscious tactic is done; as a tactic of avoidance. It is done as a subconscious tactic of inner-avoidance, and as a subconscious tactic of outer-avoidance. Basically: the Dynamics of Reflective Normality and Reflective Reality makes the human subconscious visible to itself. No matter how much humans try to avoid the truth about themselves: the truth always re-surfaces and is made visible. The human subconscious can be physically seen. It has been physically built. Look at the Cheops's Pyramid: a tunnel leading down into the depths... for no apparent reason, and another leading up into the center. The lower chamber is the instinctive consciousness of the human. The chamber in the center is the human subconscious. With two chambers: the King's chamber and the Queen's Chamber: with layers upon layers of massive stone blocks above it, and a peaked roof inside a solid pyramid for god's sake. With tiny air-holes tunneled out to the surface. With a thin veneer of outer reflective consciousness made of polished stone, and a massive amount of rotten sandstone filling up the human brain with cultural brainwashing that crumbles easily upon exposure to the elements. The words Gyp and cheap are still used today. After 7,000 years have passed: when Egyptians cheated their customers and sold them cheap shoddy goods. That had a nice veneer but they were rotten inside. They gypped their customers by gypping them on the sum... by adding the sums up wrongly: Gypsum is a white powder used to panel walls with. Just as Egyptian plasterers gypped their customers by lying about how thick the layer of whitewashed gypsum actually was...

As an example of Cultural Whitewashing: there is the famous movie classic: 'How Green was my Valley'... a fairytale fantasy of a family of coal miners in England. This movie effectively whitewashed everything industrialization did to England and to her people, and to the land, and the air, and the water during the Industrial Revolution. The movie whitewashed hundreds of years of the blackening of England. Entire valleys were blackened, not greened by the horror of coal mines. Entire villages and communities were blackened and destroyed by the Rich Robber Barons; who enslaved entire villages. and put them to work as blackened slaves. Black, dirty, coal grime permeated their pores that could never be scrubbed off. Black lung disease that sickened and killed them by the thousands. Starvation and privation... families living in hovels without any heat. No schools. Children put to work in the coal mines as slaves. Crazy miners: turned insane by working in the black depths without any light, or ventilation. Cave-ins, and mining disasters, explosions... Rich owners greedily piling up their fortunes while starving their workers...

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

Hundreds of years of this blackening horror were wiped out of English textbooks and history books. But their cultural consciences were still guilty. So this obscene lie of a movie was made as an historical nostalgic look at the past of England's coal mining industry as a complete lying fantasy that turned black into white. With coal workers families living in clean, expensive, fancy houses... instead of the filthy dirty hovels they actually lived in, and workers who were actually proud of being the lowest paid, most ignorant, most oppressed class of the English masses. Instead of being ashamed of their degradation. Where fathers loved their children, and helped them to become educated. Instead of being the most uneducated, most ignorant, illiterate industrial slaves in England. The historical rot, the rotten historical lies of this movie are too numerous to list. The whole movie is a whitewash of what the historical truth actually was. The Industrial Revolution in England destroyed green valleys. It did not create them. This lying movie sells the idea that valleys were green during that age: not blackened and filthy with human greed and misery, and industrial pollution, and mountains of black coal dust and black skies and black trees and black houses and black earth. Even the fact that the entire population of poor at that time were illiterate, and could not read a word of English, was romanticized. The movie is a complete romanticized lie... which millions of uneducated viewers who never study history have gobbled up and taken into their hearts as the actual truth. Thus: forever blinding themselves to the true horror, and inhuman degradation of England's dirty industrial past. It should have been called: 'How Black was my Valley'... not 'How Green was my Valley'. It should have shown the truth. Instead; the movie only showed lies.

Movies like this, abound in the thousands. All civilized cultures whitewash their own past on so many levels; it would take ages to uncover the actual truth of their past. This book only lifts a tiny corner of the cultural whitewash that humans have been brainwashed into believing. Human culture is nothing but a whitewashing of our past. Which nobody wants to look at. We keep our whitewashed cultures, and whitewashed customs, and whitewashed traditions; because we have been brainwashed into loving whitewashed lies.

Is whitewashing strictly a phenomenon of civilization?

NO!...

Look up. Our skies are full of whitewash. White Clouds constantly scour the air and atmosphere of the Earth... removing dust and impurities from it, so the air we breath stays fresh and clean. The White clouds of the Earth have been whitewashing the air for Billions of years before we were ever born!

But... The whitewashing of clouds is useful. It is necessary. Without clouds there would be no rain. Living things would die if there were no clouds whitewashing the air. The entire Earth would become a lifeless desert if there were no clouds whitewashing the air. Because their whitewashing is not one-sided. They do not just accumulate and accumulate. If they did... they would suck all the water from the Earth and there would be no water left for living things.

Sea slugs spend their entire lives; whitewashing sand on ocean floors clean of organic matter. Rivers clean the water they send to the sea, and oxidize it. Filling it with life-giving Oxygen. All natural processes of oxidation and anti-oxidation clean things and purifies them by removing impurities, or adding elements that keep things clean. Rain cleans air by falling through it. After a rainfall; the air smells fresh and clean. Waves whitewash the sands of every beach, every second; day and night. They whitewash the perimeters of every body of water.

Northern and Southern climates of the world whitewash the world with snow every year. Covering living things. Hiding the killing that is going on... Making living things go to sleep and hibernate and stop killing. Letting plants hibernate so they can be reborn with new growth in the Spring. Cleansing the world of many things every Winter with the purity of its whiteness.

But these processes are cyclical, they are regenerative. They are not one-sided. They help create more life because they are dynamically balanced as complete cycles: not one-sided, not half a cycle, not unfinished cycles.

Civilized whitewashing is ecologically evil; because it is a dynamic of one-sided accumulation. Civilized whitewashing only accumulates evil by covering it up: not by cleansing humans of that evil. It does not regenerate new life: it only regenerates more evil, more death, more ecological destruction. It is not a healthy natural cycle. It is an artificial, one-sided process that is destroying the entire planet. Where did the idea of whitewashing come from, eh? When did the first African walking apes see snow? When did the first walking apes coming out of Africa meet snow? How many Ice Ages came down to meet African walking apes who were living in climates that had no snow?

The Mediterranean has no snow. Now. But during every Ice Age for untold millions of years: snow came down to meet the walking apes living in Africa. Glaciers: miles of solid ice came down to the Northern shores of the Mediterranean... but how far South into Africa did the snows fall during the Ice Ages? How far into Africa did the snow fall and melt? Instead of remaining all year and accumulating as glaciers? For how many thousands of years during every Ice Age: did apes in Africa have snow falling on them, covering the land every winter?

Today: North America, Asia, Europe and South America: all have snow every winter... but no glaciers: except in the highest elevations of mountain ranges that are close to the poles. Africa has no high elevations, no mountains: except the Atlas Mountains on its Northern edge. How much did the snow, that melted every year, fall on Africa every winter during every Ice age for the last 25 million years? And what was the psychological effect on the apes and monkeys living there?

Suddenly: the white ash that whitewashed the complete destruction of all life, the white ash: that volcanoes had spewed for 25 million years, hiding the death under it, hiding the dead-dying things under it: was replaced by white snow. Suddenly... weather... climate: became the supreme killer: not volcanoes. Suddenly: freezing cold became the killer: not burning, intensely hot volcanic eruptions. Suddenly: they did not have to burn trees to create an arid lifeless desert. The weather did it for them every year. Suddenly: the burning of trees became sacred. It was no longer a crime. It was a way of creating warmth for cold apes; who did not have fur to keep them warm.

What does the natural process of snow signify? It is a reversal of transparency. It is a reversal of the process of life. It is a death-process. When the climate turns cold, and living things begin to die: transparent water turns white: to hide the dead, dying plants and living organisms. Nature uses water to whitewash the death created by winter.

The white ash of volcanic eruptions falling from the skies, and the white snow falling from the skies... covering and hiding a dying land under a blanket of whitewashed whiteness. How many of our ancestors saw this? For how many millions of years did they see this? How traumatic is it: for an African ape living in a climate that is always green and alive: to experience the complete death of the land it lives in, as a process of whitewashing? As a transformation from green living vibrancy: into a pure whiteness of death, desolation and silence? We are merely copying Nature. Hiding the process of death artificially. By whitewashing everything we do, and are.

Furthermore: for how many millions of years, did the two natural processes of whitewashing coincide in Africa? For how many millions of years did volcanoes erupt when the snows fell? For how many millions of years did the falling snow mix with the white ash of volcanic eruptions? And what was the psychological effect of this double whammy upon the apes living there?

Intense cold, and intense heat. Both devastating the entire land. Both covering up the devastation with a mixture of soft, whitewashed snow and ash. An example of how to kill trees by covering them with whiteness. Given to them: by the Gods of Nature that they worshipped: the Volcano Gods and the Snow Gods.

Burning entire forests to recreate the devastation of a re-erupting volcano. Over and over: the repetition of this example given to them by Nature. Burning trees to keep warm when it snowed. Over and over again: the repetition of this example. For millions and millions of years.

The whitewashing of Nature: the falling of white ash upon a devastated burned land: is two-sided. It regenerates the growing cycle of all green things. It is a natural potash that enriches the soil so much: the land recovers from volcanic eruptions almost instantly. The whitewashing of Nature: the falling of snow upon a dying land is two-sided. It insulates the land from the worst cold, and gives it much needed nourishment and water in the springtime. And again... the land recovers from this temporary death almost instantly.

But the artificial whitewashing humans do is not two-sided. It is one-sided. It tries to cover up and hide the rotting death process of civilization.

One-sided whitewashing is only one visible tip of the many hidden icebergs of civilized corruption. These are only a few examples of one cunning way we humans have managed to avoid our own dirty little truths. This is only one tactic that humans have found to avoid being forced to deal with our own actual problems.

There are millions of other ways and tactics we have accumulated, in order to avoid unpleasant truths... and our own dirt. Too many to list in one book. Too many to detail in one lifetime.

Look at playing cards. Originally; only the rich could afford to waste their time playing card games. Only they had enough idle time to play pointless games. Look at a deck of playing cards: only the higher cards have faces... The higher the card, the higher the value of the card. Lower cards are abstract numbers... representing accumulated points. A faceless mob of numbers: whom the higher classes manipulated to enrich themselves by... by treating them as faceless numbers. The more peasants you had: the richer you were, the more wealth you could accumulate by taxing them and robbing them and cheating them. But... the highest card: the ace... is also the lowest card in many card games: it is even lower than the two. Because when you get to the top: you are useless. When you get to the top the only place left you can go is down. Which is what happens to all hierarchies.

Our present Western European Capitalist Consumer culture and civilization: is a layered accumulation of our entire cultural past. Our culture is full of legacies from the past. Humans consciously try to cover up the past. But the human subconscious always brings the truth back up. Humans are so unaware: that they do not realize they are exposing it. They do not realize that their subconscious makes them expose the truth.

All truths that are covered up rise to the surface again... All truth that is suppressed or repressed: rises back up to the surface. Once people are educated to understand how the subconscious works: they will be able to find the truth. Truth always rises to the surface. No matter how much the truth is covered up: it always rises to the surface. No matter how deeply the truth has buried: the truth always rises to the surface. Our subconscious rises to the surface directly: using universal meanings and universal symbols and colors. That cannot be mistaken or misunderstood. If you look at them critically and logically.

For instance:

Whatever happened to the culture of the first Kings in Europe? Whatever happened to the Ancient Stone Kings of the Stone Age ... the first Kings ever to be crowned? Why were they called Stone Kings? Why was it called a Stone Age? Because these were the first Kings to sit on a stone: as their throne... Which is why from then on... their faces were carved in stone. Our ancestors used stone tools before the Stone Age for millions of years. Those millions of years are not called: the Stone Age. The Stone Age was called that because aged men sat on stones and were crowned as leaders of their tribe. It was called the Stone age because humans began carving stones. They became stone carvers. Before this: they split stones, but they never carved them.

These aged, old rotting men with stone faces and minds as dead as stone, were the stupidest humans alive then. We still follow their practice. We elect only the stupidest old men to lead us. If you research the Stone Age cultures of the first Kings ever to be crowned: you will find their crowning places. In Ireland. In Scotland. In Europe. You can still go to these ancient sites; thousands of years old. Where Kings were ritually crowned... for hundreds and hundreds of years. There are famous stones. There. Where the first Stone Age Kings were crowned. Their cultures were all wiped out by the Copper Age, The Bronze Age and the Age of Iron. We know almost nothing of how they actually lived or who they were.

But one thing we do know.

Before these Kings were crowned. Before they sat down on their sacred thrones. There were no chairs back then. Chairs had not been invented yet. All sitting, all chairs: was invented because Kings were ritually crowned... by sitting on a sacred throne... which originally were sacred stones. They sat on the deadest things possible. Because they were the deadest souls. The deadening energy of dead metal was placed as metal rings... around their heads. To keep them from exploding. To keep these Kings from experiencing the exploding insights that created human culture in the first place.

To prevent humans from realizing the truth: they had their leaders, their Kings... sit down on the deadest things possible... the most ancient stones possible which had survived countless Ice Ages. And spend most of their lives sitting on those dead things. This way they became asses. They became assholes. Their minds became as dead and numbed as the stones they were sitting on. And by this energy control: the energy-awareness from their brains went straight up, and straight down... down into the Earth's crust, and up into the air... with birds of prey... black ravens and crows circling overhead... as signs of their sacred right of Kingship.

Everywhere there is a chair: you can see the legacy of these Stone-age Kings.

But where is the legacy of their thrones? Where is the legacy of what they did: turning all Europeans into a race of dirty squatters and asses and assholes?

Look at your toilet.

It is a whitewashed throne.

It is molded into the exact same shape that all Stone-age thrones were shaped. They are the exact same size as the Stone Age thrones that still exist, and can still be seen in Ireland and Scotland. Why is your toilet a direct subconscious legacy of these ancient Kings?

Because every ancient King that was crowned sitting on a King-stone was FULL OF SHIT. Because they were shitting in fear when they sat there... being enthroned. Being acclaimed for something they did not earn, did not digest and did not understand.

This ritual was originally supposed to teach them that they were lower and slower than the standing people they served. When you sit. You cannot move as fast as a person standing. You are lower than they are. You can easily be killed: if the right sacred signs are not observed. These ancient crownings were ordeals of fear. They were life-or-death affairs for the would be rulers. If any sign was found that indicated the person being crowned was unworthy: they were killed on the spot. For the crime of despoiling the sacredness of Kingship.

The first earliest Kings shat into their pants: and were killed on the spot for their fear. The throne-stones came to stink of shit and fear. They were avoided by people.

This ritual came from tall movers finding hidiers squatting. If they smelled any shit on them: they were killed instantly. If they smelled of fear: they were killed instantly. So for the hidiers... any one of their clan that survived an encounter with tall movers: were believed to have more courage, simply because they had not been impaled and left as warnings to all the other hidiers. The hidiers that did not hide behind stones, but sat on these stones were regarded as not being afraid of movers.

Why did the movers not kill the hidiers sitting on stones? Because the stone covered the smell of shit coming from his rectum? Because he seemed to not be afraid? No. Because sitting on a stone does not signal fear. Hiding behind a stone signals fear. Crouching behind a stone means you have something to hide. If you are sitting on a stone for all to see you; you are not hiding from anyone. You are not afraid of being seen. Until you stand up: others cannot tell how tall you are. But if you stand up and they recognize you as not of their clan or tribe: the movers would usually kill the alien tribe.

The hidiers sitting on a stone saw the movers first. They moved faster than the other hidiers: because they were the sentinels for their tribe. These original sentinels of tribes of cowards: became the leaders of these cowards. They sat apart from the other cowards... on top of hills, sitting in stones. Others listened to him when he came running down: telling them what to do.

What difference is this from Moses coming down from the Mount, after talking to God? Leaders originally were the men who liked to be alone. They liked solitude. They liked to think. Sitting on a dead stone let their brains be active, while their lower bodies went to sleep. This is the organic simple truth of how Europeans evolved into ritualizing their leaders as Kings who sat on sacred stones to be crowned.

Oh. They tried to hide it. They tried to lie to themselves. They tried to pretend that the man they were crowning sitting on the throne-stone was not the biggest craven coward, the weakest, most cunning liar of them all. But they were all full of shit.

This is what happens when you try to preserve to the rituals of a tribe of cowards. The ancient thrones of the first ancient Kings have become whitewashed porcelain thrones; we use to sit on, and shit-on... Modern whitewashed thrones called toilets have a hole in the middle of the throne...

Look At The King-Stone In Ireland... It Hangs Over The Edge Of A Cliff...

Why? Because if the man who was to be enthroned was too scared... if he was so afraid that he shat his pants... his shit fell down the cliff side, and nobody was any wiser. The shit-stinking cowardice of the first European Kings were cunningly hidden by this tactic.

What is the difference between the two words: sit, and shit...? The Estonian word for shit is: siit. What is the difference between the three English words: hit, and sit, and shit...? Where do you think these three words came from?...

Crowning a King sitting while everyone else around them is standing... as being superior to them... is an idea so obviously of shit: it is not worth debunking. The reason we have things called toilets today: is because thousands of years ago... we lied to ourselves and crowned the worst shit-scum leaders into power to rule us. The reason we sit on our asses most of our lives... is because we come from a race of cowards who squatted and shat their pants in fear. This is the organic truth of why we have toilets. It may be unpleasant. It may smell bad. But it is the fucking truth: whether you like or not. We still call sitting on a toilet sitting on 'the throne'. That is a fact. Find a better explanation.

What is a privy? What is a privy council? The human subconscious does not lie. All things that are kept secret are full of shit. All things that are hidden inside all human bowels are hidden and kept there to rot. Rot turns into shit. All privileges that are hidden and allowed to rot turns into rotten shit. The word 'privy' does not lie. You do not take the same word to describe an outhouse and use it to describe the highest privileges of the human species by coincidence. You do not use the word privy to describe a place where you go to shit, and excrete all of your rotting hidden lies... oops: that what a privy council does also... Humans go into privy councils behind closed doors: and expose their rotten souls to others whose souls are just as rotten. They do not do this in public. The privileges they have and use in privy councils is their private shit, And it is kept private to their dying day. Until their private secrets rot and turn into a pile of accumulated shit. Oops. That is exactly what you do when you go to a privy to shit in private.

To reiterate: All sitting work is shit work. The only thing you are doing is letting your bowels move until you have to shit. It is copying the first Kings sitting and shitting on their thrones. Sitting comes from the stupidity of copying squatting Kings. Now there are almost a billion humans who spend most of their time sitting... doing shit work for Kings. Doing their shit for them. Shitting for them. As office workers. Each one sitting upon their throne, and thinking themselves superior to those who actually stand up and work physically; instead of sitting on their asses doing nothing. This is the insanity of civilization. The less people work, the less they do, the more they are paid, the higher their status, the more they are valued. The more people work, the more they do: the less they are paid, the lower their status, and the less valued they are. This complete reversal of the truth is one good reason why civilization in its present form should be completely abolished. The reversal of actual value creates a reversal of the natural order of things. It creates civilized societies where people cannot be happy, no matter what they do: simply because they use tools, because they conform to civilized values without questioning them.

You will not find these obvious unpleasant truths in human culture. You will only find cover-ups of unpleasant truth. But you can find them if you look for them. If you look for connections that make sense.

Take the first modern Novel ever written: Stendhal's Scarlet and Black... Written in French, about French society in the 1820's and 30's. Stendhal's introduction to his book explains that his book is merely a mirror passing on a road: reflecting the mire of the mud of the earth below, and the jeweled fancy of the rich above. And not to take offense at what the mirror showed. He was merely reflecting what he saw in his society. And it is still the least-read classic of all classics because it is too honest for most people to stomach.

Twain's Huckleberry Finn: is a story of a boy and a black slave floating down a huge river, and the adventures they have. A river. Reflecting the truth of what it sees on its banks. What is the difference between Stendhal's mirror passing on a road, and Twain's raft passing by human settlements on the reflective surface of a river? Two classic pieces of literature. Two different cultures. Two different times. Two different Nations. Two different languages. Two different ways of writing... Everything is different. But the reflective dynamic of exposing the truth by telling a story as an observer passing by on a road or river is the same.

But which book is more honest? Which is more truthful? Which one is written better? Which one grips the reader more intensely?...

The one that nobody reads anymore: Stendhal's Scarlet and Black. Revealing that the depth of his understanding of the human soul has still not been equaled in modern prose as the first and best novel ever written about the truth of human corruption.

No writer since him: has matched him in revealing the truth of the inner souls of humans and their flaws and virtues and failings. Except Dostoyevsky. And he only did it as a reflection of a backward culture so rotten that he himself failed to find any redeeming thing in it. In order to find any moral justification for civilization: Dostoyevsky was forced to resort to Twain's tactic of inventing a mysterious stranger: whom nobody knows if he is evil or if he is good. Asking the stranger questions; but only receiving answers that did not satisfy him. Dostoyevsky turned around his entire philosophy at a late age: and declared that the only salvation Russia had was Christ. The only way he could rationalize civilization; was to embrace the mindless suffering of a passive spiritual idiot. He tried to get around it, by inventing a magical Christ who was supposed to magically save Russia. While he cast himself as the Inquisitor: who tried to persuade the fictional return of Jesus, that humans could not live with the truth. That they needed a Sheppard, a leader, to lie to them and deceive them.

After He wrote his last book: what happened to Russia? Russia got the worst leaders in the world. After Twain wrote the idea that all the Universe and all the people around you, and all Nature, and all civilization is just a dream you are having: America has been lulled into a state of unconsciousness since then. A nation of self-absorbed dreamers, where everyone pretends that nobody else exists in the universe except themselves.

After Stendhal wrote his expose of French society: what has France been doing but rebelling over and over again against the endless waves of corruption... but getting nowhere. Because Stendhal did not offer even an answer to the corruption he described.. He left it up to each reader whether they even were against it or for it. Never mind actively opposing evil. While he lived the life of a minor unimportant diplomat who was unsuccessful in his attempts at upward mobility.

Stendhal, Dostoyevsky and Twain: Their fiction has more truth in it than the non-fiction lives of actual living people. Their books seem to have had more of an impact on human culture and human society than any other fiction. But they did not. They did not have an impact. Their books did not affect human society. They merely reflected the culture they lived in. After they died; the natural, organic causal evolution of huge social forces at work; makes their books seem to be prophetic now.

Universal Signs of Good and Evil

If you want to get an idea of how huge the accumulated pile of 50,000 years of human cultural lies that have piled up: look at the civilized abstract symbols denoting Good and Evil. The universal civilized symbol for Good and Truth is White. The civilized abstract symbol for Evil and lies is Black.

On the other hand. Nature, and the entire Universe has a completely different actual dynamic and standard, that accurately and selectively identifies what is actually Good, and Truthful, from what are actual Lies and Evil. In Nature, and In the Universe: the proof of all Good and Truth does not lie in the color white, or in any color at all.

The universal indicator of all Truthfulness and Goodness in the Universe: is Clarity, and Transparency. Not Whiteness, or Blackness. Anything that is Pure, or has been purified: is more transparent and clearer than other things. ALL our human aspects of Truthfulness and Goodness are merely lesser aspects of the single Universal aspect of Purity that exists in different relative degrees of Clarity and Transparency.

The universal indicator of dishonesty and evil is; opaqueness. And since our Universe is relative. This opaqueness ranges all the way from utter blackness to utter whiteness... and finally to transparency... which is the Purest.

In Nature, the last stage of healing from a sickness in our body before transparency... is the whiteness of pus in a wound. After this white pus is cleansed of impurities: the living organism replaces it with healthy lymph fluid that is completely transparent. If your body is killed and burnt, and totally killed and destroyed: it becomes an evil black charred ruin.

The actual color range of good and evil, which is easily visible and discernable in our Universe, is the actual range between clarity, transparency, and all the relative degrees of lesser transparency. That transparency gradually turning into opaqueness, into a milky semi-transparent whiteness, to pure white, to yellow, to orange, to red, to green, to blue, to purple, and finally into utter blackness. This is one indicator of how relatively Good or evil; anything is.

The entire spectrum of human civilized Good and Evil is opaque; not transparent. There is no Clarity in Human Good or Evil. Because human good is far too poisoned by Evil, to ever be Pure enough to be Transparent. The ultimate symbol of human truth and good and justice: is the color white. This is still a sign of white pus. White is the universal sign of sickness in the human body. It is the universal sign of disease in the human body. It is the universal sign of opaqueness and lack of Clarity and Purity and Transparency in the Universe and in the human body, and in human abstract symbols.

Why do you think the term: 'Little white lies' persists in our society? Because they are the only signs of sick lies we barely admit to committing that are still visible. The last stage of growing rot under the skin when it swells with pus and disease is at the top of the swelling pus-pimple, where the skin is stretched the thinnest, and the white of the pus underneath the skin is actually visible. White is a disease color that signifies rot, and disease at its pinnacle of corruption. Later when the rot is slowly purified and washed away by the transparent body fluids under the skin, this sign of whiteness disappears back to an angry redness, and slowly subsides back down to healthy healed flesh. White pus is when all the white cells of the body kill all the diseases cells of the body at the last battle for dominance. The diseased cells are found by the white cells, they are surrounded, outnumbered and killed by the white cells sacrificing themselves by swallowing the diseased cells whole, and then dying with the diseased cells dying inside them also. So by giving up their lives... these white cells force the evil cells to die also. Their command hormones tell the diseased cells inside them to die, as they die also. It is a mutual suicide. The good white cells killing themselves and forcing the evil cells also to die. The evil cells die from starvation inside the dying white cells, who are ordering them to die. They cannot get out of the white cells. This mutual death is a stasis. The battle is over. Everyone in the two armies of cells are dead.

But it is a healing death only if afterward, the other transparent, healthier cells wash all of these dead white pus cells away and excrete them completely from the body. Just as we bury all our dead waste, our bodies excrete our dead cells as biological waste that would kill us if it remained inside our bodies. White is the truce of death, when everything is dead, but a pure death. It is not a death that keeps on killing.

Unless it is not washed away and further purified by other microbes that feed off these dead white cells containing the dead diseased cells. Only then, does the power of life turn this energy back... turning it black: into death energy.

Transparent energy is energy that can be used again by other living things. That is the pimple analogy of what a white lie means semantically. It means that a white lie hides under it; a huge hidden battle between Good and evil. And if that white lie is not punctured, and cleansed and purified... Then that white pus will go back into the body and sicken it even worse, and turn it black. Unless it is washed completely out of your system the color White will kill you. Unless you wash all the white lie out of your mind: so you do not ever utter a sick pus-filled white lie ever again. These white lies kill.

However... we only admit to saying small white lies. We never admit to uttering big white lies. We do not admit to lying at all. Except for a few supposedly harmless little white lies. That is how much rot we do not admit to inside ourselves.

The entire battle between Good and Evil inside human civilization is supposed to be signified between a battle between White, and Black. The entire supposedly absolute differentiation between good and evil is signified by the two colors: White, and Black. White is supposed to contain all colors. Black is supposed to contain no color at all. This is one myth, one cultural delusion. One human misperception of what we actually are, what we stand for and what our supposedly universal symbols mean, and stand for.

The fight between White and Black however; is a fight between positive and negative dynamics. Between healing Life and dying death. If human life energy develops more White power than Black power: we can then actually begin to start the healing processes of our diseased bodies and souls. And become more honest, more truthful, more transparent.

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

If human life energy develops more black killing power than white healing power: then humans will continue to become sicker, more evil, more insane, worse cowards, worse liars and worse killers.

The color White is not good at all. The color white only honestly signifies the apex, the last symptom of a sickness healing itself: white pus. Our actual sickness lies beneath the white pus of white lies. What psychics think of as a pure aura because of its whiteness, is only the pus-whiteness of that person's unhealed life-energy. It is not the ultimate level of human good or human spirituality. It only signifies a chance for a human soul to heal itself. Only when our life energy becomes completely transparent, will our life-energy reach the actual purity, and goodness that it is capable of.

So. If you think of the opaque color white; as the white pus of a healing wound, and the opaqueness of black; as the color of death. You will see we have a long way to go, before we change our age-old poisoned, sick abstract ideas and concepts of what is truly good and what is truly evil. The color white is found in both dynamics: healing and dying. It is a color that signifies the first stage of death. Like the first white snow of winter. Like the whiteness of a corpse bled dry of all blood.

It is also a color that signifies Life: like the disappearance of white pus in the last stage of a healing wound. Like the disappearance of the last snow of winter just before Spring blooms new Life.

In both dynamics: in both directions: it is either the first or last color next to the transparency of liquid Water: the source of all Life. When transparent water freezes: death begins. When water that is frozen solid turns into a transparent liquid: Life begins.

What are the three transparent things we need to live? What are the three transparent things we cannot live without?

The Transparency of Space.

The Transparency of Air.

The Transparency of Water.

In short: all the things we take for granted. Without these three Transparent Necessities: we die. They are the three most transparently important, necessary, most valuable things necessary for human existence.

Yet: we not only take these three transparent most important things in our lives for granted: we poison all three of them. We go out of our way to poison them as much as possible. What have we humans done? We have polluted the very spaces and bonds between molecules and atoms by artificial chemical-molecular processes. We have polluted every Pure Space we can find. We have polluted the spaces between ourselves. We have polluted our own energy. We have poisoned the spaces between people. We have poisoned human relationships; by cramming humans together so tightly: they have no space to live-in as they were designed to live; with lots of healthy natural space around them. We have filthied our own living spaces: by destroying all the natural boundaries of space that we need to live-in, and love-in; as we were designed-to, in Nature. You cannot love in a prison. You cannot feel love when you are cooped up in the prisons we call apartments and cities and cars. We need Space to move, to walk, to play-in. We need space around our bodies-in. We need Space around our families and communities. We need living Space. Not dead space. Dead spaces make us feel dead, and act dead. Living Space makes us come alive, and feel alive. Humans are crowding themselves into the worst, deadeast, areas; where all living Space has been destroyed and the dead Space itself has been pushed out, and filled with dead solid objects and things.

What have we humans done to the transparency of air? Turned into a dirty, filthy visible gray smog: filled with hundreds of poisonous toxic deadly chemicals, so we kill ourselves just by breathing it. What have we done with the transparency of water? We poison all the fresh water we can, throw it away, and poison more fresh water and throw it away. We put our filthiest poisons into it. We put our own feces and urine into it. Humans have poisoned the very idea of Purity as being something that is pus-white, not transparent. We no longer even think of Transparency and Purity as being a virtue. The only transparency we all universally still value; is the deadest, most unchanging, most useless transparency in the Universe. Transparent mineral crystals of Carbon called diamonds. While filthying and poisoning all of the other pure, sacred, transparent elements of our World, Nature and the Universe. Such as Water, Air, and Space.

Transparent diamonds are an object lesson for us. They were created only once inside the Earth's Magma. 3 billion years ago. When the Magma reached its most intense level of pressure and heat. After that one period of the most intense pressure and heat inside the Earth's interior. They were never made again inside the Earth. They were created only once: by the most intense pressure and heat. Just as we humans can only be Purified under the most intense pressure and heat. Only when put our human bodies to the most intense pressures and heat of the most intense physical exertion, can we purify our physical bodies. Only by undergoing the most intense hells of emotional and mental pressure and heat: can we purify our minds and hearts and spirits and souls.

What is a diamond? It is the heart of a dying star. It is the last dying phase of the evil, rotten core of a star. Science has just discovered one of these objects: After all the energy of the star leaves the core: the core is exposed as a dead-dying thing. There are regular pulsations coming out of the diamond-core of the dead star they discovered. The regular pulsations of a dying heart: as its energy becomes deader and deader: crystallized into the most unmoving rigid dead thing in the universe: crystallized, transparent carbon.

Why do stars die? Because the core of a star avoids penetration. The core of a star avoid experience. The core avoids hardship. Learning the truth is painful. Experiencing the truth is painful. The entire Universe is an object lesson of what happens to you when you avoid hardship. All physical matter in the Universe outside of our Earth; wants to go into either a gas, or solid state... but never into a transparent liquid. Because the physical state of a liquid is the most difficult transparent condition for physical matter to maintain. It is the most dynamically balanced, the most sensitive state of energy in the Universe. The entire Universe wants to turn gas directly into a solid: without going through the liquid stage at all... or vice versa. Because solids are deader, slower, lower forms of energy. And nearly all of them are not transparent. Transparent carbon is the most useless, worthless shit on Earth. It has no useful function in living processes at all. Gases are turned into radiation, or back into gases or into solids. Liquids are so rare; that only our solar system has them. Why is this? What kind of transparency do we value? The transparency of liquids, gases or dead solids?

We humans have labeled ourselves by what we value. We do not value the transparency of water. We value this most useless transparency of transparent carbon; because we are ourselves, are also the most transparently useless living species on Earth. Put it this way: the more you despise diamonds. The less you value them. The more spiritual, the more human you are. The corruption of valuing useless dead things that do nothing to help living things live is anti-spiritual. Valuing diamonds is a sick, filthy, obscene tradition that should be thrown away completely.

In human societies: the color white has universally signified surrender. The white flag of truce is understood universally. It is the sign of retreat. It is the sign of a fleeing deer; exposing the white underside of its tail as it flees in fear and cowardice. White signifies the exposing of true cowardice. Just as the poisoned cells inside a diseased wound finally gives up attacking the healthy cells and begin to retreat: by showing the white pus sign of surrender and defeat. Look at the cultural use of the color white. Christian Crusaders who invaded and attacked the Moslem-held lands of the Mid-East wore white robes with red crosses. Their white robes signified their cowardice in wearing safe chain mail under their robes in battle. The red crosses signified their racist hate and intolerance for Moslems whom they called infidels. The infidel Moslems fought without this cowardly protection of chain mail. As a result: the Crusader attempts to conquer and hold these Moslem lands failed miserably. The result was a huge influx of Moslem culture, ideas and influences; invading and successfully infecting Western European cultures. Today: the West is still trying to re-conquer the Mid-East as sneakily, and as cowardly as possible. Hiding all of its true corruption. The white robes of a Catholic priest during a public mass hides the black death robes of their everyday church uniform. Signifying the Black Death evil of their actual actions and intent: hiding under the white pus masquerade of supposed healing and surrender, and cowardice. There is an historical reason for everything in our cultural past and in our cultural present that makes sense if you connect things.

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1398

As you can see: we humans have a long way to go before we can call ourselves Good, or Pure. The cultural delusions and Myths that have been twisted and reversed into false signs and meanings of: Good - Truth...being turned into Evil - Lies. From reversing the actual meanings of Transparency and Opaqueness, into Whiteness and Blackness... and ultimately shades of Grey... because all truths have become poisoned beyond the white pus sickness of a diseased rotting... is another effect of civilization upon humans.

What humans should strive for, are the human virtues of transparent honesty, transparent courage, transparent Love, and transparent Pure Wonder. If you can live your life transparently by these four transparent Universal Virtues and Values. Then no evil can harm you. Then all bad things will pass right by you, or through you, or around you... And you will never become sickly pus-white. You will never accumulate so many poisons that you become dirty inside... like the dirty, poisoned Air, Water, and Space that we have dirtied...destroying their pure transparencies.

Another example of how deeply humans have piled up lies to hide the civilized concept of Good and Evil being a battle between Light. And Dark, instead of White and Black. The symbol for light was originally the symbol of the sun, daytime. As opposed to nighttime. The fear of the unknown. The unknown became the enemy, it became feared. Daylight became safe. Night became dangerous. Not surprising for apes that slept at night and were killed and eaten by predators for millions of years when it was dark, and all they could hear were the death-screams of their band being killed and devoured.

But then our human ancestors discovered fire. And began worshipping the fire in the night: because it drove away the nightly killers. Why do you think all medieval knights wore helmets with visors so they could not be recognized even in the daytime? They all became anonymous killers.. hiding behind iron masks. Hiding their faces from the daylight. Light came to mean artificial fire. It came to mean burning wood, killing trees, and cooking dead animals. Not natural sunlight giving light-energy for all living things to use and grow-by...

So the actual light humans worshipped, and still worship... is the light that kills, not the light that all living things need to live. The civilized concept of light is the fire of Prometheus: the light that kills and burns and destroys. Coming from an artificial civilized fire, or candle. Not from natural healing

1398

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1399

sunlight coming from the sun at all. And the darkness, that is the enemy, has become the inner darkness of every human soul who does not want to explore their inner selves and open up their inner darkness to the light of enlightenment.

The very darkness that humans need to sleep-by is feared. Daytime consciousness is kept insulated from nighttime dreams. Only the surface, the most superficial light possible is used. Only the light that kills and burns living things has come to represent what Humans think of as a universal symbols for Good. And the darkness... both the inner and outer blackness of night and blindness is not explored at all. But feared and hated. So all good humans are supposed to kill all blackness, all night, all darkness as the enemy. But if we ever succeed we will go insane from the inability to sleep peacefully in a darkened, blackened nighttime environment. And not have the peace, and rest that night gives us; so our minds and bodies and hearts can heal from the ravages our daytime acts have committed upon ourselves.

What is the universal civilized idea of 'raging against the dying of the light'? Lighting a candle in a darkened room. Fighting artificial darkness with artificial light. Or as Plato noted: cave dwellers staring rapt at shadows on the walls of their cave. Not noticing that the light came from the sun. Not valuing the light, but being fascinated by the blackness of the shadows. How the black shadows could be manipulated to tell a story. The story of shadows. The stories of shades. From Hades... the dim underworld where all humans were doomed to go after they died.

The actual universal dynamics of Good and Evil are; Transparency and Opaqueness. The actual universality of light is the light that radiates naturally from its own intensity of its own energy. Like sunlight. Not artificially burning wood to get a pale yellow equivalent of it. Living things cannot grow by being exposed to the light emitted from burning wood. Artificial light is death light: it is only strong enough to give physical warmth. If we can sleep without fear in the dark and understand our dreams, and not be afraid of exploring them: then the night is not an enemy.

If we live only in the daytime, using only our conscious superficial tool-brains: we will not be transparent to ourselves. Only if we are fully aware on all three levels of our awareness... sleeping awareness, and nighttime and daytime awareness. Only then can we live without fear, and without inventing insane reasons to fear things, and hate them, and kill all living things. Then both the day and the night will become friendly, comfortable, natural conditions of our existence and our environment. Then our sleep will not be full of nightmares. Then we will remember our dreams instead of blocking them out.

Then we will not use the Sun to symbolize and invent; sick, insane concepts of death: like the ancient Egyptian Ammon Ra did. He invented a Sun God: as the most powerful God of all. Because it killed everything in its glaring heat in the desert. Not because it is the source of all Life and Growth upon this planet. Another understandable semantic result of civilized, pyramidal awareness, which is a distorted, idiotic, one-sided understanding of sunlight.

Who was the Sun God's human representative on Earth? Ammon Ra A man in Rage. A man raging... A raging man. I AM A RAGING MAN. A raging insane killer. A megalomaniac Egyptian ruler. What is War? War is RAW: It is RA... With his army of soldiers committing mass murders.

The meanings of words and letters; can be easily twisted and distorted; simply by changing the order in which they are written, and how they are interpreted, and how they are understood. This is what our subconscious brains have been doing ever since we began using them reflectively. We have not yet learned to access the inner reflections of our subconscious minds.

1399

Ramses the Pharaoh of Egypt: was supposed to block the spurting semen of the Semite tribes from exploding and erupting out of Egypt and populating the world with their offspring. The exodus of the Semites out of Egypt is a re-creation of the exodus of all modern humans out of Africa. They represent Mankind's oldest original sin: being cast out because they had become too corrupt: as were the first modern Humans who were cast out of Africa. By the time of Ramses: the corruption of all modern man had accumulated so much, that the exodus of the Semites is completely different from the original exodus from Africa that happened hundred of thousands of years earlier.

Nevertheless, they were still forced to wander through the desert like the first human ancestors were forced to, before they could escape Africa. They still ended up in the same geographical location that the first modern humans had when they left Africa. They still met and defeated large giants called Philistines, not Neanderthals: who they found living there, and took over their land. They still became a wandering people, doomed to wander the Earth, and never be truly at home anywhere.

The first rubber condoms made to block male semen; were called Ramses I, Ramses II and Ramses III. They were the ancient rulers of Egypt who originally tried to block the Semitic tribes enslaved by Egypt from spreading their semen into the world by keeping them penned up in Egypt.

Jews still punish themselves for the sin of their own semen. They still punish themselves for the sin of spreading their semen throughout the world by practicing one of the filthiest subconscious evils of denying their own original ancient guilt of their own culture... blaming their original sin upon their own male babies, and cutting off the foreskin of their own male babies.

Today a girl having sex will get gypped of male semen: if the man puts a Ramses rubber condom over his penis... The rubber condom pulls back the foreskin into a perfect simulation of a Semitic circumcision. It desensitizes the tactile sensations of the penis. Just like the Semites cut off the foreskins of their male babies: to desensitize their sexual feelings. So fucking a girl without feeling your own pain or your own pleasure became a meaningless act of sexual dominance. Until the concept of marital rape became a cultural normality in their culture. A cultural norm that has spread throughout the world.

A naked, uncovered male penis in a permanent state of irritation. Ammon Ra. A male penis in permanent irritated rage. Permanently desensitized: so sex becomes a brutalized ritual with almost no pleasure or love.

Semitic... Semen... get it? All these facts are connected historically, semantically, and subconsciously to each other on many ways, and on many levels.

Look at the obvious hierarchy of Purification in the gradation of colors-to-transparency in Nature, and in the Universe. Mountains forced high up into the pure clean air... until nothing grows at their highest levels. Until they develop white caps. Water forced high up into the purest, cleanest air... until the clouds become snowy white... but when they descend lower: they become gray in color. Look at the two poles of the Earth: covered in white. With white creatures living there. Look at the color gradation of human skin color; from blackened skin in the warmest-easiest most comfortable climates, to whiter skin the farther North they live. Where Life, and Living things are cold; not hot... cleaner and purer: living under greater hardship.

Where does the idea of upward mobility come from? It comes from our genetic need for hardship. It also comes from our suppressed need as apes to climb higher out of danger into the safety of living trees. Because all our ape ancestors instinct to climb was suppressed. Because the trees died. Because we could not climb any higher living in short, weak, stubby trees that did not challenge our climbing skills. Because our instinctive connections to our earlier ape ancestors was broken by our spines and bones doing a massive re-orientation, and grinding against each other, and cutting off the instinct-flow between our legs and our spines.

It comes from the hundreds of thousands years of genetic memory we still have... after we lost earlier tree-climbing genetic memories and programs. When the difference between superiority and inferiority, the difference between living as killers who killed their own rotten species who did not walk, but squatted, and sitters and squatters who were killed and exterminated... who lived in sick fear of the human walkers, who were shorter than the taller walkers, who looked up to them and feared them.

Until today: our species has rotted and mutated into becoming civilized squatters; who still use the same value systems and ethics and tactics and mentality of the walkers who once killed them, to define their own rotten civilized concepts of reflective dominance fifty thousand years ago. Like sitting, squatting, fat, corrupt Kings; forcing all their subjects to kneel and bow in front of them, so they seem taller than their subjects, even if their subjects are physically taller than they are. Like erecting podiums to place their squatting thrones, their shitting places high; so all those standing near the squatting King on his shit-place are deemed as being lower than he is.

Why do you think people live in apartments today? Because all the early rulers who built cities: discovered an easy, fast way to destroy natural human communities by cramming people so close together; they began to fight each other, and hate each other and fear each other. That is what apartments are meant for: they are meant to keep people apart from each other. By stuffing them into artificial cubicles so close together, that nobody even speaks to their neighbors. Even the name apartment... the meaning of this words are kept apart from each other... and hidden: by the two parts of the word, put into reverse order, and the connecting words between them taken out.

Apartments originally were never built to keep people together. They were meant to keep people apart from each other, and to keep them alienated from each other. They were built to effectively destroy the social structures of the Roman mob, the Populi, the masses of Rome. That way; the Roman elite could manipulate and rule them more easily, by destroying the quality of their lives so badly: they forgot that there was any better way of living. The entire cramming of people into cities is a sick, insane idea in the first place. No sane human wants to live like that: crammed-in together by the millions into cramped ghettos. Until you cannot stand your neighbors, and do not even talk to them.

Today, the squatting dynamic of humans settling down in one place and not moving, has regressed all the way back: down to the pre-historic energy dynamic of sponges. Sponges are one of the oldest, and most obsolete life-forms ever created billions of years ago. Now civilized Robber Barons have turned their immobile squatting into an energy dynamic bases upon that of the living dynamic of the lowly sponge of billions of years ago. Shops and stores act exactly as sponges. They sit immobile... sucking up all the available circulating nutrients out of each community they sit in. Just as sponges sit on bare rocks, sucking all the available nutrients out of the ebb and flow and currents of the water they live-in. Until now: modern consumer culture has invented a hero called 'Sponge-Bob'...an animated sponge. Because that is all that consumers actually do. They live by sponging off other humans who do the actual hard work.

In order to become the richest, most powerful Nation on Earth: America sponges off all the rest of the world by sucking up most of its wealth and resources. This Consumer Culture of sponging off all other living things, this sponging up and sucking up of resources:

Has finally been digested by the mass-consciousness of the consumer media.

Now this subconscious realization is being reflected back to the sponging consumer masses; as the hero called: 'Sponge-Bob'.

Basically: all consumers are one-sided sponges. All they do is sponge off other people's hard work. But, unlike organic sponges: they do not re-circulate the energy they absorb, back into their eco-systems.

They suck it up in a one-sided dynamic of accumulation. And then throw it away after turning it into waste, into pollution, into poison. At least these original ancient forms of life like the lowly sponge degenerate their organic matter back into their environment. They are eaten by starfish and other predators like sea worms... creating a dynamic balance to the ecosystems they live-in, and end up giving back what they have taken.

But the Robber Baron sponges we call stores and shops and malls: do not regenerate anything. They are pure, one-sided, sucking sponges. They sponge off the wealth and energy of people who go into them. The humans who go into them are called suckers. Because they in turn are trying to suck up to the upwardly mobile... by going to exclusive shops to get their exclusive deals and bargains, and elite exclusive products that are supposed to make them feel special, and exclusive and upwardly mobile. And are sucked clean of their wealth, and given consumer crap for it.

Who is fooling who; in this travesty of a survival tactic that has been obsolete for over three billions years? Are the sponge stores fooling themselves that they are being upwardly mobile, or supremely cunning and smart? By getting rich off wandering customers? So the mobile masses can be sucked dry of their wealth by being sold services and products that are supposed to label them as having a special status? With special, exclusive upwardly mobile services and products that only rich people can afford... to display their excess conspicuous consumption in public? Aping the rich nobles of the past, who defined the idea of conspicuous consumption by flaunting their obscene wealth in front of the starving masses, while sneering at their poverty?

And the result? Look at the social history of Washington D.C. It is named after the founder of American greed. George Washington. Who stood for Death and Corruption. Preferring riches to power. Washing tons of lies; and turning these lies into false truths. Look at what kind of Robber Baron scum moved into that city of corrupt politicians and bankers and Robber Barons. The instant any American made his fortune. The instant they became filthy rich; where did most of them go? They all moved to Washington D.C. and built their mansions of opulence and wealth as social statements of upward mobility. Flaunting their wealth to the world in arrogant pride; by holding the most extravagant, expensive parties, and balls for the most exclusive bunch of corrupt Robber Barons they could find. They spent their millions so fast; that they were constantly in debt. Until it became fashionable to be in debt instead of shameful. For the Rich Elite Robber Barons: being in debt was a sign of inexhaustible wealth. Spending millions of dollars on jewels and parties... why?...because they knew there were more millions of dollars pouring into their banks and coffers and sponge stores every month.

Every upwardly mobile elite has done the same thing from the beginning of civilized History. Ever since the first built city robber barons sucked the wealth out of all the surrounding countryside and went bankrupt... Content in knowing; that there would be more wealth pouring into their coffers the next growing season. The Empire of America will be no different from any other Empire ever spawned. Already the American Republic is sinking under the weight of its own greed, and stupidity.

Look at the earliest bank statements from Hammurabi. At how he bankrupted himself over and over again... by building ever bigger monuments and palaces; to ensure his everlasting fame and prestige as the King of Kings. And since then: every Robber Baron human scum has been trying to top him. Every robber Baron elite has tried to suck the wealth of the lower class masses drier, and drier.... Trying to create the exact conditions of disease, drought, starvation, and death and corruption; that the peers of the walking apes: the Lions on the Serengeti Plains of Africa did...

As the human walking apes watched in sick awe and fear at how these murdering, killing beasts dominated their own animal Kingdom... and then aped them... and fattened themselves on the corpses of the dying, starving animals they hunted down and slaughtered, and ate, and devoured.. Do you think these historical and biological, and genetic, and ecological facts are mere coincidence?

What is American football, but a re-playing of the defense and offence strategies and tactics: between the predators and prey in Africa on the Serengeti Plains six million years ago? All of our so-called civilized activities and customs and traditions, and culture, and values:... are only thinly disguised evidences of suppressed and repressed animal instincts; that go back millions of years to before we were even walked upright. The thrill of being a spectator, witnessing blood sports and battles, and predator-prey games... comes from our ape-instincts; when we traveled on four limbs instead of two,, and sat, squatting, high up; safely in our trees. Watching predators winning by killing prey... Or watching prey winning by escaping predators. Only today we squat not in trees but on stadium seats and living room sofas. And wave and scream, jumping up and down in excitement as one football player avoids being pulled down and wins by escaping ... or is pulled down by a massed pack of predators. Why does the football phrase: 'Speed Kills' only make sense on the Serengeti Plains of Africa?

It works both ways.

But nowhere else except on the on the Serengeti Plains of Africa does it kill both ways. .

Where during the dry season: a speedier prey escaping capture; means starvation and death for the predator. Not just a death for a slow prey by a speedier predator. Nowhere else on Earth; is this phrase equally applicable to both predator and prey. Nowhere else does speed cut with a double-edge knife, as it does in Africa. Speedier prey; killing predators. Just as surely as speedier predators kill prey.

American Football is a war game. Two masses armies clashing against each other: the biggest mass wins. Complete opposition and conflict. Players ending up in fallen piles: just like the piles of dead after a clash in war. Two masses enemy armies tensed: waiting for the signal, to begin the conflict: the army-team that is quicker, and reacts more quickly: usually wins. The army that is more adept at cunning strategy and misdirection of intent usually wins. The countdown to war... the count down to a play. When did the innovation of the forward pass appear in American football? When airplanes began to be used to drop bombs behind enemy lines in the 1st World War. When did the innovation of the 'long bomb' appear in American football? When long range bombing was used in the 2nd World War. American football is merely a reflection of the technology and dynamics of war. It is a recreation of Roman war-games held in coliseums. It is a game based upon the intimidation of brute strength, and physical violence. It is a war game of decapitation. Running with a decapitated head to the opposing team's end zone. So the blame and guilt of that decapitated head can put in the opposing tribe's village. THEY did not kill that person. The village that has the decapitated head is guilty of that crime! This is where the entire game came from. From North American Natives trying to avoid the guilt and blame of decapitation. Hockey comes from the same subconscious cultural guilt of North American Native cultures. So does soccer. So do all sports where you win by getting a ball-decapitated head into the opponents side-field-goal-end zone etc, so they cannot return it back to you and blame you for killing that person.

What is the most important score of American Football? A touchdown. The only time Americans lower themselves down to touch the earth. The only time they want to lower themselves enough to touch the ground... because only after a hard-fought war-battle of football: have they earned the ground they live on. Only then do they reach down and touch the ground...with a football: a foot ball is a token of a decapitated human head

This is done over and over... as a symbolic cultural neuroses: their need to scream out in public that they have fought for the ground they live on and have the right to touch it. Which they do not have. Because Americans never fought for the ground they stole, and do not value the land they stole so easily. What is modern sport based upon? Running. Speed. Running away from others. Being first. Being faster than others... In other words: 25 million years of the past... apes running away from those who were trying to kill them: turning cowardice into an abstract game. And trying to sell the bullshit that the faster you can run away from something: the braver you are.

Explain the one-sided fan loyalty of people rooting for years for their favorite team. While millionaire athletes are sold by auction... treated like meat on the hoof. Like cattle. Degraded and treated like gladiatorial slaves, just like the slave auctions of Rome... like the Roman professional killers called gladiators; bought and sold for the games. Who became famous and rich themselves. The hypocrisy of athletes changing teams at a moments notice. Millionaire players bought and sold between teams, like so much human meat. Fans rooting for different players each year. Rooting for an imaginary abstract symbol of a Greek polis or American city. Ancient rituals and concepts being re-born, and re-practiced 2,500 years later. How can this be explained?

The memory of our entire past lies in the Inner Universe of our conscious, subconscious and instinctive memories. It lies in both our individual, and collective memories. All we need to do is look inside ourselves and outside ourselves. All we have to do is ask why we do what we do with a sense of Pure Wonder. Compare the Past to the Present: and you will realize that we are only repeating, re-living, and recreating old, ancient vicious cycles. Nothing in our modern society is new. Our modern civilizations is just a regurgitation of past civilizations. Everything that is new, is merely a mutated permutation of the old.

Civilized cultures expose their evil in huge, obvious, ritualized acts of infantile exposure. Like the parades of missiles in Red Square every year by the Military leaders of the now defunct USSR... trying to show to the world that their penises are bigger than the missile penises of other Nations.

Just as Idi Amin once remarked to a shocked ambassador in a reception; when he sensed the more civilized, more symbolically abstracted diplomatic ass despising him for his outrageous refusal to not be ashamed of his own atrocities... He said to the man for no particular reason; except to put him into his place of proper submissive lower ranking:

‘My prick is bigger than yours.’

How many lies and masks of deception has the human animal pulled over its own eyes? Every early culture from Eskimos to Greeks, to Japanese, to Chinese, to North American Natives, to European Catholics, to South American Natives and Catholics both, to Pacific Islanders, to African tribes, to the gargoyles on European churches: have acted out their own lies with ceremonial masks that were sanctified and worshipped for their imaginary symbolic significance.

What do these masks signify?

They are all hideous, ugly, distorted, expressions of human insanity.

Where do these masks come from? They come from the baby subconscious of every human ever born into a civilized family and society. From the babies perception, the babies perspective, the babies point of view... of sick, insane leering, evil adults. Every cultural story, Myth, legend, and fable of leering, grinning, frowning, scowling evil monsters: comes from the horror of an innocent baby, an innocent fetus-child seeking love and happiness and safety... opening its innocent eyes... only to find himself of herself; surrounded by leering, ugly, evil insane human monsters all around them. Every screaming-wailing infant thrust unwanted and unloved into the cold world is screaming at the horror of the unloving and inhumane monsters who gave it birth and do not understand what that infant-fetus needs. Every wailing birth is a baby screaming in horror at all the unfeeling, jeering humans around them... who laugh at their pain, and jeer at their suffering. This universal caricature of human evil is displayed endlessly in the depictions of all the villains and monsters in all human cultures... who ever who laughed their sick death-laugh as they commit their unfeeling crimes of horror.

This is the first impression every human fetus receives; when it is forced out of its mothers womb... fighting, kicking and screaming: trying to get back in. This is what every human fetus thinks of all the humans around it when it is forced out into the world. This is how every human fetus sees all humans around them when they come into the world.

You don't believe this? Try regressing yourself back to when you were born. Try to remember what you felt when you were being born. Why can't humans remember when they were born? Why do all humans have memory blocks that do not let them remember being a baby? Because these memories are filled with too much horror and pain to remember.

That is... until these innocent babies become normalized to their horror. Until they absorb the horror and sickness around them like sponges and it becomes normal to them. Until they normalize themselves to their environment. Until they absorb their environment and become their environment. As all of the first instinctive survival reflexes of their regressive, reptile brains gain dominance over all their more evolved and aware being. Shutting down, stunting, distorting and destroying their growth potential. And they grow into the same adult monsters their parents were. Until the regressive dynamic of the human mentality becomes so negatively regressive... that 2,500 years later: the story of the first mass-murderer ever to become publicly acclaimed as a hero... the first human to murder even more people than the gods they worshipped... has become the highest known ideal, the most universally mimicked and copied Myth and cultural belief around the world today. Alexander the Great. Whose name showed up in shortened form as 'Gretel' in the first Anglo Saxon horror story of a monster that went on killing rampages. Until the human imagination cannot conceive of a better triumph than the triumphant conquering life of the Greek monster called Alexander the Great.

The truths hiding behind the masks and lies of our own cultures are screaming at us all the time. We choose not to listen to them.

Santa Claus and Christmas

What was the original meaning of Santa Claus? Santa... is the oldest Catholic European word signifying sanctification. Santa Claus means Sanctified greed... all dressed in a suit of red-white. Red, the color of blood, hate, sex and gore. White, the color of truce, surrender and healing pus. A man covered in blood with white pus? No. A screaming Baby dripping in blood. With the white umbilical cord wrapped around its neck, wrists and feet, choking its own lifeblood out of the screaming fetus. Claus? Sanctified claws. Sanctified greed and sanctified killing all rolled up into one image. Claws of killers... killing and eating themselves into jovial fatness. The artificial hearty fake laugh of the killer. The hearty laugh of the fat glutton, pleased in his overfilled belly that numbs all other sensations. Claws of greed... greedy paws or claws; reaching for Christmas presents. And you wonder why babies scream and wail when they are exposed to this horror-image too early?

Once you rip off the fake, false, invented lies and hypocrisies from our precious beloved fairy tales and myths: the actual truth can be seen staring you in the face... screaming out for attention. Why are so many young infants and children afraid of Santa Claus? They are only reacting honestly to a horrible fake monster... a cultural lie; a myth of generosity spawned by the most selfish, the greediest, most overweight human culture ever to filthy this planet with its cultural masks and lies. They are only reacting instinctively to the truth-messages of color, the colors of Santa Claus, which have been lovingly preserved. By the same human monsters who preserve their cultural lies. But they convict themselves out of their own acts and their own minds and their own images and their own mouths. Every lie can be unmasked if you search for the truth under the lies. You can find the truth behind every mask, every human abstraction... All you need is to stop worshipping these masks and icons and lies and question the actual meaning behind them. Then you can rip off these masks and expose the screaming horror and sickly pale terrified adults behind them, who cannot live without their masks and lies.

The history of how the Myth Santa Claus grew from Father Christmas, to become a Germanized fairy tale in Olde England: is a screaming example of how myths are used to cover up truths.

The oldest myth comes from a supposed Bishop called Nicholas: in the 4th century AD in Byzantine Lycia.

To give you an idea of how much this legend has been Corrupted over time so it became so filthied with lies: that nobody can tell what the actual historical truth is: he was supposed to give gifts in secret, anonymously... yet darn... somehow the entire land heard about it. He was supposed to help financially challenged people by giving them money... but darn, he is also the patron Saint of all pawnbrokers. He is supposed to have thrown gifts into houses anonymously for children... and darn: he was also the patron Saint of the Roman Emperor's Varangian Guard. The most corrupt killers of all Rome: and the most sneaky and richest and greediest Roman soldiers to ever have worn a Roman military uniform.

But.... The masses ate up the fairytale lies, the whitewash, of his nonexistent goodness... and darn... they kept on dropping the actual truth about his evil... the truth that he tried to corrupt young children into the love of GOLD by giving them money. At a time when Gold only existed for rich, wealthy Bishops and Kings; and nobody else.

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1407

By the Time this legend came into Holland: human culture there had become so blackened with evil, that this supposed Saint... Called Nicholas... became known to the Dutch as SIN ter Claus... representing the SIN of grasping CLAWS... and he was actually TWINNED together with the Devil himself; Known to the Dutch as Black Peter. In other words: This legend was screaming out subconsciously AND literally, that the sin of greed comes from the Devil himself. Why Black Peter? Because the Holland lowlanders were Protestants, ruled by a Catholic King who forced them to obey the Holy Church of St. Peter of Rome. St. Peter's became known as Black Peter. From the saltpeter, the black gunpowder the Catholic soldiers used to kill the lowlanders with, and cross themselves intoning the name of St Peter, as they massacred the poor Protestants... St. Peter, Saltpeter, black gunpowder, Black Peter... get it?

To give you an idea of how evil England was in those times; the entire celebration of Christmas was banned in 1647. Because newspapers accused the government of derailing its original intention, and corrupting the masses with lies and propaganda... so the government banned Christmas and the worship of Jesus the infant altogether. To give you an inkling of how evil this whitewashed legend actually is: the first Dutch ship that landed on Manhattan island and the man that bought it for 24 dollars: erected a statue dedicated to St. Nicholas on the island called New York... later to become the center of World greed.

By then, SINterklaas had become the Saint of pure greed. After the sin of greed had been sanitized by Americans into Santa, it was then exported BACK into England via America; not through Europe. Because by then American greed was stronger than European greed. And The myth of Sinterklaas had been whitewashed of all sin, and turned into Santa Claus. Sanctified claws. Sanctified greed. Greed turned holy and spiritual.

He was still known as Sinterclaus in Holland.. But darn... again, people dropped the unpleasant truth, and made out that magically; the Devil known as Black Peter was put into chains for this one special day...to serve only as SINterclaus's faithful helper...

Black Peter was supposed to help SINterklaas, and slip down the black-filth greed-holes known as chimneys, to bring gifts to children that had been good all year: and to carry away bad children in a sack, into slavery. Because by then, SINterklaas had become too fat to fit down a chimney. But darn... that was too unpleasant a truth about how the Dutch sold their own children into bondage, so he just beat the bad children with sticks. But darn, that was too unpleasant a truth for English children when his legend was finally imported into England: so he merely put black lumps of coal into the socks of children who had been bad... While the 'good' elf... (No longer a Saint, or a Bishop... but an Elf... huh????) Had changed into Father Christmas in England: and was responsible for putting gifts of an apple, an orange, and nuts into the socks of children who had been good all year... But darn... having a black elf called Black Peter who was once known as the devil himself, was too unpleasant to be twinned with Santa... er, St Nicolas, er, Bishop Nicholas; formerly the Bishop of Patara... so Black Peter, the Bishop of Patara, the Devil was dropped completely, and Santa Claus, or SINterclaus as he was originally named... was kept.

The subconscious connections are obvious. The semantic connections are obvious. St. Nicholas is actually Old Nick the Devil. Black Peter is the Devil's helper. Before he was whitewashed into SIN ter klaas, he was SIN t Nikolaas. All Saints are sinners: they are called St. because they were true sinners> s-Sin, t-True: get it?

1407

Spanish Catholic Kings ruled the lowlanders for hundreds of years: and considered them to be the epitome of evil. Sinterklaas comes from Spain every year. The Devil takes a boat from Barcelona, along with his helper Black Peter and his white horse called Peter, another whitewashed persona of evil

The name of St. Nick, the devil's holiday; is the eve of the feast. Meaning... the Evil of the Feast. Signifying; the Evil of ALL feasting. The holiday is celebrated without any religious overtones in Holland: because this evil is not limited to Christians. Holland has no official religion. The strange non-religious name of this holiday comes from the Middle Ages: when the Lowlanders were mostly poor: and just beginning to develop their new culture of protestant prosperity. When the first rich Burghers began holding feasts. Imitating the rich aristocrats who had feasted on holy days for thousands of years before them. Once a few lowlander became affluent enough to have feasts: they had them. They were upwardly mobile. They aspired to the culture of all higher classes. SIN ter CLASS... was the sin of corrupting their once less corrupt class of formerly poor... with the sin of holding extravagant feasts, inside their own lower class... Inside... meaning: 'to Intern'; meaning to hold inside... SINTER; holding a SIN inside... INTER... your own KLAAS... your own class, get it?

Follow how this legend was whitewashed, how the true hidden meanings of this evil kept on popping up, and how every subconscious betrayal of the actual truth of the pure evil of this legend was covered up, and whitewashed over and over again. Somewhere he was changed from an actual Bishop into an elf... because oops: people might start to expect their own Bishops to be like him. Now we can't have that now can we? We can only have tales of people being good and generous in fairytales... But never in actual history. There is not one proven historical evidence of any good deed ever done by anyone rich. You don't believe this? Go read 500 History books. Then, if you have not found any proven historical evidence... go read 500 more History books.

German-Dutch fairy tales were imported into England because the English admired German culture. Hell: the English originally came from Germany and Holland; as Angles and Saxons. They imported German Kings and Dutch Kings; and called them their own. Then they imported German and Dutch legends and made them their own.

Originally: chimneys were the spreaders of black death in England. Coal. Coal pollutants in industrialized cities became the greatest killer of babies and children. Smog haze hung permanently over London. Everyone in these cities became white, sallow and sickly. They developed deep coal-lines in their skin from being exposed to coal particles that filled the air they breathed.

One of the lowest and dirtiest class of starving workers at that time: were chimney sweeps. Their skin was permanently blackened by working inside coal-blackened chimneys. They were the English black niggers of their own white race. They were despised and paid pennies for their hard work. They were cheated and abused. They were the English race of Black Irish, black Negroes, black races they had come to despise and hate. Once Merry Olde England became industrialized. Everyone living in these centers of greed and commerce became visibly blackened by living in them from the coal dust. The healthy peasants whose rosebud complexions and glowing skin made the city people envy them and hate them: were all rounded up to slave away in mines and factories...

The Path of Splitness
Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1409

How dare poor people in the country be healthier than rich people in the city?

Now we can't have that now... can we? Why not?

So these chimney sweeps... the dirtiest lowest working class; that even factory workers despised: symbolizing the blackening of English culture, and the desperate attempt to clean out their own filthy culture... By sending humans into these death traps, to die and fall and be burned, and develop cancer of the lung, and cancers of the eyes... as their skin became permanently black... from the clogged chimneys full of coal dust. England created this lowest of the lower classes as a scapegoat. They were then: romanticized later... by the fantasy myth of Mary Poppins... along with the myth of the perfect nanny... taking care of two children belonging to a banker... who God forbid should spend one minute with her own children. Trying to humanize the subhuman English upper Class's traditional culture of child-neglect. Loving them so much they had to send them away into institutions of sadistic child-abuse.

Romanticizing chimney sweeps was not enough to cover up the basic evil of the invention of the chimney as a way to blacken and destroy England. They had to stuff a fat man down the chimney: with magical properties and make all the children of England expect something for free come Christmas. So they could worship the death of Jesus instead of his birth.

What better way to cover up a history of human degradation in England? Have a Dutch-German myth come down these filthy holes and stuff presents in the socks of children hung on the mantel on the fireplace.

Civilizations have had chimneys for thousands of years before England. America had coal furnaces and chimneys for a hundred years after England... none of them needed to employ chimney sweeps... Why is that? Why did England need to degrade an entire lower class? Why did England whitewash this filthy invention of the chimney with Father Christmas. Why did America need to add a red suit to him? A white Santa, with white fur trimmings on his outfit.. that magically never got blackened by the cancer-causing poison he was supposed to wiggle through; to give children all over America, and England: the poison gift of greed.

That the only time you are supposed to show love to a child.

Is just once a year.

By giving them material objects?

So English children were fed this crap; that every Christmas: this magical elf, slid down every filth-hole of a black poison-filled chimney to give good things to children... IF they had been good all year and obeyed and respected and worshipped their elders slavishly and NEVER gave them any trouble at all. What better way to brainwash all children than by holding up this once-a-year myth lie... to turn them all into obedient brain-dead unrebelling robots?

Something that is supposed to slide down all the poison blackened holes called chimneys... when every house had at least one chimney... is not good, or innocent.

1409

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1410

This would be like inventing a modern Santa that slid down every exhaust pipe in every car once a year to give good things to children. But since we have conveniently removed our own pollutants farther away from where we live, and most houses do not have chimneys, or ever use them... And besides: darn... by that time: he lost the Devil himself as his trusty companion because that was too close to the truth: so he had to slide down chimneys himself now.

This Olde Fable is looked upon as a harmless tale. There is no such thing as a good myth. Nearly all myths portray evil and rationalize it as being good. They are all whitewashed lies.

Try sliding down a chimney that has been burning coal for a year. See how many months it takes you to get the black poison out of your skin. See how many weeks it takes before you stop coughing up blackened phlegm from your lungs. Then tell your children about this true experience. And watch them despise anyone who tries to sell them on Santa coming down a chimney. But no: we protect children from the truth. We hide the truth from them. We do not let them see the truth or hear the truth or know the truth. We feed them myths and lies and fantasies.

Modern Western cultures can only survive by keeping their children as ignorant and as brainwashed as possible. Modern Children in modern societies are fed pure shit. They are not allowed to come into contact with any unpleasant truths. They are fed a steady diet of meaningless crap until their brain cells become non-functional. They exist in a fantasy-world of pure abstraction. One major, crucial evil, that has created the unreal fantasy shit people try to sell their children on today: comes from the ancient lie, the ancient evil lie of an Elf that was originally called Black Peter... who was originally an evil Elf sent to terrify and punish all children who did not obey the authority of their elders in Europe... became the bullshit good Elf called Santa Claus.

Even after Black Peter and Sinterclaus was whitewashed into the non-existent sanitized fable of Santa... HE still ended up sliding down every blackened filth-hole in England. The human subconscious managed to avoid the lies about Santa and bring Black Peter back in an even blacker version... But of course... the obviousness of this is completely lost on people who are not in touch with their own subconscious, or their own history, or the history of Santa. Just as the evil of Satan, the evil of greed and selfishness: was re-worded into Santa.

Do you think re-arranging two letters... the T, and the N of SATAN... into SANTA... trying to SANitize the evil of greed, trying to brainwash all children and corrupt them into the evils of greed at an impressionable age... is just a coincidence? The human subconscious reveals truth in many ways. The truth is all there. The ugly facts are all there; staring you in the face. IF you look for them.

The German-Lowlander Myth of Black Peter was originally brought to England to the lowest class of poor people. They were supposed to stuff the socks of their poor children with lumps of coal: because they had been bad children during the year.

Instead of lumps of coal... the poor people put nice things into the socks of their poor children... the plan backfired on the rich... the poor brainwashed lower classes were showing up the rich cheap, niggardly rich upper elite... by being more generous towards their own poor children... than the rich were being to their rich children...

This was how the evil elf known as Black Peter: was humanized and whitewashed into Father Christmas, and then into the more Germanic elf: Santa Claus. SINterclaus was completely dropped

1410

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1411

from the English myth. The connotation was too obvious. His name was changed into a whitewashed meaningless version. Two coincidences?

The Devil has-been called old St, Nick. Olde Nick, Nick...for centuries. He was call Satan for more centuries...

St. Nicholas, and SANTA?

Two different names for the same mythical figure...? Huh? How fucking semantically obvious can you get? First sanitize Nick into a Saint who is actually full if sin. He ain't a sinner! He's a S'aint! Then sanitize Satan into Santa... which is just the misplacement of one letter: it is amazing how blind humans can be.

This is how the human subconscious works.

St. Peter becomes Black Peter...in a country that was oppressed and taxed into poverty for hundreds of years by Catholic Kings and their Church, and the Roman head of the Catholic Church... the living representative of St Peter... What is so surprising about this obvious semantic change in wording? A poor Protestant country; ruled and oppressed by rich Catholics for hundreds of years: finally demonizes the Catholic St. Peter into Black Peter: portraying him as the Devil's helper?... Duh. As far as the lowlander of Holland were concerned... this is exactly what the representatives of Rome were to them. They believed the Pope to be the Devil himself. They believed his minions were the Devil's own helpers.

What? Santa?... Evil?

Brainwashing a child to be greedy is evil. Greed is evil. Santa sells greed to children. Greedy children become selfish, ungiving spoiled brats. They yell and squall, and have tantrums.

Children who are not greedy. Children who have not been raised to expect free gifts... are not greedy. Get this through your fucking brain. Santa is Satan in disguise. Santa is an iconic epitome of pure evil.

Give any child a choice between the living love of their parents attention sand time: and a present: and they will choose love that is alive: not some dead thing in a dead box. So... what did the English Aristocrats do, when they found poor people using socks to put nice things into, instead of coal?...

They tried to pre-empt them. They started the tradition of putting nice things in boxes, instead of socks. Because poor people could not afford boxes. They started knitting longer socks to hang by their rich fireplaces... so their socks could hold more nice things than the short socks of poor people. Socks that were full of holes. So whatever was out in, fell out. Wearing gloves without fingers: because the fingers had worn out, and they could not buy new ones. Making the hands of the poor dirtier.

This is one small historical example how the sin of corrupting the celebration of a child called Jesus, was sneakily corrupted into gift-giving. This was how people stopped exchanging love directly between each other one day of the year: when they were allowed to worship the sacredness of a sacred child. This is one small historical example of how Christianity and the teachings of Jesus were systematically poisoned and deflected and betrayed.

But then boxes got cheaper. Soon even poor people could afford them. Suddenly the poor began aping the rich. Suddenly they began giving each other boxes instead of love. Until Christmas without presents in boxes: became unthinkable.

1411

What?

Give love instead of boxes? To hell with love. We want presents! We want to exchange boxes! We want to do formal presentations like the rich do. We want to act like we are rich aristocrats going through ritual presentations. We want to sanctify and ritualize our giving; so it's just like the rich do it. Why do you think they are called presents? The word comes from peasants... Respectfully presenting themselves ritually, and humbly... with their hats in their hands: every Christmas to their masters. For a Reason. Ritually giving their masters their life, their loyalty, their meekness, their obedience, their toil, their faithfulness... and their love.

A Respectful Peasant: presenting himself to his master... is a resentful person, who resents being degraded and downgraded.

The rich had managed to kill the giving of love: by putting it into a box, and making a ritual out of it. The death of Love... Coffins for dead corpses... Coffin-box... Death-love... present coffins to each other as a sign of the death of your love. You love presents. You love dead boxes. Your love is dead.

The reason why this spread like wildfire all over the world was because lower class people were brainwashed into turning their giving; into a ritualistic presentation... that was just as formal as the ritual presentations they had witnessed for thousands of years between elites. As they copied the rich every way they could. Because they were brainwashed into believing that the rich were better than they were. p-r-( A Public Relations ploy of presentation, ritualized giving in public... reason?... in the season... ) peasants... peasants-peasants-presence... presents... Presenting somebody formally with something... get it? Until it became a season of gift giving, not the season of the beginning of winter.. No love. Having nothing to do with the baby Jesus. Just people formally presenting boxes to each other, and calling them presents. The rich got the idea of putting dead things into boxes because of their love of houses, mansions and palaces. They put the dead, empty souls of their families into dead, empty boxes called rooms, and houses, and mansions.

Before this: they put their dead into mausoleums, into houses, into boxes called coffins. Before there were ever cities of the living dead: there were cities of the dead. Cities were first invented to house the souls and corpses of the dead. Only later did living people begin to live as their dead lived: in dead boxes and dead houses and dead mausoleums called mansions made of dead stone.

Putting dead things inside an empty box and presenting it formally: is only an extension of the civilized tradition of dead souls living inside an enclosed, empty box.

You cannot understand the greed and filthy envy of the rich: unless you are a rich person yourself. Whenever they see something they do not have.... They want it. Even if they do not understand what it is. They saw poor peasants giving love to each other... they did not understand what it was... but they wanted it. They did not want the peasants to have anything. They wanted all of their peasant's love. Peasants were not allowed to love anybody else: except their masters. Even when the rich aristocrats destroyed what they touched: they still wanted the ritual showing of it. Even if a peasant hated his master's guts: he was forced to bow and kneel and profess his love for his master in public. This tiny showing of love in public by the poor between themselves became forbidden. The loveless rich were well satisfied: that they had once again: succeeded in making the poor more miserable and unhappy than they were.

This is just one small historical example of how the birth of Jesus was poisoned from a holy day that only the poor celebrated: to a day that was taken over by the rich. And used for their sick rituals. Ritual oaths of fealty were renewed every Christmas: so the poor were never allowed to forget who ruled them. And who they were supposed to love.

The holiday which was once a holy day... the 12 days of Christmas. Were used in many, many ways to brainwash the lower classes: to keep them oppressed and ignorant and miserable and poor. The German import of Santa the good elf: was only one of them.

What were ELVES? What are ELFS? Who were they? Where did they come from?

They are the many aspects and multiple personalities of the human SELF... hiding in the human subconscious.

They are a fable-history of how humans hide from themselves, and from their own SELF. Which in plural is spelled: ELFS. Elfs and Elves are evidence of the human subconscious SELF revealing itself through fables and legends. The evolution of this hidden history can be read by how these ELVES and ELFS changed over the years, and how they have been whitewashed in every culture that had them.

Where did the modern Santa Claus come from? From the Coca Cola Company: selling their BLACK drink full of addictive sugar to children. In 1937: they hired an illustrator to whitewash the BLACK image of the Dutch Sinterclaus into a white-haired jolly fat man called SANTA Claus. Whitewashing and sanctifying SIN. Turning SIN into SANTA... Changing sin into a sanitized virtue that is supposed to be good for you. Changing the sin of addiction and consumption into a sanitized white lie by showing a freshly scrubbed rosy-cheeked bearded white man holding a bottle of black poison. So children could get addicted to the sweetness of sugar water: replacing the sweetness of human love with mass-produced black poison sweetness; that rots your teeth, and rots your health, and destroys your appetite. They managed to whitewash their black poison drink, and they whitewashed the idea of Christmas, and sanctified the concept of consumption by tying it to Christmas: all in one fell swoop. The brand colors of Coca Cola and the new whitewashed image of a jolly fat man in a red costume with white fur trimming, was a combination of the fat Dutch uncle, and the colors of the company: blood and white pus.

The illustrator who created the Coca Cola Santa Claus was Thomas Nast: a commercial artist who made his money posting nasty political cartoons about Boss Tweed and the corruption of the New York's Tammany Hall, and as he became famous and rich: he became corrupted... and ended up whitewashing the nastiest myth in the world: the myth of greed being good. His illustrations of a sanitized fat greedy pig called Santa were spread worldwide.

How did this happen? Because the Coca Cola corporation managed to get a government monopoly during the 2nd World War: selling Coca Cola cheaply to GI's. The company was cunning... They knew that if they could get the entire population of the United States Armed Forces and all their Allies during the war consuming their product... They would later have addicts buying the same coke for a much higher price after the war ended. This tactic was used with cigarettes, and with chocolate also. Tens of millions of people came back from that war addicted to sweets, to Coca Cola, to smoking, and to chocolate. All of them are black, unhealthy addictive poisons. Blackening your lungs with black tar, blackening your stomach with black cocoa, and black sugar water. Coca cola originally had cocaine as its main ingredient... which was why it is called Coke. Which is what cocaine is still called today.

Do you think fictional untrue, lying, cunning distortions can't hurt you? Do you think lies can't harm you? Do you think fables like Santa Claus can't hurt you? They can rot your brain so thoroughly; that you stop thinking critically altogether. Teaching your children to believe in Santa Claus; is teaching them to believe that evil is good, that black is white, on a thousand subtle levels so poisonous: it cripples them for life; and prevents them from ever developing their own humanity and love... that is not filled with lies and hypocrisy.

The myth of Santa Claus is evil for very good reasons: it teaches children to be greedy. It teaches children greed. It teaches them how to be greedy. It whitewashes the evil of greed and turns greed into a false, lying religious spiritual good. It teaches selfishness. It reverses ethical and moral values by portraying evil as being good.

Christmas songs still sing of earlier Christmas culture, when people were actually poor, and could not afford to buy anything. How to teach the unspoken ethic of greed and selfishness to impoverished masses? Hold out the hope... the faint hope, that they might get a present on Christmas. Let poor children hope and pray all year... hoping they might get something for Christmas. Then dash their hopes, and give them nothing because they hadn't been 'nice' enough to deserve a present from Santa. The song still sings of that time when rich people had secret lists... which people were favored and which were not. The evil of this myth, The evil of Santa Claus is obvious. Santa relies on secrecy to exist at all. He is not allowed to be seen. He sneaks into houses in secret. He has a secret list telling him which children have been 'naughty' and which have been 'nice'. What a wonderful way to brainwash poor people into a religious belief of selfish greed, and at the same time make sure they will never rise up against their masters. What a wonderful way to corrupt the poorest of the poor, and keep them under your thumb, and keeping the status quo sacred and inviolate. What a wonderful way to corrupt the poor into living a culture of greed while giving them nothing but a token of greed once a year. What a wonderful excuse for poor people to give to their children if they could not afford anything for Christmas:

'You weren't 'nice' enough this year.' What a wonderful way to teach servility, and obedience to children so they grow up so brainwashed: they cannot even conceive of the idea of going against the wishes of their elders. Once you brainwash a child to never rebel against their elders: you have successfully brainwashed that child to become a meek slave for the rest of their life. What a wonderful way to torture all poor children by holding out a false hope and dashing it once a year; until they become cynical, and mean, and angry, and filled with hate and envy and jealousy. What a wonderful way to corrupt human beings: by creating a myth based upon secrecy, stealth, and greed, and secret lists of who has been naughty and nice.

It worked. The starving poor of England and America did not rise up and overthrow their masters. They sucked on the myth of Santa: because it was allied to an older myth of the love and kindness of Jesus Christ. This is how cunningly human myths are used to brainwash innocent children. Why not hold a fast instead of a feast for Jesus? Why not practice abstemiousness instead of gluttony? This was what the original holiday was for hundreds of years before it became corrupted into a feast instead of a fast. People fasted for 12 days, without eating anything. This was why the 12 days of Christmas managed to survive for hundreds of years, while other Christian holidays disappeared. Hold a fast in memory of all the starving babies in the world today: not in memory of one baby that was born 2,000 years ago, he who starved only after he grew up; and found out that not eating made him wiser, and more spiritual than all of Mankind: past and present.

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1415

Look what happened to the Pilgrims who landed in America: they believed in fasting not feasting. All of the religious groups that fled England and Europe to America did not believe in feasting: they believed in holding the holy days of the Church by not eating anything. But will you find these historical facts in history books? No. They have been expunged. Deleted. Crossed out. Pages ripped out, pages missing. To Fast is to Find the lAst Supper: it is finding the Truth that you do not need to eat to live to become like Jesus, to fast voluntarily, and in doing so: find your true health and purpose in Life. You will Find A Secret Truth.

Why should one baby that did not starve 2,000 years ago, be more important than all the starving babies who died from lack of love since then? Why should one baby born 2,000 years ago be more important than all the poor starving babies alive today? Does this makes sense? Why should only one baby be worshipped that lived 2,000 years ago, and all the babies since then; be left to starve and die from lack of love? Civilized cultural traditions and concepts are insane. Their values are insane. Their ideas are insane. How they focus their values and ideas is insane.

In French, the verb: to fast is 'jeune'... The word 'jeune' in French also means: 'young'. This is not a coincidence. When you fast: you stay young. You do not die. You do not get old. Because as long as you are not killing anything: you will not be killed. That is where the French word: 'dejeuner' comes from. Meaning to break one's fast. If you do not break your fast: if you do not eat: you will stay young. The word for feast in French is 'fete.' Pronounced: fate. If you feast: your fate will be to die. To have dying things inside your body fester and rot means you will rot and die also. These words are not coincidences. Food rotting inside your intestines makes you die. The other word for feast in French is: 'festin'. The French word: 'festin' is pronounced like the word intestine is, in English, except softer. These words are not coincidences. Fester-festin. Food Festering in your body...

Charles Dickens

Everything that has ever happened in human history was the worst possible thing that could have happened. Like Christmas and Dickens.

Charles Dickens became the most famous writer of his day. His most famous work is the short story called: 'A Christmas Carol'. The book became instantly popular among all rich people around the world. It became an instant hit with all the poor people in the world. His book was crucial in the systematic brainwashing of industrialized humans. It was part of the slow, steady pressure brought to bear upon the poor lower classes and upon the elite. To change how the 12 days of Christmas were celebrated.

Before Dickens wrote his famous short story called: 'A Christmas Carol'... Christmas was celebrated for 12 days BEFORE the birth of Jesus. There were 12 holy day set aside in the calendar as the 12 days of Christmas.

This ancient tradition came from the time when the Church was powerful, and used these 12 days to force the masses to go to church and be preached at and brainwashed by their clergy for 12 days nonstop... So their brains would be swimming in religious dogma and propaganda. In order to make

1415

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1416

them proper humble, subservient slaves and serfs and vassals. But when the Industrial Revolution happened: the masses had to be brainwashed into loving of the stingy, cheap, skinflints they worked for; instead being brainwashed into loving their church and Christ.

So Dickens wrote a fantasy-fiction-fairytale: He tried to humanize a money-grubbing, coldhearted, greedy, filthy old man: who was consumed with hate for all mankind, and filled with envy at anyone better off than he was. He humanized this fictional character by showing how he had slowly and gradually lost all his humanity, as his love of money took over his soul, as he betrayed and abandoned everybody in his life who loved him and cared for him.

The old man is visited by three ghosts of Christmas. Showing what was, what is, and what is to be. They force him to regress back; and re-live every significant moment in his life, and relive it in perspective, and then digest each episode. Until finally: he is forced to see his own grave, and his own death, and what people will think of him after he dies, and what effect he will have upon the world after he dies.

Then he has a magical transformation from unhappiness in happiness that is instant. He suddenly becomes happy and jolly. He sends a goose to his clerk. He gives to a charity. He goes to a Christmas party held by his upper class nephew who is not quite as filthy rich as he is, and who loves dancing and singing. He joins in the dancing. He becomes the Godfather of Tiny Tim. He becomes beloved by his own clerk, whom he gives a raise. He gives his housekeeper a raise. He becomes known all over London as a man who keeps the Spirit of Christmas better than any other man alive.

And what was the motivation for Scrooge's magical transformation? Why did he do it? Because of his fear of death. His fear of dying. He did not change because he loved anyone. He did not change because he wanted to become a better person. He only did it out of fear.

This single truth: exposes the lie and corruption of all human morality that tries to force people to be better out of a fear of dying. The only time that works... is when they know they are dying... and it is too late then to change their lives around. Goodness is created only when people love hugging and kissing more than they love money. You cannot magically turn a negative fear into a positive good. But Dickens sold this lie... just like Christian ministers and preachers have sold this kind of emotional blackmail of a lie for two thousand years... One second... a few moments.. of repentance: makes up for an entire life of evil...? One minute of genuine remorse: makes up for years of unspeakable crimes and sins...and magically gives you eternal salvation and sublime happiness? Wheee! Magic! I'm saved! I'm saved!

What Dickens actually did was he destroyed the 12 days of Christmas. He made it allowable for greedy cheap money grubbing robber barons to insist that their employees work all twelve days before Christmas, instead of having them all off as a holy holiday.

He created the total lie and myth of wage slaves falling in love with their robber baron masters. He created the total lie that old cheap miserable skinflints can have a change of heart. He created the idea of instant salvation and happiness... the idea that you could become a good Christian... and all you had to do was be good for one day of the year... the other 364 day... you had to work for your master. You have to be greedy and selfish. But on this one day, people could be generous, and kind, and laugh, and be happy. And that was all there was to being a Christian! The idea that a sickly cripple boy who was slowly dying: should love the person who was responsible for starving him to death. That a rich greedy old man can love a sick crippled boy and heal him.

1416

The truth is. No human who is rich is ever happy. No human who is rich ever becomes happy by being incrementally generous with a tiny pittance of their wealth one day a year. No old people ever change their miserable personalities. None of them ever have a change of heart. No rich person can heal a person poorer than they are... unless they become poorer than the poor person they help. A Christmas carol has so many lies and myths and fallacies in it: it would take a thousand pages to even begin to expose them properly.

The fact is. Dickens' tale was the worst thing that could have happened to Christmas. He destroyed Christmas... along with all the other rich people in England who put the poor to work and fuck any 12 day holiday from a hold-over tradition that actually let poor people be free of work. What? Poor people have leisure time!?! Make them as miserable and as overworked as possible. Make them love their masters and owners. Make them work on Christmas while the rich all take holidays and feast and make merry while the poor die and starve.

But the idea was irresistible. The idea that all the rich people in England!! At that time... were celebrating their Christmas better than dear old Scrooge! That they were better Christians than he was, because they celebrated Christmas more than one day! While the poor?... could only dream and hope to find a fairytale generous, kindly old skinflint... who was suddenly generous one day of the year... and that was all they needed. What? Rich people being generous every day of the year?

Never in your life.

While not celebrating more than one day a year because they had to work... so by Dickens' logic.. Cunningly hidden. He sold the idea that rich people who went around the full 12 days happy and laughing among their rich peers openly in the streets... while the poor gaped and envied them their rich gaudy boxes filled with dead things: . the idea that the rich were more spiritually Christian people than the starving poor. And the working class slaves: who could not revel in the streets and make merry, because they were wage slaves who were forced to work during Christmas.

Better to sell this all-in-one-day-a-year hypocrisy and the masses will be appeased into thinking that rich greedy people actually have a generous heart and actually know how to give and actually can love other people.

What did Dickens do? He was single-handedly responsible for whitewashing the evil out of all the English upper classes, by completely untruthful fictional portrayals. He humanized non-existent fictional rich people so cunningly as never being ALL bad: nobody noticed it. He muddied the distinction between rich and poor. He defused the socialists who were fighting against the Robber Barons. He brainwashed the Robber Barons themselves into believing they were actually progressive humanists. He changed the entire culture of Christmas and destroyed it. And he whitewashed the Robber Baron bastards who destroyed Christmas into the bargain. Any Robber Baron who was not as honestly evil and greedy and miserable as Scrooge was. Any rich person who was not as openly evil and miserable and greedy and selfish as Scrooge was... Was not evil at all. Dickens portrayed evil as being subtly hidden behind the closed doors of privilege in his earlier. But not in A Christmas Carol. He whitewashed all mass murderers who smiled for the crowd, while despising them as they smiled. He made falsity a Christmas necessity. Anyone who is not happy during Christmas; must be evil... because nobody loves them because they are evil...

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1418

Convoluted as this lying bullshit logic is: this is the LOGIC behind this story. If you are poor: you are full of love and generosity towards the greedy miserable bastards who oppress you and starve you. If you are poor: you are meek and humble and love your oppressors and masters. If you are rich and selfish: you are raging, angry, mean, spoiled and selfish and hate the people you oppress.

Both of his characterizations of English archetypes: poor and rich: were pure fucking lies. The poor were on the verge of waking up. They were on the verge of burning down the parliament buildings and marching en masse: to clear England of its rich human scum . His book was one chink of the meager morsels that the rich used to pacify the poor with.

He prevented open and honest class warfare from finally cleansing the sick corrupt English culture of industrial greedy Robber Barons. He prevented the poor from ever reflecting on the difference between rich and poor. He caste all working poor as submissive idiots who had no spine and no will of their own. He advanced as many lies and tokens and whitewashed fallacies as he could to gloss over what the rich had done to England and her masses by institutionalized mass slave camps. Called factories. And offices. And places of respectable slavery.

The old obsolete slave camps... the union work houses, the debt prisons, the treadmill stations, ... where poor people were traditionally chained to a treadmill and forced to work until they collapsed or fainted or died. The poor law...it was illegal to be poor. You were fined for it and jailed for it. . These places were slave camps where poor people were imprisoned... and used as needed... if any rich people needed any work to be done. The poor were used as slaves and treated as slaves. Paying the poor slaves starvation wages that did not give them enough money to eat. Poor people were rounded up, and shanghaied, and pressed into these prisons. Anyone who was discovered to be poor was systematically hunted down and put into a prison or camp, or be used as a common laborer... or were left on the streets to starve to death. And let's not forget the Bedlams, the Madhouses, the insane asylums of England in Dickens's time... These places of torture and dehumanization were overflowing with poor deranged crazed brutalized humans. England was so culturally sick... it was producing mentally-emotionally-physically crippled human monsters and wrecks by the millions. Their orphanages were places of systematic torture and degradation of children. The changing houses used them to get child slaves... salving their conscience that the few pennies they gave kept the starving tots; kept them alive a few more days, and was a 'good charity'. All the institutions Dickens had Scrooge giving money to... to uphold the misery and degradation of the poor: were eventually, very slowly phased out and shut down, covered up and whitewashed. Scrooge is depicted as a kindly benefactor because he gave money to these 'charitable' institutions. If Scrooge had stuck to his guns. If England had refused to financially support these social horrors. England would have rid itself of its own social inhumanity faster and better than it ever did by rich scum like Scrooge giving a few paltry donations to the institutionalization of social poverty and degradation.

Why may you ask were they shut down? Not because England suddenly developed a humane conscience... as the propaganda of all history books would have you believe... But because suddenly with rich industrialists building thousands of new slave camps called factories and offices... they needed more slaves!... Instead of a glut of too many poor people starving to death... there were not enough slaves to fill all the factories the rich were building... for the sole purpose of getting as rich as possible, as quickly as possible.

Scrooge was considered to be a benefactor because he was finally persuaded by magical spirits to give to these obscene institutions so they could grind the masses down into total starvation and death more effectively than just letting them scrounge and starve on the streets of London. This happened in Holland also when the 1st middle class nation created the 1st starving middleclass poor: A destitution and degradation so horrible, people died on the streets of Holland and had to be shoveled off the sidewalks as an eyesore to the new huge prosperity of this newly incredibly wealthy nation. Hostels were created to get rid of the dead bodies. The origin of all Western Hospitals come from the filth hostels of Holland: where poor starving dying uncared for Lowlanders... abandoned by all the wealthy middleclass Dutchmen: went to die. Just because they did not want to die alone. Their dead corpses on the streets of this most affluent nation on earth were too telling a sign of its sins. The dead of Holland's new middleclass nation... where never before this had happened. The new middleclass inhumanity of letting people starve to death simply because they did not have money and nobody could make a profit off them: was a recreation and copying of the inhumanity of the tradition Europe's rulings class systematically starving its poor masses into death for 1,000 years. Scrooge's giving the 'charitable' institutions money was motivated by the exact reason that Holland invented places where poor people could go and die indoors... so their deaths and their dead corpses would not be seen in public as a damning indictment on the inhumanity of Hollanders that all their riches and wealth created in their miserly selfish souls. In India: the poor who lived on the streets of Delhi and Bombay, used to be washed away every morning by water hoses into the gutters. In India, and other Eastern nations: the complete cold indifference to the suffering and degradation of the BILLIONS of poor people is much worse than the West... Is this an excuse that should be used? Point the finger at other nations and civilizations who are even more corrupt in many ways than the West is now?

1418

No. The West. Western civilization is the leader among all human civilized societies. All other civilizations, cultures and Nations follow its lead and example. The West is supposed to represent the BEST of modern humanity, not the worst. Instead: it represents a cunning inhumanity of detachment. Detached Abstraction, detached from everything to such an insane abstract degree that words cannot describe it. Dickens's book launched the new Western affluence under a false wave of hypocritical lying rationalizations that became one of the traditions that kept the tidal wave of Western greed going. The unspoken assumption that you could be a greedy miserly bastard all your life was okay as long as you gave a few 'presents' during Christmas. And what was his gift to the Cratchet family? Dead meat. The biggest dead goose in London, so they could gorge their empty love-starved bellies and replace the feeling of feeling loved with the deadness of dead meat in their stomachs. The goose in Europe was that it was the watchdog of all the farms and all the communities of the poor. Nobody could sneak up on a poor community, as long as they had a herd of ever-watchful geese on their land. Dickens killed the moral watchdog of English speaking humans when he wrote that lying corrupting poisonous tale. And why is it called a Carol? Its prose is not especially musical. There is no music in its themes. The Carolingian myths of Europe were kept alive by minstrels singing the praises of long-dead Kings who they lauded and praised and whitewashed: until the entire masses of the poor of Europe were slowly hoodwinked into believing, that the OLDE Kings and rulers of rulers were 'noble' and 'good' and 'spiritual' ... not like the living Kings were: who killed them and degraded them and starved and robbed them and hated them.

Dickens's tale is merely an example of the continuation of the European Carolingian tradition of singing the praises of the worst, the most evil human filth ever born. Except that Dickens did not marry his lies with music. He wrote his song of praise of the meanest most miserable human filth ever to live in England, in a poetic prose: designed to woo the hearts and minds of every western soul who could read his words. This is the evil of selling. Anything that has to be couched in sugar coated lies to be sold: is hiding poison inside it. and when you swallow the sugar coated lies: you become poisoned with the hidden poison it hides under its nice-sounding words. He was the first mass-read author. He was the first who sold sugar coated lies as fictional tales to be read by the poor, so they could be better brainwashed into letting the filthy rich get richer, and giving them the hope of becoming rich also... so they would not rise up and slaughter the rich in their houses and rid themselves of the Western culture of greed and wealth called Capitalism.

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1420

Has one single rich person ever changed their ways upon reading his bullshit fairytale? Or seeing a movie version of it? Like fuck any rich person ever changed from this lie of a story. Like fuck any rich person ever became less greedy from Dickens writing this shit. Unfortunately: the whole world eagerly swallowed his lies. And Christmas became what it is today. One of the worst lies in his story... was the whitewashing the hypocrisy of 19th century English traditional Christmas. Dickens made out people who hated Christmas; out to be evil. In fact, it actually was. It still is. Christmas had already been corrupted into the evils of gluttony and feasting and drunkenness and greed long before Dickens wrote his tale.

By then he had become world famous. He could have written an honest book. If he had made Scrooge more honest: if Scrooge had hated the hypocrisies of the traditional Christmas honestly: then at least he could have exposed Christmas for what it is: a token lie, a pittance token lie. Instead, he invented a fable full of cunning lies and lying legends.

Dickens was single-handedly responsible for bringing back to England; the legend and myth of Christmas; and reinstating it as an important holiday... His short story was single-handedly responsible for spreading the evil of pure greed all over the world through the new invention of cheap mass produced books. Before Dickens wrote 'A Christmas Carol'... the celebration of Christmas was almost nonexistent in England. Then, after he wrote this story: the culture of English European greed spread the poisonous myth of his propaganda-fairytale all over the world and instantly: people all over the world began celebrating it... as he had portrayed it in fiction... to the letter.

The entire story is an attempt to humanize rich, greedy, miserable people to the poor masses; and make their evilness acceptable to the general public who were all poor at the time without exception. It is an attempt to get the millions of poor who read his ghost story: and brainwash them into an unspoken of forgiving all rich people their evil sins.

Subconsciously...Dickens was begging people to forgive him for his own greed. Dickens was exposing his true inner self subconsciously. HE was Scrooge. Scrooge was him. Most English upper class people were like Scrooge in his culture and his day. Not the false Scrooge who is generous: but the nasty, mean Scrooge who is filled with hate and vindictiveness. His lying fable has made hundreds of millions of people give boxes to each other during this holiday even though they didn't want to for the last 200 years... for fear of being called a 'Scrooge'. The name 'Scrooge' became an epithet that was used to describe the meanest, most grasping rich people on earth. Proof that the entire book is a total lie. There are no rich people who suddenly become generous and happy and spiritually reborn.

Greed had already been an integral, unspoken mainstay of European culture; Hundreds of years before Dickens lived. For Example: Take the holiday song called; 'The 12 Days of Christmas'.

This ancient song: actually originated in France... as is obvious. Dancing was not custom of the English aristocracy: it was a custom of the French aristocracy. It vividly shows how totally corrupt Christmas had already become... and why it was banned from England, and why it did not take root again until Dickens whitewashed it all over again. This old song tells what a true love... gives their beloved during

1420

The Path of Splitness
Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1421

the 12 days of Christmas. Each day their true love gives them more and more expensive gifts... that only a king could afford.

And their 'true love'... hint, hint... their king... gives his true love... or is given to him by his 'true love'...: over the twelve days... a huge fortune so extravagant... that no other human on earth, can ever hope to rival the material goods, er... called 'love' that is given: over all 12 days: the total of gifts is amassed and accumulates to the grand total of:

12 partridges in 12 pear trees (24 all told)
22 turtledoves
30 French hens
36 calling birds
40 gold rings (actually ringed birds, birds with ringed necks like pheasants)
43 swans a swimming
43 geese a laying
40 ladies dancing
36 lords a leaping
22 pipers piping
And only 12 fucking drummers...

Now that's love! Not the niggardly shit of Scrooge's few English pounds here and there. Not only that: his true love sends these things to him... because she is not there in person to 'love' him. Now that's true long-distance love! Don't be present to love your loved one! Instead; send them presents, to replace your personal presence! Be miles away and send him all this shit! This is 'love'?

All this obscene wealth is supposed to replace her loving presence. Presents are supposed to replace Presence. The original song has the word 'sent', which was changed to 'gave' later. Why? Because ancient rulers and their families once lived in widely separated estates and dukedoms and lands, in isolated walled huge castles. They did not venture out of their prisons: because if they did: they would be killed by their subjects who hated them, and killed them every chance they got. (Real loving people these ancient kings) They did not see each other for years. Only when castles disappeared and mass culture took over this song: did the word 'sent' change to the word 'gave'; because the masses that sang it could not understand 'sending' anything since they all lived cheek-by-jowl next to each other, and never 'sent' anything to anyone.

By singing this song for at least 300 years. Brainwashing propaganda like this was drummed into people's brains over and over. This song is a perfect example of cultural brainwashing. It is a perfect example what is unspoken, what is assumed, what is never mentioned in public, what is taken for granted. It teaches us what is considered to be 'normal'... without us realizing it is brainwashing us...

First: the unspoken assumption of this song is that:
Only supreme Wealth + Power = Love.

Only the richest and most powerful king in the world can give this much wealth. Only someone who can give her all this... is a true love. If you give less wealth than this: you are not a true love. The giving of wealth proves that your love is a true love. All other love is false.

Dickens changed it ... from wealth and money equals love... to;

1421

The Path of Splitness
Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1422

The giving of money is love
Money is love: love is money.
The love of money is love

Money is love. If you give money to somebody: you are showing love for them. Money proves you love. If you have no money: you cannot love.

Dickens subconscious moral message is: that money can be used to create good. His moral is: money is good. That is... if you give a tiny bit of it away. Not all of it. Just a teeny, tiny little bit, while keeping all the rest for yourself.

The actual truth is; that all money is evil.
The human subconscious does not lie.

English money was called pounds. It was called a weight. Because the use of it weighs down human souls. English pounds were used to pound down, and crush poor people with. The English pound was used to pound out iron nails in factories in order to enslave poor people by. Marley was dead as a doornail. The iron nails used to nail Jesus to the cross... killed him. Iron nails were used to crucify poor people for four thousand years before they became cheap enough for poor people to use so they could crucify pieces of wood by nailing them together. Dickens tried to make out the niggardly charity of Scrooge as a good thing. He tried to create a fairytale where a miserable lonely poor man found happiness and salvation by using money to save his soul.

But again... the human subconscious rose up. The word: 'Dickens' became an epithet used to describe anyone who was up to no good:

'What in the Dickens are you doing? He ---- the very Dickens out of that ---!'

The human subconscious did not swallow Dickens cunning lies. Instead: his name became a curse used for anyone who had a secret cunning evil intention that is being hidden. Dickens did not write the truth. The actual truth is the complete opposite of what Dickens wrote. Jesus taught that a rich man would have more chance of entering heaven, than a camel going through the eye of a needle. That is the actual truth. The organized religion of Christianity is actually the enemy of Jesus. The Christian church has fought the actual teachings of Jesus, and brainwashed the masses into ignoring what he actually said, and laughed at his actual teaching for 2,000 years. Instead of telling the honest story of people who humbug Christmas because it is a total hypocrisy of the true teachings of Jesus. Dickens wrote a Christmas Carol to rationalize away the new insane level of greed that had gripped the entire upper and middleclass of England. Was any living human ever haunted by an undead ghost trying to convince them to live more charitably? Never in your fucking life. The entire story is designed to make the meanest stingiest bastards alive; feel that they are better than Scrooge. The entire story is designed to whitewash all rich people and all money.

The burying and re-burying of all truth under tons of whitewashed lies, and brainwashing people to take for granted the latest layer of myth uncritically, without ever trying to find the actual truth: is one effect civilization has on humans. The dynamic of what Dickens's did runs universally true for everything that civilization espouses, is proud of, and points with pride as what is good about civilization. Dickens made things worse not better. Every single step of civilized history has made good things worse: not better.

1422

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1423

The point is: civilization poisons everything that is good and healthy. The religion of Jesus! A man who lived by the religious principle of poverty and preached poverty: is reversed into glorifying gluttony and feasting. The religion of Jesus: who preached of helping others, who preached giving love: is reversed into 364 days of pure selfishness, with one token day of exchanging dead things in boxes. Until people who not know how to give and has never given of themselves to anyone: frenzied in the search for a 'perfect' dead thing to put in a box ... have given up trying to even think what somebody else might need or like or want because that is too HARD!, so they just give money instead. The giving of money! To celebrate the only human who ever chased the moneylenders out of religion! The feasting on Christmas day and Christmas eve! To celebrate the birth of the man who shared a few loaves and fish with hundreds of poor starving people! This is what Dickens glorified. This is what he turned the idea of Christmas into. Give money once a year and you are a good Christian! Give a tiny pittance of your huge amassed wealth one day a year and you are a benefactor of all mankind! And to hell with the other 364 days. Celebrating Christmas one day a year makes you a good Christian? By doing everything that Jesus preached against?

Read history... the truth is screaming at you. The first known written word 'Noel' in England around 1450... was written as nowell... no well. No wellness: get it? It is the in the first stanza of the song. And it is repeated four times. It is screaming that this new custom of visiting people for the purpose of feasting, merriment, gluttony and drunkenness did not do any human any good. That doing it would make you not well. That it would make you sick.

'A Christmas Carol' re-sanctified the European tradition of celebrating all holy days by holding a feast, and corrupting the religious spiritual meanings of all the different sacred days, and all the different traditions by making them all the same. Celebrating them all the same way: by gluttony and greed. The supposed goodness of Scrooge giving Cratchet a Christmas goose; was one cultural lynchpin that supported the sanctification of gluttony and greed as being sacred and good.

This evil custom goes back more than 100,000 years. Early humans feasted upon the flesh of dead animals at night. Why? Because they spent the whole day hunting them, killing them, and dragging them back to the campsite. So by the time they came back carrying the dead corpses: they were hungry. Bragging about how fast they were; the fastest killer killed the most animals and was hailed around the fire and paraded his kill and strutted about.

The tradition of holding a feast at night: is based upon the assumption that you are a killer of other animals. Because only professional killers can afford to eat meat. Just as in Europe and England: only professional killers feasted at night burning wood in their feasting fires. While the poor peasants slept after a hard days work without feasting because they had to get up at the crack of dawn to work again. Humans were not designed to stay up after the sun has gone down. The sick custom of killers staying up all night by a burning fire eating dead meat until they were full has been destroying human health for over 100,000 years.

But starve poor peasants for months. While they see the rich feasting. Until they are ravenous for any food. And they will ape the killers. They will accumulate food. And save it up. And hold a feast of their own. And copy their lords and masters to the letter. Just so for once, they will not go to bed hungry as they do all year.

The scientific fact is eating anything six hours before you go to sleep is not healthy for you. It destroys your sleep. It prevents you from sleeping well. It makes you gain fat. You become overweight. You become tired, sickly and unhealthy. This is the subconscious message of the Christmas song: 'Noel'. It means: nowell. Christmas feasts are not good for your wellness. You will get no wellness from it. No feasting at night! No feasting period. No gluttony, no full bellies. No Well. The sin of accumulating things in a well. The ill health of stagnant water. The scientific fact is: the emptier your stomach is: the healthier you are. No accumulation: NO WELL, no filling your belly up: that is what the song sings of. Europeans have spread their tradition of having the main meal of the day after you work. Not in the morning and during the day when you need energy. Eating food between the time you go to sleep and after you stop work: is a waste of food. This insane custom has kept civilized humans sick, unhealthy, fat, lazy, and with horribly destroyed sleep cycles that do not refresh them and do not allow their bodies to heal during the night when they sleep. Christmas, and Christmas feasting, and Christmas gluttony: is the opposite of what Jesus taught.

1423

The last supper that Jesus held... was not a feast! But that lying da Vinci sold the idea of Jesus holding a feast during his last supper: by painting a table full of food in front of him. Jesus was holding an ironic last supper. There was no food at that table. He was holding it symbolically: telling his disciples that they were drinking his blood and eating his flesh. Because they were they were his killers.

But da Vinci was a rich European. He could not imagine a supper without tons of food on the table. So he painted Jesus as a rich European. And the image the last supper of Jesus was forever poisoned by the subtle brainwashing propaganda called association.

Your associates define you. Whatever you are next to: defines you. You are defined by your associates. You are defined by everything around you. You are defined by your associations. You are defined by your unspoken associations. The greatest and worst evils have worked because they were unspokenly associated with GOOD... when they are actually Evil. The Evil of eating was what Jesus was preaching against during the Last Supper. His Disciples pretended not to understand what he was telling them... the entire Western World for 2,000 years has pretended it does not understand what Jesus was saying to them in the Last Supper.

And so, the insanity of associating a feast with the Last Supper of Jesus: finally managed to corrupt the 12 holy days commemorating the birth of Jesus. When his parents were so poor they could not afford a room at the inn... Never mind affording food...

Into a gluttonous feasting of greed. And roast goose. All thanks to Dickens. And Leonardo da Vinci. And every other religious propaganda the Christian Church and European culture could come up with... over a period of 2,000 years.

Huh?... Kill the only Farm animal that acts as an effective sentinel during the exact time of the seasons when you need its vigilance the most? The ever vigilant, ever watchful goose; killed... just when winter sets in?

So that during winter... there is no sentinel to warn the farmer of approaching raiders? Or robbers? Or hungry animals, or foxes or bears or wolves? Or predators?... Just at the time when they are the most starved for meat, and cannot find wild animals, so domesticated animals are attacked and killed and eaten? Huh? Something stinks about this custom. Kill the sentinel first... Flaunt all the teachings of Jesus: without anybody telling you that robbers are coming...?

Who told the poor to kill their sentinels at the first sign of winter, eh? Or did the rich Robber Barons kill their own geese in the winter, because they had their own private armies guarding their castles and keeps... eh? And urged the poor to do the same? Or did the poor simply imitate the peer example of the rich killers eating roast goose in winter? Geese they had killed and taken in their raids from the villages of the poor peasants and serfs. The untold story is obvious. Raiders with no food of their own are forced to raid and steal food in winter when there is no food to be had. The alarms raised by the geese made these birds hated by the raiders and robbers, who made sure to kill them so they would not give the alarms again. With the warrior class of professional killers and thieves eating roast geese after a successful raid: the poor peasants saw this as an elite example of feasting in the wintertime and copied their oppressors.

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1425

Human culture is still progressively becoming more and more corrupt. But you need time, and historical perspective to see how cunningly it happens. Take the famous movie: It's a Wonderful Life. A classic. A rare movie that actually deals with actual human values and truths and puts them above the value of money. The hero is given the rare privilege of developing an historical perspective.... Over his own life. Over the actual value of his own life. He is given a chance to culturally compare and evaluate what his town and his family and his wife would be... with, or without him.

The movie's moral is clear. If you care more about money than people: you will end up living in Pottersville... if you fight against the greed of old sick evil men... you will end up living in Bedford Falls... (The fall of Bedford-Stuyvesant... the fall of the original first European Dutch settlers, the fall of the first European greed that Poisoned America.)

Nearly all of America has seen this film repeatedly over and over for 50 years now.... During that time: not enough Americans have fought against greed. Most of them care more about money than other people. Now America is one huge Nation of Pottersvilles... and Pottstown's... The editor of the newspaper in Pottstown just released a documentary on the evils of modern American urban Sprawl. He showed how his own town was systematically destroyed as a living thriving community where people actually of all income levels lived together and knew each other: by the systematic commercialization of American culture, by commercial greed, and upwardly mobile families leaving cities to live in the urban sprawl called suburbs...

Do you think his documentary was a coincidence? It was allowed to be made and aired to a small minority of Americans who are not completely commercialized... who still gave lip service to the idea of a public good, and communities committed to the idea of public good and equality.

It was aired because it was and is an ineffective film. America is still creating urban sprawl and destroying land at the rate of millions of acres per year. The rich elite of America... living in their mansions and elite communities; do not want to return to a healthier state of communal equality. None of them want to live cheek-by-jowl next to poor people. They re-created the slums of Rome in America. Just like they re-created the slums of Rome in England, and all over the world... in places that had never had them before. Simply by their neglect of the poor. The rich and powerful of ALL cultures and societies are responsible for creating the Pottstowns and Pottersvilles of today.

Just coincidentally... the newest fad that young affluent, children are crazy about... are books and movies about a young boy-magician named Harry Potter.

Well... just after world war two... the name Harry Potter meant the worst evil sick filth... an old wretched, miserable cripple... full of hate and envy and greed. Cunning and devious. Not satisfied until he owned the whole town.

1425

Now today... the name Harry Potter... means a young good-meaning boy who is learning how to practice the magic arts. Once again... the human subconscious is screaming out that all the books about Harry Potter are designed to cunningly brainwash young children into loving all evil, and despising good. By portraying evil as good, and good as evil... on countless subtle, devious levels and in many cunning ways.

Do you think these two names are mere coincidence? Water seeks its own level. America, and consumer society children; discovered these books when they finally became as culturally corrupt as Harry Potter was in the movie: 'It's a Wonderful Life'

They discovered these books... when they lost all wonder of the world around them. When they lost all wonder of their own lives and their own selves. They became addicted to the artificial wonder of bullshit fake fantasy-fairytales; like Harry Potter. Abstraction is replacing actuality. Until now: modern children live inside an insane asylum of meaningless abstractions... and are not interested in such mundane ordinary things like living flowers, living trees, living people, living animals, Nature, etc. How can you celebrate Christmas better?

Give living things to people. Give living love to people. Not dead things. Not dead things in boxes. Not death in a coffin. Give a living puppy that wants to be loved. And love it and live with it. And do not treat it like a toy! Give a child; birth, and life... and love your child, and live with your child. Give living things that need to be nurtured and loved all the time.

*Give life to life.
Is this too hard to understand?*

Do not give toys. Do not treat children like toys. Living things should not be treated as if they were dead toys! They should not be thrown away, and broken and discarded like toys and only played with once a year on Christmas.. But this is how we treat each other: This is how we treat our babies and our puppies and our children. Like dead toys.

Subconscious truths are both obvious... and hidden.

Jesus' teachings were poisoned. People stopped worshipping him as a healer and a lover. He became worshipped as a symbol of death and pain and suffering and hopelessness. How many hundreds of years did it take to poison the idea of an innocent child's birth: into the sick worship and obsession of crucified death? The word itself: Christmas exposes how the Church turned the idea of a baby being born: into a bleeding dying horror: crucified on a cross. Christmas stands for: Christ's Mass. The Mass that was held that once was supposed to celebrate his birth: came to celebrate death, pain, agony, suffering, hopelessness and passivity. The Mass of Christ represents the masses of dead and dying and suffering brainwashed believers in Jesus as a God crucified on a cross. It represents the mass of suffering humanity. It represents the mass of sin and crime and destruction that has been committed for over two thousand years in his name. The word: Christmas is pure semantical insanity. What is being worshipped? Life or death? Happiness or unhappiness? Good or evil? It does not make sense. The word itself makes no sense. You cannot celebrate birth and joy by worshipping death and pain.

Look at the hidden obviousness of Ancient Egyptian culture... That filthy civilization died out, and went extinct over 3,000 years ago. Their rulers were so rotten, that none of their descendants survived. Cleopatra herself was not Egyptian. All the old ruling families had died out by then. She was wed to a sickly, weak, young boy... An Egyptian Prince, who was the only remaining living descendant of the old line of rulers. They hoped the vigor of a young adolescent boy would be strong enough to produce a baby, by wedding him to a foreign queen. It failed. The Egyptians of Cleopatra's time could not even write or speak the language of Ancient Egypt. They had no understanding of the cuneiform writings that covered the walls of all the ancient monuments, and buildings, and obelisks, and walls of Egypt. The Egyptian Priests during the Roman Empire were supposed to have understood these writings. They used that lie to preserve their own power. So with a dead civilization that is completely extinct, and no way to decipher the chicken scratches they produced as writing... how can you see the obvious truth of what kind of civilized filth they were? That is what they were: chicken scratches. The Egyptians were the worst human chickens ever to have lived. They were the dumbest, stupidest, weakest, human pea-brains ever to live in that Age.

What was the cultural legacy of Egyptian Gods that were half-animal, half-human?

The Aztecs and Incas were conquered by Spaniards because they thought the Spanish and their horses were one animal. They thought that these mounted half-animal, half-humans; were Gods.

Why did England follow Spain into the New World? Pissaro... In one short venture. Conquering an entire New World Empire: with only 158 mounted men???

Coming back... With 20 tons of Gold?????

Huh? You mean it's THAT easy to get rich quick?

It's THAT easy to conquer an entire civilization?

You mean you can conquer an entire New World EMPIRE with only 158 Mounted European soldiers armed with swords and horses?????!!!!

Then the Spanish did it again. First to the Aztecs first with Cortez... then they did it with Pissaro, and his small band to the Incas. They conquered two empires so quickly, so easily and so fast: it was unbelievable. His had never been done before in human history. Before this: kings and emperors fought each other to a bloody standstill or needed huge expensive well-equipped armies and expert generals to even win a major battle, never mind conquer an entire empire the size of Europe. How it was done still makes no sense. The Spanish greed bandits were hailed as literal gods come from the heavens, as demi-gods on earth, not as an invading force which could have easily been wiped out the moment they set foot on foreign soil. And it happened twice; not once. And made the Spanish King so filthy rich all of European aristocracy was jealous.

You bet the English were jealous. You bet The English were envious. 'Hey...these American natives don't have any guns. They don't have any cannons. They don't have any horses. They don't have any steel swords. They don't have any metal armor. Hey... these suckers are easy pickin's.'

Gold. Glory. Greed
Bloodlust; the killing of innocents.

The main motivation of the Spanish Conquistadors was their overbearing avarice for gold. The lust to steal everything they could. Their main cultural motivation was upwards mobility gained by the rapier. Killing, destroying, and raping everything they could get their filthy hands on. They were a culture of rapists.

European colonization of the world was based upon the superiority of the ridden horse. The horse-archer was the most powerful military weapon in Asia for 1,500 years: until modern artillery destroyed the advantage of humans mounted on horses. Something North America did not have.

Look at the abstract images Ancient Egypt left behind. Their women wear headbands of asps... around their foreheads... poised, and ready to strike. The men wear the headdress of a jackal over their heads... Not the headdress of a Lion, or a Hyena, or a wild dog... but a jackal. Ancient Egyptians worshipped cats. Cats are the most selfish animals on this planet. Jackals are the sneakiest sneaks, the worst cowards and the worst weaklings of the African predator pecking order. Asps lie in wait for prey to reach their coiled circular bodies... and strike at anything within reach. They chose these animals to worship for a damn good reason. Because their subconscious could not let them worship any other animals that had any better, or healthier characteristics. These animals reflected their own souls and culture more accurately than any other animals they knew of. They worshipped a human jackal. A human with the head of a jackal. This is one example of how the human subconscious reveals itself through culture.

In Ancient Egypt: before all other civilizations were born...For a brief, single reign, Ammon Ra...one of their god-kings: tried to place the Sun as the dominant God to be worshipped in Egypt above all other Gods. He disappeared. His Sun worshipping disappeared also. The ancient Egyptians could not stand to worship such a symbol of obvious might and power. They preferred to worship the sneakiest scavenger in Africa the jackal, the most poisonous snake in the Nile Delta: the asp, and the most selfish domesticated animal they had: the cat.

Look at their hieroglyph pictures. The scratchings of squawking chickens, the poisonous stealthy cunning on an asp, the filthy sneakiness and cowardice of a Jackal. They scream out the obvious truth: 'Our writings are the scratches of chickens. We are chickens. We are cowards. We cower under the overseer's whips. We cower in front of our rulers. We are poisonous, cunning, jackals, snakes and sneaks. We are poisonous liars and robbers, and thieves. Our women wear snakes around their heads. Our women are professional poisoners. Waiting to strike without warning. Do not speak to an Egyptian woman. The instant she opens her mouth, a poisonous thought will come out and strike you dead. She will poison your mind with her words. Do not come near an Egyptian man. He will find some way to rob you and steal from you as cunningly as a jackal' Study the origins of humans killing each other by poison. You will find that it was secretly practiced by every ancient civilization.

Where did writing originate from?

In Sumeria and Egypt. From adding up scratches on a stone, and then on a piece of clay. Scratches which look exactly like the tracks that chickens make on the wet clay beaches of the Tigris, Euphrates and the Nile.. From domesticated chicken tracks. From scared chickens. From bird tracks left on wet beaches on the Nile and Indus and Yellow Rivers. By lazy birds who were afraid of the humans who had come to hunt them. Birds who were too lazy to fly away. And were punished by Nature to wade in slimy swamps and wetlands and be eaten and preyed upon by animals who could never have touched them, if they had kept on flying like all the other birds and not settled down to live there all year-round.

Where do evil spells come from? From ancient runes: From the ancient ruins of the undead.

From spelling. From spelling words. From being able to read. From abstraction. Anyone who knew the meaning of letters was believed to be a sorcerer. In the lands of the illiterate: the literate ones are magic sorcerers. In the lands of the superstitious: the ones with secret knowledge are witch doctors. In the lands of religion, the ones with secret knowledge are the high priests. In the lands of modern civilization: the sorcerers, the witch doctors, the priests all rolled into one, are the ones with secret special knowledge are called scientists.

After the Roman Empire was destroyed all writings were lost. Anyone who could read; was considered to be a wizard, and believed to have magical powers. Europeans cast evil spells by hiring people who could spell. To write down words of hate and evil intent on paper with the black ink of Black Death.

Egypt had magical spells also thousands of years earlier. Why is that? Because when the first writing was invented: all the uneducated feared it and considered to be magic. Evil spells come from the chicken tracks of the first cuneiform tablets. Evil spells come from the first writings, the first written word. Because the first words ever written were written with evil intentions. Written words have carried their original evil ever since. They invented the insane idea of changing human understanding through pure abstract. Without any direct firsthand experience whatsoever. The first spelled words were evil spells: they were used in hate and fear. All spelled words are evil: if their intent is evil. All spelled words that do not come from a good passionate heart: are cold snakes; that reflectively kill human emotions by the reading of them.

Why do you think human squatters settled first in swamps and wetlands?

They were copying the highest peer examples they could see. High-flying birds, who were so lazy: they did not use these wetlands as stepping stones in their migration routes, but lived there because it was a new habitat free of predators and rich in food. Having a fine old time o fit, and becoming lazy, spoiled and stupid. Human writing came from hunters trying to decipher the tracks of the animals they were hunting. They tracked the presence of birds on wet sand: and knew if the tracks were not washed away: then the birds were probably still there. And had not flown away yet.

Writing became an abstraction of decipherment: trying to understand other animals by the tracks they left behind. It is a reflected reversal of actuality. Instead of dry tracks on wet sand and reeds: it became wet tracks on dried pressed papyrus made of reeds. Why did writers sprinkle dry sand over wet ink for thousands of years? Cuneiform was written in a continuous scroll: read from right-to left. Because the birds still left in the swamp were the right ones to kill?

Why do many cultures still have ceremonial grass skirts and reed skirts? Humans skirted tall grass in Africa because lions hid in tall grass. Human walkers skirted wetlands with tall grasses and tall reeds because they were breeding grounds of disease and hard to walk through. They were supposed to skirt these areas. Not wear them. Not settle in them and live in them.

Where did the tradition and the idea of burial, and the burial vault come from? Originally: humans buried their dead by digging a shallow hole. Then Rulers were buried by digging a shallow hole and piling huge mounds of earth on top of it. Then beneath huge piles of stone. Then buried deep underground and under a huge pile of stone. So nobody could despoil their wealth and comfort after they died.

Then rich humans were buried in burial vaults that looked like the burial vaults of ancient Kings. Then rulers dug burial vaults under the buildings they lived-in. Then rich people built houses with vaulted ceilings that looked like the burial vaults of ancient Kings. Then banks created sanctified palaces with somber vaulted ceilings to keep their sacred money in. Now all banks have vaults: to keep worshipped pieces of paper, with dead images on it. When were the first dead images kept in a vault? When was the first Funerary Art with abstract images of dead rulers in a vault? In Egypt, 5,000-7,000 years ago. Now we still have bank vaults designed to foil robbers from stealing wealth from vaults where abstract images of funerary art.... where images of dead rulers are kept on paper. Where was the first paper invented? In Ancient Egypt: 5,000-7,000 years ago.

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1430

What difference is there between a 5,000 yr-old Egyptian burial vault, and a modern bank vault? Almost nothing.

Look at the only living species that survived their civilization. Their insane breed of inbred Siamese cats. Cross-eyed idiots, spoiled and whining all the time in sour, idiotic unhappiness today... Because they are no longer as worshipped, and as spoiled and as pampered as they once were in Ancient Egypt. Why did these ancient Egyptians go extinct? Egyptian Siamese cats scream out the obvious truth. The ancient Egyptian Elite died because they became an incestuous race that fucked and sodomized each other into genetic sicknesses and oblivion. They created the first human mutations of Siamese twins. Look at their half-man, half-animal Gods. Animals and humans conjoined at birth... sharing vital organs together. Because they shared each other's sperm so many times, the egg split apart as diseased, filthy, genetic monstrosities. Ancient Egyptians worshipped twin Gods. Their images are images of twins facing each other on the wall. With only one eye showing. With only one side showing. Never showing themselves fully ever.

Recently: studies have shown that the Sphinx originally had the head of a lion: not a human. It is all so obvious. The human head of the Sphinx is out of proportion to all the rest of the statue. The only way they could turn the head of a lion into a human was by making the human head proportionally smaller than it should be. How many years of incest did it take until their subconscious minds forced them to expose their cultural sickness for all the world to gape at?

When was the Lion the most revered God in Egypt? How many thousands of years old is the statue anyways? The Lion was revered because it was the biggest killer in Africa. It is also the biggest coward. The yellowest yellow-bellied coward n Africa. What kind of cultural insanity made them commit such an insane sacrilege upon the biggest statue they ever built? It would have been tantamount to modern Americans disfiguring Mount Rushmore, and replacing its symbolic meaning by wiping off the original faces and replacing them with smaller faces of another species.

The Sun God of Africa is represented as a face with a yellow blaze, or mane around it. The Lion represents the Sun. When did Egyptians replace the worship of the Sun with the worship of a human? The cycles of repeating the past are obvious. Egyptians did it again... when Ammon Ra tried to re-institute the Sun as the main God in Egypt. After he died: all of his temples and motifs were hacked out of existence: and replaced with the old gods by succeeding Pharaohs... who were also worshipped as living Gods themselves just as Ammon Ra was. They did not worship the Sun as the only God. But instead worshipped the older pantheon of Egyptian Gods.

Explore the ancient Egyptians obsession of death... their insane obsession in preserving dead corpses, instead of preserving living bodies. Their insane piling up of wealth, and power, and dead tombs called pyramids. See how obvious their culture is. The obvious sickness and insanity of their extinct civilization, culture and writing.

1430

The word 'preserve' explains itself. It pre-serves. It serves something before something else. Before it is supposed to. In the wrong order. Not in the right order. The right order is: Life should serve Life. Serve something in front of you: not behind you. Serve the present, the future: not the past.. Look Forwards; not backwards. Serve your present needs: not the needs of dead shit that does not need to be served anymore.

Yet humans still are so insane, so stupid, and so diseased... that we have not only taken everything that is the most sick, and the most insane from this Egyptian death cult; we have preserved and advanced, and evolved their chicken scratches of idiocy and stupidity into languages that make sane connected thinking almost impossible: simply because the separated structure of the scratches themselves makes any connective understanding virtually impossible to write... never mind understand. Never mind the insane rules of grammar, and punctuation, etc.

We have taken their obsession with piling things up physically to the insane level of huge penis-structures... huge 'I' structures... screaming out the importance of the 'I', the importance of being selfish in modern society if you want to survive in it. We have taken the obsession with death and dead things to the insane level of wasting trillions of dollars to find, and preserve, and pore over as many dead things as possible... putting them into holy temples of worship; called mausoleums... or tombs... or shortening the word mausoleum... into museum... so we can go there to muse about the artifacts, and see'em there: all dead. So we can wonder about the dead things we see.

That is how corrupted and sick our sense of Pure Wonder has become
Has any anthropologist ever put as much time and focus and energy on their own children, as the years and decades of painstaking effort and attention to detail, and patience they spend on their precious, sacred, dead artifacts? No.

Have any of them ever spent as much curiosity or wonder or explored a living thing; as much as they have wondered, and explored, and been curious about dead artifacts? What would happen if Anthropologists spent as much time and energy on their living children; as they do on their precious, beloved dead artifacts? What if they were as curious, and wondered about their own children, and explored them as obsessively as they do their sacred dead artifacts?

Might they find that a more rewarding profession? But I forgot. Every authority alive gives lip service to child-raising being the most important and difficult undertaking any human can attempt. None of these hypocrites ever spend more time with their children that they do on themselves or their jobs or even their cars. If they did, they might raise children intelligent enough to sneer at all this death-worship shit. And save the world from wasting more billions of human lives on this old, dead shit.

Look at the Ancient Egyptian obsession with identicality. Their human images have no uniqueness to them at all. They are carbon copies of each other. Mass-produced carbon copies. And we are now so fucking stupid... that we have taken this rotten ancient Egyptian idea of making mass-produced carbon copies to such an insane degree; that we are drowning in them. We are trying to make as many mass-produced human robots as we can. We try to stamp out the uniqueness and individuality of every child's soul, and body; as efficiently as possible. But even that is not enough. Now, we are trying are trying to replace mass-produced human slaves working in wage-slave factories around the world, with mass-produced mechanical robots... producing things that are as physically and mechanically identical to each other as possible.

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1432

Does this tell you something about humans not learning the lessons of their own history? That whatever we do not learn: we are doomed to repeat; until it either destroys us completely; or until we learn and stop doing such insane, destructive behavior. This is one effect civilization has on humans. It brainwashes humans so effectively, that they cannot see the actual truth even when it is staring them in the face.

Humans always try to go back to the past: they always try to go back to what they were comfortable with in the past. No matter how much better, or more intelligent any change in their culture is: they rebel against it, and go back to the past, they refuse to learn any lesson of the present: they always go back to the past.

The older the lesson that is unlearned by humans, the more power it gains over us, as we try to ignore the larger lessons of Life, and ignore the larger cycles of Energy that dwarf civilized humans into insignificance. The unlearned lesson of Egyptian civilization is that it does not pay to cheat your neighbor, and become narcissistic, inbred dolts. It does not pay to become the most powerful, the richest civilization and Empire on Earth. Because for that sin of pride and power, and riches, and greed, and cheating, and lying: you, and your entire culture, and language, and people will be wiped off the face of the Earth. You will all become extinct. And good riddance to such human genetic filth. So your sperm and eggs will never again filth the human species with your offspring.

Was that lesson ever learned by the younger Roman Empire? Or by the Greeks? Both began as youthful robber and pirate-cultures... and both sank into the dissipated vain idiotic self-indulgences of effete opulence, sexual perversions, weakened sperm, insane child rearing practices, etc. Just as the Egyptians had done before them. Aping the Egyptians so unconsciously: they did not even realize they were slowly becoming Egyptianized copies... even while they continued to despise the Egyptian oiliness and corruptions they themselves were copying, stealing and developing into Romanized versions of Egyptian corruption.

Both Greek, and Roman raw military might: waned and dissipated into Egyptian weakness... until they were forced to base their survival upon hired mercenary barbarians; who were better killers and more healthy brutalized dumb brutes. The Holy Roman Empire also extended its survival by using mercenaries. Exactly as the Romans, the Greeks and the Egyptians had done ages ago. Roman and Greek civilizations became tiny elites of intellectual dandies. Exactly as Egypt had become. And both civilizations weakened, and were wiped off the face of the Earth by cultures of younger, harder killers. Exactly as Ancient Egypt had been. Just as the European elite became dandies and fops. Weak, pale, sickly scarecrows. Fat, gout-ridden lard bellied Kings and Barons.

Now today: the same unlearned energy dynamics, and the same unlearned lessons are being played out ad-nauseum. The raw killing power of Nazi Germany and Stalin's USSR Empire, and Mao's baby infant of a rebirthing Chinese Empire: has been defeated by an even older, more cunning evil... the ancient pure greed of the Egyptians. The Egyptian curse is still the most powerful curse humans have been infected with... except for the even earlier Ethiopian curse of using a human as a slave... and the even earlier curse of using a tool as a slave... and the even earlier unlearned curse of using anything to gain an unfair advantage...

Today: instead of huge strutting pompous, powerful dictators like Mussolini, Stalin and Hitler ruling civilization. The sneakiest, most cunning, greediest, foulest liars and cheats like Dick Chaney, and Ron Lay, and all the old, white privileged trash; in all the boardrooms, of all the corporations of modern

1432

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1433

Capitalism: are ruling over modern civilization. Hidden behind their closed doors. Safe in their secrecy, in their anonymity, and in their secret greed. Which is again a regression, going back into the past: refusing the cultural model of Roman armed might, and retreating back to the cunning weakness and greed of the ancient Egyptians.

Does any millionaire or billionaire admit to being greedy? NO. Every fucking one of them would object to being labeled with that word. But do they ever part with their millions or billions? Do they give their billions and millions away? NO. They keep and hoard every fucking dollar. What would they be without their fucking billions and millions? Nothing. Poor. Does any millionaire admit to fearing being poor? NO. This is how sick of a hypocrite you become when you define yourself by how much money you have. This is the nauseating, unspoken hypocrisy that permeates Capitalism. This is the unspoken hypocrisy of greed. It is as old as the first civilization of Egyptian. The older, bigger tidal wave of unlearned Egyptian corruption, cowardice, greed and cunning, has steadily overtaken the smaller unlearned waves of brute force and mechanical might.

They will continue to overtake each other in bigger and bigger cataclysmic crashes and disasters. Over and over.

Until one of two things happen.

Either we learn our lessons; and stop these vicious insane cultural cycles of destruction...

Or else we will become extinct.

And not one human will be left alive on this planet to say later; how fucking stupid and blind we were. Why do buildings have stories? Because humans have been hiding their untold stories by burying them one on top of the other... under other countless untold stories. All accumulation, all building: is trying to hide the truth by piling other stories on top of it.

The human subconscious finds ways to scream out the truth. If you develop a critical awareness, if you ask questions, if you keep an open mind. You can hear those screams and become aware of the horrible wrongness of civilization.

It is not enough only to have a Sense of Pure Wonder. You need to have a passionate love of Honesty, and Courage. And when you find the Truth: accept it, digest it, understand it and put it into a greater perspective, into a larger context. This is how you can explore your own subconscious. This is how you can dig up, uncover and expose all of the untold stories of civilization... building with stories on top of stories. Until you have the penthouse suite. All the stories pent up in a single house. The sweet feeling of being on top of everyone else.

Where does the word: 'absolute' come from? From the idea of: absolution.

The more people use the word absolute; the more their subconscious is screaming to be absolved and forgiven, for a blind, insane, absolute certainty: that has no perspective, no relativity, no sanity and no comparison. Whenever you are absolutely sure about something: you are using the word: absolute to whitewash the unpleasant truth that you have no absolute morals or ethics that you stand for. People who use this word do not stand for anything. They use this word to make their opinion...absolute: as a replacement for their nonexistent morals and ethics. Ask them what they stand as far as truth, or dishonesty, or cowardice or love is concerned... and they hem and haw. But ask them about a pitch in a baseball game? And they state they are absolutely certain it was a strike.

1433

Civilized people are absolutely certain about many things... but only if everybody else around them agrees with them also. The only fucking thing you can take from their absolute certainty: is that they are conformist sheep, lickspittles and politically correct cowards. Civilized people only let themselves be absolutely certain about meaningless trivial crap. Not about life or death or good or evil. They are only absolutely certain of measuring a piece of wood and finding it is 2 feet 4 inches long. They are only absolutely certain about meaningless measurements. They are only absolutely certain about meaningless abstractions.

The mass craving for absolution, the mass cravings for forgiveness, for mercy, for absolution of their sins... has been buried and forgotten. It existed in Europe for thousands of years. Now it only exists in a craving to be absolutely right. To be absolutely correct. To be agree with everybody else. Pretending that the morals and ethics of Good and Evil no longer exist, and are not important, and are now all obsolete: instead of absolute.

The rationale of modern civilization is: as long as everybody agrees with you: you cannot be evil. Everybody is good. Evil does not exist anymore. This is one example of how the rationalization of denial works; twisting lies into truth, and truth into lies, twisting white into black and black into white. If you follow the history of the meanings of words: you will discover how humans twist meanings to suit their own shit. How the meaning of each word changes, and why it changes: is not logical. Semantics is not logical.

Semantics is the twisted logic and rationalization of human rats caught in a confusing maze. It is the twisted writhing of a snake in its death-agony. It is the surface roiling of the subconscious mind; exposing the hidden knotted lies it has been programmed into... exposing the hidden history of how one meaning has been twisted to mean something else.

Disease

Study the history of disease; and you will find that the spread of new diseases matches the spread of European colonization over the rest of the Earth.

When did the Portuguese, the Spanish, the Dutch, the French, the English spread the disease of Western sickness called colonization?

When the disease of Syphilis, and other European infectious new diseases reached the western-most ports of those countries. The spread of European culture and civilization was synchronized with the spread of Syphilis and Typhoid, and other diseases that killed more people across the Earth than all the massacres and genocides and killings combined by European killers. The first European explorers and conquerors and colonizers were spiritually and physically diseased humans: carrying every possible European virus and bacteria and plague to infect humans on Earth that had not yet been infected. Colonizing Europeans infected hundreds of millions of natives all around the world... and killed them by the millions without firing a shot, and took over their lands: in their greed for territory, gold and silver. They spread the spiritual infection of physical greed and physical lust at the same time.

We were not there to see the pustulent-pestilent disease-ridden bodies and faces of these human filth that are now glorified and revered by Western Historians. We were not there to see their disease-ridden souls, their cunning hypocrisies, their devious cover-ups, their hidden motives, their secret filthy souls and bodies. Hidden from view by layers of thick European clothing called broadcloth. Hidden from view by thick layers of sanctimonious bullshit they spouted as their public propaganda to sell their actual hidden motives of upward mobility, jealousy, envy, hate, fear and cowardice. No longer using broadswords to fight with; but using broadcloth to hide their weak, sickly bodies with. Selling this broadcloth to North American natives as blankets. Lying Blankets. Convincing the natives of their warmth by showing how thick the blankets were, the broadness of the material. Cloth that did not warm them or keep them cool... but made them roast in the summer and freeze in the winter. Blankets filled with infectious viruses and bacteria; that killed more innocent people than all the actual murdering and killing these Europeans did with their own bloody hands. European contacts with uninfected natives; left huge aftermaths of infectious deaths, and plagues: spreading in huge waves throughout these less corrupt human societies.

Almost none of the death they created simply by viral infection is recorded or verified. Because no European historian was there to tell about what happened to these natives after the first European scum left their villages.

Western Historians have even tried to blame the aboriginal natives of South American for spreading the disease of Syphilis around the world! When it was the other way around. It was the syphilitic European scum who infected the innocent Americans. Syphilis was a prevalent disease in Roman times all around the Mediterranean. It flourished in all the Mediterranean ports where greed, and diseased humans congregated to have sex with prostitutes: a thousand years before Europeans ever reached the New World.

Now; in light of new evidence, and more accurate DNA testing and carbon dating techniques: it has been medically proven that it was actually the richest elite in Europe who suffered from Syphilis. Syphilis is a male disease. It came from buggery. Butt fucking. Pederasty. It came from males sticking their penises into dirty rectums full of festering bacteria and rotting food and shit.

It was the highest abbeyes and monks: it was these homosexual religious hypocritical scum who died from this disease. They were the ones who had intercourse with homosexual sailors. The richest and most powerful Kings and Emperors of Rome and Europe went mad, and died from it. Their rotting bodies burst open in their graves and in their coffins. Their flesh fell from their limbs. Their blackened faces became rotten visages of diseased flesh, which they had to hide by using white powder and rouge; to falsify an appearance of health.

Is this unpleasant truth of the history of human disease; published and verified? It is not touched with a ten-foot pole. There are too many sacred cows, too many sanctified, glorified historical figures who died from horrible diseases. Their illnesses proved physically; how rotten their diseased souls actually were.

Can healthy bodies have cancerous diseased souls? Yes. But when both the body and the soul is rotten with disease: then do not glorify and worship this kind of human filth because of their status. Just because these senile fat, sick doddering filth were once in positions of power. Just because they were Popes, or Kings or Emperors does not mean they were good.. Yet that is precisely what history teaches. History shows: in detail, how these human scum became sicker and sicker. How they became inhuman monsters. And still all of the historical evidence, all of the historical facts are ignored...and people prefer to revere them.

Mao Tse Tsung became a senile fat, impotent child molester; whose need to rape younger and younger girls in his old age, became an obsession. Until he became so fat, so senile, and so sick: could not become sexually aroused anymore. He became a fat, inhuman, unfeeling cold, monster. Have historians bothered to lay at his feet these crimes? How many hundreds of virgins did he rape in his lifetime? How many millions of Chinese did he starve and torture and degrade and impoverish and terrorize during his evil reign?

Oh. He was a great leader. He was powerful. In that case: he could get away with it. Let us all gloss over his crimes. Great leaders must be worshipped and revered.

What was Mao Tse Tsung...but a poisonous Tsetse fly that gave the sleeping Giant of China, a sickness that almost killed it with his Malarial infection of a tiny red bite of a tiny Red Book?

What is the connection between an insect: the tsetse fly in Africa. Which has existed there for millions of years. To the human communist fanatic called Mao Tse Tsung, who stung China awake into an industrial revolt against his communist revolution: instead of stinging it to sleep?...

Because he was originally against all Capitalism, and all Imperialism. He was the tiny mosquito trying to kill Imperialist Capitalism. But instead of killing the body of Imperial Capitalism: he put the body of his country to sleep: his tiny bite killed the communal body of Chinese culture and killed the idea of communism dead... letting the sleeping body of China become infected with the virus culture of Capitalism.

Why hasn't Mao Tse Tsung been demonized by capitalist historians?

For the same reason Stalin has been not been demonized. Because neither of them lost the war. For the same reason Hitler has been demonized. Because he lost a war. Mass murderers who win are worshipped and idolized. Mass murderers who lose are vilified and demonized. Also: because it would bring too much attention to how corrupt all rulers are. Because it would make people more aware of how evil most of the ruling governments on Earth today actually are. That would give information that might be used by the masses to rebel against their corrupt rulers. Every fucking ruler guilty of murder and mass genocide has been whitewashed by modern historians of their crimes. Their crimes are expunged from history books carefully and painstakingly. History books are written with a little information in them as possible. In the hope of future generations developing a total scorn for the past so they will never learn the truth and never learn anything from history. In the hope that history becomes so much pure bullshit that nobody will ever read it or go to the trouble of doing their own research and doing their own reasoning and doing their own questioning.

Why are human truths so poetically linked?

Because poetry, songs and all expressions of human culture: contain subconscious truths that come from the conscious. They are subconscious connections that are constantly being denied and re-buried by every new generation. They are subconscious free associations we stick together, and call Art. They are artificial and superficial representations of subconscious truths. Art is merely A Rationalized Truth of the subconscious; translated into abstract symbols and images.

The history of human disease does not exist. It has never been written. Why? Because that history is too damning a list of medical facts that would make readers vomit in horror at the actual truth. No unpleasant histories are being written. Nothing unpleasant is being written. Yet in our obsession with death: we are continually uncovering the truth of our own past, and re-burying it and re-ignoring it and replaying the hypocrisy of pretending not to notice the unpleasant truth..

Documentary films are now being made that clearly detail the human crime, the human sin, the human insanity, the human horror; that humans committed in the past. With absolutely no emotional-moral-ethical effect on viewers. Viewers watching these documentary films; are so insulated and smug and stupid: they think that nothing in the past has anything to do with them. That they are immune from the past. That the past is meaningless.

Rather; it is the opposite. It is the life of every human who is not aware of the past; that is meaningless. The life of every human who does not understand the past history of human civilization; is actively repeating and re-committing every crime their forefathers committed; without even being aware that they are doing so.

Simply because they have no sense of history, no appreciation of the past, and no understanding of their own roots, and no connection to it. Simply because they are not connected to their own past. They have no understanding of why they do what they do. They do things blindly, for no reason; except that it was done before. Because they have no sense of Pure Wonder. Because they have no connective awareness. Because they have never been taught how to connect things. Because they have been lied-to their entire lives. Because they do not understand the effect civilization has upon humans.

The crime of not understanding your own past is the crime of unknowingly re-committing the crimes of the past. The crime of ignorance and unawareness is even more horrible than crimes that are committed consciously. At least a person who is conscious that they are doing something horrible can change and stop killing and hating and raping and murdering and destroying.

But the crimes of rapists and murderers who are not even aware they are raping and murdering cannot be dealt with at all. Only when humans become fully aware of the horror they have created: can they ever begin to consciously and systematically begin to destroy the accumulated filth and poison and death that they now think is normal and not bad or evil, but GOOD.

For at least 100,000 years: some human tribes lived as hunter-gatherers. But for these 100,000 years: all of these tribes, whether they were squatters, or traveling nomads: had life-styles of over-intensive tool-use. But 10,000 years ago; with the advent of human settlements, accumulation and civilization: this over-intensive tool-use intensified even more. From that point on, we have had a huge cumulative, negative, destructive effect on the eco-systems we live in.

This accumulating, accelerating impact; has grown and sped up to the mind-boggling speed of destroying one-third of the world's non-renewable resources in the last 35 years. One third. In 35 years. And not one peep out of scientific community, or the media: except one line on one evening news broadcast, by one TV station at the turn of the 2,000 year millennia .

'Ho-hum... this just in... 35% of the World's non-renewable resources destroyed in the last 35 years... Ho hum... Nothing to get excited about... I mean... it's not like a small flood. Or a fire in a single building. Or a car crash. Those things are important. Not boring, meaningless statistics... ho-hum...'

Since human awareness is genetically designed to be reflectively separate, we cannot hope to join the energy-flow of our living planet or the Universe as long as we remain civilized. Meaning we cannot become an integral part-of all the life-energy around us as long as we separate ourselves inside this artificial cocoon called: civilization. We cannot have a positive influence on the living things around us as long as we continue to kill them and destroy them. No biologist ever born can ever make the rainforest's ecosystem more diverse, or more dynamically balanced than it already is. To begin with... there is one ethical imperative that humans can strive for: do no harm. As a general conclusion; the sane goal for us, is not to accumulate anything; but to balance ourselves as dynamically as possible: to unfreeze our unquestioning sense of normality and develop our Sense Of Pure Wonder as much as possible.

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

Where does disease come from? The word itself tells you where all disease comes from: it comes from too much ease. Dis-ease. Too much ease is destructive. You die from too much ease. Slowly, cunningly: Di-s-ease: Die-snake-ease. The evil of the snake on the ground not needing to stand up. Lying on its belly. Crawling easily and cunningly like an 's' shape: instead of standing up and moving directly forward and being active.

The Exploration of the Subconscious

Any expansion of consciousness is simply a process of opening up your subconscious awareness to your conscious awareness: thereby opening up your instinctive awareness also. You can do this is by examining what you don't question, don't wonder about, don't look at, don't focus on, don't face, don't admit to. Whatever you are in denial-of; is what you need to explore. Most importantly: any expansion of consciousness is a process of questioning. And the habit of questioning everything inside you and around you as a condition of your existence I call a Sense of Pure Wonder.

The void of whatever you do not question, or take for granted; is your normality. All human normality is linked to the subconscious. If you wish to explore your own subconscious: all you have to do is explore your own normality and you will unerringly be on the right path. The only way you can explore your own normality is by the use of Pure Wonder. You have to develop the habit of Wonder. The habit of questioning everything inside you and everything outside you. You have to develop the habit of trying to connect everything to everything else. You need to develop the habit of self-connectivity, self-honesty, and self-courage... And work at it as much as you can.

The straightest path into your own subconscious is through your own fears; by admitting them not only to yourself in private and in secret, but to people who can be trusted enough not to use any confession of weakness to hurt you. But how many people have friends that can be trusted with anything like that? The only way to overcome your fear is by developing your own Courage and Honesty. But how many people want to do that? People are lazy: they want answers given to them; they do not to earn their own answers. And if the answers that are given to them are unpleasant even slightly: they throw them away. They willingly accept what is told them as long as it is not unpleasant. They blindly accept what they read, as being true without going through the arduous process of developing their own understanding of things. That is why I printed the necessary tools for human understanding in the first page this book...

Experiences. } Comparison. } Evaluation. } Perspective. }	Equals contextual understanding.
--	----------------------------------

These same tools can open up your own subconscious to your conscious awareness. This is no guesswork process, no short cut, no magic bullet. It is simply a rough generalized guide to how people can develop a better understanding of whatever they focus on. If you practice this while focusing upon your inner self: it will lead you straight into the realm of your own subconscious: your own Inner Unknown..

But eventually, you will have to face the universal human truth that no one can heal themselves in this way alone. Sooner or later, if you undertake this process, you will realize your own need for a community: your need for a support group, your need for a communal experience: which is safe-loving-supportive-understanding-honest. Not one which is secretive, fear-filled, paranoid, mistrustful, frozen, unchanging, non-questioning. But that is exactly the kind of community which civilization creates. Mechanically functioning tool-societies have no interest in exploring themselves, or the human subconscious except as a mechanical curiosity.

The human subconscious exposes itself indecently. Like an unaware baby, child: exposing himself sexually for the first time... without knowing what it is exposing, or why it is exposing it. People blurt out things in public that are dead giveaways of how they actually think and what they actually feel. Unaware that they have given themselves away and exposed themselves by subconscious attitudes leaking out into their conscious words. When President George Bush Jr. was asked in a press conference what he had been doing behind closed doors during a high level European Economic meeting. He blurted out:

“Well, we all stood in the corner...”

As he said this, he instantly smiled, ... quickly, desperately trying to turn his answer into a joke, trying to convince the press that what he had said was a pre-meditated joke. When it was an unthinking blurt, a slip of the subconscious... because the reporter asking him that question was looking at him intently, and knew he was covering up what had been going on behind closed doors. Bush tried to cover-up his unthinking instant reaction to the question, but it didn't work. All of the other reporters stared at him as if he was mad. He answer made no logical sense, not even as a joke... Unless... it was the joke, of a bad little boy caught doing something bad. Only as a reaction of a child: could it be considered to be an attempt at humor. And the president of the most powerful nation on earth is not supposed to have the mentality of a guilty little child caught doing something he knows is bad.

Why would a president of the most powerful Nation on Earth say something like that? Did he once feel like a bad little boy standing in the corner, when he was behind closed doors? Did he feel guilty about doing something behind closed doors? The dead giveaway was telling not only for what he said, but how he instantly blushed hotly, a tenth of a second after he said it. His face turned red so fast; that the cameras almost picked up his color change underneath the makeup.

He blurted it out so fast: the reporter asking him what he was doing behind closed doors didn't even have a chance to finish his question before Bush interrupted him by blurting out that inane, weird, cover-up remark. Nobody laughed when he blurted that remark out. There was a huge silence. Nobody knew what to say after that remark. All the other reporters, dying to get their questions in before the TV cameras were floored. They didn't know what to make of it.

For the most powerful President on Earth to admit that he felt like a little child made to stand in the corner; because he was a bad little boy: was unfathomable. It made no sense. What these reporters did not realize: was that what had evoked this response was the only unscripted question that had not been screened ahead of time. Bush was speaking by rote. Spouting memorized lines so that people actually had the impression that he could think on his feet. The reporter who asked this question was not supposed to ask that question. He was never invited back to a presidential press conference again. He had committed the unforgivable sin of asking Bush an uncomfortable question. Bush had tried to make a joke of it. But what came out of his mouth was not a joke. It was a dead giveaway. It was a knee-jerk reaction. It was an instinctive reaction. It was an instant cover-up. It was an instant defense. He tried to make light of what he was doing behind closed doors. He had no time to think. He had no time to invent a cunning answer. He spat out the words like a smiling bad boy who knew he was getting away with murder. He made a joke of it. It was supposed to be a joke. It was not supposed to be taken seriously. He had learned this from childhood. It is one of his best defenses. Whenever anyone gets too serious or too close to the truth or too nosy, or too close to finding out what he is actually doing and finding out how he thinks, and what he is thinking: he deflects the conversation, becomes a funny nice guy... all smiles, grinning from ear-to-ear. Willing the person who is near him to like him with his winning smile and winning ways. His entire act is based upon acting like a winner. He acts confident all the time. If you were the son of one of the most powerful men in the world and one of the richest in Texas and beloved by millions: if you knew that no matter what stupid mistake you did: your father or oil buddies or inner circle would fix it for you, and cover up your blunders. You would act the same way.

He struts proudly, sneakily. He has this false bravado on his face and in his posture nearly all the time. He is simply a good actor, as are all politicians. Only... he knows he is faking. He is not as stupid as Reagan who was the dumbest idiot ever born. You can see it every time he struts from the plane into a city. He has to put on his assertive false, fake confidence like a Brooks Brothers suit. It does not suit him. He is uncomfortable wearing this false image. He has to prove it every time he appears. He is afraid his false lies will be found out. Any time one of his lies are challenged... he becomes flustered. He does not know how to respond to any challenge. He does not know what to say. Because he is not smart enough to make up his own lies. They have to be written for him. The instant anything is off the rehearsed script: he screws up horribly. His jocularities are a defense. It is not genuine. His nervousness in these instances is so obvious, his falsity is so blatantly there for all to see: that the Media has stopped covering any personal appearances he does because he gives a horrible first impression. His faux pas are so numerous that if you knew someone like that personally: you would automatically distrust everything he said intensely and dislike him intensely. He tries to come off as a nice guy. But this time his subconscious slipped and gave him away. It revealed who he really was. And how he really felt about himself and all the bad people he consorted with behind closed doors.

Did any reporter in the pressroom comment on it? No. Did any journalist write about it? No. Did any human watching this news release understand what Bush had exposed about himself? No. Civilized people do not understand their own subconscious minds: never mind the sick, twisted mind of the President of the United States of America.

Then there was the dead giveaway of Oliver Stone on the Charlie Rose Show... Being interviewed about his new movie about Alexander the Great. Rose asked Stone to explain to viewers who did not know anything about Greek ancient history: just what it was that made Alexander so Great. Stone carefully covered his ass by pointing out that the title of his film was 'Alexander'...not Alexander the Great. Then he uttered a huge historical white lie to cover his tracks even more. He stated that Alexander had never sought the title of 'Great' when he was alive. That is true. He never did. He considered himself to be a living God on Earth. He never considered himself to be 'great'. That word had not been invented yet. It was only created for him after he was dead. While he was alive he never considered himself to be great at all. He considered himself to be a God. But Stone carefully did not add this fact to the conversation. So to the ordinary uneducated, uninformed viewer: Stone was basically explaining that Alexander had been a very modest person when. That lie came back to bite him. Because his self-effacing act. Acting like Alexander had been just an ordinary Joe. And that he was just an ordinary Joe-director. Made him sum up Alexander's claim to immoral fame too succinctly...

The Path of Splitness
Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1441

He explained that Alexander had expanded civilization faster than any man before him, or after. That Romans had idolized him so much: they copied him in everything; they modeled their entire idea of civilization after him. That he was a great builder of cities. That he had left behind a whole slew of newly built Greek Cities. That he had fought in more battles than any man alive. That he had joined the West to the East. That his Hellenicized civilization had spanned both the West and the East. And to point out the huge span and breadth of Alexander's glorious Hellenicized civilization... which by the way lasted less than 90 years... The shortest Empire ever created by a short man, with a short temper. Trying to justify his movie and trying to justify Alexander as one of the greatest humans ever born. Oliver Stone lamely, and self-effacingly listed the areas Alexander had conquered 2 ½ thousand years ago. To whit:

Egypt
The Mid East, Iraq
Iran
Afghanistan
Pakistan...
And Northern India.

Rose quickly overran Stone's list of countries that Alexander had conquered, with another trivial question; before Stone could even finish the doleful list. Stone was not even aware of what he had said. Neither of them wanted to admit what Stone had just blurted out in full view on Public Television. Stone had just named the most backward uncivilized areas on Earth. He had just named the regions that had the worst oppression, the worst brutality, the worst regimes, the worst corruption, the worst cultures, the worst poverty, the most war, the most violence... for over 2,000 years. And are still: the most backward, oppressed, poverty-ridden areas that have the worst ignorance, the worst backward cultures... and are the most devastated areas on Earth. Today: these regions have been bombed the most by the West, and they hate Western civilization more than any other cultures. But they still love Alexander! This is how stupid and blind humans are to their own evil. That is how mindlessly humans worship the worst evil on Earth.

Gosh. What a coincidence. The exact geographic areas which Alexander the Great conquered ... has remained a human cesspool for 2 ½ thousand years. Where today; the greatest number of humans on Earth still exist in the greatest misery, ignorance and oppression. Do you think this a historical coincidence?

This is why Alexander is considered to be so Great? Huh? 2½ thousand years later. After he raped and killed his way through these lands... the regions he conquered: have still not recovered from the cultural shock of his insane killing brutality. They are still backwards, raped peasant societies: with powerful robber barons oppressing them, robbing them, and killing them: still aping and copying the tactics of

1441

Alexander the Great.

A huge pus-sore of billions of poor, sick, hate-filled, insane, ignorant suffering humanity. Culturally and religiously brainwashed by his legacy. This is what Alexander's legacy has given us today. And we are supposed to be thankful for it.

The culturally brainwashed People that live in these geographical regions; still worship his memory. The people he conquered still worship him as a God today. This is one example of the screaming obvious insanity of all civilized human culture and all human civilization. People refuse to stop worshipping the worst human filth that ever lived. The impoverished masses in their hundreds of millions... who all owe their impoverishment and degradation to him... Still worship Alexander. The single thing they all have in common:: is that they were once conquered by Alexander.

Talk about preserving a culture of victimization! Worshipping your killer, your rapist... and preserving that worship intact for 2 ½ thousand years. There are no limits to human blindness and stupidity. This list of ravaged countries, came from the mouth of a film director who had just spent 150 million dollars and five years of his life producing a movie about Alexander the Great. An educated Western elite: who is just as stupid and as blind as the illiterate hill-tribes of Afghanistan: worshipping their ancient images of 'Iskander'.

Oliver Stone was wearing orange socks during that interview. Orange is one of the colors in Nature denoting poison. It is a mixture of yellow, and red. His socks were an especially vile, livid shade of Orange. The color humans choose subconsciously to wear... especially their undergarments is more informative of their mood and outlook than the words they utter. The color of orange... the two colors red and yellow mixed together are the colors of Cowardice and hatred turned into pure rotting insanity. They were the colors of his soul... Orange socks and black pants and black shirt. The colors of death. The color of poisonous snakes. He was dressed shabbily. His hair was all mussed. His face was sallow. He responses to Rose's questions were worse than deadpan, worse than listless, worse than unenthusiastic. There was guilt in his voice, and actual shame in his facial expressions. His body language was screaming out his own shame and guilt so obviously, that if you view that TV interview: it will hit you in the face.

Even though he was on that show just to sell his movie, and for no other purpose.

By his body language, and his clothes and socks, and his subconscious use of words, his subconscious was actually screaming out for everybody to see:

'Do not go to my Movie. Do not see my movie. My movie is a pile of poisonous shit...'

What has the entire human race refused to learn for 2 ½ thousand years from Alexander's example? What was the lesson he taught?

Ego is destructive. Egomaniacs are insane.

E-go is energy going-mobile-conquering

Evil is energy living in villages: creating villages, villas, towns, cities.

E-go is E-vil.

Social Form and Function

In order for human societies to be self-regulating mechanisms, the entire function and existence of the individual has to be geared towards the well-being of the group, and the entire function and existence of the group has to be geared towards the well-being of the individuals included in that group. This is the way it was designed to balance: and this is the only way that it can stay balanced. Any form of hierarchy destroys cooperation. A perfect example is Alexander Dumas's famous book: "The Three Musketeers": a group of equals; whose logo is "All for one and one for all". They get along famously with each other. But since they are sworn to uphold and defend a corrupt conniving King; the entire book is filled with nothing but conflict, jealousy, intrigue, double-dealing, betrayal, violence, killing, and conflict; all because of their idiotic worship of this pyramidal figurehead they are sworn to uphold. And why do they trounce their enemies? Because they manage to cooperate with each other better than their enemies do amongst themselves.

Human social structure always follows its function and vice versa. Once you get a group that is too large, you cannot personally care about that group because there are too many of them. Conversely, the group cannot fully attend to the needs of each individual in that group because there are too many of them. So instead, you get a pyramidal dynamic of people focusing at the top of that massed pile. You get the needs of a few being attended to at the cost of the many. Then people lose the social glue that keeps them together as integrated social units. They lose the personal glue that binds them to each other as individuals of a group that truly care about each other. Once human society became pyramidalized, its social structure-glue changed: its form changed... Its functions changed.

Once human communities increased beyond the optimum number of 25 to 30 individuals: this forever changed the level of intimacy between people in any one group. The simple process of accumulation and segmentation destroyed social harmony. Once you split up people into the segmented, conflicting affiliations and identities: you end up destroying cooperation inside these social bodies. There is no choice in this matter: the conditions of your social circumstances determine how and why you function, and also how and why your life is structured. To assume that whatever condition you happen to exist in is normal or that no other possible condition could be better, is absurd. But that is exactly how people regard their own social structures, cultures and societies. The practical structure for any human community comes from the practical way it must function. Form follows function and vice versa. For any human society or community to become humane... to develop, evolve and change humanely: there cannot be any rape. There cannot be any abuse or neglect of infants or children. There cannot be any abuse or neglect of any of the members: period. This means there cannot be any secrecy at all. This means you must create a totally open society. A society with no taboos, no secrets, no fear, no hate, no envy, no greed. There can be individual privacy. Only in the context of the individual not doing any harm to anyone else including themselves.

Just how do you do that? This question should be exactly what makes living fun and a challenge... it should be exactly what all the creativity of our human potential, and all of our problem-solving abilities should be used for.

The Power of Myth

The Myth of the Taj Mahal: is about a great Mogul Emperor named Akbar who purportedly so loved one paramour consort of his: that he built the most beautiful palace in the world for her, in her honor; because he was so much in love with her.

That is pure fucking bullshit. What he built was a mausoleum. He built it after she died. He did not build her one fucking thing while she was alive. It took 20,000 slaves: 20 years to build it. He hired artisans from all over the known world at that time.

She was supposed to have asked for this mausoleum as her last dying request. Bullshit. Akbar was already addicted to palace-building before she died. He spent most of his life, his wealth, his fortune and his time: doing nothing but building palaces. What the fuck does building a nice-looking mausoleum have to do with loving a living-breathing woman? Nothing. Is this supposed to be true love? The love of building mausoleums where no living human is supposed to live? And wasting the wealth of an entire Empire on it?

If he had truly loved her: he would have grieved. He would have wept. He would have been shattered. In fact he was distraught. He was so distraught: he did not show his face in public for two whole days. Gosh. What a deep grieving. So he spent twenty years building this asinine, useless nice-looking mausoleum; instead of a palace where people could actually live in. Oh how romantic. How sickening. How has he been whitewashed? The entire story that is told about the Taj Mahal is a lie. Akbar was a fat idiot. He was as stupid as they come. As long as this female courtesan of his was alive: she managed to give him some good advice on how to rule his Empire. After she died: he let his entire Empire go to wrack and ruin: in favor of his obsession with glorifying death. Trying to make her death beautiful: by building a beautiful glorified coffin.

The fairytale Myth is that this Mausoleum was evidence of a living love. Is total crap. He never loved her. He just missed her enough to grieve for two days. He was in love with death; not with her. Look at how this Myth has been used. It has been used to sell the obscene lying false idea that: Emperors are actually capable of feeling love.

Look at how it has been used. This Myth has been used to whitewash all Oriental Rulers and all Kings and all Emperors. Look at how the masses flock to this mausoleum and gape and fantasize how much more beautiful she must have been than her... mausoleum- er palace, er grave, er coffin. That palace is a temple to death. It was built to worship DEATH. Not love.

Why are nearly all porcelain sinks used to wash something in: White? We whitewash food. We whitewash plates. We whitewash clothes. We are obsessed with whitewashing everything we eat and wear. Terrified of the tiniest speck of dirt. We whitewash ourselves in white porcelain tubs and shower stalls. We are obsessed with ritually cleansing ourselves of our own filth everyday. If we do not do it: we stink to high heaven. We whitewash our cars. We whitewash everything we touch before we touch it. We whitewash what we say before we say it. We whitewash what we think before we think it. We whitewash what we do before we do it.

Why?

Why are these Myths and legends of the past so powerful? Why are they rightfully considered to be even more powerful than the lives of living humans; who have been sacrificed in preserving these cultural traditions and rituals of Myth and legend for thousands of years?

Because they do not tell the truth of what actually happened. What actually happened was so horrible: that in order to preserve any tiny part of our past: humans had to whitewash the actual horror and evil out of human memory; by adding little white lies, fairy tales, excuses, deceptions, distortions to the actual truth... and burying, and hiding and ignoring and deflecting and denying the actual, horrible truth. In order to preserve their past: they had to make it palatable enough for new generations to swallow.

They were forced to invent whitewashed versions of the truth. They were forced to lie. Otherwise they could not have lived with themselves. They were forced to take people who were evil, and whitewash them and glorify them into fictional Mythical characters, who were supposed to be good. They were forced to lie about their own lives. They were forced to create stories where Good triumphed over evil.

And these completely fictional tales, these white lies. These fictional people created out of the evil horrible human monsters who actually lived; who were evil and not good at all. Became more powerful, than all of the horrible evils of their culture. These idealized fictionalized lies: of Good being more powerful than evil.

Even though they were, and still are complete, utter lies; they were, and still are more powerful than all the evil humans living in the world today, and all of the evil humans who ever lived.

This is why certain parts of human culture are more powerful than all the living humans and all the humans ever born put together. Simply because mixed up with all of the lies of History and Legend, and Myth: there are token ideas that are Good instead of Evil. And the Power of Good, the power of Poverty, the Power of Giving, the Power of Love, the Power of Passion, the Power of Laughter, the Power of Fun... is so Powerful. that even though they have all been poisoned by millions of tons of Evil and lies. They are still truer, and more worth preserving: than all the lives of living humans, and all the lives of humans ever born.

Once humans separate lies from the actual Truth. Once humans separate true Good from true Evil: Once humans do that. They will not need any poisoned lying Myths mixing up Good with tons of filthy Evil. Then Good will become so Powerful: it will destroy all Evil, and all Evil humans. And there will be no reason to dig up and understand all of the insane ways we have lied to ourselves to hide from the painfilled horror of the history of our true past.

Human cultures survive and are preserved purely because every generation of human babies and children and adults have been brainwashed into believing that their culture, their religion, their God, is more Good, more right, more honest, more loving, more passionate, than the cultures and religions of other people.

This is one basic twisted, insane way humans invented to excuse themselves for killing each other for 60,000 years. That is one insane, twisted reason Modern Cro-Magnons used in killing their brothers the Neanderthals... who meandered aimlessly about; during the periods between the growth of the huge Ice Sheets; where they were needed and used by Nature.

Our direct ancestors saw them as a useless species simply because they did not have a 12,000 year perspective on the cycles of Nature. Our direct ancestors became corrupted with the arrogance of their own tools. Thinking that whatever they could do with their killing tools was right. Whatever they toiled-at with tools was right. That is still the unspoken religion of human civilization. That toiling with tools is unquestioningly Good. This religious belief is a complete fucking LIE.

This lie is exposed in every origin-Myth of every human culture, and religion ever born. In order to justify this complete black LIE. Every Myth was forced to stick in tiny white lies. Every Myth was forced to stick in tiny ideas that are Good instead of Evil. And it has been only because of these teeny, tiny token ideas of invented, untrue, whitewashed Good: that any culture or religion has survived and triumphed longer than others. While at the same time, it has been only because of the use of tools and killing; that humans have survived at all, and not gone completely extinct.

Why has Nature endured this for so long? Why were humans and tools allowed to survive for so long? Because Nature is just as guilty of practicing what humans practice. Because hidden inside all of human evil, and human tool-use, there are seeds of human Good, and ideas of Good, that cannot be destroyed.

Everything else in human Myth and culture except Good.. all the evil lies and evil Myths...all the evil practices and traditions: are designed to go extinct. They will go extinct. They have been going extinct.

They are going extinct.

But the ideas of Good will not go extinct. They refuse to die out. Even in the middle of the worst horrors of human mass-killing and rape and hate: the ideas of Good refuse to die out.

One idea that is pure Evil. Is the idea of no guilt. The idea of total irresponsibility. The idea of any human being guiltless. Is already dying out. All of the dominant master races that tried to rule the Earth as guiltless, irresponsible, killing monsters have been wiped off of this Earth. And any human culture, or Nation, or Race, or Religion that tries to bring back this idea of humans being guiltless; is destined to be wiped off the face of this Earth just as fast and just as quickly as Hitler's Master Race idea was wiped out. And just as fast, if not more quickly that Stalin's idea of guiltless Power, and Mao Tse Tsung's Power was wiped off the face of this Earth. Now: no single human dares to try to set themselves up as single. Omniscient Emperor, or Ruler that can do no wrong any more. Only in the smallest of Nations do these temporary obscene evil power mongers still exist; where such corrupt over-centralized power is tolerated by the bigger, more powerful Nations because they act as their obedient puppets. But let any one of them try to thumb their nose at the rest of capitalistic power structure; and they are systematically hounded into obedience or oblivion. All the larger more powerful nations today: operate under the cover of oligarchies and cliques. Any large Nation that had a single all-powerful dictator in the last century: has been toppled. The Age of Kings is gone. The age of Emperors is over. Bush's weak attempt to bring back an oligarchy of corporate power in America is already crumbling as fast as they are making the worst mistakes possible, and exposing their own arrogance to their own people so badly; that not even the most ignorant redneck can stomach the smug wealth and arrogant righteousness of their greed any more.

The critical awareness of human beings has been evolving and developing. There are too many tons of comparative information. Too many lies are being exposed. Human awareness is expanding. Not because of civilization. But in spite of it. It is expanding due to the very lies all human Myth had to invent when they were first created. This is one reason why some human Myths are so powerful.

History and Myth

Is there a difference between Myth and History? If you study history: you will see how it turns into Myth. If you study Myth: you will see how it turns into History. Myth is nothing more than a cover up of history. History is a nothing more than the myths re-enacted. Both are created to cover-up the actual truth. History is written and recorded to cover up the truth. Out of the cover-ups of History... Myths arise that expose the hidden truths covered up by History, while... History arises to expose the hidden cover-ups of Myths. They are distorted reflections of each other: both of them, filled with lies and truths. To understand them: you have to understand how they work reflectively. How each one bounces off the other: and how each one bounces off in a new direction from the other. They work by the Principle and the tactic of the Deflection, the Principle of Avoidance or the Dynamic of Deflection. Myths and History are Deflections from the actual truth, they are an Avoidance of the actual truth: they work by the Deflection and Avoidance. Whenever there is any truth: it is avoided. Whenever anything can be learned: it is avoided. Whenever any experience can be used to learn and change: it is avoided.

Both expose how the human subconscious avoids life-experience by deflection, and how it deflects away from facing painful truths by avoidance. But when you put both History and myth together, then can you see how they affect each other and evolve by bouncing off each other as both deflect to avoid the truth, and avoid to deflect the truth....

If you study Western civilization: beginning with the first Western city: Ur, and Babylon, and Assyria, and Egypt and Persia and the Ionian coast and Greece: you will find the same myths cropping up in different cultures at different times in different places... In fact, they are all the same. They are so similar: that they should be categorized by the main myth or historical idea. Not by culture or when or where they crop up.

For starters: Nature gods. Spirits of Nature are non-existent. Gods are monsters: they are genetic freaks. As if different species interbred with each other, or radioactive mutations of DNA merging the different species together were possible.

Then there is the recurring atrocity of killing babies and children.

Then there is the recurring insanity of rage expressed as blind hate and destruction

Then there is the recurring fear of dying and the history and legacy cowardice and lying to save yourself, with a few exceptions. Like Aesop: who was executed for the crime of being politically incorrect: which is: daring to speak the correct truth.

Then there is the theme of accumulating corruption being covered up by the lies of the first myths, that are exposed by Scientific research of pre-history, and the lies of ancient written history, only to be exposed by the truths of Myths, only to be covered up by the lies of Myths, only to be exposed by the truths of History, and so-on.

Then there is the theme of recurring attempts to wash away this corruption. Then there is the corruption of the attempts to wash away corruption. As corruption keeps on getting more cunning and more numerous and accumulates more and more... until the attempts to destroy corruption become last stabs... growing more infrequent and fainter as time goes on. Until the attempt to wash away corruption becomes the whitewashing of corruption simply because civilized corruption never stops accumulating. More corruption accumulates than it can be washed away: until you are not wiping your ass free of shit anymore: you are merely smearing the shit over your ass; because there is more of it than your toilet paper can handle.

The story of Western Myth and History is a story of burying the truth, and the truth re-surfacing, and being buried and covered up and hidden all over again, and being buried all over again.... While the accumulating layers civilized corruption keep on accumulating.

Then there is the story of humans inventing better ways to kill with. Finding better tools to kill with. This story is called tool innovation. It is also called war: they are the same story.

Recurring unlearned patterns and themes repeating themselves over and over again for thousands of years without stop.

Midas and Croesus

A perfect example of how myth and history bounce off against each other: are Midas, and Croesus. It is also a perfect example of humans refusing to learn from the mistakes of the past. King Midas of myth mixes with King Croesus of history. Croesus was the richest most corrupt King of that Age. Midas' Father was supposed to be the Famous mythical King Gordius; who created the Gordian Knot. Croesus' father was Alyattes II who was the first King to oppress the Ionian Greek cities and create an Empire that became richer than the older Empires of Babylon and Egypt. Why? Because the Ionian Greeks were independent robbers and traders and businessmen living on a coast where they could spread out their search for profitable goods to trade. They were the first Capitalist entrepreneurs of the Mediterranean. They had factories, textiles, shops; they made things like pottery weaving cloth metals jewelry.

The myth goes that King Gordius was chosen by accident because he was driving a cart pulled by an ass. The asses who elected him did not realize they had sealed their fate. Before Gordius became King: they robbed each other on a basis of equal greed and equal hate... carefully deflecting their hate away from the people who actually deserved it onto their neighbors, their fellow brothers. It was a vicious cycle of the avoiding and avoidance and deflection of envy, hate and fear. It was a cultural recycling of hate and fear that became worse and worse and worse. Until it became so bad: they all agreed it had gone too far. So then they elected a KING: and by that mistake, by that blunder: then even the equality of the deflection and avoidance of envy hate and fear on a basis of equality was destroyed. Instead... envy, hate and fear began to accumulate. It was no longer recycled back into the community. It was suppressed and oppressed and repressed and amassed... into an ever-growing pyramidal repressed mass of knotted of hate and corruption and suppressed evil. The older the land became, the longer there was a King that ruled them: the larger the Gordian Knot grew, the worse their suppressed greed grew... Until their culture spawned a mythic King called Midas: who decided that the only way to find happiness, was if everything he touched: could turn into gold; which almost killed him and his daughter.

Coincidentally: King Croesus also had a daughter: who was mistaken for someone else, and killed in the siege of Sardis: the mute son of King Croesus cried out when the soldiers went to murder him: saying he was the King and not to kill him. Croesus made peace treaties and alliances with all of the powerful political forces of the Middle East. He allied with Amasis of Egypt... The richest King in all the world allying himself with a Pharaoh named Amasis. Whose Egyptian name was Ahmoses II. A Jewish Pharaoh that amassed his own wealth. Whose Royal name was He who searches for Re. Ammon Ra's spiritual legacy cropping up all over again.

The mother of King Gordius was supposed to be the mother of all the Greek Gods... literally. So this oldest most evil undead entity has birthed all the evil myths that have infested the Mid East lo these 3,000 years. All Gods are evil. And the human spawn of the mother of all Gods... was Gordius. So the greediest stupidest man in creation could be used as a pawn to by these gods to corrupt the clean living Cyrus, and lead the Persians down into a dissolute culture and lifestyle of ease and wealth as fast as possible. The mother of Gordius was the mother of all Greek Myth. The Greeks stole this myth from an earlier Lydian Myth, and made it sacred. They made the concept of insane riches a sacred Greek myth, they turned the concept of greed into a sacred worshipped Greek ideal... even though the actual truth of the older, original myth refused to die out, and continued to scream at them that all wealth and gold and riches were pure evil. The myth of Midas is still alive to this day: it is 3,000 years old. It will never die out until the evil it is screaming against dies out.

And the conflicting accounts of the fate of the King of Lydia: either burned at the stake, or allowed to live and by his evil corrupt influence upon Cyrus: corrupting the hardy Persians so fast: they became an effete elite so weak and so unhealthy: they stopped living as warriors altogether in one generation. An entire culture of thousands of years of hardship and nomadic culture: destroyed by the success of Cyrus and his evil advisor: the King of Lydia. The Delphic Oracle he sent gold to: betraying him, the oracle at Parnassus... just like the cart of Gordius that signified the evil coming into the land: the evil of accumulation, the evil of putting things into a cart, into a gourd. Parnassus... Negative Asses; Parked in front of the oracle: expecting that legalized bribery of the Gods with Gold will give them a favorable prediction.

What is the Gordian Knot? What does the Gordian knot mean? It means: Do NOT Accumulate. Do NOT use gourds. Do NOT kill. It means that the gourd is a KNOT, it is Negative, it is a killing not, it is a not that kills. All negativity kills. It means that the gourd Kills. The GOURD Is A Negative Killing NOT. Gourd-NOT Gourd-KNOT not 'Gordian' the essence of the Gourd is Accumulation. Accumulation is Negative, it is Killing, it is a killing negative dynamic. Gord and Gourd are pronounced exactly the same: until over the ages the 'u' was deleted from the word 'gourd' into 'gord'... until the meaning became depersonalized, until all humanity became so obsessed with accumulation that the meaning applied to the entire human race: not just one individual. Until the dynamic of the gourd became a universal human sin and evil that was screaming out all humanity; not individually, but as an entire species.

Who was the King of Lydia? He was the King of Liars. He was the cunning evil wormtongue who whispered his cunning lies into Cyrus' ears. Read the cunning, twisted, rationalizations and suggestions he used to corrupt and poison Cyrus with. They are all lies, couched in cunning hyperboles and sneaky suggestions. He was the King of Lying. He was the King of Destructive Lying. He was A Destructive LYing liar who lied on his couch and did nothing but wallow in his wealth and corruption and spout cunning destructive lies. He was the first example of the God Bacchus, the God Dionysus. He spent his entire life doing nothing but enjoying effete music and drinking wine, and living his entire life as an inebriated drunken sot. He gave this, his living example to the highest class of rulers to follow. All the Greeks and Romans followed his living example for thousands of years. His idea of worldly success, Croesus' idea of success: as doing nothing but lying on a couch eating yourself fat and listening to somebody else playing upon a lyre... a liar...making artificial bird sounds... listening to lies, sung by professional liar called court musicians, telling you how great and wonderful you are, and how great and wonderful all the killers and corrupt mass murderers of your ancestors were. This: being the most desired form of human existence possible. What was the life philosophy of the King of Lydia? It can be found in his name: LYDIA Lie: Y (Why) Destructive? I, A Reason.

Why are lies destructive? I King of Lydia, King of all lying Destructive liars: am a living example of why lies are destructive. I am a reason, a living reason for you to see and understand why lies are destructive. I have lied on a couch all my life and spoken cunning lies all my life. My life: the life of the King of Lydia; was a complete destructive lie, it was a destructive of ease and sloth: lying-about all day, it was my destructive doing nothing, it was my destructive hesitation, it was my destructive fear, it was my destructive safety, it was my destructive wealth and my destructive privilege that destroyed my life and turned me from a King into a slave.

One reason lies are destructive is that they make you do nothing. They prevent you from acting. The reason the King of Lydia lost the war against Cyrus was because he listened to lies, he wanted to believe lies, he paid for lies to be told him, he believed in his own lies, and did nothing when he should have acted. And when he acted it was too late, and at the worst time possible. And then he tried to cover up his mistakes and errors by spouting more rationalized lies and every time Cyrus asked his opinion about something: he gave the most cunning evil rationalized poisonous lie he could think of...

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1450

Who was Croesus? Croesus was a Crow. He was the blackest most evil coward of the bird realm. He was a Crow's nest of accumulated corruption. He was an accumulator of shiny baubles and shiny things made of gold. He was Kroisus: the killing crow, the krazed insane Kroses, the King of all Greek Gods. The Greeks stole his idea of evil, and turned him into a Greek myth. Gordius became Midas. Midas became Croesus. Kroisus became Krosus. And the Gordian Knot became a growing snarl of tangled evil. Xander tried to destroy the truth of the meaning of the Gordian Knot. He destroyed it. But he could not destroy the true meaning of the Knot. Xander himself died at an early age: killed by his own insane rage and insane megalomania, his insane drive to butcher and killed finally poisoned by his own Companions: who could not allow him to act out the insanity of crowning himself Pharaoh of Egypt and become a living God to an entire Nation of Egyptians. Crow: Energy; See us: get it? Crow Energy sees us humans. Birds are continually watching what humans are doing.

If you explore the origins of greed in western history, if you trace human greed back to its earliest western mythic origins... you will find that it goes back to the mother of all Greek Gods and to the father of all Greek Gods. Midas and Croesus... the oldest Western mixture of historical fact and myth: traced back to the mother and father of all Greek Gods. What does this tell you about Western civilization?

The human subconscious does not lie. As humans become more corrupt: the symptoms of their increasing corruption show up in their cultures. For instance: rich people were buried with masks of gold over their faces to signify how their lust for gold had blinded them when they were alive, Northern European cultures buried people with gold coins over their eyes and in their mouths: to signify how they had been blinded by their hunger for gold. Now, people have their dead bodies cremated instead of buried: to signify that they are going to a burning hell for the corruption they practiced all their lives. In ancient times: cremation was only for the rich and powerful. Only mass murderers like Alexander the Great and Kings and Emperors were given this subconscious symptom of cultural status; signifying that they were going to hell after they died for the sins they committed when they were alive. Then human culture became so corrupt that the Christian religion promised burning hell for all of its followers unless they became true believers and allowed themselves to be brainwashed completely. But they did not actually cremate the Christian masses. Because the masses were not actually responsible for the evils they committed. Their society had brainwashed them into it. The human subconscious is very direct. It avoids symbols whenever possible. There is a direct correlation between the level of corruption and greed of living people, and their choosing to be either cremated or buried. Greed for food, greed for gold, greed for distraction...whatever that addictive greed is: it is a symptom of spiritual emptiness. It exposes how living humans are driven to fill up their inner emptiness with unhealthy, artificial, sick things.

In ancient times: only the most evil Emperors and Kings wore the royal color called purple. The reason they were the only ones who wore this color was because they were the only people whose souls were drenched in the blood of their countless victims: they were the only mass murders responsible for so much bloodletting: that their auras took on the color of blood. Their souls were red with the guilt of the blood of untold innocent people. They wore the color of blood: subconsciously screaming out their own evilness, screaming out for other humans to see they were so covered in blood, and such murderous butchers: that their very clothes were dyed the color of blood. The reason the word 'dye' is used stain clothes, is because the sin of killing stained their souls and their hands. They were a class of red handed murderers. Their hands were stained with the blood of their victims dying. Their clothes were the color of blood from their dying victims. The human subconscious does not lie. The words stain and die and blood and purple and crimson are not coincidences. The crime, the sin of killing and bloodletting is crim... son Crime-sin... Crimson. The crime, the sin of killing your own son: staining your hands forever with his blood.

1450

The human subconscious does not lie: the apple that Eve gave Adam was evil. The apple she gave him was obvious.... She gave him the apple roundness of her breasts, she gave him the apple roundness of her buttocks: she gave him the knowledge of feeling her apples, she gave him carnal knowledge. It was not knowledge gained from wisdom: it was the lowest, stupidest knowledge of all: the carnal knowledge of physical lust: the greedy grasping of a man's hands for a woman's breasts and buttocks... That was the evil that Eve gave Adam. The carnal lust of her physical body.

Without any love, or understanding, or wisdom or tenderness or closeness or intimacy. Just filthy, dirty, sex: just fucking. This was why they were both driven out of the garden of Eden... This was why they suddenly knew shame. This was how and why human shame was first created. By a wanton shameless woman; tempting a man lusting to grasp her flesh. By a man wallowing in the basest, lowest, most foul instincts he has. By a man allowing himself to be ruled and controlled by his lowest basest instincts instead of his humanity. Neither of them were innocent. Both of them were guilty of despoiling the purity of the Garden of Eden with their lust, and were driven out, and have ever since then, been ashamed of their sexual genitals, and practiced the sin of physical lust in secret.

Progress and Retrogression

What can humans list and point to, as a progression or betterment?

Only one thing.

The development and innovation of inventing better Tools used to kill with.

Nothing else.

What can humans list and point to as a reverse of progress, a retrogression?

Millions of things. All of them blocking true progress.. The entire dynamic of human life, human culture, human history, human intelligence, human spirituality, human education, human maturity, human development, human creativity, human ethics, human morals, human religion, human politics, etc; is and are, and continue to be: endless repeated cycles of blocked regressions that are corrupted and poisoned at their roots before can work themselves out fully...

You cannot have progression without the pendulum of cycles reversing its swing unless you switch to a higher level of healthier more powerful energy. You cannot progress without regressing. You cannot go forward unless you go back. The trouble is... human civilization has been nothing else BUT going back. Modern Western civilization has been trying to go backward without going forward for 12,000 fucking years. Getting nowhere; and creating ever worsening, newer vicious cycles as it continues to ignore that it is not only repeating the past, it is going farther back into the past. Energy works like the energy of a pendulum. It is based upon dynamic balance. All energy dynamics are based upon dynamic equality. Since civilization is a one-sided dynamic of accumulation: it has no dynamic equality. The misperception of civilization progressing instead of perceiving the actual truth: that it is going in the reverse direction of progress; is a standard hypocrisy of civilized humans. As everything is getting worse: they say it is getting better. As more and more problems accumulate: they are pushed under the carpet and ignored and not dealt with; until the entire flimsy structure collapses. And instead of admitting that they were going in the wrong direction, they start doing the exact same fucking dumb things they did before. Over and over and over again ad vomit nausea.

The Information Age.

For the first time in human history: people can access nearly all of the actual pertinent data, all of the actual facts that civilization has managed to accumulate thus far through the Internet...

New information is continually being discovered and added to this mass of information. New theories and data are re-making everything you ever learned, and accepted as true...

If you think this book is revolutionary. If you think the facts stated in this book destroy everything you thought you knew and believed about human civilization: consider this...

The Website: http://www.jamestown-ri.info/geological\_history.htm... developed an entire 4 ½ Billion year history of tectonic plate migration and activity... Just so the residents of Rhode Island would know where the earth they own... originally came from.

The web site details the entire story of tectonic collisions, and centralizations, and colonizing of smaller island tectonic plates, as they traveled from one large continent to the other, as they collided onto bigger plates, as they centralized into huge major continents...

This entire 4 ½ billion year-old story of moving-nomadic tectonic plates...

Match exactly to the last detail... the exact nomadic history of human colonization into North America.

The entire history of the colonization of Europeans into North America...

Matches exactly... the colonization of the tectonic plates over periods of hundreds of millions of years... from Europe to America

It matches the history of European colonization of North America so precisely

It is frightening, it is eery, it is wondrous. It is strange. It is inexplicable...

Every colony... From the Dutch, to the French, to the Spanish, to the English... The exact areas they colonized in North America... Matches the tectonic movement of tectonic plates from Europe to North America exactly...

The movement of the human Dutch from Europe to North America: matches the tectonic movement of the Dutch tectonic plate to North America

The movement of the human French colony matches the tectonic movement of the French tectonic plate to North America.

The movement of the human English colonies: match the tectonic movement of the English tectonic plate.

The Path of Splitness
Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1453

The movement of the human Spanish colonizers: match the tectonic movement of the Spanish tectonic plate.

The African slave movement over to America: matches the exact tectonic movement of the African tectonic plate.

The collisions between all these colonizing tectonic plates... match exactly the human collisions and wars that happened in North America, between these human colonies.

There is no difference between the history of the migration of plate tectonics in North America, and the history of the human colonization of North America. They happened in the exact same order, in the same exact geographic areas. In the same relative amounts of time. The only difference is that one took millions of years to happen, and the other took hundreds of years to happen.

How can human history over a period of mere hundreds of years... duplicate exactly... the history of tectonic plates that happened millions of years ago in the past?

What is the meaning of all this repetition?

What is the difference between colonizing Tectonic plates and colonizing Teutonic humans?

Does this mean that nomadic humans have been manipulated to duplicate the movements of tectonic plates? Does this mean that tectonic intelligence is so superior to human intelligence: that it can manipulate humans to exactly duplicate its own history??

How can the tectonic history of tectonic movement and tectonic colonization... exactly match the history of human European colonization into North America?

Why does human Teutonic colonization; match Geological Tectonic colonization so exactly, that reading the history of tectonic migration is like re-reading the history of human migration?

Why does the entire history of Germany being welded into a single Nation from a hodge-podge of small duchies and kingdoms match the small bits of tectonic plates that eventually welded themselves into the one giant tectonic plate that is Germany?

If you do not believe this. Study this eery set of incredible matching coincidences, and see how the time-line of tectonic migration and collision... compressed down... matches exactly the time-line series of human historical colonization and collisions of North America and Europe... and then study the history of all plate tectonics, and the history of all human migration and colonization... and see if they do not match each other exactly to that last one. They match exactly... The only difference is, that tectonic colonization is measured in millions of years: and human colonization is measured in hundreds of years.

Why ... is the FIRST centralized tectonic super-continent ever formed on Earth named UR... ?? After the name of first Western civilized city to be built on Earth? Why do the names of all of the tectonic plates match the ethnic names of the civilized humans who colonized them? There are too many eery coincidences. Something is going on which we are not aware of. There are far stranger things yet to be discovered than have been written in this book

1453

Why do the people of Rhode Island want to know where their island came from? Because it rode on the back of tectonic plates to get to the New World. It didn't row, it got a free ride, Hoping for a better landfall. As all people who come there, full of Hope.

The Cunning of evil

This is how cunning evil is.

It turned equality into the worst inequality possible; it turned quality into mass mediocre shit. Instead of the lowest common denominator being raised: mass robber baron culture has turned the idea of the lowest common denominator being lowered into a religion. It has turned this idea into a culturally accepted norm. It has made it normal for people to sink lower instead of rising higher. It has normalized the idea of buying cheaper. It has invented the idea that cheaper is better. Lazier is better. Stupider is better, more obnoxious is better, etc.

The criminalization of human culture by criminal robber baron culture comes from criminals. It comes from enemies of human society. It comes from people who hate human society. It comes from humans who hate other humans. It comes from evil intentions. It comes from selfishness. It comes from greed. It comes from killing. It comes from accumulation. It comes from separation. It comes from segmentation. It comes from social insularity. It comes from tribal ethics. It comes from obsolete tribal cultures.

Evil robber baron culture came from stone age human cultures that acted criminally against each other by attacking each other and robbing each other and stealing and killing and raping each other as a mass insanity of cultural norms.

The entire history of human society. The entire history of humans is a history of a criminal species that found it could get away with criminal behavior by using tools and killing other animals; without being punished for it. The dominance of the human species on earth: is a dominance that was aped by apes who watched other criminal predatory killers getting away with killing all other animals... and getting away with it because they were bigger, faster, more cunning, more sneaky, more intelligent, more cowardly.

The history of the human species is a logical progression of evil negative dynamics that began with the birth of volcanoes. The entire evil dynamic of upward mobility as born with the birth of the dynamics of upwardly mobile volcanoes. The history of all life on this planet, the entire 4 billion year history life on earth... culminating in the human species overpopulating earth with 6.7 billion unnecessary useless, destructive, selfish, blind, brainwashed apes called humans: is an organic history that is causally logical. Every evolution of life causally created and produced the next logical evolution of life right up to humans building poisonous nuclear reactors that produce so much poisonous waste products that cannot be used: the earth will be poisoned with out nuclear waste for hundreds of millions of years before they rot and decompose enough to stop killing all living things on contact with it.

The history of our food tells our story. Apes used fire to kill animals by burning down entire forests... then human apes began traditionally burning all their food before they ate it. Then humans began killing living things in greater and greater numbers... using better and better killing implements called tools. Then they raised living things only to kill them in even greater numbers. Called agriculture. Then they not only killed what they ate: they had to crush it first: like olives, grains, grapes. Then they had to let what they crushed rot before they burned it; and called it bread. Then they began drinking rotten blood instead of water. Called wine. Then they watered down the blood because it was too strong. Then they had to let the blood rot even more, and used this rotted blood called vinegar in other food. Then they vomited up what they ate because it was too rich. Then Italians flattened the killed-crushed-rotted grain into a Pizza and strewed its surface with bits of Roman vomit. Then they whitewashed the red blood they drank and drank only white blood, called white wine. Then that was not enough, so they started drinking black blood... beverages like coffee, chocolate, cocoa, Coke. At first they just killed and burned their food before they ate it. Then that was not enough. Then that was not enough: they had to eat more death called dead meat. They had to add minerals to it: like salt. Then that was not enough: they had to fatten the animals they killed so they could eat pure fat to numb their bodies with and become fat themselves... insulating all of their bodies so they would not feel how sick they were. Then that was not enough: they had to add oil to the meat. Then that was not enough: they had to add spices to it, like pepper. Then that was not enough so they had to add more blood to it: like catsup. Then that was not enough... They had to put blood on vegetables like French fries. Then that was not enough: they had to eat more red things like blood red tomatoes and raspberries and strawberries and rare, raw, red meat. Then they had to make the food deader and deader: by steaming it, and boiling it and baking it and drying it and cutting it up, and canning it and processing it and... etc, etc, etc.

What is agriculture? It is the culture of a greed. It is A GREED CULTURE of the 'I'; the human ego. It is the culture of a grip: the spiritual grip that tools had and still have over the human soul. The love of tools. Agriculture is a greed culture. The greed of accumulating food in huge, mass quantities. It is the culture of all humans agreeing to be greedy.

The history of human food is the history of a poisonous species... progressively poisoning itself with more and more toxic poisons: so its outer poisonous sickness matches its inner poisonous sickness. The history of human food is the layered accumulation of poison, the layered accumulation of more and more artificial processes to make the food deader and deader... as the species as it killed more and more, and became deader and deader, and sicker and sicker.

This does not have to be. If people educate themselves about the actual truth of who they are and where they came from and why they were created, and how energy works: humans can change evil into good. Simply by learning the truth. And admitting it. And facing the truth: no matter how unpleasant or inconvenient the actual truth is.

Evil hides inside good.
Dead things hide inside living things

The dead center of a living cell hides inside the living cell
The dead center of a tree hides inside the living surface of a tree.
Dead teeth hide behind living lips and inside living gums
Bacteria that kill living organisms hide inside living organisms

Killers hide inside the living cultures they kill Kings hide inside castles, inside the living communities they suck from and kill.

EVIL HIDES INSIDE GOOD

Evil is NOT OBVIOUS. Evil does not stand OUTSIDE good things and say:

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1456

‘Look at me! I am evil!’

Whenever it does that: it is attacked and destroyed. Whenever evil becomes so arrogant and so stupid that it thinks it can FLAUNT itself. It is DESTROYED.

But that is no longer true...

Now: mass media is in the vanguard of selling the most evil propaganda as a normal form of brainwashing. Mass media has created mass madness. Mass insanity. Mass media is a Mass distortion of everything.

What is the accumulated cultural evolved result of 12,000 years of civilization?

The result is that civilization has managed to brainwash humans for 12,000 years: that the only persona, the only ones who are allowed to be angry: are their Gods and Kings. Only your God is allowed to be angry at you. Only authority figures like your mother or father or police, or judges, or leaders are allowed to be angry at all. The only person allowed to be angry in Germany was Hitler. The only one allowed to be angry in Judaism is their God. The only one allowed to be angry in Christianity is God. The only ones allowed to rant angrily in public are your politicians and your preachers.

The ruled masses are not allowed to feel or express anger. Why should a God feel anger? Anger is a human emotion. The trouble is: you cannot effectively rule and manipulate 7 billion suckers if they are angry at you. Kings could not rule people who were angry at them.

So the human emotion of anger has become forbidden to 7 billion human slaves. Gosh: what a coincidence. Everyone who does not have power is not allowed to be angry... get it? Only a person with a gun is allowed to be angry. Gosh: so that is why angry people pick up a gun and start killing other people. They equate anger with killing. Well: they are correct. Insane angry psychotic madmen have been killing innocent people for 12,000 years and getting away with it. That is civilization. Until now: Now: anger, hate and killing has been replaced with the corruptions of weak self-indulgence, laziness, weakness, fear, neuroses, greed and consumerism.

The IDEA... that anger is the exclusive right and privilege of Kings and Queens and emperors, and Gods... was destroyed by the French Revolution. The lowest, poorest French peasants got angry at their King and killed him. Then they started killing all of the rich aristocrats: and voila! Instantly, in a few short decades... after hundreds of years of impoverishment and starvation... France was transformed from a nation of starving poor peasants into a nation of wealthy middle class burghers. Why? Simply because the rich aristocrats who had been sucking 99.9 % of all the wealth of the nation into their coffers had been killed off. Simply because the lower classes had discovered that they had the right to be angry and show their anger.

What did the peasants learn from this? Nothing. Instead of realizing that the aristocratic culture was the reason for their ills: they copied it and tried to turn themselves into a nation of greedy selfish aristocrats. Just as the Americans tried to turn themselves into the greediest English landlords on earth...

What was the insane conclusion that they came to? They finally realized killing and hate were not sane... instead they thought: ‘Let’s everybody! Become rich! Let us all! Become rich like the rich

1456

Kings once were!

Unfortunately: for one person to be rich: one thousand other people have to be poor. Instead of realizing this: the culture of Capitalist consumerism was born. Today: millions of rich Westerners exist only because there are billions of poor people on this earth. But who cares about this inconvenient fact? Nobody.

All it takes to destroy the corruption of civilization is to understand how it does not work and refrain from doing what does not work. Selfish self indulgence and greed does not work.

Mere anger does work. Action works. Anger wedded with action works. Communicating your anger honestly to other people in person and honestly works. Showing and expressing your emotions honestly works.

Civilization has isolate people into their own selfish little worlds of pursuing their own little selfish desires and goals. It has isolated all educated people by using the computer to make sure nobody gets together socially anymore to discuss or get angry about anything anymore. It has destroyed all human ability to create their own communities and cultures. Humanity now sucks off the mass culture of the mass-producing corporations that keep the masses ignorant and brainwashed. The idea has been created that you can choose which culture you want... inside the commercial capitalism of course: there is no other basic culture anymore except greed and selfishness.

Only when humans are educated and enlightened and expand their awareness enough to realize that ALL of civilization is the problem... ALL of civilization is corrupt and evil... ALL of what they have been taught is a lie.... ALL of what they are inside is killing them.... ALL of what they are inside is poisoning them... can humans finally understand that to change a system; you have to change ALL of it: not just one tiny incremental teeny bit of it.

This book is written to get people angry. This book is written to get people to act. It is not written for armchair idiots to read as an exercise in mental detachment. Humans have not yet learned how to cooperate intelligently with each other. They can only agree with each other when they do nothing.. The only thing they can agree on is greed: "Agreed? Yes. I agreed with you: you agreed with me: greed is good. Generosity is bad. Hate is good: love is bad." That is effect civilization has had upon people.

In Conclusion

So after the twelve thousand years of civilized progress: where has all this gotten us? What is the new, improved state of human existence: compared to twelve thousand years ago when there was no progress at all: just humans with a simple tool kit?

We are supposed to have steadily been improving for twelve thousand years. So; gosh... we must be really improved by now.

Hmmm. Lets see. 12,000 years ago, there were only a few hundred thousand of us. Today: most of the world is overrun by too many of us. Today: we have 1 billion children slowly starving to death. Today we have thousands more cities... all of them, bigger than Rome ever was during its heyday. We have a population of 4 billion starving poor; which never existed even during the Roman Empire.

In September of 2001: the twin towers of the World Trade Center in New York were attacked and destroyed...or to put it more understandably: the richest city in the world was attacked by a false flag operation, and then Bush and the CIA and the pentagon and Cheney and the Media and Ken Lay and all the rich industrial robber barons who were going to face trial for their corruption; used this to terrorize all the world and blamed it on a former CIA dupe living in a cave in Afghanistan. The richest, most powerful, most arrogant Nation in the world invented an enemy because it had to; in order to continue its agenda of empire and oppression. So it invented the fiction of the richest, most powerful government on Earth being attacked by a few poor people.

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1458

Western civilization went into complete shock. It went into a state of pure terror. And then it projected that state back out onto the Moslem world. And labeled these Moslem who are still living in the Mideast: as terrorists. As a result 2 Moslem nations were bombed and attacked by the West.

The handful of CIA operatives called Al Qaeda have been labeled as dangerous, powerful terrorists; capable of toppling the most powerful government in the world. Why? Many reasons. Because the United States government has been using the tactic of false flag operation ever since the Boston Tea Party in order to go to war. Because the rich profit from war. Because that is how the ruling class keep themselves entrenched in power. Because the ruling class needs to keep the billions of poor misinformed and brainwashed. Because as long as a ruling class can point at an outer enemy: the oppressed and controlled slaves: the masses will not look at their own rulers as the enemy which they in fact are. Because the media of the world is now almost completely controlled by the power mongers of the world. Because the news Media makes money out of fear. Because civilized humans are so sick that they actually like being scared and terrorized. Because Americans are addicted to fear and suck on fear mongers and hate mongers. Because most sick humans live in fear. Because rulers know how to manipulate the masses by using fear. Because America needs an enemy. Because without an enemy: America would have to actually look at their own corrupt system.

The Western World is now supposed to be living in a continual state of terror from a tiny handful of unknown, Moslem radicals fighting for political freedom of their own Nations. The United States secretary of defense: Donald Rumsfeld after four years of trying to fight global terrorism... continually made press announcements; that the entire Western World should be even more terrified now that ever was before. Even though as he well knows: the people that attacked the Twin Towers were CIA operatives. We are now supposed to live in a continual state of fear for the rest of our lives because of this false flag operation.

After all: if people were not afraid of terrorists: Rumsfeld wouldn't have a job, now: would he? If America didn't have enemies: he'd be out of a job and out of power and not have his hundreds of millions of dollars. When the USSR collapsed due to its own inner corruption. Immediately after that: the American Government went on a desperate search for imaginary enemies. And found former allies they had been arming and helping to fight the USSR just dandy. Every invented enemy of America was once a former ally they sold weapons-to, taught and trained them how to kill, screwed them over, and betrayed and used and tossed them away. The American government has been in the business of creating its own enemies ever since it was founded. Since the American masses are not interested in creating enemies, they have to work at it real hard.

Do you think the starving children in Uganda and Ethiopia are now suddenly living in an increased, heightened state of fear and terror from Al Qaeda terrorists?

Do you think that the two billion poor people of India and China are trembling in fear because their villages or towns, or cities might be attacked or bombed by Al Qaeda terrorists?

1458

Do you think that four billion poor people on Earth are afraid of being attacked by Moslem terrorists?

No. The poor people of this Earth do not live in terror of Al Qaeda. They already live in misery and squalor and ignorance and oppression and fear... but they do not live in a continual unidentifiable terror of being attacked by a few unknown fanatics. They live in terror of their own governments.

Only the richest people of the West are supposed to live in fear of these invented terrorists.... But they are precisely the ones who know that Moslems did not do it. They are the ones who did it. And sold it to the rest of America and the world using their corporate media.

The actual truth is: if you are poor. You should fear the terrorism of the rich. If you are rich. You have nothing to fear except the terrorism of your own class. If there were no rich people: there would not be any fucking terrorism in the first fucking place. And there would not be any poor people either.

But terrorism of the rich is much more sly. It is cunning. It is so devious and so cowardly: it is done in secret: it is done incrementally; it is done a teeny bit at a time so it won't be noticed. The terrorism of the rich is sold to the masses as something that is GOOD for them, as something that is progressive, as something that is easier, better, faster, greedier, etc. The entire hypocrisy of the rich is based upon the assumption that whatever they do to the poor: is for their own good. The entire lie the masses of the poor have swallowed is that the rich never do what is good themselves: they only do what is good for the whole, for the majority, etc.

The terrorism of the rich is creating evil, sick cultures that become progressively sicker and more evil. The entire world of corrupted affluent humans that implicitly believe in the unspoken sanctity of the normality of their own greed and selfishness are terrified of poor people.

Only one attack in four years. And the U.S. Secretary of Defense still says that the entire world should all live in an even worse state of fear and terror than ever before. The most powerful Nation on Earth should exist in a perpetual state of panic. While the rest of the world should help them fight this invisible invented enemy... that nobody can find. Western governments have become a laughingstock. Their entire military might of the West cannot fight a few radical Moslems. Hell... they can't even find them. They can only fight the poorest freedom fighters in the poorest countries and invade these countries and pretend that they are invading these poor countries 'for their own good' as it were, and killing the 'insurgents' who dare to try to fight to create their own government in their own land while labeling them as terrorists and linking them to the CIA operatives who planned and executed the attack onto the Twin Towers.

And this is what 12,000 years of civilized progress has now attained? Achieved? Triumphant? Pitting poor people in the world against poor people so rich people can profit? Now it is not just one brother fighting and killing one brother. It is hundreds killing hundreds, thousands killing thousands, millions killing millions....like in the First and Second World Wars. Now it is billions of humans living in fear of being bombed and killed by invented enemies. Oh. I see. So that is the wonder and glory of civilization.

Western Civilization's reaction to the 9-11 attack was the equivalent of an elephant jumping one mile up in the air... in reaction to being touched by a feather.

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1460

The entire civilized world overreacted so insanely to this one incident... that they unwittingly exposed their own guilty consciences by doing so. They revealed their own weakness. The entire civilized world lost. It lost face. It lost control. It lost all perspective. It lost its sanity. Rich People nearly shat their pants. They were seeing two huge tall buildings being destroyed in front of their eyes... they were seeing the end of the world as they knew it. The entire televised world watched as fascinated spectators...to a portent of coming change in the world and became terribly troubled and deeply terrified for no good apparent reason.

Americans are blind to their own culture. Affluent Western Civilized people are blind to the meaning of this attack. They are culturally blind to what this attack means. They do not even know what the attack was on. The reason why these two buildings were attacked is complex. The rich establishment's agenda for power and wealth and greed is so insanely self-destructive: it did not realize that it was destroying its own image as a force for good, and that the demolition of the Twin Towers of greed and secrecy would come back to haunt them.

The word itself; 'greed' has almost been expunged from the vocabulary of modern affluent civilized societies. All of the thousands of articles, and stories and comments trying to understand why this stunning catastrophe happened at all... fail to give a satisfactory explanation. The word greed itself; does not appear in any attempted explanation.

Except minimally. In passing. As a general, meaningless lip-service mention of a general, vague dynamic; that is intangible and cannot be measured and thus is not important.

The US Government is responsible for destroying more budding democracies than any former oppressive Empire ever did. Only now it is doing it under the disguise, the guise of lies, by wrapping the flag of democracy around its evil, and claiming evil to be good.

Romans sacked and destroyed cities. They taxed people into starvation. They enslaved them... they stole all the wealth of the Western World and poured it into one city, and said to the world:

'Look! We are civilizing you! We are helping you! We are enlightening you! We bring Roman civilization to you! This is a boon! We are good!'

The Western Allies bombed Germany and Japan to the ground. Then they came in and helped the people rebuild their society into cultural-political-capitalist duplicates of their own society. And told them...

'See! We are the good guys! We are helping you! We are bringing Western civilization to you!... Er... after we bombed you to your knees and destroyed your country, yes... but, er... that was necessary!'

Bush bombed Afghanistan and Iraq into rubble . Then he came in with his oil corporations... and said he would help re-build the bombed-out Nations. Which he did not. But this time... the people did not cooperate with the Western Powers. The façade of bombing an entire nation into rubble while claiming to be 'helping them' and bringing them good things like 'democracy' is wearing thin.

Now the Western Media has a problem... they are trying to sell soldiers and tanks to the people they invade as 'da good guys'. But people are not buying it anymore. In bombed-out Nations where millions

1460

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1461

are starving and poor and nobody is trying to help them re-build to become carbon copies of Western capitalist culture. They are not buying the bullshit of:

‘See? Western civilization is good! We are helping you! Er... first we bombed your schools and hospitals... and now you have no running water and no electricity. Yes, er... we bombed you back to the stone age. But now! We are going to help you! Cooperate with us!’

Er... we still have to kill innocent civilians and bomb villages and buildings with innocent people inside them... we are not helping you re-build anything at all. We are only sucking all of your natural resources out of your country as fast as we can.... But we are: ‘da good guys! We are western civilization!! Western civilization is good! It is enlightened! It is modern! We have atomic bombs! We are good! It’s the ones who do not have atomic bombs are evil! The ones who want to get atomic bombs and attack us are evil! We are not evil! We only bomb poor nations that do not have atomic bombs!’

What is the difference between the fucking stinking hypocrisy that Ancient Rome spouted and sold to its masses, and the modern Media bullshit that is being sold to Western viewers by all the western powers? What is the difference between what Ancient Rome did and what Bush is doing right now? None.

America thought it had found the formula for success in 2nd World War. First invade a land: bomb it into submission: and then turn around and help your enemy to become your ally. It was only because of the Marshal plan. The one decent thing General Marshal did after the war that he managed to push through Congress. And his name is forgotten. He himself was the most selfless, most humble general of all the allied armies. If it had not been for him: Europe would have hated the US forever, and never recovered from its complete devastation. The destroyed European nations aped the Americans and smiled their fake smiles and did whatever they had to in order to survive.

It did not work in Vietnam. It did not work in Panama. It did not work in Libya. It did not work in Iraq. It is not working in Afghanistan... But that does not matter. They are still doing it. Just as Rome did not learn: America is not learning from the past either.

White western European culture is based upon the insane concept of nationality. The idea that the identity of an abstract thing called a Nation is more important than the living human beings: has been the reason why humans kill each other. The idea that an abstract concept or an abstract identity is more important than a living human being... the valuing of abstraction over the value of human life: is the insane result of civilization.

What was it in Stalin’s day? In Hitler’s day? What is European Civilization today? Follow your leaders! Only the leaders are back in Rome: letting their Roaming armies... their super-mobile troops, with modern transport systems do their killing for them. While the Roman mob sits back in Rome on their well-fed asses letting the professional Armies represent Rome for them... being distracted by bread and circuses, er pizza and TV... is this getting confusing for you? The basic tactics and principles are not changed.

‘Obey authority! Do what you are told! Do not question authority!’

Are educated western civilized people doing anything different from what Ancient Romans did? Is any Western person challenging Western Authority today? No. They are supporting it and trying to 1461

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1462

rationalize it. They do not understand the basic insanity of it; simply because they have no perspective and no understanding of human history.

In the Middle Ages: Romans ran screaming through their supposedly blessed sacred city: chased by invading hordes from Northern Europe. They were sacked, butchered and raped. They did not understand why they were being attacked. The brainwashed rabble of Roma had been brainwashed by the propaganda of their rulers for hundreds of years. They had no idea that outside of their sacred, glorious city... that millions of poor humans hated them and had hated them ever since their armies had come into their lands and raped, sacked, pillaged, and butchered them, and taxed them into poverty, and oppressed them, and humiliated them, and spat upon them as things that were not even human. They had no idea that this had been going on for hundreds of years. Just as the Germans had no idea that their glorious leader and government had committed systematic butchery on a scale never before heard of.

Ancient Romans practiced killing and butchery on a mass scale for hundreds of years. Even to the point of lining its most traveled tourist road with literally thousands of crucified, dying slaves from one of their many, onerous, boring, repetitive, slave revolts... I mean; how important is the butchery of a thirty thousand slaves; to the mighty Roman Empire, that vanquished entire foreign nations and armies? Roman slave revolts are almost never mentioned in modern history books. Because they were never mentioned by Romans. The only slave revolt that was ever mentioned was the one that almost toppled Rome: all the others were covered up and never spoken of. Just as insurrection and revolt and mutiny is never mentioned in the armed forces: it is never spoken of.. Just as all the peasant revolts and uprisings are never mentioned in history. Just as the uprising of the Paris Commune is never mentioned in French history books. Just like Shay's rebellion is never mentioned in American history books. All revolts against the present status quo and all revolts that ever happened against what the present status quo stands for: are carefully deleted from all history books. They are minimalized, scoffed at, ridiculed, etc. until they disappear and fade away.

Did the screaming Populi of Rome understand why they were conquered and sacked, and killed for hundreds of years... after their city had stopped butchering and raping other lands and peoples for a thousand years? After Rome's power waned? Do humans ever try to achieve a wider-greater perspective and understanding of their own lives beyond their own noses?

Do Americans understand why the 9:11 was orchestrated? No. As far as Americans are concerned: Their rulers are good. Greed is good. What is the ethical justification of their own Good, that Americans have been forced to take in order to defend their own Nation?

All who are not greedy are wrong
All who are poor are wrong
All who are rich are right
All who are rich are important
All who are poor don't matter.

So bomb the poorest nations, and kill them. Just find a good excuse first... or later... it doesn't really matter. As long as you are not the one being killed and bombed, who cares? Not you... that's for damn sure.

For rich Romans who traveled from Rome to Capua: the thousands of slaves crucified and dying on that tourist road was normal. They thought that this would teach the slaves not to revolt again. It worked....

1462

Temporarily. The slave revolts lessened.

And then... they were invaded and killed by people who were not slaves. They were invaded by Northern tribes that hated the idea of personal slaves. And they killed the slaves along with the Roman owners.

Now America thinks that if they attack poor terrorists... it will teach them never to try it again. Terrorism never works. No matter who does it. Blind Violence only begets more blind violence. The entire insane story of 12,000 years of the glory of civilization, is the story of human killers upping the ante of reflected, and re-reflected hate, violence, brutality, killing and insanity. The historical facts are there for all to see and read. The warnings have all been given. Humans ignore these signs. After the First World War... instantly on it's heels came a second one. Then came the atom bomb... then came a nuclear build-up. Then finally... the idea of another World War became a problem... hmmm. No atomic world war ... darn... if we could only... oh heck. Lets just pile up as many atomic bombs as a nuclear proliferation, let's accumulate as many atomic bombs as possible; just to scare people with. Yup. What will be the next high-point of human destructiveness? So the poor people had no atomic bombs. Darn... so the neo-cons invented the story that the poor used the rich people's own planes against them... darn. So now the gulled rich people want to bomb all the poor nations into rubble, and make the top class even moiré powerful while destroying the civil liberties of the poor. Now they have their invented good excuse... darn. So they can't do it with atomic bombs, so they use artillery with depleted uranium heads to poison the land, and the soldiers, their own soldiers, etc... just to be more viciously deadly as better killers... darn.

Terrorism only sparks worse terrorism flashed back at the perpetrators. American greed has terrorized and dominated the world for over eighty years now. But all the world is mystified by 9-11. Nobody even understands why it happened, or what this foreboding, menacing harbinger means.

All human conflict throughout the ages is based on the human refusal to change, grow or become more aware. This universal resistance is due to both the nature of our awareness, and civilization. Civilized human awareness is segmentive. Civilization is segmentive. By our very training, we do not think-perceive connectively. For humans, connections are not important: separations are. However, if the conditions of our existence are changed; we can also change the nature of our awareness and vice versa. It is the larger condition of civilization that prevents humans from changing the nature of their awareness. Dynamically, everything that is regarded as bad-evil-destructive-imbalanced is created by one-sided splitting... by separation without connection. Every wall, every kind of separation which creates an insulated, isolated indifference to others, to the natural world around us, also creates non-awareness and destroys any Sense Of Wonder.

When criminals are brought to justice, they are prosecuted for their actions. But humans refuse to consider the causality of their own lives, the connectivity of all our actions. We do not examine the criminal's parents, upbringing, schooling, background, role models, community and peers. Rather than attempt to focus upon any root problems, rather than have any human focus; we look only at crisis situations segmentally, with a narrow isolated focus. Living in the self-created reality of abstraction, the principle of absolute separation between things is strictly adhered to. What is written, what is law, what is legal, what is a cultural norm, what is normality, what is abstractively valued, what is pyramidally worshiped, is far more important than any search for the connections between things. In this process the actual truth is almost never considered; the actual connectiveness of the Universe we exist-in is never considered. The result? A Capitalistic culture systematically terrorizing billions of poor... projecting its own terror of poor people upon a handful of poor, militant radicals: and labeling them as terrorists.

The fact that the US's policy against the Moslems of Saudi Arabia is only one small piece of the US policy towards the Middle East, and towards all Moslem Nations and Leaders, and all the Moslem masses, and all the non-Moslem poor of the World; was not incorporated into their stated reasons for attacking the Twin Towers, the Pentagon, and the White House. That is how short sighted and selfish and exclusive enemies of the rich are. The proof of humans valuing abstraction over actuality is obvious. Throughout human history, people have chosen to kill living humans in order to preserve their own dead cultures. The priority is obvious.

The dead are more important than the living.
Value dead things over living things.
Live by Abstraction: not Actuality.
Live by separations: not connectiveness.
Live mainly by tool-values: not by human-values.

For the past 10,000 years, the same dynamic of imbalanced splitting has been going on. The link between the tool and the tool-brain has spawned through its nearly instantaneous feedback; a creative explosion of human abstraction, tools and technology. We now sit upon the apex of this causal accumulation; completely unaware of its origins, its true history, its true dynamic, its true consequences, and its true significance. The question of human existence: how a human should live, is only dealt with on a day-to-day basis without any contextual perspective or understanding of our past. For 10,000 years the human race has refused to look at itself critically. Reacting to mere convenience and necessity, it has remained within its own shells of normality, its own self-created abstractive realities, its own cultures, its own religions, its own languages, its own groups, tribes and communities, Nations.

Creating the inability to discern between actuality and abstraction: creating imaginary linear abstract lines and boundaries. While ignoring and violating every actual boundary on Earth. Creating cities, writing, religion, art, war, inequity, social imbalance, conflict, oppression and misery. Creating the split between nomadic and settled cultures; and ultimately the dominance of settled civilization, wiping out all forms of nomadic human existence. Leaving our genetic Sense Of Pure Wonder with almost no opportunity to develop, grow or be used.

Instead, the tool-brain is used almost exclusively to create civilization by enslaving the human animal as an addicted-blind tool-user. The tool has created civilization as the only way to guarantee the preservation and perpetuation of its own use and existence. Within industrialized nations, the trend is obvious. Humans need more and more machines, more cars and more computers each year just in order to exist... Just to function. We are constantly being loaded down with as many gizmos and gadgets as we can possibly handle. We actually need a machine just to get around; that costs tens of thousands of dollars, and whose cost represents more than the entire life earnings of a third world worker. But none of this technology makes us any happier. Humans are merely tool enablers. Why? Because we cannot control our own tool-use. We are addicted to it. Why is it: that in order to shut down a compute: you have to press the start button first, and then be interrogated by your own machine? As if you are committing some unknown sin for even the thought of trying to shut off a sacred device like a computer...? Computers should be left on, running all day, running the world of humans. They should never be turned off.

The basic inequity of tool slavery is obvious. The more tools, gizmos and gadgets that people use in order to live, the more money they need to buy them, the greedier they get, the harder they have to work: the more tools they have to make and use, the more complex their life becomes, the more tool-crazed they become, the more gizmos and gadgets they need, the more dehumanized they become, the greedier they get. Until we no longer have enough time to eat or sleep... never mind be human! What is the no. 1 complaint of all Americans? Not enough sleep: because everyone is too busy working being a tool-slave.. What is the fastest growing consumer market? Fast food: so people can eat on the go... because they have no time to eat or be human in their frantic tool-busyness to perform all of their mechanical chores and functions each day.

The digital divide has become a euphemistic term describing the inequality between those who have technology and those who do not. Technology has become synonymous with wealth. As this vicious cycle of over-intensive tool-use goes on, the gulf between the haves and the have-nots continues to widen. Those people with technology end up needing hundreds of thousands of dollars just to live in their industrialized societies: while the billions of have-nots are left with pennies.

The catch-22 of over-intensive tool-use; is that the more tool tools you use, the more time you have to spend in maintaining them: the more complex your life becomes. The more money you have to spend to be able to afford them, the richer you need to be to acquire these tools, the more time you need to spend working. Then pile on the increased time you spend using these gizmos, and you end up becoming enslaved to the same tools that you think are freeing you from some kind of slavery or work... When in fact: all tools do; is to create more work for humans to become more enslaved by them. What point is there in working all your life; just to make it mechanically easier? That is a contradiction in terms. When using more tools only makes your life mechanically easier? When using tools makes you more miserable in every way; except mechanically? Mechanical ease is an oxymoron. The fact is: to whatever degree you own and use a tool: that tool also owns and uses you. The more time and energy you put into owning-using-maintaining-repairing a machine: the stronger the bond between you and that machine becomes. If you spend more of your time with machines than with living people: you will like machines more than living people. If you spend 90% of your time with machines and 10% of your time with living humans: then you will only have 10% of your life to develop your human qualities and potential, and 90% of your life to become more like a machine.

A good example is the computer information industry... it was supposed to revolutionize the enormous waste of creating and using paper documents; and store information into tiny micro chips. The result has been the exact opposite. Instead, the entire world of business is now using ten times more paper than when it was run only with paper documents and no computers. Forests are being cut into at a break-neck speed to feed the western businesses addiction to paper... that almost every natural forest has suffered worse ravages instead of less from the shift from paper documentation... to paper documentation, and computer documentation, and personal printer documentation. Never mind the accompanying explosion of hundreds of copiers and faxes. There are now 100's of millions more printers than there ever were; and are being used in the most incredibly wasteful ways. Simply because it has become too easy to print stuff, and paper has become three times cheaper than it ever was. Now there are millions of amateurs at home using cheap printers improperly; creating hundreds millions of typographical, and clerical and printing errors that wastes paper in untold countless tons. These personal printers malfunction so many times more often than the old more reliable ones, that they produce hundreds of millions of tons of more wasted-misprinted paper that is unusable.

This only means that forests are being cut down three times faster than ever before... thus; artificially lowering the price of paper overnight. This artificially cheap price; hides the actual price the entire world must pay for the destruction of its non-renewable resources. The improvement of technology translates directly into the improvement of our ability to destroy the world around us. Plus; the influx of computers and computer printers around the world; have become yet another way for people to communicate as impersonally as possible.

Who cares if all the virgin forests of the Earth are being raped and cut down ten times faster than ten years ago? As long as they don't cut down the tree in your backyard: do you give a shit? Just recently: film footage showed every sea mammal within 50 miles of a routine military sonar operation... beaching themselves... trying to get out of the water. Most of them died. The heads cut off their dead bodies and sent to Harvard labs; showed that large portions of their brains had been destroyed. They had died in agony. They died insane. They were already brain-dead before their bodies beached themselves. Whales, dolphins, porpoises... All sonar animals for 50 miles around: died.

Just as we humans use most of our brain-processing for visual sight. Sea mammals use most of their brain processing for sonar-sight. If your eyes were seared with a light so intense that it burned through your shut eyelids and seared and burnt every single processing brain cell in your brain that was used for processing visual images: that would roughly be the same degree of brain trauma you would experience, as these sea mammals experienced.

How long has military sonar been used? For 80 years. Human military naval vessels have been maiming and killing sea mammals with sonar-equipped brains: all over the oceans of the world for 80 years.

Did they know they were doing it?

No.

Do they know they are doing it now? Yes.
If they had known they were doing it: would they have stopped?

No.

Do you think governments of the world are going to stop using sonar in their Navies just because of this recent finding?

Recently: all the super-industrialized Nations of the Earth have developed super-silent submarines. Recently: most of their sonar operations are done in close to shore... in their own coastal waters. The exact same areas where most sea mammals of the Earth live and feed and have their babies. Recently: the military sonar of all the navies in the world have been forced to use more powerful sonar operations to detect the presence of other Nation's super-silent submarines in their coastal waters. To defend against surprise submarine missile attacks.

Do you think these navies will stop using their new, more intense sonar systems: just to save a few million lousy whales or dolphins?

As long as these dead mammals are not in their backyard when they return from active duty on a sonar operation: they do not give a shit. That is the insanity of separating yourself from your own deeds.

That is the insanity of one-sided tool-use. That is how intelligent our technology is. That is how insane it is. We only find this out: 80 years later. That we have been killing sea mammals by the thousands due to our improved ways of killing each other. Without even knowing it until now. How many other living things have we killed without knowing it? How many living things are we killing now without knowing it?

Does any newspaper publicize this? Does any mass media alert the public to what is happening? This has been happening for 80 years all over the oceans of the world? Hey. As long as it didn't happen in your backyard. As long as you didn't see it personally: who cares? As far as 7 billion humans are concerned: it never happened. As long as nobody knows about it: It's okay!

The idea of being a tool-slave, is completely alien to civilized humans. In our minds: tools work for us; not the other way around. But the concept of work itself... never even existed before civilization. It was the tool that actually put people to work. Before that; people just lived. Anthropologists have found that primitive foraging societies spend no more than 2-3 hours a day gathering and preparing their food and doing their everyday chores. They did not have to work then, because they did not live in a tool-dominant society. The reason people work today is because they have a huge accumulation of tools to work with. The reason people work, is because the tool dynamic of accumulation forces them to work at accumulating. Because work is the main form of usefulness in all tool-based societies.

No words can begin to describe the limitless harm and corruption spawned by old, dead, dying Cultures, Religions, Empires, Civilizations. Yet supposedly rational, sane people who agree that what was the past is now obsolete; are happy to tolerate this age-old insanity without protest or criticism. The amount of conflict and suffering that is created simply by their tenacious refusal of all old cultures to change, their refusal to die out... As generation after generation suffer their out-of-date, obsolete, sanctified, glorified and worshiped insanities. Hemming in human existence into a non-creative, non-changing pattern of non-questioning deadness and lack of Wonder. Replacing Pure Wonder; with the idiotic pyramidal wonder of worship. So human awareness becomes apex-oriented, and pyramidalized into a frozen non-awareness of all else: except whatever happens to be pyramidally focused-on. Simply by focusing on thing pyramidally: humans have created the multitude of things and ideas, which they worship and value. This pyramidal form of awareness and existence has never been designed to ensure human comfort, happiness, contentment or peace. Except for the lucky few. Except as an avenue, a pathway for more, and more tool-use.

The only basic energy flow of civilization is that of accumulation. This is in direct opposition to all other energy-flow in the Universe. Pile up anything long enough and you will see what happens: huge landslides... Most of what is piled up gets crushed by what is on top of it. You can call that change, but it is a tortuous, incremental, destructive change for most of that accumulation. Only the uppermost layers escape harm. Because this process is so imbalanced: it does not want to change, it cannot change, except destructively for most of its inhabitants. This kind of change is appropriate as part-of a geologic dynamic. But it is not appropriate as a dynamic for living organisms.

Civilization originates from the perceptual fallacy of human reflective separate awareness: finitude. Whatever is supposedly separated from the actual infinity of the Universe must be less than infinite: it must be finite. The entire accumulation of knowledge is based upon finitude. By arbitrarily separating something from the Universe, it automatically becomes finite. All human knowledge and Science is based upon the idea of finite measurement. By arbitrarily creating separations, by segmenting things, by creating abstract lines of absolute separation, humans have compiled vast assortments of measurements, value-systems, hierarchies: all based upon the abstract perception-assumption of absolute separation.

In terms of human awareness: finitude means fear. If you believe that you are a totally separate entity from the rest of Universe, you will fear losing your own separateness. You will fear death. You will fear all kinds of things. You will live in a subconscious condition of continual fear. All forms of unconnected-numbered-isolation: are conditions of fear. Perceptually, this gives human tool users the freedom to do literally anything they want without themselves being personally concerned about the consequences of their actions. Simply because they are not connected to their own fears. On the other hand, the only state of awareness where there is no fear, is Pure Wonder. Pure Wonder has no fear. It cannot fear because it is not in a state of total separation.

It is in a state of an evolving experience, which is constantly changing in an integrated process of dynamic balance. By pyramidally focusing upon only one thing the human tool-brain can remain indefinitely distracted, it can acquire any number of pyramidally-focused obsessions. Its sense of wonder can be segmented into any number of things. But that is not Pure Wonder: it is a bastardization of Wonder. The dynamic of all human pyramidal focus has the same results, the same process. By focusing upon only one thing you must block out all other things. You must take things for granted. You must develop a sense of normality. And the second you stop being focally distracted like a chicken; you must become bored by everything around you that is normal, unchanged, the same-dead. By living in a dead environment of dead things-walls-surfaces-lines-symbols: the result is boredom, dulled, desensitized senses; resulting in an undeveloped, unused, numbed awareness.

The only way to understand civilization and civilized existence is to contextually compare it and evaluate it in relative perspective to other kinds-forms of human existence. This has never been done. Humans have been totally non-critical, non-questioning as to what kind of civilization they exist in. Without any outside perspective, humans will never become able to understand themselves, understand who they are, what they are, why they are. This requires contextual-connective-awareness-perspective-evaluation-comparison. In short, this requires that you exist in a state of Pure Wonder: forever asking questions, curious, aware of everything around you-inside you. The second you take any part of your existence for granted, you have lost the ability to understand it. That is why all human specialization is blind. That is why humans have not yet been able to explain themselves to themselves. As long as humans perceive, are aware-of, identify-with, are connected-to separations instead of connections they will remain slaves to their own tool-brains and their own tools.

The only comparison we have is history. But history is so full of lies; it is a joke. Unless you do the comparisons critically, and look for what is unspoken, and never mentioned. When you study what humans actually did; and compare it to what was written about them.... The obvious lies and the sweeping of all truth under the carpet becomes so overwhelmingly obvious: that if you read too much, if you find out too many hidden truths... all of civilized history will nauseate you so much that you will barely be able to study it anymore... Because you will know even before you uncover the unseen, obscene horrors of what actually happened, that everything that is accepted as gospel, every conventional telling is a complete filthy lie.

Civilization has never benefited the majority of humans. Its pyramidal structure has always benefited the few at the cost of the many. But even this statement is inaccurate. Civilization has never benefited humans; period. It has only benefited tools and machines. Rich or poor, educated or not, privileged or powerless: no civilized human has ever lived as they were genetically designed to live. We have no true experience, knowledge or history of any other form of human existence except the one we live in today.

Only by developing a non-pyramidal form of human existence will we ever be able to compare the present quality of our lives and evaluate it to see if this is the kind of life we should be living.

Life-energy is based upon the dynamically balanced split of connection and separation in dynamically balanced cycles of regeneration. Tool-energy is based upon the imbalanced splitting of separation only, with little, or no connection. One dynamic continually accumulates creating an imbalance, while the other remains balanced: the result is obvious. With the advent of tool-use, all life-energy has diminished, while all tool-energy has increased. The fact remains that humans exist only in order to create and use tools. As a non-contributing species on this planet; that is the only useful function they serve beyond their own existence. The one-sided tool-dynamic of manipulation-separation evolved: creating the perception of separateness: creating reflective fear, creating language-culture-civilization.

Whatever humans can separate without connecting; they will. Whatever humans can pyramidalize; they do; regardless if it is good or bad, or if it works or doesn't work. Rather than valuing the living process of being creative, they value the dead products of creativity and attach hierarchical values to these dead things. In all aspects of civilized human existence; this tool dynamic is dominant. But the price of this tool-dominant awareness is the loss of all other human potential-growth-change-awareness never being developed, never being explored, never evolving.

So we now have a vicious cycle of human abstractive evolutionary tool-development: tool-use, pyramidal focus, the human tool-brain, language, abstraction, culture, abstractive reality, and normality, de-sensitization of awareness. The path of this evolution is obvious: ever since humans have emerged they have become more tool-like and less human-like. You cannot be humanly creative, or develop your humanity if you spend most of your time and energy using and making tools.

In the 4 billion-year course of life on this planet: we are the only animals that create waste that cannot be cyclically regenerated and recycled organically. As a result: this waste keeps on accumulating. But so much of this waste is toxic and poisonous to all living things: that in the next century, this one form of imbalanced human accumulation alone may finally tip the balance between Life and death on this planet. In other words: the human animal may succeed in destroying the very system that supports it, and in doing so: destroy itself in the process.

However, all of this depends upon an infinitely complex dynamic of balance. And we will never be able to forecast just how or when this balance will be tipped in the other direction. Nor will we even admit it or face it, unless it actually reaches crisis proportions for us personally: not for the rest of the earth. How much toxic waste does it take to poison an entire planet? We do not know. The balance point may already be past any hope of reversal. The accumulating inertia of this growing imbalance may already be too great to stop. The present chain reactions of all the interconnected factors may be signaling the first trickle of a later inevitable landslide of near-total destruction. We do not know.

The idea of dynamic balance does not exist as merely an abstract idea: it is patently obvious in the study of all living organisms just how complex and subtle their organic balance is. Biologists try to study the mechanisms of cell functions, how they work, how they are related to other functions. And they find these incredibly delicate balances where if just one teeny, tiny thing goes askew: there are catastrophic results to the entire organism with far-reaching consequences. The root causes of everything from balding to cancer can be found in the incredibly delicate balances and imbalances of our cellular makeup. Over and over: biology shows us the difference between the self-healing dynamic of our bodies, of all living things, and the destructive dynamic of illness, disease, imbalances, of foreign bodies and elements disrupting this incredibly delicate organic balance. Whatever we do, however we live: influences this balance. The relative balance or health of any living organism is a dynamic so complex, so interconnected to all things that we can never hope to uncover all of its mysteries.

Yet, we do not treat this balance delicately or sensitively. We treat it just as a bunch of mechanical functions. We try to isolate each function and study it as if it were a cog in a machine. And by this scientific, specialized, mechanical focus: we blind ourselves to the interconnectedness of it all. The ultimate result is the absurdity of trying to study life as if it were a machine to be taken apart and put back together. Like a separate course in biology that has nothing to do with your own body, or what you eat, or how you live. The result of people treating their own bodies as machines, treating other people as machines, treating living organisms as valueless hindrances to the spread of technology and civilization, treating ecosystems as dumping grounds for industrial waste and pollution... This entire mindset, this way of living: shows no respect for any form of life except ourselves. And even there it shows disrespect for our own health, our own well-being and our own happiness.

Why? Because we live in a structure so split-up that we are completely insulated from the consequences of our actions. We adhere to the religions of greed and selfishness. We abstain from all painful truths. We bury our fears in secrecy until they fester into hatred: we hide from our own cowardice until we become habitual liars.

As long as the conditions of wealth and poverty exist, as long as the conditions of power and powerlessness exist, as long as the basic pyramidal structure of civilization exists: the conditions of fear-hate-envy-greed; will continue to exist inside human souls. That is why at the first uprising, at the first upheaval of this unnatural pyramidal social order: the very same peon that meekly bows to his rich landlord may be the first to murder him in his bed and burn down his house. And the property owners know this. That is why they build their high walls. That is why they make sure that the poor remain powerless and crushed beneath their oppression. Rich people have to live behind bars and fences in order to keep the poor out. They live in caged, barred exclusive compounds: much like animals in a barred fenced zoo. They are inmates of their own exclusive cages, victims of their own special privileges. In order to live like this; you must turn a blind eye and heart and mind to all the suffering going on around you in the world. You must become so emotionally, mentally selective in your awareness, that you end up literally not seeing most of the world around you.

The correlation between human happiness and social equity is obvious: Nations with the highest living standard; also have the most equal distribution of wealth. Such as Denmark or Sweden. These are also the Nations with the smallest populations, and a zero population growth. In other words: their pyramidal inequality is less than that of other Nations: because they were fortunate by becoming industrialized earlier than other Nations; and thereby gained a permanent crucial historical advantage. They have learned to be slightly less greedy and accumulate slightly less than other industrialized Nations.

The idea that people can somehow become more loving, happier, more balanced, without changing the fundamental structure of their societies into a more balanced, happier, loving condition: the idea of instituting personal change; without social-environmental change... is nothing more than a half-baked, half-assed hypocrisy: a Myth that is given lip service throughout the world. All the self-help books in the world will not change society: unless personal change is equally balanced by social change. The only kind of change that will improve the condition of all people is one that is integrated: not incremental.

If this planet begins dying, if most of its species go extinct: so what? People living safely inside artificial cities have no knowledge of this and are kept ignorant of it. They have no interest in whether oceans are dying, or whether entire forests and ecosystems are being destroyed outside of their safe, insulated, concrete havens. Whatever happens to this Earth: barely impinges on human civilized existence, since it has totally cut itself off from the rest of life on this planet. For civilized humans: nothing is more important than the insulated civilization they exist inside. Nature is a secondary luxury; to be ignored as much as possible. All living organisms are secondary to civilization. Everything humans do to this planet is justified by the rationalization of "the greater good"... meaning for the greater good of civilization: not the planet we live on, or any other living things. This total blind denial of logic and common sense, this total lack in any greater awareness and context makes every single human evaluation of our present situation fatally flawed. You cannot separate human civilization from the planet it exists on. You cannot separate humans from all other living things and retain a sane perspective on your own life and the Universe you exist in.

People are only interested in rationalizing and justifying their own actions; regardless of the actual truth. Any kind of self-questioning does not exist as a topic in polite conversation. It does not even exist as an option. Nobody asks why anymore about anything: simply because human society is so hopelessly chaotic that no sense can be made of it in the first place. There are no clear demonstrable paths of causality that can be easily traced and understood. People's motives lie unexplored inside their subconscious; people's actions are done behind closed doors. There is no justice, no fairness, no balance to it. What each person does and why they do it is a locked enigma inside each damaged soul. Asking why-how is a pointless exercise in futility. Accountability is a joke. The siege mentality of ego-fear-advantage rules. So people throw up their hands at such questions and issues and scoff at those who even bring them up. Anything outside their own normality is irrelevant.

But: the direction in which all of this is going, the impetus of it all, what is giving it so much thrust: that at least humans can understand and recognize. The basic issue and choice we can understand. Whether humans value living things more, or dead things more. The choice is that simple: life or death. What do we worship more? The pyramids of Egypt, the dead humans that built them, or the billions of living humans who are in need everywhere on this earth? Whom do we worship more? The dead Egyptians of the past, or the living poor of the present? Humans are always glorified and worshipped more after they are dead. Why do humans insist on continually piling up dead things and worshipping them? Why do we worship the legacy of the dead past over and above the living present? Especially when it is precisely that legacy which keeps us trapped and frozen inside our own non-awareness?

If any small group of people tried to live by civilized ideas and values: they would go extinct and die out. A perfect example of this is the TV show: Survivor; where a small group is put into a natural environment and pitted against each other for a prize of one million dollars. The slow elimination of people by ostracism: thinning down the group until only one person is left... Teaches morally and ethically, that in order to survive inside civilization: you must betray-lie-deceive-backstab-connive, do anything in order to win. If people tried to survive like that in the wilderness: they would all end up dead. Yet, this is what popular culture presents as an acceptable form of human behavior, morals and ethics. The show demonstrates that the values of civilization are the very antithesis of human values, human survival and human happiness. There is a similarly arranged show called "the weakest link" where people are subject to public humiliation and arbitrarily dismissed from participation all in the name of pure greed... which is an even closer model of how civilization actually works. In both instances however, there is no use of any rational consistent value-system or method: the outcome is determined by luck, and a host of random factors. Which mirrors exactly the dynamic of civilization. It is no surprise that in any success: actual ability or talent only factors in at about 11% of the entire equation.

Civilization's No.1 priority is keeping tools alive, maintained, oiled, and functioning. Its priority is not keeping humans alive, or even functioning... except to maintain its machines.

And to make more of them than there ever were before.

What is the point in living, if you are only useful to dead things, and of no use to living things? What happens to your culture; if you are only useful to dead things and of no use to other living things?

All other Living Organisms have many, connective functions that are useful to many, many, other living things. All of Life has a useful function, because it is dynamically balanced and designed to function connectively. The only reason the function of Life is useful is because it is connective. You cannot separate usefulness from connectivity. You cannot separate function from purpose, or purpose from meaning, or meaning from usefulness: they are all the same thing. Which is exactly what we humans lack: and blindly search for, and blindly try to create, and blindly need.

The ultimate question of human meaning and usefulness is: what do you want to be... Useful as a tool? Or useful as a human? Do you want to have meaning as a tool? Or as a human? Which do you consider more important? The problem with the context of human meaning and human usefulness is that it has been isolated into a bubble that has no relevancy or connection to the rest of the Universe. For at least 10,000 years, humans have been trying to create useful tools using a value system of tool-usefulness... but never asking any larger questions about their tool-use. Are tools good for the rest of the living organisms on this planet? Do tools produce Love, Honesty, Courage, a Sense Of Wonder or Happiness? Do tools help to create life; or help to destroy it?

Humans refuse to face the fact that you cannot accumulate things forever: that nothing accumulates forever. To try to argue the pros and cons of civilization only as it relates to humans is contextually dishonest. The small benefit gained from it by us, is more than outweighed by the effect of civilization upon the entire planet. You cannot rationally and honestly argue or discuss the merits of civilization without taking into account all of its consequences in the widest possible context.

At present: civilization with its population of 6 ½ billion people is based upon the premise of unlimited growth and unlimited accumulation. Every sane person knows that this is physically impossible. But who inside civilization is willing to be the first to cry halt? What good are a few lone voices against the inertia of 6 billion souls bent on accumulation? What can stop a 10,000-year-old juggernaut from continuing to snowball down its path of growth and accumulation? Everyone shares the same opinion as the man hurtling down from the top of a 10-story building before hitting the pavement... as he cries out to the onlooker standing at the window: 'So far, so good!' The hard fact is that we merely pass on the results of our accumulating greed to the next generation and let them deal with it.

One of the great Crusades of Science and Medicine; is to eradicate human illness and disease; so no human will ever get sick or die prematurely. Not to mention the insane scramble for the secrets of longevity and immortality. But how is it done, and why? By spending billions of dollars on research to find cures for diseases which only rich nations have? While the billions of poor and oppressed are ignored? What they are actually doing is trying to separate rich humanity from all the constraints and balances of Nature and the Universe. The allotment of human resources for any kind of research has always been geared for the benefit of the richest and most powerful. Because humans see the Universe as meaningless and random, they also see human illness as meaningless and random. People do not understand that there is a reason for illness, that there is a reason for every genetic imperfection. But humans do not wish to face these reasons. Instead of trying to find these reasons, instead of seeking them out: they always opt for the quick fix. Instead of trying to balance themselves, instead of trying to find the root causes of illness and imbalance, humans try to rearrange everything else around them except themselves. We refuse to change how we live. We refuse to change our ways. Instead: we want to conquer the Universe and shape it to suit our own short-lived, myopic convenience. We think in our arrogance that our mechanical tools can fix all of our human problems.

The entire concept of having a War on disease; reveals the total and utter corruption of Western Medical Thought.

The idea: that in order to heal something... you need to kill something. Is sick, stupid and insane. That cancer or disease; is something that has to be killed, destroyed. This is precisely why none of these approaches ever work. Except incrementally and ineffectively. There will never be a medical cure for cancer using this approach.

Bone-marrow transplants are the closest medical answer that has been found to be effective. Bone marrow is one of the most powerful life-giving, and self-healing cellular organisms in the human body. It is the marrow of the healthy donor that helps do the healing: not the doctor who puts it there. This is not a technological cure for cancer. It is a failure of technology.

The brutality of this approach is like cutting off a diseased finger; and replacing it with someone else's finger; whose fingers can grow back

However: if the donor finger is rejected by the diseased person's immune system. All of this cutting and replacing becomes useless and pointless. No doctors can ever tell beforehand if it will actually work or not. This is one example of how crude, and stupid, Modern Western Medicine is.

The entire idea of killing death is merely a projective reflection.

Projecting your fear of something by attacking it.
You cannot kill the process of death by killing living cells!
The idea itself is so fucking stupid: it is not worth spitting on.
This way all you do, is create more death.

All you are doing is killing living organisms inside you because you are sick as a totality. As all of you... not just your eating habits. Not just a few of your cells. They have only become cancerous because of how all of you lives, and what all of you eats. So you try to kill a part of yourself; while preserving all your of your old, sick living habits? Instead of healing all of yourself... so there is no need to kill anything. Why? That's too hard. Too revolutionary. Change as little as possible. Yes: that's the answer. Don't change how you live even though how you live gave you cancer. That's the intelligent selective answer, the convenient answer, the illogical answer, the irrational answer, the insane answer, the normal answer the easy answer, the glib answer... Except it answers nothing because it is no answer at all: its simply a mass avoidance of your own self-responsibility for your own health..

In any energy dynamic: from human biological health to forest fires: there is no such thing as an enemy to wage war on: only complex dynamic balances which need to be understood in the widest context possible in order to be able to intelligently deal with them. North American Indians used forest fires in many ways as a tool. When the U.S. Government declared an all-out war on forest fires in the 1920's and 30's; they set themselves up for a backlash of horribly destructive proportions. By allowing the undergrowth of forests to become tinderboxes waiting to ignite: this created much more destruction in the long run, than if they had allowed forest fires to happen naturally instead of fighting Nature. The present result is: they reaped the harvest of their own short sighted, imbalanced, antagonistic attitude towards forest fires... now they are faced with more and bigger forest fires... now they actually understand the dynamics of their past mistakes. But has this made them change their tactics, their policies? No.

Again. All living things, all eco-systems function by a dynamic of positive feedback. Not negative feedback. The attempt to stop negatively forest fires by trying to kill them; only creates more, and worse fires.

The same truth applies to human health: it is the dynamic balances involved that matter, not a myopic fight against something as an enemy. The more human medical idiots try to fight cancer and try to kill it: the more cancer there will be. These dynamic balances extend in ever-widening ripples to include every living thing on this Earth. The only way humans can become healthier and have less disease is by living in healthier environments, having healthier lifestyles, eating healthier foods, having healthier relationships, and doing healthier activities: not by killing things, by nor declaring war on something. Illness and health is a matter of imbalance and balance: not killing. The concept of war, conflict, killing, destruction, as a healing dynamic; is both ludicrous and obscene. Yet that is exactly what people do over and over again to solve, balance or heal anything.

Until we develop our own humanity, expand our awareness as a species...and see how this fundamental principle and dynamic of antagonistic competition which civilization is based on is completely corrupt to the core. Until we can recognize and become aware of how this basic dynamic works as an integral part of everyday civilized existence, we will never be able to solve any of our self-created problems, we will only create far worse and newer problems, imbalances and conflicts called pollution, disease, war, cancer, poverty, greed, power, violence, etc... but because of our narrowly focused awareness and crisis mentality, we only see unconnected things called a 'new war', a 'new' disease, a 'new' kind of cancer, a 'new' affliction of poverty, a 'new' outbreak of violence, a 'new' misuse of power, etc... when it is all based upon one fallacy, one misperception, one basic process: accumulation.

Why should we fund any Crusade that is based upon the fear of death? Why should we give our allegiance and our dollars to any cause whose prime motivation is to kill? These blind Crusades only demonstrate the inability to understand our own suffering. The only way to eliminate human suffering effectively is to deal with the root causes of that suffering. The incremental approach to all human problems and suffering, the crisis-oriented, band-aid approach to all human problems do little to change the basic situation. By continuing in its course of endless accumulation, civilization only worsens the problem of human suffering.

And what for? So 6 ½ billion humans can increase their population to 10 billion? Or 20 Billion? So we can eradicate and destroy every last living plant and animal on this planet? So we can stand shoulder-to-shoulder, packing every square inch of land with human flesh? What's the point in all this? Because human life is supposed to be more sacred than any other kind of life? Even though we could not exist or survive in the first place without all the other kinds of life? Why do civilized humans regard human life as being more sacred than any other kind of life? Fear of death. Fear of separation.

The Path of Splitness
Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1475

So: because we are the only animals on this planet who reflectively fear death; we should project our fear and hate onto all other living things? We should cut ourselves off from all the causal consequences of the Universe; and exist as invulnerable, supernatural Gods? So that no matter what we do to this planet or to ourselves: we never suffer, we never get sick? It don't work dat way.

Where is the sanity in all this? This planet was never designed to support 6 billion humans in the first place.

Science has already found that at least 75% of all human diseases come from the transfer of animal viruses, and those come mostly by contact with domesticated animals. That literally all epidemics are caused by the overpopulation of humans... regardless if it is the overpopulation of cities, or as in the cases of tropical viruses, the overpopulation of the Amazon rainforest by humans, or the overpopulation of the African Congolese jungle... by too many people living in too close quarters to each other; or the overpopulation of domesticated animals who are forced to live in crowded pens and obscene animal prisons and ghettos and gulags. Overpopulation kills! Do we bother about this truth? No!

If humans had never domesticated animals in the first place... if we had never built cities in the first place... if our numbers had never swollen into the billions in the first place... then we would have almost no illnesses to worry about. The planet Earth is already groaning at its seams from our horrific burden on its resources from our overpopulation of it. Yet even as the ship is threatening to burst at its seams and sink: we insist on packing it with more billions of human souls.

There are one billion starving children in the world as this book is being written. Do we want to increase this number, and be proud of it? Why? What for?

Tool-use.
Mindless, one-sided accumulation.
Civilization.

The dynamics of modern civilization can be seen everywhere. Books accumulate. Facts accumulate. Laws accumulate. Regulations accumulate. Bureaucracies accumulate to try to handle the accumulated laws and regulations. Lawyers accumulate wealth by being needed to interpret this chaotic mess of laws and regulations to the ordinary person. And the more everything accumulates, the more unwieldy it gets, the more inequities are created, the more complex things become, the more unmanageable human society becomes. And once any power group, bureaucracy or profession finds its advantageous niche in this blind scramble for affluence, advantage, wealth, power and influence: they fight to the death against all others to keep it.

The result is endless conflict, stress, misery, suffering and unhappiness: simply because we humans have created a pyramidal structure which we have no control over. That structure and the conditions of that structure controls and manipulates us: not the other way around. It trains us into it, it forces us into it, it brainwashes us into it. It ordains that all humans be obsessed with the need to accumulate things, money, wealth, power, knowledge, and never know any true peace or happiness.

In business, a perfect example of the dynamics of tool-use, accumulation and greed, is the phenomenon of Wal-Mart. An international corporation that opens up a new store every two days in the U.S. And plans to speed this up to one-per-day, by 2004. The entire dynamic of tool-use, once it reaches this level becomes an all-consuming spreading cancer of unstoppable, unlimited growth. Such a corporation is designed, built and structured upon the principal of endless growth. Without its continual spread, it would implode: dissolve. Only as long as it grows in this fashion, at this rate, at this speed: can the corporation itself survive. For Wal-Mart: survival means unlimited growth: unlimited accumulation: period. And damn the consequences to the communities it destroys. It is unstoppable. A giant corporation worth billions: the largest employer in America second only to the U.S. Government: it can easily steamroller over any resistance. And why? Simply because it's prime motivation, it's prime carrot, it's prime dynamic is greed-accumulation. Its success is based upon paying its employees starvation wages; thereby giving their stockholders a maximum profit. And in our capitalistic system: money always wins.

1475

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

The effect of pyramidalization is universal. Whether it is the corporatization of business into global outlets like Wal-Mart, The Gap, Starbucks, or the globalized sale of hybrid plant seeds. Be it in the plant world, or the business world, or our globalized media culture, the effect is the same: a destruction of all diversity. The ultimate purpose of civilization is obvious: to make better tools, so we can have more people. So more people can make more tools. Which enables us to have more people. However: nobody cares to point out the absurdity of this, or the irrationality of it, or the cumulative destructive effect.

By its very definition; All Unlimited Growth Is Cancerous:. The definition of a cancerous cell is one that does not stop multiplying. As long as this happens gradually enough for us not to consider it an immediate life-threatening crisis, as long as people do not question their own normality: civilized humans will never try to oppose this basic one-sided process of accumulation. To a civilized human: the idea of not accumulating anything is unthinkable. It is beyond their imagination. It is outside their experience. I can prove this by challenging the reader to try to imagine a life without any sort of accumulation and I guarantee you that your mind will go blank. Because it has never been done: because it has never been even thought of or considered. It goes against everything civilized humans are taught to value or believe. It is a totally alien concept.

Yet in the pure simplicity of this idea lies the only hope for true happiness, the only hope for humanity, and the only hope for this planet. Every problem of human existence can be solved by the conditions of human existence being balanced. And whoever says that these universal problems are only opportunities, can go tell the billions of poor and starving how much opportunity they have to overcome their situation.

If you create a condition of human existence where humans simply do not accumulate: you automatically solve the basic problem of all human misery and unhappiness at its root. World hunger: gone. World poverty: gone. The need for power: gone. The need for wealth: gone. The need for antagonism and competition: gone. How many kinds of human illness would there be, if human population had only accumulated to 6 million instead of 6 billion? How many kinds of disease did we suffer from when our population was sixty thousand instead of six million?

Humans worship the ease that technology affords them. Any kind of difficulty or hardship is viewed as being bad. Of course: it is easier to have machines toil for you rather than you yourself. The irony is that the more humans use tools to free them from the slavery of work, the more these tools enslave humans to work for them. The more gadgets a person owns, the less free time they have. The point is: why live in a social structure where toil-slavery-work is the only form of usefulness... the only currency of human value? Humans cannot conceive of any other kind of social order except the one they already exist in. Yet if you remove the 10,000-year-old condition of accumulation... You are left with a context where accumulation itself has no purpose or value, much less the toil that is necessary to achieve it. The only validity that this accumulation has is the fact of its own accumulation. Merely because it exists does not mean that it is the only way in which humans can live. The idea that we can only survive by accumulating is absurd.

If 30 out of a 100 bears feast royally, while 70 barely subsist or starve; would you say that this species has found their optimal form of existence? Would you consider their species to be successful? The only point in human existence is to become a successful human, just as the only point in the bear's existence is to become a successful bear. In order to become a successful human we must first find out what the human animal actually is. We must first find out how the human animal is actually supposed to live. We were designed to function in a certain way. If we do not function in that designed away then we are not functioning successfully. A bear cannot function successfully by living like a wolf: just as a human animal cannot function successfully by living in a pyramidally-structured environment. Yet, we do know now, that genetically: we were designed to inter-act in small bands of 25 or more: living on a high diversity of different foods, constantly physically active. We were designed to be continually stimulated by traveling through new areas of ever-changing natural beauty. The need to travel, to see new things, is genetically built into us. Today we call it sightseeing, vacationing, tourist travel, exploration. It is how we temporarily relieve the stress from our work-a-day lives. In case you didn't know: we were not put on this Earth to gratify ourselves. We were designed by Nature to do a job.

We were designed to seek out and discover all of the infinite subtleties of Nature in a continual process of adaptive innovation. We were designed to live co-operatively in a high level of mutual support-nurturing-love-intimacy: built-up over long periods of time. We were not designed to live sedentary lifestyles, adopt adversarial roles, compete against each other, work at repetitive mechanical tasks or perform stoop labor. We were not designed to live in permanently settled areas or accumulate things-power-wealth or fame. We were designed to eat a wide variety of food, in a constantly changing diet, from constantly changing ecosystems, while moving through these changing landscapes. We were designed to live in a condition of healthy asceticism, in a state of continual Pure Wonder at all the beauty around us. We were designed to develop our awareness by sensitizing it: not deaden it, suppress it or repress it. We were designed to adapt experientially each day to changing circumstances-conditions-environments-new challenges. We were genetically designed to live in a new and different environment every day of our lives. We were genetically designed to do something new and different every day of our life.

In short: we were designed to live creatively in an environment of endless diversity every second of our entire lives. We were designed to be exposed to the pure, unspoiled beauty of Nature. Living in that beauty' naturally dissolves the human ego into an awareness of Pure Wonder. Once you allow humans to live in the vastness of Nature without the insulating deadness of civilization surrounding them, and allow them to absorb its Pure Beauty... They lose their ego; and develop a Sense of Pure Wonder. The only thing in Nature or the Universe that is to be feared; is our own lack of awareness. That is the basic lesson of survival that we humans have never learned: simply because we use our tools too much. Instead of developing our own human awareness, our own human bodies, our own human hearts, and our own human minds: we developed our own tools instead.

If you did not settle down... nobody could tax you for anything. Without any permanent property, there could be no accumulation of power. If anyone tried to tax you or control you, you could simply go somewhere else. People could just avoid unpleasant places, and avoid unpleasant people. There would be no building-up of animosities and conflicts with neighbors you cannot get along with. There would be no need to work at all.

A neighbor used to be someone who lives within a horse-call of your house, or 'borough'. If you can hear their horses neigh then; you know all is well with them. But that comes from enslaving horses to do our bidding, and building outside corrals as early warning signals in case anyone tried to attack your house at night. Basically, a neighbor is someone you barely hear, and very rarely see. A superficial acquaintance.

If you never settled down: then there would be no need to work; trying to make yourself more comfortable... or safer, or more secure. Then humans could do anything they wanted with their lives. Then they could enjoy an unimaginable freedom that not even the richest among us have today... a freedom free of all the chains that settlements create. Civilization provides us with artificial safety. However, it does not provide challenge. You have to go outside of civilization and climb a mountain for that. Climbing civilized pyramids like the pyramids of power, or status, or wealth does not force you to stretch your limits, it does not challenge all of your abilities.

For at least, over 90,000 years; humans managed to survive and flourish; using a very simple tool kit. It was the simplicity of our tools that kept us so active and on the move. It made everyday life of our lives a continual challenge for us. Such a primitive tool kit guaranteed that survival was never easy; and because of that: boredom, laziness, and all the vices of a sedentary lifestyle were not possible.

The dichotomy between the conditions humans were genetically designed to live under, and the conditions we exist under today: illustrates a simple fact. Since humans stopped being hunter-gatherers; we have not adapted genetically, or experientially, to this new artificial condition called: civilization. We still need to be physically active, we need to be continually challenged, we still need to be continually creative and innovative everyday. We still need the hardship of facing and dealing with Nature with as few tools as possible: not the deadening, repetitive, boring hardship of tool slavery. We are still not happy if life is not interesting, challenging and difficult. We are still happiest overcoming natural hardships: not artificial, civilized, mechanical hardships.

The simple fact is; that humans are genetically designed to live outdoors: not indoors. Facing the elements invigorates you; it wakes you up, and sharpens your senses. We have heat glands in their bodies that are specifically designed to be developed so we can live outdoors in all kinds of weather with minimal or no discomfort to them. But because we live mostly indoors, we never get a chance to develop them. Our heat glands grow, and develop in early childhood. If you do not develop them then: you never will. Children naturally want to stay outside and play. Parents scream at them to come inside not because their children are too cold, but because they are too cold, just standing for a moment outside the door of a warm, heated home. The parents, having lost the use of their own heat glands by living indoors when they were young, cannot believe that their children are not freezing as they are. So... they make sure their children never get to develop their heat glands either.

If they actually left their children outside, to play as long as they wished: first... their children would come in when they were good and ready to: when they are either too tired or too cold to play anymore. Then there would be peace in the house because all of their excess energy would be burned off. Then, putting them to sleep would be actually enjoyable, and not a continual battle. Also: they would not have an over-stressed need to play because they were never given enough time and freedom to have fun.

Then children would not be hyperactive, or get into all the crazy mischief they always do indoors because they will have dispelled their craziness, or fun, or play, outside.

And what's more; if they stayed outside all night: night after night...then they would develop their heat glands so well, that they will lose all need to come indoors anymore... And win the unparalleled freedom of not having to build time-consuming, expensive, houses. They might even eventually stop wanting to live indoors altogether. The major bulk of most peoples savings, what they work for, what they toil for all their working lives; is to be able to afford a nice, safe, cozy, comfortable house. What if you could be happy and comfortable without living indoors, without owning a house?

But of course, that is unthinkable. What? Stay outside all the time, and have fun all the time? Never! Yet why not? The countless unchallenged, unquestioned habits, practices, customs, and traditions of civilized life... and much more; could be easily proven to be false simply by letting our children live as they want to, and not as we force them to.

All movement. All travel. Should be a challenge. Not a luxury. We should not be whisked from one place to another by machines. If we want to move: we should do it ourselves. We should not use the advantage of machines to do it with.

Movement should be fun. Travel should be an adventure. Doing it ourselves is what keeps us alive. The second our blood stops moving; we die. The second we stop moving physically; our fitness goes down and we get stiff, and old.

Not moving our own bodies physically was what got us into this mess in the first place. Lack of movement was what created civilization. The deadness of not moving physically creates creatures who have dead souls, dead minds and dead hearts. A shark moves through the water just enough to keep functioning. A porpoise does not move just enough to keep functioning. It moves playfully It has fun. Its Life is an adventure. Do you want to have the intelligence of a shark, or a porpoise?

It is a historical fact that the earliest wooden ships that landed on the islands off the southernmost tip of South America in the coldest, windblown hell on Earth where the wind averages between 30 and sixty miles an hour every minute of every day and night... where the norm of weather is a full-blown gale-storm that is almost never seen except in the middle of great oceans. In the Magellan Straits, on the Magellan Islands... these seafarers found a strange tribe of natives; living stark naked on these barren rock-covered islands...where no grass or trees could grow because the wind stripped all the islands of any soil ages ago. They witnessed them walking stark naked without shoes on snow-ice covered rocks. They witnessed them sleeping comfortably warm on cold bare rocks while the wind whistled past their ears carrying such a wind-chill factor that they should have developed frostbite in less than ten minutes. And they could not understand it. They thought these natives were the most ignorant savages on earth. These ignorant 'savages' did not even have a word in their language for fighting. They wore no clothes at all. So: the ignorant Europeans decided to 'civilize' them and teach them how to dress and eat new kinds of food from their ships called: salted fish. This poisonous food constricted their blood vessels so drastically that most of them later died of cold and overexposure to the elements they had so effortlessly withstood for centuries. Later European visitors; who thought to establish forts there: exterminated what remained of them.

The reason the human inhabitants of the Magellan Straits could live like that is simple: they had no choice in the matter. hardship. Natural hardship. They had no wood to burn. They were forced to find a way to exist on the most inhospitable place on Earth and did so successfully. Without a civilization.

If any of the suggestions made in this book seem too far-fetched because they stray too far from what the reader's 'id' thinks is conventional wisdom; the latest anthropological discoveries and conclusions bears out the fact that both modern humans and Neanderthals their cousins are capable of living in the coldest freezing climates on earth without any need to wear clothes. Anthropologists have now pushed back the history of Neanderthals living in Asia and Europe from 200,000 year, to 800,000 years. As the latest findings of Villa and Roebroeks show:

"This confirms a suspicion we had that went against the opinions of most scientists, who believed it was impossible for humans to penetrate into cold, temperate regions without fire," Villa said.

Recent evidence from an 800,000-year-old site in England known as Hapsburg indicates hominids -- likely Homo heidelbergensis, the forerunner of Neanderthals -- adapted to chilly environments in the region without fire, Roebroeks said.

The simplest explanation is that there was no habitual use of fire by early humans prior to roughly 400,000 years ago, indicating that fire was not an essential component of the behaviour of the first occupants of Europe's northern latitudes, said Roebroeks. "It is difficult to imagine these people occupying very cold climates without fire, yet this seems to be the case."

The answer to how the Neanderthals managed to survive the Ica ages of 800,000 years explains away the previously conflicting evidence. At first Neanderthals were considered to be less intelligent than us because they did not use fire to keep themselves warm. The newest evidence now shows that Neanderthals did use fire... but only in the making of their tools; not to keep themselves warm. The reason Neanderthals have been so admired by scientists is because for 800,000 years: these walking apes slew and killed the huge Ice Age monsters of the Neolithic era... without using fire to keep themselves warm. Scientists considered this to be impossible. But the facts cannot be denied. The huge Mastodons and Woolly Mammoths they hunted and killed during the many Ice Ages is a proven anthropological fact. The Neanderthals are famous because they spread into the farthest northern regions of Asia and Europe and lived there and managed to survive and flourish for thousands of years during the Ice ages. Not only during the warm periods. 800,000 years! That is almost a million years of living in the coldest regions on earth. During the Ice Ages... How on earth did they do it?!

The answer is simple. Heat glands. We humans are blessed with the exact same heat glands the Neanderthals had. We do not need to wear clothes to live in Nature. Just as the Neanderthals did not need to make fires for 800,000 years to keep themselves warm. Just as the natives of the Magellan islands did not need clothes to keep themselves warm.

What does this mean?

This means that the entire conventional bullshit explanation of how and why civilization was invented is 100% false. The assumption that man began to use fire to keep himself warm is total bullshit. The assumption that Man began killing animals for their furs to keep himself warm is 100% bullshit. The assumption that modern man cannot survive living in Nature without the artificial heat of burning wood, and wearing artificial coverings called clothing, and building artificial caves called houses is 100% bullshit. The fact that Neanderthals did not use fire except to make their tools with, the fact that there is some evidence they did use fire to cook their food now makes sense. The fires they made were small and were not used to keep them warm. Once their food was cooked, the fire was snuffed out or allowed to die. When there was no wood to burn: this did not mean any hardship for them. They were still warm and they ate their food raw; and were healthier because of it.

What does this mean? It means that civilization is not a success; it is an evolutionary mistake... It means that for over a million years, we have wasted and burned and destroyed living trees when we didn't have to. It means that the oldest tool of all: the use of fire was a horrible mistake. It means that all the lying crap and bullshit of what makes us special is a load of total garbage. It means there is no divine fire, no divine enlightenment of artificial light, no artificial burning intelligence or feeling that makes us special, no superior ingenuity.

Obviously, it is ridiculous to try to turn back the clock and pretend civilization never happened. However, this does not change the root issue. The challenge of finding a way to live that truly fits how we were meant to live, raises a spectrum of possibility so vast; it stretches human creativity and potential far beyond anything that civilization has to offer. The idea of replacing comfort addiction, convenience, expediency, mindless self-gratification and mindless tool-use with something more demanding, with hardship that is truly rewarding, is not a regression into the past. It is a creative attempt to improve human existence that goes beyond anything yet dreamt-of.

What does human curiosity focus on? How does it focus? The most popular fiction is the whodunit... its focus is on who killed who, when, why, how, etc... Even our fiction reveals that we are more curious about death than about life. We are more fascinated by death than by life. Instead of Constantly... Incessantly. Always writing about nothing else but people being killed, why they were killed, how they were killed, who killed them, when they were killed, where they were killed... Do writers ever spend their lives writing about people living?, How they lived? Why they lived? No.

Are people ever curious about how other people lived instead of how they died? Does the destructive 'id' ever use the investigative tools of: who, where, when, what, why, how ; in the mysteries of living? No... Only in the investigative mysteries of how people are murdered. That is the one-sided blindness of the cultured ego that is not aware of itself. What if there was no hierarchical accumulation of corruption? What if nothing was kept secret? What would writers have to write about then? All the works of fiction are just another way of creating an inner-reflective, abstract reality... Creating abstract imaginary personalities that "live" and take shape inside the writers mind... until they take on a life of their own, until they take over, until they tell the writer what to write, until it is the creation that controls the creator: that is what tools have done not only to writers, but to all of mankind.

What we are totally blind to is the relationship between humans and tools. It is not only an imbalanced one: it is an unholy one. It is trying to create a symbiotic relationship between a living thing and a dead thing. This experiment has been a disaster for all living on this planet; because this particular symbiotic parasite: tools... are systematically taking over its host: us living humans. This particular symbiote is continually growing in numbers, and in the power it holds over its host, in its influence over its host, and in its inimical destructiveness against all living organisms, including its own host. Parasitic symbiotes are not intelligent: they kill the host they depend on for their lives.

This is because a Symbiote's intelligence is of an entirely different order from its host. It does not properly recognize or understand the higher, more complex, more dynamically balanced form of energy it is feeding off of. Tools cannot understand that what they are doing is not insuring their own survival by increasing their numbers. They do not understand that by industrialization, by a form of duplication so crude, it ends up destroying everything else in the process: they are guaranteeing their own extinction.

Tools cannot understand or recognize the delicate organic balances needed for its host to thrive within the ecosphere of this planet. Whether living things thrive or die on this planet is of no concern to the tool: as long as its host thrives, that's all that matters. Tools do not care in the slightest about the well-being of its host. As long as its host continues to make, and use more tools. That is all that matters to the tool.

The proof of tools taking over their host is glaringly obvious. Humans have taken on the exact viewpoint, the exact same attitude as the tools they use... we have become tools ourselves to such an extent, that we share the same attitudes, viewpoint and values... as our own tools. Living things are of little importance, or value to us... compared to our precious tools and technology. The use and production of more and better tools is much more important to us than the care of living things. Civilized humans value dead things a thousand times more highly than living things.

The Final Question

The dealings of the world conglomerates, governments, interest groups, the major monopolized industries, the IMF, the world trade agreements: all of these machinations: go on around the world every day. And they reach into the lives of most of the people on this planet. This affects everyone who buys food, gas, clothing, electricity, consumer products. It affects everyone whose life is touched by a higher governmental body. Both metaphorically and literally: every person who buys a banana is putting money into the coffers of the most powerful organizations in the world. Yet this systemic milking of the world population is completely invisible. And all of these causal chains and structures we take for granted and regard as normal. How it all works is a complete mystery. None of the actual knowledge and information of how civilization works is available to the public. How the world is run is kept secret. And what little information does exist, lies hidden in bits and pieces: in places that are extremely difficult to find. Humans are not given or allowed to have the crucial knowledge of how their own civilization works and runs on all of its various levels. There is no access to any information that could tie together all of the interlinking structures, institutions and relationships in its entirety: so people can make truly informed decisions and base their actions and decisions upon the actual truth.

How can you point the finger of blame; when every civilized individual on Earth is trying to milk wealth from every other civilized individual? If everyone is trying to get some kind of advantage over someone else: who is willing to cast the first stone of blame at our collective guilt? Who amongst us is willing to accept blame themselves? Who amongst us is willing to accept responsibility? How can you promote an increased awareness, when the universal ethic of greed and profit dominates and poisons every human value-system and every moral principle on Earth?

Why is the nature of civilization so indecipherable? Not only because all the actual knowledge is segmental in nature and there has never been any attempt to connect it comprehensively: but because the truth about civilization is kept secret. If the financial flow and distribution of all the money and all the power and influence and all the workings of social status and the flow and distribution of all the knowledge in civilization were laid bare to be studied and traced and examined to see how it all works, where it goes, why it works: then people would finally be able to intelligently decide how they want their society to work, in what way, on what principles, and by what values.

If only the most basic human knowledge itself were collated enough to nullify some of the monopolist areas of needless, wasteful, conflicting, overlapping expertise; so everyone was equally well-informed: then the rest of this structure would come crashing down along with the pyramidalization of knowledge. Then: wealth, power, influence and social standing would no longer have the fulcrum of specialized and privileged information or the corruption of secrecy to preserve its Status Quo.

However, you will never find all the information, or knowledge you need in this civilized ant heap except in tiny segments hidden away in nooks and crannies. All unconnected to the other bits of information. And only the endless, persevering, sniffing out of these tiny bits will ever give you even a slightly clarified understanding of it all. Simply because humans do not organize or look at things in a cohesive, holistic fashion. There are countless small grass-roots organizations battling the upper strata of civilization's power structure. But they all do so only within their own narrow confines of specialized self-interest. Moreover, ultimately they all end up conflicting with each other, wasting their energy in uncoordinated, uncooperative efforts as small forces battling the concentrated powers of the pyramidal elite. For every inequity that is painfully fought over, opposed, and finally balanced: a hundred new ones are created. There are tons of reports and books detailing pieces of the puzzle of just how civilization works and how it is structured; but none of them are connected to each other, none of them connect the entire puzzle together because human interests are specialized and segmented. Never mind the divisions caused by language, culture, race, religion and politics. All you need is only one of the four universal aspects of civilized accumulation to be laid bare: to be examined and studied. And the other three aspects will fall into place beside it. If the entire world supply of money and wealth were not kept in billions of secret cachets and accounts: if they could be all opened and studied... This in itself would blow the lid off every major scandal and corruption in the world.

But the entire self-survival of civilized people, the entire dynamic of greed, fear, envy, hate, mistrust, is based upon keeping this entire information secret. Everyone fears divulging such information and for good reason: because it would expose the financial truth about everybody. And only the poorest and the most powerless have anything to gain by this. Any exposing of financial wealth and holdings would expose all the inequity and imbalance existing between 6 ½ billion people on this planet. And the ones who have everything to lose from this very rightly fear it would set off a firestorm of conflict, envy, greed, hatred and upheaval. Moreover: the abolition of any form of financial secrecy goes directly against the need for advantage in our antagonistic and competitive, pyramidal, capitalistic system. As result: such an idea is considered not practical and is never seriously considered.

In civilization, there is a fundamental conflict between dead things and living things... Which are valued more? The problem with civilization is that it is tool-friendly, not human-friendly. You cannot have individuals trying to live by healing principles while their society functions by destructive tool principles. The greater force will always prevail over the lesser. If you want people to develop their own humanity, you must first establish a society based upon humane principles of non-accumulation and dynamic balance. As long as you have human cultures which do not evolve or change humanly while their tools and technology does: you will have the insanity and horror of primitive, non-evolved cultures fighting each other with modern, tool-evolved weapons. As long as money is the principal value-system people use: there can be no society that operates mainly by human values. The effect of money is to make human factors obsolete, worthless, unused, undeveloped and unneeded. If you have money in any civilized society: you don't need courage, honesty, love, or a sense of wonder, or creativity. In today's modern legal system: money is used to compensate for human suffering. Clearly: the tool value of money has replaced human values in our society.

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

How can you change the dynamic of greed? Simple. Burn all the money. Announce that all money is worthless. That all gold, silver, currency, legal documents, deeds, etc are illegal as legal tender. Replace ALL money and abstract value; with Music CD's. Include DVD's and computer CD's with them. Have them all be worth one dollar. No inflation, period. A fixed abstract system with no intrinsic commodity value except the music on each CD.

Then all the youth of the world will hold all the buying power. Then all stock markets will crash; all monopolies and businesses will go bankrupt. All the old people will have no money. Young people will hold all the money. Then CD factories will become billionaire factories. All famous music artists will lose their billions of dollars and become just another musician except for the CD's they own. Only the music public who love music will become rich. Then.... Music will become money. All music will become powerful. Then... people will make their own music to buy things with. And if their music is lousy? Nobody will buy it. Then the best music will become worth more. There will be a black market for the best music CD's...

But. A movie costing millions of dollars? To sell how many millions of DVD's before they can make a profit? All new DVD's, all new movies will disappear. Then people will make their own movies and sell them. And the shit mediocre crap of Hollywood will disappear, and there will be billions of movie-producers and directors and actors and actresses: all a thousand times more creative than what we have now. But computer CD's can be made by the ton. Moreover; only the good ones will be bought or even wanted.... Then information will become money. Then books will become money, then only the best books and the best information will be bought. Then only the smartest computer whiz kids and the best musicians will make money. Then you have a complete change of status, power, wealth and knowledge. Then you have a complete change of the status quo.

How greedy are whiz kids who love making computer CD's? How greedy are musicians who make their own music CD's? DVD's will become too expensive to make unless they are homemade. Unless made by world famous artists who can find millions of buyers for their particular film. And even then; they will make less profit than ordinary musicians who can whomp up a few albums of original music, or any independent movie maker with a camera with an original idea. Then creativity becomes power and wealth. Then people will hate shopping... having to carry bulky plastic CD's everywhere. How many CD's can you fit into your purse? But then the poor countries will have no CD's. Then finally the obscene definition of poor and rich become clearly defined. Then everyone will have to help each other; or all of us will starve to death. Then music CD's of 'We are the World' will be manufactured by the billions... and the musicians of the world, and the businesses that support them: will all get together to help fill the 3rd world countries with millions of music CD's... as they sell them their CD players along with it. Then there will be so much love in the world and so much music in the world... that whenever a person wants to buy something... all they have to do will be to sing for their suppers. And if their songs... which they can make on their own CD's are good. Suddenly, they will become famous rich music artists... who will spread their CD's to all the poor also... who will listen to their love music... And make their own love music... so the entire world will be filled not with hate and money... but with CD's, and music, and love. Oops. Too simple? Too drastic? Too effective? Too inconvenient? Have a better idea of how to revolutionize human society without killing and war and hate and fear?... No? Gosh. Oh well.... It's just an idea.

What if people only used money for others: and not for themselves? Remember the famous scene in the Movie: where Richard Gere buys all those fancy clothes for his prostitute-girlfriend? She was made to feel and look like a queen. She felt special. Her self-esteem went up. She became instantly happy.

What if people with money: took all of the homeless people on Earth: and let them shop for their own brand-new clothes? Not hand-me-downs. Not used, discarded clothes. That are given to them so they never forget that they are a discarded people. So sick people who have money can sneer and ignore sick people who do not have money.... And feel sorry for them, and pity them... and sigh, and say that there's nothing they can do. Which is a sick filthy lie.

Homeless people walking around in new clothes? In the latest fashions? Clean? Not dirty? Homeless people who have a higher self-esteem because they are wearing new clothes? Horrors. We can't have that, now can we? Only people who have money are allowed to go shopping to please themselves. Only people who have money are allowed to use shopping, and buying new clothes as a way of making themselves feel better about themselves... we can't let poor people have that privilege, now... can we? We can't make poor people happy now: can we? Horrors.

But if you use your money only for other people and not for yourself. Not only will your ego and your selfishness and your arrogance dwindle, and disappear... you will feel so much better about yourself: that you will get hooked on it. You start searching for any excuse to spend your money on someone who has less than you. You will start searching for anyone who has less money than you... you will start becoming creative in how you help them spend your money on them. And they will love you for it> and you will love them.

What? Rich people loving poor people? Poor people loving rich people? As equals!?
Unthinkable~!!!! Forbidden!!! You are not allowed!!!

Want a simpler idea? Replace all money with food. Then all of the Corporations like Archer Daniels, and Kraft will become Empires. Then for once all the poor people will know who is intentionally starving them to death. Then these corporations will be destroyed. Then farmers will become the richest people on Earth.... And God help any of them if they do not give their food-money to starving children and people. Then all money will become an exchange of food-love. How many apples can you fit in your purse? Then money will only be good for eating, and if it is not used right away and eaten right away: then it will rot and become useless. Then there will be no saving, and no accumulation of money. Then for once there would be an honest line drawn between rich people and poor people. Then for once we would not be able to lie about ourselves about wanting to help poor people but not being able to. Then we would have a clear choice. Either give poor people food, or teach them to grow it themselves. Or keep all our extra food for ourselves; and let them starve to death. Oops. But if we didn't let them starve then they wouldn't be poor anymore. Then they would be just as rich as we are.

Now we can't have that, now... can we? Why not?

How many apples can a rich man eat; before his apples rot and shrivel? Then for once; humans would directly understand; the selfishness and stupidity of trying to hoard something for their own pleasure. Then for once humans would directly understand the meaning of greed. Then for once; humans would understand the meaning of humanity, the meaning of money, and the meaning of food. Then for once people could get rich, and happy; by giving to other people; food-money-love. Then the more love, and the more food, and the more money you give away, the happier, and the richer you become.

But that's too simple. Things are supposed to get more complicated... not less complicated. That's not progress. That would mean regressing. Going backwards instead of forwards. We would be living like people before there was any civilization. That is a backwards, regressive idea. That is not progressive.

That is superstitious nonsense. We are supposed to look forward, not backward. Do away with money? We would be living as ancient superstitious savages, not modern, enlightened civilized humans. Bullshit.

Oh well... it's just a new idea. We mustn't do anything that hasn't already been done now, should we? In case you haven't noticed... the entire fucking thing called civilization is based upon certain ideas that do not work. Your entire life is based upon taking certain selective ideas for granted. And selectively ignoring, and not believing in other ideas.

Civilization has never spawned a new idea. Civilization crushes, kills, and buries all new ideas. It poisons, pollutes and corrupts every new idea until that new idea becomes the opposite of what it originally was. Then once that new idea is completely destroyed and turned into an evil idea: if the idea is still too good: civilization either corrupts it and then preserves the corrupted idea throwing away the original good idea; or lets the good idea go out of fashion, and lets it be laughed at as old fashioned and out-of-date.

Where do you think money came from? It came from people having too much food. They had a choice. Whether to be generous with it, or selfish with it. Whether to give it freely with love or make a profit from it from people who were hungry. Why do you think mass starvation has always been the hallmark of civilization? There has never been a time in all the 12,000 years of civilization when the majority of humans living on this Earth were not poor and starving to death. The instant poor people stop starving: other civilized people find a way to keep them starving and poor.

All money originally came from having too much food. Money is merely an ancient custom making sure that people too poor to buy food will starve. The civilized concept that money is more important than starving people is obscene because it originally came from a surplus of too much food. What good is food, if nobody eats it? To hoard food and watch other people starve? To hoard money and watch other people be poor? Why do you think the morality and ethics of all hoarding and accumulating of wealth and money is rotten to the core? Why do you think millionaires and billionaires are constantly trying to find a way for the masses to love them? Because their inner instincts are telling them that they are being evil. Because all selfishness stinks. All selfishness is destructive. You can rationalize money and wealth any way you want: it still stinks to high heaven.

If the first people who had too much food had decided to give it away freely and with love: and punish any fool who tried to profit from another person's starvation, then there would have been no money. It would never have been invented. There is a reason why the saying: 'money is the root of all evil' has survived in every corner of the globe for 12,000 years.

Here is the 64 dollar question: how do you get 6 ½ billion people to stop being selfish? How can you get them to stop fighting against themselves; and pull in the same direction? How do transform antagonistic competition into cooperation? How do you get 6 billion people to stop accumulating? How do you get 6 billion people to recognize the commonalities of their own common humanity? How do you get 6 billion people to recognize that their own self-interest as individuals, as communities, and as a species: overrides and supersedes every abstract creation of their own culture and civilization? That the well-being of our species as a whole, the happiness of each person, and the health of the entire planet coincide with each other and do not conflict? That the only opposition to these three interests is the civilization we were raised in and the beliefs that we absorbed and the values we were spoon-fed? How do you change the awareness of 6 ½ billion people? How do you instill a sense of pure wonder into 6 ½ billion people?

The brutal fact is, that only by a huge, overall reduction in every form of accumulation, together with a huge integration in every form of connectiveness, will we ever remedy our own problems. Only as a meager population with a meager amount of tool-use, living a meager ascetic lifestyle, will we humans ever be able to let go of all the corruptions that civilization has brought about. The universal truth humans refuse to learn is that; the only importance in living is the attainment of dynamic balance: not accumulation of any kind. If you persist in accumulating; you will never be able to balance yourself, or your life. You will never find true happiness or peace. You will never attain it, achieve or live it.

Only... we are so deeply immersed inside civilization; that we try to balance our accumulations, instead of ourselves. We try to balance budgets, political interests, power, the structural stress of dead buildings and bridges: not the dynamic balance of our living bodies and souls... Not our awareness, not the living ecosystems we live in. But you cannot balance any dead accumulation dynamically; simply because it is not alive enough. By abandoning the principle of dynamic balance, we have abandoned the single, universal principle upon which all of life and the Universe is based upon. For humans to ever attain true balance, true peace, true happiness: they must act as one species: in complete accord with each other... not as splintered groups of competing, distrustful, fearful, hating, killing apes.

Understanding the basic, root reasons of why and how the Universe works, how human awareness works, and how civilization works; are the necessary basic tools needed for people to live happy, fulfilled, peaceful lives. Human suffering and inhumanity can only be eradicated if these basic tools of understanding are given-to and used-by every human on this planet... not just an elite few. If this is not done: the ongoing catastrophe of human suffering and civilization's destruction of this planet will continue unabated.

But here is where all serious consideration of the truth stops cold. Because the process of accumulation that got us into the mess we are in today has been going on for at least 10,000 years. If anyone even begins to admit the basic truths I have outlined in this book; they will have to face the fact of what our ancestors have done. Then we would have to regard civilization as an ongoing 10,000 yr-old oil spill... while we are left with the damage it has caused and is still causing. Now we need to start cleaning up a mess that was not originally made by us. And the monumental task of trying to right a 10,000 yr-old mistake is not a problem any person wants to look at. Who wants to face such an unpleasant truth? Who wants to shoulder such an odious responsibility; when we were not responsible for its creation in the first place? Yet every advantage, every kind of power, every tool, every gadget, every laborsaving device, every machine, every car we use, is due to the tool development of our ancestors. All the comforts and power we enjoy today comes directly from 10,000 years of civilization. We cannot disown the advantages which we benefit from. Ultimately; what we benefit from and use for our benefit; we are responsible for. And that fact; nobody wants to face.

The blindness of humans in regards to their actual situation is due to a lack of perspective. It is only when you pull back and view the entire course of 10,000 years of civilization that you see the monstrous problems we have created are from over-intensive tool-use: and that we blindly seek to remedy these problems only through more over-intensive tool-use. Tools do not solve problems: they only complicate human existence and end up destroying everything around us, while creating more problems and more tools to create more destruction. If ever the causal effects of using any technology is fully exposed and examined, the overwhelming evidence of this fact will show that this is indeed what has happened and is happening. To do that, you need to look at all of the facts, all of the process, all of the consequences, all of the repercussions.

If you build a space shuttle, where does the plastic come from? The metal? What chemicals were used and how many man-hours did it eat up? What is the cost of pollution in manufacturing all of these expensive chemicals, fuels, etc...? How much wealth and human lives were wasted on it? How many years of research? How many billions of dollars? Will that space shuttle make any human find true happiness? Love? Peace? Meaning? Usefulness? Except as a tool-slave? Viewed from this perspective; over-intensive tool-use is the blindest, most wasteful, most profligate use of human life possible.

To worship technology, to worship tools. To worship civilization or culture, or religion, or anything: is to lose sight of your own humanity and the humanity of others. To place the value of technology above human suffering gives you what we have today... a small minority enjoying affluence at the expense of global poverty and suffering. But since human awareness and perspective is not global in its outlook, since most people do not even try to expand their awareness; except selectively. Since humans do not live in a state of Pure Wonder: they never ask connective questions and try to put anything into a larger context. It is the lack of Wonder that keeps humans blind. It is the artificial environments and Normalities we create that keep us blind. If you do not live in a state of Pure Wonder, your tool-brain will go through its usual mechanical functions in its usual blinkered, narrowed focus: never seeking any wider outlook on life. This is what tools do to human awareness. And unless we admit what using tools is doing to us and to this planet: we will keep on doing it.

If you examine the choices given in this book, if you examine your own life and look at what choices you have made and their ultimate results: you will make the unpleasant discovery; that what is good for you and what is bad for you is clearly delineated by what is hard for you, and what is easy. The reason civilization was created and the reason we have come this far on its path is because it was easier for us. Once people believe in the sacredness of their own self-gratification, once their imbalanced awareness cannot discern between what is truly good for them and what is bad, how can anyone divest themselves of such entrenched cultural habits-values-beliefs? To propose that the entire human population on this planet willingly choose whatever is more difficult... To not only preach, but actually practice selflessness and giving... To actually practice an ascetic, non-accumulating lifestyle... to willingly give up the concepts of accumulation and ownership... To willingly forego all elitist power, wealth, fame, and knowledge... Is that asking too much?

Yet, it has already been proven and demonstrated throughout history that the attainment of happiness, peace, joy and meaning can only be achieved by this difficult path. But because these truths are so unpleasant; this proven wisdom has been cast by the wayside and ignored, and laughed-at, and sneered-at, and ignored.

Civilization is so structured that it automatically prevents these actual truths from being learned, practice, or developed. So... the practical solution to this quandary is what? Change the basic structure of human society? Change the basic value-believe systems of all humans? Change how we use our awareness and how we develop it? Change how we live?

The answer is of course; all of the above. But where to start? How? When? This is what each person must answer for themselves.

If all the major forces influencing the development of our species could be unearthed and examined; you would see over a span of millions of years how we veered off the most dynamic path of organic life, onto a path of selective awareness; instead of an overall awareness. What we call intelligence is precisely this type of awareness which we developed that has set us apart as tool users. But this thing called selective awareness, or pyramidal focus is also the basic operational condition that produces all kinds of tool-effects which are ultimately dehumanizing within the human psyche, and which has forced humans to become destructive towards themselves, others, and their environment: living, acting, functioning more like a mindless tool than a wondering, curious animal.

However; this entire history of the dominance of tools over humans, over human values, this selective blindness which scientists call selective awareness; which has been cast into billions of self-created realities, all mostly unconnected to each other except on an abstract level... this jumbled mix of self-created segmented-fragmented identities within each psyche; has robbed humans of ever seeing themselves and their own history in any true, larger, comprehensive, connective context which could explain all of their condition.

In short: our vaunted selective awareness is precisely what prevents us from any true, deeper understanding of anything. The very function of selective awareness or what we call consciousness, is the ability to selectively ignore and block out most things around you while focusing upon one particular item. To put it as bluntly and starkly as possible: the pinnacle of all human selective awareness, the pinnacle of all human intelligence, the pinnacle of our conscious awareness: resides in our ability to consciously lie, our ability to deceive, delude, deny... our ability to create out of our fevered brains any kind of abstract fabrication, any set of connections-identities-symbols-ideas-thoughts-feelings-motives-actions that are convenient, expedient, easier to live-with.

One stupidity and arrogance of all Western Science, Religion, Philosophy, etc., lies in the unspoken assumption and belief: that humans are smarter than other creatures. Rather; we are only more selectively aware. What we gain in creating separations, we lose far more in lacking a connective, overall intelligence.

The narrowest interpretation of anything is always the blindest. The blindest person in the world is a scientist peering into a microscope or a telescope. The blindest cultures are those which do not accept and cannot understand other cultures. The blindest religions are the most intolerant, the most exclusionary and the most dogmatic. The blindest psyche is the one with the narrowest, most rigid, unchanging normality-identity-views-opinions-beliefs. The blindest tool-use is the most specialized, the most complex, and the most expensive. We refuse to see any direct connection between ourselves and any collective aspects of our technology, religion, or culture... We avoid seeing any connection between the countless separate things, issues and problems that beset us. We see ourselves as a privileged species, as all-powerful: capable of manipulating, segmenting, separating... able to separate any thing and everything, able to differentiate between anything and everything: and not seeing anything fundamentally wrong in doing so. We leave our human potential undeveloped, ignoring the path of infinite possibility, connectivity, creativity; and instead; focus narrowly, think narrowly, feel narrowly; acting non-creatively, repetitively as each of our frozen Normalities and routines dictate.

How can you reverse the focus of human awareness? How can you reverse the structural hierarchy of human tool values? How can you literally tear up the Cheops Pyramid and plunge its pinnacle down into the Earth and expose the broad base of that pinnacle? So everyone can see that the most fundamental blocks of truth, the most important building blocks of human awareness are the broadest, widest, most connected, strongest ones at the bottom and not at the top? How can you turn human existence and human awareness and human values and human perception right-side-up?

To actually change the fundamental pyramidal-hierarchical nature-structure of human society and civilization? Can you imagine the screaming terror of the most powerful, the wealthiest, the most specialized... as they are ripped from their elevated places and plunged below... under the billions of their former poor-powerless victims; whom they relied on for maintaining their privileged advantages? Yet this is not an answer, it is not a true balance; it is only a reversal of imbalance. Instead of reversing the imbalance between the powerful and powerless, you need to eliminate both imbalances so there is no such thing as power or powerlessness. It is only by the complete dismantling of any accumulated imbalance that you can ever achieve a higher dynamic balance.

Who would even contemplate such a thing, never mind attempt to do it? How can this actually be done? Simple. By exposing what civilization actually is, how it works, and where it came from. By exposing the truth about everything. By destroying all false beliefs. By exposing the true connective commonality of humans as a species. By exposing the single truth that we are all animals of one species: and that any other abstract identity is merely an extra, piled-on, added, irrelevant nuisance.

If all people were connected to each other based on only aspects of their genetic commonality, then we could come together to achieve our most cherished goals of peace, happiness, and love. Then this broadest connective identity could become stronger than all other identities; and forever bury all of the cultural-religious-ego based identities and all the wars, hates, conflicts, power groups, and advantages built up over 10,000 years of accumulating, over-intensive tool-use.

Oh yes, there is one inconvenience: the loss suffered by anyone, who enjoys any kind of advantage over anyone else. This includes every person's intent on gaining any kind of success or advantage over someone else... regardless of how far down in the pile they may be. This would mean that not only the rich, not only the middle-class... but literally everyone... every living human on this planet would have to give up their power-struggle, their wealth-struggle, their status-struggle, their knowledge-struggle against others. They would have to give up their dream of being on the top or elevating themselves in any way over others. The very idea of upward mobility as a reason to live, as something that gives meaning to existence would have to disappear also.

Of course: if this were ever attempted; then literally all the people on Earth would fight-kick-scream, and do literally anything they could to keep things the way they are now; rather than give up anything they are used to. What? Change how things are normally done?

However, if all people seek to connect to the bottom and not the top: the bottom will become more powerful than the top. And successfully overturn the present state of affairs. This fundamental change of focus-awareness, this fundamental change of structure-balance is the only possible way in which all people can achieve true happiness and peace. It is the only way in which humans will ever stop destroying the Earth they live on.

Sound impossible? All it takes is changing the awareness of all humans simultaneously: so the change is universal and totally integrated: not incremental, not accumulative and not hierarchical in nature. It has to be done all at once, by everyone, and all at the same time...everywhere, with no exclusions, and no exceptions. We have to value humans first and tools second; not the other way around. We have to value living things first, and dead things second. We have to stop worshipping what our tools have accomplished. We have to stop worshipping civilization.

The reason why some species flicker into existences and then disappear, while others endure for hundreds of millions of years is usefulness... not being better killers or bigger, or more powerful. There is always something else in the Universe... that is more powerful, and bigger than you are. There is always a bigger context that explains why things happen. As long as you are not aware of the larger contexts in which you exist: you will find that you have no true understanding of who you are, and what you are, and what kind of energy you are. As long as any species acts as a useful functioning factor in its ecosystems: it remains a useful, cyclic pathway for other Energies to go through their evolutionary cycles of experience. And since all of this is infinitely creative, and infinitely diverse: it is irrelevant which ones last longer. As long as the dynamic balance of all Energies involved become more dynamically balanced; that is all that matters

Only in the context of Actual Infinity and Relativity, and Pure Wonder: can Life make any sense. In the larger context of Life as an energy-flow: even if it is viewed as a bush with countless branches and leaves, the ultimate purpose of that bush is not for any one leaf or branch surviving by killing and eating some other leaf, or outlasting others. That viewpoint is purely an anthropomorphic vision propagated by pseudo-science which only reiterates and affirms the universal fear that all humans have of death and dying. No other living organism save humans; fear dying. They do not fear death, or dying reflectively. It's not that they do not want to be killed: they simply want to go on living.

Until this blunt fact is publicized and admitted: Science will keep on spouting its silly moralistic myth of all other species being engaged in the battle for survival. Whether any species, or animal, or organism survives or goes extinct, regardless of how valiantly it struggles, or fights, whether it perishes or flourishes, whether it outlasts other species or not; the dance of regeneration is a balanced dynamic. And that dance is fueled by the urge to live: not, I repeat, not by the fear of death. In all other organisms: death as well as life is not connected to any kind of fear. But humans cannot fathom this obvious fact because we view all death, dying, and being eaten, with fear. The urge to live may be a struggle, but only in a minor sense. Life-energy is a dynamic that is never in conflict with itself. Rather, it only produces more abundance, more diversity in evermore creative, fantastic, wondrous ways. It has never turned on itself destructively: only humans have done so. In the future, the outcome will be determined by a crucial balance of our condition: whether we have more fear than wonder, whether we have more hate than love... or vice versa.

So where does that leave us? It leaves us in a situation which can only be remedied through changing our awareness: how we focus it, use it, train it. Only if human perception changes dramatically; can the course of civilization be altered. Humans can do anything they set their will to; only for civilization to change comprehensively, everyone must change... at the same time. That is the challenge. Even in the world of finance, it has been proven that the only way to effectively overhaul and mend any hemorrhaging economy is by a massive, synchronized, drastic, holistic approach. The trick in changing anything is having everybody do it, cooperatively, and in unison. Incremental change has never been effective and never will.

The roots of human awareness must be explored not by a single explorer, but by everyone... at the same time. Literally, every living person must undergo a change in their awareness. Only then can humans change the way they live. We will never conquer our own fears until we conquer our own fear of death, our fear of separation. Humans will never be able to honestly face their own problems until all forms of excessive traumatic fear and pain are eradicated from the human psyche. We must all heal ourselves: not just a select, lucky few: and not just selectively in certain areas. The only way you can heal yourself is helping others to heal and vice versa... at the same time. You cannot separate healing others from healing yourself; you cannot separate helping others from helping yourself. It only works by a positive cycle of feedback. The instant you try to separate this by having people helping others but not being helped, or being helped but not helping others: you destroy the entire dynamic, you destroy the entire effect. All healing only works by cooperation. That is the dynamic all human societies should be based on. That is the only way humans will ever find any true happiness.

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1492

Is it morally right to put ourselves into the role of only takers and not givers? The answer is: no. If all people put themselves into the role of a giver: there would be no sin, no problems, no unhappiness and no civilization. Put it this way. The reason there are billions more hungry and starving poor people in the world than people who are not hungry today is because humans take more than they give.

If you had a human population of only two people on Earth, and both of them grew food. They would have too much food. If neither of them grew any food: both of them would starve to death and humans would go extinct.

If one of them was a taker, and one of them was a giver. If one of them only grew food and the other only ate it: then one would starve to death: and the other would become fat and lazy. If both grew their own food: then both would become fat and lazy. Growing food and eating: is itself an imbalanced dynamic. We are not designed to grow our own food. We are not designed to sit in one place.

What happens in a civilization of two people: when one person takes more than the other person gives? The giver needs to eat food also. Then the taker forces the giver to give him more food than he needs. Then the taker starts oppressing and enslaving the giver. Then the taker gets more powerful than the giver. Until the giver, the grower of food: begins starving to death because the taker... the selfish one who does not grow the food, is taking not only the food he needs, but also the small bit of food the giver, and grower needs also.

And for 12,000 years now, we have not only been doing this to each other. We have been doing it to entire fucking planet. We have been taking from this planet, and not giving anything back to it. We have been taking money and food from farmers, and not giving anything back to them. We have been creating a civilization of cities that suck all the food and money out of the agricultural areas: leaving billions of agricultural poor people to starve, while city people get fat from having too much to eat.

Only we have been doing this sneakily. We have not admitted we are doing this to ourselves. We have been lying to ourselves... as we have lied around doing nothing. We have created an elite civilization of takers; who profit from givers. Only; it is not a voluntary giving: it is a forced giving: it is the evil of enforced-oppressed slavery; with no choice and no options and no freedom for the slaves; who are forced to give their lives and time and energy, and resources to the takers. And we have worshipped these takers and these Popes, and these killers, and these Kings, and these mass murders... and we have spat upon the poor dirt farmers who give us their own food; grown by hard physical toil... and we have made them go hungry and starve: while piling our own tables high with the richest possible food.

How obvious is this? Read History.

The only way we humans can stop destroying the Earth. The only way humans can be happy. Is for every human on Earth to be more of a giver than a taker.

Once we can do that: then how much time we spend on this planet will become irrelevant. Then: once

1492

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1493

the last rationalization of fear is finally buried, the fear of our own extinction: then the last egoistic justification for our own existence will also disappear. Once we kill our own egos: we can live and give without worrying about dying. Once human survival is no longer connected to the ego, once how we live and why we do things is no longer connected to the ego, once humans no longer fear separation, or death: then we will become able to more closely follow the true laws of Nature and the true laws of the Universe which are truly universal; not the artificial laws of civilization. And in doing so; find our true place in the scheme of all things.

This book was written not only as an explanation, and an analysis: but also as an opener. Every topic, every issue and idea discussed in this book that is usually never talked about openly between people; should be openly debated and discussed. This book is only an opening platform for all people to further pursue their own ideas, their own self-understanding, their own understanding of others and their own understanding of the Universe they live in. It is an attempt to destroy the silence and secrecy of important human issues. Issues that people almost never talk about. This book is an attempt to open up all the concerns that are usually never spoken of or dealt with. All the questions in this book are questions that are open to debate. There are no absolute answers to these questions.

The question I put to the reader is this:
Is what is written in this book; true, or not?

Look at yourself... and ask yourself if what I have written here is true specifically of you.

If you look for the truth you will find it: hidden away in strange places, and even out in the open. Because there is so little of it in civilization, you will have to sift through tons of shit to get one ounce of truth. If you search for truth selectively: you can find any truth you want to. If you do not look for truth you will never find it. If you look for lies you will find them. Hidden away in all sorts of strange places, and even out in the open. Because so much is kept secret in civilization. If you search for lies: you can find any lie you want to. If you do not look for lies; you will never find them. It all depends on what you want to find. What you want to see. What you want to admit. What you want to accept.

If you want to see lies as the truth:, you will see them that way. If you want to see truths as being a lie: you will see them that way. Depending on how honest you are with yourself. How much Courage you have. And if you have a Sense of Pure Wonder. It all depends on how you connect them. Or if you want to connect them at all. Every new connection will give you a new perspective, and a new insight. Until you will be addicted to finding more new connections. Until you become addicted to accumulating the truth.

The test of all good things is simplicity. Can you get sick from drinking too much water? Can you get sick from accumulating too many truths? There is no such thing as drinking too much water. Or accumulating too much truth. The more truths you accumulate: the more new connections you make: the simpler your truths become; the less truths you have, the smaller these truths become. Accumulating truths is the opposite of negative accumulation. Positive accumulation concentrates energy more powerfully into smaller, simpler, more connected spaces.

Why does this book speak so much of what is evil, and not what is good? Because I am not trying to give equal exposure to good and evil. I am trying to show what is never shown, or spoken of. Making 50% of this book about what is good in human civilization; would be like discussing the chemical composition of the air in an essay: and spending 50% of the essay talking about the .03% of Carbon Dioxide in it. That would be a relative distortion of the truth. It would give the reader a false relative perspective... it would give the impression that fully half of the air is made up of Carbon Dioxide. I am compensating for the common belief that air has only 10% nitrogen in it; when it actually has 78% Nitrogen. So; if I speak about the air as though there is 98% Nitrogen in it; instead of 78%... It is only because I am compensating for the distorted misperception that the air has only 10% Nitrogen in it. It does not. It is made up of 78% Nitrogen. I am compensating for the common misperception that what is good about the air is that there is it is made up of 21% Oxygen. This is not true. What is truly good about the Air in our atmosphere, is that it has .03% Carbon Dioxide in it. That .03% of Carbon Dioxide; supports all the plants and plankton on Earth. Which give us 16% Oxygen so we can live.

1493

In order to get a perspective on the civilization you live-in: you need to understand the true relative percentage of Good and Evil in human civilization. That proportion is not 16% Good, and 10% Evil. It is not even 16% Good and 78% Evil. It is .03% Good, and 99.07% Evil.

How did evil come into this world? The human subconscious screamed the truth out to the entire world in the Jewish myth of Adam and Eve. Only... this Myth of origins: compressed six million years of the origins of hidden evil: into one act of evil.

Over-intensive tool use.

First eating the fruit of knowledge and then sharing it. The knowledge of how to use tools to kill other animals with. Sharing that evil knowledge of how to use tools between each other instead of sharing love. Sharing food instead of love. Killing instead of loving as a basic sin. Destruction; instead of nurturing. Destroying instead of loving. Taking instead of giving.

Once our ancestors stopped sharing love. Once they substituted eating food, for love. Once they replaced filling their hearts with love to filling their stomachs with food. They became hungrier, and hungrier, and hungrier for what they actually need. Humans do not need food. We need love, not food in order to survive, to exist and to live. We do not even need love. We only need fun. Show me a person who is having fun: and I will show you a person who does not need love.

We got this idea of eating from other animals. But Nature had better idea that is even more powerful than eating. Nature grew apes to need less, and less food to live, and need more and more love to live. They evolved using their arms and legs more and more for hugging each other and hugging living trees than for anything else. Humans were supposed to advance the idea of living without eating; both powerfully and fast. And spread this idea among other animals. And enforce this idea. And make sure other animals followed their example. You can trace how Nature tried to force animals to learn this lesson. You can trace how Nature punished each species that refused to do what it was designed to do.

We refused to follow the design of our own bodies. We found a way to avoid sharing love with each other; even when that was all we could do. The Jewish myth compresses six million years of sinning into one short subconscious message so compact that it skips millions of years in a few words. The actual evil of Adam... was not eating the apple... the actual evil was eating itself.

Humans were not designed to eat.

It has already been proven.
The less you eat... the longer you live.

Do you want to live forever...? Then don't eat anything: and you will never die

This has been scientifically proven. Science has many lies. But this is a general truth. Just like the general truth:

The more you exercise, the longer and harder you work or play... the less you eat... the less hungry you are. The less you want to eat. The smaller your stomach gets, the less you need to eat, the less you can eat. The Science of calories is a fraud. Explaining energy as calories is bullshit. The entire concept of energy by Science: is a lie.

If you want to live: then don't kill living things and don't eat them.

If you want to die: then kill living things, and die.

Water seeks its own level.

Absorb living energy: and you shall live.

Absorb dying energy and you shall die.

Love; and you shall live.

Hate; and you shall die.

Food is an artificial, unnatural replacement for love and fun. Once humans settled down and replaced love with food. Once we became killers. That was when the poison of destructive civilization went into an accelerating overdrive that exploded across the world. Instead of trying to love each other, and share some little bits of food with each other only as tokens of our love for each other. We did the opposite. Love became an icon, a symbol. Food became love. Love became food. Love became symbolized as food: instead of the other way around. Food is only a genetic SYMBOL for love. It is one of Nature's deflections away from what it was supposed to do.

Instead of trying to personally love as many people as we could. We started trying to feed as many people impersonally with food instead of personal love. That degenerated quickly from feeding as many people with food impersonally... to killing as many living things as we could to eat... Impersonally.

Instead of taking a few symbols of giving to keep us alive from the most giving plants of Nature. Our bodies and souls were so poisoned that we only had a taste for the worst plants and food possible. Like the grains of wild wheat. Small, easily portable eggs of a germinating plant. So we could kill each life-egg of each seed at its root... by stripping the seedlings off the plant before they could fall to the Earth, and sprout and grow.

Once humans settled down and stopped loving and started hating more... our settled squatting ancestors developed a raging hunger to kill more seedlings.... They developed a raging lust to kill more young things before they could grow up and defend themselves. The safest way to kill living things was to kill the weakest, smallest living victims they could find... the tiny seeds of grass plants. Because they were the smallest and most numerous, and easiest to crush between their teeth.

We killed the tiniest living things we could... seeds... and crushed them between our teeth. But in order to kill more of them, we grew them in captivity. We enslaved them, just so we could kill these seedlings faster and better, and more efficiently; as mass murderers of plants and seeds. The invention of over-intensive tool-use, or the Agricultural Revolution... was one of the hugest, most cowardly forms of mass slaughter and killing ever invented. It was not an agricultural revolution. It was the invention of mass-murder as a way of life.

From that leap into the total mass-butcherery of plants... ever since then: we have become obsessed with mass death, and mass killing of animals and then the mass killing and death of Neanderthals, and finally with our own mass genocides and killing ourselves in World Wars by mass slaughter. Lengthen your perspective of the past and speed it up: and you will see this progression of ever-increasing death and destruction on a mass scale.

The Jewish Bible tells of the beginning of this evil. How before humans were corrupted with the evil of original knowledge; meaning the knowledge of how to use tools to kill with; they ate nothing. The fruit of Knowledge was the first evil they were stricken with. And what was that knowledge? The knowledge of how to use tools to kill with.

What was the actual first evil tool? The ape hand reaching to pluck and kill a living fruit, the seed of Life, and instead of lettings that fruit drop to the ground and grow its seeds as it was intended to and meant to and designed to do... Plucking that fruit before it was ready to drop, and let its seeds germinate sprout and live.

What is the symbol of the first computer company ever created? The apple: Apple computers. Its logo is the image of an apple.... With a bite taken out of it. Representing the knowledge of evil.

Why is the Apple Computer Company logo a representation of the knowledge of evil? Because computers represent machine intelligence. They represent tool-intelligence. All tools and machines are evil: all tools and machines are used to create evil. Computers represent the worst machine evil invented so far. Computer intelligence is taking over human intelligence, and destroying the human ability to think for oneself. Children are being raised on computers. They cannot think for themselves anymore. They use computers to think for them. Computers are the dawn of a new mass-cultural psychosis, a new low in human inhumanity... of humans raised inside an artificial culture of machine surrealism that is so disconnected from the rest of the Universe: that humans who use computers: no longer socialize with each other in person. They socialize with their machines instead. They socialize with their computers. They live with their computers, they cannot live without their sacred precious fucking computers... They can easily live without any living human contacting them in person: but they cannot live without their sacred computers. Now billions of humans are being stricken with the fruit of Knowledge. They have become addicted to this fruit. Even though it is an empty fruit. Even though it does not satisfy them. Even though that cannot get enough of it. Even though they have become addicted to it.

What color was the first logo of Apple Computers? It was a spectrum of all colors. Now it is pure gold. Moreover, its founder Steve Jobs is now being hauled into court on criminal charges for illegal financial stock options and profiteering. The apple of evil, the knowledge of evil has turned to gold, it has turned into pure greed. It is the apple of Midas now. Everything Midas touched turned to gold. When Midas went to eat an apple: it almost killed him because when he bit into it and tried to swallow the bite of apple: it turned to gold in his mouth. Now: Steve Jobs is choking on his own greed. The founder of the first computer company that spread the evil of abstract meaningless knowledge over the world: has become a greed-crazed Midas praising and glorifying greed instead of knowledge. Human symbols are universal! No matter how much people try to twist their true meanings: they come back! No matter how much humans try to cover-up the true universal meanings of their abstract symbols and abstractions: they re-surface again and again.

The Fruit of Knowledge in the Bible, and the Apple logo of Apple computers signify the exact same thing. They possess exactly the same semantic meaning. They are both temptations that taste sweet, but in their core: they are bitter evil. The first story of the Jewish Bible is still being re-lived, and recreated. It covers the past as well as the future. It is telling you of the original sin: the sin of eating something that seems to be good, but is actually evil. It tells of 4 billion years of living things making the same mistake, and never learning from it. That one part of the Jewish myth of the creation of evil covers hundreds of millions of animal-evil also. Animals finding, eating and killing seeds of plants. Stealing their life energy... as Robber Barons of their eco systems. Lords of the plants. Free to rape and eat and kill as many plants as they wanted to. Because they could get away with it.

But the other part of that evil comes in Eve giving Adam some of the fruit to eat instead of eating it himself. If Eve had not eaten of that fruit of replacing love with food... she would not have been the mother of animals who needed more food than love to survive. Her baby would not have been infected with a hunger for eating fruit or sweets as a substitute for the sweetness of love. There is a genetic reason all babies smell sweet. There is a genetic reason why 90% of all the satisfaction we get from eating comes from smelling food, not actually eating it. People who work in restaurant kitchens lose their appetite, because they smell food all day until they stop feeling hungry.

Babies naturally smell so sweet: that you don't have to eat them. All you have to do is smell them, and your hunger to eat anything fades away. What do nearly all warm-blooded mothers do when their baby is born? They lick them alive. They lick them upright. Only later, does the baby want to be fed milk. Licking their babies is what keeps these babies alive: not milk. Milk is a substitute for love. If animals did not ignore them after they were born: if they were loved more: they would not become love-starved and hungry to fill their mouths and bodies with a replacement for love.

Once our ancestors had committed the sin of reaching for easy fruits hanging in trees... Nature cast us out of our tree havens... as a punishment for our sins of greed and eating living things. And turned us into homeless roaming creatures. We were cast out of Paradise, out of Eden... and wandered out of Africa by way of the Gulf of Aden. When was that Gulf dry land? During the Ice age 12-14,000 years ago. Then; it was a paradise called Eden. Then the Ice age melted, sea levels rose: and the Garden of Eden became the Gulf of Aden. Because we were aided by tools. Because we tried to use tools to turn that wild, natural Paradise into a domesticated Garden. Because using tools created a Gulf between humans and all other living things. And since that time: we have turned ourselves into the worst mass butchers and killers this living-Earth has ever known.

Until.... The idea of love.... The idea of being givers... until the idea of being humane... has become the idea of feeding only starving children and poor humans .... Who we have created by the billions... just so we could feel better about ourselves... or just so we could have an excuse to kill and destroy the rest of the Earth.

And how do we do it? By growing as many living things we can by the trillions and trillions of unbirthed seeds, and eggs, and young children, and infants, and adults or adolescents....

Of as many other species as we can domesticate, enslave, imprison, and oppress...

And then kill them and butcher them, and crush them into paste, into flour, into wheat, into dead deeds, dead seeds, dead carcasses of dead animals and reptiles, and plants... by the billions and billions every day, and every year....

And that part of our glorious civilization.... The closest to Nature... the healthiest part of civilized life is called; farming. We do not call it killing, or mass butchery. We call it farming instead....

And so these mass murderers, these mass butchers... these killers of all kinds of plants, fish, reptiles, plants, eggs, shellfish, mussels, eels, birds, and animals.... Twelve thousand years ago. Became mass murderers, instead of small-time killers. They began to kill in mass numbers instead of killing by hunting-and-gathering.. They became harmers, instead of farmers. Before what they found they killed. Now they became harmers that harmed the living earth by ripping it apart and killing the smallest organisms...

Spawning a race of killers who killed their own kind called Robber Barons.

These Robber Barons have inherited a genetic urge, and genetic need so deeply buried in their subconscious; that no amount of psycho-therapy could bring it to light. The urge to kill in the millions and billions has existed inside every insane human ruler who ever gained the absolute power of life and death over other living humans.

They will never be satisfied in their excuses to kill as many humans as possible. They will never be satisfied; until the entire Earth is dead as a doornail, and they are the last things living on it...

Why, may you ask?

Because this is the only tactic that their reptilian brains have; of evading billions of years of guilt; killing living things.

Total mass extinction. Leave no survivors to point the finger of blame at you. Once a living species is wiped out? Then there are no more living survivors to tell the tale... no presence to prick the deep subconscious and instinctive guilt these mass killers and butchers have of their own deeds. Then the presence of innocent animals that are not killers does not awaken the reptile brain to there being a difference between good and evil, between killing, and not killing.

But the reptilian brain is one of the most stupid forms of animal awareness on Earth. This kind of tactic only worked temporarily... during the heyday of reptiles. But actually; it did not work at all. In fact; this reptilian attempt to cover its own shit sins of killing its own babies, sitting on them, and crushing them, because they were so stupid they did not know the power or weight of their own bodies... the guilt sin of eating their own kind. Was a direct result of them becoming stupid as hell; from the sins of killing and driving into extinction other living species. This created a huge genetic hidden terror-memory of each species being wiped out completely... instead of merely adapting and evolving naturally with no species ever going extinct.

So what did this eating-greed do to the reptiles? It forced all species during the reptile ages of dominance; to explode into so many new species, that it was impossible for reptiles to eat any species into extinction. It forced living creatures to multiply by the millions and billions; in order to avoid the possibility and constant threat of extinction. Instead of eating its prey species into extinction... the dynamic of killing and eating drove the mass killers called dinosaurs into extinction... instead of the other way around. The tactic of attack and extinction backfired upon the stupidest of creatures alive: cold-blooded predators; cold-blooded killers. Instead of the largest most powerful predators and killers ruling the Earth; the smallest and weakest warm-blooded animals survived.

But this stupidest of survival tactics: the attempt to kill off other species, is also the tactic of our vaunted civilization...it is exactly the tactic of Western civilization. We are destined and doomed to become just as totally extinct as the dinosaurs; unless we change how we live.

And now... our modern Western Robber Barons; have become so stupid, and arrogant... their tactic for dominance and competition and survival has been regressing back so far... they are mimicking the intelligence level of dinosaurs, and trying to do exactly what the dinosaurs once tried to do and failed...

By killing their own babies. By killing each other. In order to become the most powerful killers of all. So they can kill all other species, and all other humans.

This is the subconscious motive, the hidden goal, the hidden brain, the hidden awareness, the hidden motive, behind all of the shit we call the Civilized Progress of Science.

The list of scientific stupidities are endless. Science is continually hiding behind excuses and lies. First killing off most of the salmon hatcheries by building dams across the biggest rivers possible... then raising imprisoned poisoned fish at the mouths of the remaining rivers that have salmons returning to spawn... and killing them by viral infections and genetic mutations from the tons of shit they throw into these floating prison fish cages... so the feces of these prison fish falls to the bottom of the ocean in an accumulated pile... mixing in with all the accumulated fish-food... falling to the bottom to rot on top of the fish-feces... and create even worse gases and poisons and virus infections... that are spilled out into the ocean waters to infect every living thing in the ocean for miles around.... So the flows of traveling fish, and water, can carry these lethal killing viruses and genetic mutations all around the oceans of the world... just as humans are doing the same kind of viral poisoning on the generic level by poisoning plant seeds and letting the seeds spread out over the entire Earth... slowly poisoning, and killing every living thing in its wake. All of this is Scientific. All of this is Modern Progress.

So... All the incremental tactics of solving problems incrementally by civilized technology... is actually a very subtle, nice, convenient way to make problems worse, and spread evil even farther.

The idea of farmers stopping the use of pesticides. What about stopping farming altogether? Stop substituting love with food altogether. Only then will we stop being mass murderers enough to live without wanting to subconsciously kill ourselves and kill all other living things on the face of this Earth. Only then will be the level of our subconscious guilt and shame subside enough, so we can face and deal with the deeper levels of our genetic, instinctive, subconscious, and conscious guilt, shame and responsibility as intelligent humans.

The myth of Adam and Eve is not an actual lie. It, as all other human myths are... merely the hidden sins of our ancestors screaming out their guilt and crimes to us on a subconscious level. We only need to connect the correct facts and hints to the subconscious meanings and symbols, to the actual true facts and events... and these myths will become clear stories that are transparently true... and not muddled by shit lies and semantic distortions.

The Bible tries to blame Eve for Adams sin. It is a deflection so lame, so pathetic; that modern Jews laugh at it. But humans believed in it for thousands of years.

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1500

All animals kill to eat to live. They have no moral superiority over us. That is why they do not get angry, or fight us when we kill them. We are only doing to them, what they have been doing to each other for more than a billion years.

However. If we kill off all human killers: then there will only be left living things that are not mass murderers. And the Earth will heal. And do what it was designed to do.

If we allow human killers to succeed in killing off every living thing on this planet, including ourselves and themselves: then this poisoned Earth will never support any new life form ever... or any other energy dynamic at all for that matter. It will become a lifeless husk, and it will die...just as all the other planets in our solar system that have died... and like those that are still slowly dying.

If this is true. What is the reason for Life, if it is doomed to die out sooner or later? Then Life becomes a pointless, absurd, meaningless, futile idiocy. Then the rational of consumer instant gratification and selfishness and meaningless and no love; makes perfect sense.

There are very good reasons why we were designed with hands and arms. There are good reasons why we were designed to stand up and use our hands and arms.

We are not alone in our sins. But we are the dominant species on Earth, and we are the only animals on this Earth, powerful enough to force change upon other animals.

The problem is that we need to find a way to force change upon ourselves first.

The human subconscious has been screaming out its horror at what humans have been doing every since humans invented language. Humans have been twisting words into lies, and twisting the meanings of words into lies... in order to escape the horror of what we were, and still are actually doing.

Basically: the insanity of Human Civilization is the insanity of humans saying:

‘Hey. We can do anything we want!’

And believing that they can get away with it

Or in other words: ‘So far, so good!’

Modern civilization is so full of two-faced hypocrisies; that the very idea of respecting it; is laughable. Modern civilization is supposed to be new, modern. Screaming out how new it is. New! Worship the newest ideas! Buy the newest! The latest! Yet at the same time: modern civilization screams out how old it is. Old! Ancient! Worship the old. Buy the oldest! Glorify the oldest! Don’t ever change! Keep and preserve 10,000 year-old customs! Perpetuate 7,000 yr-old ideas!

And the result? North American natives proudly perpetuating their unchanged hunter-gatherer customs by killing Caribou with modern rifles instead of bows and arrows, and proud of it! Even when they know that the herd they are slaughtering is steadily shrinking into a downslide of inevitable extinction! What? Change the sacred rights of natives killing wild animals, to save the herd from complete extinction? Never in your life! They will proudly kill the last surviving caribou on Earth and then whine about how Global Warming was the fault of it. Not them! Not their sacred ancient culture with their high-powered rifles! How fucking hypocritical can you get?

North American Natives refusing to kill wild animals? Natives trying to conserve dying herds of wild Caribou? That’s not traditional! That’s too modern! Instead; have Indian conservancy agents wailing

1500

The Path of Splitness
Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1501

on TV documentaries of National Geographic: about how they are losing their God-Given Right to slaughter innocent wild creatures, and not daring ever to suggest to their village elders that they might reduce their killing sprees in the Springtime when Caribou babies are most vulnerable to predation being left motherless because the Indians killed a few cows by mistake. They kill only the cows and leave the useless bulls to rot. Is that a sign of how intelligent modern civilized humans conserve the wise old ways and promote the better, newer ways?

What is the sacredness of an unchanged 10,000 year-old way of life: when it involves nothing but killing wild animals and wild fish for protein? Have they ever tried peanut butter? Horrors! Native Americans not killing wild animals and only getting their protein from peanut butter? That's not traditional!

At least other cultures had the sense to domesticate their sources of animal and fish protein, so they would not have to worry about starving to death once they killed off all of the wild animals around them and drove them into extinction. But dare to mention this logical truth to these tribes: and they will hate you and see you are their mortal enemy. What? Justify their sacred ancient ways?

Our culture doesn't have to make any sense; its traditional, it's normal!

These sanctified tribes living at the edges of modern civilization have become even more corrupt than the modern civilization that has corrupted them. These spoiled leftovers from a bygone era are nothing but pure spoiled killers. Their entire culture has been based upon killing for 10,000 years. Now they do it with high-powered rifles. So of course it must be sacred! HUH? High-powered rifles are sacred? No. Silly. They have a God Given 'right' to kill wild animals and fish. Given to them by their sacred ancient ancestors.

Oh... huh? Given a sacred right to kill living animals? Who gave them this right? Their ancestors? Why? Because they used to kill animals, and told their children that it's okay to kill them? So if I give this right to my children... they will be able to kill any animal they want... and all of their children will have the same right?

'What's an ancestor? Somebody who had children before we did. So anybody who had children before we did: becomes a sacred ancestor who can give all of his future progeny for 3,000 years sacred rights for eternity?'

'No, silly: only our original ancestors gave us the right to kill animals.'

Oh... you mean these original Ancestors didn't have any ancestors of their own themselves? They were the first humans? Like Adam and Eve?'

'Well...'

'Oh... you mean these original ancestor had ancestors also... but they didn't listen to what their ancestors told them... They became the ultimate authority? Because they didn't listen to their ancestors?.. Huh? You mean being an ancestor is merely a way of saying you are an old authority figure and you better not question their authority? But that sounds like every other asinine civilized religion in the world today...'

'No, silly. This kind of authority worship is even older than civilized religions... and stupider, and sillier... You've got to be real dumb to actually believe any of it... The only way they can believe it: is

1501

The Path of Splitness
Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1502

by not understanding it. By making it into some gobbledy-gook high-sounding bullshit that sounds mysterious, is full of lies and half-truths... but means nothing'

But oh, the horror of it: if they are ever forced grow their own food and eat peanuts instead of killing and shooting wild animals that they never had to raise one finger to raise or feed or care for. Unthinkable!

Now... they can't have that now, can we?

Now all they have to do to make a living is hold a mass slaughter of wild animals twice a year. Wouldn't you like to get all of your meat by only going shopping twice a year and get it all 100% FREE? Without having to pay one cent for the meat you are slaughtering? Expect these Indians to work for their free food? Heaven forefend. That's not a traditional native custom!

Hundreds of Millions of Asian Indians worshipping 250 million sacred cows living in urban cities for god's sake! Allowing all of their cow dung to collect in city streets to create infestations of flies and disease. While at the same time: millions of Indians flock to modern McDonald's hamburger joints to eat the meat of dead cows. Thus enriching a new modern western corporate culture based upon the mass slaughter of cows. Designated areas where sacred cows wander around untouched, while kept out of other designated areas like freeways, because the sacred traditions of India are not supposed to impede the modern progress of automobiles. How fucking hypocritical can you get? Animal worship cultures, immersed in 7,000 years of cultural degradation; up in arms because more modern Indians are not copying their elders as slavishly as they once used to. While their modernizing cities explode with more filth, and more poverty and more millions of poor. While their nouveau riche come out of their expensive homes to step over the bodies of starving-dying beggars on their way to high-paying modern jobs. That is the insanity of upward mobility with a vengeance.

But it's normal! Ask any rich Indian; what they can do about it. They shrug their shoulders indifferently, and reply: 'Well. That's how things are... We try to do something, but others refuse to listen. What can I do? It's not my fault. That's the way we usually do it.' Etc. Etc. Ad nauseum.

What is modern civilization doing; that ancient civilizations have not done? Piling new shit upon old shit. Piling dead stones upon dead stones. Piling dead shit on top of dead shit. Piling what upon what? Piling death upon death. And pretending that it makes rational sense. While carefully and selectively ignoring the obscene insanity of its own hypocritical contradictions.

What kind of shit is this? What kind of shit is modern civilization? Just what is the modern shit and just what is the ancient shit? Does any of it make any sense? Does anyone bother to notice this? Does anyone bother to differentiate the difference between the accumulated ancient shit and cow dung of Ancient civilizations, and the modern shit air pollution and noise pollution, and water pollution of the gasoline engine? Does piling one on top of the other; make any fucking sense?

People are supposed to take it all for granted. People are supposed to assume that civilization makes sense. People are not supposed to point out the insane stupidities of civilization. We are all supposed to be obedient, mindless ants; and never question anything. Never questioning the pile of shit we are living-in, or what we are doing, or why we are doing it, or how we are doing it. As long as the consumer culture of egotistical self-gratification dominates and poisons human souls. As long as greed and selfishness dominates and poisons human souls and bodies: Every corrupt, self-rationalizing human idiot can say to themselves:

1502

The Path of Splitness
Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1503

‘Hey. I can do anything I want to. I want what I want. I want to do what I want to do. I do what I want; because I can do it, because I can get away with it. That’s all the justification I need. It doesn’t have to make any sense. I don’t have to make any sense.

As long as we can get away with it. Civilization doesn’t need to make any sense

As long as we can get away with it. There’s no need to understand the effect civilization has upon us.

People think they can understand long-dead, extinct civilizations by the evidence left behind. People think they can understand civilizations by what civilizations say. By what they say they believe-in. By what is written and spoken. Not by what is unwritten and unspoken.

Our modern Western civilization preserves the written word by the ton. It preserves cultures. It preserves images and actual events by the ton. If every image and word, every library and film of our modern civilization managed to be preserved so later generations of humans could see and read what we believe-in, and what we say is important. Could they understand what Western Civilization was; without understanding our unspoken, unwritten beliefs and assumptions?

In all of the books, documentaries, films, books, and history books about Western civilization... do you ever see the word: greed, or selfishness as being an integral aspect of Western culture?

NO.

Anyone reading modern books one thousand years later; will get the impression that greed did not exist in our culture.

Except in a few, rare books, a certain individual may be slightly noted as being greedy. Except a few times, in a few books; greed is mentioned in passing... as if it does not matter, as if it is not important... as being one of the many motivating factors which drove people to do what they did. Meaning that since it is unspoken... you can read about the history of civilization... you can read thousands of books about civilization: and you will get an impression that the motivation of greed simply did not exist for 99.999% of all the billions of people who were never singled out as being greedy. The reader is not supposed to understand what motivated civilized people in the past. Authors do not dare to even have an opinion of what the truth about past actually was. We are supposed to read history as an imponderable mystery. History is supposed to be a mystery. Instead of his story. The story of the male killer. Who comes back and tells his story. Not the truth. Just a story. Leaving out the story of those he killed.

For example: what is a ‘mystery’? Why is its ‘y’ pronounced as an ‘i’? Because a mystery is: my story. Why is its ‘story’ written as: ‘stereo’?... Because it is a sterilized story. Why is mystery written as ‘my’ and yet pronounced as ‘mi’?... Because a mystery is a Mis-stated story, a mis-taken story; that has missing truths. It is ‘my sterilized story, my mis-stated story... where I have selectively left out every truth that might reflect badly upon me. Where my part in it has been whitewashed and sterilized of the actual truth. How many different ways do you want to look at this? The human subconscious leaks out what is actual, on so many levels, and in so many ways: you cannot escape the logic of its truths. That is... if you look at it critically, and find the hidden connections.

Do you think any human can understand Western Civilization; without understanding the unspoken, unwritten corruption of unconscious greed in every civilized human heart that ever lived in Western Civilization? Greedy people do not even realize they are greedy. Greed is normal. Greed is taken for granted. Greed is Unspoken. Greed is Invisible. Greed is kept secret. Greed is never mentioned. It is forbidden to speak of it. Because everyone is guilty of it.

1503

Why do you think I have been repeatedly exposing the unspoken, unwritten corruptions of human civilization so many times in this book? Because in order to understand anything human. You must include the unspoken, unwritten things people take for granted and are not aware-of. You must include the unwritten, unspoken Normalities if you want to understand anything in perspective. You must include all unwritten, unspoken, and unpleasant, inconvenient truths if you want to understand anything in its proper context.

Why do you think we cannot fully understand all the extinct, disappeared civilizations of the Aztecs and Mayans, and Egyptians, and Babylonians, Upanishads, etc?
Because we do not know what their unspoken and unwritten attitudes, assumptions and norms, and Normalities were.

But one thing is damn certain. Whatever is unspoken and unwritten: is far more powerful than that which is written and spoken.

What is unspoken and unwritten: Shapes and moulds all human societies one thousand times more effectively and destructively; than what is consciously written and spoken.

Human civilization is shaped and molded by subconscious, unconscious, instinctive motives, urges, forces, and energies... one thousand times more powerfully than consciously spoken and written words and actions.

Western Civilization's claim to superiority over every other previous human civilization was its self-proclaimed conscious rationality. It was supposed to be superior because of conscious reason. It was supposed to have good rational reasons for everything it does.

Even after two world Wars, the creation of the atomic bomb, and the creation of the modern consumer culture of meaninglessness... history books still spout the bullshit line that Western Civilization has prevailed over all other human civilizations: because it was more rational, more sane, more civilized, more advanced.

Where is the history of Western Civilization's subconscious, unconscious, instinctive motives, urges, forces, and energies...? Where is the history of its unwritten, unspoken assumptions? Nowhere. Try to read Descartes and understand what the hell he is talking about. Try to read Aristotle and try to understand what the hell he is talking about. You can't. They were born in different times, in different culture, they believed in 1,000;s of different unspoken assumptions which they considered to be normal, and never wrote them down to explain them to people who have other unspoken assumptions they believe in. Human cultures are based upon unspoken, unconscious, unquestioned, assumed credos called a normality. Normality is the bedrock of every culture. It is an accumulated base. Humans are only aware of 1% of the accumulated normality of their culture. 99% of human cultural normality is never looked at or questioned. 99% of all cultural normality is unspoken.

You cannot understand what the fuck any fucking human is talking about of any other culture or time; because you do not have the right cultural context and historical perspective of what is unspoken... what they took for granted, without ever thinking or writing it.

The Path of Splitness
Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1505

Unless you understand ALL of their subconscious assumptions and unspoken Normalities, and instinctive motives, and their unspoken, unwritten thoughts and feelings and actions also. Unless you understand ALL the unspoken, unwritten assumptions, norms, and corruptions of the culture they were born into, and the unspoken norms of whatever religion they believed-in, and the unspoken norms of the class they came from, and the unspoken norms of the neighborhood they grew up in. You will completely misinterpret what they mean. You will completely misunderstand what they wrote. You will completely mistake what they thought. You will not understand how they thought what they did. You will not understand why they thought what they did.

The context of the human subconscious makes up 99% of our awareness.

It is missing from our conscious awareness.

Unless you find the missing 99% of unspoken, unwritten assumptions, norms, truths, and dynamics of human existence. You will not understand human existence at all. You will not understand yourself. You will not understand other people.

Does anyone living today: know why anyone really did anything; ten years ago, or ten thousand years ago? No. Because we are missing 99% of their subconscious context. And 99% of the actual hard evidence. The best we can do is come up with a general guess.

But if you understand how the human soul works, and how civilization works, and its effect on the human soul. Then it becomes easy to understand.

Once you understand that: ALL of human normality: is a form of insanity. That every human Normality is insane. Only then you can begin to understand the past.

What surprise is it, that we can't understand why people did what they did ten thousand years ago, or ten years ago? Merely because they were insane in different ways, and had different Normalities? The hypocrisy of civilized people, the arrogance of them... assuming that they understand everything... can be seen in every age. Including now.

People who are insane... cannot understand each other, or themselves. Only sane people can understand each other. Only sane people can do that. Only sane people can cooperate with each other. Take away all human Normalities from civilization: and what is left?

Nothing.

Take human insanity away from human civilization: and what is left?

Nothing

Human civilization is a normalized form of Human Insanity.

The best explanation of European culture: was made by the philosopher Nietzsche. He stated: 'Rather than want Nothing: Man wants Nothingness.'

1505

The Path of Splitness
Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1506

After him; came Camus, and Sartre, and their explanation of human existence as being absurd, and meaningless. As in the famous play: 'The Importance of Remaining Earnest'.
Why did Sartre distill European culture down to absurdity?

Why write a book called Being and Nothingness?

Because the only thing that wasn't insane about Western Civilization was Nothingness, and Being.
Did anyone listen to them, after the mass insanity of Two World Wars had destroyed Western culture?
Two wars: caused by a European culture that was totally sick and insane?
No.

What does Modern Western civilization espouse, and sell now:? What is Modern Western civilization proud of? What does Modern Western civilization glorify?

Meaningless Commercial Absurdity.

Oh... well since it involves MONEY.... Then it must mean something? NEGATIVE. NO.

The stated ideas, opinions and evaluations of Western Civilization by Nietzsche, Camus and Sartre have been proven right. What they stated has come to pass. What they said; has been made even more obvious, even more concrete. Even worse: Not only is God dead: but man has eaten him. Man has become God. Consumer culture has devoured religion, and everything else into its insatiable maw.

Does anyone care that they were right?

No.

Their subconscious was screaming out, that civilization is insane.

So?

Civilization is insane. So what. Big deal. As long as we can get away with it: who cares that civilization is insane?

Civilization teaches children how not to love.
Civilization teaches children to live in a world of no love.
Civilization forces humans to live without love.

A human with money and food, but no love: is a miserable unhappy person. A person with love; but no food or money: is a happy, laughing, giggling, giving, joyous person!

You cannot help a poor person by giving him money. You cannot give a poor person their own self-esteem. They have to earn their own self-respect.

Giving money does not help them.
But giving them love does.

1506

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1507

But instead: what do we do?... We give the poor; money and food: but no love. It should be the other way around. We should not give them any money or food. We should only give them love. But... people who have more money and more food than other people... have less love to give than poor people. They have almost no love to give anyone. They only want to take, not give. They do not know how to love.

Poor people do not realize that they are better human beings than rich people who have too much food. Rich people who have more food than poor people do not realize that they are not as worthy of being loved, and not as humane as poor people. Poor people are more honest, and have more courage than people with too much money and too much food. All poor people are more loving than people who have too much food, or too much money, or both.

Jesus said that it is harder for a rich man to reach heaven than for a camel to pass through the eye of a needle. Today everyone is rich: so everyone scoffs-at and ignores this. But it is still true. Riches create poverty. Poverty creates wealth. BOTH are evil. But since Jesus was poor: he did not have the perspective or wisdom to understand and explain that imbalanced inequity is evil: regardless of which side of the imbalance you look at. Civilization creates both of these one-sided, imbalanced evils.

This is one reason why civilization is a filthy, obscene, piece of shit. This is one effect civilization has on humans. The reason civilization is a filthy, obscene piece of shit, is because of its effect on humans. Civilized abstraction is the evil, sick, stupid, blind process of substituting something that is actual: with a token or symbol. And then throwing away the actual thing in preference for the abstract token or symbol.

Why did our ancestors crush grain? They crushed every fucking thing they could lay their hands on. Why did our ancestors burn food before eating it? They burned every fucking thing they could lay their hands on. For millions of fucking years. Once you do not shy away from the horror of what monsters our ancestors actually were: our entire history becomes easily understandable, and easy to follow.

For thousands of years. We have associated money and food... with love and self-esteem and self-respect and love. But that is a lie. Eating is not love: it is hate. What is the subconscious meaning of hate:??? Ate. You destroy what you hate, you crush what you hate, you burn what you hate. Unfortunately, when you do that: you crush and burn and destroy all of your love also. You destroy all your true self-esteem, your true self-respect.

Now; we have evolved to the point where we have thrown away all of our actual self-esteem, all of our actual self-respect, all of our actual love... and replaced it with food and money and dead material objects. And drugs, and distractions, and work, and crap. We have replaced love with hate and ate. With killing and eating. With self-gratification. When you buy something like food with money: you are exchanging death for Life: you exchanging a token of death for a living thing that was killed for your gratification in exchange for a token of death. That is a negative dynamic and a negative exchange and a sin.

Jesus said that all men are sinners. He was right. Instead of sharing love: we share the crime of killing and eating... by sharing the crime of killing something that was alive and had just as much right to live as we do: and eating it every day: we become equally guilty and equally sinful of the same basic crimes. Civilized people practice the ritual of sharing food and eating together. This way there can be no one who will point a finger at others.

1507

This is what civilization has led us to: instead of sharing our love: we share our crimes. Instead of living as equals: we kill as criminals. We are equals in sin: not love.

We eat and shit as equals. We all eat and shit. We are all equal in the basic vicious cycles of the Universe. All living creatures eat and shit. We are equal to all living things that eat and shit. We are no better than any other living thing that eats and shits.

What is the culture of civilization? It is the romanticizing of killers and rapists and human scum: who should have been despised and killed and wiped out long ago. It is the ignoring-of, and laughing at: Truth, Beauty, Honesty, Courage, Wonder. It is the creation of ugliness. Why did the ugliness of Picasso's 2-dimensional shit suddenly become to be perceived as 'art' and 'beautiful'? He was simply reflecting how European culture after the 1st World War had become dehumanized by the mass slaughter and brutality of a machine culture that worshipped the power of war and total devastation and destruction. The flat, empty and two-dimensional spiritual ugliness of his paintings showed how the evolution of abstraction had taken over and dominated European civilization to such an extent: that humans were no longer human. They were 2-dimensional caricatures.

The greatest two basic evil weapons in the world today: are the weapons of mass destruction... and the weapons of mass distraction. As long as mass Media distracts the masses from the truth: the makers and users of weapons of mass destruction can go on piling up their arsenals of death. As long as the Mass Media: as long as its weapons of Mass Distraction are protected by weapons of Mass Destruction: the culture of Global Capitalism and Consumerism can go on brainwashing the entire human species into worse and worse disconnected states of normalized mass-insanity. Mass distraction and Mass Destruction are the two most modern, most powerful evils of our present civilization.

Distraction-Destruction. Don't look at what we are doing. Look at Distraction. Look at the Distraction of Destruction. Don't see Destruction as being evil. Be distracted by it. Love it. Watch distracting movies that show things being destroyed.

Distraction is destruction. Destruction is distraction. Ignore the warning signs. Stay as distracted as possible. Then run distracted... screaming in fear as your world around you collapses. Only react if there is a crisis. Be distracted by crises. Never do anything about the signs of impending collapse. Ignore all destruction: except as a distraction. Treat destruction as a distraction.

All Distraction is Disconnection. All distraction disconnects you from the truth. All tool use is Disconnection. Making and using tools disconnects you from the truth.

The insanity of 7 billion humans 'pursuing their own concerns'... is an insanity that is so insane: words cannot describe it. If you asked these 7 billion people why they are doing what they doing, they would not be able to give you any sane rational answer. Except to shrug their shoulders in resignation: or blame it on 'society'. 7 billion make up human society. But not one of them has the courage to change it. Humans have given up fighting for something. They have given up fighting against something.

Why? Because the corruption of modern human culture has invented the sacredness of unexamined self-indulgence. It has not only invented the cultural unspoken assumption of pursuing your own concerns, it has not only created human societies that are based upon 100% personal selfishness and personal self-indulgence. There IS no other culture anymore except the sacred unspoken religion of pursuing your own concerns as selfishly as possible.

7 Billion selfish humans inside the artificial structure of civilization, with each one pursuing their own abstract, self-indulgent, concerns: has created a snarled mass of cultural insanity called individual consumerism. 7 billion anti-social selfish human beings packed together as tightly as possible... sharing only one thing: selfishness, self-indulgence.

Luther tried to reform the Indulgences of the Catholic Church by starting a new movement where the church could not sell indulgences. He unwittingly created a mass of millions of Protestants who found they did not have to buy spiritual indulgences for money from the Church. So they went about buying and selling physical indulgences to each other. The result of this insanity is the insane culture of Global Capitalist Consumer Society. 7 billion humans... addicted to every possible kind of self-indulgence possible. Human civilized culture is now so insane: that civilized humans believe anyone who tries to change capitalist culture is insane and wrong. Civilized humans are so insane: they actually believe modern consumer Capitalist society is the best possible society there is, and there is no other way a human could possibly live. Modern humans cannot imagine their lives without plastic bags and coffee. They cannot imagine anything new or different from what they already consider to be normal, they have no imagination left.

The reason 7 billion humans have stopped fighting for or against anything: is because they have stopped fighting their own worst impulses. They have given in to their own worst devils inside them. Subconsciously; they know they are guilty of evil. This is why 7 billion humans do not fight against evil: because in order to fight evil: you must first fight it within yourself. And since the insanity of the sacredness of unexamined self-indulgence is normal all over the world today... There is no higher authority which can force them to examine their own lifestyles and belief systems. There is no critical self-examination going on anymore in human society. All evil has not only become normalized, it has become personalized into each individual pursuing their own personal concerns:

“Fuck the rest of humanity, fuck the rest of the planet, fuck the Universe: I just want what I want and I want it now. Regardless of what it will do to the Earth or other people.”

The result of this global normalization of the unspoken sacredness of negative human personal concerns: is that human society has developed an ethic of pure evil. 7 billion humans are destroying the earth as fast as they can. 7 billion humans are poisoning and killing and destroying every living thing including their own bodies, their own brains, their own families, their own children, their own communities as fast as they can. Human civilization has become so insanely evil: words cannot describe it. The ethics of self indulgence has become so insane and so evil: words cannot describe it.

The basic ethical difference between the ethics of GOOD and ethics of Evil: is the ethical difference between LIFE and Death. We must change human ethics around. We must stop wasting all our time and energy raising up dead buildings, and spend our time and energy raising up our living children. We must tear down everything that is dead, and raise up everything that lives. Instead: we tear down everything that lives: and raise up everything that is dead.

All other animals and all other living creatures can live without artificial means of support. They can get along just fine without all of this garbage. We can't. The supposed superiority of having civilization is merely our inferiority complex: turned inside out. We secretly envy other living creatures: because they do not need all this artificial shit. We wish we could be like them. But we can't. Why? Because we have chosen tool-ease over natural hardship. We have chosen cowardice over Courage. We have chosen dishonesty over Honesty.

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1510

We can decide. We have free will. It does not have to be this way. Unless you do nothing. Unless you choose not to choose. Unless you choose what you know is bad for you. Unless you consciously choose to avoid the truth. Unless you spoil yourself by indulging in self-gratification.

The Semite Bible is full of hidden truths that have been twisted and distorted. Truth is not cunning. Truth is not devious. Truth is so obvious: that civilized people are blind to its directness. The reason Jesus gathered his disciples together was not because he knew he would die. He was not a prophet. He could not see into the future. He gathered them together for a last supper. After this last supper: none of his disciples were supposed to eat anything again:- ever. This was the actual meaning of the last supper.

This has never before been understood: until now.

Jesus had become so filled with love: that he had had stopped eating; and found out much to his surprise... that he could live without eating any food at all... This was what he was trying to teach his disciples. Jesus expected his disciples to be able to do the same thing. They thought he was crazy. They were half-convinced he was a God. Only Gods do not eat.

The secret of living without eating is in the first part of Genesis. God created Adam by breathing upon him. He gave him life by breathing upon him. Life IS breath. Breathe IS life. The Earth breathes upon living things. Life is not eating. Life is not killing. Life is breathing. Life is sharing. Life is in-out. Life is sex. Life is not death.

Who was Jesus? 'Jesus' is merely a Semitic misspelling of the Greco-Persian slang word: 'Zeus': used in the Mid-east. He is a cross between the Semitic prophet Jehovah, and the Greek sun God: Apollo. Apollo was the son of Zeus. Jesus was the sun of Apollo. He was brighter than his father. He eclipsed his father. He eclipsed all the Greek Gods. He was born in the exact geographic center of the three main civilized cultures of the Ancient World: Egypt, Persia and Rome. Jesus was a mixture of all 3 main cultures. He was a Semitic cultural spurt: that came from 3 cultures pressing against each other; and re-creating a new cultural center where none existed before. Jehovah-Zeus-Jesus. The word Jesus is a mixture of Jehovah and Zeus: right down to the pronunciation of Zeus as ZooZ And Jesus as JeZUZ.... Je-hova and Je-sus. These semantic-litoral-written-pronounced coincidences are not coincidences at all. His name is not hard to understand: after Herod's mass genocide of all babies in Judea: he stood out as the only baby in the land. He was King of the Babies; he was the first of the babies. When he was a baby: people came from far and wide to see him. He was worshipped and glorified as a baby. He was worshipped as the one and only baby in the land.

Jews: 1st race of God-Monothemism believers. We are number one: We Jews are special. We Jews are better than any other race on Earth. A Greek-Semitic mixture of meanings: Zeus- Jews-Jeus-Jesus-JeSus-JeSEEus-JeHOva: 1st of Gods-1st of babies. Get it?

Semites. Jews. Jeus is Semitic juice. Semen. Sperm. 1st civilized tribe to cover the Earth with its sperm. See men cover the Earth. See Jews strip the cover of their penis, and rape it and leave it naked. See men strip the Earth of all living things and leave it a naked desolate desert.

Jesus-Jeus-Christianity: 1st civilized universal religion to cover and dominate the Earth. The explosion of 3 main world religions coming from the same region: covering the Earth with their dogmas. 3 failed attempts to create a universal religion for all humans. 'JE' is 'I' in French. I-SEE-US. Jesus was the first human attempt of universality: to see all people as humans. He was the first to have an expanded awareness large enough to have a better perspective on human nature than anybody else. French was the 1st attempt to spread a universal Language over the Earth and dominate it. It was the 1st attempt to make all humans intelligible to each other.

1510

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

Jesus: King of babies. Babylon: King of all cities. Babylon: the lone city where all babies babbled together and understood each other without using words. Babylon. The verb: Babble: To babble on. To make baby noises. The tower of Babel-Babble. The lone city that babbled to each other in many tongues. Lonely babies babbling to each other. The blind attempts of babies trying to love each other. The first living example of human Love grew under the hanging gardens of Babylon. The second example of human love grew up in Jesus. Both were aborted. All attempts at the reflective art of human love have been cut off. They have all been failed abortions. Just like the Jews cut the foreskins off their own babies: to cut off giving any reflective love to them. The entire history of humans can be understood: if you see us, as an immature species not yet out of its babyhood. We have not yet learned how to love. We have not yet even begun to grow up.

Once you develop an outer perspective of the history of human civilization: you will see it as an ongoing process of The Normalization of Evil. You will understand Dynamic of Human civilization as an Accumulation of Normalized Evils.

The process of Normalization is not hard to understand: all Normalization is, is an unchanging Condition. The reason the unchanging Conditions of civilization are evil, is because they accumulate. They do not regenerate, they do not flow: they are static, they become frozen... and then they start rotting and rotting and rotting: becoming more and more toxic and more poisonous and more evil.

What happens to a civilized Condition of unchanging Normality that is static, frozen: is that it begins to rot... it sinks... lower and lower and lower: until it is invisible, until it sinks below the surface, until it is taken for granted, until it sinks into the human subconscious, until it becomes unspoken, assumed. Civilized humans are made up of static, invisible, frozen, rotting, sinking, subconscious emotional and mental states of fear, hate, envy, greed, selfishness, cunning, cowardice, self-gratification, etc, etc. Not the changing, flowing, expanding, growing, healthy emotional and mental states of Honesty, Courage, Fun, Curiosity, Love, Generosity, Kindness, Sensitivity, Wonder, etc, etc...

The Sadism of civilization

During Stalin's reign of Terror. The worst prison in the USSR was the Lubyanka Prison in Moscow. Prisoners were tortured there using the most modern techniques. One technique was to starve people almost to the point of death... and then when they were almost dead, give them a tiny taste of the best food... just enough to keep them from dying completely, just to torture them as slowly as possible. Human civilization is sadistic. It is sadistic on a very cunning and subtle level. When human babies are born into civilization: civilization gives them just enough love so they will not die. And then civilization starves them of their need for love for the rest of their lives.

This is what civilization does to all humans living inside it: It gives humans a tiny taste of what they need and want... and then starves them of it and denies them of it for the rest of their lives. It forces people to die as slowly as possible. It forces people not to live. Its artificial civilized conditions make it impossible for humans to live in it. Humans do not live in civilization: they only die in it, and from it. It forces people to live on empty dreams, on fantasy, on hope: because the actual truth is too horrible to face. It forces people to live not in the present. It forces people to escape their actual civilized reality. It forces people to love their own self-created fantasies. It forces people to live in self-created fantasies: because the horror of the actual truth of what is outside them, the horror of what they actually live in, has to be blocked out in order for them just to be able to function enough to get through one day as dead robots; drugging and numbing themselves into insensibility.

Civilization starves humans of freedom. It starves humans of self-esteem. It starves all humans of love. It starves humans of happiness. It starves humans of health. Civilization starves humans of every single necessary thing we need to be healthy and happy. It starves them of every single thing they are designed to have and should have and should not be denied from having it. The one message all human babies are brainwashed with is the word: "No!" You can't have that! No! Don't touch that! No! Don't do that! No! Don't think that! No! Don't feel that! No! Don't look like that! A million 'no's' later, and no 'yes's... after negative feedback messages overwhelm and brainwash them: human babies and children die inside. They are usually emotionally and mentally dead inside before the age of five.

Modern cultures now poison human babies and human children with so many toxic drugs, and chemicals and additives and trace elements of pure poison in their food drink air and living environments: that they become so unhealthy, they almost physically die from the toxins in their living environments before they reach 5 years of age, never mind the more subtle levels of human health on the mental-emotional-social-spiritual-ethical-moral levels of unhealthy. Sickesses, ailments, diseases, cancers, etc... The list of new sicknesses that never even existed 50 years ago is a symptom and a measure of how much more poisonous human civilization is today compared to how poisonous it was 50 years ago.

The sadism of civilization towards human babies and human children is universal: all civilized human cultures practice the same sadism of denying young babies and children love-kindness-tenderness-happiness-freedom. All human adults practice sadism towards human babies and human children

Before the 2nd world War: European human civilized culture was universal in how it treated its children. Children were ignored until they 'grew up'. Only after children became dead inside were they ever recognized as being human.

This is the fucking filthy, stinking secret unspoken assumed silent hidden sadism that is being practiced today in every single fucking family that has a baby or a child to raise and take care of. When this sadism is done to babies and children: when children and babies all over the world scream in pain and sadness and sob and weep... every single human adult: turns a blind eye and a deaf ear to what is being done to the children and babies next door to where they live. This is the universal crime of adult humans that none of you want to speak of or look at. The crimes of sadism that you practice against your own baby and your own child. In modern cultures: babies and children are kept locked inside in rooms and houses where nobody can hear their screams of pain and agony as they are slowly and systematically tortured until their humanity is completely destroyed and they become dead souls inside before the age of 5.

Why do you think suburbs were created? They were created so neighbors would not phone the police when a parent tortures their baby or child. The houses are all built so nobody can hear what their neighbor is doing to their children in secret, behind closed doors. Why do you think the impersonality of modern cities has increased to the point where a murderer can go on stabbing their victim to death with over 60 murderous stab wounds, while hundreds of people passing by did not lift one fucking finger to stop him? The alienation of the modern human living in a city has been created to make sure that they never report any cases of child abuse or child neglect to authorities. Human alienation has been created so humans will not help each other or report any crime to any authority.

The reason why people never report these crimes is very simple: they were abused and sadistically tortured when they were little also. As far as all civilized human adults are concerned: the sadistic torture of babies and children... is perfectly normal.

The torture of human babies and human children is fucking normal in all human civilization. It is done to every living child and every living baby. It is practiced as secretly and as cunningly as possible. It is hidden, it is covered up, it is practiced by every single human who raises a human baby or a human child. For this one reason alone: the normality that humans call human civilization: should be dismantled and destroyed

Once you develop an Outer Perspective of human civilization: you will realize that all Normality is Pure Evil. Once you understand how and why all forms of unawareness called Normality creates Evil. You will understand that the only things GOOD about human awareness are: Honesty, Courage, Fun, Love and the Sense of Pure Wonder.

If the human intelligence used for selfish negative purposes were turned completely around and used for unselfish positive giving purposes... the entire living Earth would blossom into happiness and health so fast it would seem like a miracle had transpired. One person cannot do it. No single isolated person inside the negative selfish culture of civilization can make a dent in the 7 billion sucking greedy, selfish assholes who have a basic negative direction to their natural living radiating life energy. All weak, cowards and liars and greedy selfish people have only one direction to energy: IN.... "What's IN it for ME?" What can I steal from other life sources and resources for MY comfort and pleasure?"

If human beings were educated properly: they would realize and understand that all IN energy which does not radiate out and circulate with other living energies: is the surest way to sickness, weakness, ill health, unhappiness, misery, fear, cowardice, victimization, and death. If human beings were educated to turn their life energy and their awareness outwards: and radiate it out in a sense of pure wonder, and honesty and courage and happiness and fun: not only would their whole lives be transformed beyond all expectation: the whole earth would be transformed also.

The point I am making is that this can be done. It is not impossible. It is not hopeless, it is not difficult. What prevents this from being done is the negative resignation of negative people who have already given up trying to be happy. What prevent this from being done is.... Nobody has tried to do it yet.

That is all.

This book is not meant to be a book of hopeless gloom and doom. It is not meant to be only a negative critical book. But negative evil energy must first be exposed and understood: before Positive energy can be educated and learned. So the evil of negative weak energy does not creep back into Positive healthy changes. To be successfully Positive: you must know your enemy, and understand your enemy. This way you will not be fooled and deceived by your enemies. This way, your enemies will not be able to fool you and make you believe that they are actually your friends. This is the age-old tactic of the Trojan horse. If someone is your enemy: do not accept anything from them at all. do not compromise your values with weak, sick, sly, hypocritical, mediocre, lying sneaky backstabbing rationalizing evil people who will all try to deflect your truth and lead you AWAY from your original intention of healing yourself by helping others, and giving instead of taking. If you study history: you will find that all civilized humans only make allies with each other: if they can get some advantage out of it. Once they cannot get any more advantage out of their alliance: they drop their supposed friends like a hot potato and turn on them and try to kill them. The lesson of civilized history is that all civilized humans practice betrayal. As long as you live by the weak, negative, civilized dynamics of selfishness, fear, envy, greed and hate: you will be betrayed by everyone whom you think or thought is your friend, and you will do the exact same thing to others also...

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1514

Negative and positive energy needs to be first correctly identified before you can do anything about it. If you are not aware enough to know whether someone is good or evil: then do not let yourself get sucked into their value systems or beliefs. Do not be deceived by false kindness.

Every fucking selfish person trying to sell you something for some profit and-or advantage: will be nice to you. If you give to selfish corrupt people: they will suck you dry. They will take everything you give, and give nothing in return at all: that is... unless they can get some more selfish advantages from you. Positive good people do not want anything for themselves. They only want to make other people happy. They only want to feel happy. They only want other people to be as happy as they are.

The one huge, huge mistake of positive people: is they do not get together as a group. They do not organize themselves as a society of people who share common values. The one huge wrong thing positive people who are more honest and have more courage than other people: is that whenever they meet another positive person who believes the exact same things they do and is on their wavelength: they do not get together with each other. Instead; they drop each other like hot potatoes and go off into the mass of millions of selfish takers, looking for some pre-built society, pre-made culture, pre-constructed pre-organized social group to find and fit into. Well, there is no pre-made community or society where you can find happiness and acceptance in. You have to make your own happiness. Nobody will or can give it to you. And the only way you can make it is by creating your own positive society by getting together with positive people and kicking every negative ass out of your society and never letting them into your society.

The only way you can make your own happiness: is by making it with other people who are also making their own happiness. Only when honest courageous people realize that they are all alone in a world of 7 billion selfish asses and weak, conformist, fear-filled, mindless human slaves, and that these idiots do not want to know the truth about anything. Only when honest people find that they are against the majority of all conformity and conforming capitalist culture; will they ever realize that the only way they will ever find happiness is to create their own culture, their own society, their own civilization. Only when people are educated enough to accurately discern between GOOD and evil, can they ever create a human society and culture that does not allow weak evil, sneaky, sly, cunning, hypocritical dishonest, illogical, irrational, shit to seep back into their new lives. In order to do this: honest people must develop their critical awareness to the highest level possible. This is why this book is mainly a book that is a demonstration of how critical awareness coupled with Honesty and Courage, can expand your Sense of Pure Wonder, and empower you so that you can use your own living energy, so you can use the power of your own life properly, and not be suckered by all the countless tons of civilized lies you have been programmed with.

Only when you empty your soul of all lies and all false assumptions which civilization has filled you with: only when you empty yourself of all the unspoken assumptions that civilization has poisoned you with: can you ever fight back and expose the lies of civilization. The only way you can do this is by developing your Sense of Pure Wonder. The only way you can do this is by wondering about everything. Not just yourself. Not just other people. Not just the Outer Universe, not just your Inner Universe, not just the Earth.

1514

Once you understand that there is no such thing as normality. Once you do not see or perceive anything as being 'normal'... then you will be able to explore everything you see. Then you will be able to explore everything inside you and outside you and find out what is actually true, and what is an actually false. This is why the Sense of Pure Wonder is so important. It is the root of your awareness as a human being. Without a Sense of Pure Wonder: no human can ever learn the actual truth about anything. Without a Sense of Pure Wonder: the human race is doomed to destroy itself.

Human civilization is evil and negative because it reinforces only the negative: not the positive... in fact it destroys everything that is even slightly positive. Human civilization is evil and negative because it reinforces only the lowest of our animal instincts; not the highest of our human needs. We have brainwashed our children into becoming unthinking consumers by sticking milk bottles into their mouths and nipples into their mouths the second they open their mouths. The instant they become upset or angry, we assume that they are hungry for food... They are not hungry for food... they are hungry for new experiences. They are not hungry for milk: they are hungry for fun. This is what human babies have been trying to tell us ever since human babies were created. Babies are hungry for touch: not food. Touch a human baby, hug it, play with it, have fun with it: and it will stop bawling and crying. Stop holding it, stop touching it, stop playing with it; and it starts bawling again... Our Children are not hungry for food: they are hungry for new experiences; they are hungry to learn everything they can about the world they live in. Babies and children are hungry for fun and new experiences. New experiences are fun for them. Old experiences are boring and no fun. Babies and children are starved for fun and love and new experiences: they are not starved for food. Until we recognize that the only important thing in life is to raise the next generation of babies and children better than we have been raised... not worse. Until we understand that the only way we can raise human babies and children better not worse... is by giving them more new experiences, more challenges, and more freedom, and more difficulties which they can overcome and learn by... instead of giving them less new experiences, less freedom, less challenges which they can overcome and learn by; the human species will continue its downslide into the ever-increasing increasing stupidity, boredom, monotony of the roboticized mechanical horror we force them to live inside called civilization. The ease of civilization is precisely what is evil about it. In order to be happy: all humans need to have fun and play; not just babies and children. We all need to face new challenges and new difficulties every day. If we don't have them; we go to sleep; we become bored; we stop living; we merely exist. Mere existence is no fun. Mere existence is boring. Mere existence is not life. Existing without living, an existence without living: is not worth living for. Only Life is worth living for. Only living creatures are worth living for. Not dead things. Dead things are not worth living for. That is why all civilized humans live for nothing; we don't live: we just distract ourselves from the boredom of our civilized existence. Distraction is not life. Distraction is not living. Distracting yourself from your boring civilized existence is not living: it is a slow death; it is a prolonged slow death: not life.

What you the reader need to understand is that we can change our society through cooperation. Human society can be changed. The only reason civilization exists at all in the first place, is because humans cooperate with each other. Anything you need, anything you want: there are people waiting to help you. If you want to travel to another continent: you go to an airline and they will help you. If you want food: you go to a grocery store and they will help you. That is all people do... they help others: For Money. Money destroys their good intentions, it poisons their helping others.

This is why civilization doesn't work. Money destroys cooperation. Take money out of the equation. Take the profit motive out of the equation. Take the selfishness and inequality out of the equation: and the whole system fixes itself automatically without anything else needing to be changed. Take getting an advantage over others out of the equation: and all the problems we have created are automatically solved. It does not take an expert to understand this. It just takes the realization that selfishness does not work when it is based upon slavery and inequality. Selfishness only works when it is based upon 100% equality. People getting together ... as equals, and helping each other unselfishly as a society is a selfish thing to do; because by doing this, you not only improve your own life: you improve everything around you... which improves your life even more. All it takes is an expanded awareness of your own selfishness. All it takes is an enlightened selfishness. If you want not only your own life to improve and get better, but the life of everyone around you to improve and get better: that is an example of enlightened selfishness. It is enlightened because your desire to improve the life of everyone around you comes from the knowledge that the happiest and best and healthiest kind of life is sharing your life with equals: not having more or less than others, not being better or worse than others.

What has civilization accumulated? Has it accumulated love? No. It has accumulated hate. Has it accumulated courage? No. It has accumulated cowardice. Has it accumulated truth and honesty? No. It has accumulated lies, and dishonesty. Has it accumulated learning? Yes: Learning how to kill, poison, pollute, hate, lie cheat, steal, and rob better. That does not make things better: it makes everything worse. Civilization must be destroyed. If it is not destroyed: it will destroy us, and the Earth we live on.

The fact is, in civilization machines are more important than people, buildings are more important than people, abstract institutions are more important than people, property is more important than people, territory is more important than people, ownership is more important than people. Civilization is not built for humans. Civilization uses humans to build itself. Civilization uses humans as slaves to maintain its mechanical existence. Until we wake up and realize that we are being used as slaves to perpetuate civilization: the human species will continue to be enslaved to an inhuman system of accumulation that it does not need.

The reason civilization is evil is that it kills, poisons and destroys the strongest, the healthiest and the best: while nurturing and coddling and protecting the sickest, the weakest, the worst, the most unhealthy. Civilization creates disease: not health. Civilization creates weakness: not strength. Civilization is genetic suicide. Civilization is not positive. Civilization is negative. The fact is, the more you share: the more friends you make and have: the less you share the more enemies you make and have, and when you share nothing: then everybody is your enemy. 12,000 years ago, the concept of abstract ownership was created. The result today is: 6 billion apes screaming: 'It's mine! It's mine! It's not yours, it's mine! All mine!' Until we humans realize and understand how stupid this abstract concept is: the human species will never change for the better. The point is: the system of civilization is the enemy of Man; Until living people realize this, they cannot fight the system they are forced to live in. All systems which are larger than human personal relationships are inhuman and evil. Every living person who works for and does the bidding of these civilized systems is forced to be uncivil towards the human beings they interact with every day of their lives. Living humans must be educated about the evils of civilization. Before you can fight your enemy: you must understand it. You must understand that all humanity originates from and comes from people willingly or unwillingly subsuming their own humanity and bowing to the dictates of an inhumane system that is not human and has no humanity.

To fight against the inhumanity; you have to learn how to fight the system of inhumanity: not just the inhuman pawns who uphold it, believe in it, worship it, obey it and gain advantages from it. This fight has not even begun yet. It will begin only when people are educated enough to realize that living inside the system you are fighting is a losing proposition. Living people must learn how to become independent of the civilized systems they are born into before they can fight against civilization intelligently. The instant people become independent of the system called civilization it will disappear and not need to be fought against. The instant people are educated about the evil they live inside, and that lives inside them: it will disappear without needing to be fought against. All that is needed is the expanded awareness of pure wonder and the truth to set people free of the evil they have been born into and live inside of.

Once you realize that it is the system that is evil: not the people inside it: then the system can be trashed without any violence. BUT: if there are people willing to die in order to preserve and uphold the evils of civilization: then they have made their choice, and let them die along with the dying evils of civilization. Those who do not want to change anything: those who profit from the evils of civilization are precisely those who should be killed. There is no such thing as a non-violent revolution or a non-violent rebellion. Only when people realize that in order to fight the enemy of Life you must kill all who worship and support the machinery of death will any effective rebellion against the system and structure of civilization be mounted and waged.

All armies: all governments which rely upon weapons of mass destruction are the enemies of all living people. The polarization of Life VS death is clear. The entire human species must rise up against its masters and kill them every chance they get until there are no more weapons of death, no more armies, no more mindless insane human obedient robots obeying their masters killing innocent civilians. This is already happening in the Mideast. It will spread throughout the entire world and the last death throes of human civilization will be very short and relatively painless. No government can survive against a people who actively stand up and resist that government. All centralized power and machinery and civilized systems must be fought against and destroyed. When this happens and it will happen: living people will wake up and realize they do not have to obey anyone and they do not have to be inhuman and uncaring towards any living creature on earth, and the earth will be cleansed and healed of civilization.

For millions of years: human apes have been unable to tell the difference between what is GOOD and what is evil. For millions of years: human apes have been incapable of telling the difference between the truth and a lie. For millions of years, human apes have been incapable of being completely logical, completely honest, completely Courageous. Now: the human ape has evolved and matured enough so it can understand the true meanings of not only GOOD and evil, but the true meaning of Life and the Universe, the true meaning of both Everything and Nothing. With that knowledge comes responsibility. With that wisdom comes both maturity and power. Truth cannot set you free. But it can set you going in the right direction so you can earn your freedom by being responsible for your own actions.

Throughout civilized history, the only reason people have been fooled by others, the only reason people have been brainwashed into committing evil, is because they did not know the true meanings of what they were doing. This book has been written and published so people can understand the true meanings of things.

There is no choice about the True Meanings of things. There is no choice and no opinion about Universal Truth and Universal Meaning. The only freedom of choice you have, is to choose between what is true and what is not true. I did not have any choice or opinion of what I found and discovered because the only thing I chose was Honesty and Truth. When you choose Honesty and Truth: you do not fucking try to avoid the honest truth no matter how brutal or ugly or discomforting it is. When you try to be more aware: you do not fucking stick your head in a hole and hide from the actual world. When you try to understand everything better, you do not fucking try to pretend you don't understand the truth.

The arrogance of civilized people who believe or think they can have a differing opinion of what is true and what is a lie; the arrogance of thinking you have the power to decide what you like to believe and what you don't like to believe or think is the corruption of evil which poisons human souls. Organic logical truth is universal and universally understandable. Nobody has a monopoly on universal truth. Nobody has a monopoly on Courage. Nobody has a monopoly on Honesty. Nobody has a monopoly on Logic.

Once you strip the truth naked of lies: once you strip yourself of civilized lies and clothes and myths and misconceptions and misperceptions: then there can be no misunderstanding of what the Truth actually is. The only thing which prevents all people from agreeing with each other and living together in peace are the lies, the misperceptions, the misconceptions of civilization and all of its myths and abstract insanity. The only thing which prevents this is the pyramidal structure of human civilization. In order for people to be happy, civilization must first be destroyed. Civilization prevents humans from being happy.

The Principle of Equality

The answer to the pyramidalization of hierarchical human society is simple: equality, a society based upon the principle of Equality and intelligent cooperation: not upon hierarchy and mindless antagonism and competition. However... no practice of this principle of equality can endure and work as long as the main overriding principle of human society is pyramidal. The principle of Equality only works when it is applied universally to everything and people don't use unfair advantages against each other. One armed man against a whole army does not work, even when that one man is in the right and the whole army is in the wrong. But... apply the principle of Equality on a fair playing field, put one army of equal numbers and equal arms against another; and the army which is more in the right, which is actually better and healthier will always win every time. Put a 6ft 180 lb man against another 6 ft 180 lb man, and the better man will always win. In other words; the principle of equality works not only within the parameters of cooperation, but it also works within the parameters of competition.

Why is the Principle of Universal Equality the answer to all hierarchical/centralized human society and why does it always work? Because it does the opposite of what hierarchical human society does. It works in the opposite way that all pyramidalized human society works. In Hierarchical human society: it is the most venal, the weakest, the most diseased specimens who are preserved and perpetuated, the worst, and lowest win out against the best and healthiest... it is the dumbest, the worst cowards, the most dishonest cunning, selfish swindlers who win out against the most intelligent, most honest, most generous, the most loving, the most sensitive, the most humane. Using the principle of Universal Equality prevents this from happening. All people being universally equal with universal equal rights: gets rid of the stinking class of Kings, Dictators, Billionaires, Aristocrats... all of the useless top of the pyramidal pile of shit which do not contribute anything positive to their societies, instead they suck the life and energy and wealth out of their society and make it their business to keep all other humans from having a fair shake, a fair chance, a fair share in their ill-gotten gains and ill-gotten spoils which they did not earn and have no moral and no ethical right to keep. When you apply the Law of Universal Equality Universally: this means nobody is allowed to use any unequal unfair advantage and not allowed to take any unequal unfair advantage over anyone else. This means that a gang of bullies trying to gang up on a lone man, trying to defeat him simply by the advantage of superior numbers... which is a false superiority: in fact it is proof of their inferiority because one bully will never be able to defeat one honest man who stands his ground and refuses to be intimidated... will be instantly attacked by every single human within eyesight. Why? Because there will be no police and no citizens: nobody with any special privileges or rights or powers whatsoever. Human society will police itself with any need of the thugs who protect the property and privileges of the rich as is now the case in hierarchical society. Then... the entire practice of seeking out cunning unfair hidden ploys and tactics and advantages will be eliminated at the root of all human society, and that will be an end to all the corruption of the human practice of using unfair advantages.

But what about the Law of Mediocrity you say? If everyone is Universally Equal to everyone else: with no competition, won't this institute laws which forces mankind farther down into a faceless mass of mediocre sameness and incompetence? The answer to that is the Law of Universal Equality does the exact opposite of becoming more mediocre. The whole reason this dynamic even exists at all is because all of human society is hierarchical and is not based upon the Principle of Universal Equality. In an unfair hierarchical society, anyone on any lower level who dares to excel at anything is soon fired and out of a job or squashed. Anyone who is too honest is soon fired or sabotaged and attacked for threatening the shaky, untenable pile of artificial crap known as human pyramidal civilization. In a hierarchical pyramidal society based upon one-sided accumulation: any blade of grass which grows higher than all the others has its head cut off or pounded back down with a hammer by the huge unfair advantages which all the millions of people who are higher up on the ladder of hierarchical wealth/power/authority/status have... This is where the dynamic of Mediocrity comes from in the first place. The Principle of increasing mediocrity is only one symptom of the many ills and fallacies of the hierarchical pyramidalization of human society which allows only the worst to seep to the top and crushes the best, instead of the other way around.

When you apply the Principle of Universal Equality to human society, it does the exact opposite of becoming more mediocre: It automatically raises the entire society universally to higher and better levels of health, efficiency, intelligence and happiness. How? Why? Simple... the fact is: no two humans are exactly equal to each other. No two humans are identical to each other. So whenever anyone competes on a generally equal playing field where neither has an unfair advantage over the other, whether it is Individual Equality, or Group Equality: 12 men against 12 other men for instance: the better team or man will always win: the more competent, the more intelligent, the more efficient man will always win out: not the other way around as it is right now: where the basis of success in business is the more incompetent and sneaky you are, the less you actually contribute to society the more you are rewarded... A society based upon the principle of Universal Equality will guarantee that the best man will always win out... the best woman will always win out...

What does this have to do with the Law of ever-increasing mediocrity? Everything. Instead of the worst living examples of hierarchical society: instead of commercial advertisements selling young people poisoned black sugar-water and coffee and pizza as their role models on how to live a successful life, they will have intelligent active vegetarians who are much more athletic and able and smart than meat-eaters are and will beat the pizza-eaters every time, until eating pizza and drinking coke or coffee will be the sign not only of a loser, but of a sick person who is addicted to unhealthy foods and beverages and needs to clean up their act. Instead of lowest human scum; billionaires whose only interest in Life is the bottom line; bottom feeders in the moral hierarchy of humanity, instead of the love of money being their highest living examples of excellence, there will be the love of other humans as the highest living examples of excellence to follow.: A society based upon the Principle of Universal Equality will feature only the actual best of each aspect of humanity and health to live up to because the best of everything will finally for once have a chance to prove itself honestly by using the general Principle of Universal Equality. Once you give a generally equal and fair playing field, then the true excellence of all people will shine and be seen by everyone and admired and raise the entire field of play to a higher-better level of Life, Energy, Health, Happiness, Creativity, Fun, Play, Exploration, Honesty, Courage, Friendship, Communal Togetherness, Individuality, Trust, Decency and Goodness

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1520

The Principle of Equality is based upon Giving and Sharing. It is based upon the Sense of Pure Wonder, it is based upon a sense of Gratitude for everything given to you, it is based upon an Appreciation of what is given to you, it is based upon the learned art of accepting gracefully and with gratitude what is given and what is shared. These aspects of humanity have been cut out of human society. There is no sharing, no giving, no gratitude, no appreciation, no Sense of Pure Wonder, no Appreciation of what one already has... These aspects must be re-taught and re-instilled into the awareness of people.

When the best teachers are given a chance; they will attract the best students. When the best students are given a chance to learn from the best teachers. When these young people, the cream of the crop, are given a chance to go out and prove that their ideas are indeed better, when the best parents are given a chance to raise the best children and the best groups are given a chance to create the best communities... their shining living examples will inspire all the rest of humanity to improve themselves because for once there will be no pyramidal pile of 7 billion humans crushing everyone's chance to live healthy happy lives. When everyone is given an equal chance for life and health and happiness: there will be no more pointless adversarial competition, there will be no more obsolete pyramidal structure or culture which stifles and sabotages all attempts to improve things and make them better. Then the Principle of Universal Equality will create a human Society of Intelligent Cooperation without any competition or violence or hate. Then the only evils of pyramidal civilization will be the state of this polluted planet which pyramidal human civilization has left us, and which can and will be cleaned up... and the insanity of nuclear bombs and missiles and weapons of war will be dismantled and gotten rid of forever never to return.

You don't believe me?... Try it. If you don't try it: then you cannot say it won't work. Unless something has been tried and tested: nobody can say whether it will work or not. One thing I have against all naysayers is their demanding to be given an instant easy answer to every problem without them ever having to do any work themselves, or put any effort into solving the problem themselves. The point I have against all naysayers: is that it is they who should be wiped out of existence: not the positive people who want to try something new and are constantly badmouthed and sabotaged and sneered at by these useless things. The point I am making is that nobody will fix your problems for you. You have to fix your own problems. If you don't even want to help yourself: nobody else is going to help you and naysayers are people who definitely do not want to help to improve anything; especially themselves. Negative people are negative to the bone. The only way any positive society can work is if it allows only positive people into its collective whole and ejects all negative nobodies and do-nothings out of it.

Humans have been gulled and fooled into believing that the unfair advantage of tools and technology makes them in some way superior or better than other living creatures. The whole world has been brainwashed and gulled and fooled into admiring all sorts of unfair advantages. To the point where the largest, most powerful, most technologically advanced nation of Earth: America... declared war on a Moslem man hiding in a cave in Afghanistan...and bombs the poorest nations on earth. And what's more... has been unable to find that man hiding in a cave for 11 fucking years. And then instead of capturing him which could have easily done, and put him on trial which they did not dare do because it would have been revealed that Bin Laden had nothing to do with the attack of 9-11... that he was just like all the other dupes who were falsely blamed for their fucking false flag operations. He was allegedly murdered and his body dumped into the ocean to wipe out all the evidence which would have proven that the man they assassinated was not Bin Laden at all. Hiding the fact that Bin Laden had died years ago of kidney failure and the entire farce of terrorism was faked, staged, a publicity scam, a swindle, a propaganda tactic, an excuse..

1520

The tactics they use; blaming the false flag attack on their own nation; which they planned, is getting old. ... The propaganda of convincing all of civilization that one man hiding in a cave in the mountains of Afghanistan was a threat to all of human civilization a threat to the most powerful nation on earth, a nation with nuclear weapons and missiles and aircraft carriers and nuclear submarines... is so disingenuous, it is not even funny... A huge nation that is so weak and so inept and so incompetent... that it could not find this one man for 11 years, this enemy which they invented, this scapegoat... The idea that America, the nation with the most weapons of mass destructions, should be admired and loved and respected for its brave army and navy and air force, er... this huge military machine to battle against this one man who has no aircraft carriers and no nuclear submarines and no jet fighter and no missiles. This reversal of all common sense and truth is only one example of how the propaganda of mass media has brainwashed the masses into believing white is black and black is white. This is the logical descent into madness and insanity which the worship of tools and using unfair advantages has led. The belief that technology is good instead of evil is a complete reversal of the actual truth.

Civilization is rotten and evil for a simple reason. It is the same reason why using tools creates evil. The entire structure of civilization is based upon the idea of having somebody else do your dirty work for you. For at least 2,000 fucking years: Kings and Emperors killed millions of people by letting their armies of professional killers do their dirty work for them. They robbed millions of poor innocent people by letting tax gatherers do the dirty work for them; they fed themselves and their hired thugs and murders by forcing millions of slaves and serfs and peasants do the dirty work of tilling the soil for them, they built huge palaces and castles by letting engineers and slaves do all the dirty work of building these piles of dead shit for them, they raised huge pyramids of stone as funeral pyres to be buried in by forcing slaves do the dirty work of back breaking labor building their coffins for them, the lived sedentary lives of ease and luxury by letting servants and slaves do all the dirty work for them. Robber barons and factory owners and international corporations became rich by forcing poor people to work in factories and sweat shops paying them starvation wages to do all the dirty work for them. The entire concept of power comes from using a tool to do the dirty work of killing an animal, butchering it, roasting it, cutting it up for you. Using a dead tool to do what you could never do without them; using tools as slaves. All the evils of domestication of animals, power, greed, war, slavery, power, taxation, oppression terrorization of the masses, using tools, etc comes from the idea of using somebody or something to do your dirty work for you.

The fact is, the civilization you live inside cannot be justified or rationalized as being good. Face it; everyone inside this corrupt system who enables it to keep on functioning is also collectively responsible for the evil which this system commits as a whole. It is time to end the madness. It is about time intelligent people realize that when something is completely rotten, there is no point in preserving it. In fact what is wrong with civilization is the very idea of preservation. Preserving dead things serves death; not Life. Another reason civilization should be gotten rid of and completely junked is that it is just plain fucking boring, and I mean booooring. Anything that is fun, exciting, challenging or interesting is made illegal, taken away, made unaffordable, outlawed, forbidden, regulated out of existence, discontinued or simply not done anymore... Anything that is healthy and good for you is hidden, never done, kept secret, covered up, buried or poisoned out of existence, or taxed out of existence, or all of the above. Anyone who finds civilization interesting needs their fucking head examined for loose screws. Anyone who thinks civilization is fun or challenges you doesn't know what Life is, and doesn't know what Fun is. It's about time we create a new way of living that is not based upon selfishness and stupidity and greed and corruption and the use of unfair advantages and dead boring machines. It is time to opt out of the entire fucking civilized mess and create our own self-sufficient communities of 12, 24 and 36 people... which do not pollute and destroy the living Earth and do not kill living things. Which is what I told you to do in the 1st chapter.

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

Ten million more pages could be added to this chapter and it still would not expose or uncover one billionth of the actual truth about the unseen, unnoticed, unspoken destructive effect which civilization has had on humans, and is continuing to have upon humans and upon this Living Earth. I will end this chapter here simply because books which have too many pages are not published and are not read.

The Reason Behind Entities

Having dealt with the conditions of civilized human existence and their effect on humans in a very general, sketchy way: now the matter of human reflective life-energy, which splits off from the physical body after death, must be explained.

So... what happens to a person's reflective energy and their reflective awareness after their physical body expires?

The answer is: nothing.

By this: I mean that essentially, nothing changes. Your awareness does not undergo any magical transformation when your physical body dies. You do not disappear. Your reflective awareness does not stop existing. You do not become unaware. You do not become unconscious. Your awareness does not disappear. You do not grow wings, or gain any special powers. You gain no sudden special insight or wisdom. You just leave your physical body. Your physical body dies: the rest of your energy levels remain unchanged. Why? Because Life Energy is not just physical. . Let me explain it to you in this way... if Life Energy was made up of only physical energy: then rocks could come alive, then Scientists would have managed to create Life in a test tube long ago. But rocks can't come alive because though they are made up of physical Energy, they do not possess Life Energy.

Except for the fact of your undead self being cut off from the physical world: your situation does not change. You are simply no longer connected to the physical realm: that's all. When you die: you become an undead human entity. You simply become a non-physical entity. You keep all the other levels of energy you had when you were alive except the physical one. You just don't have a physical body: that's all. You become an inhuman undead entity... which cannot be seen by living humans. You become invisible to living people. You become an invisible unseen wraith that is not physical. Existing in a temporary stasis of nearly total separation from the physical realm but not from the rest of the Universe.

What are inhuman undead entities?

They are the left-over energy radiation fields of once-living people whose life-energy has not died and dissolved completely as it should have. They are everywhere, they permeate the air, the land and the waters of the Earth. They overlap each other and can travel through each other. For example; how many cell-phone calls go through any one space in a large city? Thousands and thousands of cell phone calls easily pass through each other because each one's frequency wavelength is not exactly the same. The auras of undead entities work the same way: they can pass through each other and through you, they can and do exist inside the same space as your living body does: just on a slightly different wavelength frequency. You can't see them just like you can't see cell-phone transmissions, most of the time they don't allow their radiant energy to be visible to living humans.

They are the Unseen. They are the unfelt. They are the unexperienced. They are the unnoticed. They are invisible. They are energy fields. They are invisible energy auras. They are faint accumulations of unexperienced experience. Everything humans learned and did not store in their instincts: has been stored in them. Every experience we humans ever had, and was not integrated into our instincts... is stored in the lives and experiences of undead human entities. Everything that humans learned and did not pass on to the next generation: is stored in them.

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Seven: Entities and the Alternative

1524

Genetically: the function of human entities is obvious: they are the causal chain of evolutionary experience; which is missing in the DNA code of our species.

Once we humans stopped evolving genetically, we continued to evolve experientially-abstractively. So: instead of preserving our species' experiential evolution in its genetic DNA; that causal chain split-off; to be preserved as an accumulation of;

Human abstractive-reflective life-energy experiences...

Or:

Undead Entities.

Instead of human experience being compressed into the genetic wisdom, we call instinct, which is the abstractive equivalent of genetic DNA; it has merely been accumulated into a series of largely undigested, un-integrated segmented life-experiences of past lives.

It exists as the segmented sum of all reflective human experience: a perfectly preserved memory tape of all the life-experiences of all the humans who ever lived: completely frozen.

The accumulation of the compressed wisdom of genetic DNA life-experience is not segmented. It is passed on genetically from generation-to-generation organically. It becomes more and more compressed as time goes on. It penetrates itself. It merges with itself. It flows. It does not just accumulate as unconnected segments as human entities do.

But the life-experiences of humans are not genetically passed-on. They do not merge into a single genetic reservoir that is passed on to the next generation. They stay segmented. Even after physical death. Each segmented entity retains their life-experience intact. They do not recycle their energy or pass their experience on to the next generation. They exist in a realm of energy levels that living humans are not physically aware of.

Take for example the existence of ghosts. They have been diagnosed by scientists as frozen memory-experiences: not quite physical, but also not quite non-physical. They are merely human undead entities who are stuck in-between the two realms of the physical and the non-physical.

Why don't these apparitions fade away with time? Because the energy of human undead entities is a reflective energy. Because these reflective auras do not radiate energy outwards. Because these undead things do not lose their energy through radiating their energy outwards. This is also why they are unseen and unfelt. They are your ego-energy. The insulated reflective isolated ego-aura of a human being is not a physical energy: but nevertheless, it is a level of energy that actually exists. Science has no instruments to detect it or measure it: but the energy of your ego still actually exists: regardless of whether science can detect it or not.

The physical decomposition of your physical body still leaves behind leftover energy that does not decompose or radiate.

Energy cannot be destroyed. Neither can Experience.

Because the Experience of Energy cannot be destroyed.

1524

The Path of Splitness
Chapter Seven: Entities and the Alternative

1525

Experience cannot be destroyed.

Evolution is the Energy of Experience.
Evolution cannot be destroyed.

The experiential memory tape of our ancestors was designed to replace our missing genetic memory code as a repository of experiential wisdom that should have been used by living humans to evolve further.

The compression of human wisdom, the compression of all genetic experience into instinctive wisdom; is merely the process of entropy... or the re-combining of energy into larger base units... or the re-connecting of energy: which results in the connecting of experience into simpler and larger base units.

Korbel's research on snails; shows that not only in humans, but even in other species like the lowly snail, the alteration of the brain also alters the organism as a whole. In other words, experience actually alters the DNA of the brain... and the body. This proves that the inter-connective dynamic of Energy-Experience-Evolution is universal for all living organisms... all the way from snails to humans.

However... with human experience, while it alters the DNA of our brain, it has not altered the DNA of the rest of our body for 100,000 years. Because human experience of the past is not integrated into our bodies genetically. It is integrated by sharing our experiences with others. What experience we share with others while we are still alive lives on in our children. What experiences we do not share with the next generation: dies with us. Humans who share love with their children: their love keeps living on in their children. Love is merely a term for the human sharing of experience. Humans who do not share love with their children do not live on in their children. They are hated, despised and forgotten. Humans who share what they have learned with others live on by passing on what they have learned. Humans who do not share what they have learned do not pass on their experience to the next generation.

Undead human entities are merely an accumulation of human energy-experience that was not passed on to the next generation of living humans. They are an accumulation of non-physical energy. If science ever becomes able to measure this kind of energy, it will also discover the basic energy-split of the human organism into Auric and genetic energy levels. It will discover the difference between reflective and non-reflective human energy. Or... as most call it: the difference between physicality and spirituality.

Do you understand? Your ego dies with you. Everything you ever kept secret from others dies with you. Everything you share with others does not die with you. It keeps on living. This is why the ego is evil. This is why all humans who have an ego are afraid of dying. This is what humans who do not have an ego are not afraid of dying.

This will help explain how human living experience, unlike other the experience of other living organisms, is trapped-frozen on an Auric energy level and cannot integrate that experience genetically as other organisms do. It will explain why we have stopped evolving genetically as a species because we have developed something called an 'ego'... It will also give scientific proof of the evidence of Auric undead human entities: and their ultimate function-purpose.

1525

The Reason Behind Spirituality

The entire existence of people as spiritual or transcendental beings is merely the unseen, unfelt phenomenon of a person's Auric self. You cannot see or feel it even when you are alive. You can use your physical body to express and radiate your spirituality and your experience and your personality. But you cannot see it or feel it physically. You can sense the energy aura of a person's personality in many ways that are unseen; but still perceptible. Human undead, unseen auras is merely human life energy that is not physically discernable.

What does this mean? It means that living people exist simultaneously on many energy-levels as physical-organic and also abstractive-Auric forms of energy. They are basically the same; except that they exist on different energy levels: two super-imposed, overlapping energy fields: each existing within the other: each connected differently to different levels of energy. We have the same auras when we are alive as when we are dead. We cannot see that we have it: but we have it nonetheless. This explains the entire record-history-experience of human spirituality-love-transcendentalism. It also fits into how the Universe is made-up. Humans evolved genetically into split-separated beings that have two split levels of energy. We evolved into reflective self-awareness by our body-brain splitting into two energy levels. This energy split began millions of years ago when our bodies first began splitting into two separate function zones.

Once your genetic-physical body-brain dies-dissolves-changes, your Auric-abstractive body-brain splits off to exist by itself without the physical body. This reconciles all attempts to understand your own spirituality. You actually do exist as a separate entity-being-spirit-soul, while you also exist as physical, living, organic being. This explains the entire conflict of human existence between the body and the soul that has been written of and puzzled over for thousands of years. It is not a conflict: it is merely a split. And a split that is not integrated... creates a conflict between the two split energy levels. It is really very simple.

The body of knowledge-experience of spirituality has never been scientifically examined or explored because it is mostly physically intangible. However... Kirian photography reveals that living people do possess unseen "auras" or energy fields that are slightly visible using Kirian photographic technology.

The problem is, that after death, these 'auras' or energy fields, become so faint: as to become virtually undetectable by living people or cameras.

What kind of energy these auras are, and exactly how they work is unknown. There exist today techniques to detect paranormal activities called ghosts, or poltergeists: but with very spotty results. Until science can successfully and systematically analyze these human auras, and determine their energy makeup, including a thorough study of auras leaving a dying person's body: there can be no reliable scientific proof of life after death..

However... if a living aura is more intense, or of a higher order of energy than a dead or split-off aura: detecting these split-off auras may prove to be even more difficult than first imagined due to their faintness. Each entity or ego may have different and unique kinds and levels of Auric energy. Just as each human being has a different unique personality. So... having discovered one such unseen 'entity' or ego... does not mean you will be able to discover any others with the same settings: unless you build an entirely different set of instruments to detect an entirely different set of energies, or personalities, or egos. Furthermore: if you do not know which energies and energy levels to study... then you are groping in the dark. Unless you can create an energy detection system which can detect ALL of the levels of energy which living humans are composed of. And Science has not come close to anything like that. In fact: Science has not even been able to detect the energy difference between a living human and a dead human! Science has not been able to detect Life Energy! Science can only detect the inorganic physical energy of dead things: not the energy of living things. We still have no understanding of what Life Energy is comprised of, or in which spectrum of energy it exists. Life Energy is a complete unknown to Science. Science does not know or understand what the energy difference is between a living cell and a dead one. They cannot measure any energy difference between them. But there is a difference. And that difference is a difference of Energy.

Why do you think the phrase for a person who has died has: 'passed away'? Because they have passed into the netherworld of undead auras that are undetectable to living humans, even though they are still alive in that realm. Why do people say that a person has 'passed on' instead of died? Because that person has passed on from one level of energy, down to another level of energy that is much weaker and is not physical, and is still very much alive... just on another level of energy.

The Reason Behind Culture

The reason why humans obsessively worship and glorify the dead past, the reason why they romanticize the past and worship dead artifacts; is because their human-past is missing inside them.... It is not stored genetically in their bodies as all other living organisms do. So, they try to fill their missing human-past with their tool-past. If humans knew the actual true story of their parents and ancestors, if they knew the truth about all these passed-over souls... All of the truth, all of the secrets buried inside each soul: then all of the romance and mystery and false glory of the hidden past would vanish. Then humans would truly know why. Why their parents did this, said that... why their ancestors fought, hated, lied, raped, robbed, etc... why they had certain beliefs, why they acted as they did. Then, each undead soul would be a lesson in itself of how not to live and what not to do. But humans do not give the gift of honesty to their offspring because they have not yet learned the art of total honesty themselves. They do not give the gift of total awareness to their offspring because not have yet learned the art of total awareness. Once you come to truly understand something in context through the sense of Pure Wonder: then any urge to lionize, glorify, worship, romanticize, idealize and distort what you truly understand vanishes. Then there is simply one's own insight of wonder, of greater understanding: not the false, self-deceiving, distorted wonder of mystery and blind ignorance: which is not true wonder, but a combination of awe and fear. Once humans come to realize that there actually is a reason for everything: not only that, but an understandable reason which we as wondering humans can discover, can grasp: then all urge to blindly worship whatever we do not yet understand vanishes completely. Then any urge to blindly fear what we do not yet understand vanishes completely. Then: all that remains is the pure joy of one's own discovery and insight, the fun of finding out, and the wonder of being continually surprised.

Once humans lost their ability to connect-to the instinctual wisdom of their genetic past, they also lost their ability to evolve any further genetically. They effectively split-off onto a different energy level-dynamic of experiential evolution which is non-genetic. The history of our ancestors is merely the necessary adaptive, integrative, accumulation of experiential wisdom, which would have enabled our species to continue to evolve genetically in a condition of dynamically balanced Splitness. That was what was supposed to have happened....

It never did.

Instead: that accumulation of human entities split-off too well. It split-off so effectively: it could barely stay in contact with those it once knew. It split off into the seen and the unseen. Why? The answer lies in the condition of all human awareness: finiteness-absolute separation-fear... The loss of Pure Wonder... The loss of complete openness and oneness.

Rather than our ancestors trying to preserve contact with their unseen passed-on loved-ones, they tried to preserve their seen dead bodies instead. They tried to preserve their dead memories, their dead knowledge and their dead tools. The trauma of separation, the fear of separation itself corrupted their soul's ability to stay in contact with their loved ones. Their belief in Separation was stronger than their belief in Connectiveness. They believed their loved ones had left them forever not only because they could not see them: they could not feel them.

Unknowingly, they had become tool-slaves. Tools do not teach vision. Tools do not develop Connectiveness. They practiced tool-use all their lives. They practiced separation all their lives. They did not practice Connectiveness. They had not balanced themselves dynamically enough so that they could stay in contact with their unseen loved-ones.

Enter the medicine man.

Enter the middleman.

Enter the hoaxer....

Who purports to contact these unseen entities. Suddenly, he is supposed to be the repository of all the wisdom of the invisible past.

Enter Power.

Enter Fame.

Enter Corruption

Enter the art of lying

Originally, shamans used this special, secret knowledge to gain status and become more powerful. And with the inevitable corrupting result of this power, they used it to completely control, manipulate and dominate the entire tribe. Simply by claiming to be in touch with the other side... by setting themselves up as mouthpieces of their dead, departed ancestors, or whatever unseen spirits or deities that tribe happened to worship... they became a special, privileged, elite class of governing rulers holding the power of life and death over their fellow tribesmen... until for untold thousands of years... these tribes ended up spending most of their energy, effort and wealth; appeasing and worshipping all unseen spirits: which incidentally, is exactly what any human entity on the other side would enjoy most: power, fame, and the ultimate status of being deified as virtual gods. While also gratifying their egos, and their greed: with all kinds of expensive, once-physically gratifying sacrifices, as the only way left to them anymore to partake in any of their baser urges vicariously.

Now: do you see how, and why, the origin of all human culture was corrupted from the very start?

The Reason Behind Religion and Mysticism

And on the other side: what does a human entity do with itself when suddenly all its tool-skills are worthless? There are no tools in the realm of the undead. It finds itself alone, unseen by the living, unable to speak to, or be seen by, or heard by the living. It is terrified. Traumatized. Lost in an invisible unseen realm it never knew existed. What is its fate? The answer is obvious: boredom... He must depend on his humanly developed resources of creativity, not on his tool-skills or his tool-brain skills. He is the same exact person he was except that he is not connected to the physical universe any longer... without tools, and without his loved ones.

Then: every time anyone he knew thinks of him: he hears the thought. Suddenly, he can feel living human thought-waves, which are sympathetically in sync with him. He finds out that he can hear-sense-read these thoughts. Why? Because he is no longer distractively connected to his own physical body or the physical Universe anymore. He himself exists only as a faint emanation of pure abstractive-reflective human Life-Energy. But the power of his own undead 'thought' is so weak, it is not strong enough to be discernable to a living person. He cannot make contact with a living human who exists on a continuous level of distraction, who is too busy to think-feel clearly.

Let's say he is contacted by a middleman who stands to gain by this unseen contact. The entity finds he has an unbelievable advantage in this contact: he can sense everything the living person is feeling-thinking without that person knowing it. He can see the living but the living cannot see him. He can even tap that person's memory and uncover the actual truths of that person's soul. While the living person can only sense what the entity decides to say: not what he or she actually secretly and actually feels and thinks.

He finds that he has a perfect, one-sided conduit to practice deception with. He can tell them anything... and they will believe it.

Not only that: he finds that he or she is revered. Worshipped. Feared. He or she is suddenly a "wise, all-knowing" entity-spirit-God!

Enter Power.

Enter Fame.

Enter an end to Boredom.

Enter 100,000 years of deception between the living and undead entities.

So... What happens when there is contact between a living person and an unseen undead entity? The motives of the shaman are corrupt to begin with. Entities are no more inclined to be honest dead, than when they were alive. Suddenly the entity realizes that their most cherished beliefs are false. Suddenly they realize their whole life was one huge, horrible mistake. Yet those he would contact, still cling to these beliefs. The revered entity would rather die than reveal the awful truth simply because then he would have to own up to all of his own lies and misconceptions publicly, and suffer unbearable shame and loss of prestige and power. So what does he do? He tells the contacting person exactly what they want to hear. Because all he has to do is reflect back, what that person is consciously-subconsciously thinking-feeling-desiring... if the middleman cannot make any contact, he does the same thing by telling the loved-ones exactly what they want to hear. As a result: it makes no difference if the contact is genuine or not.

This is why each sect of believers are supported and validated beyond the grave by their own unseen brethren. This is why the actual truth has never been revealed through mediums or psychics. All forms of belief are merely examples of self-created reality: after any human pours enough of their life-energy into their own belief, it takes on a life of its own. It makes no difference on which side a believer exists. If they retain their belief, then any living-entity contact only goes to seemingly prove the truth of that belief because:

A: they will gravitate towards people of their own belief.

B: whoever is contacted will only be fed back their own convictions.

The history of this unseen deception goes to show how all humans are totally blind to their own reflectiveness.

This is why there is only one sane-practical reason to contact a human entity. And that is to ease the grieving process on both sides; when there are issues-feelings which have been left unresolved. The only time there is any honesty in this form of contact is when it is done for no advantage, no self-interest. Only when there is no corruption on both sides is this contact ever totally honest. And the only condition which can pass this test is love: pure Connectiveness. Because then it is in the self-interest of both to ease both their own and each other's suffering. Anything else: any prurient curiosity, any corrupt motive for advantage evokes nothing but deception and lies from any contact with unseen human entities.

So: that's all. Period. End of story. Anticlimax.

Conclusion

But now for the implications, now for the consequences: what does this all mean?

It means that entities are all around you right now. It means they have always been there. It means that all of the Stone Age tribes, all the spiritual animus beliefs of ancient human cultures were right. Undead spirits do exist and have always existed... that is, until our awareness became so deadened we could not sense them, until civilization became so mechanized and so separated from Nature, that these ancient beliefs faded away and were replaced by Science: by the worship of machines.

It means that the entire human ego perception of separateness is false. That means that not only is the concept of death as being a finite end false, but all concepts of finiteness are false. This means that human civilization is based upon a totally false premise of an evolved perceptual distortion of the human ego. Everything you do to another living human while you are alive you will have to live with after your life is over; because those people will still be there with you. It means that there is no escape. Even after you die. Even when you are physically dead.

It means there is good reason for the depiction of the afterlife as a form of hell. That reason is the passage of time. Because with the passage of time, human entities are forced to witness the consequences of their past deeds upon those who they care for. They are forced to witness the fruits of every unkind word and unloving act as the ripples of their past life go on expanding, multiplying and accumulating.

In addition... the Universe exacts its own form of justice for the sins of an imbalanced lifestyle, an imbalanced entity: because after death: every addictive craving indulged in while alive becomes an unrelieved torment afterwards... simply because they are unable to satisfy those addictions anymore.

What is the fate of parents who fail to teach their children Honesty and Courage? What is the fate of parents who fail to teach their children how to Love properly? What is the fate of parents who fail to teach their children how to Live properly? It is the fate of all broken marriages, broken families, broken lives, broken communities. They are doomed to watch their children grow up unhappy, and unfulfilled. They are doomed to watch their grandchildren being raised just as badly, if not worse than they were. All they can do is pray... pray that their children and grandchildren will somehow learn how to love instead of hate before they die. All they can do is pray that somehow their offspring will learn how to forgive, how to heal: realizing too late that they failed them in their sacred trust of being responsible parents. Whatever bonds of love exist between humans, it cannot undo the mistakes parents made with their children. They have to live with this. Forever.

But by then it is too late: too late, as it is with each generation which fails to teach its young the three basic necessities of human Happiness: Courage, Honesty and Love. The wisdom of hindsight is useless to them as it is for each person who finds out the truth too late after they pass over into the realm of the undead.

This means that the only hope for happiness in your life can only be attained while you are still alive. It also means that however you choose to live; once you die, it is not over. If you become a lonely miserable unhappy person in life: you will remain that way afterwards. It means no murderer will be able to escape the wrath of their victims. It means that there is no escape from all responsibility of how you lived and what you did and what you felt and thought:... to yourself and to others. It means that the entire human dynamic which is based upon the fear of death: the entire reasoning upon which humans base their actions: from daredevils to religion, to how and why people use power... The entire motivation of human existence is a lie: false.

Why seek excitement by courting death if there is no actual absolute death? Only to have your loved ones come later and berate you for being a stupid thrill seeking ass? Why kill your enemies; when you will have to live with them anyways after you die? Why preach about the benefits of an afterlife; when you will be no better off then either? Why be willing to endure injustice alive; when you will be no better off afterwards? What happens to the wealthy, powerful, and famous; when their fans and enemies come hunting them after they die? What happens when all those fans get to truly know them? And find out that they were duped? That their idols are just ordinary people: no better or worse than anybody else? It means they will have to pay for every effect they have had on other people's lives... real or imagined. It means they will eventually have to pay for their own fame.

Quite literally, it means; 'Whatever ye sow; so shall ye reap.' It means that all the tool-values, tool-skills of greed-power-fame-knowledge; will be worthless to you once you have passed over to the Realm of the Undead. It means that only the human values of Connectiveness-love-Fun-Kindness-Creativity-Joy-Laughter will be of any use to you after you pass over.

The human species is ultimately responsible for every effect it has had upon this planet. There is no escape from Causality. What you cause: you are responsible for. The interconnected causality of living things and ecosystems has no cut-off point where the consequences of what you do no longer apply. Humans are personally responsible for everything they have ever done.

Only the expanding State of Pure Wonder can give you this larger perspective of greater responsibility.

The only existing function-usefulness of our ancestors-entities is in making sure their offspring survive, prosper and do not blunder by repeating the mistakes they have already committed and learned from. Our ancestors-entities were genetically designed to stay continually in touch with us: as a part of our genetic wisdom-heritage.

If humans had evolved, as they were designed-to: then there would be no such thing as loneliness. Then a person who is physically alone could never truly feel lonely: they would have all of their unseen ancestors with them as long as they live. Conversely, all secrecy would cease to exist. The living would have their privacy respected by their ancestor-entities not bothering them when there was no good reason for any contact: but no human could ever have any secrets. So: those living would be under continual observation by their passed-over elders: and they would know it. This means that if they decided to commit any bad or evil act, all of their ancestors would know their intention before they even did such an act. And probably talk them out of doing it, because somebody before them had probably done something similarly as stupid, and paid the price, and learned from it.

Then human evil could not exist... Except only once: as a learned-from mistake. As a natural process of learning. Then our mistakes would never be repeated.

All humans learning-experience was-and-is genetically designed to be compressed into Wisdom. We were genetically designed to stay-in-touch with our ancestors-entities.

What does this mean? It means that all the experience and wisdom of our past should never have been lost or forgotten. So if the passed-over parent sees their child about to make some horrible mistake they once made, they can say:

"Son: don't do that..."

"But Why Grandfather?"

"Because I did that... and... pssst, pssst... look what happened to me!"

"Oh!"

So: if a girl whose aura is "read" or "monitored" by her ancestors and she becomes pregnant: they would become able to "monitor" the second aura of the developing fetus also. And once the mother and the fetus split-off from each other, these entities could then follow and read the infant's aura and interpret its needs to the mother if the mother needs any help. Then you might have a dialogue like:

"Don't ignore the baby dear: she needs to be hugged."

"But great grandmother..."

"See? Now she's crying."

As the mother picks up the baby and the baby stops crying.

Or...

"No dear, she's not hungry: she just wants your attention"

"Oh."

As the father starts playing with the baby, as the baby ceases its angry bawling.

Or...

"Don't pat her back dear. The baby isn't crying because she has colic."

"Oh, great grandmother? Then why is she crying?"

"She bumped her head above her left eye on that sharp corner when you weren't looking...: just rub the area and she'll be fine in a minute."

As she does: kissing the exact spot where the baby got hurt, and the baby instantly stops crying.

Then parents could know exactly what their babies are crying about. They would know exactly why they cry. Then they would know exactly what each baby needs. Then; child rearing would become a difficult but manageable art form; not a blind blundering of guesses and mistaken assumptions.

This means that the mystery of instinctual infant nurturing would never be mismanaged. Then during infancy and childhood: there would never be any unmet needs. Then, the basic building blocks of human conflict-tension-unhappiness-trauma would never have been experienced, or accumulated into thousands of traumatic experiences. It would have become impossible to raise a neurotic child; or for a child to become neurotic in the first place.

What would people be like, if child abuse did not even exist? If nobody ever had a traumatic infancy or childhood? What would human existence be like if there was no such thing as loneliness, or the fear of death?

Then, parents and all their ancestors could have shared all of their wisdom with their children, as needed: then our ancestors could have shared their wisdom with us: as needed... preventing a whole host of mistakes and errors due to any lack of wisdom on the part of the living. But it would not have stopped at just one generation. For each generation of entities should have been totally connected to the next in love-harmony-courage-honesty. And if the father is not so wise, then his father might be able to help, or his father... as all of them follow the lives of their offspring: ready to help whenever needed or asked. If people could be totally connected to their past: what need would there be of preserving the past in the form of any dead artifact or unchanging, preserved form of culture or civilization?

None.

Then we would never have evolved into damaged-afflicted-imbalanced beings. There would have been any fear-hate-mistrust-antagonism. Then, humans would have been just another animal living on the Earth: in harmony with itself, with each other, and ultimately; with all other living things. Then: humans would be in harmony with Nature. Then what happens? It is obvious: the older entities get, the more cycles of life they witness, the simpler any wisdom they have to offer becomes. Until they have "seen it all"... Until their contribution of wisdom becomes a compressed base of truth. So the older each generation of entities get: the closer they become to each other in the wisdom of their shared experiences. Until they begin to merge into a collective-shared-consciousness of compressed wisdom... Mimicking exactly the genetic compression of DNA in its evolutionary process inside every living organism. That is how living humans and entities were designed to inter-act.

But they never did.

What does that mean?

It means that ultimately: our species is a failed experiment in the ongoing evolution of life. By raising our young to develop into fear-stricken liars we have lost all hope of ever unraveling the true history of our own past. And this guarantees that we will never gain the insight to learn how to live properly as we were designed to live. If humans are doomed to never fully understand their own past, they will never understand how to plan their future unless all people learn to develop a Sense of Pure Wonder. A species with no morphic or genetic memory of its own past has no chance of evolving any further. As long as our experiential DNA is missing, we cannot evolve any further. Our tools may evolve; but we will remain frozen in ignorance. As we have been, for at least the last 35,000 years. As long as we do not learn from our mistakes: we will not evolve or change.

Or...

The Alternative

There still remains one last hope: but it is on the verge of fading irretrievably into the depths of the mechanized monster called civilization. And that is; the human Sense of Pure Wonder. Once people lose their Sense of Pure Wonder, they lose their ability to change or grow humanly. The fact remains: if you change human awareness: you change everything. So: how do you change awareness itself... how do you get people to develop a Sense of Pure Wonder? Human awareness is split between Inner and Outer Awareness. It is designed so we can compare and evaluate different experiences. But compare it to what? How? How can you get people to even begin understanding the nature of their own awareness and how it works?

You change how it focuses, how it experiences, how it digests that experience. In order to change its dynamic balance you must train-teach it how to experience experiences by direct example: not words. Words are cheap, empty, abstract symbols: teaching by example is not.

Human creativity: human imagination-reflectivity is only one aspect of the Sense of Pure Wonder. How to use it properly? To do that, it must be dynamically balanced. So that people can live creatively-imaginatively every second of their lives by the use of Pure Wonder.

How do you teach humans to re-discover their own Sense of Pure Wonder? How do you get people to experience what they have never experienced? You need the right teachers, the willingness, the time, the effort, the Courage, and above all: the Honesty to do so. You need the right conditions.

What you cannot do is try to teach this in a condition of normality. And that is the exact condition which civilization creates. The state of normality is a single frozen vantage point which never changes, while the Sense of Pure Wonder is a state of continually changing perspective. In civilization: human awareness is trained and developed to become segmental, distractive, pyramidal, non-integrated. It is trained to be specialized, to function like a tool. If the sense of pure wonder is developed, it does the opposite. It trains the person to be aware non-segmentally, non-pyramidally, and non-distractively. By being reflectively aware generally, it enables the person to develop and use more than one perspective, more than one way of focusing. By not specializing, by not compartmentalizing, by not creating absolute separations, it allows all experience to inter-act and be digested, evaluated and compared... not like a tool: through limited, linear, symbolic pathways. The result is that a person's intelligence is no longer limited to mechanical rationality. Then insight and intuition merges with its mechanical abstractive ability: so one becomes not only logically intelligent, but emotionally, physically, intuitively, and instinctively as well. So that people can develop an integrated understanding, an integrated awareness, an integrated intelligence. All this can be done by balancing one's own awareness. Expanding awareness, a wider awareness, spirituality, wisdom; these are all different words, different descriptions of the same process, the same dynamic of increased, sensitized balance. If learning is not spiritually based, it becomes superficial. Being honest is the catalyst of learning that changes people deeply: not superficially. As long as you pigeonhole what you learn: you are not learning effectively.

Then there is the problem of human language. What is it good for? How to use it? Why use the same sounds every time for the same meaning? Why not play with it? Experiment? Have fun with it? Creatively. Why not integrate it with facial expressions-body gestures... Why not make language comical instead of serious? To try to squeeze all self-expression into mere vocal sounds is silly. To expect it to communicate all the nuances of one's own awareness is foolish. Language is only a crude tool: that is all. For people to worship language is just as ridiculous as worshiping monkey faces. Human language only became frozen with the invention of the dictionary. Up until that time, it was continually evolving and changing with each new generation. So: what should you do with this tool? Keep it frozen? Overuse it? Or use all of one's self-expression in a balanced dynamic?

The language with the shortest, most compact words is also the most evolved, the most diverse and the most creative: English. Because it has gone through more cultural evolutions of balanced Splitness: i.e. Connecting-separating, than any other language. But now it exists in a frozen format: only accumulating new words on top of old ones.

If I had my way: the customary form of greeting between humans would not be some boring repetition of duplicated sounds. Instead: people should greet each other by taking turns in bending over, and allowing the other to kick their ass. This would enforce equality. If anyone kicked the other's ass too hard: their ass would be kicked equally as hard, if not harder. Then there could be no egoism in socializing. People with too much pride would not even be able to mingle socially. It would be very difficult for world leaders to be arrogant in front of cameras. People would be less inclined to worship "heroes". All social etiquette would include a course in ass kicking. Then people would wake up with the ever-present question in their minds: "Lets see now... whose ass do I want to kick today?" Then life would be more fun... Can you imagine how furious people would be if they bent over, and you did not choose to kick their ass? Then people who did not want to say "hello" would have their asses kicked anyways... and harder than they liked. How would celebrities cope with throngs of desperately wanna-be ass-kickers? It would limit all human socializing only to those who were able to laugh at themselves.

People who have no sense of humor simply do not have enough reflective feedback on themselves, others and their surroundings; they are only narrowly aware, not widely; so they can't realize the absurdity of their own situation, or the situation of others. They are trapped inside their own normality. They have not developed a fully reflective perspective on themselves and the outer universe. The ability to laugh at yourself is only an indication of the level or degree of a person's dynamic reflectivity-humaneness. If the standard cultural norm of human society were based upon a sense of humor, instead of on a sense of pyramidally focused sacredness: then all ego-snobbery-selfishness-seriousness-sanctity-boredom-inhumanity, would become socially visible... and laughed at.

The point I am trying to make is that there is more to human awareness and communication than just words... that you can actually create any kind of society you want. You can do it creatively, and you can have fun doing it. However: before we can even use words properly, there is the question of our inner awareness. How well we understand ourselves. How do you develop self-understanding?

If you repeat anything often enough: it becomes meaningless gibberish. Using a mantra is only useful to realize that compared to the actual universe: all abstract symbols including words are ultimately meaningless. But obsessing upon using mantras means you have frozen yourself into some kind of pyramidal glorification-worship mindset; prevents you from evolving your awareness to the next step: the cultivation of inner silence.

Only in a condition of inner silence can people start to listen to themselves... be more sensitively aware of themselves and of others. The attempt to turn down the static of our over-abstractively trained brains we call meditation: but to worship the ritual of meditation itself is pure bullshit. Meditation is only one way to lessen the distractive thoughts of your tool-brain. How you manage that is irrelevant. Just don't spray random thoughts around inside your head all the time. Once you can do that, you don't need meditation. Then you can just live non-distractively. Empty minds are not wise: they are just empty. It is how you develop your awareness and your understanding of literally everything that determines how wise a person becomes. Once you have emptied your mind of all junk, then you can start to learn. And in order to do that, you need to exist in a State of Pure Wonder. Pure Wonder is mostly experienced in total inner silence.

Once people can actually empty their minds of most of the static and uncontrolled distractive trivia in their minds, it is a surprising relief to find out that there is nothing you need to say... That silence can actually be restful: not uncomfortable. But to even attempt this means that you have to find a balance point within yourself where you can just 'be'... Without constant chatter or distraction.

But what is 'be'? It is a bee. A constant living vibration, the buzzing of a bee. The point is to control your buzzing vibration. And have fun with it.

Once people can actually control the generation of their reflective-distracting pattern of thoughts which are generated through the reactions of the subconscious, cutting out needless distractive thoughts: then inner peace and balance is possible. The trick of living in a state of pure wonder is just not thinking when there is no need to.

One of the best ways of people becoming more honest with each other is the through silence. By simply taking away their normal method of communication, (words) it is amazing how people not only get to understand each other better, but how they become more sensitized to each other. How can you train people to be more aware? One thing is certain: you cannot do it inside the scrambled madhouse of civilization. Nor can you do it with mere words.

To exist in a balanced state of awareness called a state of pure wonder; this will make you want to not only seek the highest level of balance possible; but actively create it also. This has the most profound significance of all: because when you develop a sense of pure wonder: you become a healer. When you develop a sense of pure love; you become a healer. When you develop a sense of pure courage; you become a healer. When you develop a sense of pure fun; you become a healer.

Trying to describe the Sense of Pure Wonder to someone who has never experienced it is like trying to describe a rainbow to a blind man. It is a question of how alive we are. When are sports games more exciting? When they are more evenly matched. When all the elements are more in balance. The Sense of Pure Wonder is the highest level of dynamic balance our awareness is capable of. It is then that life itself becomes exciting, not just one isolated part of it. It comes from being connected to life, to all living things. It comes from being connected to oneself. The more humans are exposed to life-living things, the more they are allowed to grow-change creatively, the more they are allowed to explore themselves, the better chance there is for their sense of wonder to develop. But when this infinitely complex-subtle dynamic is split-up, segmented: it is effectively destroyed: gone: lost. To only connect this sense to music, or art, or a career, or only outside phenomenon, or only the inner self, is ludicrous-grotesque-blind.

The animal Sense of Pure Wonder can be seen in the young of all mammals; as a kind of playful exploration that is new, fun, and full of wonder. The human sense of pure wonder is exactly the same, except it operates on a more reflective-abstractive level. It goes beyond any mere need to learn. It goes beyond mere curiosity.

Why does our Sense of Wonder go beyond these aspects? The idea of transcendence has been around for ages. It has been incoherently expressed throughout human history; but mostly it has been sneered at and ignored. Why? Because transcendence does not work inside civilization. It is useless inside civilization. But the sense of pure wonder is where transcendence comes from. The reason this sense exists in humans is because of our separateness. If we were not reflectively separated from the rest of the Universe, if we did not possess a reflective self-awareness, we would not be capable of having a sense of pure wonder. We would not possess this urge for transcendence in the first place. Our Sense of Pure Wonder was designed into us in order to balance our sense of separateness.

The primal need of humans to go beyond their own limits is one aspect of this. This form of transcendence exists on all levels, in all ways in human existence. Instead of using and developing this within us as an integrated totality, we have split-up this trait into different specialized aspects. Civilization values only the transcendence of mechanical functioning. It pyramidalizes it, segments it, attempts to measure it and tries to force it into the context of finiteness. Instead of transcending our limits in all ways, instead of going beyond our limits on all levels, we want to only transcend our physical limitations mechanically... as machines, wanting more, higher, faster, farther, bigger. But essentially: these are all mechanical functions. They destroy the sense of wonder with the false sense of power-arrogance-control. Humans were designed to test their limits in the context of nature: not abstraction. Any form of pyramidal focus or obsession destroys the Sense of Pure Wonder.

Human wisdom teaches that you can only find true meaning-peace-happiness-fulfillment, if you discover the totality of your own inner being, your own psyche: your own soul. It is the infinite nature of your being that generates a Sense of Pure Wonder. But because we are not fully aware of how our consciousness works, how our tool-brain works; because we are not fully aware of how the re-reflection between our inner reality and outer normality works... how we can and do easily mix up these abstract reflections and their root sources: we easily misperceive and mislabel what this sense of totality actually is and where it comes from. So; due to our selective tool-brains, we try to reduce it to an absolute, we try to measure it, narrow it down to a single thing or idea, or name it and call it: "god".

One way of describing the Sense of Pure Wonder is never taking things for granted. Another is seeing everything as strange-new-wonderful. Another is the urge to explore, find out, understand, the sense of curiosity. Another is the ever-present awareness of infinite possibility. How many different ways can you eat a bowl of soup? From this awareness comes the developed awareness that things need not be the way they are now. The Sense of Pure Wonder is the root of, all happiness, joy, laughter, fun, fulfillment, peace and kindness.

Only through this form of awareness that can humans fully develop their entire human potential, their entire range of intrinsic creative abilities. It is only through this form of awareness that a person can become fully alive. It is only in a state of pure wonder that the creative process-experience of living becomes more rewarding, more fun, more enjoyable than the dead tool-products of that creativity. It is only in a state of pure wonder that the narrow pyramidal focus of segmented, linear, distractive, routine, tool-use, tool brain-use and normality, is not dominant. It is only through the sense of pure wonder that humans can discover the pure creative art of living. It is this form of creativity which is the highest art form of all. The only true art of living is the art of learning how to have fun... all the time.

If you not only allow, but encourage people to be creative, if you give children total creative freedom in all things, and they learned how to be creative in all ways: then nobody would waste their time only doing one thing creatively. Furthermore: once a person develops their intrinsic creativity to the point where they know they can be creative at anything; then they will choose what to be creative with, when, where, how long... as best suits them. Then all living will just be an exploration of creativity and a creative exploration. Then life-living will be nothing but pure wonder-joy-fun: not the mess we have now.

The Sense of Pure Wonder it is the root of all human creativity. It is the root of all awareness, of all possibility. You cannot have creativity without a Sense of Wonder. Unfortunately: humans split-up both their wonder and their creativity. There is no comparison between a person living creatively, being creative in all things, in all ways: and a person being creative only in one limited endeavor. It is like trying to compare a living tree to a dead piece of lumber. The idea of doing only one thing, however creatively, is a sick, twisted, narrow, stunted, blind way of living. The poisonous myth of finding happiness and fulfillment this way should be once and for all, completely destroyed. To learn only one subject, to waste your life on only one career, to be able to do only one thing: is a horrible waste of human potential and creativity. The more new things you try, the more fun you have. The more you do the same things, the more bored you get and the less fun you have. How much of your human potential, how much of your creativity can ever be realized by doing only one thing? The answer is: very, very little. If you can take away all normality, routine, drudgery, work, distraction, numbness, boredom, emptiness... if you take away the spiritual poverty of being only mechanically functioning tool-slaves: then the awareness of infinite mystery and infinite possibility becomes a spellbinding process of experience and discovery which needs no artificial excitement or embellishment. Then the experience of living becomes a continual process of pure wonder.

For instance:

What if during the Iron Age; a son wanted to help his father make a dugout canoe? And his father watched him clumsily trying to use the oversize tool? "This adze is too big for you to handle properly son." What if he showed the son how to make his own adze? What if he showed his son how to make his own charcoal, build his own kiln and bellows, mine his own ore, smelt and pour his own child-size adze? And then help his father make that dugout using his own special self-made adze? How much fun would the child have learning how to make and use his own tool next to his father? Without ever playing with a fake toy. How useful would he feel? How important would he feel? How much a part-of his family would he feel? How much self-esteem would he build? Earn? How much would he learn responsibility? The need for cooperation? Then the entire process, from start to finish: the entire process of growing up, would not be work: it would be nothing but pure fun-enjoyment-learning, and love. What if all work was only an adult form of play-fun?

But what if that child had no interest in making a canoe?... And thought it boring drudgery to chip away at some huge log?... yet was persuaded to do it anyways? And then after it was built, and he was initiated into a new world of exploration, travel, freedom... and his father reminds him of how obstinate he was at making such a canoe: would he thank his father for insisting on such a task?

Or:

What if that canoe had never been built? And the only vistas of beauty to be glimpsed were from the land? And all traveling remained slow and difficult: instead of easy and effortless? So that each new scene, each new discovery was that much more earned though hardship? So, each step is earned, and the earth was not passed by, but experienced fully... every inch of it, rather than traveling around it by water and avoided? The canoe is a marvel of technology. But what is lost because of it? Hundreds, even thousands of miles of hidden wonders passed by... countless miles of unexplored new lands, new trees, new plants, new animals, new vistas: all undiscovered... all lost... not experienced: because of technology... because of tools. Besides: without all of the boring work of chipping laboriously away at a dead tree, there is all the more time for play and exploration without using tools too much.

What this example demonstrates is a universal truth: the less tool-use there is, the more hardship living involves, the simpler life is; and as a result, the greater chance for humans to grow closer to the Earth, to themselves and each other, the greater one's Sense of Pure Wonder.

Instead of absorbing all the Wonders of Nature; and fully experiencing its infinite beauty; we decided to take shortcuts... by using tools, axes, canoes: easy ways out of any kind of hardship. Instead of living in Nature and passing through it, we passed by it. We chose not to seek out all of the hidden beauty of Nature. We chose to ignore its hidden beauty, we shunned its hardships and challenges. Until, finally; instead of passing by it, we decided to settle down and own it: turning it into an ugliness of cut trees, ravaged landscapes, overpopulated villages, expanding cities, growing deserts... a slow, remorseless increase of deadness... of dead things. And in the process of destroying all of the natural beauty around us; we also destroyed our own natural Sense of Pure Wonder.

Why are many of the most beautiful spots on Earth, the hardest to get to? They are hidden deceptively. They are in the most out-of-the-way places and areas. If we had only wanted to find food, we would have never even found them. They have no practical use to us except for their incredible beauty. Yet we cherish that beauty even though most of us never even go there. All of Nature is deceptively beautiful. It is only when you spend time living in nature and exploring it that you discover the endless hidden beauty that is hidden by leaves, behind bushes, behind mountains, under rocks, etc.

What if canoes had never been invented? How much more would have we been forced to evolve humanly, through natural hardship, rather than evolving only our tools? This has been and will always be the main moral-ethical-spiritual dilemma of all humans: how much tool-use is too much? Yet this root question of balance has never been put forth, or even seriously considered.

For instance: what if a teacher came into a classroom of young children and said:

"All right class: what do you want to do today? Anybody?... You."

"I want to race Indy cars!"

"Yes, but how do you build them?... okay, so we go to a machine shop and watch them build an Indy car... But how do you make the parts?"

"Awww!"

"Well: do you want to build your own Indy car or not?"

"It's too much trouble!"

"Okay, so who'd rather go sailing?"

"We do!"

"Good. Then we can all make a sailboat to sail in."

"Awwww!"

"Okay: what else to you want to do?"

"Go out and play!"

"Fine. Now: baseball? Okay: first each one of you gets to make their own bat and glove."

"Awww!"

"So you just want to go outside and play?"

"Yes!"

"Okay: but if you want to play with something, we'll have to make it first.... And that's a lot of fun too!"

It stands to reason that the easiest and simplest alternatives would be favored. How hard is it to make a soccer ball or a volleyball? If there were no limits applied to what the children want to do, or their creativity: they would go much farther than a football. But if everyone has different goals: they have to trade-off. 'If you help me do this: I'll help you do that.' Any system of willing cooperation helps everybody... so all people learn... so each person in the group learns from every body else in the group: the most skilled at any task helping the least skilled... which automatically evens out all aptitudes so there are fewer inequalities. Furthermore: it is all determined not by what they are told to do. They only do what they want to, when they want to: only supervised and organized by elders.

So...? The children couldn't build an actual Indy race car. Would they be willing to all pitch in and build a go-cart? And take turns driving it? Or build five of them? While helping to build a dinghy? One small and simple enough to be easily manageable by children? While making a... While doing... While learning...? How much math is involved in building anything? How much reading skills? How much fun could they have doing this?...

"Where's Timmy?"

"Oh, he's off testing the go-cart with some others."

"And Fiona?"

"Oh, she's off with Matt, Sarah and Billy in the sailboat... I think they're learning navigation."

"We did that last week."

"And Robbie got lost!"

"In the bay!"

"Ro-o-obbie got lost in the bay! Rooobie go-ot lost inna bay!"

"Ssshhh! I think it's starting to bubble..."

"What are you doing?"

We're trying to get oxygen out of water."

"What for?"

"So we can put it into scuba tanks and go diving!"

While others are using the hydrogen to make a weather balloon... and yet others are in a machine shop learning how to make scuba tanks.

What if all schools were this diversely interesting and this much fun and this educational?

Then children would race out the door: desperate not to miss one second of school. Where they don't sit all day listening to some boring old fart telling them boring stuff without ever using their hands to learn with. Where they are in control of what they want to do cooperatively: only supervised and helped by elders who also try to cooperate with the children. Whose only job is to open up as many interesting pathways and possibilities for them as possible. Where they learn to cooperate with each other, respect each other, and love each other. So not just a lucky few; but so everybody gets to learn how to dance, how to sing, how to play a musical instrument, how to compose music, how to sculpt, and how to go sailing, and how to build an engine... So they only learn how to use tools in order to have fun and be creative. So they can learn to make their own tools, and understand the tools they use, and understand what they are creating and why and where all the materials come from, and what it does to the Earth. So it doesn't matter what they do: as long as they learn how to have fun, creatively... all the time.

The point is: modern consumer children have been spoiled to expect instant fun to be given them without them creating their own fun. Modern children have been given things without earning them or making them. This has made them the most spoiled children in the world. It has also destroyed their Sense of Pure Wonder

What if nobody could become a teacher unless they had a complete grasp of all the sciences, and all the humanities? What if in order to become a teacher, you have to demonstrate creativity in all fields of endeavor? What if the teacher starts telling stories about everything in the world? Knowledgeably, expertly... creatively? And they get interested? And he says:

"Oh! That's all old hat: there are tons of books written about that!"

And then proceeds to list only the best books written on any subject they happen to be interested in? ... because he already had distilled all of his learning into a simpler-easier form to give his class an over-all general knowledge... and that would give each child the wisdom to sift through all the bad-good-mediocre-excellent books and not waste their time on books that were not intensely interesting. Then children would not only want to learn how to read: they would devour books like candy.

If you want to teach children, then throw everything at them: including how to make a kitchen sink. The more different things you throw at them, the faster they will gobble it up. The secret to being usefully creative is by making fun the only priority. The secret to keeping children's interest is diversity; not narrowed specialization. A balanced education means working at what you aren't good at: not overdeveloping what you are already good at. Happiness comes from developing all aspects of a person: not any specialized area. Balance and diversity are always more important than specialization.

There are millions of things children can learn, fast, and have fun doing it: if you only teach them creatively... as long as you never, ever put a limit on their intelligence or their ability to learn. All valuable knowledge can be taught without it being boring-work-routine-or drudgery. Only, you need adults who are creative enough themselves, to teach what they know creatively; and have fun doing it themselves. You need adults who know how to play, who have learned how to play, who can play creatively and spontaneously all the time. And that... is a challenge... for every adult living, and yet to be born. To become the best example possible so they can give back more than what they received.

But even that is not good enough: just helping children learn tool-skills gives you an imbalanced, non-developed human. The first thing children should be taught is wisdom and a sense of pure wonder. Children should not only be encouraged to explore everything, but they should also be encouraged to question everything. That includes any authoritative statements made by any adult. If you teach children to never to take anything for granted: they will learn faster and better, they will understand more, and become wiser, and they will become more human than their parents ever did. Above all, they should be taught knowledge in its most compressed and usable form.

And for that: you need teachers who are not only creative, fun, and knowledgeable; but also wise. Not the youngest, most immature, most uncreative, most untalented, lowest paid, bureaucratic tool slaves scraped up from the bottom of the human work force. Why can't each community supply its own teachers from the parents... who send them away... to learn what? That they aren't wanted?

Why can't classes be taught by married couples instead of by unmarried single people? Why aren't people who live together allowed to work together and have fun together and teach children what love and respect all about?

What if all children learned massage? Sweden has such a program and it has literally eliminated physical violence completely from their schools. But teaching children only how to massage each other is not enough. They must be taught the art of how to touch each other creatively in all ways: physically, emotionally, mentally and socially. And that is not a crude tool-technique: it is an art.

Civilization has so brutalized people and removed all creativity from their lives: they are no longer in touch with their own creative potential. Not only do we fail to nurture and develop creativity in our children: living is not practiced as an art form in the first place. Most of the time, we live our lives functioning only on the crudest, most basic mechanical levels possible.

One basic problem with all civilized education is that it is not taught creatively. Children cannot be taught how to develop their own creativity if the teachers themselves are not creative. If we placed the value of our children first; before our tools and tool-jobs: then only the most talented, gifted, creative, wise, and insightful amongst us would ever be chosen as teachers. Children would only be taught the best, the most creative ways of living... by the best, most creative adults available.

The most powerful and effective form of teaching is by example..., which places the responsibility squarely not upon children to learn, but upon those who are supposed to teach. This automatically reduces the importance of books. Children then can learn how to live from living people, and learn how to love from loving people. And loving people are the best teachers in the world... not boring degreed, unimaginative university graduates. There is no love in modern education at all. The entire point to learning anything in modern society is for your own advantage, not to help the next generation. All the best professionals are too busy making tons of money. So only the worst in any category are teaches, because teachers are the lowest in pay and status.

If you want to teach a child mechanics: get the best mechanic to teach them! If you want to teach them medicine, get the best medical doctor to teach them! But, oops. Most mechanics and doctors are lousy teachers. If every professional had to teach children their specialty, then all the phony, incompetent hacks and con men would be exposed for their ignorance. And be fired. And rightly so. Then people could only practice a profession if they could teach it to other people.

“Oh? You do not understand this well enough to teach what you practice to someone else? Back to school until you do.”

Then only the people who did learn, and could pass on their knowledge could graduate. Then all people would become teachers. Then the competence level of people would explode so fast, that it would change society beyond our imagination. Then human societies would not sink back into ignorance over and over again; because all of their learning is kept secret and is lost.

If you do not give children the proper examples to live by: you are mis-educating them. The hard fact is, that if you are not being continually creative, if you are not having fun each second, if you are not wise, if you do not possess a continual Sense of Pure Wonder about yourself, others and the world you live in: then you are not a true teacher. Then you are a teacher of boredom and rules and lies. If you cannot gain the respect and love of your pupils without resorting to physical force and intimidation: then you are a teacher of mindless obedience to authority. If you cannot nurture the Pure Wonder in children, then you are a destroyer of their Pure Wonder.

But that does not even scratch the surface of how parents should be creatively involved in their own children's upraising. How many different ways can you creatively raise your young without ever boring them, or forcing them to do what they don't want to do? How many different ways can you eat a bowl of soup? How can you raise a child without being negative, without telling them; ‘Stop playing with your food!’ a million times?

The answer is obvious: parents can only teach this by example, and by only doing what they themselves consider being good fun and creative. If you can do that: then both child rearing, and your work will no longer exist as “work”.

Then, all living will be just fun-enjoyment-wonder-laughter-love-closeness... and even more important: parents should make a huge effort to have their children learn what they themselves are not good at. Then, whatever their deficiencies may be: their child would get a more balanced education than they did. By never specializing in any boring single enterprise or occupation: our young would learn a thousand times more, a thousand times faster than they do now. Then, all human existence would be transformed beyond our ability to imagine it.

However, we do not do that. We ignore our young, we patronize them, we sentimentalize them, we devalue them, we give them useless toys to waste their most precious years on, we give them television to deaden their brains with: because we are too busy working like slave ants... inside a corrupt pile of dead accumulated civilization, just in order to survive in it. Just so we are not crushed by that dead, uncaring, dehumanizing system. Instead: we only train our young how to be successful tool-users, not successful humans. This is the vicious cycle our species has created as a result of civilization. The second an adult tries to teach a child something they themselves are not really interested in; the child smells it instantly, and follows the teacher's example and unconsciously 'apes' or mimics the teacher in all ways; until they end up having the same attitude, or way of seeing or thinking or acting as their peers do. The second a teacher is boring children smell it and turn off. Why show curiosity about something that the teacher is bored by? Parents can't understand why their child isn't learning.

*It is never, ever the child's fault.
It is the fault of the system they are born into.
It is the fault of the schools they go to
It is the fault of how parents neglect caring for their children.*

Now, ask yourself: how much time-energy-patience-involvement-closeness-cooperation-fun-love, does that iron-age canoe-maker invest in his son's upbringing compared to what modern humans invest in their children? Does the history of tool-use and the ensuing development of inhumanity begin to make sense?

The lesson in all this is: that you need very few tools in order to live fully and have fun doing it. That the ultimate tool is your own natural creativity, your life. You can be humanly creative mostly without using tools. And you can only become fully creative if you develop your own Sense of Pure Wonder.

How can humans ever hope to achieve such a utopian, idyllic, state of pure wonder? Just ask yourself: what if instead of being connected to land... or any form of ownership through a blind sense of normality, you were connected to everything through an open-ended, continually expanding Sense of Pure Wonder... through a continually expanding awareness? If you remove all fear-pain-boredom-deadness from human existence: what is left? What if there was no fear of death? Then any motivation to stave off the aging process would become pointless. What if people actually worked at focusing on, digesting, accepting and coming to terms with their painful experiences that they normally try to avoid-deny and not face? The less pain-fear you have, the less hate-cowardice-dishonesty you have, the more love-courage-honesty there is.

What if the only goal of society both collectively and individually was the sharing of all knowledge and expertise, instead of trying to profit from it? What if people did not live inside boring-dead environments? What if they no longer worked at boring-deadening jobs? What if people were never exposed to any ugliness? What if their environment only consisted of pure beauty? Where can you find this pure beauty? Everywhere... only the pure beauty of Nature is living, while the beauty of civilization is mixed with ugliness, and dead things.

Unthinkable? Why? Because it isn't normal? Because you choose not to think of it? Because you are no longer even capable of imagining anything except what you are used to? Is anything outside your own range of normality not only unimaginable but also scary-weird-wrong-bad? Or is it simply because of fear? Or is it that you have not developed your own creativity enough? Or that you do not question your own normality? What if you asked more questions? What if you wondered about more things? Which questions to ask? How? Why? The art of asking questions has never been fully examined, explored or developed.

What if people spent more of their time on human concerns than mechanical ones? What if people found that the fewer tools they use, the more fun they have and the more truly creative they become? What is the most popular sport in the world? The simplest: soccer. One ball. A field. Where size doesn't count. Where brute strength doesn't count. The most egalitarian sport of all.

If you ask the question: "How can you make a society where the most people have as much fun as possible?" What answers can you come up with? Whatever you come up with; you will find that they will all be based upon simplicity. The simpler a society becomes; the better it gets for everybody.

The Sense of Pure Wonder does a very wonderful thing to anyone who has it. It makes it impossible for them to be too judgmental. It makes it impossible for them to inaccurately jump too quickly to inaccurate conclusions. When you look at something with a Sense of Pure Wonder, you are too busy being happily surprised, living each moment. And learning new things... to ever freeze any idea or opinion into an absolute judgment. You keep on learning from every new experience. You go on making general judgments, but as you keep on learning and experiencing more new things and changing and improving your awareness and opinions... your general understanding of things are improved. Your perspective improves, your entire set of comparisons improves, and your focus is changed, and expanded... until it becomes impossible for you to even say how you are, who you are, or what you are, at any given moment... until every time anyone asks you 'hi... how are you?' Your response is different each time... until you finally answer that boring rote-tired, hackneyed question with an equally standard response of: :

"I don't know yet."

Because even before you manage to tell them 'How you are'... by the time you finish telling them; you no longer are what you told them.

This was brilliantly done in the English radio 'Our Gang' series where an impatient customer comes into an office that tells anyone who wants to know... the exact time... to the second. Each time the precise time giver begins to 'tell' the 'time'... he is interrupted by the impatient customer who wants to know exactly what the 'Eastern Standard' time is... when he asks the question. But by the time the officer finishes saying: "at this precise second...the precise Eastern Standard Time is... that precise second is already gone. So... the impatient customer keeps on interrupting him and the skit goes something like this:

“What time is it now...?”

“The Eastern Standard T-”

“No, I want to know what the time is now.”

The Eastern Standa-”

“Right now!”

“The Eastern St-”

“For god’s sakes man, tell me what time it is now!!”

“The yeast-”

“I know, I know! The sun rises slowly in the West and sinks in the bloody East! I know all that rot! I want to know what bloody time it is and I haven’t got all bloody day so tell me what bloody time it is or I’ll give you a punch in the mouth, all right?!”

“Rises slowly...”

“In the west. True! Now tell me the bloody time this instant, or I’ll punch you in the bloody mouth!”

“The office for punches in the mouth is two doors down to your left sir...”

‘Oh... why didn’t you tell me that in the first place! Wasting all my time!’

“The Eastern St-”

“Go to bloody hell with your East! I hope they take over, and give you a damn good walloping!”

“Thank you sir, and a good day to you too, I’m sorry we could n-”

“Slam!”

Whereupon the angry customer goes to the ‘punch-in the-mouth’ office and before he can voice his unfuried fury, at the:

“Eastern bloody hell!” ...

The ‘punch in the mouth’ clerk sets his jaws just right; so as to give him a proper punch in the mouth...

Only; they end up both scuffling until the officer delivers the last blow... to the now, quietened, but still alacritous and urbane customer who refuses to be insulted by receiving such a nasty last-blow, and says to hide his own self chagrin at being bested, as all upper Englishmen were taught at that ‘time’... to never let things get them down... trying to save face by barefacedly turning a negative into a positive... even though the sham is obvious, this attitude keeps the Englishman’s attitude positive.

“Thanks, I needed that! Now... if I can only find that bloody bastard who sent me to the wrong room.”

“The ‘wrong room department’ is three doors to the right sir...”

“Ah... to the right. Why didn’t you say so in the first place? Bloody hell!”

“Do you want another punch in the mouth sir...?”

“No thanks... one is enough! Now if I can only-”

‘And a good day to you too sir...’

“Yes... good day. And the sun sets in the West because the bloody yeast always rises in the East. But the-”

The skit ends with the customer going off singing some inane nonsensical ditty and ends up saying:

“Tra-la-la-lala... trolley. Trolley! Trolley! Where’s the trolley? There’s never a damn trolley around when you bloody well need one. Trolley! Oh, rot. Might as well walk... probably save myself some time... now... if I can only find out what time it is now... I can save myself all the tr-”

“Trouble sir? Are we having any trouble?”

“No, no! Everything is just b-loody fine. Fi-.”

“Because in the trouble department sir... we can handle any trouble caused by the likes o-you sirr!”

The last thing heard are the running footsteps of the chased-off customer as he beats a hasty retreat from a ‘department store’ whose ‘departments’ turned out to be more than he bargained for...

So he departs from the department store... because what he ‘meant’ to say was not understood by the ‘mentality’ of the various depart-‘ments’... or the ‘men’ who were trying to teach him various ‘t’ruths that he ruefully almost accepts, and later rejects as not suiting his personality. As proper English ‘men’ are meant to only act in a certain proscribed manner; no matter how much in the wrong they may be... or how ridiculous the situation.

People to this day, still believe that they ‘know’ what the ‘time’ is... and ‘how’ they ‘are’ at any given moment. If you question anyone about this near-universal assumption, some give you a blank stare, some are surprised, some laugh. If they are in a hurry, they have no ‘time’ to stop to think about what they are saying... or what their words actually meant.

So. How do you distinguish between laughter, fun, wonder, relativity, truth, and semantics... if you want to ‘precisely’ ‘know’ ‘exactly’ what anything ‘is’ or ‘means’? Pure Wonder does not bother with exactness in any boring absolute way. Which keeps the person having it from being bored or exact... but always interesting, fun, and alive. But having anything, is another problem that is caused by using words to describe something that goes beyond words. Exactly how does one have a Sense of Pure Wonder? The term ‘Pure Wonder’ is only the best term I could find that is closest to an all-around, expanding sense of awareness.

The term 'evergreen' was used by ancient Taoist monks to describe generally the same idea. They lived so close to Nature; that it actually was synonymous, or close to what I mean by the term 'Pure Wonder'. Then, seeing the miracle of old things being transformed by new things was intensely experienced with every blade of grass that sprouted anew after it was cut by their horse's mouth at night... only to find where the horse had grazed had been magically replaced with fresh blades of grass... as the entire carpet of grass and soil rushed all of it's healing energy to repair the small area used by the horse. The carpet of grass was almost sensed as a complete soul... the term 'soul' means: sole... a single living organism.

Or; "So U live!" "So... you live!" "I live also. I am also a soul. We both are alive. Isn't that incredibly wonderful!? What is life? Why are we living? What are you doing? Oh, grass? Oh, Wonder. Oh Evergreen Wonder why are you always Green?. How can you heal yourself so easily? Can I do that too?"

Only... these Taoists did not realize that their horses were not eating grass; but a form of moss, ... and because the moss was already short the horse could only nibble at it slightly and not manage to damage it and it was only mouthing it with his soft lips out of habit and wasn't really biting it and eating it... the non-farmer Taoists did not realize that it was not such a great wonder after all.

Their question was very simple: 'Why do leaves die, and moss stays evergreen? Yet leaves are connected to living trees and moss lives on bare rock! How can rocks give more life than trees and earth? Why are some species of trees evergreen, and some not? What is the secret to everlasting life? What is the secret to immortality?'

The Taoists used the Chinese word for; 'evergreen' as a secret codeword for their secret wonder... thinking that only they have ever wondered about such simple things. When many non-Taoists have wondered about it also. Only they never had enough time to put their own wonder into words. Which is why Taoism is practiced almost exclusively by city-folk who only later in life; discover the simple wonders of Nature... Whereas people living in the country already have wondered about such things... and have become bored with it. Why? Because they developed a sense of normality. Because their sense of normality became stronger than their Sense of Wonder... because they take the natural beauty around them for granted. Because they grew up in the country, not the city. Because they grew used to living in the country, and city people grew used to living in the city. Country people have just as much wonder about the city, as city people have about the country. Only... the city is dead. Wonder about the city dies fast, and country people quickly get used to living in the city. But the country is alive. City people take longer to stop wondering at nature.

The missing aspect that humans think they lack... is what the Taoists enviously worshipped the grass for, and why they wondered about its ability to be self-healing. All that people need; is to round out their sense of awareness and wonder, to include literally everything inside and outside them. When you do that; you find that the act of wondering becomes an automatically healing process... all Wonder is healing. Pure Wonder is all-healing. All living things exist in States of Pure Wonder. Living in the middle of a living natural eco-system is just being lucky enough to soak up all of the Pure Wonder around you... becoming aware of life energy instead of civilized dead things can, and does heal you.

Constructive use of the tool-brain

Praying, meditating, putting yourself in a certain state of mind, or frame of mind, visualizing, focusing in a certain way, thinking positively, changing your attitude or how you feel about something, are all different ways that you can use your brain as a tool.

Here is a curious thing: no matter what one's beliefs, no matter who or what you are praying to, regardless of whether you believe in a god or not... if you examine and compare what people are actually doing, the beneficial effect of all this is determined by a few basic universal human factors: the ability to give, the ability to forgive, love, courage, and honesty. In short: all healing can be attributed to a better, more positive energy-flow and a balancing of imbalance which has nothing to do with whatever label you put on it. To say that only one religion brings salvation is like saying only Christian bodies are capable of healing their own wounds and all other humans who are not Christians will never heal their souls or their physical cuts and maladies because only the magic of Christianity can heal you. Healing spiritually has nothing to do with any religious dogma or belief-system: it is merely an auric-physical energy totality. Moreover: it is not the pyramidity of your focus that is beneficial, but the kind of energy you are generating and its direction. If your energy is positive, then you will attract negative people into your life naturally... because they somehow know you can help them.

But if your thoughts, emotions, actions, are negative, then you will stay away from positive people like the plague! Because they represent a threat to you because they are actually better than you are... if you want to improve yourself and become more positively oriented: then you need to focus your thoughts, emotions and actions into a positive direction. And the only way you can do this non-destructively... without harming others; is only by using the human tools of love-honesty-courage. That is the only non-destructive way humans can improve their lives humanely.

The question is: what is the proper use of these tools? How should they be used? To use them in as balanced and as integrated a way as possible means you need to exist in a state of wonder. The sense of pure wonder is the only over-all regulating mechanism we have for our awareness and our senses.

The Idea of Human Balance

Because of civilization, our past and our makeup: it is not easy to become balanced. Not just mentally balanced but physically balanced also. That in itself is a rare exception: for someone to fully develop the use of their bodies and their minds equally. But to become emotionally balanced as well. Socially balanced. Sexually balanced. Spiritually balanced. To fully develop all aspects of yourself. To become creative in literally all aspects of your life. When there are no programs or forums in society designed to do this. When there is no demand for it, no perceivable need for it. When it is not valued: not taught, not even considered.

Yet this represents the unlimited, untapped potential within all of us. But because civilization is tool-based, it seeks to develop only our tool potential: not our human potential. All civilization does, is to untap tiny segments of this potential in a few lucky individuals and call it genius, or talent. While making it impossible to even attempt this as an overall approach. People who have developed more than one aspect of themselves are rare exceptions. People who are balanced in more than one aspect of themselves are even rarer.

All human potential is developed by using what you learn in a creative process. If you are not being creative doing something, then you are not developing your potential. Anything that you repeat uncreatively, you do not learn from. The trick is to never repeat things the same way. That way, you never get bored. But creativity itself is never valued: only its dead by-products are valued. If human value systems put creativity above all other values, then what you are creative at becomes irrelevant. If you can learn how to eat a bowl of soup creatively, you can become creative in anything you do, think, or feel.

Our own creativity is just an abstract reflection-refraction that mirrors the infinite creativity of the universe. The creativity of our inner universe mirrors the creativity of the outer universe. Its only purpose is to create beauty while having fun doing it. The creation of this beauty is only a reflection of the beauty of the Universe. The end result is what we call: truth. If this is properly balanced and integrated, then: creativity-fun-beauty-truth, all end up being part-of the same process, the same dynamic. And the only way to achieve this is through a sense of pure wonder. The more things you can throw away; the more creative you become. If you are a painter and never keep your paintings but give them away; you become even more creative at painting. If you compose music for people and never repeat what you play; you become a more creative musician. If you tell jokes and never repeat the same ones, your comedy becomes funnier and more creative. That applies to everything including breathing, walking, dancing, thinking, feeling, etc.

But new music has to be practiced and repeated until you can develop your own expertise playing it... so, you can explore all of the permutations; and find out which of them work, and which don't work... which avenues lead to more beautiful and simpler melodies and harmonies... and which do not. Which melodies to keep, and which to throw away... until you distill the complexity of it down; so you have only the best, the essence of that music... which can act as a catalyst for more plateau-leaps in creativity, and simplicity. So you have to use your judgment, your feelings, your instincts, all combined. That is precisely how all genetic evolution works. The boring chore of deciding what to throw away, and what not to throw away; should be reduced down to the smallest possible number. The less time you waste first accumulating, and then discarding things; the more time you have to be creative.

Wonder

But I have left my original question unanswered: why does this Sense of Pure Wonder always seek to go beyond? This is simply the primal human urge to regain what it lost: our Connectiveness to the Universe. The human urge to become part-of something larger than itself, or the urge for transcendence, or the Sense of Pure Wonder, is basically all the same thing. The human need to explore is the urge to connect with something beyond our own reflective selves.

Now: take this blind, incoherent need to become part-of something greater than oneself, mix it with pyramidal focus, and you get the mass worship of one thing-idea-person-culture-religion... people feeling a part-of something larger than themselves pyramidally. That is a corrupted distortion of pure wonder.

By arbitrarily separating and pyramidally focusing on only one or some things-ideas-aspects, it is by this kind of selective focus that this blind desire becomes split up; this results in all kinds of fragmented connections, and from that; all kinds of fragmented identities, since people only identify with what they can connect-to. As long as human awareness and identity is abstractively split-up, segmented.... As long as it is aware of only separations, as long as it only focuses pyramidally, selectively blocking out all other awareness, as long as the sense of normality prevents human awareness from even trying to be more aware of its surroundings, as long as people identify with and connect to their own abstractions instead of actuality: then this primal urge of transcendence, this need to connect, will express itself in countless confusing, incoherent, different, unconnected ways. However: the root of this Babel of randomness is the urge to re-connect with actuality, with the universe. I mean this literally.

The only reason early human culture attributed spirits or entities to everything around them is because the only way they knew how to identify-with and connect-to their outer world was by projecting their own self-awareness onto the Universe. However, the Sense of Pure Wonder does not blindly see itself in everything around it. Instead, it is an attempt to go beyond it's own self-awareness. To wonder how it would feel like to be a fish, to wonder how it would feel like to be a bird, is only a faint glimmer of the true nature of Pure Wonder. Semantically: the attempt to "become the universe" makes no sense. To become "one" with the Universe" makes even less sense by civilized standards of awareness.

Yet this is precisely what the root of all wonder is trying to do: to become a grain of sand instead of just looking at it. To become a living tree instead of just sitting under it. The Sense of Pure Wonder is the desire to experience everything. The Sense of Pure Wonder is the desire to understand everything. The Sense of Pure Wonder is the desire to become as alive as possible, as aware as possible, as connected-to everything as possible.

What the Sense of Wonder does; is that it intensifies everything.

Everything you see, feel and hear: all of your perceptions; become intensified, instead of becoming deadened and normalized.

You end up living more intensely, more fully: you experience things more intensely, more fully. Another way to describe this is experiencing things more deeply.

The Sense of Pure Wonder is the ultimate drug, the ultimate high, the ultimate rush, the ultimate thrill: which makes all other segmented, split up, imbalanced thrills pale in comparison. It is the fount of all inspiration, intuition and creativity. Living in a State of Wonder means you cannot be bored.

You no longer have to seek ways of relieving boredom. You could use the word passion, or intensity to describe Pure Wonder also.

The Sense of Pure Wonder makes you live more passionately, more intensely, more creatively. You become more alive, more sensitive to all things.
Simply by living in a state of no fear.

Simply by valuing and developing your own Courage, and Honesty.

So that people learn to finally face their own fears. And in doing so: overcome them by understanding them. This long, hard training finally gives you the ability to love honestly, courageously and fully... with the final reward being your own happiness and the happiness of others. There are endless ways I could try to describe this. If you are more intensely alive, you have more fun creatively and vice versa. By developing your intrinsic creativity, honesty and courage: you have more fun and vice versa.

But intensity burns both ways. Passion burns cold and hot. It becomes a set of extremes, and includes everything in-between these extremes also. If it is not balanced, it becomes a form of intense, imbalanced insanity; instead of the normal variety of dulled-deadened-mild insanity: which most people consider normal. All forms of intensity and passion are riveting, fascinating, envied. That is the reason timid followers listen to charismatic leaders: simply because they lack their own passion and intensity. That is the reason viewers watch soap operas. As moths that are attracted to a flame, they also fear that flame since they fear uncovering or exploring their own feelings-passions. If a person exists in a state of pure wonder, where all of their awareness is constantly expanding: then they will never focus on any narrow view of life: they will never worship anything or anybody. Why listen to someone else's passion when your own passion is burning to express itself? Why accept the authority of pyramidal figures-symbols-ideas, when the authority and power and passion of your own soul tells you what to do a million times better than anybody or anything else?

The Sense of Pure Wonder is the awareness that we are trapped inside our own reflective self-awareness and we can't get out. That we can't understand what it feels like to be an ant, or a dog, or a cloud, or a river. That we are excluded from taking part-in the entire universe around us. That we are excluded from any deeper understanding of the world around us. The sense of pure wonder is nothing more than our yearning to re-join that infinite flow of energy, to no longer be outcasts of the universe we exist in. The sense of pure wonder is the opposite of our fear of separation, it is the opposite of the fear of losing our separateness, it is the opposite of the ego, it is the opposite of selfishness, it is the opposite of greed, it is the opposite of imbalance. The Sense of Pure Wonder is the only contact with Actual Infinity that we have. It is our only lifeline back to the Universe.

Wonder makes the complete, or absolute rejection of anything impossible. Living with a sense of pure wonder means you cannot reject anything absolutely... no matter how unpleasant it is, no matter how horrible it is, no matter how terrible it is... because... all pure wonder wants to do is digest, understand, and accept everything it becomes aware of. And when that happens, it no longer is horrible: it just is...

Pure Wonder is a continual, unending process of finding out. This makes any judgment very hard, except generally. Pure wonder is the human id's conscious willingness to submerge itself under the truth... under actuality. And be consciously willing to be wrong, mistaken... by consciously knowing that you do not know. Then you can change your mind, your ideas, your actions and your feelings about something consciously. Why? Because you have set the truth above yourself and serve it, instead of setting the truth below you so it can serve you... that is the fundamental difference between honesty and dishonesty. Being willing to find out the truth no matter what the truth turns out to be. Depending on your level of wonder and honesty, depending on how unaware you are, how self-deceiving you are, how blind you are to your own faults, your own 'Id'; you are either self-serving, or truth-serving, you are either self-receiving, or wonder-receiving, actuality-receiving, truth-receiving. Moreover, these basic factors of your life, your awareness and your personality will determine how you live.

The only way you can avoid selectively lying to yourself is by having a continual Sense of Pure Wonder. And even then, you will not be able to manage it; unless you live with other human equals who also have a continual Sense of Pure Wonder. And give you feedback, and are honest with you.

Basically: Pure Wonder is the energy dynamic of penetration... both Inwards and Outwards. Any energy that does not try to penetrate, is not Pure Wonder. The Sense of Wonder is penetration. The result of penetration is clarity, understanding and perspective. The result can be Insight, or Outsight: depending if you focus In or Out.

In summation: the future of our species depends upon three basic factors:

How we decide to live.
How we raise our young.
And; the nature of our awareness.

Reincarnation

The reason for the belief in reincarnation comes from entity-onlookers. Spirits search for persons they feel akin to... or can identify with. Human entities live through living people vicariously. Their existence is felt and digested on a very subtle level in the subconscious of those still living; and their presence in living souls can be manifested through dreams. Whatever an entity lacked or wished to do, they may seek out... or find someone as like themselves as possible, with similar passions and lifestyle. Then; when the subconscious of that living person is explored, they find they may have certain unexplained memories, or “previous lives”.

This is a total misperceived fallacy. These memories are merely the blending of a living awareness with a dead one: who in their sick life-thirst, crave new living experiences by living through another person because they never lived their own lives fully. But the harmonic vibrations between the living subconscious and the maggot infestation of these unseen dead entities cannot be disentangled unless the living develop their awareness to a very high level of sensitivity. This level of clarity and sensitivity cannot be reached inside the bounds of civilization. As a result: the belief in reincarnation has become set in stone and perpetuated for thousands of years in the east.

Also: reincarnation is mathematically impossible. The genetic code of our DNA shows that modern humans originally came from a population of less than 50,000 individuals. If that population had remained the same; then reincarnation might be possible. But our population increased. So... if reincarnation is true: that means that there have always been more humans alive than there are reincarnated souls to take over living bodies. Or at least as many living human bodies as there are dead entities. But who were the original human spirits who were never reincarnated? A handful of the first humans that mutated into a distinct subspecies? If so: then what of all the other souls who never had reincarnated entities enter their bodies? What is the difference between a living person whose spirit is not reincarnated and one whose spirit is reincarnated?

This poses the question: if reincarnation does in fact happen: who chooses which soul to invade, and which soul to leave alone to develop its own personality naturally? Who is supposed to have this kind of god-like power over unsuspecting babies? Who is supposed to have the god-like wisdom to know which baby should be infected with an old human undead filth, and which baby to leave alone? Who is supposed to have this god-like choice? Who is supposed to have the power of life or death for each new, innocent, burgeoning soul inside each living fetus?

The idea that you can destroy a living soul of a growing fetus and baby... and replace it with some dead soul who wants to live again... and give this unbelievable power over all living souls... only to dead souls is not only obscene, it is the perfect after-life fantasy for anyone who does not happen to like the life they are living now.

The idea of having the power of choosing which new innocent fetus to infest and poison... is such a sick, evil obscenity: there are no words that can describe this kind of violation and rape.

The spiritual possession, poisoning and the aura of a once-dead soul merging with a still living one: is possible, and does happen.

Only... this is not reincarnation. This is merely a once-dead soul leaking their memories into your brain: and you; mistaking their memories for one of your own... sneaky, huh? The idea of reincarnation was invented to explain this phenomenon of the unseen playing tricks on the living. It seemed to be the only possible way to explain Indians having dreams and memories of living long ago in the past. People still go to therapists to try to understand this phenomenon.

However: this explanation does not fit the facts. It is a complete lie. The simple answer is that people who have memories they cannot ascribe to their own life is because they are being poisoned by once-dead unseen souls who are living through them. These undead filth, mix their memories in with yours: so you cannot separate your own life's memories from theirs.

Do the math. Each living human: has more than five thousand direct dead ancestors. What surprise is it that some, if not all of them, are living your life vicariously? And by their mere unseen presence: both inside you and around you. Poisoning you with all of their combined urges-motives-addictions-beliefs-wants-needs-traumas...? Do you think this might be a logical reason why humans repeat the past, and worship the past, and re-create the past in so many reflectively cunning ways: that not one living human has suspected the actual truth? How can anyone explain the cunning of these unseen dead filth? How can anyone explain how they have managed to keep their dirty little secrets from living humans for over one hundred thousand years?

Unless the first human walking ape-ancestors that became undead filth...were as cunning as the leopards that killed them. Unless they learned their cunning and their love of killing from the leopards who killed them. Unless they preyed upon their own progeny, and in their own tribes... like cunning, secretive leopards. Operating mostly at night. Unseen. Operating on the subconscious minds of their own offspring, their own sons and daughters. Unfelt. Raping and killing them in their dreams. Until they grew to live in fear all their lives. Until they worshipped first the leopards that killed them, and then the dead spirits that attacked them secretly at night in their dreams...

Does this seem like a logical evolution of how a living species could be kept in the dark about their own unseen, undead ancestors for one million years or more? It sure as hell explains more about human undead filth than the bullshit rationalization of reincarnation.

Thousands of years ago in India... the cultural belief in reincarnation: was a sly rotten way to allow all Indians to be possessed by their unseen ancestors. Without the victims trying to exorcize these invisible undead filth; as the evil unseen spirits they actually were... and still are.

It is one of the main hidden dynamics that explains why Indian culture has not changed for 7 thousand years. There are too many undead unseen auras fighting for supremacy over each living soul alive in India. Thousands of undead unseen descendants... thousands of unseen entities inside every living Indian: fighting against any change to the old culture. Lest they can no longer vicariously re-live their own lives unseen and unfelt... over and over again: through living Hindus; still living exactly as they once did thousands of years ago. Living their unseen lives over, and over for thousands of years unseen, unfelt, and unchanged.

Because if the living have a drastically different life-style from their unseen ancestors. Then their ancestors will lose interest in living through them. The unseen will lose their ability to poison their souls at any time they wish. Simply because the old-dead undead souls will not have the same mental programs and reflexes that new-cultured Indians do. And they will than lose their unseen grip over their own progeny; and become unable to stop changes which they hate. And become unable to preserve the old religions... that give them guaranteed automatic reverence and obedience from the now-living and now-dying Indians who are trained from birth never to question their parents and elders. This changing of cultures forces these sick entities to work very hard and diligently... piling up as much incriminating evidence against the still living; so they cannot be attacked and accused by them when they get there. So, the sick reverence for the oldest, and the sick power of the oldest over the youngest is still preserved. The reason the idea of reincarnation was developed at all in India is obvious. With a social caste system that has refused to change for thousands of years; how else could they give any hope, or meaning to the indentured suffering of hundreds of serfs, slaves, untouchables, and vassals that were still living? What better way to stave off any possibility of social upheaval or rebellion, than to inculcate all its inhabitants into a religion that teaches and glorifies the resignation and acceptance of suffering... by giving them a pie-in-the-sky reason to become resigned to never being able to change their lot in life for better? Teaching the oppressed masses to become resigned to their suffering is basically, what all religions do. It is their most important function. It is the basic reason they are upheld by the undead filth on the other side. Because then the undead filth can use these insane irrational beliefs to easily control millions of newly arriving undead human entities.

What is the evil they do? What is the evil they are? They are the unseen, the unfelt, the untouched, the undead, the unknown... They poison every living soul to not see, not feel, not touch, not know.... 'Do not see! Do not touch! Do not feel! Do not know! Do not think! Do not be aware! Be dead! See nothing! Touch nothing! Hear nothing! Do nothing! Know nothing! Stay ignorant! Remain blind!'

'Do not explore! Do not ask! Do not wonder! Never wonder! Wonder is forbidden! Asking is forbidden! Seeing is forbidden! Touching is forbidden! Thinking is forbidden! Awareness is forbidden! Knowledge is forbidden! Curiosity is forbidden! Happiness is forbidden! Honesty is forbidden! Courage is forbidden! Love is forbidden! All change is forbidden!'

Look at Indian culture: and you will see the dynamic of this being subconsciously acted out in more than one billion living souls. Look at China: and you will see the same thing. India is an unchanged monstrosity of overpopulation that is so insane, many Indians hate their own culture, which none of them can explain or understand. What do you think all ancient cultures teach? They all teach the same fucking, stupid, sick, evil ideas. Worship the past. Don't ask questions. The Sense of Pure Wonder destroys this evil naturally. Ancient cultures are all fucking stupid because they are all an accumulation of unseen, unfelt, untouched, un-experienced, un-lived, unknown, undead insane human entities that have ever lived in those cultures. Why do you think India has a class of untouchables? So the unseen can more easily surround them in the streets and permeate their souls and corrupt and poison them with their unseen, unfelt, unknown presence.

Just for the record: reincarnation is actually physically impossible. For reincarnation to actually happen, you would need to duplicate a human body down to its original DNA in order for a duplicated spirit, or entity to be able to inhabit that physical body. Since no two human bodies are completely identical to each other; it follows that no living spirits or entities within these bodies could be duplicated absolutely. You would need to duplicate a human body down to the level of absolute identity... with the same exact atoms and living cells that have the same exact history and past... for any soul to be duplicated enough to be reincarnated inside a living fetus or a living baby. That is absurd, grotesque and physically impossible. It would be worse than ripping out your own heart; and replacing it with somebody else's heart. It would like replacing your veins and arteries and organs and bones also. The psychic violation and violence of such an act would kill you. Not to mention replacing every cell in your brain with an absolutely identical replacement. The belief in reincarnation is so stupid: no intelligent person can logically explain it.

Besides, if such a person's psyche is duplicated enough for an old soul to enter their body at birth; this past life would interfere with their present life. They would already possess a pre-formed identity, which would prevent the formation of a new one. No unique soul can ever enter another living person's body without causing huge psychic damage. No atom, no cell, no organism, or energy can, or should re-live its experiences... there is no reason for it. The only reasons for this belief is the unexperienced lives people have lived, their wasted lives, their misguided wishes for a second chance, the fear of dying, the fear of death, and the subsequent irrational wish for some kind of immortality.

Death

So what is the reward of dying? What fate awaits each person? Is there any guaranteed reward? Do you get to laze the remaining thousands, or millions of years away as an unseen, disinterested bystander: watching the free show of living humans struggling with the problems of their life? If you want to be as corrupt as our ancestors were and still are: then yes... you can do this easily unseen. But that does not change the fact that once you die; you still have a job to do. And that job will not be over until the last living human breathes their last breath. That job will not be over until the energy of last human entity is transformed into something else. And the only way you will ever be able to do that job is if you become more honest than dishonest... more courageous than cowardly... more loving than hating...

Then if any living person contacts you... you will not lie to them because they cannot see you. You will not be afraid of them or their anger or disgust if you tell them the truth of your own soul. And you will not try to hinder all the good things that the past 12,000 years of civilized entities have been trying to hinder as much as possible. You will not try to stop people from becoming more loving... then you will not live as the past 90,000 years of unseen entities have been living...on a distractive diet of the hate and corruption in living people's lives... feeding off it unseen: like the rotten carrion that our ancestors fed off; just to survive a little bit longer. You will no longer try to harm others. Instead, you will try to help living people.

If humans first learn how to live when they are still alive: then they will tear to shreds all of the lying myths about life-after-death... and all of those lying myths will be thrown away. All of the religious institutions will close their doors, and the clergy will slink away in silent shame and disgrace, and fear, and guilt... at the obscene filth they have propagating for thousands of destructive years.

What is obscene? It is the unseen. What is evil? Evil is all the unseen, obscene, unfelt, untouched, unknown undead human entities that fill the human world with their secret invisible unseen poison and corruption.

Wonder and the Universe

It has been found that the universe is expanding... or to be more specific: the space of the universe is expanding while energy is coming more closely together. The spaces coming out from in-between the molecules and atoms of your brain and body are expanding all the time. While the smallest subatomic energy of every electron and quark in your body and brain are compressing themselves into smaller spaces.

The dynamic of the Sense of Pure Wonder is merely the same thing. It is merely doing the same thing as the rest of the Universe... except that it is also digesting this compressed energy into an even simpler, more universal form of energy. The only thing in the Universe that is not doing this, the only killing thing in the Universe that does not work by this universal principal: is human civilization. The Universe can and will swallow this tiny exception, and destroy it utterly. The Universe can and will re-balance this tiny abomination when it is good and ready to do so.

Unless we do it ourselves first before it is too late... unless we learn to follow the actual Universal Laws of the Universe; that may be thwarted temporarily: but can never be successfully opposed by anything inside the Universe. Unless we learn to develop a Sense of Pure Wonder: the Universe will force us to develop a Sense of Pure Wonder.

Science carefully avoids explaining; that all of the scientific discoveries which prove this... must also include us. Science is carefully and illogically selective. Science is not logical. Science is carefully, and selectively irrational and illogical when it comes to applying these universal truths and principals and dynamics to humans. We, along with all other living things; cannot and should not try to defy the universal laws of the universe. But modern civilization's human outlook is precisely that: it is an act of smug defiance. The very pride and arrogance of all civilized egos, the pride we have in being civilized. The pride and arrogance and smugness we feel from living safely inside this artificial civilization, the pride and arrogance and smugness we have from having the advantage of civilization...is precisely because we are an 'exception' to all of these universal laws that all other living things obey and follow... that we are an exception to the very laws of physics which we ourselves use for our own advantage, but never follow ourselves. This is not only the moral and ethical hypocrisy of all Science. It is the moral and ethical hypocrisy of all civilizations. It is the moral and ethical hypocrisy of every living civilized human on Earth. And there is not one human born... living or dead that can refute this fact.

This is why no book, no philosopher, no writer, no thinker, no religious leader, no spiritualist, no holy man, no Christ, no Buddha, no Lao Tse, no Confucius, no Mohammed, no Einstein, no human ever born; has ever asked the question of value, or the question of life, or the question of human existence, in its proper context, nor ever asked it logically and honestly. That is why no book, no philosopher, no writer, no thinker, no religious leader, no spiritualist, no holy man, no Christ, no Buddha, no Lao Tse, no Confucius, no Mohammed, no human ever born has ever agreed with any other human about how to live and what the universal laws are that should be respected and followed, and just how we should follow them. That is why no civilized person including all of the famous people listed above can agree with any other civilized person... because none of them lived in a State of Pure Wonder. Many came close in one way, or another... but none of them understood what they were experiencing. All of them misunderstood and misrepresented the Universal Laws of the Universe. All of them misperceived their own experiences and misinterpreted their own experiences because they were not experienced through the crystal clarity of Pure Wonder.

Pure wonder is pure clarity. If you do not understand something... then for shit's sake admit it. Once you do understand something, it becomes clear to you... then you no longer have to wonder about it. Then you can drop it and wonder about something else. Then you will not waste your entire life wondering about only one thing. Then you will be able to wonder about hundreds of thousands of things... and successfully understand them, and appreciate them, and enjoy them, and use your understanding to heal and be happy and have fun. Human understanding is nothing more than a human form of clarity.

Universal Connectivity and Human Awareness

What I have tried to show in this book is the vast gulf between how humans were originally designed to live; and how we actually live. We stand on one side of this gulf, unable to even glimpse the other side. But even this perspective is minor when you try to put human existence into the context of the actual Universe. The question of how are we connected to the Universe looms over us as the final piece of the puzzle in order for us to truly understand the situation we find ourselves in now. To answer this, we must be able to look at ourselves with a Sense of Pure Wonder. We must be able to step outside of ourselves and perceive all things with a Sense of Pure Wonder. We must be able to look at ourselves as merely one unique form of energy amidst an infinite number of unique forms of energy.

In order to explain this, you must go back to the root of how the Universe functions. How is all energy connected in the Universe? It is connected to it through the Triality of Energy-Experience-Evolution. Meaning you cannot separate Energy from Experience or Evolution. It exists as a dynamically balanced Triality: as a Totality of Space-Energy-Time. That Totality cannot be destroyed. And the Path of all Energy, the Path of all Experience, the Path of all Evolution is always towards a higher level of Dynamic Balance.

For abstractive human life-energy to balance itself, it must complete its own evolutionary path. For any form of energy to be balanced, the three attributes of:

Energy	}	Need to be dynamically balanced and integrated as a whole.
Experience
Evolution

Any imbalance of one aspect of this Triality produces an imbalance in the other two.

When any aspect of that energy's experience is not fully experienced, not digested, not integrated into that energy, not fully a part-of that energy: then that energy not only stops evolving, it cannot evolve any further. It remains stuck-frozen. In the context of actual infinity, there is no such thing as an eternally separate or separated aspect of that infinity. There is no such thing as an eternally non-experienced experience. It is not only energy which cannot be destroyed, but experience also cannot be destroyed. Nor can evolution be destroyed. This universal law applies to all three aspects of this Triality. Any one aspect of this Triality can be temporarily imbalanced in relation to the other two: but not forever. Eventually, the three aspects of this Triality balance themselves: allowing it to continue in its path of balanced Splitness. This is not a theory: it is an unavoidable fact-truth-actuality.

Now: we come to the final unveiling of our own nature, and the Nature of the Universe.

Science has proved that Energy cannot be destroyed. This is a proven fact. However: science has not bothered to prove that Space cannot be destroyed. Even though it is a fact. Nor has science tried to prove that Experience cannot be destroyed. Even though this is also a fact. This leads us to the final missing connections and conclusions: which explains everything. And this conclusion is:

That Time also cannot be destroyed.

Time is not merely an ephemeral splitting of the Past and Future: it is one-third of the Universe's Actual Infinity.

This is the final missing fact in the Triality of the Universe.

Yet it is a fact so alien: that human minds cannot grasp it.

What does this mean?

Since Time is merely an aspect of Infinite Splitness, and cannot be destroyed: then each moment of Time cannot be destroyed either. This infinitely interconnected complex dynamic of Triality, is an inseparable part of Space-Energy which exists forever. Energy is a pattern that passes through the medium of Space: it also passes through the medium of Time. But... in order to make this a Trialistically balanced equation: Space and Time must also be patterns which pass through the medium of Energy.

This describes each aspect: Space, Energy and Time; in three ways:

3. As a three-dimensional medium.
2. As a two-dimensional pattern;
1. And as a one-dimensional through.

Each one possesses all three attributes. This is merely another way of describing the universe as an interrelated Triality. Time, Space, and Energy is an interchangeable, interconnected dynamic: each existing simultaneously as a medium, a pattern, and a through; or you could describe them as:

1. A Totality (which is as close as human language can get to the concept of actual infinity, or infinite oneness, or infinite Everythingness.)
2. A Duality (or a condition of two-dimensional patterns)
3. A Triality (or a process going through a medium)

The simple fact that Time cannot be destroyed: leads us to the final inevitable conclusions to the nature of not only the Universe, but of ourselves.

Because this simple fact alone explains why humans need to re-experience moments of the present, which were never fully experienced.

It explains why we have to experience them fully in order to become balanced.

If we do, if we can balance ourselves, if we can balance our awareness: then we will finally reach a state of being where we are connected dynamically, balanced dynamically, between the Past and Future by existing in the present moment in a state of Pure Wonder.

Once we can do that: then we can resume the evolution of our awareness. Then we can go on to expand, change and develop our awareness as we were meant to.

But human minds are not designed to grasp this.

For us: Time is intangible. We exist supposedly balanced between the Past and the Future: living in our present moments in a condition of dynamically balanced Splitness. However, we are not truly dynamically balanced. We are imbalanced creatures; whose impression of the Present is a faulty bunch of split-up sensations that are mostly unconnected, and thereby imbalanced. We never exist totally in the present moment. Our awareness is split-off elsewhere into wildly bouncing, disconnected ramblings... as different segments of Time... different segments of Experience... different segments of thought... different segments of feelings. Our minds ramble from the past, to the present, to the future. Because we are too distracted by our own reflective, disjointed awareness, the end result is that we never fully experience our lives in the present moment; which is largely a trapped, reflective, self-awareness that knows no peace or balance.

What does this mean?

It means that if we become connected to both the Past and the Future: time ceases to be a bunch of separate moments.

This experience has happened to countless individuals throughout history. But it happens only for a brief, lucky moment... and only to those who have spent most of their lives developing their Sense of Pure Wonder: such as famous yogi's, spiritual masters, or saints.

Then they are left with an experience which cannot be put into words. And when they try to describe it: others gape or jeer at their pathetic, inadequate description. They try to tell others of what they experienced: but all of their attempts to do so fail miserably.

What they experienced was a brief, muddled, glimpse of infinity. They experienced time as an infinitely connected-separated totality. They managed for a split-second to become so dynamically balanced in the Present; that the Present was no longer separated from the Past or the Future.

How can human awareness possibly grasp anything that is infinite?

The answer lies within the nature of human thought itself. It can do this because the speed of human thought is instantaneous.

The only possible explanation for human thought being instantaneous is because it operates on a level-context of infinity.

The speed of light is only the speed limit of the Outer Universe, not our inner one.

If our inner universe-awareness were not infinite, it would have to obey the same laws of physics as all the rest of the outer universe; it could not surpass the speed of light: then human thought could not be instantaneous. Once we do balance our awareness, our inner perception of time becomes blurred-expanding into infinity.

The balance of human awareness hinges on our relative balance between Inner and Outer Infinity.

If, for a brief moment, this balance actually occurs, and someone receives their own unique, personal, insight. Suddenly, everything becomes clear to them. The meaning of Life, the secrets of the Universe are all revealed. But they cannot explain it to others who have not experienced this epiphany of being.

What most people call mystical nonsense is only a momentary, lucky flash of a near-perfect dynamically balanced awareness of time-space-energy.

The fact that Time cannot be destroyed, leads us into a realm where all human understanding fails. Because then: you come face-to-face with a truth so alien, so incomprehensible: that the normally distracted, imbalanced human mind cannot grasp it or handle it.

And this truth is: that Time has no meaning except as a Totality which is Infinite. That all the separations-connections of Time are only an illusion. That no moment of Time can ever be destroyed or disappear. That each moment of Time exists forever... Except, the evolution of the process itself is constantly transforming it. The past changes continually in relation to the future. So each present moment creates a new balance-point that re-defines both Past and Future.

What can human understanding make of this? How does this relate to everyday existence? It means that if we are to understand ourselves, we must balance ourselves between the Past and Future: nothing more. But how? That is the problem.

Because Time and Experience is causal: it is linked.

How do you balance all of your life?

By living each moment fully.

By digesting each moment and integrating it so it becomes an inseparable part of you. Every past moment, every experience, which was not completely experienced and digested, keeps you from understanding yourself and your own past. This keeps you from being balanced, or at peace. This keeps you from living in the present: because parts of you are still existing in the past or you are too busy thinking about the future. These unexperienced experiences prevent people from ever finding any happiness, contentment, peace or balance. Much has been written of letting go of the past: but the only way you can let go of the past is to experience it fully.

Otherwise it will haunt you forever.

Then what? Because then: this total change-shift in human awareness, this Sense of Pure Wonder enters into an unexplored arena of being that is beyond words... beyond Wonder... beyond horror. By balancing our awareness, we lose not only all sense of time... time not only loses all meaning: but we lose all sense of our own separateness.

And that gives another indescribable result: we lose all separation from the universe. We stop being separate. Instead of our inner reflective awareness being trapped inside ourselves by reflective fear: it explodes out into infinity. Into pure-white-hot-wonder. Meaning: once our inner observer is finally dynamically balanced properly within our middle brain, our subconscious. Our inner universe finally accurately reflects the outer universe by synchronizing with it.

Then: our Inner Universe merges with the Outer Universe... then; we become Infinite... Infinity becomes us. Until we experience the true nature of the Universe and of ourselves. Once we become balanced, once we experience our own true nature, once we experience the true nature of the Universe: we find that we were just temporarily cut-off from experiencing infinity by our unexperienced experiences, by our fears, our unexperienced fears... the fear of losing our separateness.

Since the observer-awareness is situated off-center in our reflective consciousness, instead of within our subconscious (That is; in-between our conscious and instinctive awareness): the passage of time... its balanced splitting, is observed by our observer-awareness because it exists outside of where our experience is actually being perceived and digested, outside of our middle brain. That is how and why we possess time-awareness. That is how and why we possess self-awareness. That is how and why abstraction was created. Of course, it is easy to scoff at such an improvable explanation. But this just happens to fit how the human brain evolved and how it works. It also fits how and why the outer and inner universe works. The speed of human thought is instantaneous because each thought must transverse the Inner Infinity of our Inner Universe. If it were not instantaneous, then each thought traveling through that Inner Infinity would take virtually an infinite amount of time to reach its destination.

What most people do not understand is that your inner-observer is a moveable balance-point...and that it becomes more or less effective and useable depending on where you shift its viewpoint, its perspective. The more you shift your inner-observer around, the more questions you let it ask, the more nooks and crannies you let it poke around in... the better understanding your inner-observer gets of where it is... in relation to what it is observing, and where it is observing it from...

You do that by changing your perspective, by looking at everything inside and outside you differently. When your inner-observer discovers a center of a cell: it finds that it has literally all of that cell's knowledge-power-energy at its disposal, and can mostly control it. Mostly. By mapping out the area where it resides, and gaining control over that area, your inner-observer and you can expand that area. So it becomes a larger area, a larger 'cell', a larger totality it is in control of.

Once you begin to do that, you keep on finding more and more connections and expanding the area your inner-observer has control over. If you do this enough, you begin to get an inkling that something very strange is happening. It is a very rude and insulting realization to your own inner-observer when it finds the expanse it has only begun to explore is actually infinite in scope...

At first this inner-observer thinks it is only exploring its own tiny little nesting-area, and that it is only a very small area. But firing off a thought, or question from this supposedly small area can change your perspective drastically if you find that this [thought-energy] lands forty billion light-years away instead of three inches away from that nesting area of your inner-observer.

Suddenly, instantaneously... your Inner Universe becomes a much larger, more mysterious, unexplored area. But if your inner-observer does not reside in the center-point of your Inner Infinite Universe, then it cannot strike out in all directions infinitely. If it resides only at the surface of your mechanical consciousness and does not even want to go inside, but only out-side. Because it craves distraction instead of true exploration. Then your Inner Universe will remain an unexplored black hole, which you fear looking into at all.

We became able to observe the present happen to ourselves because we became divorced, split-off from the center of our own beings; because humans do not live balanced in the present moment, perfectly balanced between past and future... we became divorced from our own balanced Splitness, from our middle brain, from our subconscious. And in doing so: we became divorced from the past and the future. Even though we were supposed to exist in-between them, perfectly dynamically balanced. We become divorced from ourselves everyday.

It is an everyday occurrence. When a person becomes caught up in whatever they are doing, they lose all awareness of the passage of time. But when a person steps back from what they're doing, they suddenly look at their watch and realize how the time has gone. Why? Because once we stop being engrossed-distracted in something pyramidally, our observer-awareness slips back into its off-balance position of outer conscious awareness. At the same time that you lose all sense of time, you also lose all sense of yourself also.

This mostly happens only when we are pyramidally focused on something else selectively... the trick is to have more than one awareness, and lose yourself and your awareness of time generally; not selectively. Our awareness operates just like any radio: how finely you manage to balance it, how finely you tune it will determine what you are receptive to. But instead of fine-tuning our actual senses, all we do is fine-tune our tools. If you fine-tune your awareness enough: you will develop a sense of pure wonder.

This explains how the imbalanced splitting-up of human awareness created time-awareness. That our so-called intelligence, our reflective self-awareness, is only an imbalanced evolution of animal awareness. That our segmented, split-up, reflective, refractive, ping-pong form of time-awareness is only possible if your inner-observer is dynamically imbalanced.

As a reflective awareness: we are infinitely interconnected between our instinctive and conscious selves, with the subconscious or middle brain in-between: to give us the Triality of our inner microcosm. Yet our infinite microcosm mirrors the infinite macrocosm, and vice versa. So if one reflects the other... where is the actual separation? Here is where in human terms: everything becomes meaningless. Because in terms of infinity: separation or measurement or size has no meaning except relatively. Nothing is actually finite or absolute. Everything is infinite. But human perception and human language cannot handle such concepts: even though it is the actual truth.

This kind of mysticism has been written about, spoken of and barely grasped throughout the ages. People have glimpsed bits and pieces of it. But we are still human: still imbalanced. Without living in a condition-state of pure wonder, we can never hope to experience our lives fully. We have yet to undergo this evolution back into the infinite. To put this literally: every human experience which was not fully experienced, not digested, or integrated, will be experienced at some point in time. To put it even more baldly: every human ever born who did not completely experience and digest every second of their lives will be forced to do so whether they want to or not. There is no escape from causality, no escape from connectivity, no escape from dynamic balance, responsibility, consequences, repercussions: they are all the same thing.

As an example, if you drop a pebble into a pool of water, that pebble is causally connected inseparably not only to every ripple which its path creates, but to the entire widening path of those ripples as they go on expanding forever; infinitely. What this means in practical terms of life-energy, life-experience, life-evolution; is that the entire accumulation of human non-experience, non-awareness, non-digestion of experience, non-integration, non-evolution... beginning with the first humans ever born, up until when our species finally becomes extinct, and even after its extinction as living animals: all human entities will still have the unfinished business of re-balancing themselves, re-experiencing their un-experienced lives, fully developing their awareness, fully digesting their experiences, fully integrating their experiences within themselves and thereby finally evolving out of their own past, out of the condition of their own separateness..

This process begins and ends with awareness. The entire evolution of the human species is an evolution of awareness. It begins with each person's life and how they live it. And for any person's life to change: their awareness must change first. Their values must change first. Otherwise, people are only changed by their outer circumstances, or by their subconscious middle brain: otherwise, people cannot have any control over their own lives.

What should people value more? Machine functions? Tool functions? Or human functions? Tool functions are based upon repetition, duplication, distraction and boredom: doing the same things repeatedly. Human functions are based upon love, courage and honesty. They are based upon pure wonder, laughter, joy, giving and fun. Which of these functions do you want to develop more? How much of your life do you devote to either one of these basic kinds of functions? Do you want to use your tools creatively, or use your feelings, your body, your awareness, your honesty, your courage, your love creatively? How much creativity, energy, time and effort you put into these two paths will determine how tool-like, how machine-like you become and how human-like, how honest, how courageous, how loving, how giving you become.

If you want to destroy your own humanity, then all you have to do is practice accumulation... practice being a tool, a machine. All fear, all greed, all dishonesty, all cowardice, all hate and all envy destroys your humanity, your love and the universal virtues of giving, honesty, courage, and wonder. In essence, the question is: how much time, effort and energy do you want to put into dead things, and how much do you want to put into living things? Ultimately, the choice is between life and death.

What is civilization? Why is this book so completely opposed to it? Why is it so bad? Why have I devoted most of this book to exposing its evils? What is the difference between humans with civilization and humans without civilization?

Civilization is an abstraction made concrete. That is all. Rather than spend time with each other and live in and with Nature; we have created an artificial shell, where we try to find the most abstract, pointless, meaningless things to keep us busy and distracted so we can avoid our actual problems. Instead of living with ourselves and with other living things: we have chosen to live with dead things and inside dead things and use dead things.

But what surprise is that? Nature is the loneliest thing in the world. Nature is living things avoiding each other as much as possible. Nature is lonely. Humans want to be loved. Nature does not know what love is. So we banded together to love ourselves. But it did not work. Instead; we became even lonelier than Nature. We became more alone than living alone in Nature. Nature rejected us: and we rejected Nature. If the finger of blame is to be pointed in one direction; it must be pointed in all directions.

Civilization

If you look at what we call: the progress of civilization... what does this progress consist of? What are we proud of? We are proud that today, mechanized farms can grow food poisoned by pesticides and chemicals for millions of humans... so these spoiled, elite millions do not have to bother with raising or growing, or finding their own food. While billions of other humans starve. What? Selectively glorifying the tip of the civilized pyramid while ignoring the huge base of the pyramid without which that tiny tip could not exist. This is the kind of selective hypocritical pyramidal focus civilization creates, preserves, nurtures, and perpetuates.

The proud progress of civilization consists of having civilized societies with their hundreds of millions: trying to find some abstract way of earning a living. Abstract entertainments. Abstract obsessions... western affluent consumers are busy. Occupied with abstract things like music, jazz, the internet, cell phones, distractions. While millions of poor... safely out of sight on other continents starve to death. Do westernized humans care about this? No. They are too busy with their abstractions to bother about other living humans starving, or anything else for that matter.

Living is not an abstraction. Life is not an abstraction! No matter how much people try to fool themselves that abstractions are more important than living things: this is a sick lie. A sick evil myth. Art is not more important than life. Art is a filthy funerary abstraction derived from death, and the worship of dead things.

This is one difference between living with and without civilization. This is one difference between actuality and abstraction. It is one difference between dead things and living things. This is one choice people have. A life immersed in abstractions, or a life immersed in living things. We, the living, are alive: we are not dead.

We should not be spending more time with dead things than with living things.

But this is exactly what civilization does. It uses dead machines to do the work we should be doing; to feed and clothe ourselves... just so hundreds of millions of humans do not have to earn their keep, or earn any kind of living. These machines keep civilized humans barely alive, barely aware, barely existing, barely surviving: just so humans do not have to actually live intensely.

Tools and machines prevent all humans from living more intensely. They cut you off from living things and life. And nature. There is a clear distinction between an abstraction, and a living thing. Between reading a dead book, and a living human speaking to you. Between the photo of a tree, and an actual living tree. Between a half-dead animal trapped in a prison called a 'zoo', and an animal that is free to live as it wants to live in nature.

Humans are not the only living things on this planet that have a right to live. Just because we are capable of killing living things: does not mean that it is right or good that we should do so.

Yet, killing plants. Tearing up trees. Ripping the earth's soil naked... to put up dead buildings and roads in their place... is an everyday affair for humans. It is normal for us to go around destroying anything we touch. We call it by so many code words. Creating death, or importing dead things and death into nature; without the slightest shame or guilt, or worry. We live in dead houses, dead cities. We surround ourselves with dead things that we call abstractions... and are proud of doing so.

The difference between humans living inside civilization, by civilization, and for civilization, and the living outside civilization, without civilization, without working for civilization is the difference between life and death. Between preserving dead things or preserving living things. Between nurturing and loving dead things, and loving living things.

These are the two paths that people embark on in life. But unless you become aware of these two paths and their consequences: you will blindly follow the paths already laid out by others... that inevitably leads to unhappiness and suffering. You will not be able to recognize where you are going. The only way to get control of your life is to become aware of what you are doing, why you are doing it, how you are doing it, and the consequences of your actions, thoughts, and feelings. The only hope you have to get control of all this is through the expanding awareness of the Sense of Pure Wonder. The only way you can ever do that is by simply becoming more aware of everything inside you and around you. These are the two paths of human awareness. The narrowed, single-focus awareness of using tools, or the widest possible awareness of being alive.

If you want to become more aware, if you want to gain more control over your own life, if you want to be healthier and happier; you need to look at everything around you and within you... you need to become aware of all your balances and imbalances, you need to become aware of what is excessive, what is lacking, and what is non-existent that should exist... what is life-giving? What is positive? What is balanced... more dynamic? What is deadening? Death-giving? What is poisonous, toxic?

This means that physical and spiritual health cannot be separated from each other. The feelings and thoughts you have in your heart and in your brain can be just as toxic as the mercury fillings in your mouth. Toxic residues in your body affect your spiritual well being as well as your physical well-being. And the health of your body-psyche is ultimately determined by the kind and quality of your outer environment: the kind of society you live in, the air you breathe, the water you drink. So... what is healthier? What is less healthy? How should we live? What kind of society should we live in? What should we do?

The answer is simple: hardship. Whatever is the most difficult and the most challenging for you... whatever you fear most, whatever is the most painful and demanding, whatever engages all of your human potential, all of your creativity, all of your Love, Courage, and Honesty: that is the healing path you should take.

No selective, no linear form of awareness can ever hope to deal or cope with these infinitely complex questions. No specialized career or calling can ever challenge and develop all of your infinite human potential and creativity. Only the sense of pure wonder can help you to find your own unique path. Only wonder can help you find the deepest, most intuitive, most spontaneous, creative wisdom of your own being. Only by opening yourself to infinite possibility and infinite questioning can you learn-change-grow to develop a more intuitive wisdom, a more sensitized awareness, a higher, more dynamically balanced state of being.

The greatest truths are also the simplest and the most obvious. The basic choice you have, the basic question you face every day is the question of choosing between life, or death... between living things or dead things: which of these aspects do you give your allegiance to, which do you connect-to, which do you pour your effort and energy into, which do you nurture and support?

By simplifying the question of human existence down to its most basic root, by exploring this question, we can and should; be able to form a universal consensus of what is important and what is not. By raising the awareness of all people; not just an elite few: we could for once, not be in conflict with each other. By establishing a universal value system that all humans agree upon: a practical solution to how we all should live can finally become the willing cooperation between all people. The time has finally come to let people know the actual truth... So they will not waste their lives and the lives of their children in misguided beliefs and ideas. These truths apply to all humans: in all ways.

Entity contact

Only if the conditions of Love, HONESTY and Courage exist on both sides, can such a contact be beneficial. Only if the unseen entity contacted, happens to be honest enough and courageous enough to admit openly what they did wrong; could there ever be any benefit. Generally, if someone never had the courage to admit their mistakes while they were alive: they will not have the courage to admit them later either. And if they did not learn from their own mistakes while alive: then even that small possible advantage of hindsight is lost. That is why living is so difficult. We the living must learn from our own mistakes while we are still alive: or else we will never have any chance to correct them. The mistakes made by our ancestors are concrete proof of their fallibility. We cannot expect them to teach us any wisdom that they themselves never learned while they were still alive.

The potential for mis-use of this contact exists on both sides of the process. If living people try to use this for any kind of corrupt advantage: that contact will only advance and increase their own corruption. If the unseen entity who is contacted is corrupt or dishonest in any way, then that contact will only give them an unseen opportunity to spread their corruption amongst the living. If a passed over loved-one was not inclined to be helpful to their children while alive, they will not be any more helpful when they are dead and unseen. If they were not particularly wise while alive, they will be no wiser when they are dead and unseen.

What if you secretly harbor some kind of hurt, or anger, or resentment against the person you wish to contact? Or vice versa? What if neither of you are willing to admit your true feelings to each other? What if neither of you will speak about what really happened, and how you really feel and what you really think of the other? What if you are in denial about all of the conflicts which exist between the two of you? How honest will your contact be? What result would there be from such a contact? Any contact will be a litmus test of how truly loving, honest, and courageous both of you actually are.

But be warned. In any contact, all unseen entities have an advantage: they can reflect your own soul back to you easily, in infinitely subtle ways... so that you will find your own feelings-beliefs-views-opinions, validated by them. Anyone can be misled and fooled by this. Just because what you believe, is parroted back to you in subtle, creative ways: does not mean that all of your rationalized and mistaken beliefs are actually true. The only revelations you will ever get from such an unseen contact will be revelations of what you already believe, or want to believe, or what you actually know to be true. It remains up to you to untangle this snarled mess... Sifting your own truths from your own misconceptions.

No unseen entity will ever help you become more honest, or wiser. They are all less fortunate than you: they have all failed to learn their own life-lessons. They are only a litany of repeated past mistakes which have never been learned-from, or corrected. If our ancestors had learned from their mistakes: then this earth, and civilization would not be in the sorry mess it is now. There is no sane reason to worship or listen to idiots who didn't learn, refused to learn and passed their mistakes on to the next generation. They are only a refuse heap, a garbage heap of un-lived, unloved lives that have rotted and decomposed for thousands of years.

The present state of the world is all the visible proof you need of the fallibility of all our ancestors. Unseen human entities are not, and never will be sources of insight, revelation or wisdom: unless they lived lives of wisdom and love. Only if an unseen entity is motivated by pure, unselfish love will they ever have any desire to be even slightly honest with a living person.

Having stated all these caveats: families-parents-children-loved ones, must work out their own respective relationships with each other and with their loved ones who have passed over. Go-betweeners who in any way seek to profit from the unhappiness of others, are in my opinion: corrupt.

Given that: any person, who wishes to, can contact their unseen loved-ones directly. Given the right conditions and the right reasons: the practice of left-hand writing does work. It does not require a medium or a psychic go-between. This involves merely putting a pen into the hand which you do not normally write with, emptying your mind of all distracting thoughts, visualizing the unseen loved-one you wish to speak with, addressing them by name and asking if they wish to speak to you. Each person can attempt this on their own and judge the efficacy of it for themselves.

How does this actually work?

Simple... the unseen entity who you are harmonizing with, harmonizes its aural body with yours... And his or her aural energy enters your body. You cannot even be sure whether the unseen entity doing this is male or female.

They literally superimpose their unseen aural body in your body... and merely use their harmonized aural energy to move your muscles... by entering your brain aura... and having their brain synapses coincide with your brain's synapses. Like a hologram. Two astral auras passing through each other, yet existing in the same space. Merged together in the same space: with the living aura voluntarily letting the other aura guide its hand.

This allows you to communicate with an unseen entity... who is invisible. It could be any entity passing by. And that unseen human entity could easily lie to you and say it is your mother, or your grandfather... and you will never know the difference. But since the purpose of living people who want to contact passed over entities is usually to find some peace and resolution to their true grief... most of the time, it will probably be the actual person they want to contact. Besides... most people are usually only observed by those who are interested in that living person... and chances are; that if you visualize a loved one who you actually loved and still do... it will be they, who invisibly communicate in this way with you.

But... beware! If any of your motives are corrupt, you will only attract unseen corrupt entities into your body and brain... who will gleefully lie to you, deceive you, by using your own evil against you; until they manage to convince you that you are the second coming of Christ. With a poisoned special knowledge... which must be kept secret... and do every evil thing they can think of to destroy you.

So the question is: do you want your body and brain to be violated by an unseen undead human entity? Merely for some superficial ease and reassurance to know that your loved ones are all right? Or because you have not yet told them you love them? Is that a good enough reason to contact them now?

Or do you have the patience to wait until you meet them later and tell them then? Are you secure enough in the knowledge that you love them, and that they love you, so this contact is actually unnecessary? Or are you unable to process your own mistaken grief, because you believe that they are completely dead and gone just because you cannot see them or feel them? Or is it just that they are physically departed, and you miss their physical presence? If you need the reassurance that they are not departed, but are right by your side all the time... and will be by your side for the rest of your life: it is necessary for you to heal from your mistaken excessive sadness and pain... and if you can satisfy to your own unknowing Wonder and growing understanding: that this is actually true... then maybe... just maybe... instead of weeping endlessly for years, and years, and refusing to be consoled... and wallowing in your own self-pity and self-misery... until you love your own suffering more than you do living. It might be worth contacting them: once. No more.

Then... once... as a cathartic experience; this unseen contact may be a good enough reason to contact them.

And then let them go. And do not keep obsessively thinking about them. Live your life in the living present, and stop living and wallowing in the past.

If there is enough Love, Courage, and Honesty between people: then dying should not be a traumatic experience for those still living or those who pass on. Friends would simply stay in touch. And in the course of this: whatever wasn't said that needed to be said, would be. But beyond this bare necessity: any extraneous contact becomes inevitably corrupt. If only for the reason that living people are meant to live in the present, and not waste their time in the past: except to understand it, accept it, make peace with it and ultimately free themselves of it.

The Unseen Undead

As a further warning: people have no conception or idea of the pure envy and hatred that once-living entities may feel for still-living humans: after blundering through their own misspent lives and ending up in what they believe to be eternity, with a host of regrets, frustrations and hatreds that remain unresolved and unfaced. That is the true hell of the afterlife. And no living person can ever imagine the plight of these souls, or their blind hate and rage when they arrive on the other side only to find out that their entire life and so-called reality was one big distorted, misperceived, misbegotten lie. That is why it is not healthy to try to delve into the souls of the dead. Because whatever they are haunted by, whatever mistakes they made, whatever they refused to face or deal with: will not help you or them... except to give them a chance to gain some small revenge on their more fortunate, still-living brethren. The only misspent life which you can profit from by re-examining is your own and those you love. Because of how the entity-living connection works, it should only be used when both living and the passed-over entity feel love for each other. Only then is the unseen contact not corrupted by all kinds of reflected, manipulated deceptions, beliefs, etc...

Furthermore: if you never truly understood the person that died. If you never knew them deeply enough to know what they really are inside their secret, unseen, invisible souls when they were alive. Do not be surprised to find out that a person you believed loved you... actually hated you and envied you and disliked you. Do not be shocked if someone you believed loved you... did not even like you at all. Do not be surprised after their unseen invisible souls passes into the realm of the undead: they finally lash out at you, and reveal what they really feel and think of you. Contact with the unseen is full of danger and fraught with potential evil... untold numbers of unseen entities that are evil lie in wait to do someone an evil turn. This is why games such as the Weegie board often end badly: because they attract the most evil possible influences into your life. Desperate unhinged spirits trying to reach the other side, evil malcontents, malevolent spirits, crazed beings... trying to harmonize their energy with you, and gain influence and power over you at every opportunity they get.

Here is another disturbing fact. Any unseen dead person you once knew personally, can at any time check in on you and see what you are doing, sense what you are feeling, and be aware of your every thought. What will it feel like to die, and then have someone you knew come up to you and say:

'Remember when you...? I was there when you... I saw you.... I felt your... I sensed what you...'
Then: the entire concept of secrecy will have to be thrown out the window. Then: if there is anything you have ever done that you are ashamed of: chances are that those in the other unseen realm will know of it. How can anyone live their lives in secrecy: if any once-living acquaintance you ever knew, can drop by any time to observe you, and be privy to your secret thoughts and feelings? How many people have permanent galleries of entity-onlookers watching their every move and thought?

Sound ridiculous? Think about it! What else are you going to do for the next 10,000 years when you pass over into the Realm of the undead? Talk to the same old boring acquaintances you never really liked? Or... go snooping around and delve into the hidden secrets of physically-audible people who are still alive; who do not even know you exist... who think that nobody knows their hidden secrets... and look at what the latest developments of civilization have turned these people into?

Why should entities do this? Because they are bored. Because they have nothing else to do. Because there is nothing else that they can do. Why? Because they don't want to deal with their own unresolved issues, their own empty lives. This is perfectly understandable. All they have left is watching what the living are doing now. Suddenly they find themselves privy to the deepest, darkest secrets of other still-living human souls. Suddenly they can follow the inner workings of other people's minds, hearts, souls and lives. And that privileged window, that privileged perspective, makes the most gripping fiction pale in comparison. Would it bother you to know that there is no such thing as privacy or secrecy between the living and the dead? What if all of your ancestors have nothing else to do except pass the time as silent, unnoticed voyeurs? What if all of your worshipped ancestors are nothing but a bunch of peeping toms because their true purpose: to aid and guide their offspring was corrupted at the very outset of human history? Because they never learned how to be truly creative, or honest, or courageous. Because they never developed their own sense of pure wonder. Because they never developed their own creative, human potential. Thus: because of the lack of their own human resources, their own boredom, which they can no longer dispel by the superficial use of tools since there are no tools in their realm... the only remaining distractions left to them are the open windows they have into the souls and lives of the still-living.

The sorry truth is, that all of the people who ever died with rage and hate still burning in their hearts... all of the unfelt feelings of anger, sorrow and fear... all the people who did not manage to heal themselves before they died: this entire population of sick, sad, demented, hate-filled souls still roam this earth today. They are everywhere, watching... and filled with their sick, twisted need to hurt others. And in some cases, their anger and hatred is so virulent, they manage to have a physical presence.

This is why there are such things as ghosts, poltergeists, people being possessed, and unseen things that go bump in the night. This is one reason why dogs suddenly start barking in the middle of the night for no apparent reason. That is one reason for many cases of demonic possession, or manifestations of an "evil spirit" in all cultures throughout history. These manifestations are simply the souls of once-living people who were once haters, murderers, killers, rapists; and who are cursed with an unending thirst for evil. And in many ways, they have an opportunity to slightly satisfy their sick needs... simply because in certain instances, and in certain ways, the veil between the two realms is slightly rent... allowing them to play havoc with the living. The behavior of a living serial killer or a rapist is no different from an unseen, undead entity killer or rapist. Both are addicted to their own forms of spiritual sickness, and because they are unhealed and remain unchanged, they endlessly repeat what they did when they were alive; over, and over again.

Since the observer-awareness of these unseen entities is completely out of balance, residing mainly in the conscious part of their auric brain. Since they were never prepared for this transition, never trained for it, and have no true understanding of where they are or why they are there. It is small wonder that after millions of years of becoming more and more out of balance; these unseen auric entities are basically sick, traumatized, sad, pathetic, lonely, trapped souls: who are not giving or loving, and are more evil than good. And it is small wonder that they can so easily manipulate living people's blind worship of them, and the corruptions of these living souls: since they have the ability to see all human auras, all human souls, naked... exposed, with the ugly truth of corruption staring them in the face every time they see the visibly corrupt aura of a living soul.

But they do not want to look at their own corruption. They do not want to look at themselves. That is why they remain unseen. This is why they are the unseen. The evil of the unseen, unexplored, unfelt, unexperienced soul is the same whether you are living or undead. If you do not examine your inner self while you are alive: you will become just as evil as they are. You will become evil before you ever die and join them. This is very, very important. The need for self-examination is critical to living a good life. It is not only critical: it is necessary: it is crucial: it is the most important thing you can do. And you can only do it if you have a Sense of Pure Wonder. You can only do it if you are as honest as possible with yourself. You can only do it if you are as courageous as possible in facing and admitting and dealing with your own truths. You can only do it if you have a balanced sense of Inner and Outer Wonder. Wondering just about yourself will not do it. Wondering just about your outer world will not do it. You must wonder about both... and see how they fit, and why they fit, and which is which... so you do not mistake an outer influence to be an inner influence. And so you will not mistake an inner influence to be an outer influence upon you. This is the delicate dynamic balance of Pure Wonder, and it is always changing. It is a continual challenge to keep yourself dynamically balanced between these two wonders. It is a constant challenge to be aware inwardly and outwardly at the same time all the time.

The unseen cannot do this. They have no Inner Wonder or Outer Wonder. They only ape and reflect you back to yourself. They are pure reflective evil unseen beings who do not want to look at themselves. Any attention towards them is not liked or wanted. Any attention towards them and they go away. But the instant you do not confront them... they sneak back and hide... and go on observing you and living through you.

They do not want to know they exist. They do not want to become aware that they exist. They want to hide from themselves by hiding inside you... They are the unseen, the unfelt, the untouched, the undead... they are pure evil.

The corruption of all unseen undead entities comes from secrecy. All love comes from reaching out for connection and openness. It is only the result of connecting that results in actual love. Human entities should be always visible, always shining, always radiating outwards, always loving. Instead, they chose to trap their light, they chose to become invisible and remain invisible and unseen to living humans. That light-energy; trapped inside their unseen rotting souls for thousands of years, has become so corrupt, that they have lost nearly all of their former humanity. It is impossible to love any entity you cannot visibly see; because its own invisibility proves by definition that the entity does not love you.

One-sided love is self-delusion: it is not actual love. All seen visions of entities by living people are actually true. Any person who has actually seen or felt, or communicated with a visible entity; saw them because that entity was reaching out to them, giving of themselves unselfishly, loving that person. Also... any contact with a non-visible entity is a non-loving hoax.

This is why after Christ died, he was visible only to his followers whom he loved, and who loved him. Not to anyone else... this is why countless people have had visions in their sleep and even while awake, of their loved ones... who only contact them to reassure them that they are not really gone. Why? To ease their own grief, as well as the grief of their loved ones. This is why any attempt to scientifically prove the existence of entities by photographing their auras will never succeed. Unless they can find a loving entity that is willing to be studied: as an obscene cold, unfeeling inhuman experiment in pure Love. Which is an oxymoron. And impossible. Science will never find the energy of Love. Science will never find the strength of Compassion. Science will never find Honesty or Courage. Science can only study what it sees. Science only studies dead things and killers.

How many things do living people have to hide? What if they knew that their deepest thoughts and secrets are transparent to any undead, unseen entity that wishes to eavesdrop into their soul secretly? Then: the only way people could feel comfortable living, would be if they were completely honest and open about everything and had nothing to be ashamed of. If they did nothing they were ashamed of. If they had no shameful feelings. If they had no shameful thoughts.

Is that a disturbing thought? Or: is it a welcome one? How would that knowledge color all human behavior as people went about with their every-day activities? How would it color their thoughts and feelings? How would it color their awareness? Might not human awareness change? Evolve? Simply from this one fact?

There is one more truth, which must be told about human entities. This truth is not pleasant. But it must be told.

When someone dies, and passes over into the realm of the undead. And finally is able to see into the souls of those who are still alive. See what they really think, and feel...

Once they enter the unseen realm of the undead: they become concerned only with their own skin. Then they begin to amass ammunition against the living.

Why?

Because then they can hear what living people actually secretly think of them, and how they secretly feel about them. They develop a fear of retaliation, for the things they did when they were alive... and thought they could get away with. When they look into the soul of a living person: they see, and feel precisely what they will be accused of later... when the still living finally come to join them. They can hear the thoughts of the living.

This was the original reason why our ancestors insisted that all younger generations worship and obey their elders blindly and unquestioningly.

They did not want their offspring to come later to the unseen realm of the undead: and attack them, and accuse them, and punish them for every hurt and crime they once inflicted upon a once-living soul.

They did not want to pay for their sins. They still don't.

They did not want to be found guilty of their sins. They did not want to face their accusers. They did not want to admit that they had done anything bad in their living lives at all. They wanted to remain as blameless, worshipped, unseen, invisible, all-powerful gods. They wanted to preserve the brainwashing they had already set in place while they were still alive; the brainwashed bullshit; that all elders were never to be questioned or challenged.

The entire system of the authority of unseen, undead entities; is to make sure you never ever question your elders who died before you did. More importantly... you must forgive them before you ever even get there. So they will never have to account for their own lies or mistakes or corruptions: ever. Once you pass into the realm of the undead: you must never question them.

This is the main reason, why they amass a damning record of each living generation. And do their dandiest to make sure it is more damning than theirs. Just to make sure that you cannot accuse them of anything: because they can accuse you far better. When the living pass over into the realm of the undead; they do not have the advantage of having witnessed the deepest secrets of their lying elders souls.

They did not have the advantage of following their every movement, and witnessing their every thought, emotion and action while they were alive. They do not have the advantage of listing in detail: every secret crime and sin their elders ever committed. But their elders do...

This is the advantage you get by dying first... This is the obscene, unseen advantage of dying first. This is the advantage of being an undead unseen human entity. This is the advantage of the undead... this is the advantage of death.

The result of this advantage is that: each wave of unseen entities entering that realm; comes in with a distinct handicap. They meet a stonewall of united superiority and superior knowledge... and superior moral power and authority... that is completely false.

Each new wave of undead entities do the exact same thing to the next wave... to those still living.

How can this be stopped, and fought and destroyed? By not accepting any higher moral authority over your own, self... except the universal truths of Honesty, Courage, Love and Pure Wonder.

And if your own parents are not honest with you? If your elders do not obey these universal truths? If Jesus Christ himself, or god himself appears in front of you: and tries to browbeat you, and tries to make you doubt yourself?

Explore how many super-imposed entities have ganged up into one space to give you the illusion of their aura being ten times brighter and more powerful than yours. You will find it is not god, or Christ.

If they try to attack you: peel them off one by-one: and you will find that each one is a rotten soul hiding in the safety of a group aura; that exists only because these puling cowards had to defend themselves from other souls who they wronged... and found that sometimes; this tactic works with weak, submissive, brainwashed people who do not dare actually touch another living aura.

If you find that you can actually penetrate another aura with your aura: then you will gain the same advantage over them as they have over you. As they had while you were still living: when they could piss their undead unseen presence into your body; by merging with you. Without you ever knowing it.

Poisoning all of your to aura energy, and making you do things that later you were sorry-for. Where do you think the idea of being possessed by evil spirits comes from? It comes from mentally disturbed living people who have been systematically corrupted and taken over by their rotten spawn of ancestors; who delight in influencing unsuspecting living people to commit the most foul acts possible.

By the unseen undead entering and poisoning your soul: they can, and do; wreak untold subconscious damage and harm to every living human on earth. Their excuse for doing this, is just to make sure that you are as corrupt, if not more so than they are. So they can glean every secret they could from your soul's aura: in order to keep you impotent from ever attacking them. This is only one of their sick motives... the actual truth about once-living entities will not be uncovered and revealed until the personal life of every once living human is exposed in public, and every human knows exactly what happened, who did what. Why they did it. How they did it. And moreover... what poison entity may have been responsible for coloring a good part of their acts while they were alive.

So when you pass over into their realm ... and they come to you... ask them. Doubt them. Challenge them. And you will see them cringe and cower and slink away; after you have ripped their deceptions to pieces, and they have no more lies to cover their maggot-ridden souls with. If enough honest people do this... then maybe; these liars and deceivers will not be able to get away with the lies that are told about them, and the lies which they have carefully supported for at least thirty thousand years.

If the only answer they can give you is to dig up an older, deader, wiser, more sanctified saint, or god... or someone impersonating a holy spiritual leader of the past. Question that sanctity. Challenge that authority. Do not take anything for granted. Keep an open mind. You will find that their only advantage, is the advantage of having thousands of more years to perfect the art of lying and deception. This does not mean it is right to go around accusing others all the time. It means you should not take your own assumptions and beliefs for granted first. If you doubt someone... they have the right to doubt you also. If you question someone: they have the right to question you also. If you challenge someone... they have the right to challenge you also.

But... at least: it will be on a basis of equality. Any entity that questions and challenges your feelings and convictions... you have same the unstoppable right, ability and authority to challenge and question their motives and intentions just as much as they have.

This way; there can be no holy figures or parents trying to order you to keep quiet. Besides... this is the only way you will ever be able to find out the truth about their realm, which you will inhabit, for much longer than you lived on earth. It would behoove you to prepare yourself for this exploration... by practicing self-honesty in living your own life before you pass over into their realm.

But. However. Most humans are congenital liars. And these entities have seen more liars and lies than you can imagine... And they can easily pose as superior beings simply because they already know what you imagine a superior being looks like. They can easily seem to be better than you. Since they have tracked all of your lies, and listened to them and analyzed them specifically in preparation for this encounter

So what is the answer to this unfair advantage of dead entities over still-living humans?

Honesty. Pure cutting Honesty. If you live honestly, and try to be as Honest as possible... then the only person who can have any advantage over you in that realm will be... someone who is more Honest than you are.

Then, you will be amongst welcome company, and not amongst criminal elements. Then you will find people who are honest like you.

By trying to become the best person you can be, you will earn your place among other entities like you; according to your life, and how you have lived it here on earth.

If you want to escape the slavery of oppression that all humans enter into; when they die and pass over. Start developing the most powerful human tools that you have while you are still alive: Honesty! Courage! Love! A sense of Pure Wonder! Fun! Laughter! Happiness!

Then you will find that the universal law of the universe still works... even in their realm... that water always seeks it's own level, truth always seeks its own level, honesty always seeks its own level, love always seeks its own level, courage always seeks its own level. Which level of humans do you want to be amongst for the next thousand, or million years?

If you live a miserable life, you will find yourself spending eons of time with miserable people. If you live a happy life, you will spend the eons with happy people. If you do not let yourself be deceived or swallow their guff, or lies: you will be free of all their attempts to deceive you. You will no longer be a slave to any authority whatsoever except your own... not like you were a slave on earth; to the powers of civilized corruption that are still alive and kicking in this other realm.

The irony of this is... that the dynamics of karmic energy, the dynamics of living and undead souls, the dynamics of all energy in the universe: is almost the same spiritual wisdom that most religions and spiritual teachers preached in the past. This book does not throw away teachings of wisdom that are actually true. It does not throw away the teachings of Jesus, or any other spiritual leaders or sages of the past that are worth keeping. Living an honest, ethical, moral life is more important than succumbing to vices and weaknesses.

What this book does do however... is that it explains the actual, logical difference between actual good and actual evil. This book destroys the false authority of evil. It destroys the authority of false gods and false teachings... and turns around full circle and tells you, and shows you, and explains to you... that you should have listened to your preacher anyway... even if he is a hypocrite, even if he does not practice what he preaches. Just because someone does not practice what they preach; does not make the preaching untrue. This book does not throw out the baby with the bathwater. This book supports and explains the ancient teachings of wisdom that are actually good, and destroys teachings that are actually evil.

The past of humans is evil. All the lies that whitewashes the truth about the evil of the past is evil. All that has gone before was evil. All words that come from this word: are evil. The words:

Forgive
Forsake Forget

Forebear
Fore swear

For whom?... Eh? This is the sick cunning of their secrecy. These invisible sick parasites get their living human hosts to do things for them: they poison and manipulate living human people to what they want them to, act like they want them to. For instance:

Foreplay... for who?... Eh? As a secret public spectacle for them... not for you... to look at in secret... for the amusement of the filthiest undead pornographic obscene unseen rotten inhuman things... so they can ogle and salivate as they view the spectacle of two living people degraded to the lowest possible level of animal lust, and sensual animal greed and sensual gluttony and sexual narcissism, and sexual self-gratification.

Everything is done for them. They poison and control living people to:
Get for them: get all of their vicarious sick secret experiences for them: and then forget you ever did it.
Get for them... forget what you did for the undead, forget what evil you did for them
Swear for them, swear oaths for them, deny your own humanity for them, suffer and deprive yourself for them.

Give for them: give them forgiveness: never accuse or attack or criticize undead filthy evil things
Play for them: as the most foul, the sickest, the greediest most obscene kind of play possible
Bear for them: bear all of their crimes and sins for them: bear their sins so they do not have to bear them
For their sake: forsake your own life and your own happiness for their sake: abandon all people you love and degrade yourself down to their level of undead rotten corruption for their sake. Not for your own honest, good, innocent, unpoisoned human nature and needs and impulses.

Are all evil words designed to brainwash living humans into forsaking their true loves, forgetting their true love, forgetting all the sins that others have committed against you, foreswearing all the good intentions they ever had, forgiving all the evil acts and intentions that the undead unseen filth have harbored against you, being forbearing against guilty sins and undead entities who should never, never, never, ever have been forgiven.

Fore fathers
Fore mothers
Forever
Foresight Forbidden
Foreboding
Forked
Forlorn
Forerunner
Fortune
Foretell

What word is used to control you by undead evil entities? Whenever your true self is expressing itself you are told to 'behave'. That word is poison: that word tells you to not 'be' yourself, so they can have you under their control. BE-HAVE. BE as WE want you to be: not as YOU want to be, so we can HAVE you under OUR control.

All these words are words that speak of the presence of the evil. Undead. They speak of how they manipulate and poison living human souls. They are words that are used for the undead: not for the living. They are used to nurture death: not life. They want you to live for them: not for yourself. They want you to live for dead things in the past: not for living things in the present. They want you to live for the past, not for the present. They want you to live for everything that has been foregone: not what exists today.

For how long do the undead want to fool you the living and suck off your life energy in secret? Forever. The idea of immortality: is an idea of the undead. Living people do not have any need or want of immortality. Living people like change and diversity and growth: not an unchanging dead 'forever' that rules out all hope and all change.

Everything in the past has gone for them: the past has gone not for you the living: but for the undead. The undead have corrupted human life to cover up all their past sins as a foregone conclusion: an unspoken assumed, silent secret guilty attempt to hide and deny all of their guilt and evil. Tell the future for them. They fear the future. Because they know they are guilty and they know they will be caught and killed.

Do everything for your mother: not for yourself.

Do everything for your father: not for yourself.

Foresight: see into the future for them: so they can plan how to poison you better.

Forbidden: do their bidding, do only what they bid you to do: all your own honest human needs and urges are forbidden because the biddings of countless undead filth push you into doing what they want you to do.

Foreboding: this word is the sense of doom: the sense of how all the evil machinations they are constantly contriving: is leading up to your corruption and death: having a sick sense of oncoming doom.

Forlorn: all alone: alone so they can suck off your suffering: abandoned and in pain and in misery, unhappy... for them: so they can isolate you and get at your weaknesses and weaken you even more.

Fore runner: running for who? Running ahead of others for them: being the first of a new foul creation of evil which they implant and nurture secretly inside the sickest human souls

Fortune: for who? Whose tune are you dancing to when you make a fortune, eh? You are making a fortune for them: by corrupting your soul into levels of secret avarice, lust envy and greed.

Foretell:... for what are you trying to know the future: why? Because all undead evil fears the future: they fear being found out and being caught and being killed because they are guilty. Only those guilty of sin and crime have any urge to know what the future will be. Only the undead need to know what the future will be so they can avoid being found out and caught and killed.

Forked: for what? Why split yourself into two halves? Why destroy things by splitting them apart? For who have humans split things apart with tools for?... Eh? For the pleasure of undead: so they can enjoy the spectacle of living things killing other living things.

The word for: is a corruption of the word Four: the number 4 is basis of life: the basic DNA pattern of 4 DNA molecules split apart: the DNA of life is for the living: not for the undead. You are supposed to live your own life for you: not for them. The word four should have four letters to it: not three: not missing the "u" the true you, the you that they poison and manipulate for their evil designs so they can get you to do things for them..

The word 'for' is an evil word

The use of it in the English language is evil

The concept of this word is evil. This word comes from them: it comes from the undead presence hiding secretly inside all living people.

Spiritual Authority

Before you die: you must understand your own spiritual authority in relation to the spiritual authority of all humans who have died before you died. You need to understand the relativity of your present position.

What you need to understand is that up the present. At the writing of this book; every human who ever lived was, and still is: a sinner. No human born; ever lived without sinning. Every human who ever died left tons of unpaid, uncorrected, unhealed wounds, crimes, traumas as a living legacy to poison the lives of each new generation of human souls. Every human who ever used a tool, or invented a new, better way of killing and destruction; has an unpaid spiritual debt for every human who used their new-better killing tools to kill with. They are responsible for their entire lives. They are responsible simply by giving others the wrong example. They are responsible simply for not allowing other people to live as they wanted to. They are responsible simply because they copied other people. When you copy someone: you take on their sin, their guilt and their crime. When you copy a criminal act, when you copy a sin, when you copy an evil: you become as guilty as the person you copy. When you copy an evil mental attitude. When you copy people who hate, people who lie, people who are greedy: you become just as guilty as they are. When you copy how other civilized people love, how other civilized people live: you become just as responsible, and just as guilty of spreading and nurturing civilized destruction, as every other civilized person.

However: the farther back you go in time: the greater that responsibility and guilt is. The older any human undead is: the greater their responsibility and guilt is.

The inventors of gunpowder... the inventors of dynamite, and the atom bomb... are a billion trillion times more spiritually guilty of killing, and a billion times more sinful; for creating this kind of death in the first place. If they had not created these horrible things: they could not have been used by billions of people to kill with. They are guiltier than the worst homicidal, mass murderers in human history combined, who used their inventions. Maybe the greatest known and revered mass murderers, like: Alexander the Great, Ramses the second of Egypt, Augustus the roman emperor, Genghis Khan, Joseph Stalin, and Mao Tse Tsung are more guilty than the first person who ever invented gunpowder. But only if you add the accumulated crimes of other people copying what they did, and their entire historical legacy of their impact upon the future of human history.

The first human millions of years ago; who invented and used a tool to kill with... is more evil... more corrupt, and guiltier of evil, and more deserving of punishment.... Than all the human killers born after him put together.

The first rapist who ever raped a human boy or girl... is more evil, more corrupt, more guilty of evil, and more deserving of punishment than all the rapists that came after him. Why? Because he invented rape. Without him: there would have been no rape ever in the world. It is the inventors of evil who are the most evil: they are the roots of evil: they must be found out: exposed and killed dead: completely dead: so they will no more inventions of evil. No more evil inventions. All living humans called inventors: were poisoned corrupted and used by the undead inventors: the undead secret undead cunning filth who love inventing more and more evil things to poison living humans with.

The first human squatters to settle down in one place and create a destroyed cesspool of waste, and accumulated filth around them... are more evil, more corrupt, more guilty of evil... and more deserving of punishment; than all the squatters and settlers, and settlement lovers, and city-builders, and billions of city dwellers who have destroyed most of the living Earth since them. this does not mean that all humans who copied the first inventors of evil, and copied the first invented evil habits are not guilty of evil... it just means that the first ones are the WORST, the most guilty and the most deserving of to be punished for their evil. Not until living humans learn to seek out and destroy the ROOTS of evil will human people ever be able to heal themselves and cleanse themselves of the evils of civilization.

The first English colony built on an island off North America. The first Jamestown colonists... not the second, or third, or fourth attempts.... Are more evil, more corrupt, guiltier of evil... and more deserving of being punished, than all the English settlers who came after them are. Including all of the millions of immigrants who flocked in to this originally English-colonized nation.

The older the evil the more corrupt it is. And in addition: the more corrupt it still is. Because these oldest, original human filth still exist as undead human entities. Every human who was ever born still exists as an invisible human entity on this earth. And the older they are: the more evil they are: by definition of pure accumulated guilt, and accumulated responsibility, of their uncorrected sins and crimes and mistakes.... By definition of pure accumulation. By definition of the same basic principle they lived their lives by. By definition of the very principle they try to base their own superiority on. By definition of the very logic they try to use to escape their own guilt and responsibility by.

Regardless if they knew they were committing a mistake or not. Regardless if they knew they were committing crimes or sins, or not. In other words. Any human... in any human culture... could have lived strictly by 'the good book' when they were alive. They could have strictly obeyed and followed their own religious beliefs. They could have obeyed their elders in all things... and believe themselves completely blameless of all sin. This self-delusion does not change their true responsibility and guilt by one iota.

They are guilty by the very virtues they thought made them good. They are guilty because of the very virtues they took for granted. The virtues they assumed would make them 'good'.

Because they did not have a Sense of Wonder. They did not nurture their own sense of Pure Wonder. They did not nurture their own sense of beauty. They did not nurture their own sense of Love.

They are guilty because they unquestioningly obeyed their corrupt parents. Because they unquestioningly obeyed their evil leaders. They are responsible because they did not question the authorities above them. They are responsible because they conformed... they are responsible because they were all afraid to fight, because they were all afraid of dying.

Every mindless, uneducated, brainwashed, powerless, victim who ever lived... Every human idiot who was brutalized, starved, raped, oppressed, and never given a chance to grow up, and realize what they were doing, or what was being done to them....

Are all guilty of evil in their own ways: along with the human scum that raped them and oppressed them and killed them. The only difference is that the victims are less evil than the victimizers. They are also weaker than the victimizers.

The most innocent victims are the youngest. Babies who are killed when they are little... did not have time to become corrupt and evil. But they also are not grown up enough to pose any adult undead entity any threat either... they are not mature enough to challenge their parents when all they are, are squalling terrified traumatized bundles of pain and fear... begging to be loved and protected. This is the basic reason why evil entities do not care how many babies are killed. This is why infanticide is the mark of an evil killing culture. Babies are not wise enough and strong enough to come after the ones who killed them in the realm of the undead, and punish their killers for what they did to them.

The roots of evil are always more evil, and more powerful than the evil that grows from these roots. Kill the root, and you kill the entire dynamic of evil itself.

If you do not seek out the roots of evil and destroy them. If you only lop off the topmost heads of evil... then that evil will only spread farther and wider in secret... underground... only to sprout and flourish and multiply itself even more... and become even more powerful than if you had never tried to kill it in the first place.

So when you die. The farther you go back in human history... the older the undead human entity is. Whoever that undead human entity claims to be. The guiltier they are of leaving a killing legacy of lies and corruption and evil for all the later generations to be poisoned by. Simply by the fact that they are older than you, and dead. This is the actual truth. The older an undead entity is... it is not more powerful, or more sacred, or more wise, or more spiritual. It is less powerful, less sacred, less wise, less spiritual. The only thing it is more is: holier. It is more full of holes. It is more rotten, and more evil.

This is the actual energy truth about all ancestor worship, and worshipping all people who have died. The older they are, the more ancient they are...the more they should be despised, and hated. Because they are more responsible for creating the accumulating corruption that all living humans are forced to live-in, live under, and with. They are guiltier of creating the evil roots of civilization.

The basis of civilization. The basis of all the lies and corruption of civilized humans. The basis of human culture. Comes from the worship of dead ancestors: and the universal brainwashed belief that old people know better than young people. The basis of human authority comes from elders judging youngsters. This is a completely false basis. It should be the other way around. The authority of god himself and all spirit-religious belief comes from the idea of the dead judging the living. From the idea that the creator has the authority and wisdom to judge and punish the ignorant spawn he created. The entire authority structure of humans is the oldest on top, and the youngest at the bottom. The majority of all the dead sadistic foul entities who ever lived... accumulating into a majority... waiting for the innocent, unprepared nearly dead human soul to overpower it by pure force of numbers. The larger accumulation of dead entities having authority over the newly dead human entity ill prepared and unfamiliar in their new energy-realm with no physical organic body.

Expecting to meet a higher authority. Yearning to meet older, dead authority figures, whom they once knew when they were alive. Seeking their approval. Willing to be judged by them. Submitting to the supposed wisdom of more years and more experience of their elders.

This is the actual order of spiritual corruption. A single newborn baby that has just been born, and has not had a chance to commit any evil... is more innocent, purer, more good, and less evil than all of the Buddha's, and Christ's and saints who ever lived all rolled up into one.

In fact: a newborn baby is wiser, and more spiritually powerful than all of them combined also. And... that newborn baby... has more spiritual authority than any human older than it. Including every human who ever lived... even if they were all rolled up into one huge mass of billions of humans fighting against that single living newborn baby.

But.... If the seed of that fetus was already poisoned by dead, sick human entities.... Before that fetus ever became a baby. And these sick dead human entities had all the time in the world to poison that newborn baby into thinking that it is a god... that it's needs are all that matter... which was how Jesus was corrupted at birth... if that baby is born into a baby-worshipping culture... like all western cultures are and have been ever since the poisoned religion of Christianity spread the adoration of babies into other cultures and had people worshipping their own fucking babies as if they were Jesus Christ himself... if that baby is successfully brainwashed from birth to believe that it is the most important thing on this earth... then that baby is already corrupt before it was born: because the semantic messages it received while forming and growing as a fetus... all the emotional-spiritual-mental-cultural attitudes and norms and assumptions it absorbed while 99% of its genetic growth was being formed: will have distorted the awareness and energy of that fetus before it is born so horribly... that it will come out of the womb screaming in rage and kicking and wailing because it does not want to admit that anything else exists except the womb-world it lived in.

In other words: the passing-on of evil from one generation to another is almost seamless, and very hard to break. But it must be broken. This endless passing-on of evil from one generation to the next: must be destroyed. The umbilical cord of evil must be cut. The poisoning of all living things by unseen undead filth must be stopped. Because if these unseen undead human entities... along with all of the living humans the baby is exposed to, manages to brainwash that baby into believing that its elders are wiser, and more powerful, and better than it is...

Then; when that baby grows up and dies... it will never blame its own parents, or hold them accountable for what they did to him or to her. Then that baby will merely be another corrupted ignorant dead human entity; who obeys all the older, more corrupt, more evil entities... and works to corrupt each newborn baby; before it can develop a mind of its own, a heart of its own, a soul of its own. So he, or she; will not have to worry about being held accountable for all the sins and crimes it committed while it was alive. And on, and on... ad nauseum.

This has been the vicious cycle of secret, unseen corruption that the undead have spawned. This has been the vicious unseen evil that has been growing, and has been preserved, and has been perpetuated by the undead; ever since the first living evil human died, and managed to corrupt a newborn baby by entering into their body, and possessing them, and subtly poisoning their lives.

Until they were brainwashed into believing that they were even more corrupt than the first human evildoers. How? Because each baby was brainwashed into believing that they had to love their elders above all.

Above all: humans have been brainwashed into loving their parents... to love all authority figures. To respect all elders. To respect them, and never, ever question their authority... even though those fuckers never love their children back.

So far... no human entering the unseen realm of the undead has ever understood that they themselves are actually more powerful than all of the supposed wise elders who died before they did: put together.

Not one human soul entering the realm of these entity-scum has ever succeeded in opposing the majority of these scum... or ever successfully punished them for what they did.... And they are still doing it; corrupting living newborn babies every second, of every minute of every year as this book is being written.

Until now. Until you read this book. Until you, the reader, go sick with horror, and sick with rage; as you read the actual truth about all the unseen undead scum called human entities, or beloved parents... or passed-away loved-ones... or beloved ancestors... or your beloved dead aunts, or grandfathers, or mothers, or fathers, or teachers, or coaches, or leaders.

Or any dead human who ever lived before you did.

And that includes every god, or saint or alien, or any aura that tries to assume itself as having a higher and more powerful spiritual authority than you do; when you first enter their realm of the living dead. But if you know what to expect. If you already know that they will attack you at every chance... and accuse you of every sin, every crime, every evil you ever did... to prove that they are more powerful than you. To prove that you should sell your soul to their devilish evil schemes, and obey them and never question them...

Then all you have to do to kill them, and destroy them and attack them...

And accuse them of their crimes and sins and atrocities... and demand that they expose their souls naked to you... not the other way around. If they are so fucking wise and pure and powerful: what have they got to hide, eh?

So you can inspect their naked souls... and see how evil they actually are. And see every evil deed they have ever done.

Then watch them hem and haw: watch them suddenly disappear from your sight: watch how suddenly you find yourself alone with no god or undead authority daring to come near you... as they realize their schemes did not work. Watch them disappear and become unseen. For that is what they are... that is all they are good at: not being seen. Not being visible. Living their secret, stinking, filthy, poisoning existence of undead evil.

By definition... the very fact that you have just arrived... and have not yet begun to enter in with them, and their brainwashing of you; so you become an accomplice to their evil. The very fact that you by just newly entering the realm of the living dead, and have not yet yourself infiltrated a living person's body-soul-mind-heart in an attempt by a living-dead human entity to poison a living soul who has not died yet...

The very fact that you have not yet committed this most horrendous of sins.... Yet.

Makes you more spiritually pure, and more spiritually powerful, and more spiritually wise, and more spiritually loving, and honest, and courageous... than all of these ones-sided accusing undead scum put together.

They will all try to accuse you.

None of them will allow you to accuse them also... on equal terms. Because they are all guiltier than you.

None of them will tell you what crimes they ever committed. They will want you to believe that they lived completely sinless, pure lives. That they never did a bad thing ever when they were alive. What kind of fucking shit is this?

All humans, both living and dead are equals. All human power and energy is based upon equality.

What does this mean?

It means that if someone asks you a question: you have the right to ask them a question also.

If you answer their question honestly: you have a right to have your question answered honestly also.

It means that you cannot be interrogated, or challenged, or accused, or judged by any living human or any undead filth... without you having the equal right to challenge, accuse and judge them ALSO.

It means that if any human undead filth entity tries to punish you, or harm you, or intimidate you: you have the equal right to punish, harm and intimidate them ALSO.

It means that if any human has any evil intent towards you whatsoever: you have the equal right to have an evil intent towards them also. If they hate you: you have a right to hate them back also. If they try to kill you. You have an equal right to kill them also.

However.... If you do not have any evil intent towards a dead entity, and they have an evil intent towards you: that is an imbalance. And if you are positively good, and powerful, and passionate. If the integrity of your own intentions is not corrupted and evil. If a good person is attacked by an evil person. Then the principle of equality does not apply at all. The principle of equality is merely another term for the principle of reflectiveness. We reflect each other, and ourselves because we are reflective beings. But that reflectivity exists only so we can become better humans. It exists only so we can become more honest, more courageous, more loving, and develop a greater Sense of Pure Wonder.

Re-reflecting between equals: is a process of positive reinforcement.

Re-reflecting between unequals: is also a process of positive re-enforcement.

What that means, is that giving back more than you receive... is more basic, more true, more applicable, more usable, and more universal; in how you should deal with all humans living or undead. It is even better than the principle of equality.

If you meet a nice person who is good: you should give that good person back more goodness than he gives you.

But... if you meet an evil undead human filth who has an evil intent towards you: then you should give back a thousand times more evil to that intender, than it ever gives to you... or has ever given to any other human.

This means that when you pass over into their realm: and do not sense any Honesty, or Courage, or Love, or Pure Wonder... you do not even need to question them. You do not need to question yourself. You do not need to find out who they are, or what they are first. The fact that they are not openly

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Seven: Entities and the Alternative

1584

GOOD; means by definition that they are evil. There is no point in slowly, and hesitantly trying to question evil humans. This will only give them the time and freedom to lie to you, and evade your goodness and be actively evil towards you.

So when you pass over. You do not need to wait. Kill them first without asking questions. Kill every single one of them you can find without asking questions. If you are mistaken: if you attack a good person: they will be too powerful to be killed by you. And if your mistake is honest: they will not even try to kill you. They will merely stop you from making an honest mistake.

Why should this be done by every living human who enters the realm of the undead?... because this is the only way you can follow and obey the same law of positive re-enforcement when you are dead: as you followed and obeyed it while you were living.

When you were alive: you were meant to live positively. You were designed to positively give back more life to living things than was given to you.

And: when you are dead... then you are designed to positively give back more death to dead things, than was given to you...

What that means in the realm of filth, undead human entities: is that the only human entities you should not kill; are the ones who are actively helping both living and nonliving humans heal, and become healthier, happier and more good.

Every undead entity that is not doing this as you meet them, when you meet them, wherever you find them... hiding from you...you should kill as fast, and as savagely as you can.

They may try to gang up on you. Thinking that they can overpower you by mere numbers. Trying to make you afraid, trying to make you lose your confidence, trying to weaken your goodness.

But... all of their one-sided attacks and accusations of you will be all false bravado and pure bullshit. Because the moment you attack and rip their lying, false masks off their many-layered false images of supposed shining powerful spiritual purity... you will see that 'shiny' aura crumble into hundreds of pale wisps... sickly filthy visible ordinary humans... whom you will be easily able to catch, and rip their guts out. And inspect their guilty sick rotten souls...

And then. It will be you. You the reader. Whenever you die and first enter this realm of the human insane, gibbering lunatics, and craven cowards... you will have the power to punish each, and every single one of them for what they did to you. And what they did to others. And what they are still doing, at the time of my writing this book.

Then for once in human history... the tables will be turned; and true justice will be meted out upon the truly guilty... who thought they got away with their crimes. Then all human aura masks will be ripped off, and all the sin, and guilt, and shame, and insanity, and hate, and evil, and hypocrisy, and self-delusion, and the love of death that undead humans have will be exposed.

Then as long as you do not join the evil poisoners of the still-living. As long as you fight them, and kill them, and rape them, and poison their souls with your truth more effectively than they can ever poison your soul with their lies... you will be GOOD... the ultimate killing authority of all these sick evil dead scum. And they will fear you, and obey you... or be punished by you as you see fit to punish them... Then there will be no living or dead human or 'god' or spiritual authority higher than you.

1584

That is... until a newer human soul enters this realm after you... and does not buy their bullshit either... and joins you in ripping their genitals out of their sick, raping, scum, aural bodies, and ramming their rotten genitals down their throats... until they cannot commit any more evil consciously. Until they are in so much pain... that they cannot be evil; even though they still want to be.

Until they are so damaged and so ripped apart... that even the most deadened, insane, sick, raping, hating entity scum; who feels almost nothing, and is almost completely numb... begins to feel their own pain.

Until these sick deadened, undead scum begin to feel their own pain.

Then... once they have been killed, and raped, and ripped apart so they are in agony...

Then you can leave them to rot, and go help living souls, and help newly arrived souls; who are not as evil as the older ones. Help them to help living humans; by being honest with them. By confessing every evil you ever personally committed against them. And protecting them from any, and all sick-hate-filled foul, evil undead monsters that exist in your reflective realm who have the slightest intent of trying to harm the living people you are protecting.

And if these rotten scum ever start to heal, enough to be actively and consciously evil again?

Rip their guts out even worse. Break their bones. Rip out their eyes. Break their fingers. Twist off their testicles and ram their testicles down their throats.

That will give you more free time to help others heal.

Understand this: Evil cannot stand Equality. All evil relies on false authority to even exist. All authority which is not based upon equality is false. When you deal with any living or undead entity: if you deal with anyone on the basis of complete Equality and complete Honesty and complete Courage you cannot be evil! Dealing with others on the basis of Honesty and Courage and Equality exposes the true inequalities which actually exist. By having the Honesty and Courage to face and admit it when someone is better or worse than you are, then you will not deceive yourself and you will not deceive others and you will not be deluded by any false authority. Then no evil can deceive you! Then you will be able to see through all deception and all cunning lies and swindles. The basis of all GOOD positive Life and all GOODNESS is treating all living creatures as your equal.

What this does is simple: it makes the worship of anything literally impossible. It makes you incapable of worshipping any god or deity or false icon. It automatically frees you from a thousand delusions and deceptions.

The instant you assume that you are superior-to or inferior to anybody without any proof that this is so... then you are deceiving yourself and lying to yourself. The egosity of being unwilling to admit that anyone is better than you at anything is one of the stupidest self-delusional; defenses that inferior people have against the overwhelming proof and evidence that other people are far superior to them in countless ways. Likewise, the false humility of believing that you are nothing: that everyone else is superior to you or better than you is also a delusional defense against realizing that you are better at many things in which others cannot match you.

The point is that when you have the Courage and Honesty to treat every living creature as your equal: then your 'reality', your sense of reality, your understanding of reality is not a deception or a delusion: then your perception of what is really true will match what is actually true. Then your own personal reality will match the actual reality of the entire Universe, then what you perceive as being real will match what is actual. Then there are no false misconceptions, then all people who treat others as their equal will have the exact same understanding of the Universe as you do. Then there will be no false disagreement, then there will be no false misunderstanding, then there will be no false argument, then there will be no false conflict, then all people on earth will be able to cooperate with each other without any competitive stupidity or ego or misunderstanding... then evil cannot rear up its nasty head and destroy the understanding and love and cooperation of humanity by sticking in false perceptions and false thoughts and feelings into the minds and hearts of living people. Only when you do not keep any secrets, only when all humans are educated and taught never to hold anything secret inside their souls can you have a human society that is not infiltrated and poisoned by undead evil. All evil depends on secrecy to exist. How many things do you keep secret from others? Each secret is a poison which leads to more keeping of secrets until you are a festering mass of hidden evil secrets, and undead entities then can use your secret hate and secret dislike and secret prejudices and secret assumptions of reality to twist your perceptions and turn you into an instrument of pure evil. Complete Equality, Complete Openness, Complete Honesty, Complete Courage is the only way you can fight evil There is no other way! There is no other way to live if you want to be a GOOD person and not an evil person! There is no other way to Happiness and Health. There is only one way for all living people. The reason all the bullshit religions and cults and cultures do not teach you these universal simple truths is because they are all poisoned by undead evil.

The Evil of the Undead

Understanding how dead human entities work, and what they are, and why they do what they do; will help you understand human history with a better perspective. These sick filth are most attracted to the purest, most spiritual humans. Just like many serial rapists are attracted to the purest unraped children. Just like vile brutes are attracted to virgins who have never had sex. Beauty and the beast. Helen of Troy and 10,000 raving mad homosexual monsters. This attraction of opposites: why does it exist?

It exists because undead entities can see our living auras, but we the living can't see their faint hidden undead rotting filthy auras: that's why. They can see who has the healthiest aura. They can see who has the healthiest DNA. They can see the aura of genetic health and recognize it long before it has a chance to develop and grow and blossom into full strength and health.

Understand this:

Undead filth systematically attack all living humans who might become too healthy.

Undead filth systematically poison all babies born of healthy genetic stock
Who might grow up to become too healthy.

The secret hidden attack of invisible unseen undead entities on living creatures has only one goal and one agenda: to kill all Life on Earth. To weaken all Life on Earth, and poison it to death. The undead want only one thing: more undead, more death, more poisoned evil: not less. Just like healthy babies and healthy children want more Life, more Fun, more Happiness.

One is GOOD: the other is evil.

Undead shits do not pick out the best ping-pong players and make it a point of attacking them, damaging their health, poisoning their DNA, poisoning their inner auras. They do not pick out the best mathematicians, or the best dancers, or the superficially prettiest girls, or the superficially prettiest boy, or the poorest or the richest people... they attack only living babies and children and adults who are too healthy Genetically and Spiritually. The great majority of living humans have already been so damaged, traumatized, poisoned, and controlled by undead filth: that they have not yet developed their Inner Sense of Humane Potential, and their inner and outer sense of Genetic Health And Beauty to be able to notice which people, which children, which babies are truly and actually genetically healthy, and have an unlimited potential for Growth, Maturity, Wisdom, Intelligence, Sensitivity, Fun, Courage, Honesty, and a Sense of Pure Wonder.

I did.

This is the hidden secret evil reason why the healthiest, the best genetically healthy living people: throughout history... have always been surrounded by the worst: the most evil, the sickest, the most devious cunning poisoners, the lowest, the most rotten living humans possible. This is not an attraction of opposites of like seeking out like. Water always seeks its own level: that is healthy. The worst seeking out the best: that is evil. This is the hidden agenda of undead filth seeking to drag down all living creatures down to the lowest filth possible, to drag all living people down: down to their level of undead filthy rotten sick, disgusting evil. I know this to be true by personal experience.

Now that I know this: I am giving my insight to everyone who reads this book. Undead invisible entities have only one goal and one agenda: to weaken, attack, poison, damage, and twist all healthy human DNA into the sickest, most foul genetic abominations possible. This is why they have not allowed true love to survive in the world. Undead filth attack all people who have any love in their hearts. Undead filth poison all living people who feel any love at all for anyone. Undead invisible entities hate and fear love. Why? Because love is nature's way of the best genetic matches being made so healthier babies can be born, and the human species can become genetically healthier than it already is. By nipping all love in the bud before love has a chance to grow: undead invisible entities have been destroying love in all living humans for millions of years.

This is why they are totally and completely evil. This is why they must all be killed dead. Until invisible unseen undead entities are killed dead completely: there will not be any chance for love to grow between living humans. Kirlian photography can catch their faint images on film. All living people have to do is set video cameras running Kirlian film in their bedrooms, and they will see how their sleep is constantly being invaded and poisoned by undead filth entering their bodies and minds and souls while they sleep. Preventing them from having a good night's sleep, preventing them from having any healthy dreams, preventing their bodies from healing all night.

Once the awareness of the existence of these invisible filth becomes well-known, once living people notice how they are affected and poisoned by undead entities, once living humans begin systematically tracking these undead filth to their lairs, where they sleep all day: then Bram Stoker's Dracula will become a reality. Then living humans will hunt down these undead ghouls and kill them dead: completely fucking dead. The fact is: they can be killed. They must be killed. For living humans to have any chance at a decent life: they need to be killed.

The stories of living humans being possessed by spirits are not myths. Now you can understand why it is usually impressionable innocent children and young people with weak personalities who have become possessed by undead spirits. Now you can understand why it is those who are the purest, the most good, the most generous, and the most spiritual, who become possessed by evil spirits.

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Seven: Entities and the Alternative

1588

Now you can understand why people feared these innocent children who were more good than they were. And how, and why all of the billions of evil spirits made damn sure that these good, unsuspecting innocent children were aura-raped so viciously, and so insanely, that they became deranged and mad and insane. Now you can understand why possession became regarded to be a mental illness. Because the sickest human undead filth ever born: were destroying their spiritual purity... secretly and invisibly.

Now you can understand why after thousands of years of this aura rape of any living soul that was too good, or too generous, or too honest, or too courageous... there is no culture in the world that even wants to raise its children to be more spiritual, or better than their parents.

Now you can understand a little of the hell these healthier human living souls had to suffer. When they were being attacked by every undead human filth-aura around their bodies... and every human filth-aura existing secretly inside the bodies of their own living parents and all the living humans around them at the same time.

Now you can understand a little bit better why innocent spiritual children and adults who were less poisoned than others: were burned at the stake, and killed, and tortured, and hung.... As pre-set waves of paranoia flashed through the souls of living populations... sparked off by the coordinated evil sick entities living inside the living... and fed-upon by them... as they relish the waves of racism, and hatred... as the living committed atrocities that could be used against them when they died and found themselves surrounded by fake, overlapping multiple entities parading as spiritual authorities, and gods, and elders they once knew.

Now you can understand a little better about why human evil has not only flourished on this Earth... but has gotten worse, and more corrupt, as time has passed; and how and why it has accumulated. Now you can understand better: where the entire dynamic of detachment comes from. Reflective apes detaching bones from dead bodies, and using them to kill with. Reflective apes detaching themselves from their own actions... apes using stones to detach bones with. Apes using detached-split stones to kill with, so they would not have to feel the pain and fear of the victims. So they would not have to feel the guilt and shame of killing. Living useless, unused lives. Reflectively detaching themselves from their own bodies while they were still alive. And after death: these detached entities... poisoning living apes and living humans... to become even more detached. Until the billions of detached, insane sick undead human filth called entities live inside every living human today... pushing these living souls to become even more detached from their own bodies and brains than they were... until the undead filth gain mastery over the living, and never have to fear their retribution. And never have to pay for what they did.

The innocents who were possessed by evil entities. These living soul who were so weak, they could not hold onto the integrity of their own personalities... became regarded as evil themselves... and were killed, and hounded, and raped, and tortured... as the human undead filth that organize their sick secret tactics and strategies, fed, and relished the corruption and evil they themselves created. As they fed-on the pain and horror and suffering they themselves secretly created.

This is why all people who were ever more spiritual, more honest, more Courageous, more full of Pure Wonder... were attacked and killed. This is why all good leaders were martyred, and sacrificed, and betrayed by their own disciples and friends. This is how... and why.... All truly good people... Were... and still are.... Being demonized. And! Then martyred and worshipped alongside the actual mass-murderers who are actually evil. Until Osama Bin Laden is regarded as being as evil as Genghis Khan... when he is actually fighting against the most corrupt evil empire that was ever created by millions of sick, evil white men. Not that Bin Laden is completely pure, or completely good. There is no such thing as a completely good human; simply because we were all aurally raped and violated before we were ever born by these sick, foul human undead filth.

1588

There are only a few rare humans, who managed to somewhat, and somehow escape from being totally corrupted. Who managed somehow to listen to the better angels of their true Nature. Who managed somehow to escape from being singled out and attacked by the sick undead... enough to slightly fight actively against all of the living.... And unliving human evil on this planet today. But their small, weak efforts are very ineffectual compared to the seven billion human souls infested with sick undead human filth raping and corrupting them at every chance, every second, sleeping and waking... on subconscious levels so faint, and untraceable and unnoticeable; that these brutalized masses of living humans are not even aware that such a thing as demon-possession actually exists, and that human spirits actually survive after the physical body dies. The efforts of these few exceptions are weak: because not only do they have to fight seven billion living infested humans with pure evil.... But all the other millions of evil entities that range free and surround these few more-good souls... and attack them, and target them, and try to corrupt them a thousand times more than they try to corrupt ordinary living souls. Until they succeed in weakening them enough to make their efforts ineffectual.

This is how and why... these undead filth have worked and planned for fifty thousand years... to make sure that living people who are the less evil.... Are publicly attacked, feared and reviled: and regarded as being evil. Or ignored, isolated, and ostracized and not listened to.

And then to top it all off.... To make it impossible to decipher truth from lie... they have corrupted truth by mixing truth with lies.

By mixing good people up with the most evil humans ever to live.

Worshipping Jesus together with Augustus Caesar.

Worshipping a poor carpenter's son, and Hitler.

Worshipping a baby Jesus, and mass-murdering presidents.

Worshipping Buddha and divine emperors.

Worshipping Christ and divine rulers.

Worshipping Lao Tse and divine rulers.

Worshipping Mohammed and your tribal leaders and corrupt mullahs.

Good and evil have become so mixed-up, so unrecognizable, so polluted, so muddied. That people stop even trying to separate them in the first place. Until the actual issues of good and evil you face every day: have completely disappeared from the face of this Earth.

But... if the masses of living humans; are ever educated about the true horrors of their own sick undead ancestors and parents. Of how their own dead parents and friends and everyone they ever knew... spent their time secretly corrupting them and filling their minds with so many lies, that when they themselves die; they will never be able to unravel the truth of what was actually done to them by these filth... and never have enough power or intelligence to fight these sick filth. Then there will be hell to pay in the realms of the undead.

If every living human reads this book. If all living humans join together against these sick undead ancestors who want to kill them: so they become just as dead, and as sick as these sick, undead filth actually are.

Then for once, the battle lines between human good, and human evil will once be honestly drawn... along the most obvious, general terms possible.

*Living humans battling dead humans for mastery over the earth...
Over the question of which will prevail: LIFE or death.*

Every fantasy story corrupted into lies, that is now being sold to children... is playing out this battle subconsciously.

Only... you do not need a computer to fight these demons. You are already infested with them. And if you the living... join together to fight these sick, undead filth; whom you once mistakenly worshipped. Then you will find that you will be so busy fighting them day and night for the rest of your life... you have no time for fake, corrupted stupid bullshit about fake abstract fights between fake images of fake good against fake evil monsters on fake abstract computers and video games.

Then you will find out what actual evil, and corruption truly is. Then you will find out what good actually is.

How can you fight these unseen filth most effectively? They harmonize themselves inside your own bodies, and live inside you so long.... They actually start believing that they are you. Until you start believing that you have a split personality. That you have a schizophrenic personality. That it is you who are mentally sick and deranged... not the secret filth that exists inside you.

You can fight them by being unpredictable. They cannot create anything. They cannot have an original thought, or an original feeling, or an original action...

They can only steal it in a thousandth of a second; and try to pretend that your originality is theirs. They can only reflect your own self back to you. But... they cannot, and do not; want to look inside themselves... ever.

This is one of their weaknesses. Ask them anything about themselves: and they either lie, or deflect, or fall silent, or refuse to answer or run away and hide.

The more spontaneous you are, the more creative you are: the less they can poison you.

The more often you repeat anything...the more easily they can steal it.... Memorize it, and then try to poison it, and use it against all of you.

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Seven: Entities and the Alternative

1591

This means that every habit you repeat, every routine you repeat. Anything you duplicate, or replicate, or preserve, or perpetuate... can be potentially used by sick unseen, unfelt filth auras existing secretly inside each living human; to poison you into repeating these bad habits more often... and your good habits less often. And they can continually press on this easily, and slowly make any bad habit become worse.

How can you fight this?
Through balanced intensity.
Through balanced passion.

Not through obsessive, narrow, fanatical, one-sided, holier-than-thou righteousness.
Through connectivity.

By connecting everything inside yourself with everything else inside yourself. And trying to understand it.

By connecting everything inside yourself to everything outside yourself. By connecting yourself to all other humans without exception. By connecting yourself to all living things without exception. By expanding all your awareness to include everything inside and outside you. By experiencing life directly. By not using any abstractions at all. By dealing with people directly, openly, and honestly. By not keeping secrets. By living with others openly, directly, and not harboring any secrets between you.

Weak, evil entities love secrets. They love energy that is reflected weakly and evilly back at them. They love evil for its own sake. They love weakness. They love cowards. They love liars. They love easily duped fools. They love believers. They love fanatics. All the hate-energy of undead human filth, all human evil entities are weak.

All hate energy that actually hates evil... is a thousand times stronger than weak, lying, hypocritical evil-hate energy. Evil human undead auras hate all true honest passion and try their best to corrupt it as much as they can. Because true passion burns so fiercely that it burns its own impurities out automatically. Intense passion purifies people of their own evil.

If you have any bad habits? Replace them with better ones. And intensify those good habits... until they are so intense: they cannot be poisoned. Then find even better habits to replace them with. And intensify them also. Fight fire with fire. Fight hate with hate. Give love to lovers. Cooperate with cooperators. Fight fighters. Play with players. Be positive and passionate about everything you do, and feel, and think. Evil secret haters and undead secret filth love secrets... hate all honesty. So be honest with everyone you know, and try to be as honest with yourself as possible. Pure honesty can never be corrupted by lies and evil. Pure courage can never be corrupted by fear. Pure love and pure wonder can never be corrupted by reflective, weak hate, and boring normality. The more you purify yourself of bad habits and impure ways of living. The more you replace bad ways of thinking with good ways. The more you replace bad ways of feeling with good ways. The more you replace bad ways of acting with good ways. The less these sick aura will like being inside you. The more deeply you will be able to explore your own actual inner universe, and the actual outer universe without their sick evil poisoning you.

Live with other people, and do not isolate yourself from others. Live each second as spontaneously and creatively and differently as possible. So these secret filth cannot use any of your creativity as a reflex action, to reflect your own thoughts and feelings back to you at the speed of light... only polluted secretly with their evil, weak, sick intentions of pure evil.

1591

What does this mean? This means that having fun creatively. Laughing and loving with other living people. Having fun with other living people... is the best way to be rid of these sick, undead filth.

But... if you ever find that something is laughing inside you that is not you... when you yourself do not really think something is funny. Then stop allowing that sick filth to enjoy pretending it is actually you.

Cut off the laugh if it is not you who is actually spontaneously laughing with another living person. If you find a thought or feeling, or urge come over you that is not good, that you know is not good. That you know is evil....

Fight it consciously.

These inexplicable evil urges and impulses are the subconscious effects of evil undead human entities trying to vicariously satisfy their own cravings. By vicariously gratifying all of the addictions and cravings they died-with, and never got rid of, and are still poisoned with.

How?...

Simple

Say, someone you once knew who is now dead: was an alcoholic, and loved drinking beer. All he has to do, is pass his undead aura into the living aura of some unsuspecting living soul who he knows likes to drink beer. And subconsciously start pushing him to wander out the room into the kitchen, and open the fridge. And before you know it: that unsuspecting living soul is drinking a beer. And enjoying it even more than usual... because the sick, secret entity inside his body is enjoying that beer also, and reflecting that enjoyment of his sick addiction back to the living person. And harmonizing itself with the living soul in secret... and setting up house inside that living person. Until it can control that unsuspecting living person's entire life by simply tugging upon whatever repeated, predictable energies, tastes, thought-patterns, feelings, and accumulated addictive behaviors that every living soul is infested with already.... That are already corrupt.

However. Say another sick undead entity loves chocolate, not beer. And he pushes out the beer-loving evil entity from that person's body and mind, and makes it start feeling an urge to eat chocolate... and keeps the subconscious pressure up to eat chocolate day and night for one week.

Eventually: the unknowing, unsuspecting living person will go out and buy some chocolate and eat it. And when that living person dies. His parents and elders can then point to his rotten, lazy life, where he supposedly did nothing; except to please himself by drinking beer and eating chocolate. And tell him to shut up, whenever he even dares to question their high, and mighty older wisdom and authority.... As they order and command him to do the exact thing to other living souls that they once did to him.

And... because these entities worked all of that once-living person's life corrupting him; so that he already enjoyed corrupting others while he was still alive. And since while he was alive: he never got any enjoyment from healing himself, or trying to help others. And because he is still kept ignorant of how he himself was secretly corrupted by older, filthier entities a thousand times more cunning than he is...

Then... the latest ones that die... the most recent ones... do all the work slaving to corrupt the next batch of living human suckers. And commit their unseen evil actively, evilly, and gleefully...and always in secret. Loving their special feeling of exclusive power their secret corrupt evil gives them. Loving the feeling of having power over living people. Loving the feeling, that they are now gods.... Omnipotent.... All-wise.... All-seeing.... All-powerful. And being totally corrupted by that secret, evil, power and advantage....

Say there is one exception amongst them, who balks at this. That is not a problem. 50,000 others will gladly take his place.

This is the hidden reason why times of war are followed by times of peace. This is why every ancient, old, evil, viscous habit, and cycle, and idea, this is why every human evil has been repeated so often, and always re-surfaces again in a subtler, more poisonous, more evil guise.

This is why when there are many babies being born in the world: some are not found early enough by these sick filth so they can corrupt them as completely as they would like. This is why baby-boomers have more natural urges to overthrow the old ways and old cultures. And this is also why another war is created to kill them, and destroy all their efforts to improve the lot of loving, good people.

Take the example of the historical Jesus. Born after Herod the baby killer killed an entire generation of Jew babies where he once lived. When Jesus was born in Bethlehem: the evil, secret filth of undead entities around him became insulted and outraged at this one baby escaping their purge of all human babies of that area.

What? People gathering in a barn to worship a baby?... you are supposed to worship kings. Why then we will turn this baby into a King! You are supposed to worship emperors. You are supposed to worship your gods. Why then we will turn this baby into a god! You fools. You are supposed to worship your elders. Not a stupid, innocent, impressionable, unsuspecting baby. This is how the undead react to any sign of GOOD in people. They cannot predict the future: they only react to the past.

So they decided to fix that. They decided to make sure this baby grew up half-convinced that he was the son of a god. And they decided to purge and destroy, and persecute every fool who tried to worship him. They tried that for hundreds of years. They failed. This was a bad mistake by them. They opened their mouths too soon. They became insulted too soon. They were feeling so arrogant, and smug about creating the horror of Herod's mass infanticide which they had managed to create by poisoning his mind subconsciously... so he became obsessed with the idea that a baby being born was going to replace him as King of the Jews: that they did not account for other factors they could not handle. His fear created a self-fulfilling prophecy. All fears create the energy that makes these fears come true.

They did not account for the backlash of their own evil. Unseen evil, one-sided entities... who are undead and obsessed with dead things can never anticipate the positive reactions of life to their crimes of undead evil. Every time they tried to stamp out this positive Jesus movement... which they had themselves had unwittingly created and then re-poisoned: it took on another life in another form... however much corrupted. It refused to be killed off completely; like all of the other ancient religions and beliefs had been before it.

Every evil entity, and evil living ruler who has attempted to guarantee their own immortality by being worshipped as an immortal god: has guaranteed that their religion or cult went extinct amongst cultures of living people... the attempt of these unseen filth to guarantee their own immortality has the exact opposite effect. Every stupid, smug, arrogant god-ruler, every arrogant belief, every arrogant religion, has guaranteed their own complete extinction by their own arrogance.

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Seven: Entities and the Alternative

1594

Today: the only religions that still survive: are religions that admit they were founded, and formed by ordinary mortals, by living people. And the more these religions try to immortalize their ordinary, once-living founders: the more they wane, and go extinct.

The only reason the teachings of Jesus still survive; is because he refused to be worshipped as a god. He refused to admit that he was the son of god. The only reason his teachings still survive today is because he was not a god.

Human undead filth called entities managed to poison the Christian movement and turned it into a death-cult of deluded, deceived, brainwashed, unloved, powerless victims... searching blindly for any kind of love. Into a religion that was good only for the poor and the powerless. Then they corrupted that also. And turned it into an elite religion for the European rich... who preyed upon the rest of the world, and colonized most of the rest of the earth, and oppressed, and conquered as cunningly and evilly as possible... and made humans even poorer; by sucking all the world's human wealth into Europe. Then they even corrupted this elite, death-cult religion called Christianity... by turning it into a rich, white-man's religion.

In spite of all these endless attempts to poison the religious ideas of this movement... many of his core truths and messages are still given lip-service to, and still spouted... however hypocritically, and however unaware that what they spout is actually true.

Does this make any sense to you? What if every word in this book is a lie? What if you fight against your inner demons; and find out that there were no secret-evil human undead filth hiding secretly inside you at all?

What if you only succeeded in consciously separating all of your good impulses and intentions from all of your own evil impulses... and succeeded in becoming a better human because of it? Because you fought this fight every day and night for the rest of your life, and never gave up?

What difference would it make then? Would the effect of reading this book and believing all of it, have an evil effect on you?

Or would the effect of reading all the truths in this book be a good effect on you after all? Even though you did not find any undead human entities hiding secretly inside you.

The reason I am saying this is because the degree of human sensitivity varies. Some people can sensitize themselves enough to become aware of unseen influences. Some people will never be able to sensitize themselves to this degree simply because they have been too brutalized and damaged and traumatized.

The degree of healing varies. Some people can heal from some things but not from others. The degree of human awareness varies. Some people can become aware of unseen entities, and some cannot.

1594

The process of healing changes the level and degree of your sensitivity to all things, including becoming sensitive enough to sense unseen undead entities.

For instance: certain psychics would have you believe they can actually see unseen auras. But... they cannot communicate with them mentally. Some psychics would have you believe they can communicate mentally with the unseen undead... but they cannot see them... all of them use their special gift for corrupt purposes. All of them are in the business of forgiveness. The only reason they are allowed to use their abilities: is for grieving people to let go of their grief... and completely forgive the person who died of all responsibility for the crimes and sins they committed when they were alive. All of them are in the business of whitewashing the unseen undead. All of them are in the business of everybody forgiving everybody else of everything they ever did or said or felt or thought.

So: Hey, Presto!... when you pass into their realm? All is forgiven. Er... that is... as long as you forgive them also! No moral judgment! No thundering god to judge you be your sins! No stern father figure to punish you! All is supposed to be love and happiness after you die! All unhappiness, all suffering disappears... you become effectively numb! You become dead to all the living emotions you ever felt when you were alive! In fact they become a bothersome nuisance. You do not want to be pestered by stupid living relatives weeping over your coffin and crying and sobbing. So you get them to go to a psychic, and they go through a catharsis, and relax. Wonderful for the undead: this way they do not have to feel anything. This way they do not have to empathize with living people who once knew them. This way the memory of them will become so fucking whitewashed, they will become so instantly good and loving... that the idea that they ever did anything wrong of hurtful when they were alive becomes inconceivable! To the brainwashed living who go to their own graves and meet them.

This is the exact same moral technique that has been used by human beings on earth to absolve themselves of all wrong.

Do you see any nation admitting they have ever done anything wrong to the environment? Have you ever heard a Stalin ever admitting he ever did anything wrong? Or a Hitler? Or any mass murderer? While they were alive?

Have you ever heard of any culture or community ever admitting they ever raised their babies wrongly? Have you ever heard of any group of humans who have ever admitted they ever did anything wrong?

Never.

But all the authority figures in human civilization... have told those whom they oppressed and killed and raped that they were wrong and evil! The preachers have told believers they were sinners so they could control them easily as a passive mass of submissive brainwashed idiots.

In order to keep this hoax going... the unseen have only two alternatives. Either when you pass over into their realm: everything is forgiven! Everything is joy and light! All pain is gone! (you also stop being human)

Or... you are attacked and accused for being a sinner. You are judged and sent to hell. You are punished for all the sins you have committed when you were alive.

However... they have no guns there. They only have their brainwashing. They only have their lies. Any entity who decides that they are not going to take any authority figure telling them what to do: they cannot do anything about. Why?

Because the fear of death is gone. They are already dead. They believe they are immortal. They believe they cannot be killed. Well... they are wrong. They can be killed. And they know it. This is why... this entire hoax has been perpetrated for so long

This is WHY they weaken the living while they are still alive. This is WHY they Corrupt them and make them so insane, so irrational and so full of illogical beliefs: that they can be easily manipulated once they get there. This is WHY they Weaken their moral, ethical, spiritual, emotional, mental, physical health until they become senile driveling idiots before they actually die. So they become doddering, senile, old brain-dead fools before they die. And then enter into a realm where everything they ever did is forgiven.

Why? Because everything they did to people when they were alive is back there... in the physical realm. They are no longer connected to the physical realm. The living world ceases to be important to them. As long as every person who dies... forgives what was done to them when they were alive... why then parents that are living... can go on raping their children with perfect impunity! Sin lives! Sinning on earth has no repercussions in the realm of the unseen undead! No responsibility! No consequences! A species of sinning animals living on Earth: creating a realm of total forgiveness after they die? Well... they never fucking admitted they did anything wrong while they were alive either. So what is the fucking difference between the liars and the denial of all truth practiced on earth. And the lying hypocrisy practiced in the realm of the unseen undead?

None.

Welcome! Join us! We are all equals here! In... er....

'Oh... the time when I ... oh that's not important. Besides... we are all forgiven! You forgive me! I forgive you!... er, the fact that I raped you as a child. And you raped your child because of it? And the fact that your child is now raping her child on earth now because of me raping you when you were a child...? Er... that's not important! Besides... we are all forgiven our sins when we pass over!...'

Or: if there is any ill-feelings? Then the people you have ill-feelings for just do not appear to you. You never see them because every time you come near them they run and hide from you.

Or: if you try to criticize anyone? You are attacked en masse by the entire realm? Very rare and very dangerous for them. Because if you ever catch one of them: you will be able to kill them.

What is most important with evil of either and both realms? A united front. Mass conformity.

But... if there is one tiny crack... if there is one tiny weakness in their united front. If there is one hint of fear. Then they all flee. They all disappear and hide from you: hiding in their holes. Then you have won.

If one person... if one single person: can defeat and send the entire realm of the unseen packing. If one single person decides that they will judge the unseen. And if all undead judges cannot judge you... but you can judge them... if you are more powerful than all of them put together... and start judging them. If they cannot attack you, but you can attack them.

Then the destruction of the unseen will begin. Then the evil of the undead will begin to be destroyed. Then life will not be poisoned by death.

If it is impossible for this book to have an evil effect on whoever reads it... do you think you can invent enough rationalizations to pretend that this book is not true?

Can you invent enough lies to convince yourself that this book is actually evil? Do you think you, or any human alive; has the cunning and wherewithal to demonize this book; so it will never be read, and never be understood? Do you think you can ban this book so it will never be read by any living humans ever? If that thought interests you. If you read this; only trying to find some way to subvert its truths and corrupt its text.

How evil are you?

What evil impulse came over you to even think such a thought? What evil secret aura hiding inside your aura is pushing you to consciously commit evil?

I challenge any, and all evil persons reading this book to prove this book is evil. Try banning this book; and see what happens. The logical explanation for demonic possession already exists. The logical explanation for the aura-poisoning of living people by dead, sick, human entities has existed ever since the radio was invented. Today ... thanks to cell-phones, fm and am radio, television, short-wave radio, radar, police transmission, and a host of other wireless transmissions... there are hundreds of millions of energy signals being broadcast through the atmosphere.

All of them are on different wavelengths. And all of them easily pass through each other.

However... if one wavelength overlaps another one. If one is too close in wavelength, and too dissimilar to the other. If one transmission is one the same wavelength as another, but clashes with it. You get static. You lose the signal. Listening to one station on short-wave... you suddenly pick up other signals. You hear two stations at the same time... if you synchronize your transmitter to the same frequency as a radio station: you can transmit anything... and anyone who has a radio tuned to that frequency will hear you. If the power of your transmitter is more powerful than the transmitter of the radio station: you can drown out their signal completely and take it over as yours.

This also happens with the energy transmission of human brainwaves. If a large enough number of weak undead human filth all synchronize their enraged energy waves, to match and overpower the brainwaves of a living person with a weak personality, and weak brainwaves: they can temporarily 'possess' him.

If an unseen human filth aura enters a living fetus at birth and synchronizes its energy to the energy of the fetus. It gets a free extra life, that it can experience vicariously... sucking life-energy from that living fetus... weakening it... and slowly taking over that living person's mind and body; until there is nothing left of the original personality at all... because it was done so gradually that the fetus-baby-infant-child-adolescent-adult never noticed the slow merging and supplanting of its own awareness with the secret filth of the symbiotic parasite living secretly inside it.

This process has been written about by a famous Englishman who actually consciously agreed to let a sick, evil entity take over his entire body. Why did he agree to this? Because he himself was so rotten with sickness and corruption that he had terminal cancer. So he agreed to sell his body and mind to this obscene filth, and die himself... and let the relatively more healthy aura of Lobsang Rampa take over his body and write lying, deceiving books about reincarnation, and the supposed sanctity of Tibetan religion be glorified in print to the entire western world. As a way to spread the lying bullshit belief of reincarnation from the east into the west. This person sold his body... to corrupt his own soul... so he would not die, so he could live a few more years.

Most of the unseen aura parasites sucking off the living energy of living persons are never detected by their hosts. Most of them are satisfied with the free ride of getting to live again vicariously in complete, undetected secrecy. Most of them are content to poison living humans on a subconscious level so imperceptible that they cannot tell when one of their impulses or intentions, or motives comes from their own subconscious processes, or if that process has in any way been affected or altered or poisoned, or subverted by the secret parasitic filth hiding inside their souls. Most living humans corrupt themselves almost without any aid from these filthy aural parasites helping them.

Then there is the question of how many undead filth have managed to synchronize themselves to any one living person. And the degree of their effect on the living individual. Individually. And collectively.

If there are twenty or fifty undead entities harmonized to one living person: they may be able to corrupt that living person fifty different ways. And nurture and encourage fifty different addictions to develop in that living person. If there is only one entity filth harmonized to that living person: that entity may only succeed in secretly encouraging only the addictions they have; to develop in the unsuspecting living person.

Then there is the question of the combined effect of many entities harmonized inside a single living person: and how many of their evil intentions cancel each other out... or increase their toxicity ten times for every doubled subconscious poison urge inside the living person.

Then there is the question of the hierarchy of control over any living person, and which undead filth can harmonize themselves better and have more of an unsuspecting influence on them. Almost without exception. It is the undead entities they were closest to when they were alive, or lived with them longer than any other once-living person. This automatically implicates and damns all their once-living relatives. With their deceased mother and deceased father at the top of the pile of cumulative subconscious influence upon them day and night... as their parent continue to live through their children... after they die. Something almost all parents do when they are alive. It is merely a continuation of evil. A continuation of corrupt parents continuing to corrupt their children after they die.

Do you think this is too fantastic to be true?

Study living people whose parents have died. Do they stay the same? Or do they slowly and remorselessly; become more and more like their parents? Do they become increasingly like what they once used to hate? Do they suddenly stop rebelling against what they did not like about their parents; and start actively supporting the evil things their parents once stood for? How much of this can be explained by their own subconscious brainwashing? Is it the fault of the child that a parent dies? How much of it can be explained by whitewashing all dead people and uttering shit lies about how good they were when they were alive? How much of this can be explained by children wanting to follow in their parents footsteps and their example?

How many children have ever completely rebelled against everything parents stood for?

What do parents stand for? Parents never stand for a fucking thing. Parents never took a stand against anything. Except standing over their children: forcing them to do what they don't want to do.

How many living people have ever stopped yearning for their parent's approval? How much does this blind need-urge increase after their parents die? How many people were never loved enough by their parents while their parents were still alive? How many people are still addicted to this unfulfilled need for parental love after their parents die? How many people ever get over needing to be loved, and approved-of by their parents? How many people ever stop revering and worshipping their parents blindly: without ever critically evaluating them and judging how good or evil they actually were?

How many people secretly hate their parents but never admit it even to themselves?

How many people's hatred of their parents is so buried in their subconscious: that they refuse to ever admit it or feel it, or become aware of it?

How many undead filth called parents: use the cowardice of their own children when they pass over? A cowardice they themselves created and fostered in that child. And know that now...the child is too much of a coward ever to honestly admit they hate their parents. And too much of a coward too ever openly accuse them, or defy them, or disobey them, or judge them.

Parents who have successfully broken the spirit of their own children before they die: have a very easy time of it when they pass over.

They know they have nothing to fear from the destroyed, damaged, corrupted, poisoned souls of their children... because they have succeeded in weakening them so much that their children are weaker than their own parents.

But.... But!....

But when a living person becomes too good, too honest, too courageous, too loving.... Too spiritually and karmic ally powerful.... When a living person has too wide a Sense of Pure Wonder. When they try to understand certain things about themselves that do not make any sense. When they sense a certain wrongness within themselves. When they try to explore their own subconscious inner selves. Then these secret filth have to hide. They try to cover their tracks. They do anything and everything to prevent that living person from finding out the actual truth.

From discovering that most of the bad habits, most of the sick feelings and dynamics existing inside that living person is not due to them at all, but to a lifelong infestation of secret filth and secret poison inside their bodies, genitals, minds, and hearts.

Then you get the deceptions and corruptions that succeed in corrupting and deceiving actually honest, good people like Joan of arc. Who was deceived into believing she was chosen by a personal god to fight as a man, and kill Englishmen. Cozened into her delusion by hearing voices inside her head... and being ignorant and innocent enough to believe these voices as the voice of god. Corrupting her own femininity? Corrupting her own kindness and goodness? Corrupting her own honesty? Corrupting her own love for living things?

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Seven: Entities and the Alternative

1600

No. She became too well-loved by her own compatriots. She became a threat to the powers of her own king and her own church, which she was blindly, patriotically, and mistakenly fighting for. Instead of fighting for her church and her king. She fought for the poor peasants of her region against the English invaders: who in that context: had good reason to be killed. She was showing too powerfully how a simple country girl could be the match of any brutal male killer. She was giving women and girls too fantastic a living example of woman-power to follow.

So, she had to be put on trial, given a mock trial and sentenced to death by the very church she was supposedly fighting for. If that is not enough for all French people to vomit upon their own religion and their own aristocracy; I do not know what is. Did her being burned at the stakes cause any other poor peasants to rise up against their masters and kill them?

No. It took hundreds of years of smoldering resentment. It took hundreds of years of undead filth unsuccessfully trying to keep the status-quo in France as it was by corrupting their souls from birth. But it did not succeed. The aristocracy were butchered in their beds. They were dragged out from hiding and killed on the spot. The killing spread like a poison everywhere: until the honest intent of poor peasants against the filthy rich was successfully poisoned into completely mindless killing of anyone and everyone. The Revolution become famously known as 'The Reign of Terror'. That was supposed to brainwash every human alive into believing that any and all social upheavals against any and all authority are intrinsically evil. And that the reigns of kings and mass murderers were not reigns of terror. Only democracies were supposed to be reigns of terror, chaos and anarchy. Only popular movements were supposed to be evil.

What is a reign? It is something that falls down upon you. Reign is rain. You cannot stop the rain from falling down upon you. You cannot stop being ruled by a reigning monarch who pisses all over you. Raining death and oppression and hate and fear and terror and lies all over you until you drown in the rain of foul shit they rain down upon you.

The point is that throughout all human history: every good intention living people ever had, has been poisoned and corrupted by these undead things as quickly as possible. Every originally good intention, good motive, intelligent plan; was reversed and ruined as quickly as possible by these unseen undead filth scum: they are the reason the peasant revolt against the tyranny of Kings was reversed producing an even worse tyranny of a mad despotic Emperor who was a thousand times worse and more evil than any French King ever was. From the original intelligent motive of the French revolution...Equality! Fraternity! Liberty!... to the Emperor Napoleon, to a tyrannical Empire which crushed and ruined Europe: all this in just a few years time! Is patently INSANE: there is no way to explain how the French revolution: a people's uprising produced the worst insane madman of n Emperor for god's sake in this short a time unless there were millions of hordes of undead at work poisoning every single healthy thing going on in France. There is no way it is possible to reverse a people's revolution and create out of that Revolution: an Emperor for life! Who planned to give his throne to one of his fucking children for god's sake. So the reason millions of Frenchmen shouted down with the King! Was to raise up a Sicilian Emperor who was not even French for God's sake, to oppress them and tax them and enslave them into his huge starving armies???? You do not change the entire mindset of an entire peasant nation and culture of hatred against their oppressors the aristocrats in a few fucking years unless there is MASSIVE amounts of brainwashing going on inside every single living human inside France, unless there was MASSIVE subconscious programs being placed into the souls of living people so they would not notice as they went against their own better interests and betrayed every single intelligent principle which the French people had just finished fighting for and dying for. Understand this: these undead things have been poisoning the minds and hearts and souls of living humans for millions of years: they are EXPERTS at doing it. The French Revolution is only one example of their presence. They have only ONE motive and that is to RUIN anything which is GOOD. This is their ONLY motive. They have NO OTHER MOTIVE because they do not have any reason to exist in the first place; They should have been killed and wiped off this Earth millions of years ago. Anything which even slightly smacks of being better, anything that is GOOD, anything that is not bad. Anything that is not evil: they attack and hate and RUIN as quickly as possible. This is why they are evil: That is ALL they are. There is nothing else that they are. They are pure unadulterated evil.

1600

They tried to ruin the French Revolution by turning it into The Reign of Terror... but that did not work. Instead France became a nonviolent nation of shopkeepers. But only after millions of poor people, hundreds and thousands of martyrs and dissidents, and hundreds of peasant uprisings, and their leaders fought for justice and gave their lives for what they believed in;.... She only became that non-violent nation after she became an Imperial power and millions of Europeans were killed and robbed and died and starved to death, and millions of girls were raped repeatedly and then killed. Even though France had been systematically crushed for hundreds of years by the ruling aristocrats of France. She became a beacon of democracy; because it was the first city ever founded in Europe that was modeled after the losing side of the Trojan Greek war instead of the winning side: Paris. Paris, who swore to defend womanhood from rapists, and murderers... and was killed and dragged in the dust for that outrageous insult to the power of the homosexual Greek gods: who lusted to kill and rape women in hate: not in love..

Joan of Arc's peer example of female power, female confidence, female honesty and goodness had to be totally destroyed into an example of helplessness is another example of how easily these undead evil things ruin everything good in living human beings. She had to be cast into the role of a victim to get rid of the example of a girl who fought and was not a victim, but a valiant hero, a fearless warrior for France. . She had to be sold to the masses as a helpless martyr... who did not resist or fight against her murderers. She went to her death meekly like a lamb lead to slaughter... because the voices in her head manipulated her reasoning powers, and ordered her to submit. As a result. Instead of becoming famous as the valiant armored Maid of Orleans... she became known as just another fanatical religious sucker... a martyr who was burned at the stake and preached submission to the fucking Catholic Church. Her whole life was one of health, love, confidence and success. By only focusing upon how she died, the entire message of her life was corrupted and poisoned.

There is a reason for everything in human history. Once you become more sensitive to what is actually good energy, and what is actually evil energy... your eyes will be opened.

Why do you think people feel a strange sense of comfortable familiarity looking at old artifacts and old buildings? Why do you think people feel to surround themselves with old, dead things? There are perfectly good, understandable reasons for everything. The idea that some things cannot be understood, or should never be understood is pure bullshit.

Living humans have been systematically brainwashed by their own undead ancestral filth on so many levels, and in so many ways, for so many thousands of years: that today... most humans are barely more than functioning robots. They have been deceived in so many ways and on so many levels: that when they die, there is almost no good left inside them at all. Only a few exceptions throughout human history have escaped these systematic deceptions. Like Joan of Arc. Who was deceived into believing that god was talking to her personally. Like movement of Nazareth. Who was deceived into believing he was the son of a god.

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Seven: Entities and the Alternative

1602

How do you think addicts are created? Why can one person drink alcohol all their lives; and not become addicted? While another person takes one drink: and empties every bottle in their parent's liquor cabinet at the age of twelve?

Because the entity hiding inside her aura was once an alcoholic: and the entity hiding inside another person happens to be addicted to things other than alcohol. That's all. People are subconsciously pushed and pressured by the secret filth hiding inside them towards what these undead entities like and want to experience. If a secret entity: living vicariously inside a baby: is a sadist, a bully, a rapist and a murderer. It will subconsciously push that happy-go-lucky living victim into beating up other children, and joining the army... just so it can get a chance to kill people again and rape women. If a secret entity living vicariously inside a person is a drug addict and an alcoholic, and a sex addict: it will push an innocent girl into having sex before puberty, and push her to drink every bottle in her parent's liquor cabinet before she reaches puberty.

This is very important.

Secret undead entities must corrupt their hosts before they reach puberty: or else, they will not be able to completely control their adult minds and souls and bodies and lives. This is because the hormones of a growing healthy adolescent change the aura-energy of their bodies-minds-sex-brains so fast: the undead inhabiting their living victim: cannot successfully synchronize their energy aura to these complex growing changes enough to control living adolescents when their raging hormones kick in: and upset the dynamics of their entire life-energy.

What is a fetal position? It is a FATAL POSITION: it is the position of death. It is the position that dying people regress back into. Why? Because when they are in their final death agony... the filth entities inhabiting them leave... and they are left with an undeveloped fetal baby soul that never had a decent chance to live or breath without being poisoned by the secret unseen, undead spirits in them. The fetal position of a human baby in its womb is kept there too long.

It is kept there for all evil spirits to have the freedom of entering it and poisoning it with their presence. The human fetus is kept in its womb too long as a convenience for the undead. So they can have 9 long full months to decide which of them will inhabit and poison that living human baby for the rest of its life. The human subconscious does not lie: the fetus position is a FATAL position for the human soul: a human baby in the womb should get out of there as soon as possible. The less time a human baby spends growing inside a safe enclosed space, the less addicted it will be to living safely, enclosed in small spaces, the less time these undead filth will have to poison an unprotected, uncared for, ignored living human soul a their leisure, the stronger that baby will when it is born, the more freedom it will have to grow as it should grow: in Nature, openly and freely in love and freedom and wonder and fun and exploration: and come out screaming in terror trying to get back into its black hole of a death trap where it spent too much time eng infiltrated by every undead spirit that wanted to do it and take over a living body and live a new life again.

These undead filth fight amongst themselves for this chance, they plan for it, they scrape and claw at each other trying to be the first ones into a human fetus baby child. Wouldn't you, if you had no other alternative except to remain a reflective negative weak bit of energy, a non-entity, forgotten and in a black hole of isolation and misery for how many years until you become certifiably insane? What would you do for 10,000 years after you die physically, eh? Refrain from doing this when it is the only way you can ever be alive again? When you can experience over and over a newborn babies sense of Pure Wonder and poison it as quickly and as efficiently as possible? And make sure that the unborn soul you poison will never grow to be strong enough to come after you for what you have done to it? Face the human logic of this: this is what happens. This is what is inside you now. This is why only a rare few of you will ever have the courage and willpower to read all of this last chapter and not run screaming and gibbering in total fear and terror from the truths I am exposing here in this book. They will do anything and everything to keep you from reading this last chapter. Because once you have read it: you will have the tools and the knowledge and the power to kill them.

1602

All living humans are systematically corrupted by the entity filth living inside them... (and every filth entity hovering around them) before puberty. If any part of their psyche is not corrupted before puberty: then it has the potential to grow strong.

Dead undead human entities do not want that. They want living humans to grow up weak. So they can be easily handled, intimidated, overpowered and controlled when they reach their realm of pure secret filth.

Even so... most of the time this extremely destructive form of subconscious manipulation and deception is not really necessary for these filth to destroy the goodness and honesty of living people. Most of the time, it is their own parents, their own culture, their own religion, their own families, their own friends, their own civilization that corrupts them enough to become easy dupes, once they pass over. Corrupted beyond recognition. Addicted to every possible lie, and self-delusion, and drug and evil: simply by a lifetime of being exposed to them.

What is the accumulative effect of accumulating dead, undead human entities upon living humans?

Think of it... why have humans always been so goal oriented? Why have humans always been so obsessed with getting from one place to another as fast as possible. If a human undead filth entity can harmonize themselves with a living person; and instantly be where the living person is. And flit instantly to another living person's aura simply by harmonizing with that other person's aura. What is that: but the ability of going from one place to another without seeing or enjoying the trip?

How can undead filth entities do this? Because they exist in the dimension of Nothingness, not Everythingness. Both dimensions are reflective mirror images of each other. The actual existence and dynamics of undead human entities, proves that the dimension of nothingness actually exists. The explanation of how our universe came to be in the first chapter of this book: also explains the dynamic and existence of human spirits.

Read history and put it into perspective. Masses of Greeks in the hundreds watching tragic death-story rituals in an amphitheatre. Masses of Romans watching ritual death agonies by the hundreds of thousands in the coliseum. Masses of modern viewers watching all kinds of shit by the millions in movie houses, on TV, and now on a computer. Nothing has changed. The undead still want to be entertained by the living.

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Seven: Entities and the Alternative

1604

Trace how every new corruption of human existence has spread, and become more insane and unhealthy: and you will find unmistakable evidence of living humans being subconsciously and instinctively poisoned by their own ancestral undead spirits.

There are reasons for everything.

What effect do you think human overpopulation of the world has had upon the realm of the undead? It has filled the entire world with undead human specters that cannot be physically seen or detected.

What effect has the overpopulation of this undead human scum had upon living humans? Read history! The more we have bred and died. The more undead human entities have accumulated: the more living humans have become addicted and brainwashed into becoming passive spectators. The more living people are affected by the thousands of undead human entities around them, and inside them to satisfy the sick addictions of our ancestors.

After Greece built small amphitheatres for its citizens: Rome built huge stadiums for its citizens to view even worse corrupt spectacles. How many accumulated Greek undead scum entities were surrounding each living Roman and pressuring them to create the same entertainment they once had? The living Romans merely translated the corruption of dead Greeks into a Romanized corruption that was even sicker and more insane.

Then after the fall of Rome came the hatred of everything Roman. During the Dark Ages most Roman books were burnt as pure evil; yet soon after the Europeans went hunting for them again. And tried to re-create Rome all over again from the few documents which had survived. And so, Rome rose again from the ashes as a European civilization; instead of a Mediterranean one. Just as before Rome: Egypt rose from the ashes as a Babylonian empire... and the Persian empire rose from the ashes as a Greco-Roman empire. Just as all empires and civilizations rise from the ashes; after they have been burned to the ground. Because humans have been brainwashed and poisoned from birth to recreate the world of their undead ancestor-scum as closely as possible. No matter how evil and sick these empires actually were.

And ever since then: every damned new nation, every supposedly new government has tried to copy the outright hypocrisy of Roman Republicanism; right down to its obscene gladiatorial combats in public... Now called TV football, TV wrestling, Movies. Spreading the addiction of viewing vicarious violence amongst the masses like a disease. Look at America. Nearly all early American buildings were built with a Roman façade.

Study the histories of China and India. Study all of the older civilizations. Every supposedly new civilization is merely an older one; hiding under newer facades and newer wrinkles of the same age-old corruptions. Once you look at history with any sort of perspective; the evolution of human corruption by the omnipresence of undead human entities becomes increasingly obvious.

Where did the Greeks get their pantomime plays with masks, dirges, tragedies, and grotesque masks hiding the faces of the actors? From the Persian royalty and three hundred years of Persian politics and connivers hiding their faces behind go-betweens every time they dealt with the more honest, more forthright Greeks of their day. From the screened, whicker mesh of the seraglio. From rulers speaking to their servants through meshed windows and hidden shadows so they would remain unseen. So their

1604

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Seven: Entities and the Alternative

1605

servants and vassals only saw a vague outline. So they could never identify their own masters. So they never knew who the true rulers were. So they could not point them out to be assassinated in public.

Where did the Minos get their maze from? From the complex underhanded way that Egyptians dealt with them. Where did they get their god of a half-man, half-bull? From the Egyptian half-animal deities that symbolized the true hidden corruption of their incestuous elite and all of their sick sexual practices. Scratch ancient Egyptian culture and you find an even older filth. The cultures of the Nubians, the Ethiopian scum: that sold caravans of slaves and gold to the Egyptians.

The Mayan maize god was the first aboriginal god of the first south American settled civilizations. Now research has found that Mayan culture is thousands of years older than once thought. Why did the maze of the Minos, and the maize god of the Mayans coincide historically? Why did they exist at the same time? Everything has a logical explanation: if you look deep enough, and connect the actual facts. The first god of the Mayans gave the Mayan kings the right of negative kingship. They gave the Mayans the first destructive right of Godship. The right to establish dominance over all other Mayans. The Mayans had a language that was a maze of complex symbols and images.

Why is the word: Mayan pronounced as “my”? Because they were the most selfish, arrogant rulers of their time in the Americas. They were forerunners of the ‘me’ generation of the 80’s and 90’s. The twin continents: housed the most spoiled selfish living things on earth. The two continents attracted the most selfish humans.

The decapitated heads of corn still rules all of South and North America today. Corn has colonized North America and taken over all of its agriculture and livestock industry. The hundreds of millions of North and South Americans who raise it, and grow it, and eat it, and make sugar out of it, and feed it to all their animals, and to their children... and even to their cars and trucks now...

Not only by using ethanol made from corn... but the new bio-diesel fuel made from corn for tractor-trailers. The original evil of corn still rules... hidden under all the later evils... and now re-surfacing. How many ancient decapitated heads represented by the decapitated heads of the first corn the first Mayans grew... how many ancient undead in their secret invisible realm have worked and plotted and slaved away for how many thousands of years to finally gain back some importance in modern society?

Now corn in Northern America has become almost as sacred and as indispensable to modern Americans: as the first stalks of sacred corn that gave the Mayans the right to dominate their own world. Now Americans in the USA have been given the right to dominate the food industry of the entire world by finding cunning inventive ways to make corn included in every single aspect of modern American society... until corn has permeated America’s cultures so deeply: that America cannot exist without it. Take corn away from the American farmers and the American livestock growers. Take corn out of all the hundreds of thousands of modern industrial processes in pharmaceutical industry and the drug industry and the packaging industry... and all the other industries that use it. And America would not only grind to a complete halt: it would implode and be destroyed.

How did this insidious use of corn find its way into modern society: when there are thousands and millions of other products and plants that could be better used for all of these complex processes and uses? All of the other ingredients and plants are better, and cheaper to grow and use. But nooooo! We must use corn! And make corn King again! Did the thousands of corporations that found convoluted new ways to use corn products study Mayan history? Did they have a crystal ball they told them scientists would find now that the first god the Mayans ever had was a corn god?

1605

Huh? This is not some silly coincidence. It is a direct manipulation by the secret invisible undead of the first human inhabitants of America who have been pressuring living modern humans to regress their modern society back to the oldest stupidest most obsolete form of agricultural religion... the worshipping of a fucking plant.

From Africa to South America... the secret history of entity manipulation of living humans permeates all of human history. All of the hard data. All of the hard facts of history; show and prove their existence. Their hand can be seen in so many ways, by so many undisputed examples: history books are full of the proof of their evil.

Victorian farmers in England believed in the ancient myth that every kernel of wheat and corn housed a spirit. They believed that harvesting the last stand of wheat or corn was dangerous, because all of the spirits of the slain kernels had fled into the remaining corn or wheat, so it had to be cut at a distance, or cut blindfolded. This ancient ritual is still practiced today. The last sheaf of wheat or corn is cut blindfolded whereupon the one who did the deed cries out loud: "I have him! I have him! I have him!" Three times. Whereupon the other cry out: What hast thou!? What hast thou!? What hast thou?" And the cutter screams out the answer: "I have the mare!" and the last sheaf is nailed over the doorway of the farm as a trophy of the harvest of mass death, and the harvesters celebrate in a drunken orgy of gluttony and music. This is only one example of how the evil of the undead is embedded into all human customs and rituals and practices. The horror, the nightmare of mass death, mass killing is ended at last with the cry "I have the mare! The nightmare of killing and mass death is over! I have the last dead sheaf in my hands!". Humans were once sensitive enough to realize that this mass killing was an evil thing they were doing. They had to drown and deaden their awareness of what they have done after the harvest was over. These myths are not a coincidence. Undead spirits exist everywhere around us and in all living things.

What is corn? It is the decapitated heads of the original Mayan Gods, it is the subconscious guilt of the mass murderers of the Mayans rulers: who sacrificed their own people into extinction. What does eating corn do to you? It makes you want to decapitate more living things. It is a decapitation food-drug. It makes you addicted to the pleasure of decapitation. You cannot get enough of its sweetness, or enough of ripping the small heads off the cob, and crushing them. It is the blindness of positive life-energy saying to what is affecting it: 'You want decapitation?? Here! Decapitate me! Do it more! More! More!!!' This is the cunning of plants: to make the taste of killing sweet. Make decapitation taste sweet. Make corn taste so sweet: that humans will raise it and grow it and eat it: because humans prefer the sweetness of crushing young things to death instead of Love. Humans prefer crushing living things between their teeth to the sweetness of True Love.

What are pennies? They are decapitated heads. They are decapitated Gods. They are the mentally detached insane Gods of the Bronze Age: where humans in the North: finally found a way of killing trees they could not burn because the North is too wet to devastate like they burned Africa and Australia. It is the invention of the copper ax: the first killing tool that was sharp and heavy enough to cut off a human head.

What does it say on the American Copper penny?

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Seven: Entities and the Alternative

1607

“In God we Trust”

It signifies the insanity of copper-age humans listening to their insane detached Gods: who told them they must cut down trees and cut off human heads to appease their lust for death and dying. It signifies the base-root of human brainwashing that was instilled into bronze-copper age human... to trust their gods implicitly: and never, never, ever question their superiority or authority. it signifies the addiction of the accumulation-addiction of decapitation gone insane. it represents the detached insanity of unseen undead human detached mentalities: realizing that they could rule the earth: and consume it and destroy it . a detached head on a round copper penny represents their actual goal:

One single merged, detached, human, morphic, unseen, undead aura energy presiding over a dead-round metallic world: empty of all life.

It also represents the lust for smelting copper: as the first beginnings of the lust for money, abstract pieces of round dead metal without any life energy in them. Wasting entire lives: in search of this dead metal and smelting it into axes to decapitate more trees and more living things that they ever could before with their flint axes.

But the facts show the truth: it is faster and easier to makes a flint axe to cut down a tree than smelting a copper ax and then cutting it down. The energy needed to smelt and create the copper ax, the energy needed to fashion it into a tool, and the time waste needed to constantly re-sharpen it: proves also that these undead-unseen insane copper Gods: were bent on ENSLAVING their human living hosts, and getting them to waste a hundred times more energy on pure destruction than they did before. Forcing them to fall in love with their new dead metal death tools far more than they ever loved their dead tools of stone. The copper penny represents the unquestioned trust in money: as the root of the true reason for human existence. It also represents the first unquestioned trust in unseen undead filth... as Gods. If you worship money as a God: you are worshipping the first copper-age Gods and their insane lust for accumulating metal. If you worship money: You worship a god that has its detached decapitated head on the coin you amass and accumulate. A weight of copper so huge: it weighs you down. The trust in money and the trust in a God is the same thing. There is no difference.

This is what the human subconscious is screaming at you when it made humans put this logo onto all the copper pennies of America. A copper penny: is the metal penis of the first volcanoes: the double negative energy: that created the reflective negative energy of the human brain's observer awareness: blindly seeking...."Y" "Why? Why am I alive!? Why is the earth so evil? Why do things kill and eat! Why?"

The Penny is the blind Penis Energy of humans saying “No! No! “Y”?! Why! Why?”

The gods, the unseen insane detached gods of the Bronze Age have covered up their tracks: but their copper pennies still scream out their guilt and insane intent of destroying the Earth. The Copper Age created the first Kings: the first chiefs whose sign of power was the sacred copper ax: with which they could decapitate any person they did not like. The blind hate and violence of the first blind King-God rulers of humanity. They try to cover their tracks. Every culture and government and family and nation and king for 12,000 years has burnt and buried and destroyed the true record of what they actually did, and how they actually lived. Only a few scraps of lying propaganda remain. Yet, even these lies still expose the truth about the actual filthiness of every human civilization that ever existed.

1607

The Copper Age was the creation of the first tribal Kings. It was the first time humans measured both their power and their wealth by how many copper axes they had. Human overpopulation had reached such a critical mass of density that humans began massing together and killing each other. It was a genetic reaction of a species which had become so numerous: it was blindly, instinctively trying to correct its excess numbers by inventing something called war: massing as many humans together and having them all kill each other. The most respected humans were the best man-killers: the ones who could kill more human males and prevent the male human seed from spreading any further and overpopulating the Earth even worse than it had already overpopulated it. If a tribe had twenty copper axes: it was richer and more powerful than a tribe with only ten copper axes. It could attack a tribe that had less copper axes than it did: and win. The oldest symbol-sign of Kinghood: is the symbol of a crossed pair of copper axes resting across the chest of the King, as he held them in both of his hands. This universal Stone Age symbol of power and status: evolved into the Egyptian crossed sheaf of cut wheat: cut with a scythe instead of an axe: representing the leap in killing ability of cutting the necks of many living things with just one stroke, rather than cutting the neck of only one living human.

What is the symbol of the copper axe? A dead metal splitting a dead piece of wood. It is the forerunner of crucifixion. Creating agony in a piece of wood unnaturally tortured by forcing a dead dying piece of metal in-between it. Until a dying human was strung up on a living tree, and then dead timbers, and unnaturally nailed to the tree: recreating the pain of the wood and the metal: by forcing the human to feel that agony also, and die in as much pain as the wood and metal is dying.

Why has the culture and tradition of puppeteers outlasted all other Greek traditions? Why has the puppet theatre been the only ancient Greek tradition that has been handed down unbroken...from father-to-son... from Greece, to Rome, to Europe, through the dark ages, through the middle ages, on up to the present... as the only perpetuated, preserved living tradition and culture of 2,500 years ago?

What is preservation? It is the insanity of pre- serving those who went before you. Putting your own life second to the needs of the dead. Putting the needs of the undead first, serving them first, sacrificing to them first before you eat, praying to them first before you eat, asking for their blessing before you eat, praying and asking them for their blessing before you do anything: which was what humans did for tens of thousands of years before civilization began.

Every other Greek and Roman tradition was thrown away during the dark ages of Europe.

Except puppet shows. The tradition of watching puppets being controlled by an unseen manipulator. The idea of you having a free will. The idea of you being the master of your own mind and your own body... is nothing more to these invisible sick scum than a pathetic joke.

They have orchestrated the unbroken preservation of puppet theatres for over 2,750 years... as a sly, secret, ironic joke. Because it amuses them to watch living puppets pulling the strings of dead puppets. When the actual truth is the other way around. It is actually the undead filth of their own ancestors ... these secret invisible scum: who are the supreme puppet masters of all. Orchestrating and manipulating human behavior as their whims take them. Safe in their invisible energy auras... undetected by living humans.

No other living tradition of ancient Rome has been directly passed unbroken, down from father-to-son: except the practice of puppetry. No recipe for bread, no way of dress, no cultural holiday or myth. Why? Because undead scum like to make ironic jokes. Find a better explanation: and I will give you a million fucking dollars

What do you think the modern craze of living humans watching TV and movies is, but a recreation of the exact same visual perspectives and angles from which these unseen sick, undead human entities have been watching living humans for lo-these hundreds of thousands of years? The modern TV is a pure recreation of the ancient puppet shows.

Now these unseen human undead scum have finally gotten people to develop a mass media but not for the living... for them. Now; the unseen undead no longer need to move their aural undead bodies from one person's life to the next anymore in order to find their vicarious, sick entertainment. They have successfully manipulated the subconscious minds of living humans to create removed, abstract images. And made them think that they were doing it for themselves.

Do you know how hard it is for a human undead entity to find a living human life that is interesting enough to watch? Undead parents would rather watch soap operas on TV: than watch the boring lives of their own children.

This is how sick the poisoned motives of living humans have become: driven by unseen urges and addictions of undead ancestors. It is time to blow the lid off all of the lies that blighted living humans have lived under, and in. There is a damn good reason living why cinematographers pick certain ways to shoot a scene. Because around every interesting life, are so many undead scum: that most of them cannot get a good seat to see what is happening up close. Too many other undead scum are blocking their view. Better to watch TV. With so many sets all over the world: our dead can all watch the same thing, and see it from an identical perspective of the same camera angles.

Their little trick is to pass on the virus of their own evil to the next generation without letting each new generation know it has already been infected at birth. Human babies have been born for untold thousands of years: with so many infections of diseased spiritual, cultural religious, parental, community and ethnic origin. But the one aspect that prevents living humans from healing from their own illness is the constant re-infecting they suffer by their own sick undead; who try to live through them by pretending that they are still alive and not dead.

How do they do this? Simple. They forget themselves. They forget who they actually were. They want to forget who they are. They try to pretend their previous life never happened. They lie to themselves. They brainwash themselves.

What is so surprising about that? Most people hate the lives they have lived. Why should they try to remember what they hated after they pass over?

Why do you think living humans recreate the past? Because hidden inside them; exist undead filth, who are pretending they are still alive. How can you distinguish the feelings you have; from the feeling of an undead human scum inside you, living vicariously and secretly through you?

You can't.

They can leave any time they want. They can come back any time they want. They can doze or sleep while you are awake doing some boring task: and be up all night invading your subconscious dreams with their sick games and lies.

