Unlike like living children, unlike like living things: you can do anything you want to them. Compared to a nice cold, unfeeling dead machine: a living child is a constant nuisance. You have to listen to it. You have to play with it. You have to spend time with it. You cannot do what you want. If you abuse a child and tear off its arm: it will not keep on functioning without arms. Toys are much better. You can tear off their arms of a teddy bear or a doll: and keep on playing with it pretending it is your friend. It does not bleed and die. It does not treat you badly. It does not go off and play with other children. It does not leave you alone. It does not hurt your feelings. It does not do nasty things to you. It does not treat you like a machine or a toy. You can treat your doll like a toy. You can treat your model car like a toy. The model car and doll cannot treat you like that. Tools are a perfect for training people the dynamics of one-sided, dysfunctional relationships. Which they then apply to living things and living children and living people: simply because we have been brainwashed by being raised in the over-intensive tool-use society called civilization. The culture of using tools affects the culture of living people. How much of time you spend with tools, or machines. How much time you spend with dead things. Affects how you deal with living things. How detached you are from the things you deal with: determines how dysfunctional you become in how you deal with all living things.

For hundreds of thousands of years before civilization: we threw away broken spear points. We threw away broken arrow points. We threw away broken or dulled knives. We threw away broken useless flint and stone tools for millions of years before we settled down and became civilized. We threw away broken pottery, broken attempts of cutting tools. We threw away untold zillions of shards of segments of flint and stone and bone: as we chipped away at a rock or bone or piece of wood... fashioning tools by throwing away what we did not want or need. What wonder is it that now: we throw away our children? What wonder is it that we throw away everything we do not like, and everything we cannot use? That is how lived before civilization. This is how we still live today. Granted it is wrong. But historically... when you put it into perspective... it is an understandable dynamic. The dynamic of throwing away things because they are mechanically useless: has poisoned the dynamics of human relationships for millions of years. Today we throw away people who are mechanically useless to us.

We call it unemployment. Not throwing away people. We call it firing. We call it letting people go. We call it retiring them. Etc.

Evolving Cycles vs. Vicious Cycles

The birth and death of galaxies, stars, planetary systems, planets, animals, all happen in evolving cycles, which are continually changing as they go through their cyclic processes. The cycles themselves are continually changing. Every cyclic process in the universe: from the radioactive decay witnessed in all atomic nuclei, to the organic decay of all living things are changing-evolving cycles that never duplicate themselves or repeat themselves; because everything in these evolving cycles is changing. The dynamic of any cycle is only generally similar to other cycles of its type and level. But no cyclic process is ever duplicated. No cyclic process ever produces the same galaxy, the same star, the same planet, the same tree, the same leaf, the same atom, the same electron, etc... they do not even produce the same kind of galaxy, the same kind of star, the same kind of planet, the same kind of tree, the same kind of leaf, the same kind of atom, the same kind of electron. There is no such thing as genetic duplication in living things. Only general models... or species: which produces unique examples of that general model in each individual living organism.

The human genome project took the DNA of one living person: in order to 'map out' the general model of human DNA. However, the scientific information they gain from any single DNA sequence is useless unless it is compared and evaluated to a large enough number of other people's DNA. And that will only give them a chance to vaguely understand some small part of that tiny sequence's functions. If they took a second person to map out their entire DNA, it would be so wildly variant from the first, that nobody would be able to make a single logical or constructive deduction from it even if they studied those two DNA models for a million years. Scientists do not tell these shocking facts to the public. Because if the public knew how completely futile, stupid and wasteful 99 % of all scientific research actually is; then the public would move to stop funding on 99 % of all science grants funded by their tax-dollars.

The fact that human DNA is 98% identical to the DNA of a chimpanzee is another example of false advertising. Nobody has mapped the entire genome of a chimpanzee. This is only an estimate taken from a few samples. Which are totally insufficient to cover the entire genome of a chimpanzee. That the basic, general order of gene sequences throughout the entire strand of hundreds of thousands of sequences, are generally different... by roughly a 2 % difference...

But, which 2%...? If one of those 2% variant genes is a major gateway gene; then you have an entirely new species!

The public has been fed an incredible mass of misinformation by all of Science. All science textbooks are full of lies. People think that the atomic number of any atom is an immutable constant... that the atomic weight and number of oxygen is twelve. This is just another hoax perpetrated onto gullible students. Every oxygen atom has its own unique weight. No oxygen atom has the identical weight of any other oxygen atom. The reason the weights of atoms are so puzzling to the public is that these weights are just an average... of the oxygen they measured to make that average. If any scientist tried to find the average weight of oxygen today, they would not only find that their average of oxygen was different from the textbook average: but that they would get a completely new average that would force the publishers to recall all of the science books on this planet, and re-issue new ones with a more accurate average... Only to be forced to do it all over five years later.

Why? Because all atoms decay. No atom has the same weight at any two given moments of time. Is this dismaying fact ever put into textbooks? Never. Science has not and cannot grapple with even understanding this gradual decay on atomic, and sub-atomic levels simply because the realm of quarks and leptons is so infinitesimally small that it has no measuring instruments that can trace and record what happens to the subtle goings-on of these energy dynamics. Is this ever mentioned in science textbooks or models or theories? No. Because it would cause too much speculation. It would raise too many questions. It would make too many students question what Science is all about. It would make too many people doubt, and question Science itself.

Science does not want any of this to happen. Science wants zealous acolytes who are as blind and as unquestioning of their gospel as Catholics are unquestioning of the pope's edicts. If you ever try to press any scientifically informed person about this; they will try to laugh it off, or avoid the issue. And... and. Try to pretend. That fudging a universal constant is not really important! Besides; what else can they do? They have to fudge it. It's not their fault that atoms decay. They will never admit to you that they are hiding from their own scientifically known facts, and hiding all those truths from the public so nobody ever asks them any unpleasant questions.

One warning signal that always exposes liars is fake anger and outrage. So: if you push any person too far with any unpleasant questions, do not expect to get an honest answer out of them, and do not be surprised if they become hostile and hate you for asking them anything that makes them feel even the least bit uncomfortable. If you get an angry response, it will only tell you that you are on the right track... and should pursue your questioning elsewhere. People who have guilty secrets and secret knowledge will do anything to avoid answering any question directly and honestly.

The point is that Science has given the public an entirely false image of the Universe they live in. Science has attempted to portray literally everything in the Universe as mechanical, duplicated, replicated, repetitive cycles, structures, processes, forms, etc... when the exact opposite is true. Every cyclic process in the Universe, on any level, at any given moment, is different, unique, constantly changing: never ever the same... Never identical, never absolutely repetitive, never ever absolutely duplicated...period. Civilization is different. The imbalance of one-sided accumulation creates what we call: 'vicious cycles' that are frozen and do not change... as opposed to natural ones that do change.

One example of a vicious imbalanced cycle is the excessive need for protein in our diet. Why do we need so much protein? Because of accumulated pain-stress that comes from an imbalanced, unnatural lifestyle. This led our ancestors to hunt more to get more protein. Instead of being harmless gatherers of food like other apes, they became hunter-gatherers. This made them concentrate on developing better tools to hunt with. This led to the addiction of eating dead, protein-rich meat instead of still-living plants as a main source of protein. This led to hunters seeking out the most concentrated areas of wild life to hunt in. This led to humans living almost exclusively near wetlands, where more game abounded that were easier to hunt. This led them to ultimately settling down around these wetlands. This led to them raising staple crops to balance their imbalanced protein rich diet. This led to animal husbandry as the wild game was killed off. This led to a much higher level of protein imbalance in their diet needed to fight-sustain their higher stress levels from living a more imbalanced, sedentary, settled existence because they had accumulated too many people in one small area. This led to the vicious cycle of expanding civilized settlements spreading out over the entire planet. Thus creating higher concentrations of overpopulated areas, cities, more stress, more dietary need for protein, more animal husbandry... until we have ranchers in Brazil cutting down ancient rainforests to raise cattle for a few short years, exhausting the soil that was never designed to grow grass, and then moving on to destroy more rainforest, raise more cattle, for an ever-increasing population with an insatiable appetite for protein.

Another example of a vicious cycle is pain. What are the descriptive words used to describe pain? Pain either explodes, cuts, burns, aches, or throbs. When were these words first invented? When a human smashed a tool against their hand. When a human was cut by the tool they were using. When a human was burned by the fire they were using. When they developed a constant, unchanging pain in their muscles by living unnaturally, doing unnatural, repetitive motions using tools; so their muscles started to ache without getting better and healing because they insisted on repeating these unnatural repetitive motions every day, not allowing their bodies to heal naturally. When their inflamed muscles, their cuts, their smashed fingers, their burned hands pulsed with the blood being forced rhythmically through these damaged areas, producing a repetitive sensation of waves of pain, or: more pain, less pain... or:

The sensation of pain was never designed to be experienced endlessly, over and over again. It was designed to be an indication of imbalance that forces us to stop doing imbalanced things; so we will not experience that pain. The sensation of pain was never designed to be experienced endlessly, over and over again. It was designed to be an indication of imbalance that forces us to stop doing imbalanced things; so we will not experience that pain anymore. But we do not understand our own pain. We are overloaded with too much over-accumulated pain to be able to effectively deal with it, experience it and digest it fully. So we block out our pain, we repress it, suppress it, avoid it, deny it, ignore it, hide it, don't deal with it, etc... We do not even consider it unless it reaches crisis proportions: simply because we are numbed by too much pain. We ingest anything that will dull our pain, until we become addicted to these substances.

Addiction is merely a destructive, repetitive process that does not change or evolve as it goes on. Cocaine addiction works no differently than meat addiction except that Cocaine works faster, destroying the human psyche and body, while meat addiction takes half a lifetime to produce colon cancer. Workaholics are no different from alcoholics: they cannot change their repetitive behavior. We are all frozen into countless unchanging, addictive cycles called routines, norms, normalities, traditions, customs, cultures and religions. Some of them we recognize as being vicious, addictive and destructive. But most vicious cycles are not recognized as being destructive at all. Most human vicious cycles, and addictions are not recognized as being evil... simply because we are not of aware exactly how they work in any larger context. Our addiction to oil is driving us to destroy the entire planet. Putting gas into the tank of a car, to feed a machine with an insatiable addictive need for it... a machine whose appetite for gas never dissipates: is that considered to be a vicious cycle? An addiction? No. That is considered to be normal, non-addictive behavior. Even though our machines are addicted to all kinds of concentrated forms of energy like electricity, gas, oil, steam, heat, nuclear power plants, etc.

What is the glorious invention of the wheel? It is merely a non-changing circular motion by a dead, circular object. It is a repetitive, duplicated motion by an unchanging dead thing. No galaxy, no star, no planet, no eco-system, no animal ever repeats any of their cyclic processes without changing and evolving... except humans and their tools. The vicious cycle of the wheel exists only as a tool used by humans. The motion of the invented wheel is merely a way of producing a linear motion by repeating a circular motion linearly... easily in a repetitive, duplicated cycle. It is merely a way of not evolving, not going through the personal hardship needed for you to move something or yourself... without changing or learning anything. Humans never invented cyclic motion: we only found a way to stop it from changing. The mechanical wheel is designed to translate all motion-movement-traveling into the most meaningless energy possible... the most mindless, the stupidest, the most boring motion possible. Thus destroying all sense of wonder. Traveling linearly by wheels becomes boring. The most boring motion in the Universe is watching a mechanical wheel go around. All other orbiting cycles in the Universe change. Our mechanical orbits do not.

Any cyclic process that does not change and re-balance itself as it goes; becomes imbalanced. Our Earth's planetary orbit is continually changing and re-balancing itself as it orbits the sun; because all the other gravitational bodies in its vicinity are affecting it. However, a wheel that is used becomes imbalanced; it must be re-balanced periodically because it does not balance itself. That is because it is an artificial linear cyclic process. It is designed to ignore all bodies around it and under it, and travel in only one direction: regardless of the obstacles that may obstruct its path. In order to accommodate the wheel, humans have destroyed more land than they actually inhabit. The amount of land destroyed by cities is nothing compared to the acreage of land destroyed by building roads and highways to connect those cities... creating artificially smooth paths where a wheel can roll unobstructed. If you took away all the asphalt roads and streets inside any city that are designed and built only for machines, not humans: you would shrink the size and acreage of that city down to a fraction of its present size. A single blockage on a major road artery can paralyze an entire freeway system. Is that an efficient way to travel for a minority of humans who can afford such expensive vehicles? No. But it is done anyways... only not for the billions of poor who have no cars... and only if you destroy all the natural habitats of all other living creatures over a huge expanse of land where you are not even living.

The wheel is the cause of more destruction of our living planet than all the cities and towns, and farms, and factories combined. It is not an evolving cycle. It is a non-evolving vicious cycle of ecological destruction that has not even been considered to be an ecological hazard. Factories that spew toxic waste are denounced for their unthinking destruction of living organisms. But a road is regarded as a boon to all trade, all travel, all business... except when it cuts through your own habitat. Then citizens rise up in droves and fight against the march of progress through their neighborhoods. You think nothing of driving your car through national parks, but build a road through your own living room and will be horrified at the total destruction it causes. Is this selective view of the wheel, of roads sane? That is what linear functionality does: it forces people to develop insane, linear views regarding what is good or bad, useful or destructive. The linear use of the wheel is no exception to this principle.

Another example of a vicious cycle is something called circular logic. It literally mimics the exact function of a wheel. It follows a single linear path of tool-logic without ever deviating from it over and over... repeating itself, endlessly the same, duplicating itself, justifying itself, rationalizing itself... just as tools trained our ancestors to perform the same, identical motions of chipping away at a rock, they have trained our brains to perform numerous identical logic sequences over, and over: without ever deviating into any other possible way of thinking, or considering any other alternative paths of logic. Linear logic goes nowhere. All purely linear logic turns back upon itself: because it does not explore any other way of thinking or living. It does not use any comparative logic, it does not include more than one non-relative perspective.

Linear logic is the most mentally stifling and uncreative way of thinking possible. Yet it is used, duplicated, replicated, espoused, worshipped, revered, swallowed, believed, normalized, cauterized, etc... people use it to tie their shoes, people use it in scientific experiments, people use it in their religion. It is used in every routine, every habit, every repetitive action or thought-pattern, every addictive behaviour. It is used in what we eat, how we eat, what we wear, what we think, how we think.

We use the same implements in the same way eating: over, and over. We wear the same clothes in the same way: over, and over. We develop a habit of eating certain things and never try anything new. We develop an aversion to any comparison, any perspective, any exploration. We develop opinions and ideas that we refuse to change or even modify... even when all the scientific evidence tells us that what we think or do is unhealthy, irrational, pointless, and meaningless. Simply because we have developed the habit of circular logic in how we think-act-feel-eat-walk and live.

Vicious cycles can be demonstrated, proven, shown, and seen everywhere. The vicious cycles of pain/boredom/ unhappiness: not necessarily in that order, that creates cravings and addictions... which are only temporary ways of numbing-distracting-ejecting-projecting-reflecting the pain-boredom-unhappiness, and fade: only to leave the addict with the same craving, to use the same drug over and over again. The vicious cycles intrinsic in anything that accumulates, or destroys, or wastes: like the raw addiction for more power, the raw addiction for more profit, more wealth, more facts, more data, more information, more trivia... the addiction for more attention, more status, fame, notoriety... the addiction for more movies, more videogames, more meaningless distraction, more worshipping and obsession with celebrities. The addictions to working like a numbed machine, to not feeling emotions, not feeling your own body, not having your own thoughts, not having your own creativity... the addiction to other people's creativity. The addiction for oil and electricity. The addiction for an ever-increasing gross national product. The addiction to corporation mergers, monopolizing industries and businesses, the addiction to stock swindles, the addiction to instant profit, to lotteries, gambling, corporate takeovers, the insider trading of embezzled stock tips... the addiction to worshipping the greediest and most powerful as heroes... the addiction to belief systems, religions, dogmas, cults, cultures. The addiction to machines, gizmos, technology... the addiction to ever-increasing complexity, the addiction for anything that makes anything easier... the addiction and worship of sloth, obesity, the addiction to not thinking, the addiction to repetitive stupidity and the of v repetitive stupidity.

All vicious cycles function viciously and destructively because they are born from, and evolve out of the vicious, destructive, artificial human eco-system called civilization that is not connected to the natural eco-systems around it. The reason for this destructiveness is the one-sided separation of tools. There is no getting around this basic, fundamental truth. There is no way for civilization to exist without being fundamentally destructive towards everything inside it, and everything outside it. You can try to modify, or ameliorate its intrinsic destructiveness. But you will never be able to make that destructiveness go away unless civilization itself goes away forever and disappears from the face of the Earth it is systematically destroying.

Boredom

Boredom is one main part in the vicious cycles created by over-intensive tool-usage. Once you get an animal trained to repeat the same act, the same motions, the same process using tools; you end up destroying that animal's ability to adapt any other way. Once the repetitive making and use of tools became the main form of adapting and surviving and living for our ancestors, once their brains were programmed to function like tools functioned... hominid and human awareness began acting like a tool. Either it was being used three ways: physically, mentally or emotionally as a tool....

Or, it was turned off

That is the origin, root, and reason for our boredom. When we function like tools every day, we must stop all of our other human abilities, needs, desires, talents, aptitudes, and aspects. That in itself is stressful for us because our bodies, brains, and hearts were never designed to shut down and go into a suppressed state of non-activity. We have to wind up our suppressive process as we go through our specialized tool-functioning roles and push down all our other natural, genetic functions. But once we stop acting this way, we cannot instantly become a balanced, spontaneous, happy, aware person again. We have to wind down from all the stress of acting as tools all day.

The trouble is that it takes the same amount of time for our bodies to wind down from this tool-stress as it took for it to wind up for it. So, if you work for four hours digging with a shovel, or working on a computer: you need to wind down for four hours not doing only one thing. Only after that winding down process can you begin to be human again instead of a human-tool. But civilized societies do not recognize this or admit this. Civilized societies do not give you the time to wind down completely from being a machine all day. And they give you no time to spend just being human even after you have wound down completely. After work, after being a chore-driven house-wife who is enslaved to the needs of the house. After driving your children everywhere, feeding them, washing them, there is almost no time at all to wind down from all this stress. Until you end up winding up and winding down only into higher and lower levels of stress, without any true letup. Until this insane kind of machine-existence, this machine-stress becomes normalized... until it becomes the only condition of life many people are accustomed to.

What happens then, is whenever there is any free time for relaxing from this machine-stress... there is so much of it that people are barely human at all while they are winding down from their over-stressed lives. It would take months of relaxing and not working at all for them to ever begin to rebalance their over-worked lives into a saner format. But this never happens. Because the huge back-load of winding down time they have accumulated... the huge amount of time they need to turn off completely to get back to a saner form of awareness and perspective... bores them. So, they flee their own boredom and become busy, distracted, bouncing around wildly without any calm center.

Psychological studies have been done that seem to prove that literally: every known addiction; comes from the psychological stress-pain of emotional-mental-physical boredom. If you bother to study human behavior, you will find that almost all human motivation has two basic conditions: on and off. Our off-motivation is called boredom. It determines why we do almost everything we do when we are not forced to function as tools. What has never been fully understood or focused on, or studied is the pain of boredom. Look at how people act when they start to get bored. They get restless, uneasy... What do people do to avoid boredom?... Whatever is handy, whatever they can, in any way they can. They simply cannot endure this kind of pain. Humans are not designed to endure inactivity except in a context, condition and environment that does not exist in civilization. Civilization does not even admit that boredom is painful. Civilization only recognizes the on condition of humans. As long as humans are functioning as tools: they have a right to exist. Once they stop functioning as tools, they become useless in the eyes of their societies. Try being on all the time, try working all the time without being off: and you will go insane and have a nervous breakdown. Civilization does not want to admit this half-human necessity of all humans needing to be off. It tries to load people with more and more work... more and more tool-functioning... until the masses rebel and demand shorter work-hours. Now civilization is smarter. It addicts people to affluent lifestyles and then makes it necessary for people to overwork themselves to afford their own supposed affluence. Which they have no time to enjoy since they have to work all day and never take any time off.

The point is, that boredom is a result of over-intensive tool-use, and work. It is the inevitable painful backlash of not living humanely. It is the result of existing, and functioning mechanically inside a boring artificial environment full of machines.

How do you change this vicious civilized cycle?

Simple. Instead of work being the number one priority of all civilized societies: make fun the number one priority. Fuck all work. Unless it is so essential, that you have to do it. Put all work at the bottom of your priority list instead of at the top. Put all fun things at the top. Only first, you need to go through your boredom completely. You have to get used to doing nothing. And not escape the pain of doing nothing. Only when you can do nothing without feeling pain, can you start to be human again and start to have fun creatively. Only then can you begin to create your own fun without needing a videogame, a computer, a car or a machine, to have fun. With. All humans need to heal their boredom-pain, and they need to heal their work-pain. Both need to be healed so there is no boring work and no backlash to collapse into deadness after that boring work... but only fun. Then after having so much fun...if you are exhausted... it is actually pleasant... enjoyable to relax and do nothing, think nothing, feel nothing... just 'be' in balance, at peace... and you feel energized, happy, and upbeat. You aren't really tired at all. And you recover your energy almost immediately instead needing hours and days to recuperate from being drained of all your energy.

However: all of these conditions of human awareness are only different aspects that exist in the larger context of Pure Wonder. Because whether you are having fun, or relaxing, or doing nothing, or thinking, or acting, or feeling... your sense of Pure Wonder should be ever-present as the main current to all of your awareness. All being, all relaxing, fun, creativity, love, humaneness, comes from Pure Wonder. Pure wonder is the primal source of all the different aspects of our human awareness... not our tool-awareness. Our tool-awareness is only a form of non-awareness, numbed, distracted, mechanical superficiality: and it is the cause of all our boredom.

How can you get rid of all human addictions?

Get rid of all boredom.

What are some basic causes of boredom? Repetition. Replication. Sameness. Identity. Duplication. Conformity. Oppression. Suppression. Fear. Hate. Greed. Addiction. Ease. In other words: tools, work, machines: civilization.

How can you get rid of repetition? By getting rid of all mass manufacturing, all machines that duplicate sounds and images, all work that requires repetitive motion and repetitive functions, all machines that duplicate the written word, all technology that depends on duplication and repetition, all customs, traditions habits that force people to repeat the same mindless things endlessly without change, by getting rid of human civilization. Live creatively every day. Do something different every minute. Never repeat anything.

Ooops. Civilization is based upon Repetition. Civilization is based upon the Duplication, Replication, Preservation and Perpetuation of Dead Things. Tools force you to repeat the same things almost identically every day. That's why you're bored.

So; how do you get rid of boredom? Get rid of tools. Get rid of civilization.

But we love our tools. We love civilization.

That is the problem. You have to make a choice. You can't have both.

What do you love more? Boredom; or fun and creativity? Tools and machines; or living things? What do you love more? What you are addicted-to now? Or do you want a new way of living have never experienced?

Profit

The primary aim of all business is to make a profit. Without a profit, no business can exist. Business is based upon profit. Despite the lip service about any other cultural-ethical-moral values, or priorities: none of them are more important than profit.

This obvious truth belies all of the selective exceptions to the rule. Hewlett Packard may treat some of its employees slightly better than other companies, it may support various charities and community programs: but only for its own workers. That expenditure is only a tiny fraction of its revenue. Where does the bulk of their revenue come from? It comes from selling cheap printers and then selling the owners of those printers; exorbitantly expensive refill cartridges. Of all the millions of printers they sell around the world, of all the profit they get from sucking wealth out of all of these communities that use their printers and over-expensive print cartridges; how much of that wealth does Hewlett Packard return to the communities they suck money out of?

Zero

How much of that money. Never mind the profit. Is plowed back where it came from?

The answer of course is; none of it.

They may be involved in the few communities where their own factories are situated: but that in no way comes close to any equitable sharing of wealth or profit with their consumer-base where the money actually comes from. There are no exceptions to this financial truth about Capitalism. Somewhere down the reverse pile of pyramidal wealth, somebody has to pay for the wealth that is reaped and accumulated at the top. Wealth is not magically created out of thin air, it has to come from somewhere; it is produced by people. Any system based upon profit, is merely a system for taking that wealth away from others; and accumulating it and concentrating it.

The oldest pyramid scheme ever invented is the concept of profit. In order to have more than you yourself produce and already have: you need to get it from somebody else. Profit is by definition a pyramidal system of accumulation. If every person made the exact same amount of profit as everybody else, then it could no longer be considered a profit. Then nobody would profit. Then it would merely be a barter system of equal trade and exchange. You can only make a profit if you make more money than someone else.

It is only in recent historic times that the primary way of acquiring wealth has changed from war, raiding, conquering, to a mainly commercial avenue of legalized stealing-profit-taxation. There is no magic in this: even with the use of tools, there is only so much any one person can produce. Profit creates imbalances between what people actually produce and what they actually have. The basic reason for the uneven distribution of all the wealth in civilization is profit. But because most effects of profit are incremental, and passed on: it is not examined closely. Only the largest and most massive misuse of imbalanced accumulation of money like the Rockefellers is ever even looked at... and that is only looked at mildly, as a slight excess of normal human greed.

Yet, any accumulation of money or wealth is only a matter of degree. The root dynamic and effect is the same whether it is a profit of one penny or 1 billion dollars. It is still an accumulation. And nobody looks at the accumulated effect of all the small imbalances caused by profit... even though this totality of accumulated imbalances gives you all of the crushing problems of poverty, starvation, crime, drug-use, etc...

No matter how you structure it: in order for there to be a profit, there must be a majority who are on the losing end of this process. As a general example today, there are the rich nations whose populations number in the millions and the poor nations whose populations number in the billions. The fallout of any profit system is hidden in countless ways. Its costs are carefully not attributed to the system itself, but given general, meaningless labels: such as: underdevelopment, poverty, corruption, crime, starvation, child labor, sweatshops. But if you trace how all profit works... if you trace who profits and how much they profit: then it becomes blatantly obvious why there are such things as poverty, crime, starvation and human suffering. As long as the desire for profit is stronger than the desire to give: the inequity between the haves and the have-nots will continue to exist. Capitalism will always be a success for the rich minority and a failure for the poor majority. Unfortunately, the rich become an ever-smaller minority, while the poor become an ever-greater majority. The new twist on this myth today is that if the rich become filthy rich, then some small pittance might trickle down to the poor and slightly benefit them also.

This idea only sprang up because of industrialization tool-wealth multiplying so fast that the old pyramidal system began overflowing since those at the top simply could not suck up all of that enormous excess. The dream of industrial affluence is now being chased by all of humanity. But of course, that is physically impossible. Neither china, nor India can ever hope to match the consumer glut of affluence that the west now enjoys.

Unfortunately, this myth is the functioning principle of all modern civilized commerce. And today it has become the dominant cultural value of all tool-societies. Why? Because people are physically better off in a wealthy industrialized nation than in a poor, non-industrialized nation. But this relative advantage does not address the root of any inequity: be it in an industrialized or non-industrialized country. Social justice and equity can only come about by a lack of profit... or at least, the degree of profit being equal for all parties. But when you have one person profiting a thousand-fold, and another profiting not at all: you get injustice and unfairness. As long as someone is profiting at somebody else's expense, as long as there is any imbalance in the pyramidal structure of profit, there can be no justice or equity.

One reason why the arbitrary market value of things are never questioned is because if they were; each person would have to uphold, justify, and rationalize how much they charge for any goods or services. If you are allowed to question the monetary value of anything...mostly meaning how much profit anyone makes. You would have total conflict and chaos... each person would justify their profit-margins as reasonable, and attack any whose profit margin is greater than theirs as unjust. Not until the profit motive itself is eradicated or at least controlled, can there ever be any such thing as a truly happy, harmonious state of human existence in the world. The profit motive runs like a bloodline of inner corruption throughout civilized history. To this day, most crimes can be traced to some kind of profit motive. Without the profit motive, most crimes would never have been committed. Without the profit motive: most injustices would never have happened. Without the profit motive: most wars would never have been fought.

There is a popular notion that if technology explodes fast enough, if people have so much machine-tool wealth: eventually even the billions of poor will somehow benefit from this trickle-down effect of excess... This is nothing more than the lip-service myth of charity, which all the rich and affluent keep spouting. The idea that technology, tool-wealth is the only way we can solve the human problems of greed, hate, inequity, etc., is a complete and total fallacy. The poor want to believe it. They need to believe it. Because if they do not: then their lives are hopeless. Then their struggle to improve their lot becomes pointless. Then the only other hope, the only other alternative is bloody revolution and killing and death, and hate and violence, or resignation, and suicide.

Whenever the poor in the third world try to stand up: not against their oppressors, just for themselves, when they try to improve their own lot, when they are too well off, when they are not sufficiently brainwashed or corrupt: they are butchered, and killed and raped. Their towns are razed to the ground. Their leaders are hunted down and killed and tortured and executed. Until the poor ignorant, leaderless masses become even more brutalized and more impoverished, and live under harsher oppressions, and worse conditions. Until they live their lives mostly in a state of continual abject fear, hopelessness, passivity, resignation, ignorance, illiteracy, humbleness... with their self-esteem so destroyed, their psyches so damaged and so brutalized; that they become easy victims for even worse oppressions and degradations and suffering... as the quality of their lives disintegrate into even worse squalor, filth, and Ignorance. Repeating these endless vicious cycles for hundreds, and even thousands of years. But all that had changed. They have a new god. They have a new hope. Rather than commit suicide. Rather than live lives of utter hopelessness. They cling to the only creed, the only rationale, the only belief that promises them hope: no matter how false those promises are. What is the only hope that is supposed to relieve the suffering of the poor?

Money. Affluence. Wealth.

Not love. Not cooperation. Not self-sufficient-communities. Not self-sufficiency. Not humane values. Not communal living. Not communal values. Not togetherness.

Billions of poor believe that their only hope is money. Their parents work their fingers bloody, and slave all their lives, just to give their children a financially easier life. They pin all their hopes on their children. Their children now must succeed at all costs. This puts an unbearable burden of guilt, responsibility, and unfairness on their children. Because if their children do not become better off physically; then it means not only that their lives have been wasted... but the lives of their self-sacrificing parents have been wasted in vain also. So their children live every second of their lives with the guilt of having destroyed their parent's lives because their parents sacrificed their happiness and lived miserable lives just so the children could be more affluent. The few, rare, lucky children who manage to escape the old vicious cycles of poverty, oppression, powerlessness, those who immigrate and live in industrialized cities...

They find their old way of living, gone, their old cultures and values and ethics and community gone. And are forced to live by new rules of total insulated selfishness, and become normalized to a completely new kind of inhumanity. The inhumanity of unfeeling, numbed, coldness, instead of the inhumanity of burning hot weeping pain. The inhumanity of living amongst uncaring indifferent strangers instead of close, intimate, poor, fellow sufferers... all searching for the happiness of an easier life to escape their poverty. But if their affluence increases: are they happier? Are they any better off?

What is gained and what is lost? Are they running towards something, or are they running away from something? They are running away from their problems. They are running away from their responsibilities. Their immigration is a confession of hopelessness and resignation. Their flight is also their fear of fighting and struggling against the stacked deck and oppression and suffering that they see as being impossible to overcome.

If any oppressed majority, in any third world country had the intelligence and courage to unite as single people; who are oppressed under a single united commonality of their own common humanity: they could tear down their ruling class so fast that the entire civilized World would go into shock.

Only... then every rich country in the world would then in reaction...unite against them: and wipe that country off the face of the Earth.

But... At least then, it would for once polarize all humans; and force us to take a clear moral and ethical position. For once it would clarify things. Who are you for, and who are you against?

Are for the rich? Or are you for the poor?

Do you support rich nations, or do you support poor nations?

Do you support representational governments, or do you support military dictatorships?

Do you support rich international corporations, or do you support small local businesses?

Do you support rich powerful national armies with nuclear bombs, or

Do you support poor weak national armies without nuclear bombs?

Do you support the rich billionaires and millionaires of the world, or

Do you support the poor starving oppressed billions of the world?

Do you worship and adore rich superstars and star athletes and movie stars and presidents?

Or do you adore and love the poor, honest, selfless, kind, unknown, powerless people?

Do you want the safety, security, working for a big established company, or government, or religion, or big financial establishment?

Or do you prefer the unsafe, insecure freedom of working for yourself?

One reason why most of the poor in the world find their only hope by fleeing their own countries is that they see no way to change the unendurable inequality of the status quo in their own less fortunate countries. What is that but a cop-out? What is that but treason to your own fatherland? What is that but worshipping and flocking to the Richest Nations? If all poor people stayed in their poor countries: they would at least polarize the inhumanity and unfairness of the global system of politics so clearly; that rich people in richer countries would not be able to live with their own conscience. Then there would be less hypocrisy in politics, and more honest hate, more honest injustice, more honest inhumanity. What is international immigration but an attempt to even out the uneven wealth of civilized Nations? Which the nations refuse to do? What is immigration but an attempt by poor people to become equally as wealthy as rich people? What is international immigration but voting with your feet? Why don't all of the poor people living in poor countries move to the rich countries? But here is where the obvious hypocrisy comes in.

Oh. Now we can't have that now... can we? If all the poor people came into our rich country why then.... Then we'd be poor too. Oops. Can't have that. We have to have emigration laws. We have to have quotas. One poor person in a million can emigrate out of poverty. That we can tolerate. You need money to move. If you have no money: you can't emigrate in the first place. Only rich people are allowed to be upwardly mobile. We can't allow poor people to be mobile at all now: can we? Make all legal emigration and immigration between rich and poor countries exclusive, expensive, limited, and controlled, by stringent bureaucratic rules and quotas. Problem solved. This way the really poor people don't have a hope in hell of ever emigrating into richer countries.

Just who are these immigrants who are immigrating out of poor countries? Most of them are among the richest people in those countries; who want to become even richer. They are the greediest humans on earth. And... their greed is a secret. It is a secret religion which they never speak of. Only the rich can travel. Only the rich can emigrate out of their poor countries. Only the rich in those countries can bribe the officials to give them the necessary documents. Only the rich in those poor countries, and those in power; can pull the strings necessary to get visas and passports. Only the rich have enough money to immigrate to richer countries and set up businesses which will make them even richer. So you have a continual influx of the richest people from the poorest countries constantly moving to even richer countries... a constant flow of increasing, accumulating unspoken venal corruption. But what about the actual poor? The billions of poor? They do not have a chance. They go nowhere. They stay where they are because they are not rich enough to travel period. This is the hypocrisy of our civilized system which pays lip-service to upwards mobility, while denying it to the ones who need it most.

Technology, Capitalism, Democracy: none of these aspects of civilization have the slightest hope or chance of fundamentally changing how all the world's people live. Rich countries exist only at the expense of poor countries. All you have to do is follow the money; and study how the profit system works. The profits made by the rich corporations, the rich nations, the rich industries, and rich individuals have to come from somewhere; and that somewhere is the underdeveloped nations, the masses, the workers, and the consumer. This model cannot be changed by any small dribble of charity. When the lion's share always goes to the top of any pyramidal structure: the result of inequity and imbalance is unavoidable.

Every human act that was ever done to get that extra dollar, every human decision that was ever made to get that contract, to make that sale or purchase; goes to create a system that forces human existence to be based mostly upon self-interest and selfishness. It is the accumulation of each individual act that results in the totality of this condition of human society. By squeezing nearly most of human energy into the narrow confines of business and greed... Nothing else is allowed to flourish. With the increasing grip that our own tools have over our lives; the human qualities of honesty, courage, love, and wonder slowly fade into disuse and atrophy with the passage of time. By forcing most human actions and motivations to be profit-based, and profit oriented; you get a dehumanized society. Then, human issues in every industrialized nation are looked at, and dealt with purely in a context of productivity. On how to get the population to be the best, the most productive wage slaves, tool-slaves possible. Not on how to produce the most loving-caring-humane people.

The message is obvious; before you can become a civilized human, before you can become humanized in civilized terms: you must first become a complex, sophisticated tool, or wage slave. Being a successful tool is much more important than being a successful human. And these two value systems are in total conflict with each other. As long as people focus most of energy and existence into a narrow, mechanical value-base; as long as the human race stays enslaved to its tools: it will never discover the untapped potential of its own creativity and humanity.

One problem with the profit motive is that anything that is creatively new and fresh quickly gets commercialized into mass mediocrity. This is mostly a result of duplication. If you duplicate one creative idea and sell it to millions; you have effectually prevented any other diversity from springing up: much like a single weed can overcome, choke to death and destroy the natural diversity of different plants that would otherwise flourish. As a result; every new creative idea, every creative impulse, movement, is taken over and not allowed to fully develop due to the poisoning of its original intent, integrity and vision by commercialism. Until our commercial culture preys on every new fad, taste, or creative expression and absorbs it so fast that there is no ongoing creative movement or process alive outside of its domain... all so it can duplicate one of them as many times as possible to make as much money as possible. Creativity is free; it doesn't cost anything. And unless it is allowed the freedom to develop for free without being corrupted by excessive profit, excessive greed and excessive mass marketing: creativity itself is killed at its root and cannot grow. Once any kind of creativity becomes monetarily valued; once people start to accumulate it... it becomes glorified, worshipped selectively, with only the topmost being valued and focused on. All profit is based upon some kind of advantage over others. You cannot make a profit without teaching and training people in lifelong, adversarial, corrupt, practices of secrecy, mistrust, greed and competition.

The only way you can rationalize profit: is as a form of mutual robbery. As I said before, and this warrants repeating: human spiritual corruption is necessary for the survival of civilization. Civilization cannot survive without human spiritual corruption. The point I am trying to make is that regardless of splitting stones or atoms: we as a species are not doing anything more intelligently than the first tool-using apes did. We are still doing the same thing they did: only in more sophisticated, refined, and abstract ways.

Even if a person wants to be useful, the pyramidal competitiveness of capitalism only allows that person to be primarily useful as a machine: not as a human. Moreover: people must fight against each other just to have the privilege of working, of being mechanically useful. If a person is not greedy enough, has no interest in fighting-struggling-striving, does not want to be rich, is not good at business: they are by civilized standards, automatically defined as failures. In civilization, it is not enough for humans to just want to live and be useful. They must compete against each other continually as antagonists; they must become ambitious. Anyone who fails to struggle and compete is in the eyes of civilization a failure, because they do not accomplish anything. Civilized humans do not understand that it is actually possible to live without this kind of pressure... And that you can live happily without struggling to accumulate or succeed.

The effect of accelerating technology on humans in recent times has been to turn everything into a race: a race against time, a race against others, speeding around until you get into a state of stress from too much busyness and from the inability to relax. Everybody is racing faster and faster, trying to keep up with the constant evolution and innovation of tools. However, this race has nothing to do with developing your humanity or being human: it has to do with tools dictating human existence. If you look at every major social malaise from pollution to traffic jams, from urban glut to overpopulation, from corporate monopolies to bureaucracy, you'll find that the dynamic is the same: accumulation.

The lower the pile of any pyramidal-hierarchical accumulation in any human society, the less inequality, unfairness, and imbalance there is; the less people make a profit. The higher up you go, the higher your profit. The less inequity there is between the top and the bottom, between the richest and poorest, the more evenly things are distributed, the more evenly all power-wealth-status-knowledge is distributed; the better life is for everybody; not just a privileged elite. Any social model or business model works better the more it is based on a cooperative basis. A perfect example is the 30-year track record of the Mondragon Cooperative in central Spain.

The problem with any cooperative effort is that it has been invariably corrupted by the dominant 10,000 yr-old hierarchical structure of civilization. Witness Marx's idea-book of replacing all hierarchy with a communal model: and how the so-called Marxists corrupted that idea and transformed it into a brutal, fascist, totalitarian state that was even more pyramidal, even more imbalanced, even more unfair than the capitalist model. The Marxists used the lip-service dogma of communism to concentrate more power at the top than any hierarchy including Capitalism. The Marxist government accumulated almost the total power of their society at the top. Instead of a communal society: they became known as a totalitarian society because their government held total power over everything and everyone. Yet uneducated idiots still think Lenin's Marxism, and Stalin's Totalitarian State; was based upon communism. In fact: the word itself cannot be used anymore... much less the idea behind it. By Stalin adopting the word; "Communism" as a label for the Bolshevik's less civilized brand of systematic butchery and dehumanization. The historical legacy of the Marxist-Leninist dogma which is based upon the idea of small independent communities was totally reversed. The idea of small independent communities was reversed into an attempt at world domination by centralized power through every subversive, sly underhanded lying tactic possible... including trying to overpower all of the other capitalistic superpowers with an even worse brands of military dictatorship than the West supported... The result is today, the word; Communism instead of representing the idea of small self-sufficient communities represents everything that is corrupt and vile. In effect, the Russian and Chinese Marxists successfully poisoned the idea of a cooperative, communal society as a viable alternative to our present model to such an extent that the words; commune, or communism, or anything that is communal in nature is automatically rejected and sneered at as an already proven failure which is a total lie. Russia was never a communist state. It was a totalitarian State of total centralized power: not a state of small self-sufficient independent communities. The Russians tried to export Totalitarianism under the guise of politically brainwashing fervent haters of Capitalism with its glib bullshit phrases. They exported it into China. Thinking to subvert Chinese revolutionaries, and take over their revolution from the inside. As they had done with the Russian revolutionaries. But they were too late. Mao Tse Tsung had already gained power over his followers. He already understood how to use the lies and political rationalizations of revolutionary dogma arbitrarily for his own advantage. He became even more of a Marxist than the Russian Marxists. He out-Stalined Stalin in his brutality and centralization of power. Both Stalin's USSR and Mao's China were totalitarian centralized states: the complete opposite of independent autonomous Communes. The USSR and China after WW2 were the worst forms of civilized centralized power ever to emerge and kill and starve and dehumanize millions of people on a mass scale of centralized inefficiency and stupidity. Yet history still calls these two monsters of centralized evil; 'communists'. They still call the USSR, and China 'communist' states. When they were the complete anathema, the complete opposite of communal communism.

Israel used a system of communes successfully to establish their colonization of hostile territory... They got away with it. Why? Because they used the older Jewish term for it: and called their communes: 'Kibbutz's', instead of communes. If they had tried to use the word communism instead of the word kibbutzim... they would have been attacked by the West as dirty, filthy Communists, and their Nation would never have gained the support of the West.

Communism was attempted in America in the 1960's and 70's where hippies tried to create communal ways of living. Only... they were so woefully ignorant of what it takes to create and sustain a successful close-knit community. They were already so completely brainwashed and corrupted by their consumer culture of instant gratification and ease. They had no self-discipline, no wisdom and no experience in how to live this way successfully. The Jews had. They had been living inside communistic ghettos for thousands of years. They knew what worked, and what did not work. But the American youth during the 60's and 70's were already corrupted by their own drug culture and their own greed and their own affluence. As a result: their attempts of hippy communal living, did not last long. Eventually; the hippy generation sold out to the culture of corporate consumerism, and was replaced by the 'me' generation. Their failed attempt of unselfish living created a powerful backlash of reactionary selfishness that is still in Vogue today in America

The abysmal failure of alternative ways of living has always been the rationalized excuse for people to laugh at even the idea of changing the society they live in. However... people do not want to admit that the reason all experimental societies fail is because of the greater context it exists in: civilization. Civilization does not tolerate any other kind of alternate human lifestyle to co-exist peacefully alongside with it. Civilization has stamped out all other kinds of alternate cultures, values, and societies that were ever attempted and came into contact with. All of the early attempts at alternative societies in America were attacked and corrupted. The Mormons had to flee to the deserts of Utah. The Quakers had to hold secret meetings in friend's houses. The Puritans were quickly corrupted by their own work ethic and by their own greed. They became materialists instead of spiritualists and only worshipped dead things, dead materials... that could not be corrupted because they were supposed to hold an unchanging utility and usefulness, and value, and worth for them.

Trying to start, create, and maintain any alternative culture against a dominant culture is not only hard: but almost impossible. You not only have to struggle and work to create and maintain your own culture. But you also have to vigilantly fight against the majority culture to keep it from seeping in. You have to fight against all the outer peer pressure of the greater society your culture lives in, the entire consumer-capitalist-governmental- bureaucratic-cultural-religious powers forces, influences and presence... that will seep into your community as sure as air seeps into your house.

The idea of any kind of cooperative commune, communal lifestyle, or community, or 'communism' has been almost completely wiped out by capitalism. The word hippy is used disparagingly to mean a freewheeling, lazy, bunch of druggies. The word and idea of any kind of commune has been stuck onto the word hippy and typecast to mean a completely unrealistic lifestyle that is not only obsolete, but also laughable. As a result, today the word: commune is barely ever used except in a derogatory fashion. The concept of cooperation is barely ever used. Presently: it is making a minor comeback because businesses are finding out that they can compete better when their corporate infrastructure functions more cooperatively. Nobody points out the obvious hypocritical dichotomy of cooperating to gain an advantage over others. The concept of cooperation, of any communal social model has been corrupted ever since the tribal us-them mentality was first created by the first overpopulation of nomadic hunters clashing for the best watering holes and hunting grounds, and food sources. Culturally and humanly, we have not evolved past this point for at least 30,000 years.

Civilization... all civilized ways of living, all civilized culture, all civilizations are and have been and will always be purely systems where people can get some kind of advantage over everything and anything they can... you will never have any kind of cooperative society as long as it is structured for the purpose of getting an advantage over others and over the Earth and all the living things on it. We have been inculcated into the religion of advantage; we have been trained to seek advantages. From the cradle to the grave: every civilized human has been taught and trained to seek some kind of advantage over anything they possibly can.

Even after death, this obsession has sucked the resources of every civilized society that ever existed. Every elite class of ruler of every civilized society up until just recently; has poured most of their nation's wealth into tomb building, statue building, pyramid-tomb building. Many early civilized tribes erected huge, time-wasting enormous earthen mounds for their dead tribal kings and nobility. Just so their dead kings could get and preserve some kind of imaginary advantage over the lower classes after death. Others erected huge stone monoliths that wasted even more energy and work and time.

There is no possible way to make any civilized human realize how corrupted they have become by breathing in this brainwashed assumption from birth. That it is perfectly okay to spend your entire life working on, building, and creating dead things. As well try to tell a coal miner who was born in a mine and never in his life ever came out, and never saw the sun, and never saw flowers, and never breathed fresh air that there is a better way of living than inside a coal mine. There is no possible way any civilized person can ever understand their own civilization unless they live in another kind of society that is not civilized and is not structured for advantage. Only when humans create different ways of living that are not based upon advantage, and compare those ways of living to the advantage model will humans ever be able to determine for themselves if their open civilized way are worth keeping. All civilized systems of advantage are based upon the dynamic of accumulation. The more accumulation you have, the more imbalanced that accumulation gets.

The basic principle of accumulation holds true for profit also. This principle determines the effects of all profit. The more profit you have, the more corruption. The less profit you have the less corruption. The removal of excess profit from any profession or career also removes the corruption of excess greed. How many people would become lawyers if they could only make 20$ an hour as a lawyer? How many people would become doctors if they could only make 10$ an hour as a doctor? The answer is: only those who are honestly motivated to help others. Only those whose primary motive is not their own selfishness. Once you remove the excess motive of greed and the excess reward of profit-wealth; you can free yourself of those corruptions and can develop a passion for your work by enjoying the satisfaction of actually helping another person.

The business world is filled with initial success stories that are due to customers receiving more than they expected from people who deliver a better service or product. But since all business is based upon competition and advantage, in order to be a success, in order to make a profit, you must find a way to exploit resources and people. By robbing Peter to pay Paul, this destroys the dynamic of giving more than receiving; and it corrupts any passion people may have for their work. No true passion can come from selfishness, advantage, competition, antagonism, greed, or wealth. The passions of the ego: the passion for advantage, winning, success, greed, wealth, are all false, fake, temporary, fleeting tool-passions that do not include or develop ones humanity. In order to profit from others, in order to gain any kind of advantage over others, you must in some way, on some level; deal with other people inhumanly and unfeelingly. Profit is one major reason why envy, greed, fear, hate, antagonism, coldness, selfishness, indifference, and inhumanity exist inside civilization. Profit is basically the principle of accumulation expressed in terms of human greed... always wanting more... never being satisfied with what you have, never being happy, never being at peace with yourself or the world you live in. It is the essence of inequity. Without profit: there would be no rich or poor people. If the entire monetary system of world commerce were based upon the exchange of goods and services without one cent of profit, then the accumulation of all wealth would be equally distributed amongst all humans would be equally wealthy.

The root culture of civilization is tool dominant: it is dedicated to increasing the gross national product of every country on earth. It is a mechanical system dedicated to the use, production, flourishing, growth, increase, and accumulation of machines, dead things: not living things. Balancing tool-energy by removing profit does not change the fact that in order to produce dead things, you must destroy living things. To produce newspaper you must kill trees... to dig mines, pave roads, drill for oil, build cities, dams, factories, or highways; you must destroy natural landscapes, ecosystems, watersheds, rivers, lakes, oceans.

If the excess greed of profit were removed from all civilized culture, it would reduce the dehumanizing effect of living in a competitive, antagonistic, profit-oriented culture. As one graffiti artist wrote on the sidewalk: "greed everyday, takes your love away." And if all people were less greedy, less obsessed with always wanting more: they might start loving each other more instead of trying to take advantage of each other... they might start loving the planet they live on instead of destroying it with the cold, inhuman, brutal efficiency of the machines they love so much and use. Profit is only one symptom of the one-sided tool dynamic of separation-segmentation-accumulation. Only by reducing and removing all of these symptoms, especially overpopulation, can you hope to reverse the destructive effect civilization has on this living earth. But you cannot do that without completely exposing and invalidating the corrupt dynamic and effect of profit.

But the issue of profit, the question of profit, the questions and issues of degrees and levels of profit... which industry has which percentage return of profit. How much is charged, what the profit is, whether it is considered fair or excessive... why one person profits hugely while others lose... why there are different levels of profit, why different people, different industries, have different prices. None of this is examined or questioned. Poor starving workers worship their idols, their singers, rock stars, movie stars, sports stars, and never question their right to make millions of dollars of easy profit. Why? Because underneath it all, underneath all the social divides; civilized people share a single, common, universal ethic of greed and envy and snobbery.

But... if this ethic is universal: then why don't people use it to bring everybody together? Why don't civilized people proudly publicize this single universal ethic? Why is this ethic never spoken of? Why is it never faced or discussed? Except among those who are in desperate need, and receiving no help from those more fortunate: accuse them of their greed? But never look at their own levels of greed... because their level of greed is less. Why is the universal ethic of greed the most unspoken, assumed, silent tacit understanding and assumption of all civilized people? Because nobody thinks that they are too greedy...? That they are just as greedy, just as needy as the next person? Because nobody is proud of being greedy?

But that is all changing. Now, America is the most powerful Nation on Earth... and the proudest. Pride goes with power. It is one of the countless connected effects as one corruption creates a multitude of other corruptions. Now it is the proudest Nation on Earth... and the Greediest. Pride-wealth-greed-power-stupidity-laziness, etc are all part of the same corruptive process. And it is proud of its greed. It exports Pride of Greed with their game shows and advertising and media everywhere. American culture is the most widely exported, most widely consumed, most widely mimicked Culture on Earth. The only reason it is so popular; is that it is at least honest enough to be blatantly proud of its greed. Americans are proud of their greed. They think greed is the best thing in the world. Except for a few game shows and government lotteries... ah, er, um... you find that no American is willing to speak of their own greed to another person. Greed is a very personal thing. It is kept secret. People never let other people know how greedy they actually are... If they did they would be attacked, and hated. So any actual mention of it simply does not exist in American society.

Older cultures having any remnants of shame concerning any greed, any teachings of the evils of greed, are automatically being cast aside as being out-of-date and old-fashioned nonsense. The trouble is: nobody bothers to evaluate these older cultures to find out just which aspects should be preserved, and which ones should be thrown away. Civilization has finally found its one Universal Globalizing single-common ethic, its universal culture. Just as Ancient Rome was the example of Universal Greed; now the American culture of Crony Capitalism and its Consumer Culture; is being exported everywhere else, and is catching on like wildfire. Only nobody questions the spread of Capitalism, nobody questions their own increasing level of profit, or their own increasing Greed.

There are countless code-words for greed. 'Let the buyer beware.' 'Whatever the market will stand.' 'Laissez faire.' ... 'Tanstaffl.' ... 'Globalism...' But no honest ones. The universal ethic of all civilized people is one based upon silence, secrecy, deception, self-justification, self-rationalization, self-delusion, dishonesty, avoidance, etc...

The entire legal basis of advantage that modern corporations have been able to wring out of the various corrupt political and legislative bodies has been the mistaken, untrue, false belief that the Supreme Court of the United States gave Corporations the legal rights of 'personhood'. This never actually happened. But the corrupt Supreme Court managed to give the false impression that it did... by the corrupt judge in charge of the case; writing lying, false notes; which did not condense the essence of the case. In this case his notes did not condense the case. He wrote fiction. He wrote his own fictional wishes. Which every corporate Lawyer and corrupt judge has taken as actual Law. Just as Aristotle's insane, total lying fiction of 'The Republic' was taken as a sane, rational goal-ideal to make concrete.

Since then... that illegal, false precedent has been taken up as a sacred text... and has been interpreted to mean that corporations, or any business, or corporate entity is regarded by the Law as a human being. With all the rights of a living-breathing human being. Corporations have used this clause from everything such as refusing to allow the EPA to inspect its factories because they were violating the corporation's right of personal privacy to not being required to pay any indemnity for lost wages because the corporation could declare bankruptcy... even when it still had billions of dollars worth of stock, real estate, machinery, etc...

The advantage of a corporation gaining the same status as a living person is obvious: this gives every corporation... or rather: to put it into the proper legal term: every corporate entity. The total freedom to commit any crime they want to, and never have to worry about being jailed. Why? Because you can't jail a corporation. You can't haul a corporate entity into court; you can't force a corporate entity to obey any law... because there is no legal way you can enforce an abstract, legal, hocus-pocus, imaginary creation to obey anything. Since a corporate entity is not a living entity... it cannot discern the difference between right and wrong, good and bad, or legal and illegal. Even if you could haul it into court. What are you going to do? Ask the charter document of the corporation, a bunch of paper, questions. Ask a piece of paper; if it knows the difference between right and wrong... Huh? Put those pieces of paper into jail. Punish them. Burn them. Shoot the papers. Hang the papers from a tree. Huh?

However... these pieces of paper, as far as the U.S. Courts and all international laws are concerned, are just as human as you are.

If you want to become educated in how to be a criminal: create a corporation. Running a corporation is an education in criminal behavior. People in who start corporations learn how to make money by evading taxes. They learn graft, influence peddling, money laundering, and all of the other semi-legal and illegal necessities to running a corporation. The learning curve of running a corporation is the learning curve of a criminal education. Running a corporation is an education in criminality. Once you create a corporation: you find much to your surprise, that you cannot be punished personally. You find that you can do almost anything you want to, and get away with it. Then you find all of the tax loopholes, all of the illegal practices, all of the unethical procedures that are standard practice of all corporations. Then you find that the larger your corporation is: the more you can get away with things. No matter how corrupt you are: you cannot be jailed or fined. No matter how much you steal or filch: you cannot be prosecuted. Even if your corporation is caught and shut down: all you have to do is start a new corporation. Corporations are very hard to kill, and even if you do kill a corporation: all you have killed is a piece of legal paper. This legal fiction has created the new class of untouchable elite robber barons. They sit on boards of corporations. They make obscene amounts of money for doing nothing, except lining their own pockets. Imagine if you could make hundreds of thousands of dollars by sitting down in a boardroom and joking with your fellow crony millionaires... twice a year: would you do it? Would you consider that you have earned your money? Would you go off on their junkets and holidays called business trips? To hob-nob with your fellow cronies and play golf? It is called the life O-Reilly. It is what poor people dream of.

The corporatization of business today; is one of the greatest evils of modern civilization. Large corporations are killers of small businesses. They are destroyers of common sense, accountability, and morality. They create impoverishment on mass scales; they create all of the centralized evils of centralized power, centralized wealth, centralized planning, centralized information, centralized control of the media etc. Amorality... the complete absence of any code of ethics, or morals is the universal code and ethic of the majority of all businesses, all corporations, and all companies throughout the entire world; simply because its dominant ethic is pure greed.

There is a very telling television documentary about corporate culture. The CEO of Burger King decides to go and see how things are done personally at one of their European fast food outlets. It shows him being trained how to do the simplest tasks. Along with teenagers wage slaves: working for less than minimum wage. It shows how everything the supervisor teaches is learned and mastered quickly and well by the teenage wage slaves. And how the middle-aged CEO's performance at the simplest of tasks is so horrid, so incompetent, and so abysmal lousy at everything. That one wage slave asks him how much money he makes. He tries to sluff off the question as a meaningless joke. But the teenager is sincere, and asks him again on camera. He lies. And says only sixty thousand dollars a year. Then he recants and says one hundred and sixty thousand a year. Of course he was still lying... because he did not include the stock options he had that guaranteed him hundreds of millions of dollars after leaving Burger King. Or all his other offshore investments and hidden profits and scams. The teenager asked him how come he made so much more than she did. His smiling evasive answer was to say that he worked hard.

Unfortunately: the teenager had already seen this fat incompetent, inefficient, stupid, asshole working at the simplest jobs in the restaurant: and she knew already that if he had not been the CEO of the Company: he would have been fired the first day on the job for general stupidity, and incompetence. She already knew his fat unhealthy body, the white, greasy unhealthy pallor of his skin. She had already gotten to know him personally. And his non-existent personality... and his mousy, silent, spoiled, total uselessness at doing anything, and being unable to even smile or speak to a customer or to her, or look anyone in the eye. She correctly surmised that he was lying through his teeth. She figured out that there was no earthly reason or rationale, why this fat, stupid CEO should be millions of times richer than she was. That in fact: he was rich because he did not work at all, did not know how to work, and had never really worked hard a day in his fucking life. That he was merely a privileged pig. Nothing else. Who had a smug smile on his lips all the time he was there. A smug smile of fear, of superiority, of stupidity, of weakness, of arrogance, of corruption, of power, of wealth, of greed.

It used to be that small companies called Guilds in the Middle Ages: made all of its members go through a long apprenticeship beginning at the bottom, doing the most menial tasks. And being promoted slowly up the ladder until they became heads of these Guilds. This way: if you were not competent at any level, at any skill, or any task: you would not be promoted until you were good enough to be raised to the next level of apprenticeship. This was supposed to insure the competence level of the entire company. Nobody who was not competent at their level and station was allowed to be promoted any higher.

Modern companies are now so specialized and so huge: this kind of upward mobility competency is structurally impossible. Nobody can know everything about running a corporation. No single person at the top can run a large corporation. This is the rationalized excuse to have incompetent managers and executives running it. But the original small Guilds of the Middle Ages were just as rotten and corrupt as the new ones. Favoritism, nepotism, corruption, office politics, etc, were just as rife in these small companies as it is now in large corporations. Apprentices were kept as menial slaves for years regardless of how competent they were. The only thing that allowed this system to have any upward mobility was the heads of the Guilds dying off from old age. And only a few of any Guild ever attained such a lofty status. It was merely a copy of the aristocratic class system. Where the pyramidal ascension of Nobles and Royalty was determined by those who died: leaving an empty seat. Never increasing the seats of power unless forced to do so. Increasing the seats of power and privilege as little as possible. Keeping themselves as small a minority as possible: to suck and gain as much advantage as possible from their elevated positions.

If your society never increases in population, then you have a hereditary hierarchy of privilege where your chances for advancement and upward mobility decreases exponentially the higher you get up the pyramidal pile of power, status, knowledge, and wealth. And you know your chances for advancement are strictly limited by who dies. Not by how good you are, or if you are better at anything, or how hard you work.

But if your society increases exponentially in population. As the human population has been doing for the past twelve thousand years. Then your exponentially decreasing chance for any upward mobility doubles exponentially. Meaning that instead of one chance in ten of moving up: you have one chance in a hundred. And instead of one chance in one hundred: you have one chance in one hundred thousand. Simply because there are hundreds more people vying for the same spot in a much bigger shitpile.

But the modern business culture of Western Capitalism ignores these cold, hard, statistical facts. They do not tell University Students studying business what their actual chances for advancement and upward mobility actually are. They do not tell their students that 99.9% of all employees end up fired if they advance too fast or too far in any field, in any company, in any way whatsoever. They do not tell these students that people are fired the instant they show too much competence, or too much originality, or too much independence, or too much of anything. They do not tell their students that the religious belief in education and hard work, and ability, and excellence, and competence, guaranteeing them some kind of upward social mobility; is total crap. They do not tell their students that the entire idea of social upward mobility; is sick, and evil, and corrupt all the way down to its root. They merely hold up the carrot of greed. They merely hold up the examples of the one-in-a-million exception. The one-in-a-million exception of a temporary success-story. And even then: they do tell how many temporarily successful companies go bankrupt later on, and how fleeting any temporary success actually is.

That TV documentary was a huge mistake by the Burger King Corporation. They had thought that they could increase productivity if their CEO could go down in the trenches to see how things actually were run so he could come back to make improvements. All he managed: was to open the eyes of the adolescent trainees who trained alongside him. It is not good for the elite to rub elbows with the lower classes. When then lower class finds out how rotten the elite actually are: their universal reaction is: disgust, anger and hate. In all class societies. In all societies based upon upward mobility. In all societies based upon greed and accumulation: Proximity to the elite; breeds contempt of them by the lower class. The myths of the elite vanish under any close scrutiny. No elite can survive very long living too close to the masses unless they have massive military power over them. They must wall themselves off into exclusive clubs and cliques and mansions in order to survive at all. That is the reason civilized humans build walls between each other. Because if other people knew just how rotten these rich people actually are: they would despise them instead of admiring them and envying them.

The Prime Imperative of Business

The Prime Imperative of all Business is: ‘Make a profit. Make money. We do not give a damn how you make it. We do not give a damn who is injured, or who is robbed, or who is enslaved or who is oppressed in the process of making us a profit. We do not give a damn what evils you commit, what lies you tell, how your employees are treated, how you do business, what poisons you use. We do not give a damn whether what you make or sell is any good. We do not care if what you make causes cancer, or pollutes the Entire Earth.’

‘We do not care how dishonestly you do it, we do not care how you hide all of your unethical practices, we do not care who you cheat: in fact: we do not want to know how you make us a profit, we do not want to know the details, we do not want to know the truth. ‘All we care about is if you can make us an easy profit... All we care about is if you can make us money. How you do it is irrelevant, and meaningless. Who you harm and poison is mostly irrelevant and meaningless... That is, unless you by any chance end up harming or poisoning us directly... Then we will scream at you for being unethical. Then we will scream at you for doing what we wanted you to do unethically... Which is: making money for us... regardless of all other considerations.’ Of course: the inconvenient fact that making money is intrinsically unethical because money does make itself; but is made by poor people slaving for the rich... is never mentioned.

All of this is inevitable; simply because of how all business is linearly and mechanically structured. Just the accumulation of any linear function-path automatically creates and more specialized linear branches-paths. Its growth works the same as the growth of a bush. It works on the same principle, the same model-dynamic as the scientific model of Organic-Ecological Evolution. Only, Evolutionary growth is interconnected countless levels and in countless ways.

The fact is that Science has never even attempted to demonstrate the actual inter-connected intricacies of this interconnection. For the simple reason that they cannot do it. It is too infinitely complex. Instead: they give the ludicrously over-simplified example of a bush... and only what a person sees visually at first glimpse of its outer shape. Science could never even give a half-accurate model of how that bush works because even that is too infinitely complex to describe using any kind of linear model... so even the evolutionary model of describing ecosystems and species as a bush; is meaningless because Science is trying to pretend that the three dimensional analogy of a living bush is the same as a two-dimensional abstract representation of that bush... and that both actually work the same. Draw a two-dimensional sketch of your hand and see if it works the same way as your actual three-dimensional hand does. Science pretends that this slight mismatch is not important. Oh... you mean life is kind of like a living bush or plant? Huh? Gee. What a profound scientific insight. Gee, I bet nobody who wasn't a professional scientist could ever make a profound insight like that. You have to go to University and specialize in biology to learn that... huh? Somebody explain this to me... I don't understand. Oops. I forgot. You are supposed to reduce all of the three dimensional dynamics of that living tree or bush into two-dimensional abstract symbols, and theories, and formulas and gobbledy-gook, and then you can understand it much better... oh.

What is unethical about most scientists; is that they refuse to explain precisely it is what they do, to anyone not in the inner circles of their specialized sanctums. Not only because they are incapable of explaining it, not only because it is too complex for them to understand also... But because if they ever do successfully explain it, they are laughed-at... despised, pitied, sneered-at... for being stupid enough to waste their lives on something so idiotic and meaningless.

However, the scientific model of a two-dimensional bush does make sense; when you use it purely linearly on a purely abstract level... when there are no interconnections between its linear bush model abstract lines. That is not true of a living tree. Every leaf on a tree only gets as much sunlight depending on where it is on that tree. Depending on each instant of time and wind... that rustle the leaves and sway the branches, allowing some sunlight to pour onto leaves that are growing under other leaves.

So... try to scientifically factor in every second of wind and sunlight into how fast or how well each leaf grows by measuring the exact number of microseconds it is exposed to Sunlight, as the upper branches sway, and let fleeting darts of light through the upper leaves...? Oops. Science cannot do that. It's too complex. Too interrelated to too many other complex factors. So they just blab moronically about the scientific model of a living bush, draw a two-dimensional sketch of a two-dimensional bush, and think they are being extremely clever and scientific.

Why am I talking about the scientific stupidity of using a two-dimensional model to explain how a three-dimensional actual bush or tree actually works?... Because that is also how all businesses models are designed. The trouble is, that when you do that: then you get the insanity of non-relevant, specialized, linear functionality; which ignores all other actual interconnecting aspects of the three-dimensional World we live in.

That structural dynamic alone is one reason why all business is basically a dehumanized form of human greed and insanity... simply because it uses a purely linear model... a two-dimensional system trying to function in a three-dimensional Universe.

When nothing else matters but money... when nothing else matters except the sales you have to make in order to make a profit or a quota... Regardless if you have to lie, cheat or steal... You have linear goals, linear concerns... narrowed linear focus. Then you only are in business to sell or buy or make one thing. Then you are in business to provide only one service. Then you are automatically disconnected from all the other needs of your customer as a total-connected human being. Then you automatically do not give a damn about them except in the narrow focus of that one linear focus.

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six A: The Beginnings of civilization

600

When nothing else matters except getting as much coal out of the ground as quickly and as cheaply as possible. Regardless of how many thousands of poor people you have to enslave and cheat and steal from... so after 50 years of slaving away in the depths of the earth: each slave actually develops a culture from the livelihood that identifies them. They become coal-miners. They form their own class systems, their own ways of living, thinking, eating. Where they are so brutalized, and so brainwashed by their own culture... that they actually develop a pride in their lowly station, simply because they have nothing else to be proud of. They become used to slavery and degradation. They do not even realize they can actually walk out of those killing poisonous mines. They can actually leave the filthy poisonous, ugly coal towns: and do something less dehumanizing to earn a living. And live longer.

What if all humans refused to do any job that they considered to be dehumanizing or even slightly unpleasant? Why should only certain people be victimized with no other choice but to work at worst, lowest paid, dehumanizing jobs? The entire idea of trying to sanctify something because it is your job... the idea of sanctifying work at all is ludicrous because there is no equality to it.

When nothing else matters except your job... regardless of how non-useful it is, or how useless it is, how boring it is, or how limiting it is. When nothing else matters except that single part of a disconnected linear chain of a linear, causal process that rips ore out of the earth, filters it, crushes it, washes it, chemicalizes it, melts it, refines it, turns it into an alloy, ships it around the world to other factories that refine it further, shape it, re-melt it, pound it, twist it, flatten it, and then sell it to another set of disconnected linear processes that makes that metal ends up in half the houses of the world as a screw, as a pipe, as a nail...

And not a single one of the people actually involved in this linear process gives a damn about any of the other people in this process... Or what this process actually does to people, to cities, to the earth, to ecosystems, to valleys, lakes, rivers, oceans, animals, plants... So literally not one human buying, or selling, or making, or transporting or processing this metal has any understanding of the actual causes and consequences of what they are doing... And could care less even if they did know. When everyone involved is just doing their job linearly... Without the slightest Sense of Wonder or questioning: then what you get is linear normality... linear abnormality... linear blindness... linear non-awareness of all of the interconnections that each person is cut-off from.

Then, what you get is Laissez Faire Capitalism... letting everyone do as they damn well please: and damn the consequences to all other people, the Earth, to future generations, to all the living things on this planet. The worship of profit forces people not to help other people. Then you get the endless sickening scenarios of people in need... but without money.

“Oh your car broke down. No money? Sorry; can’t help you.”

“Oh, your crops failed and you’re starving. No money? Sorry; can’t help you.”

Why? Because money has replaced love as the basic form of human exchange. It offends people’s basic sense of selfishness to help anyone if they cannot be paid money for it. The idea of helping anyone without making a profit, barely even exists anymore. Because their basic sense of selfishness is stronger than their sense of generosity.

This is the sick, uncaring, unloving, obscene, self-dehumanizing, self-brutalizing, unfeeling, amoral ethic of greed that most; if not all civilized business people live by, practice, uphold, rationalize, justify, and excuse. And how do they excuse it...? Their excuses or rationales are basically a bunch of blatant admissions of their own corruption and helplessness to do anything other than what civilization tells them to do.

Everybody else does it...

If I don't do it, then somebody else will...

It's normal...

That's how everybody else does it...

It's customary...

It's just the way we do things...

It's traditional.

Go with the flow...

He who dies with the most toys, wins. Meaning the one with the most houses, cars, boats, airplanes, wealth, etc...

Conform or else...

If I don't do it: I'll starve.

If I don't do it: I'll lose my job.

If I don't do it: I will not be able to feed my family...

If I do not obey and submit: I will be killed.'

All of these excuses are merely admissions of powerlessness and helplessness and fear and cowardice. They are victim-rationales, slave-rationales, coward's-rationales, lying rationales. All of these excuses and justifications, and rationalizations are merely people admitting that they have no principles, or morals, or ethics of their own. That they will do whatever they are told to do, say whatever they are expected or told to say, regardless of the consequences... regardless of their own feelings or sensibilities... regardless of how much what they do or say is evil or destructive or sick. As long as they can make some money... This is the capitalist consumer ethic that over 6 billion people today adhere to. This is one effect of civilization on humans. So: giving Corporations the same rights as living people, has effectively given all Corporations a huge, permanent advantage over any living person who wants to compete against them.

The results have been... all kinds of oligarchic monopolies; from chocolate, bananas, wood, chemicals, hardware stores, video stores, software companies, and oil... to running shoes, pants, coffee houses, movies, radio, newspapers, television, defence industries, aircraft manufacturers, food chains, and fast-food restaurants. Modern industrialized life is defined, shaped, determined, controlled, and created by a medium, a condition, a norm of corporate entities that are legally considered to be human. If you took all of the Corporations, and Corporate Entities out of civilization: what would be left? Merely living people without Corporate Power, and Corporate Wealth. This is an indicator of how empty civilization actually is. How much is your individual freedom limited by corporations? Without corporations, you could do a million things which are both prohibited and prohibitively expensive because of them. Simply because corporations exist: they do not let you live any other way: except to use and consume their exclusive products, chemicals, and services... and make them a profit. To them; that is all you are good for. How did corporations become so powerful? By becoming even better instruments of centralization and accumulation ...not just wealth and power; than governments or Nations.

Take the fur trade in North America. Europeans found that a tiny number of white males organized on a motivational hierarchy of greed and profit, instead of a permanent landed class with privilege and power; could rape the furs of an entire continent in less than two centuries. At first, there was the pure monopoly of the Hudson's Bay Company. Then the Northwest Company based in Montreal entered the fray; and things speeded up. Then the Americans created their own fur dynasty and raped their side of the continent so fast that there were no more furs to be had in the American side of the Rockies after only 40 short years, and so the Americans fur company went belly-up... because they were so greedy:

The Path of Splitness

602

they sucked the furs out of America and literally destroyed their own natural habitats before they ever expanded out West. The Hudson's Bay could have kept on taking furs from the natives for hundreds of more years. They had been doing so for hundreds of years before the Americans came in and spoiled the market with their insatiable greed.

The Spaniards had a similar system of government-funded corporations in the Middle Ages. Their swashbuckling adventurers had even more freedom and scope to rob, rape and make a profit than the English did. Except most of it was funnelled into the Royal Spanish coffers. Their centralized aristocracy and religion used the wealth only for King, and Church. And some personal gain. Not for independent Corporations. Not for a completely corporatized system of profit.

The French Empire suffered from the same cultural-religious weakness. Any hero or profiteer that became too noteworthy was quickly brought back and denied any further chance to cover themselves with glory. They were supposed only to make their kings rich, not themselves. The same happened with the first English swashbucklers. They were only supposed to spread their state religion, enrich their monarch, and not get too rich and powerful themselves personally.

What does all the political intrigue of all the courts, from Babylon, to the Roman Caesars, to the Chinese Emperors, to Machiavelli, to the Parliamentary system, to the modern Washington D.C. consist of?... Elite power mongers trying to make sure others do not become too rich, or too powerful... While trying to become as rich and powerful as possible themselves: without themselves doing any of the hard work of conquest, and fighting, and dying, and raping, and killing.

The mystique of Kings was so brainwashed into the lower classes of the European Kingdoms; that everything was laid at their feet of Royalty as their: just due. Everything done by the lower class, the middleclass, and the nobles... was supposed to be only to increase the renown and glory and power and wealth of the sacred, sanctified, deified King, or Queen. Organized religion also had this cultural mystique in colonizing other lands; where every conversion, every new fort, every conquest was done for the Greater Glory of God. Usually it was a mixed-up jumble of both sets of platitudes being spouted to rationalize, justify, and explain literally everything they did: including their reason for being alive

Columbus lobbied for years all around Europe, for the opportunity to blaze a new trading route to the East. Going hat-in-hand: begging the richest, most Powerful Kings of Europe to give him the privilege of making them even richer. He was denied. He was an Italian. The only ruler who let him do it was the Queen of Spain. Wealth was an exclusive privilege of the powerful for 11,500 civilized years. For poor people to spend their entire lives enriching their beloved Monarch was unheard-of. Enriching and glorifying the fame, and wealth and power of your King was an exclusive privilege given only to certain favoured rich elite. It was never a right. No poor person was ever allowed such an honour. Those who were allowed to even attempt anything at making their King richer: were automatically expected to succeed. They never did. Most of history is a story of how they tried to cover up their failures. They came back and proclaimed how successful they were. They sold lies and tall tales and turned them into myths.

They were expected to succeed: simply because they were basking in the reflected Glory of their mighty omnipotent, all-wise, all-powerful, beneficent ruler. And if they failed: they were publicly humiliated. They lost status. They lost influence at court. They were ignored. They were snubbed. They were sneered at. But if they succeeded: then they were knighted and raised in status. They became upwardly mobile. The entire culture of explorers, and conquerors and colonizers which History and historians have glorified and applauded and praised and admired as their efforts being the bravest and most adventuresome and noblest of all human endeavours in all history is a pure obscene lie. They were the lowest scum ever born. They were the most envious, the most jealous, the most egotistical, the most egomaniacal assholes ever born. They were the greediest, most unethical, most cunning liars and hypocrites ever to live on Earth. Because European cultures had managed to reduce 99.9999% of their populations into a mass of fear-stricken, abject cowards and mindless stupid submissive idiots: only a teeny, tiny handful of exceptions ever became explorers. Their entire motivations personified the concentration of the most evil, vile cultural values and ideas of the cultures they lived-in. They were supposed to represent what was the most glorious and great of European culture. They were supposed to bring the glory of European culture to other lands.

Everything they did: they did for their King. Everything they did reflected upon their King: not upon themselves. They were virtually concentrated reflections of the most concentrated Europeans evils of power and greed, and hate and fear of the most powerful Kings in Europe. They lived their lives as reflections of their Royal Monarch. Their actions, their entire lives were pure reflections of Royal greed and power and fame and status. They did only what their Kings wanted them to do. They obeyed only the wishes of their King. And when they strayed from his or her wishes: they were recalled and punished and reprimanded and scolded and publicly humiliated for not returning with enough gold and wealth and new lands conquered. They were the worst slavish ass-kissing sycophants in history. And their rulers had an automatic rational excuse, if their chosen vassal did not succeed as expected. If he failed: it was because God did not approve of their conduct. It was not the fault of the King, or how stupid his ideas were, or anything to do with the King. It was like having only two superstars or idols in your society to worship during your entire life. And everyone had to worship the same superstars; both God and your Monarch. There was no choice whatsoever in the matter. Except the choice between which to worship more, and which to serve: your King, or your God. Ideally: you were supposed to blindly worship both of them. The titles rulers and Nobles had in those days were the semantic equivalent of brainwashing by terminology. Brainwashing by association. Call a dog a cat long enough: and all dogs become cats. They sought to string together in one sentence the longest list of superlatives possible. Trying to give the impression that this person was somehow a thousand times better, wiser, more kind, more loving, more powerful, more ferocious etc. Today people wear t-shirts advertising company brands for free. Try finding a t-shirt without a consumer brand, or name or logo on it. You aren't a good consumer unless you are part of their advertising schemes. Just as you were not a good European in the Middle Ages unless you worshipped your God and your King. Why do modern corporations even exist? To make a small profit for anyone rich enough to buy their stock with their excess money. That is one basic reason for existence. To give the elite corporate heads obscene salaries and their stockholders obscene rates of profit. Which they all delightedly enjoy as a windfall... not bothering to admit that every earned penny came from the sweat of a poorly paid employee, a swindled buyer, a swindled seller, or a totally false, imaginary value of their stock.

Ten years ago corporate head officers made 30 times more than their workers on average. Then they made 300 times more than their workers. Now they make 550 times more than their workers. When the degree of greed at the top goes from 30 to 550: then degree of societal corruption throughout all western civilization will not only follow, it will explode, as it did in 2010 with illegal credit default swaps. Ponzi schemes, false debt. Do the math: and try to figure out how much money these corporate heads will have a hundred years from now... compared to what the rest of us have. And what has been society's reaction to this. Instead of outrage... there is only envy, resentment, and hate. Indifference, cynicism, and passive disinterest. The entire human race has swallowed the corrupt ethic of corporate greed, abstract greed, and the greed of seeing the abstract value of your stock magically increase without you putting any effort into it. The magic of free money, unearned money, corrupt profit... pure greed, false security in being an employee... has been successfully sold to the entire human race. How can any human on Earth be outraged at others who get richer than you. When you're all trying to do the same thing to each other.

To explain the strange modern Capitalistic idea of: the expectation, or a right to a return in your investment. Take some living trees. Kill them. Cut them down. Then pile up the dead lumber... You have just invested some of your time and energy in killing and cutting down trees. The dead corpses of these once-living trees are now your accumulated capital. You can sell them and be rich.

If every human who wanted to get rich by their own sweat alone: then each human would have a bank account that would be directly proportional to how long, and how hard they worked and slaved at killing, or manipulating most of the dead things they touched with their tools. Then there would be very little difference between a workaholic wage-slave, a wanna-be millionaire, or a totally lazy person who hated all work and did mostly nothing. But. You want your investment of the dead carcasses of those killed trees to grow again. You don't want to keep on working killing trees. So you hire other wage-slaves to do the dirty work for you... pay them less than you would pay yourself: and collect the extra profit without raising a finger. But you do not want to bother with forming your own corporation, and hiring your own wage-slaves, and driving them to work for you... So you put your investment of dead trees into the stock market... and expect those dead trees to magically grow again.

But dead trees do not grow. Darn... so you go somewhere else to cut down and kill more living trees? No. You put your money from those dead trees into the Stock Market and expect the money to grow like a living tree... But money does not grow on trees. Darn... so the companies you invest in... takes your dead money, and hires poor people to work at slave-wages to cut down more living trees, and gives you a tiny return from their huge profits.

Darn. Such a little bit of profit... Find a company that will give you more of a return for your investment. Remember... your actual investment remains untouched... you are only receiving your God-Given Right... to getting some free money back from your original investment.

But when all the companies cut down and kill all of the living trees in that area. They go out of business. Darn. So then take your money out before they collapse, and put it into another company who hires poor people to work for them; so you can get a free return of your investment that is your God-Given Right...

But who grew those trees. Did you grow them? No. You merely killed them and passed them off as a resource which you could exploit for your own advantage. And after you did that: did you keep on working killing trees, so you could make more money from it? No. You put your money into a company so poor people would work killing trees for you ... so you can make free money from your investment called a return by doing nothing at all. What a wonderfully easy way to get rich.

To make sense of how humans treat all the living resources on Earth, try to turn the focus 180 degrees around and put our species in the place of the trees that we kill. Let's say another dominant species on Earth decides to kill the tallest humans... and also kill all humans who are full-grown in a certain area. And they leave the smallest humans to grow up, so they can come back later and kill them also.

But this other dominant species is greedy. It stops killing just the full-grown humans and coming back to kill the others after they have grown tall enough... they cut down all the human in that area so not one human is left alive. Then this species piles up the carcasses of these dead-killed humans, and expects these dead humans to give them a God given right of profit. To an extra return on the time and energy they spent killing these living us. They actually expect these dead corpses to grow more humans so they can keep on exploiting us so they can keep on killing us. But dead humans do not grow living humans. So this dominant species after killing all the humans in one area... goes elsewhere and does the same thing... While enslaving the lower classes of its own species to do their killing for them, so they can keep on receiving their God Given Right to a return; for originally putting all that time and energy into exploiting us as exploitable resources.... I mean killing us. Mass slaughter.. Human corpses piled up like cordwood.

What would we humans think of another species who came regularly only to kill us and use our corpses only for their benefit? Would we think it was their God Given Right to do so? What if this dominant species actually enjoyed the company of humans? And needed them, and loved going amongst us, and loved to walk in the middle of us? But whenever it was convenient them: they simply killed us if they could make a big enough profit from it. What if this species extolled the beauty of humans, and painted us, and took photos of us? And grew us, and had picnics under us? But never gave a thought to the possibility that we might have feelings, or feel pain, or might not like being killed? What if this species lopped off our limbs whenever they felt like it? And shaped us to grow as they wanted us to? All for their own benefit? What would we think of such a species? And...all of their behaviour was rationalized and justified by, and based-on the sacred idea-concept of a guaranteed return on their investment because they wanted to make a tidy profit without actually themselves working to earn it?

Here is where it gets weird as hell. This turns it into a backward dynamic. This means that the longer you keep an investment, the more it will grow for you. And the richer you become. So the way to get rich... is by doing nothing at all... for as long as possible. So... you only get really rich if you invest money when you are ten years old, and live to the ripe old age of 90. Then you can enjoy your free fucking money.

Oops. But then you will be so sick, and so weak, and nearly dying: that you won't be able to enjoy the money... except as a pure accumulation from doing nothing except being given your God Given Right to a return on some investment... gosh. What a neat way of brainwashing people into doing nothing, and letting the market make money for them. What a neat way of disconnecting all involvement from the business you invested in from the investors who do not even read the lying portfolios they send out once a year. What a neat way to make Laissez Faire Capitalism the culture of the entire human population on Earth. What a neat way to create billions of alienated, passive, suckers who want to get rich easily by giving all of their hard-earned money to someone else. And not using it for their own needs. What a neat way to turn billions of humans into a bunch of pure addicted accumulators. What a neat way for humans to become impersonal about getting rich. So there is no personal moral evil seen, or felt, or admitted-to. So you put the money into stocks... so what? Its better than keeping it in a shoebox where it doesn't grow.

But money does not grow on trees.

'So what. I want it to grow. So it will. Because I say so.'

You mean: let other people grow my money for me, and do not ask me to look at the details of how they do it... okay?'

Oh... Now that is more honest.

This idea of a return for an investment gets really weird if you follow it to its logical conclusion. That means that the first human who ever put an investment into exploiting a resource expecting a return for their investment 12,000 years ago... should legally own everything all humans ever did to further exploit these resources for 12,000 years. That is: if this person was lucky enough to keep from dying for 12,000 years.

‘I don’t care. I still want my guaranteed, God-given right to a return.’

Oh. Okay. If you say so. In that case; the Capitalistic system is the greatest thing ever invented by modern humans... Even though it concentrates more wealth into less hands than all the combined Empires and Kingdoms of 12,000 years of Civilized History.

If all corporations were dissolved and their wealth was equally distributed among all humans, the physical standard of living would rise instantly to an unheard-of astronomical level of human affluence all around the world. Today, most of the legal declared wealth of the world is concentrated in the hands of corporations. But since corporations rely upon stockholders for their investment income and supposedly try to pay investors a steady stream of free profit... all humans have come to believe in the false, corrupt religion of your money working for you. They have an even sillier notion that they own these Corporations... That they the shareholders are the Corporation. When all they are; are a passive, lazy, greedy rabble: giving a few super-rich people a chance to increase their already huge fortunes by using other people’s money. The fact of the matter is that nearly all of the money is tied up in the corporation. Very little of it ever reaches the stockholders hands. The excuse that corporations are good for stockholder is another white lie that is never studied. Simply because people do not want to ask questions of how they got that tiny bit of ‘free’ money in the first place.

The catch phrase... the idea... the concept of money working for you; is one of the most obscene universal lies and myths ever invented by humans. Put your money into a coalmine: and see if it can pick up a shovel. Why is this idea is never questioned? Because if you can make easy money by not even lifting as finger to actually earn it through your own effort... if you can make an easy profit by just putting your money into the stock market and have it magically increase and accumulate... then you will never look too closely at the methods by which this free, easy, profit... how this accumulation of wealth actual happens. If a corporation does not make a profit doing business for its stockholders: then every mealy-mouthed platitude about their ethics, or morals, or values, is not only meaningless but non-existent: since they will be out of business. If they are in business: then these morals, values, and ethics will not be non-existent, they will only be active, deceiving, self-serving, lying hypocrisies. There is no such thing as a rational, sane, logical justification for profit. Except selfishness and greed. Accumulation.

How can any sane person believe any organization or any person doing business to make a profit possesses any morals or ethics, or values other than the sacred unquestioned unspoken fiscal moral-ethic-value of selfish advantage called: making a profit? Once that moral-ethic-value disappears... so does the business. How can a non-existent business or corporation that does not exist since it could make a profit have any family’ values...? Any community values...? Any charity...? Any cooperative spirit...? How can this non-existent, non-profit making corporation still give back to the communities the non-existent profits it made its profit from... if it is no longer making a profit from these communities?

Yet. Literally every successful business and corporation is supposed to do this... to be an example of doing business humanely. The outright self-delusion it takes to convince yourself that if giving back any percentage of any profit is some kind of giving.... When if you ran any business on the principle of giving rather than taking you would not be in business one day. The idiotic self-praising, self-congratulating speeches and double-talk about how humane these business entities are... how well they treat their employees, how they do not rip off their suppliers, or use slave labour like their competitors.... And still magically somehow manage to make a profit... is too absurd for words.

Now a large part of the affluent population in the entire world is engaged in trying to invest their hard-earned money.... Sitting at a desk is hard? So they can repossess the actual, hard physical labour of the third world wage-slaves who work for pennies: by selling what they produce for hundreds if not thousands times more than these workers are paid for producing their products. Affluent people are constantly seeking to find these elusive special, lucky stocks... these wonderful makers of instant money for them.... And constantly trying to congratulate themselves on finding such reputable gems that do not go belly-up before they make their easy profit from this mystery labyrinth of investment portfolios. If you actually read what they print, literally all of it is pure gobbledy-gook. Unless you have made the necessary research and have inside information, and can decipher all the lies from the few pertinent acts that tell you what is actually going on. There is such a desperate, careful, hypocrisy about how they choose their euphemisms and how they steer clear of all truth or practical details in any of their reports... all of it so unintelligible, all in coded terms, and not even daring to speak of how they actually make their profit... how they actually do business.

Anyone who has actually been in these corporate offices or worked for any business whatsoever... could tell you tons of stories that would make you sick with disgust; or smile in cynical satisfaction. But these stories are never ever published or reported on except for a very rare scandal when something is so enormously illegal that it cannot be covered up or swept under the rug... Or when a huge financial bubble bursts... when investors lose billions and the board of directors manage to skip off with barely a reprimand? Why is whistle-blowing so incredibly rare in capitalistic economies...? Because secrecy is the unspoken ethical way that people do business. All business success is based upon secrecy. No business ever reveals exactly how it makes its profit ... Unless the way they make it is silently accepted by the public as 'normal', and not illegal. Never mind how all businesses manage to not pay taxes. Tax evasion and fraudulent tax returns are a normal form of illegality. Simply because nearly everybody does it to one extent or another. If killing your competitors with rat poison were allowed, that would be done also. Why? Because business has no ethics, only expediency and legality..., which is a fudge of both legal and illegal practices, but mostly never investigated. Why? Because nearly everybody does it. Because legally, half-legally, illegally... lying, cheating, conning, distorting, snookering, finagling any kind of advantage possible: is how all businesses make their profit. If they did not do that: they would either break even, or go out of business completely. The quibble about whether they do it legally or illegally is a semantic joke. How any business makes a profit remains the same. There is no difference between a legal and an illegal profit.

In order to make that profit: someone else must lose money.... Someone else must lose their profit, their man-hours, their living standard, their advantage, their life-energy, their effort, their work, their freedom, their time, their lives.... And the entire business community is vigilantly careful to never... Never, ever, ever, face this ludicrously simple, obvious, obscene truth.

The fact is that every penny of earnings, every penny of dividends, every penny of capital gains, every penny of interest, every penny stockholder manages to accumulate comes from the sweat of poorer people who are forced to work for obscenely lower wages; in order for the stockholders of any of the corporations on this Earth to make a profit... Is completely, conveniently, and selectively ignored.

Not one penny of all this wealth has ever been gained by your money somehow magically, mysteriously working for you. But since most civilized humans have been converted to the religion of corporate greed: there is nobody even left on the planet to even voice an objection to the corruption of corporate greed, or object about the lunacy of the idea that your money can actually work. This corruption has many code words: Globalization is the latest politically correct term that is supposed to mean a better world for humans: when all it means is bigger profits and market-shares for corporations; by stripping the rest of humanity of what little wealth and money is left in the private and public sectors of all nations... stripping all the forests of trees, stripping all the oceans of fish, stripping all the minerals, all the resources of the Earth; as fast as they can for the fastest-quickest-easiest corporate profits.

The unspoken contract between a corporation or a business and an employee is simple for the employee. It is the unspoken wish that every employee has upon being employed. That wish is:

‘I promise to be a faithful, loyal, and obedient servant. I promise never to question my superiors, or challenge how this company is run. I promise to conform. I promise to work for you for the rest of my life, until I either die; or I am too old to work. In return for my giving you most of my life, my soul, my body, my mind, my Energy... Give me in return only two things: a little more affluence, and a little more security.’ So I can lie to myself and pretend that I am socially upwardly mobile: and retain the Myth that I am getting somewhere, and accomplishing something.’

This is nothing more than a modernized medieval oath of loyalty. Every peasant on Earth for thousands of years, had to basically swear the same thing to their liege: or else suffer all of their goods and wealth being taken away from them: and being punished for their unfaithfulness by death. For thousands of years, All over the Earth: any rebellious peasant or underling could be killed for any reason whatsoever, or for no reason at all. Burning at the stake, dismemberment, decapitation, or being impaled on a pike: or even worse horrors were a common occurrence for thousands of years all over the world. If the lower classes buckled under, and agreed to become slaves for their masters: in return: they were given a hopeful imaginary security that they would not be singled out for death or torture.

For thousands of years all over the world: Robber Barons tried to force the masses of the poor to become as conformist as possible using the tactic of pure terror. This is where the modern idea called: security comes from. And this is still what it actually means.

The corporation or business is supposed to honour this fake contract by agreeing to employ a worker only for as long as is convenient for them to do so. The idea of reciprocal loyalty has never existed between the upper and lower classes. In corporations: the only place they ever honour it is at the utmost top levels... where by not honouring it would destroy the corporation itself completely. Top executives are never fired. But everyone beneath them can be, and most of them are. As they all fight to get to that topmost level of security and safety. Managers fire employees. District managers fire lower level managers. And the lower down you go on the pyramidal heap: the more insecure the jobs are. Creating the mad scramble of self-interest and inefficiency and dishonesty; creating an unloving competitive, civilized society. As bigger corporations prey upon smaller ones As they fire their once-topmost executives who suddenly find that what they have slaved for all of their lives was a lie.

The unspoken assumption of the idea of profit; the unspoken assumption of its ethical rightness: is the assumption that everybody makes a profit. This unspoken assumption is so crazy, so illogical: an entire book could be written on the insanity of this idea. If everybody makes a profit. Who do they make it from? Who do they profit from? What do they profit from? How do they make a profit? It has to come from somewhere. Somebody has to lose. But of course: this unspoken assumption is never looked at. It is never examined too closely. Because if it were: you would discover that for every millionaire to exist, there has to be 5-10 thousand slaves working in 3rd world countries or working for minimum wage. And for every affluent person who has 100,000 dollars in the stock market: they has to have 400-1,000 poor people slaving away at rotten jobs for them to exist. For every landlord to exist: there have to be rent payers. For every rent payer: there has to be consumer goods made. For every consumer good: there has to be poor people being exploited to make it cheaply enough so rich people can afford it. For every poor person to exist: there has to be a factory or a job that destroys living things and pollutes the earth. For every poor person who has a menial job that pays starvation wages: there has to be poor people who have no work and are starving. For every poor couple that has no work and are starving: there has to be a baby born to them that starves to death. That is the hierarchy of money. That is the hierarchy of capitalism. That is the hierarchy of modern consumer society.

That is the way profit works. It works on a descending scale of reduced profit. The only way you can profit from someone is if they make less of a profit than you do. That is the legacy of profit. That is the social horror and filth that is not looked at. That is the how profit is connected to poverty. That is why profit is connected to infanticide. That is why idea of the universal right of every human on earth to have their god-given profit; is the worst most inhuman social evil humans have yet invented. Because the social system of modern capitalism is so abstract, so fragmented, so disconnected from itself. The fact that money is a social system of pure slavery is hidden. It can be exposed easily. All you have to do is trace your investment dollar all the way to the end. And see how your profit is actually made. But nobody does this. Because nobody wants to lose money. Nobody want to look how money is actually made.

The entire idea behind business is finding the most painless way to get people to part with their money. Business is merely the easiest, most painless way to get rich fast. Now large companies are offering direct billing to their customers. So the customer will not even feel the loss of money, because they will not have to write a check every month. Companies, and corporations now have become automatic, computerized money-sucking machines. Sucking the money directly out of personal bank accounts without even bothering with the customer as a human bring. Now the customer is only an impersonal bank account. Greed has become so impersonal, so mechanized, so computerized... that the entire operation has no human meaning to it. Machines talking to machines. Computers talking to computers... that is what business has become: a dehumanization of mechanized greed.

How can you fight the monopolizing takeover of corporations? Simple. Get rid of the middleman. Capitalism is so corrupt, that is mostly exclusively geared for the advantage of the intermediaries and the tiny minority of polite rich people to make huge profits. The wheeler-dealer, the brokers, the lawyers, the insurance companies, the banks, the accounting companies all automatically get richer and richer without having to lift a finger: while the millions of poor and less affluent must sweat and work every week just to pay their insurance bills, your brokers-bill, your accounting bills and bank-costs.

Where are their costs? As they use your money to make their own profits free and clear of having to ever use their own hard-earned money? Once upon a time...banks actually paid you for the privilege of taking your money and using it for their own self-interest and self-profit... regardless of how 'much' that sum was. Now they have concocted the idea that the amount of money they pay you per dollar for using your money is only based upon how much money you give them. Do you think that they go through all of their billions and millions of dollars going:

‘Hmmm... this dollar only came from an account that only had 300 dollars in it... so we can’t make any interest from that dollar... Oh. This dollar came from an account that has ten thousand dollars in it. Ah. Now this dollar; we can make at least 3 per cent interest from it.’ Actually on all their loans they charge 7-16 percent... so... yes. Banks actually make more money off the small accounts because banks do not pay the small accounts any interest... But let’s not tell people that... And they make less money off big accounts, because they have to give some of that free profit back to them... ‘Darn... But they willingly give us so much more money. Why bother with piddly poor people who can’t make us richer faster? The hell with the small accounts... their money isn’t worth the bother... It’s too much work getting their money. One lump sum of one million dollars into our bank? We just saved ourselves 1,000 hours of employee salaries dealing with piddly tiny accounts.’

Oops. Mustn’t let them know how we are ripping them off. So even though every cent we have makes the same interest in every loan: we pay our depositors back differently? And on top of that, we charge them for the security of knowing it is in a safe place? Otherwise if people kept all their money at home: we couldn’t exist. Huh? If you do not make any profit from keeping your money in a bank...then why do poor people put their money into banks? Brainwashing? No. Convenience. Lack of fiscal self-control. Otherwise they would spend it. Simply because they do not have the self-control it takes to not spend any money they may have in their pockets. If all people had the self-discipline to be frugal and saved their money and did not spend it... they would not need a bank. There would be no banks in the first place.

What about the sanctified profession of shopkeeper? Most of the affluence and wealth of the middleclass is based upon owning and operating small shops or small businesses. Mom and pop stores. Run by a single family. The owner sitting behind his or her own cash register... ringing up each purchase. Sitting there every day. Waiting for a customer to come in. Doing nothing but just sitting there all day. For the rest of their lives... bored. Doing nothing. Thinking nothing. Feeling nothing. Just waiting for someone to come in and buy something so they can make a profit from the sucker. Doing the hard work of taking a person’s money, and making change. Doing that same, identical, boring task over and over again for the rest of their lives. Not moving. Not thinking. Not feeling. Just sitting there. All day. More dead than alive... for the rest of their lives.

How anyone can stomach this kind of boredom is beyond me. But. If they have a lot of customers... if they are kept busy. Ringing up many customers... ah! Suddenly they are in a fine humour.. They become cheerful Because they are making a profit. A faster profit. Then they can sit there all day. Doing the same mindless task repeatedly... over and over... because they are making money without working for it. Supplying a product, without caring what that product is, or how it will be used. Satisfying a customer’s wishes without caring what those wishes are. Pleasing other people by getting rich off them. Serving other people’s needs by serving their own needs first. While making a tidy little profit... oops, lets not focus on that.

You mean how happy or glum any shopkeeper is depends on how much money they make? And how fast they make it? You mean a glum shopkeeper must sit all day in their shop... lonely and bored... unhappy... glued to their cash register just in case some customer might come in? So they can make some money off the customer?

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six A: The Beginnings of civilization

611

Is that the fastest and best way to corrupt a human soul into worshipping money? Is that one of the worst kinds of pure boredom and emptiness possible? Is that one of the most meaningless way of living ever? Is that one of the best ways to guarantee that no shopkeeper ever gets a creative urge or idea? Is that one hell of a good way to destroy your humanity? Is that one way of making damn sure you do not have any fun in your life except the fun of making an easy profit?

So... the justification of wasting your entire life doing the same boring stupid task every day; that does not challenge or stretch any of your abilities, or creativity, or anything... except chatting superficially with customers... is done because this way you can make more money, more easily, faster, than if you actually worked for a living?

Oh. You mean stocking the shelves, picking up your supplies, hiring people to sit at that cash register for you; is harder work than digging in a trench with a shovel eight hours a day? Oops. Most small shopkeepers usually end up hiring other people to do most of the hard work... and pay them as little as possible... and basically do nothing except the hard work of putting the money in the bank each day and making sure their employees are not robbing them blind or slacking off. Kind of reminds you of the exact model of a corporation doesn't it? I wonder where the idea and model of large corporations came from. Maybe they are just the same business model as these mom-and-pop stores, except expanded to a larger size and degree of greed and wealth and power... huh? You mean all small businesses are based upon the principles of the meanest selfishness possible?

Look at what Korean immigrants did in America. They came into America as immigrants... with a history and culture of being small shopkeepers. They set up their small shops in the poorest neighbourhoods, because in their own country, that level of destitution and squalor was normal... so they felt more comfortable in that environment. They saw these poor communities as a welcome-mat... because in their culture... the poor only exist to make a profit-from them. They had never experienced a middle-class culture... and felt out-of-place in their own middle class houses. They refused to become Americanized. They refused to speak English... even to their customers. They just set up shop, provided something to sell... and got insulted and outraged when their customers were uncivil to them and spat at them. What was the big deal? Were they any different from any other shopkeepers? Yes! They were more surly, more ill-mannered, more rude, and only wanted their customer's money so obviously, so crassly, so arrogantly, so antisocially.... Their customers could feel their distrust, their surliness, their dislike of their customers, and the hate emanating from them. As a result: they earned the hatred of most the communities their shops were in. They thought that simply by supplying overpriced goods in a small community that did not have cars to drive to stores where the prices were cheaper, that they didn't have to bother learning the language of the country they had immigrated into. They thought they could just make their handy profits and stay as insular Korean families who do not give a shit about anyone else in their community. Then the Rodney King riots in Los Angeles happened. And many of the Korean markets and stores in the riot areas; were looted, burned, and destroyed.

Why were the Korean stores targeted more than other ones? Because they were the most hated stores. Because the Koreans were the most open about their racist practices of never hiring the people they were making a profit from. Because they were too blunt about getting rich off poor people. Because their hatred of poor people was too visceral and was felt by all poor people who entered their stores. Because they were the closest stores to the poor riot neighbourhoods. Because their stores were in the poorest sections of black neighbourhoods. Suddenly. The Koreans demanded compensation. They demanded their rights as small shopkeepers to make a profit off the poorest black neighbourhoods in town. They moaned and wept. As Asian victims typically do when any unforeseen catastrophe befalls them. Refusing to understand why it happened to them.

And they still refuse to hire people from the neighbourhoods their stores are in. Now they have now managed to improve their image and are becoming more Americanized. Now they are joining the Better Business Bureau. They are starting to learn English. They are cramming dollars into political coffers. They are seeking friends in high places. That is how they reacted. Is this an indication of how small businesses work? Unfortunately: yes. Small stores do not teach you how to be giving, or loving, or kind, or generous. They do not teach humane values. They do not practice humane values. The idea of selling anything. That this should be your life's work? Is not a human thing. It is not good for you. The only dynamic that is humane in small stores is the smaller the store, the less profit you can make, and the less power you have, the more you have to work for your profit. It is only lower down on the food chain of middlemen who profit from buying and selling things. What can people do to begin to equalize the inequities of rich and poor?

Get rid of big supermarkets. Get rid of as many big stores as possible. Get rid of as many buyers and sellers as possible. Any city can easily feed its population if it allowed farmers to come in and sell directly to the consumer. The food would be fresher, better, cheaper, healthier, less processed, and shopping would become a joy instead of a chore. People could develop personal relationships with their own favourite farmers and tell them what they liked. Then; all the thousands of foods and plants and vegetables, herbs, etc. that are not mass marketed; could be sold, tasted and enjoyed in season...when they are fresh and good for you. So you only eat winter vegetables in winter and summer vegetables in summer... making your body more attuned to the passing seasons and able to withstand each season better. Get rid of every intermediary in existence. Get rid of their obscene profits and corruption. Get rid of fancy, overpriced, over-processed food. Get rid of everything that is over-processed. Simplify each process. Simplify your life. Simplify your work. Simplify your society. Then shopping, cooking, and eating with your family would become source of togetherness, fun, and love.

Most corporations exist only because they monopolize certain patented expensive, complicated processes. The supermarket is supposed to be more convenient, easier, faster, and cheaper. It is not. It is a fraud that advertisers have brainwashed the masses into believing. In addition; once these corporations destroy their smaller rivals and competitors; people have no recollection of there being any better way to live. They forget that there were fifty other choices, and now there are only three. The mainstay of the American economy is still small business. It is not too late to kill the corporate monsters and monopolized oligarchies. Get rid of the Wal-Mart's; bring back the small-town middle America everyone is still nostalgic about...and you will see how dramatically your life improves. Then all the billions of profit dollars that these corporations suck out of each small economy; will stay in those small economies; and make all the people in those communities better-off. The economic facts are simple enough to understand. Consumer Capitalism is based on the fallacy that what is new, is better than what is old. When the exact opposite is true. Mass production: is based upon selling the cheapest, worst products for the biggest profit possible.

Basically: everything that was made 50 years ago was made better, and lasted longer and cost less than the shit that is sold today. If it is made too well, or is too cheap... it is discontinued: like video recorder were discontinued after they became too reliable and too cheap.

Capitalism has brainwashed the entire human race into believing that if it is newer... then it must be better. The fact is: the newer it is: the lousier the quality, the cheaper it is, the more it malfunctions, the less you can fix it or repair it, the faster you have to throw it away, the more easily it breaks, the faster it becomes obsolete.

Even if you wanted to keep an old computer that works just fine... the technology computers use force you to throw it away whether you want to or not. Because they are coming out with newer and newer, and more complicated programs and software... that need more and more complex computers with bigger memory banks that work faster and faster to handle the tons of over-complex, needless, over complicated crap that all these extra programs are loaded down with. Every program comes out with a newer updated model or add-on... until they becomes dysfunctionally overloaded and stop working period. Then a newer more complicated piece of crap is sold in its stead.

Anything that is made too well is discontinued: because it does not make enough money. Consumer capitalism exists only because people are brainwashed and addicted to buying new shit, and throwing away the old. When what you use the computer for has not changed.

Old things cost less, work better, last longer, and are simpler and easier to use than new things. If consumers ever woke up enough to realize this and stop consuming. Capitalism would vanish. And good riddance. The craze, the addiction to buying new crap: is a basic given. It is assumed that you will want a newer model car. It is assumed that a newer model car is better than an older model.

Why is this a global craze? Why do people buy things they do not need? Why do people spend their money buying all the crap that is worse than the crap they already have? Why do consumers constantly throw away old things so they can buy newer things? Because civilization is based upon the dynamic of one-sided accumulation. Even if you hate accumulating anything. Even if you hate your garage filled with junk. Even if you hold garage sales, and throw away as much crap as you can... It still accumulates. Remorselessly. Inevitably. No matter what you do... every year: you end up with more junk you have to throw away.

Is it a subconscious hunger? Born of inner emptiness that makes consumers buy and buy?

No. It is because that is all there is to consumer society. Take away all the commercial selling new crap. Take away all the new movies, the new toys, the new gadgets, the new cars, the new products, the new services, the new technologies, the Media, shopping. And there is nothing left. Without this new crap: you would be forced to deal with your own life. You would be forced to talk to your own family. You would be forced to talk to your neighbour. You would be forced to become aware of what is happening on your street. You would be forced to become aware of what the robber Barons are doing all over the world. You would be forced to become aware that you are a sucker, a victim. You would be forced to become a workaholic or an alcoholic to deaden yourself to your own boredom and pain. You would be forced to deal with your own feelings and thoughts. You would not have a billion ways of distracting yourself outwardly. You would be forced to become aware of your inner self. You would be forced to become aware that you actually do have an Inner Self.

You be forced to start thinking for yourself. You would be forced to start asking questions about yourself. You would be forced to ask questions of other people. You would be forced to finally realize that deep inside: you are not actually happy at all. You would be forced to finally become consciously unhappy with yourself. You would be forced to do something about your unhappiness. You would be forced to socialize with other people. You would be forced to organize yourselves into groups. You would be forced to become politically educated about all the graft and corruption going on under your very nose.

You would be forced to start question authority...

You would be forced to start questioning the status quo.

You would be forced to push for changes.

You would be forced to become politically involved with your community and politically active and become politically passionate about certain things.

You'd be forced to realize that all the authority figures that told you what was what are all full of shit.

You would be forced to become a dangerous person. You would be forced to stop lying to other people.

You would be forced to become more connected to the world around you.

You be forced to become educated about a lot of things you didn't want to know. You would be forced to realize what is actually going on.

You would be forced to become a social and political activist fighting for causes you believe-in. You would be forced to rip down all the fabric of global capitalism that is spewing and throwing this new-fangled shit at consumers as fast as they can... desperately hoping they can keep them addicted to these toys and distracted enough and lazy enough and stupid enough not to ask where they came from or why they are discontinuing good lines and introducing worse and worse quality in their products...

Because if they ever stop finding new shit to sell you. If consumers ever get tired of all this useless crap. If consumers ever wake up and stop consuming. Then you will have an implosion... an emptiness of the human spirit, an all-pervading terror, a sense of dread... that will sweep the world, and wipe every fucking Robber Baron and corporation off the map.

Then businesses will have no employees showing up for work. There will be no shoppers. There will be no cars driving. There will be no factories running. There will be no government offices staffed. Then all the cities in the world will become empty shells. Then silence will fall down on this insane system called civilization. But as long as the noise and bustle keep people preoccupied, as long as people gather in crowds where they can lose their own sense of individuality... and long as people prefer to be distracted by shit rather than live... the machine called civilization will continue to function. Run and driven by mechanically functioning humans called civilized people.

Modern consumer society is made up of nothing. It is empty. Anyone with any education and intelligence will agree with this. But how can you escape it? It is all around you. People buying and selling. Why? Why are they trying to sell crap that is worthless? Why do people buy it? What is the value of a large diamond? What is it good for? Why do people pay millions of dollars for this crap? Why are diamonds so expensive? What determines the cost of anything, is largely dependant upon how many hands it has passed through. You can go to the Nairobi diamond mines and buy a diamond directly from the worker who sweated to get it... and only pay a few pennies. Go to any of the Asian or south American mining towns and you can get 'precious stones' for almost nothing. They are only expensive because they are controlled and made artificially exclusive by cartels, oligarchic industries, governments, etc. Most things are made expensive by middlemen... buying and selling. The entire push of capitalism is to make anything that is desirable or has a market, to be as exclusive and as expensive as possible. Once people find out that other people want something, then they try to keep them from having it, unless they pay through the nose for it. Turning the whole world onto buyers and sellers has turned everyone into distrustful haters and enemies. Buying and selling has polarized the entire human race into paranoid, fear-filled, mistrustful, selfish souls; who do not believe that anyone would ever want to do anything unless it is for a profit. It has narrowed all humans understanding each other... and squeezed it into a buyer-seller corruption of unloving bitter, shrivelled souls; who only understand selfishness.

The less hands any product goes through: the less corrupt it is, the cheaper it is, and the better it is made.. The more equal the exchange, the less mistrust there is. The less profit there is, the less poverty there is. The less profit there is, the less billionaires there are..

You would be forced to become a dangerous person. You would be forced to stop lying to other people. You would be forced to become more connected to the world around you. You be forced to become educated about a lot of things you didn't want to know. You would be forced to realize what is actually going on.

You would be forced to become a social and political activist fighting for causes you believe-in. You would be forced to rip down all the fabric of global capitalism that is spewing and throwing this new-fangled shit at consumers as fast as they can... desperately hoping they can keep them addicted to these toys and distracted enough and lazy enough and stupid enough not to ask where they came from or why they are discontinuing good lines and introducing worse and worse quality in their products... Because if they ever stop finding new shit to sell you. If consumers ever get tired of all this useless crap. If consumers ever wake up and stop consuming. Then you will have an implosion... an emptiness of the human spirit, an all-pervading terror, a sense of dread... that will sweep the world, and wipe every fucking Robber Baron off the map.

Buying and selling has polarized the entire human race into paranoid, fear-filled, mistrustful, selfish souls; who do not believe that anyone would ever want to do anything unless it is for a profit. It has narrowed all humans understanding each other... and squeezed it into a buyer-seller corruption of unloving bitter, shrivelled souls; who only understand selfishness. The less hands any product goes through: the less corrupt it is, the cheaper it is, and the better it is made.. The more equal the exchange, the less mistrust there is. The less profit there is, the less poverty there is. The less profit there is, the less billionaires there are..

Oh yes... those poor billionaires... all those missing billions of dollars. Now their hardship is worth billions of people starving. Someone explain this to me.

The simpler any process is; the harder it is to corrupt. The more complicated any process is: the easier it is to manipulate, twist, distort, and corrupt. That is why all bureaucracies grow. They are merely insuring their own self-survival. If there was no complex process of paperwork to do, they would be out of a job without any power, status, or wealth. Get rid of the intermediaries, and all their useless procedures and you will reduce the amount, level, and degree of corruption in any system, any organization, any government, any bureaucracy, any hierarchy. Yet this is precisely what all of them resist and fight against. Instead they all come up with any excuse to increase the size of their budget, their staff, their power, their jurisdiction etc. Inventing even more complex procedures, more complicated ways of doing something.

Almost every common sense objection to senseless regulations, any suggestion to simplify anything... is ignored, resisted, and fought bitterly. All of the slave-clerks disown themselves of their own job functions They leave that responsibility for the supreme authority of the head office. Why? Because if any of them suggest an improvement that smacks of good sense: they are hounded, cut out of the decision-making process, blackballed and never promoted. Any group of people whose retaining their job depends on the authority that they are given over others will be threatened if anyone tries to criticize the way it does its everyday business... because you are in effect telling them that they are superfluous, unneeded, and should be fired. Do you expect the ones in authority to fire themselves? Or 'listen' to your suggestions that would put them out of a job? People like their routines to become sanctified. This way they don't have to think about anything critically. This way they do not have to justify what they do every day to anyone. This way they can function purely as unthinking machines.

For example... Imagine an independent housepainter disowning how he paints a wall... or what kind of brush he uses. Imagine if he were to use an artist's fine-point 1/16th inch brush to paint a wall instead of using a roller. Imagine a bystander commenting that he is taking too long to paint that wall. That it will take him five years to do it instead of half an hour. And he gets insulted that anyone dares to suggest that his way is not proper. And even if he agrees with the bystander: imagine him saying:

'Well... that's up to the head office to decide... I don't have any authority to change my artist's brush and replace it with a roller. I've tried to make suggestions and they ignore them every time: so I've stopped even making suggestions because nobody wants to listen. however: You can make the suggestion if you want to.' Although you don't even work here, and you have no personal understanding of the office politics of my bureau, and you don't know who has the actual clout and authority, and you don't know who you should talk to...

'They might listen to you because you're an outsider. You're giving them something they call: feedback'... Something they can safely throw out because you won't come back and pester them and fight for your idea about me using a roller instead of an artist's 1/16th inch brush.'

'It's not my problem that it takes me 5 years to paint a wall. I get paid every week regardless of how long it takes to paint this wall. So... don't complain to me about how the way we do things here being so stupidly inefficient. What are you trying to do: insult me? I'm just following orders. I'm just following company policy.'

'This is the way we usually do it'...

'And for you to dare suggest any other way? Who do you think you are? You have no power over me! You're a nobody. You can't tell me what to do. My Boss? My boss is fine with how I do things. This is the way he wants things done. So get lost and don't bother me with your idiotic comments, complaints, or suggestions.'

Of course this would never happen with an independent painter. If he tried to paint a wall with an artists brush instead of rolling it, or spraying it; whoever hired him would fire him on the spot. Or... he would starve for five years before he got paid and eventually die of malnutrition.

But this scenario happens in all bureaucracies. That is what happens to all hierarchical systems. That is what happens to all centralized-specialized processes and institutions. That is what happens inside all corporations, all governments. The bigger they get; the stupider they get. The safer they get; the stupider they get. The more complex their operations become; the more inefficient they become.

The evolution of all manufacturing, all factories, and all tool development works along the same rationalizations. Every factory fights to get the most complex, most expensive machines possible. Every appliance and gadget fights to be more complex and more modern. Is there any push in civilized societies to simplify anything at all? No. And until this basic side-effect of over-intensive tool-use is reversed, the corruption in all civilized societies will get progressively worse regardless of all the band-aid attempts to fix incremental parts of the overall problem.

Another capitalistic myth that needs to be completely exposed and destroyed: The lie, myth, and fallacy of your money 'working for you' is used to justify and explain every capitalistic venture, every racket, every scam, every way of making an easy dollar from real estate, rental properties, casinos, investments, insurance companies, pharmaceutical companies, to weapons manufacturers, science laboratories, retirement funds, mutual funds, bonds, and venture capital... when all this is, is just a bunch of scams and rackets carefully normalized, sanctified into revered institutions and upheld as unquestioned pillars of the 'community' which they sanctify to preserve and perpetuate their advantages and privileges. Let anyone question their 'right' to exist, their 'right' to making whatever profit margin they can get away with; and the questioner is quickly hustled away, silenced, jeered at, or considered to be a crackpot.

Try explaining the benefits of greed to the starving poor in Africa, Asia and South America; and see what happens. Try to export a universal ethic of greed to the unlucky ones who have no hope of ever benefiting from it. No... better yet, espouse it to the already affluent: at stockbroker dinners and business colleges... to the acolytes... then sell TV shows worshipping the Lives of the Rich and Famous to the TV poor and get them become as hopefully greedy, envious, and as mindlessly worshipful of them as possible. Why be a missionary for greed... when the TV culture of consumerism does a better job of it without any personal risk? What is modern culture but a modernized process of converting the ignorant to a more corrupt set of destructive greed-consumer-self-gratification values? What is today's civilization but a process of turning people into believers in the sanctity of greed? What is modern civilization but the desperate attempt to commercialize everything? Not one living civilized person can or even wants to defend this value, rationalize it, or justify it. Not one living human would even try to defend greed as the highest civilized ethic. Yet this is what the highest, most universal human civilized ethical value is... Greed. It is the highest most powerful, most motivating civilized destructive force, the most powerful moral value on Earth. And as long as civilized people are universally corrupted by it... it will never be openly questioned or discussed. Unless people develop an outside perspective on what their life is like. Unless people begin to realize the effect it has on them.

This universal civilized ethical value has reduced nearly all human contact, all human effort, all human interest, all human motivation, all human activity, all human focus, and all human awareness down to only two things: buying or selling. Most people spend most of lives doing only these two boring, meaningless, pointless, insane things. They are busy nearly all the time either buying or selling something. You can buy or sell for a billion years... but it will not make you any happier, any wiser, any healthier, any smarter, or more humane. They are completely mindless, ludicrous, boring, repetitive activities. Is buying and selling all there is to living? Even worse... buying or selling the same thing over and over...?

That is a sure-fire way to produce boredom, non-creativity, unhappiness, and soul-deadness in people. Make boring mindless work necessary for civilized survival. Make it normal... sacred... unquestioned. How people are forced to do it? Because everybody else is doing it. And if you don't do it: you end up unemployed, broke, homeless, and starving. The only reasons for buying or selling; are advantages... the pure necessity that comes from living in a civilized culture, greed... and the fear of poverty.

Is that all humans are supposed to do... either buy something or sell something? What if nobody bought or sold anything? How much free time, energy, creativity, happiness, good will, love, trust, would that produce? Buying and selling only keeps people wary of each other, mistrusting of each other. The second you want to either buy or sell anything, motives are suspect: and for good reason. The only purpose to buy or sell anything is to make a profit, get an advantage, make money, or accumulate power-wealth-status-knowledge. In any civilized society... people do not want your love. They do not want your trust. They do not want your respect. They do not want your friendship. They do not want anything human from you. All they want is your money. How can any sane person expect to be happy when civilization is a money-driven, machine-driven... not driven by love or humane reasons or motivations? And why don't people try to change it?

All professions are merely ways of doing something unlovingly. Professions are merely a guaranteed, safe, easy way of making money. Any love involved in minimal compare to the unloving need to make a profit from it. There are many people who are better at professions than many professionals. But... they don't have the diplomas, the courses, the huge waste of time and money needed to become a professional... so they cannot do what the professional does unless they do it the professional way... meaning do it lousily and expensively. Any chef will tell you that if you do not actually love cooking; then you will never amount to anything as a chef. Any musician will tell you that if you do not enjoy playing music so practice is not a chore but rather enjoyable: you will never learn how to play properly.

But... 99.9% of all other callings need no love to master or practice. In fact: if you try to practice any profession lovingly: that would make you fail at being a lawyer, or a policeman, or a politician or a doctor. Lawyers that actually want to help people: quit. Police officers who actually want to help people: quit. Doctors who actually want to help people: quit. Because they soon find out that the system does not allow them to help people. Politicians who actually want to help people are never voted in to begin with. If people only did what they loved doing; then there would be no unloving people professionally hurting others. That is the result of all over-intensive tool-use. The over-intensive use of our minds as cold, unfeeling tools is inhumane.

Why are only the biggest fakes elected into office? Because the public craves fakery at all levels. The public does not like to be told any unpleasant truths or have to make any unpleasant decisions. They want to be lied to. They do not like voting into office anyone who might be smarter than they are. And due to the law of averages and the lowest common denominator of intelligence, due to the lowest common morals, the lowest ethics: it is usually the dumbest, most corrupt, and most corruptible politician who wins. People do not like to have anyone else better than they are as their equal representative representing them in public office. The fakery of politicians is just as much as reflection of all the fakery in that society, and all of its people as well as all the fakery of the politicians whose way of getting elected is simply by finding out what people want to hear... what people think they want... in order to avoid unpleasantness, you have to lie more convincingly and try to please everyone. Any politician who votes their conscience is immediately rejected not only by their own party but the public as well. People do not want to make any hard choices, or do anything that will in the slightest, inconvenience them. The only way they can do that, and still claim to want a better society is if they lie to themselves as much as possible. This self-dishonesty, this self-deception.... The relative level of dishonesty in any society is mirrored in how dishonest and corrupt their politicians are.

The endless repetition of humans never learning from their mistakes is played out year after year in nearly every election that is held. The candidates say they will do this. They are elected for their promise to do this. They renege on their promises. They stand for election again, promising to 'do this'. They never do. But they still keep on getting voted into office.

619

When will people learn that politics is about money first and power second? The only reason for power is to get your social class more money. Why do you think the Democratic millionaires are being so spineless, while the Republican billionaires ram through more corrupt legislation to improve the lives of the rich? Huh?

If you want someone to address your concerns, then vote for someone who is as poor as you are... And who is honest enough not to be bought off by the corrupt advantages they will find themselves immersed in. Then you will get some action. Instead: people constantly vote-in, exclusively wealthy people to care about the concerns of the poor and the disadvantaged!... so gosh. Excuse them if these wealthy politicians help the rich become even wealthier and more powerful. Or... whomever they vote in, becomes wealthy as a part of the corrupt process of the privilege bargaining we call politics. If there were no special privileges in the first place, there would be no need for politicians. The dynamics of democratic politics, the dynamics of all politics; are based on special privilege and selective exclusivity... not equality.

Why has nobody figured this out yet? Rich people for the most part are not concerned about poor people issues. Poor people for the most part are not concerned about rich people's issues. All the poor need to do is organize themselves well enough to put in poor candidates that refuse to be bought, and spread the word at grassroots level enough to neutralize the expensive ads rich candidates inundate the public with. There are not enough rich people to go door-to-door throughout every voting district and make a personal appeal to each voter. All they have is money and what that money can buy. If any poor population were educated properly, and bothered to organize themselves; they could easily oust the rich elite from office and create a government that works for its majority, that works for its poor since the poor are always in the majority. Any intelligent, well-educated poor majority could easily destroy all of the privileges held by the rich. And easily destroy the rich as a class. If people incomes were equalized enough; then for once, humans would no longer be pitted against each other because of how much money they had or did not have. And for once, humans would not be socialized into antagonistic classes based on their wealth-interest greed-levels.

But again... most of the poor in our World have already been successfully corrupted into consumerism, into greed, and the selfishness of wanting to be rich. None of them are willing to destroy the equal. Actually microscopic. Chance of getting rich. Even though there is no equality in that chance. The right of equality is almost universally interpreted as being the right to be as equally rich as possible... or, to hell with equality...: just as rich as possible. When greed comes into the picture... equality goes out: period. The right to one's own greed is never challenged or questioned. The rights of equality are stolen and trampled-on every day without a whimper. Yet; nobody seems to want to admit this in public. And even if one does: this banal fact falls on deaf ears and is ignored blithely. If poor people were not greedy... and were educated about the sins of greed: then they would not allow any minority to rule them.

The reason all grass-roots movements fail is because all of them are selfish, specialized self-interests who do not give a damn about all of the other selfish, specialized self-interest groups. They are only concerned about their own grievances: and could not care less about the millions of other injustices in their society. So; they all end up fighting against each other. The only reason Capitalism works is because it has managed to make all people fight against each other: while those at the top profit from it.

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six A: The Beginnings of civilization

620

Capitalism has eaten its way into the souls of humans, and managed to segment and fragment society into alienated, powerless individuals, and corrupt them to develop the lowest, most corrupt values of greed and self-gratification. Capitalism is based upon the majority being lowered to the lowest possible level: the commonality of universal human greed and universal personal selfishness. It is based upon the unspoken assumption that all people are greedy and selfish... that there are always more greedy selfish people than generous unselfish ones. Civilization makes sure that the few who are not greedy, are crushed, or ignored, or laughed at. It is a system that unavoidably corrupts everyone within it.

Democracy is supposed to be based upon equal rights. Democracy is supposed to be based upon all kinds of equality: the equal right to vote, the equal right to work, the equal right to unemployment insurance, the equal right of an old-age pension, the equal right to decent living conditions, the equal right to be educated, the equal right to health care, the equal rights of privacy, the equal right of free speech, the equal right to defend yourself, the equal right to a fair trial, the equal rights of ownership, the equal right of choice... but what about the right to an equal rate of profit? It does not exist even as a law. This is the problem with selective awareness and the segmentation of human society. Everything civilized people do is unfair because it is not done universally and fairly; instead it is done piece-meal based on the dynamic of pyramidal hierarchy.

The quibbling neglected equal right of the right to an equal rate of profit is never even mentioned or spoken of. In fact... it has never been written about ever in human history... why? That is: except in envious outrage at someone making more profit than you do. If only this one, single right of equality was effectively enforced, all the other rights of equality would become automatically self-regulating and never have to be regulated or enforced. And we would not need thousands and millions of laws or regulations to try to balance out the entire set of horrible unequal imbalances that are created when anyone makes too much profit.

What if everyone all over the Earth was only allowed an equal 3% profit margin? This would destroy the entire motive to get rich in the first place; because all the get-rich-quick schemes would either be illegal or disappear. It would reduce the cost of literally everything, while keeping intact every healthy motive for self-improvement. It would also destroy larger businesses that rely on larger profit margins in order to even exist. No Wal-Mart could ever survive running on the slim profit margin of a mom-and-pop store. No oil corporation could ever survive on a small profit margin. The only reason they exist at all is because they do business by having an unfair profit margin... charging tens, even hundreds of times more for their services and products than smaller businesses do. They exist only because they are granted monopolies and are not taxed. While the smaller businesses are taxed to the hilt. That in itself represents a huge profit-margin unfairness. Large companies and corporations exist only because of government welfare handouts. They only exist because the government taxes poor people; and gives the money of the poor people to rich people and to the rich corporations.

What if all businesses were taxed fairly and evenly regardless of how small or big they are? Then they could all compete on an even, equal, fair playing level. But is this ever done, or even spoken of? No. Except people whining about privileges others have... which they wished they had. But destroy the 'profit incentive'? Never.

You can get rich too easily from it if you are a greedy scumbag who doesn't care about anything else except money. Otherwise everyone would have to work equally hard to make the same amount of money. What a repugnant thought for a fat, out-of shape affluent consumer. What an attractive idea for a slim, fit poor non-consumer.

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six A: The Beginnings of civilization

621

Capitalism creates greedy people... it creates greed: nothing else.

Such a universal law would separate the greedy from the not-so greedy and make them as visible, and as different from decent people as animals are from birds. People would see the greedy ones working twice as fast than need be, twice as long, twice as hard for no reason... just to make more money... and be welcome to it and despised for it as sick workaholics who do not know how to enjoy life. You want to waste all of your adult life just to have two cars, and a house twice the size of others? Go ahead. Children will see happier people not working all their lives and compare them to these inhuman work-machines... and guess which example they will follow?

An equal profit margin and an equal rate of taxation would destroy the phenomenon of useless, pointless excesses like the Hearst castle... What sane person would ever want to live inside such a monstrosity: except as a status symbol? Equal profit margins would destroy all obscene status symbols, all ostentatious forms of wealth. It would rid human society of much of its pointless waste. It would make it impossible to become too rich or too wasteful. It would destroy every form of accumulated wealth concentrated in the millions and billions of dollars into the account of one person, who does not need it, or ever use it for anything good. Why do people amass these fortunes? Privilege. Power. Safety. Security. Fear of poverty. What do they do with all of their excess wealth? Waste it on pointless excessive luxuries... on gold-plated faucets costing 35,000 dollars as status symbols.

An equal profit margin would funnel all that untold secret wealth back into the masses... who could work happily and healthily for a slight profit margin; since there would be no monopolized industries overcharging them. Then: the fastest way to get rich would be to hire more people for your business and expand it. Except... the larger your business becomes, the less efficient it becomes. That is the Law of Diminishing Returns. You end up destroying your profit margin by increasing your inefficiency. People would find that the best, easiest, fastest way to make the maximum profit possible ... would be only through their own efforts... or cooperating with others equally, in small groups. They would find a diminishing set of returns in any group that becomes too large and unwieldy. Which would make any concentrated accumulation of wealth impossible. And also, by the way... make any obscene concentrated accumulation of power, status, or knowledge impossible.

So...start a franchise of small businesses? Who wants to work for a corporate franchise, if you can make more money running your own coffee-shop? Running it the way you want to... decorating it the way you want to? The only reason Starbucks exists at all, is because they can buy coffee cheaper wholesale in huge quantities, with a lower overhead, and a higher profit margin than any single owner of a shop can. If any single coffee shop owner could buy coffee for the same price as Starbucks does: there would be no Starbucks.

A fixed universal, equal profit margin would destroy any attempt to get rid of surplus goods at a reduced rate, because that would become illegal. Then there would be no such thing as, retail or wholesale or any kind of sale. Then the price of everything would be stable. Then you could finally have a stable economy. It would destroy cost manipulations of all kinds. Because then any kind of cost-profit manipulation would become illegal. There would be no cost manipulation whatsoever. It would destroy all profiteering. All profiteering would become illegal. If the cost of all goods and services were stabilized: people would live with such a sense of security, that there wouldn't be any need for very much profit at all in the first place: to have a good, and happy life. Because then it would become illegal to take advantage of any other human being in the sick, sneaky, underhanded form of illegal profit. Then you could have plenty of time for your family and friends; and have fun and socialize... instead of becoming a boring workaholic. The last century has spawned boring workaholics by the billions. And look at what they are doing with their lives. Making them into endless drudges of misery and unhappiness.

Anyone buying a hammer now, or five years later; would still pay the same price. All sales and markdowns would become illegal. Even if someone is actually going out of business: they should still be paid honestly for what their business is worth and not cheated because someone is trying to get a special deal and profit from their misfortune.

A universal law of strictly limiting all profit to three percent: would prevent people from profiting from other people's misfortune. A universal Law making any profit more than three percent illegal, would completely destroy the idea that it is okay to get anything cheaply just because someone else is desperate, or needs help, or needs money. It would completely destroy the urge to mass-produce anything. Since the advantages you could get from it would be outweighed a thousand-fold by the disadvantages. A three percent profit margin would not allow large corporate monsters like G.M. to exist at all. All corporations would disappear completely. They would become as extinct, and as the dodo, and the Dinosaurs. Then you could go down to your local mechanic, tell him what kind of car you want, and three weeks later it would be ready for you as specified... custom built from top to bottom... by components easily fitted and installed; because you would have no huge corporation twisting their chassis so they are different from other models of mass-produced cars. Then the entire automotive industry of small factories would be geared to supply the small car-building shops with the simplest, easiest installations and fits possible... instead of churning out insanely expensive objects; that are re-modeled every year into more idiotic complexities for no reason, except to call them new.

If you equalized the profit margin globally, or even Nationally... you revolutionize human existence beyond our capacity to imagine what kind of societies might develop from it. That is only one simple change, of one small aspect of our civilized way of life. But instead of equalizing anything: all civilized societies only pile up old, obsolete, outdated things more, and more inefficiently and wastefully. We can do this only because we use unfair, unequal profit margins. Just so a few people can accumulate more power, wealth, privilege, and status. The reason I do not include the accumulation of knowledge; is because most of this accumulated knowledge is not knowledge at all: but a bunch of worthless ideas and facts that are mostly unusable. Except in the sense of the privileged knowledge of who-knows-who: which is how all elite groups work to make themselves exclusive, powerful, rich, etc.

What would happen to all Venture Capital then? What would happen to the stock market? To bonds? To securities? To certificates of deposit? To banks? To investment firms? They would all disappear. Each person would have a roughly equal amount of time in their life and decide how much of their life they want to waste working. And decide how much of their time they want to turn into money.

Oh. You made a million dollars with your time. Gosh. That's impressive. But... now you're 90 years old and you're dying. So what are you going to do with all of your saved-up Time, er money, er energy, er life...? Nothing? Oh. Give it away to people who did not earn it? For free? Gosh. That's awfully generous of you... Thanks. Oh. I see. You have translated hundreds of thousands of hours of your life into pieces of paper. You have translated most of the adult years of your life into paper called: 'money'... You have tried to save up, and accumulate all these years of life-energy into a pile of paper money... And now that you are old and dying... all these wasted, er saved-up years, pieces of paper, er money; are worthless to you. So these pieces of paper are the only leftover evidence of your wasted life... as the only legacy left of your wasted, accumulated life-energy. Oh...

If the highest possible return for your investment could only be 3%... minus all the overhead of any business or stock you invest in... why get less than 3% back... when you can plow it back into your own business: and reap a higher, compounding interest?
What?...

If that happened: then the World Bank would disappear. NAFTA would disappear. All global monopolies would disappear. All global financial power brokers would disappear. And the only people with true power would be each individual with their individual almost completely equal amount of wealth, and self-respect, and power. What would that do to all the social systems, the rackets, and the scams that rely upon corruption to even exist?

With only a universal 3% profit margin... just how much money could be scraped together from how many individuals to bribe politicians or officials? And would it be worth the risk? Losing your integrity and reputation for a lousy 3% bribe?... and how easy would it be to sniff out those who were bribed and are being bribed? How easy would it be for the IRS to find anyone living beyond their means... if everyone had roughly the same amount of wealth? The entire echelon of government services would be streamlined and would so efficiently that government people might actually feel that they are useful. People might actually come to like honest governments, and demand that they be kept honest. This is only one example of how any single root change, can transform human societies beyond our imagination... provided everyone does it. Provided it includes everyone. Provided there are no exceptions. Because if you try to apply this idea incrementally: nothing will happen. Only a drastic, across the board... instantaneous change can work.

If you want an even better way to get corruption out of business. Make all sales of ownership for life. Then if any corporate Robber Baron wants to buy and own a company; and skim off the profits and skip town; make it a federal, international crime and hunt them down, and bring them back, and hang them dead. Make all firing of employees of owned business up-to-and-including the owners begin from the top; not the bottom. The first person to be fired must be the owner, the boss. At every level. And the first person to be fired has to be the one at the top, not the bottom.

Then all incompetent owners will go bankrupt and be fired the first month of any business's opening. Then the slightest lay-offs will only clean out the executive boardrooms of each corporation, and those under them will come into power... until either a team of competent executives is found from the lowest ranks of workers at that company, or the entire business goes bankrupt and shuts its doors. Throw out all legal evasions of debt like title nine. Force corporate executive to be more responsible for their actions and decisions.... Rather than completely unaccountable; as they are now. Make the failing of any business a criminal offense. Put all incompetent, stupid executives into prison. Jail them. Fine them. Shame them for destroying people's incomes, destroying jobs that people need to pay rent and buy food and support their families with. Suddenly all currently corrupt business practices will be exposed, and reported on, and criminally prosecuted... and the whistleblowers will be rewarded as public heroes instead of the public ignoring them as they do now: as indifferent, passive, uncaring bystanders, and letting them be hounded and discriminated against and threatened and attacked for the rest of their lives without protecting the few exceptions who are the only sentinels that tell us of robber baron corruption left in our society..

And you will have only honest businesses making an honest three-percent profit competently... and you will finally have upward mobility. Then the actual cream... those who are actually smarter, better, brighter, more creative, braver, more honest, nicer people rising to the top because of their superior integrity, and because they care more about other people, and communicate better, and lead better, and cooperate better and are more humane. Instead of the worst, sickest, greediest, power junkies and status seekers and social climbers becoming obscenely wealthy off the corruption they create. Then you will actually have the most decent, the most intelligent people at the top... instead of the sneakiest, oiliest, most treacherous liars and hypocrites and sycophants rising to the top as is the customary business practice today. All it needs is reversing the status quo, and turning the shit corruption of society upside down... all it takes is throwing out every corrupt normality you don't.

Why the fuck not? People making the most profit, and people with the most power should be the ones who are most responsible, the most accountable, and the ones punished the most for their mistakes. Because their mistakes have bigger consequences. Their mistakes affect more people. The more you stand to profit from something, the bigger your risk should be, not the smaller your risk, and the more responsible you should be. The more you are responsible for other people's livelihoods and jobs: the stiffer the penalties should be if you betray them, and they lose their incomes and jobs because of you.

Pyramidal responsibility does not work. It cannot work. Can you kill Hitler six million times for killing six millions Jews? No. You can only kill him once. Any social system that allows a person to kill more than one person... without being killed themselves does not work. It cannot work. Civilization should be completely trashed simply because the structural makeup of its legal and justice systems cannot be responsible. Big important bosses and Wall Street executives demand competence from all their employees. They demand their employees to be on time for work. They demand their shirts are properly cleaned and ironed, they demand their coffee served on time. Any show of incompetence gives them a nice excuse to fire the shoeshine boy for not shining their shoes properly.

Well... if you are an executive and you do not do your job properly and you lose two million dollars of your company's money.... Don't you think that executive should be punished two thousand times more harshly than just being fired? If all business firings and punishments are put on a scale of proportional monetary value: then compared to losing two million dollars: a slightly unpolished shoe is unimportant. Then if the punishment for losing two million dollars is public castration, and losing one million dollars is being strung up by your balls naked and being shot to death... then executives might be more considerate to their employees... and worry more about their own competency, than the competence of a lowly shoeshine boy.

Then you will find the urge for upward mobility slowing down. Then big-shot asses parading around executive offices acting important, will become very careful how they risk their own balls... by becoming very careful how they risk the assets and money of their company Money... currency; was only invented as a more impersonal, a more inhuman, a more abstract way of exchanging things. It was invented as an abstract convenience. When people were originally living by a barter system, it was an easier way of translating chickens into ducks or goats. If we had not enslaved these animals in the first place, and butchered them: money would never have been invented. It is merely abstract tool. Nothing else. It was never designed, or meant to be worshipped in-and-of-itself. It was never originally designed to be used for people to constantly take advantage of each other by making a 'profit' on the exchange. That idea came later.

We have normalized our concepts about how money should be used, and why it should be used for so many thousands of years; that when you try to expose truth about money, you must also expose the truth about how it was corruptly used and why it was corruptly used for ten thousand years. This cultural perspective may be shocking. But it is not any less historically accurate or less true. If you want to understand your own relationship between your own self-worth, and the worth of the money you have: Try piling all of it in the middle of a room. Then pile a load of shit next to it. Then stare at both piles. Does either pile make you feel better? Does either pile make you a better person? Does it make you more Humane? More honest? More loving? More courageous? Does it affect how you deal with other people? Then have someone haul the pile of shit away. Will you curse them? Attack them? Or will you thank them for getting rid of something that stinks to high heaven and is an eyesore in your life? Then have someone haul all your money away. Will you curse them for it? Attack them for it? Or thank them for getting rid of something makes your soul stink to high heaven with greed, and is an eyesore in the eyes of all other people who know you.

Does your own happiness and self-worth revolve around how much shit you have, or how much money you have. Or does your own self-worth and happiness revolve around how much you can be of help to other people

Which kind of self-worth is healthy, and which kind stinks to high heaven both morally and ethically. Or, are you literally forced to glue your own self-worth to that pile of shit called money, because that is the only way other people value their souls and self-worth. So, to value yourself at all...you must conform to how others value themselves no matter how corrupt their method of valuation is. So... you must conform to how other people live, but nobody must conform to how you want to live. So, you are completely powerless in controlling how you want to live; except by the corrupt stinking method of translating what you are personally worth into a pile of shit called money? Somebody explain this to me. .

Profit means power. What kind of power? Profit is the power to kill. Taxation is the power to destroy and kill Taxation and profit are both forms of legalized robbery. They are basically the same. They are a safe way of killing your victim by bleeding him dry slowly... dollar-by-dollar, cent-by-cent. Robbing him of every minute of his life, every ounce of his energy. Until the victim stops living for himself completely and works for you all the time. Until the victim stops living for himself and only exists to work. Until he has to work all his life for you to buy food and clothes to barely exist... so he can work for you even longer and harder: until he dies of it Profit kills very slowly but very surely. It dries up human hearts; and turns them into dead stones slowly but surely. It kills human love slowly but surely. It kills everything it touches slowly but surely. Profit is pure evil. As long as you profit from other people: you cannot love them or help them. You can only take from them. You can only be selfish. You can only kill them slowly. You can only destroy their lives slowly. Safely. Legally. That is one effect of civilization upon humans.

If you want to find out how modern European corporate greed began: read histories of the Italian Renaissance. Read about the Medici's. A banking family. That gave favours and money to pirates. Read how one of their clients who was formerly a pirate... became the Pope in Rome. Read how they got their client Pope to legally give them the right to tax... every fucking Catholic church in all of fucking Europe. Read how their hit men and gangster collectors and strong-arm men visited every fucking church that did not pay them their legalized corrupt tax. Read what they did with the money. Read what happened to them. Read how they managed to buy the Papacy and put one of their own family members... an 18 yr-old adolescent idiot in power as Pope. Ask why these scum are worshipped and glorified today. Because we only worship the worst criminals. We do not worship honest men.

Read how the European culture of sponsors and clients in the Dark Ages and the Middle Ages; was a legalized form of bribery and corruption and favouritism for over 1,000 years in Europe. Read about the culture of the legalized giving and receiving of bribes and favours as a cultural norm for 1,000 years: it was called patronage. This custom came from Rome. It came from Egypt. It came from Babylon. Patronage is not a cultural custom. It is criminal conspiracy... which became an exclusive social custom of the rich and nobody else. Patronage is nothing more than blatantly naked criminal conspiracy between rich, privileged greedy, corrupt thieves. It has been practiced for over 10,000 years. Now it is a hallowed sanctified way of doing business and doing politics. Now it is the only way civilization works.

Look at modern corporate legalized bribery of client politicians and people of power, status and wealth... And you will find that Modern Corporate Capitalism is based upon an exact replica of 16th Century Medici banking practices, and their age-old corrupt Robber Baron traditions of patronage and Lorenzo Medici's cunning media propaganda.

The Dynamic of Patronage is 2,000 years old. It began with the Greek cultural Dynamic of Master-Slave. Which evolved into the Early European Feudal Dynamic of Lord-Vassal. Which slid into the Later European Renaissance Dynamic of Patron-Supplicant. It was a cultural slide into irresponsibility and corruption. The latest-worst slide of this obscene form of this obsolete mutual agreed-upon sickness of superiority and inferiority is: Corporation-Employee.

In Ancient Greece, Greek Masters freeing their slaves from bondage: tapped them on the shoulder.... That was all.

Why?

It was a sly joke. They were gently telling the idiot to wake up. They were telling the slave that he was already free. That he had always been free. That he had never been a slave in the first place. That it had only been his own sense of inferiority and his own fear that had enslaved him. That if he had asked for his freedom years earlier: he would have gotten it. That his enslavement had only been a psychological trick. And he had fallen for it.

Why? Because the Greeks had learned through painful lessons: that the only way they could keep their slaves enslaved was with kindness, and cunning. Cunning to brainwash their slaves into being servile, obedient sheep And just enough kindness to make sure they would not be murdered in their beds at night.

The Feudal rite of tapping a vassal on the shoulder to bestow Knighthood upon him came from the original practice of kindness Ancient Greeks practiced with slaves they had come to love, and who loved them back so much: they refused to leave the service of their master even after they had been freed. But this freeing of a slave happened very rarely. Most of the time the slaves of the Greeks hated their masters.

It was only the slaves who were educated better than their master. The slaves who were more intelligent than their masters. It was only these rare exceptions: who became indispensable. It was only these rare slaves who could not be replaced, or killed or sold because they were better than their masters: that this kind of relationship ever developed.

Feudal Lords tapped vassals on the shoulder not with their hand... but with their swords. They were not freeing their vassal slaves. They were giving them the right to kill other human beings in their lord's name. These tapped knighted vassals became licensed killers. 007 special agents. When ordered to, they went out and killed Whomever they were told to kill. No questions asked. Professional murderers. European knighthood has still not managed to hide the filth of its origins. Every fucking movie and story of European Kings has the same plot. Some greedy power-hungry vassal seeking to gain favour with his lord by killing someone to prove his fucking loyalty. This filthy culture has slid down to the present in the form of gangsters who are 'made' by killing someone for their boss. A ritual of betrayal and hate and fear and cunning and cowardice. Which is exactly what this filthy culture consisted of in Feudal Europe. Knights and Lords became mixed up. Feudalism had been not only a privilege of exclusive rights. It had been a personal responsibility on both sides. The vassal to obey the Liege Lord, and the Lord to take care of and rule the vassal wisely and justly: out of pure self-preservation and self-interest: so he would not be murdered in his bed... which was often the case.

Enter the Middle Class of Italy. Enter the Medici family of Florence. They became the go-betweens, they became the power-brokers of all Italy, and the European Christian church. They became the bankers of the rich and powerful. They became Patrons. They centralized the power of patronage by making deals and hatching conspiracies, and selling favours to the most corrupt men they could find. Because Feudalism had evolved into Patronage. Sacred personal vows had turned into familial traditions of servitude to certain higher patrons. Such as the Church, or a certain family of rich nobility, or a certain Bishop of the Realm, or Lord of the Realm.

The personal ties of earlier Feudalism faded into impersonal traditional relationships of set privileges for certain peasants or certain houses, or farms, or Lords... regardless of who held title or whose son was living on which farm or which person was Bishop of which Church.

The entire system was one of obligation, responsibility, and noblesse oblige. It was all a pack of cards. Every single European depended on another higher up for their privileges. Every person was leaned upon from below. A huge leaning pile of humans. Caving in every time badly: whenever anyone in the pile couldn't be depended on. Then came the Medici family. They turned personal patronage into a cold bloodless business. They bought and sold human souls like so much meat on the hoof. They bought themselves the Papacy. They bought themselves the highest power in Europe. Only: the dumb greedy fuckers didn't know what to do with all this power. All they were interested in was pure greed and selfishness.

They poisoned the entire system of feudal trust in Europe. They betrayed everyone: even themselves. Suddenly: nobody trusted anyone any more in Europe. Suddenly: Feudalism disappeared and was replaced with the insanities of chaos and greed and hate and fear and the Black death and lust and violence and atrocities and rape and murder and betrayal and robbers and anarchy and insanity exploding all the way from Italy all across Europe. European culture became a culture of mistrust. A mistrust so deep, so hidden, so rotten, so whitewashed: when Europeans came into contact with other cultures: these other cultures were simply not prepared for the sneaky, cunning, lying, layers of hidden hate and hidden fear, and hidden mistrust

The European society and culture of the Middle Ages continued to slide into mistrust, betrayal, self-interest, irresponsibility, and worsening corruption. Northern Europe threw its religious patronage system away almost completely when the Reformation happened. Tiny feudal Kingdoms and Fiefdoms appeared in Northern Europe. Where a man ruled only as far as his arm could smite around him. Their Feudalism regressed back to tiny holdings that were not as centralized as the Catholic Nations of Spain and France. Southern Europe rotted in its religious patronage and its Divine Right of Kings. Until French peasants became tired of starving to death under the insane incompetence of an aristocracy that had grown so arrogant, so stupid, so vain, so imbecilic, so diseases, so inbred, so sickly, and so infested with vices and addictions, and so indecently indifferent to its own masses. The peasants revolted.

Then came the new abstract insanity of Nationalism. Entire populations of lands were used as cannon fodder as the remaining elite battled for supremacy, power, and wealth. Patronage slid into the Roman filthy concept of exclusive citizenship and its obsolete latifundia. Inhuman Corporate bodies from across the sea in Europe using faceless slaves; to do their bidding in the New World. Sicily exported the most rotten form of Italian patronage: armed thugs, gangsters. Illegal criminals, known killers in broad daylight not being arrested. While Holland exported her most rotten form of corporate patronage: betraying its own officers and citizens and abandoning them to the English Robber Barons: all without so much as a fight. Exposing the depths of their venality and cowardice and weakness

While the culture of mass conformity, mass fear, mass stupidity, mass insanity, and mass obedience called Nationalism ... slid down into worse and worse levels of rotten corrupt patronage. Practiced behind closed doors in smoke-filled rooms. bought and sold like coins, like decapitated heads. And strutted their sacred rituals and parades and holy days: brainwashing the unwashed masses into loyal, obedient suckers. As the layers of patronage shrank: secrets piled up. Conspiracies, feuds, hate, fear, cunning, lies, false accusations, and the political filth of open ritualized hypocrisy became the order of the day: and the newspapers became the new Medici family. The News Media became the powerbrokers of today's Modern Age...

This in a nutshell: is one example of how 2,500 years of an ancient evil changed its face with the changing times to survive intact today. How a cultural tradition that was once called slavery, and then became vassal bondage, and then patronage and then corporate employee-ism... has poisoned humans for 12,000 years. A form of human inequality that was once personal... has become an impersonal evil so filthy; no words can describe it.

Today... human beings are no longer personal with each other. Today: human beings treat each other not as strangers: but as if other people do not even fucking exist around them. Modern humans have insulated their awareness so much: that they are not aware of anything except their own concerns. Nothing else exists for modern civilized humans except their own little fucking filthy selfish concerns... All of which are identical to all the other concerns of all the inhuman filth that pretend to be human. All of whose stupid, pointless, meaningless selfishness are so boringly meaningless and pointless, so stupid, so vapid, so idiotic, so full of pure meaningless shit: that the only reason they do not kill themselves is because they are afraid of dying, and they do not have the guts to admit their lives are meaningless.

Culture is a connected thing. The personal slavery of Ancient Greece is connected to the impersonal slavery of ancient Rome. The impersonal slavery of Ancient Rome is connected to impersonal patronage of Feudal Europe. The impersonal patronage of Feudal Europe is connected to the almost non-existent, completely inhuman patronage of Modern Capitalism. Everything in history is relevant. Every single part of our past is organically connected to our present. For example: The Medieval ritual of anointing Kings with sacred oil is over 2,500 years old. It came from the Ancient Greeks warriors who used oil as a ritual of purification both before and after battle. The ritual of crowning Kings comes from Rome; 2,300 years ago: as the laurel wreath of hay... and then later oak leaves, denoted who was the best Roman amongst them. The ritual of sitting Kings on a throne goes even farther back than Ancient Greece: back to the Stone Age. When thrones were sacred stones: that only a King could sit upon without being killed. During the Middle Ages in Europe: all three sacred rituals had to be properly carried out and observed: for Kingship to be officially sanctified in the eyes of their subjects and their peers. How and why did these three different forms of official sanctification become the pretence for European Aristocracy to hold power for 2,000 years? Because each one of these three rites came from the same culture of killers. All three of them were Raider cultures. All three of them were Robbers cultures. All three of them were Baron cultures. All three of them were Robber Baron cultures. Slavery and killing. Hate and fear. Cowardice and cunning. Endless permutations of the same old shit.... As it continues to rot, and rot, and rot: without ever basically changing...

The Minimum Wage

What is one of the basic root reasons most people on Earth are poor? The urge to pay as little as possible for what you get. The urge to pay workers as little as possible for their work. Paying as little as possible for whatever they do or make. What created the first industrial holocaust of industrialized poor in England? The landed rich paying the new class of factory workers as little as possible for their work. What created the slums and millions of poor in America when it became industrialized? The American Robber Barons paying their workers as little as possible. How does any owner of a business make their profit? By paying his workers as little as possible. What is all business based on? Paying workers as little as possible.

How can you expect people working together in any business to even like each other: when the basis of the business itself comes from the meanest selfishness possible? Capitalistic Culture sells the idea that you can become happy by being selfish. Selfishness is supposed to produce happiness. The more selfish you are, the happier you're supposed to be. The richer you are: the happier you're supposed to be. Oops. So far, for 12,000 years that hasn't happened yet. But try to tell this historical truth to people who have been brainwashed into worshipping the sanctity of selfishness. They will refuse to believe you: even though their own lives are object lessons in how selfishness produces unhappiness. Have you ever seen an unhappy rich person? They are all smiles in public. But how much do they ever go out in public? How many emotional bolsters, social curtains, and security walls do they hide behind? How easy is it to actually get to know what a rich person is actually like? You could live with them in the same house for years... and they might never show you their true face. This is precisely the level of human corruption most Soap Operas mimic. This is precisely what most literature and fiction is obsessed with, and tries to explore... the secret, hidden corruption of the lives of the privileged and wealthy.

Have you ever lived with them? Night and day? And found out how full of unhappiness they are... so badly that they reek of it, and turn their entire surroundings into a cold, hate-filled, nasty evil-smelling environment that makes less rich people gag on it and flee from those rich houses? The ugly secrets rich people do not want to let the poor know about. How intensely unhappy they are. How dead their inner selves are. How numb they are. How unfeeling they are. They are walking skeletons; parading as living-feeling people. But all human cultures worship their social goings-on. Whatever rich people do behind closed doors is whispered about and gossiped about. Most of the fiction and art of the world depicts how they live. Notice, there are almost no accounts about how the rich actually live. Their actual lives are wrapped in the layers of privacy and secrecy and privilege. Try going beyond their fictions. Try penetrating their secrets. You will find nothing.

But... if you can dehumanize the poor so they become just as unhappy, and numbed, and miserable as rich people... if you can dehumanize the entire human race so everyone is equally dehumanized... then you can sell the poor, the idea that the only way to become less miserable is by becoming richer. If you can create a consumer culture where everyone is equally boring and equally polluted by these values of ease and self-gratification: then you do have a viable point in trying in being greedy and selfish... Because if you are not: you will be discriminated against and become even more unhappy than the majority of consumers.

The boring idiocy of soap operas is based upon an endless tearing away of secrets, and lies, and plots, and deceptions... All rationalized. All justified. All claiming to be the good guys. And finding nothing underneath all of this but even more secret nastiness and corruption. These operas sell the idea that people are supposed to live their lives as secretly as possible. People are supposed to lie to themselves and to each other as much as possible... and then avoid admitting that they lied; by inventing every kind of deflecting and self rationalizing bullshit possible to excuse their nasty actions and lies. You see this endlessly portrayed in soap operas. Why?

Because this sick idea is supposed to poison all truth so much... all people are supposed to become so corrupt... that nobody can ever tell what is a lie, and what is the actual truth. That is the insane moral goal of soap operas. To make the truth so muddy with lies, that nobody can find out the truth because everybody is filled with more lies than truth. Once you have more lies than truth, more dishonesty than honesty: then the majority wins. Then everyone is more of a liar than truthful... then nobody finds out the truth, then the search for the truth becomes a pointless exercise in futility. Then the public can be distracted forever by the lying deflections everyone is desperately inventing to avoid being honest, including themselves. Then life becomes one constant series of deflections away from the truth. Then the only reason to live is avoiding living as much as possible.

People are supposed to keep themselves as secret as possible. People are supposed to love each other as little as possible. The entire moral and ethical energy of civilized humans is based upon this negative, niggardly, sanctification of giving away as little as possible. The entire way of living as humans is supposed to be by giving away as little of yourself as possible.

What if employers tried to pay their workers as much as possible; instead of as little as possible? What if people tried to give away themselves as much as possible instead of as little as possible? What if humans try to have as much fun as possible instead of as little fun as possible? What if society were fun-oriented instead of work-oriented? What if people tried to love each other as much as possible instead of as little as possible? What if human civilization were more positive than negative? Would that change how people lived? Would that make them happier? Could that change the entire world? Could that tip the balance of goodness and happiness so there is more of it than there is evil and unhappiness?

What is the difference between lying as much as possible, and being as honest as possible? What is the difference between being as courageous as possible and a cowardly as possible? What is the difference between loving other people as much as possible, and loving them as little as possible?

Energy. The difference is simply the difference between weak energy, and strong energy. The stronger you are emotionally, the more you can care about other people, and the more you can care about yourself. The stronger you are ethically and morally, the more you can be honest with yourself and with others. It is all a matter of training. Do you want to train yourself to become as emotionally weak as possible, or as emotionally strong as possible? Do you want to train yourself to be as mentally self-critical as possible or as mentally uncritical of yourself as possible? Do you want to train yourself to become as physically strong as possible, or as physically weak as possible? Do you want to train yourself to be as happy as possible, or as unhappy as possible? Do you want to train yourself to be as creative as possible, or as uncreative as possible? Do you want to train yourself to have as much fun as possible, or as little fun as possible? Do you want to work as much as possible or as little as possible? Do you want to become as rich as possible, or as poor as possible? Whatever you train yourself to become: you will reap its results. What you choose to focus upon is what becomes more powerful in your life. Why pour your life into paths that make no sense? That is the effect of civilization upon humans. It forces us to pour our energy into paths we do not want; whether we like it or not.

It is too easy to bash Big Business. It is too easy to bash all businesses, and all companies. It is easy for employees to look down at owners. It is easy for workers to feel ethically superior to management. They do not have to take the risks of their company failing, and going into debt. They do not have to sweat and work 16 hours a day to get the business on its feet and running profitably. They do not have to commit every underhanded dirty trick in the book to keep their company alive and running.

Why do large businesses exist at all? Because most people are too lazy, and too uneducated, too stupid, and too timid to try starting their own small business. Compared to Owners: workers have it made. All they have to do is show up for work, punch a timecard, work, and go home. And then sneer at and curse the corrupt practices of the Corporations who keep them employed. What right do workers who rely upon employers for steady work, have to sneer at how their employers get them their work? They can keep their hand clean of collusion, graft and corrupt practices only because the owners and management do it for them. They can remain conveniently free of all the crimes and sins of the rich elite, and enjoy their middle, or lower class affluence, and tell themselves self-righteously that they may have a little wealth... but they are not as bad as those rich bastards, those millionaires... those billionaires.

When it is precisely these millionaires and billionaires who supply their workers with their comfy jobs. The poor do not want to be responsible for their own livelihoods, or their own jobs, or their own schools, or their own governments. They want to be taken care of. The elite rich are supposed to be responsible for their security. What right do the kept hirelings of any business have to complain how they are kept? If they do not like the corrupt practices of these companies: why don't they all quit their nice comfy jobs and go somewhere else?

But let them be fired? And they whine and complain and protest about their right to work... their right to a job. Their right to be hired by someone else. Their right to be wage-slaves... Huh?... You can vote your morals and ethics very easily: by your feet. If you find yourself working for a company you think is corrupt; then leave! Does any worker do this? Does any employee give a damn about the morals and ethics of the company they work for? Do they give a shit about their own personal ethics and morals; enough to quit any job that is not moral and ethical by their own personal standards?

How many poor people value their own freedom enough to tell bosses who are unfair, unethical, and immoral to go fuck themselves? How many employees value their own independence enough to tell anyone who tries to tell them to do something they consider unethical and immoral to go fuck themselves? Have any of them ever been lucky enough to work for themselves... and had the freedom and independence of telling anyone they do not like, to go fuck themselves? Do you have any idea of the satisfaction you get, when you know you have the freedom and power... to tell anyone you do not like; to go fuck themselves? Do you have any idea of the satisfaction and ease of mind, heart, and soul of being your own authority, your own boss? The pleasure of not being beholden to anyone else? The pleasure of never having to please anyone. The pleasure of never having to be worried about being fired. Can you put a money-value on that? If you ever have that pleasure: you will never want to go back to working for someone else just to make more money.

When you have the power to tell anyone you do not like; to go fuck themselves: you feel like a King. You feel at ease. Nothing bothers you. You are always in a good mood. And what's more... if you know you have that power... you don't even have to use it to feel good about yourself. Merely having that personal power of self-respect and self-autonomy is enough for you to know that you are the equal of anyone else. That you are superior to everyone who is a wage slave. Why tell someone to go fuck themselves? For what reason? If anyone irritates you, all you have to do is ignore them. How can you be unhappy if you have the freedom to do as you please? Then you cannot blame anyone else for your own unhappiness. Then you can only blame yourself. That is: if you are honest enough with yourself, and responsible enough to yourself to be your own boss.

All the corruption of the rich. All the corruption of business only exists because other, lazier, poorer, greedy people called employees want to ride on the coattails of their businesses and companies... piling all of their communal, fiscal, business, social, educational, and civic responsibilities onto the shoulders of others... and then whining about how irresponsible and corrupt other people are. So if you want to curse corporations; fine. But then you must curse and hold responsible: every lazy, irresponsible, incompetent idiot who works for them also. The point is: demanding to have a 'job' is pure slave mentality to begin with. What about a society that has no jobs? Ever think of that possibility? What about working for yourself and your community without being paid anything, eh? What about being self-sufficient and not needing to work for others, eh? Take away the slave mentality of wanting to be a wage slave, take away the assumption that there is nothing else, that there are no other alternatives except to work for a large impersonal company or a huge mindless international corporation and you open up a whole vista of unexplored possibilities, opportunities, options and choices. What is the entire system of Capitalism based on? What is the prime imperative, the prime motive for Capitalism? What does Capitalism sell? What do all Capitalists promote? What do they all work for? What do all their workers work for? The history of business is at least 10,000 years old. It originated from trading. Where did the word to trade come from?? From the word traitor.

Before trade existed: the only go-betweens between different cultures and tribes were traitors: who switched sides for their own personal benefit. When they were found out they were killed.

It took 12,000 years for the history of trade and traitors to be whitewashed into an acceptable institution of civilized society. These traders... these traitor-scum were the lowest betrayers of their own kind. The only way a trader can make a profit is if the betray who they buy from, and who they sell to. Only if they are traitors to both sides: can they survive.

They were despised by ALL societies for 10,000 years... It took 10,000 years for civilization to become so corrupt that these once lowest-of-the-low... finally dragged down everyone else to their lowest common denominator of selfish self-interest.

An Inc. is the black ink of death they use to turn living things into numbers and abstractions. The subconscious still keeps words to mark them by: a Corp. is a dead corpse. Until they became nationalized into dead, unliving corporate bodies called corporations. Until entire Nations were made up of these dead corpses, turned into corporations... Rations for the poor, and riches for the wealthy. Today in modern civilization: all cultural change is instituted by the corporate Media. Most modern cultural change is created by advertising firms and Corporations. You have no culture anymore except the culture that is pushed on you for hidden motives of greed and profit.

Modern civilized humans do not have their own culture any more. They buy their culture. Capitalist companies push their culture on the masses through the Media. The modern globalized culture of the world is a fake, abstract illusion hiding the drive for profit, status, power, and preserving the status quo as much as possible. Modern civilized humans do not get together for cultural events unless there is a profit to be made from it, or for it. Modern culture is the worshipping of wealth, power, and status. Modern culture is commercial culture. The culture of profit and greed is stronger and more universal than any other culture ever invented by humans.

Financial security

What is financial security? Or in other words: all people fear being poor. The fear of poverty. The fear of starvation. The fear of death. The fear of dying poor. The fear of dying poor, alone, unwanted, unneeded, helpless, sick, in need, vulnerable, weak, and powerless.

Financial security is negative because it is based on fear. It is a negative fear-based motive. A motive that comes from cowardice and fear, weakness, mistrust, selfishness, and stupidity.

The entire system of modern trade and business. The entire culture of modern work... is based upon fear and cowardice... The entire system of Capitalism is based upon emotional and moral cowardice. It is based upon lies. It is hypocrisy. It is irrational, illogical insanity. It is a cover-up. It is a racket. It is a 12,000 year-old tradition of fear, cowardice, lying; and creatively cunning ways to make an easy, unearned profit.

What does the fear-based motive of financial security do? It turns young people into pack rats, into savers, and hoarders at an early age. It brainwashes them into a culture of cowardice and fear which is all that Capitalism is, and stands for. It brainwashes them into believing that personal selfishness is more sacred than anything else. It brainwashes them into working their entire life away... throwing away their youth, and health. To work as wage slaves. Just so they will not be poor when they are old.

They end up becoming old, sick, brainless, senile, weak, unhealthy, pale, ugly, inhuman, numb, brainwashed, boring, vapid, meaningless, pointless physical wrecks... refusing to die. Terrified of dying. Avoiding dying at all costs. Spending all their savings to keep alive. They end up useless physical, emotional, mental wrecks. Senile idiots. So weak they are barely able to lift a spoon to their mouths to feed themselves. More helpless than babies. They end up dying so slowly, so painfully, so miserably. They end up so unhappy, so selfish, so set in their ways, so spoiled, so pampered, so stupid: no sane healthy person wants to go near them. They end up in old-age folks homes. In retirement homes. In hospitals, nursing homes. Doddering around. With empty glassy-eyed stares of total vacuous stupidity and non-awareness, and non-intelligence.

But they have saved up in their investments and banks and pension plans... millions of dollars. They do not have to work. They are rich. And what do they spend all these millions on? Themselves. Nothing else. Pure selfishness. Where does most of their money go? What is the basic  motive for spending the money they worked all of their youth to accumulate?

The negative motive of Not dying. Existing as long as possible, not living: just managing to survive. No matter how sick or unhealthy they are. No matter how miserable and unhappy they are. No matter if they are in pain every moment of their sick, old, lives... is a negative goal. It is a negative motive. A negative motive comes from cowardice and fear. It poisons every civilized human society. Old, frail, weak, doddering cowards trembling with fear are worshiped and idolized by the young and the healthy. Old insane, senile, brainless imbeciles are worshipped for their non-existent wisdom which they never possessed their entire fucking lives in the first place. But let them get old and weak and senile: and they are revered and worshipped and respected merely for their age: nothing else! Be old: and you are automatically respected. Be young; and you are automatically discounted. What do these old senile idiots do?

They exist as cultural icons; that preserves and perpetuates all the customs and traditions of cowardice and fear in their societies. They preserve everything that is old and sick and obsolete. They preserve everything that is sick and unhealthy. They are living examples of idiocy, imbecility, stupidity, weakness, sickness, insanity, and mindlessness. The young are supposed to imitate and emulate their example.

They cannot live healthy lives. They do not live at all. They feel nothing except pain and fear and worry and doubt. They barely exist. They clutch their own lives selfishly to themselves in the desperation of their fear of dying. They desperately avoid admitting any mistakes they ever made in their lives. They give back nothing to their communities. They have no wisdom, no intelligence, no energy, no generosity to give to the young. They huddle in their own age class. They become out of touch with the rest of the world. They become useless, pointless relics.

But. On the plus side.

They have Financial Security. They are Financially Secure.

Oops... I forgot.

Only 1% of the human population on this planet ever attains this rarefied level called financial security. They get it from robbing the other 99% of their financial security. While they were busy working for a nice tidy profit in some elite racket called a profession or business while they were still healthy enough to be productive wage slaves.

The financial security of all Capitalism... is designed only for the rich; so they can live richly; and die rich. Capitalism or the idea of financial security; is designed for only 1% of the human population: and only for when they get old. The entire stock market. All money. Is designed for old people. It is designed for death. Financial security is a death system. The propaganda about financial security is now bought and believed by 7 billion people. It is an unspoken rationale for why people steal and connive and hoard. It is the unspoken ethic and rationale for rulers raping their entire Nation; so they can retire rich and safe in some far-off resort.

Every Nation, every country, every rich elite human society is being robbed blind by less than 1/10th of 1% of the richest scum on Earth... because their root motive is gaining Financial Security when they are old. And every poor imbecile on Earth lets them do it. They do not go after these thieves and robbers after their scams, frauds, and swindles have been uncovered. They let them go and enjoy their filthy ill-gotten riches. Hell. They envy these rich filth. They wish they were as rich and as wealthy and as Financially Secure as Mobuto is. Living on the French Riviera. All the wealth of the Congolese People tucked away safely in secret Swiss bank accounts. Living openly as an escaped thief and hoodlum and robber and gangster. Does any Capitalist police or Justice Authority ever go after these Robber Barons after they have fattened themselves at the expense of millions and billions of stolen dollars?

No.

The Global ethic of Financial Security. The Global Morality of Financial Security. Is Robber Baron Capitalism. It is the ethic and morality legalized robbery. Hidden under excuses, hypocrisy, lies, deceptions, double-speak, and pure bullshit.

Everyone is supposed to want to feel safe when they are old. You are supposed to earn the ease of not working in your old age by working all your fucking life. Then you can rest and take it easy.

That is the propaganda. That is the rationale. It is pure crap. It is based on a basic unspoken assumption that all civilization sells to young people. That unspoken message is:

‘Hey. It’s normal to be a coward. It’s normal to be afraid. It’s normal to live in fear. It’s normal to live your entire fucking life in fear. It’s normal to base all of your decisions on fear. It’s normal to be selfish. It’s normal to be a conformist. Etc, etc... vomit, vomit, vomit. Just..... we don’t want to talk about it. Don’t speak of it. Don’t ever bring up the subject. Don’t ever question anything that is normal. Even if some things that are normal change every five years. Even if some things that are normal have not changed for 10,000 years. Even if you can’t tell the fucking difference. Even if you can’t make any fucking sense out of why one normality changes and another is not allowed to change. Never question Normality. Never question anything... vomit, vomit.’

What happens when young people swallow this shit? They throw it up. They vomit their own shit up onto the next generation. And the result? Endless cycles of every new generation using this regurgitated shit to brainwash their children with.

Self-Indulgence and Self-Gratification

The fallacy of modern civilization, especially Western civilization, is the fallacy of progress. The idea that things are getting better: not worse. The complete opposite is true. Western civilization has been getting worse and worse for 12,000 years. Not better and better. Western civilization can’t get better because the dynamic of self-indulgence always makes things worse: never better.

Take the example of the computer. The first Netscape browsers were the best. They were better than Microsoft’s. But they were edged out of the market by Microsoft selling programs that were especially designed NOT to work on a Netscape browser.

Everything that is complicated is worse than something that is simpler. The more complicated a machine gets the more it breaks down, the more unreliable it becomes, the more expensive it becomes, the longer it takes to learn to use it, the longer it takes to learn how to use it. Every single new program that is more complicated than the old programs run worse than the older ones. But modern technology tries to get you not to notice this... by selling you a faster computer so you won’t notice how much lousier the newer more complicated programs work compared to the older simpler ones. Modern technology tries to fool people into buying what is worse by telling them it is better even when it is not better. Modern human culture has the unspoken assumption that anything new must be better than something that is old.

The fact is: civilized humans do not make things better. Humans do not even try to make anything better. All humans do is indulge themselves and gratify themselves. You cannot improve anything by self-indulgence. You cannot make anything better by self-gratification. No human wants to admit this truth. But the fact is: anything that is too good is instantly taken off the shelf and replaced with shoddier goods because consumers who are self-indulgent do not want quality. Self-indulgent consumers are not capable of even noticing which product is better or worse. The dynamic of human self-indulgence leads to laziness. The result of the global culture of self-indulgence: are 7 billion humans who refuse to reflect critically upon what they buy or do or think. The global result of self-indulgence are rising levels of stupidity and lowering levels of intelligence. rising levels of arrogance, smugness, and outright criminal behaviour, rising levels of gangsterism as the rising tide of self-indulgence wipes out everything that older generations learned the hard way by earning their learning.

The technology of shuttlecraft put into space by rockets is the worst, the stupidest human technology yet invented. But... it is sold as the best! The newest! The most modern! It is supposed to prove to all human civilization that humans not only dominate the earth... they don't even need the earth! The fact is: every technology invented to put a space shuttle into orbit around the earth is fucking useless. It cannot be used by any human being on earth. It has never been used for anything on earth except the exorbitant wasting of trillions of dollars and spewing them as wastefully out into space with zero results... except the insane ego feeling of humans thinking that this completely false token of false superiority over the earth means that since they belong to the same species that did this... why then they must be superhuman geniuses and superior to all other living things on this planet. The opposite is the actual truth. Humans are stupid: not intelligent. If humans were intelligent: then we should have been able to improve the gasoline engine after 100 years of research. We can't. The engines made now are no better, in fact they are worse. They are so fucking complicated that nobody can repair them and fewer and fewer people can afford them. ALL... and I do mean all the lies that humans use to claim that something has actually been improved can be proved to be lies

Inflation

Why do things cost more? Why is it, that over a period of time, everything becomes more expensive? Inflation or the increasing cost of things in general, is merely the universal pressure of human greed. Every human tries to get as much money as possible for what ever they sell or produce. But what creates that pressure? Inflation is always the worst during times of national and international scarcity. In times of scarcity, people react in fear. Hoarding their money, their wealth. It is a vicious cycle... negative energy reinforcing negative energy. The more scarcity, the more hoarding, the less money, the less jobs, the more scarcity, etc.

Why? Because greed is merely an expression of the fear of scarcity. It is an expression of inner emptiness, and inner pain. It is an expression of both inner and outer fear. If you are not afraid of starving, or being poor: you cannot be greedy. If your inner energy does not have an inner emptiness... so it needs something, as a substitute to fill up that inner emptiness; then you cannot be greedy, you cannot become a collector, or an accumulator. As Europeans conquered and colonized so-called savages, barbarians, and primitive tribes, living in what they considered to be the most primitive, uncivilized, living conditions. These less fortunate cultures, having very few personal possessions or personal wealth; greeted them more honestly, more happily, more generously, and more warmly than those of their own race-creed and religion ever did. And the more civilized these other cultures were, the more suspiciously they were greeted, the more hostility they met, the more fear, and hate, and racism and xenophobic revulsion they met. In other words: the level of humanity of a culture is determined by how little they are civilized. The less civilized they are; the more human and the more humane, and loving, and kinder and gentler they are.

The level of fear and hate in any civilized society also determines its level of greed and vice versa. The general levels of hate-fear-greed in a society also determine how dishonest people are, how much they lie to themselves and to each other, and how cowardly they are. Inflation is merely a general indicator of the general levels of the fear of poverty, the hatred against poor people, the greedy need to become rich, the dishonesty of all its corrupt values and the cowardice of people not facing their own corruption, or their own problems in a society. Inflation is artificially kept in check by all kinds of financial manipulations, taxes, tariffs, and advantages... like the U.S.A. does with its oil policy and business regulations... and its corporate welfare, and its farm welfare policies, etc. Social levels of fear-hate-greed-dishonesty-cowardice are all connected to each other; they are all based upon the same basic dynamic: the degree-speed of accumulation versus the degree-speed of consumption.

If you want a historical perspective of what business actually is and how it works and how it had evolved. Study the history of 12,000 years of money lending. Study where it came from. How it was regarded. Who the moneylenders were, what these moneylenders did. But no such book exists. All their deals were kept secret. But if you read history by the ton. If you read hundreds of history books. You will find traces... of a few deals gone bad, a few betrayed and exposed. But those are only one in a million. The remaining millions cannot be found in any history books. What little information is found is invariably the same.

One basic root of Capitalism is money lending. It began the entire semantic fallacy of the idea of your money working for you. Because by lending it to someone else: it made it seem as if you were making a profit without ever working yourself. People figured that since they were not working to make that obvious profit; the money itself must be working to make your profit for you. This insane notion still exists today. It is merely a backwards-reasoned rationalization of easy profit: nothing less. The fact is that if any person who borrows any money from you and puts it in a drawer and does not let it work... he will never be able to pay you back and include the interest on that loan. He has to work to make that money work. That money will not work for him or for you. Any interest, or profit is only taking part of his work, time, and effort: and giving it to you because you were selfish and did not want to give him the money for free, and you did not even want him to give it back later, but insist that he give you back more than you gave him.

The person who borrows the money cannot put that money to work. They must work to pay off the loan. They must work to pay off the interest. It is no different with the stock market, or any venture capital, or any investment that makes interest from money working for you. The entire modern financial world is based upon the slavery of getting other people to work for you by using the greed and poverty motive to force people into jobs they would otherwise pass up... for wages they would otherwise want to be higher, working for longer hours and harder than they would like. By creating huge centralized concentrations of wealth and power, monopolized industries and rackets and pyramid schemes, and hoodwinking the masses into working for them, instead of working for themselves.

You can pretty it up with all kinds of rigmarole. But the financial analysts do not investigate how any profit is made. They are merely concerned with the best, the highest rate of return... Huh? Another semantic lie. The money is not returning to them. That money is staying out in the world. The return on their investment is their idea of their sacred right to making a profit. If they do not make a profit... then they feel cheated. Swindled. Robbed. Merely because humans have lied about the entire of making money ever since it was invented. There was no such thing as the Divine Right of Kings... that was supposed to give them a magical power and the right to rule over their subjects and exploit them. But this Divine Right managed to last for over ten thousand years. Without being contested or even questioned.

There is no Divine Right of any investor to have their return. There is no Divine Right to make a profit. It does not exist. Except in the minds of the greedy; who have been brainwashed to think that this is so. Just as the Divine Right of Kings never existed; except inside the brainwashed minds of billions of humans who once thought this was so. The root of capitalistic evil is the obscene lie and fallacy of lending money to work for you, and borrowing money to work for you. If nobody lived beyond their means, if nobody was too greedy. If nobody borrowed money. If nobody could lend it because nobody wanted to borrow any money... if nobody traded money, if nobody traded, lent, or borrowed any money-equivalent like stocks-bonds etc... most of the evil in the world today would not even exist.

Money lending has been practiced throughout civilized history by the greediest most destructive, most spiritually corrupt humans who ever lived. Today it is practiced only by the wealthiest humans. Today it is respectable. It was not respectable for 11,500 years. So apparently, 11,500 years of historians, and senators, and kings and queens, and priests, and leaders, and all the moral tales and stories and spiritual teachings of all the religions of all the cultures, of all the world that universally abhorred money lending for 11,500 years... was simply due to superstitious ignorance. Oh.

What would the quality of your life be like if you did not buy or sell anything for the rest of your life? What would your life be like if money did not exist? What would human society be like if nobody wanted to make a profit? And furthermore... the ways in how money is taken from the masses. The ways that corporations collect their money is as impersonally and anonymously as possible. They do not want to know how hard you sweated to earn that money. They do not want to know how hard you worked to earn your own money. They just want to get as much of your money into their own coffers as possible as fast as possible with as little effort on their side as possible and as little cost to them as possible. By sending out a monthly statement of what you owe them. A monthly bill. All their thousands and millions of customers are not human to them: they are merely pieces of paper. All you are to a corporation is a piece of paper. You are either a debt of paper money owed to them, or an asset they can milk of as much paper wealth as possible. That this paper actually is your life, your time, your energy that you are giving to them is not a concept they are interested in. Once an industry or business becomes centralized enough to become a scam, a racket, a fleece job. Where the customers have no choice whatsoever but to pay their bills or have no electricity, or no gasoline, or no TV, or no entertainment, etc... then the slow, steady jack-up of prices begins... squeezing every last dollar and penny possible from the consumer. All perfectly legal. With the help of the government's laws that are crafted by their lobbyists. Until in America, all you get is one endless series of graft-corruption scandals ranging all the way from savings and loans, to mass produced chickens, to the power industry, to brokerage houses, to the accounting industry, to the oil industry... etc.

When will people realize that all corporations are as corrupt as legally and as illegally as possible... as long as the consumer buckles under? Huge scandals of corporate corruption hit the press. There is no reaction to it by the public! The ordinary consumer could not care less about all these scandals. They have already been brainwashed into powerless states of cynical cowardice, laziness and greed. They are just as corrupt as the corporations who rob them. Only not as rich, or as lucky, or as powerful. So the only reaction by the masses to publicly exposed scandal: is bored, jaded cynicism. And powerless frustration. Resignation. Apathy. Indifference. Selfishness.

And you wonder why people have stopped voting? No matter whom they vote into office, the scale of corruption only escalates. Because the entire system is so systematically corrupt; that it would take a massive revolution in how all people live and do business to change anything. And since there is no community spirit, no communities, no grass-root organizations except fringe elements. The majority of the brainwashed masses not only do nothing about this obvious corruption; they do not know how to do anything about it because the entire social system is rigged against people getting together on their own.

How obvious a fact do you need to prove that the old-boy network of mutual corruption in all of business and government is still alive and well...? Martha Stewart, a wealthy, billionaire woman? Being jailed for a 40 thousand dollar investment peccadillo? While Ron Lay, who organized the largest corporate fleecing of the world, and his employees, and America in human history... to the tune of uncounted hundreds of billions of dollars: free as a bird? Along with all the other rich white males responsible for their corporate corruption scandals... like Tyson chicken, and the Gas Corporations, and the Power Companies, etc...? All unprosecuted, and free as a bird? Free to enjoy their spoils? The list is endless. Yet only one woman goes to jail? While all the other scandals get stale because they happened years ago? So the press coverage is indifferent. While all the lawyers successfully delay every part of the proceedings without any Ombudsman in charge. No overseeing of the legal system at all. The pandemic of corruption in the legal system is so high; that there are no honest judges left. Does anyone make this connection? Even if they do. What can a single person do about it? Nothing.

Look at the cooperative corruption of the medical industry, the pharmaceutical industry, and the health industry in cancer research. It is a united front of code-words and terms worse than the meaningless pap spouted by politicians. They avoid answering any questions honestly even more successfully than politicians do. They spout their gobbledy-gook endlessly and expect the consumer to swallow it, because the consumer assumes that they know what they are talking about. Trillions of dollars spent without one single useful discovery in the past 30 years. Somebody explain this to me.

Why is democracy itself a hopelessly corrupt dynamic... even if it worked perfectly, without any corruption at all?? Because it is based upon voting only for your own selfish interests. The entire concept of democratic voting is based upon the principle of self-interest. Or self-profit. It is the same damn thing. And then the smaller self-interests whine about the fact that bigger self-interest groups win... how indignant do they get? Not very. Why? How morally outraged can you get when you are guilty of exactly the same selfish self-interest as the persons you are envious of? And you wonder why there are so few grassroots movements and why they are so weak, when there are tons of injustices burning to be righted and fought against? Simple. Everyone is too morally weak, too ethically selfish. Weak selfish people fighting against other weak selfish people each for their own self-interest. Where is the moral virtue in that?

Now... if voting, if democratic voting was based upon the principles of unselfishness. Ah. That would be different. Then people would find themselves fighting for other people's interests... And guess which of those interests they would fight for? Only those that are good for all people. Not just for a select few. If the intent of democratic voting was turned upside-down on its head... then the result of those votes and all that unselfish giving energy would turn the entire system upside-down on its head also. Then all the corrupt politicians would be voted out of office easily. Because the voting public would not consist of corrupt selfish people blinkered and blinded by their own self-interests. And would not want to hear people lying to them, and the voters would be sensitized to the difference between a liar and an honest person, by their own honesty.... Just as they are desensitized to the lies of politicians by their own inner dishonesty. So that they would be able to spot the fakes a mile away.

Who are the most passionate activists for change today? Those who truly believe that conventional politics is supposed to work. The true idealists who once actually believe that the system should work. The ones allowed into the inner circles, and see the massive corruption of the systems they once believed in exposed naked, the ones who find out what actually goes on behind those closed doors..

Like Mariana Huffington; who, once she found out her husband was gay, she dedicated her life to humiliating and exposing his class of moneyed power for that humiliation... Republican billionaires and politicians, who pretend to be straight but are not, abound in the political world. She started up her own newspaper and fought her way into the upper circles of influence peddling, found out how these people really do the business of politics by favoritism and nepotism and corruption: and peddled the appearance of being morally outraged by the behavior of her own class of filthy rich scum. Now, she is a part of the establishment token liberals: and censored Jesse Ventura's article about 9-11 either because she is controlled and intimidated by the CIA and the ultra rich criminals of Halliburton and the Carlisle group and the Military Industrial Complex, or because she was one of the ultra rich who knew about it and profited from the false flag operation. The point is: nothing is as it seems when it comes to the media and those who are in the public eye. Everyone has a hidden agenda, everyone is hiding the truth... and hiding from the truth, and actively covering up the truth.

Dick Cheney could have been legally impeached from office at any time. The damning proof exists in the Congress statutes of records in his own bank statements. While he was still in office; Halliburton was paying him hundreds of thousands of dollars as chairman of the board. And while he was in office, Cheney openly made sure that Halliburton could make a killing by profiteering both from the Iraq war, and its ensuing endless occupation. Except for one technicality: The money Halliburton paid him while he was in office was put into a savings account for him to withdraw after he left office as Vice President of the USA. What were they paying him for, eh? For doing nothing? If a Vice President of the United States: can be paid-off openly... in public: as a corporate stoolie while still in office... without a single sign of public outrage or dissent... To the tune of hundreds of thousands of dollars a year: then something is fishy. Something stinks to high heaven. Somebody explain this to me. If this kind of high-level corruption had happened in Lincoln's time they would have hung him in the street in front of the White House. If it had happened in Andrew Jackson's term: he would have been shot down like a dog in the street. If it had happened during President Kennedy's term in office: he would have gone to jail for life, and barely escaped the firing squad. Dick Cheney is the personification of the American Monster. Before him: Lon Chaney Jr. depicted every kind of evil American Monster on film. As his father did before him.

Dick Cheney worked for two political monsters even more horrible than the movie monsters Lon Chaney and Lon Chaney Jr. George Bush and George Bush Jr.: both of them kept their evil hidden. Lon Chaney Jr. was a bumbling good-natured idiot compared to his father's more cunning depiction of evil as an agreeable oily, over-polite host. As was George Bush Jr. when compared to his father... Movie stars becoming political heads of state. Movie stars becoming political monsters. Just as the harmless actor Ronald Reagan became a political monster, just as criminal mobsters once became political mobsters and vice versa. .

The Path of Splittness

Chapter Six A: The Beginnings of civilization

The ongoing criminalization of American Culture can be seen everywhere. More and more criminal activities are becoming accepted and practiced as forms of normal behavior. Lying, cheating and stealing have become so normalized: anybody with any brains is doing it. The revolving doors of governmental cabinet appointments, civil service appointments for life, appointments on corporate boards, lobbyist appointments, law firm appointments, has been legalized for so many years; that this latest wrinkle in legalized corruption is not even challenged. The heads of the FDA heads of state are given corporate board positions paying in the hundreds of millions of dollars after they leave office in the very companies they once regulated. They do not have to be bribed. They know if they do not collude actively with the pharmaceutical companies while in office: they will not get these hundred million dollar cushy perk-jobs. And if one is too ethical: the Whitehouse demands their resignation and sticks in their own corrupt, on-the-take politician. Teaching all the senators and congressmen that if you are not corrupt: you will not get any power, and you will not get any money: and the political machine will unite against you to blackball you and pull you out of office.

As the level of corruption rises by leaps and bounds in America. The entire Nation takes its queue from this. Everyone else figures that if Bush, and Cheney, and Ron Lay, and all their oil buddies can do it and get away with it. If Ken Lay could do it and get away with it. If Cheney can get away with it, and remain untouched... Why then it's all right for every other American to do the same things. While the masses are hoodwinked and gulled, and brainwashed even worse.

You do think the American Media can't brainwash its own people? Look at the Great Depression. Dillinger was a folk hero for the entire Midwest: because he robbed rich banks that were foreclosing on poor farmers. The farmers hated the government and the banks and the bankers. They preferred the honesty of honest bank robbers robbing them illegally; to dishonest robbers called bankers, robbing them legally. The contrast of wealth and poverty was so obvious then; even the dumbest most illiterate poor were not fooled by the FBI labeling Dillinger as a National menace... He was a menace to rich banks: but not to poor farmers.

Then Dillinger was killed, and the FBI claimed the glory. Then the government hired Hollywood to start making movies with James Cagney as a 'G' man, instead of as a mobster, which had been his specialty. Hollywood was once a subculture with little enough power to sympathize and root for the Robber Baron underdog, or any underdog. Then Hoover blackmailed three Hollywood producers to make movies glorifying the government scum that shot down Dillinger in the back; and killed innocent people at night and were never prosecuted for it. Their excuse was that they were waiting for Dillinger. These supposed heroes were such arrant cowards, they thought the safest way to kill him was to hide outside a diner at night, and shoot him as he came out. Three other men came out, and were shot to rags by the brave 'G' men. So the government glorified a myth about an earlier government agent called Elliot Ness who fought organized crime in Chicago in the 20's and 30's. Because there were no brave 'G' men to be found anywhere else. Ness never lifted a gun himself, or ever put himself in harms way. He was an accountant-turned lawyer, hired by the US Government to investigate and prosecute Al Capone. He managed to whitewash the entire corrupt Chicago City Government and the Mayor of Chicago by keeping all the names of those guilty of taking bribes out of the trial. The only way he could do that; was to prosecute Capone on a slight misdemeanor: the charge of tax evasion... and then give him a life sentence for it?

The entire mock trial was publicized as a huge victory over Prohibition's gangsters... When it was Roosevelt who had created these thugs in the first damn place by trying to ram the elite law of Prohibition down the throats of poor people. While the rich bankers and swells, and high society drank their expensive smuggled alcoholic beverages in fancy clubs... and laughed in smug glee at the misery of millions of poor Americans, who were not even allowed to legally buy a bottle of beer.

After Dillinger had nationally embarrassed Roosevelt, and shamed the entire United States Law Enforcement... Because for years... the entire force of the FBI, could not catch one lousy, ordinary Bank robber. They were forced to glorify Dillinger. Otherwise if he had been an ordinary bank robber: why then... the entire authority and power of the law enforcement of the National Government would have been seen to be a pathetic joke. Citizens would have spat openly at policemen in open disgust, and openly mobbed the banks, and openly ripped out their money, and openly hanged the bank presidents, and openly shot any bastard that tried to foreclose on their land. Now... we can't have that now: can we? In those early days of Robber Baron Glory; they used their power far less cunningly than they do today. The US Government openly supported the banks; and openly oppressed its own poor citizens. They still do; but today the masses of today are much stupider and more brainwashed than they were in the 1930's.

As a reaction to the fiasco of one gunman leading the entire FBI a merry chase, and then after being caught and jailed... and escaping! While laughing at his erstwhile jailers. For that crime: they finally managed to kill him. They had to kill him. Because if he had been jailed again: he would have escaped again. And even if he had not escaped again...if he had been put on Trial: the masses would have idolized him. He would have become a public martyr. He would have become a public symbol of rebellion against the oppression of the rich and powerful. Now we can't have that now, can we?

To prevent this from happening: the government killers made a stakeout again at night. But this time in public. Outside a movie theater. With lights. Not outside a backcountry diner at night, with no lights. Where Dillinger went with his girlfriend to see his own press clippings blasting the authorities for a being a bunch of ninny unable to capture a single, lone man. He was purported to have run into an alley and they shot him in the back and killed him. Why was he shot in the back when they could easily have caught him alive? Because these 'G' men were, and still are: the biggest fucking cowards hiding behind fake badges of authority to make them feel big. Because if he had been jailed: they would have had to shoot him to avoid him standing in court and openly laughing at the authority of the rich. One way or another: they would have killed him before he could stand trial. Because the sacred solemn authority of a National government cannot not afford to be a held up as a laughingstock to the ordinary citizen.

Once the ordinary citizen stops respecting his own government: then the Robber Barons in power become very scared. Once the ordinary citizen stops fearing authority then the rich are in trouble. As a result of these glorified bank robbers: the American National Government went into public censorship in a big way. They censored movies, newspapers, books and radio. They censored everything. And ever since the 1930's: this censorship has not been lifted. The American Press is the most sophisticated propaganda industry in the world today. America did what Stalin did even better a few generations later in Russia. Blare lies from all public orifices; and drown out any tiny inkling of the truth. Cut the truth off at its roots. Before it even gets into print or on screen. Until the masses are born into a culture of lies so deep and so thick: they live in a fantasy. Until all of them become addicted to fantasy.

The American Government instituted a harsh censorship of all mass media in the 1930's. All written and visual articles were scrutinized and cut before the newspapers and Hollywood could release them. Until the ten-twenty years of government censorship brainwashed the bigwigs and editors enough until they began to censor themselves. After 30 years experience of the political backlash at anything... any word, any story, any opinion...that was politically incorrect. They saved the censors all the trouble and guttled every story they could at the editor's desk.

That created the McCarthy era of paranoia and fear in America. Hate against non-existent, invisible, undetectable enemies. Fear and terror of non-existent, invisible, undetectable enemies. Now Bush Sr. and Bush Jr. have brought it back. What do you think the 'war on terror' is today? It is simply the same old corrupt McCarthyism of the 1930's regurgitated and permuted into a different flavour-of-the-month. Bush was not blackballed before he got into power because he had his daddy's millions behind him. He had the entire oil monopoly of Texas, and the industrial military complex and the CIA behind him. The corporate-owned media never exposed the corruption of his Governorship in Texas because of this hidden corrupt power. Even though the scandals and crimes and what he did during his term in office is a matter of public record. He gave to the rich and he gave to the poor... by finagling more public tax dollars from Federal grant money than any governor in history. The middleclass he bamboozled with his born-again family-values crap, while destroying the middle class by taxing them and reducing their job markets. He found the same magic key to power Roman Emperors had found. By appealing to the hatred and racism of the lowest and most ignorant classes, while enriching themselves and their peers: they divided and ruled for 700 years... cynically. As a standard formula. Hitler used the same formula. So did Mussolini.

Until you understand the degree of censorship that goes on in every public media. You will never understand how in a few short years: a Nation that once, rooted for its on bank robbers, because these professional killers were less evil than their own government agents... then turned around, and began worshipping G-man, and the Robber Baron crime-boss bigwig named Roosevelt. Who engineered the further suckering and brainwashing of the American Nation; by censoring and pre-empting all media, and replacing all actual facts and news; with his own personal fireside chats. Which was precisely what Stalin did to the Russians later. Creating a charismatic leader-father-figure-icon-god... who spoke to the lowly masses... that huddled in awe and wonder around their radios... listening to the voice of their master telling them that everything was alright, and everything was going to be better... while everything was getting worse.

Just like the dog on the first Victrola phonographs: obediently listening to the voice of his master. Just as Queen Victoria was listened to by the entire British Empire. Class racism. Class brainwashing. The brainwashing of the masses. Treating them like dogs. Training them like dogs. Like the toy dogs the aristocrats once loved to own... now a fad that is being slavishly copied by the masses today. Mass media used by the rich to brainwash the poor by treating them as dogs instead of treating them as the oppressed ignorant slaves they once were and still are. The voice of their master. The voice of their father. 'His master's voice' printed on every Victrola phonograph. The voice of the father of the Nation. The ultimate national father figure. The ultimate power-figure. The ultimate sound of parental authority. One father for 200 million American dimwits or 350 million USSR cowed slaves. They loved Roosevelt and Stalin... I mean loved George Bush Jr., I mean Obama. unquestioningly, blindly, uncritically... and as stupidly as a dog loves the master who kicks it and starves it and struts around as their beloved great powerful leader. Americans loved Roosevelt because he tossed them a few bones after his Robber Baron buddies had destroyed the American economy with the craze of pure greed so badly that they could not be trusted anymore. Not even by those of their own class.

Improve your brainwashing tools. The new invention of the radio: speak to 200 million slaves personally over the radio and to hell with any written information or news or facts from any other source. One centralized source: cheap and easy to brainwash million of gullible fools. Roosevelt, the Invisible God had spoken. You must believe the voice of your master. Otherwise you are a nonbeliever and must be shot and hung and ostracized from American society as attacking a dearly beloved icon of such heroic, godlike, glorified proportions: that no American to this day is capable of looking clearly at what this man actually was, and what he actually did. He has been completely whitewashed into a Legend and Myth. How did Roosevelt become so idolized? By the invention of the Victrola. The invention first used by Queen Victoria to control her subjects: which produced the radio. 'His master's voice' was printed on every Victrola. A dog listening to a phonograph. Not realizing it is listening to a machine and not a living human. The American masses listening to their master's voice. An invisible impersonal master heard over a machine: Not realizing it was the voice of a sick, weak, paraplegic cripple, so they could not see how sick and crippled and weak he actually was. So they could not see how he lacked all true authority. Roosevelt was the weakest, most cunning, most physically crippled and deformed President America ever had.

Look at him as an ordinary human. Look at him as the sick cripple he was. Would the American public today ever vote into presidential office a paraplegic President who could not even stand up or walk without metal braces and crutches? Would the American Media today ever hide the fact of his crippling disease from the entire damn Nation? 1930's American propaganda machine was different from today. The brainwashing tactics and strategies that the new emerging mass medias afforded were just beginning to be honed and used by the Rich elite and the Robber Barons. The worship of the rich and powerful was not quite a universally unquestioned American religion. They hid they hid the sickness of the elite rich from the poor masses much better in those days. The whole Nation stopped reading Newspapers for their news. People listened to the radio. They listened to Roosevelt's fireside chats. Extra reels were added onto entertainment movies as pure national propaganda and called news. The entire Nation was successfully brainwashed by a polio cripple, a wealthy son of a wealthy Robber Baron, into ignoring the actual state of affairs and escaping into the fantasy escapism of mass media. Ever since then Americans have been brainwashed into the idiotic notion that their Government is actually on their side and wants to help them regardless of 170 years of factual proof to the contrary. Evil is more hidden today. Americans voted in a vice president that was so evil, his rotten evil heart had to be aided with a mechanical pump.

This is just one example of what the principle of enlightened self-interest called Democracy has devolved into. Going as far back as Descartes; a European French Philosopher of the Middle Ages. As far back as the separation of Church and State. As far back as Plato's Republic in Greece over two thousand years ago.

Civilized people still have not learned the simple fact that self-interest does not work. It never has. Sociologists already know the basic difference between egalitarian societies; and upwardly mobile societies. In upwardly mobile societies: people waste most of their lives and their energy trying to get to the top of the pyramidal pile. Egalitarian societies do not bother with this kind of idiocy: and as a result: they live much happier and healthier lives.

If all people voted for other people's interests, instead of for their own interests... then there would be no corrupt selfish self-interests and self-issues in the first place... for the corrupt politicians to lie about. How can you have a corrupt political system if there are no issues you can successfully lie about for any protracted amount of time, eh? If a politician is found out to be corrupt they should be fired. On the spot. As an example to other politicians. So other politicians will see what happens when a public person tarnishes their sacred duty to be unselfish in a public office. Politicians should have no business doing business with the upper class. They should only support the interests of the lowest class not the highest class. They should be equalizers. The upper class does not need them. The lower classes do. Politicians should be the archenemy of every privileged elite in society.

But if politicians did this. The upper class would stage a revolt and rule by armed might. At least then; the lower class would no longer lie to itself, and pretend to love their oppressors. At least then the class system would be more clearly defined and more honest. No society can have unselfish politicians if the majority of people in that society are selfish. Having unselfish politicians could only happen if the entire voting public is unselfish in the first place, and only if their politicians care more about poor people than they care about themselves. As long as people believe in the Culture of Capitalism. As long as the need to make a selfish profit dominates the soul of every human in the Nation... We will have the greedy selfishness of corruption in our politics. Take Dick Cheney and Bill Gates: and have them take off all their clothes. Strip them stark naked. Then... put them next to two poor people who are also stark naked. Can you tell which deserves to have billions of dollars and which deserves to be poor? Can you tell who is rich and who is poor? The fat, pale, weak, sickly ones are rich... the lean strong healthy ones are poor. What is wrong with this picture? That is what money does to you.

Modern Racism

Why is there less overt racism, less hate and less discrimination in modern Capitalist countries now than in the past when capitalism did not exist? Humans have gone to war and killed and hated each other for thousands of years because of their religion, skin color, ethnicity, nationalism, culture, etc. Why is there less violence in modern Capitalist countries than in the past?

Hiring and firing employees is the best, the easiest, the most dishonest form of racism and hate yet invented by humans. No person who hires or fires anyone ever has to justify who they hire or fire... or why. Or who they do not hire and who they do not fire... or why. They have millions of excuses they can use to hide behind. They have millions of rationalizations they use to rationalize why they hire the worst possible candidates, and let the best workers go.

One major reason is because of hiring and firing. It is much easier to be a racist by hiring. You can discriminate against anybody. If you do not like their personality, or religion, or skin color, or class, or culture. If you don't like how they smell, or the color of their shoes. You simply do not hire them. And give any bullshit excuse. You can fire anyone you do not like. And give any bullshit excuse. And nobody can accuse you of racism, or hate, or discrimination. You can even lie to yourself and pretend that you did not give the job to the person who was the most qualified. People do not like hiring those who are in any way: better than they are. They like hiring people who are stupider, less qualified than they are. They like to hire ass kissers. They like to hire people who are slavishly agreeable and eager to please them. They do not like hiring people who are too confident. It makes them feel good to know that they are better than those they hire. It feeds their ego.

Hiring and firing is the best, the easiest, the most dishonest form of racism and hate yet invented by humans. No person who hires or fires anyone ever has to justify who they hire or fire... or why. Or who they do not hire and who they do not fire... or why. They have millions of excuses they can use to hide behind. They have millions of rationalizations they use to rationalize why they hire the worst possible candidates, and let the best workers go. Suddenly... racism and hate no longer officially exist in the work force. Hell... Who needs honest hate and honest racism: when you can fire anyone you don't like and give any bullshit reason and not have to be forced to prove anything? Who needs honest hate: when you can discriminate by refusing to hire any person you don't like? And not have to justify your decision? All you have to do is simply not call them back. 'Don't phone us... we'll phone you...'

Is now the standard form of racist hypocrisy for every imaginable kind of discrimination and hate and fear. It is so common. It is a standing joke all around the world. If nobody phones you back. You have been secretly discriminated against. But you will never be able to prove it. People are doing this like a disease. Phoning other people and promising to phone them back.... And never phoning them again, and ignoring their messages. It is a disgusting symptom of mass-snobbery, mass-hatred and mass-fear and mass-revulsion. Now anyone who has a phone: can discriminate against other people; just like the asses who hire and fire them... and never phone them back to explain why they were not hired, or why they were fired. All they need to say is that they were too busy, or that they forgot. When they are lying through their fucking teeth. And nobody can prove that they are lying.

Who needs to hate and fear people that are educated better than you? Who needs to hate and envy people that are smarter than you or more competent? Who needs to hate and envy people who are more cultured than you? All you have to do is tell them that they are overqualified for the job. All you need to do; is be a sneaky double-crossing liar and hypocrite at work and butter up your boss, and spread lies and rumors about the people who are better than you at your job. All anyone in any authority position in any business has to do; is fire the people who make them feel inferior... People who could do their own job better than they can. It's called protecting your ass by constantly actively backbiting and backstabbing everyone and anyone you can the instant you get a chance to do some harm. As secretly, and cunningly as possible. Anyone coming into any business faces this. Anyone who is already there faces this by those who come into the business. It is unspoken. It is never admitted to. It is invisible. It cannot be exposed. It is normal. It is filthy. It is sickening. Business hierarchy works by keeping everyone below you and behind you; from getting ahead of you and above you.

All you need to do is spend your entire life being a manipulative cunning sneaky lying, envious, insecure, ignorant, uneducated person who is full of fears and hate... And sabotage everyone with any real ability. All you have to do is make sure that people who are better than you fail, and are fired. And are never hired. Who needs religious hatred, or racist hatred, or cultural hatred? When money and jobs are more important than religion: it is much easier to be a secret hater, a secret racist, a secret envier, a secret fear-filled scum by just being in business: than openly and honestly proclaiming your bigotry, your hate and fear... in public: culturally or religiously.

There is much more opportunity to practice racism and discrimination in modern Capitalism through hiring and firing; than there ever was in the past; when such opportunities did not exist. There is much more cowardice, fear, lying, denial, betrayal, double-crossing, plotting, etc in the everyday office politics of all businesses... than there ever was in the past; when only aristocrats could do it.

Now in business... almost everyone who works at a job, or is higher than the lowest worker: has become adept at backstabbing, backbiting, and all the other ploys that have replaced older forms of racism and hate. These are some of the reasons why there is not as much overt racism and hate in Capitalist countries and there once was in the past. There are much more ways to hate and lie today in business. Before business and greed completely dominated the global culture of civilization: there were much fewer ways to practice this shit. But this new epidemic of dishonesty that business has spawned has come back to bite them. Badly. Now even the lowliest workers; are as dishonest and as cunningly incompetent... as their bosses. Now bosses who need someone honest and reliable simply cannot find them, because they no longer exist.

But this new epidemic of dishonesty that business has spawned has come back to bite them. Badly. Now even the lowliest workers; are as dishonest and as cunningly incompetent... as their bosses. Now bosses who need someone honest and reliable simply cannot find them, because they no longer exist.

The unseen backbones of companies... the workers who once were conscientious and hardworking and competent... have disappeared from the labor force. Big business has taught the lower class fast: that it does not pay to be competent. It pays much better to be a back-stabbing sycophant. This is corporate suicide. By importing the idea of disposable people who can be hired and fired into modern society. By throwing away people, by hiring the worst and firing the best. Big Business now has a global work force of dishonest cheats, and thieves who are never on time and cannot be relied upon to do anything competently. Spoiled imbeciles who are only good at sucking up to their bosses and back-stabbing anyone who is better than they are. Who needs the old forms of racism and hate and fear and envy? When the modern forms can be secretly practiced by almost everyone in the workplace much more easily and openly? Until it becomes an invisible, intangible part of human culture. Until it becomes an unspoken normality. Until it becomes secretly normal. Until it becomes a social norm.

Another reason there is less overt racism: is because of the new capitalistic consumer power of choice. Every consumer uses their power of choice like a God. Every choice every consumer makes: makes him feel like a God. By choosing to buy one consumer product: the consumer is saying: 'All other products are not good enough for me: I like only this one.' Another reason there is less overt racism; is because of the other consumer power... the power to ignore what you do not choose. The power of choosing to ignore what you do not like. Once a consumer practices ignoring millions of things they do not like and do not choose to buy: they have also developed the power to ignore people they do not like without hating them overtly.

Another reason there is less overt racism: is because of replaceable consumer products. Once you have been trained to replace any product that is faulty with another: you develop the attitude that people are replaceable also. Consumers have been trained to believe that people can be discarded just like the plastic bags they discard every time they come home from shopping. Consumers now just discard people they do not like, and ignore them like the consumer commercials and products they discard and ignore, rather than waste their time hating them personally. Once you develop the attitude that most people are replaceable and mostly worthless: then they are not even worth hating: they are only worth discarding. Once you develop the attitude that people are just things to be ignored, and discarded: you have gone beyond overt hatred. Consumer culture has dehumanized humans to such an insane degree of abstraction: that people do not feel love or hate anymore. They just feel the abstract Godly power of choosing who they want to like or dislike. After a consumer has practiced choosing which movie star to idolize, and which celebrity to dislike: choosing which person to like or dislike becomes an exercise in being an all-powerful God

Ego gratification

How does human conscious and subconscious awareness interface? If your outer awareness is more powerful than your Inner Awareness, if your ego is predominant: then you must look down at everyone else around you. Then the outer awareness of people in every upwardly mobile, pyramidal society basically works only in one way, by one dynamic:

So the self-esteem of the ones at the bottom of any hierarchical pile, their egos are crushed and become smaller, while the egos at the top are larger; giving you a general pyramidal structure of:

With a general social dynamic of universal oppression:

As human population accumulated, this packed mass of egos accumulates also. Then you get cities, nations, and millions, billions of egos: all oppressing each other, all looking down on each other.

Add the universal human tendency to worship and fearing anything that is higher than you, taller than you are, bigger than you, more powerful than you, and you get: fig No.1

Like a parent being taller, bigger, more powerful than a child. The taller you are, the bigger you are, the more powerful you are than another person: the more you look down at them. The bigger your ego becomes, the more superior you feel, the safer you feel. As in fig. No. 1

Take the pyramidal dynamic of ego-awareness: then add the fear of authority, and the worship of everything bigger-higher-more powerful and you get: fig. No 2.

Notice: this is exactly the same upwardly mobile growth dynamic of a tree or a bush;

Most humans behave more like plants than intelligent mammals.

No. 2

As a flattened-out, lower self-esteem of the oppressed, ignorant poor masses... crushed by those on top of them. As a child, oppressed, controlled and disciplined by larger, taller, more powerful adults. Why do you think men who are treated like shit at work; go home to beat their wives and children? Why do you think men, who hate their jobs become wife beaters? While successful workers who advance in their careers rarely act like this? This is the curse of all civilized societies that are based upon the dynamic of upward mobility. Every sociology student knows the fact that societies based upon equality are happier than societies based upon upward mobility. The dynamic of upward mobility in a pyramidal pile of hierarchical exclusiveness; guarantees social friction, and unhappiness for 99% of the population.

The Path of Splitness

Note: the direction of the main focus is upwards. This is universally true in all upwardly mobile societies. This structural dynamic of human focus is a universal reason why people do not care about people who are below them. The structural dynamic of upward mobility explains why people do not spend time and energy helping people who are less well off than they are. This explains why people do not help children because they are smaller, lesser, below them. This structural dynamic explains why the ego is formed. It how the ego works. It explains why it works. It explains structurally: why and how the entire civilized world lets billions of people starve and die without helping them.

This graphic description of human awareness makes the basic pyramidal structure of civilization more understandable. As long as humans have a Pyramidal awareness: the Pyramidity of civilization is inevitable, and unchangeable. That is why; regardless of all the revolutions and wars and revolts, and uprisings: civilization always ends up in the same basic structure. Because each person is still working by the same dynamic of having a dominant ego-awareness. Unless there is no dominant ego-awareness in individuals, and no accumulation of packed masses; no re-structuring or reforming of human society can ever change or improve the fundamental corruptions caused by the dynamics of civilized accumulation.

This accumulated excess is the situation we exist in today. It makes the development of an ego even more necessary. The ego is merely the crust of separation that humans must develop in order not to be crushed by others of their own kind in the pyramidal sand pile of civilization. And therein lies the conflict between two conflicting human motivations: ego gratification and ego-less gratification. The ego works by accumulation also: its feeling of importance, its feeling of superiority, its feeling of status all accumulates. The accumulation of the insularity of human awareness, of the self; the desire for more safety, more security, more self- importance is a male-motivated corruption of a male-dominated imbalanced civilized society that puts all human relationships into terms of dominance and submission, until you the battle of the sexes: where men and women: boys and girls are more interested in fighting each other to get an advantage over each other than in loving each other.

Both are ways to earn worth and respect. Giving, love, cooperation; are forms of gratification in which people feel useful, valued, needed. Through developing their own humanity, they can earn self-respect, self-esteem without conflict. Winning, accumulating, having more of something, being more powerful, more famous, making a profit is also a form of gratification in which people feel useful, valued, needed. Where they can earn respect and esteem.

If others shower you with attention, if others admire you, if you work and earn money, wealth, and power: this then becomes what you identify with. This becomes what you value: so your self-worth is connected to how powerful you are, how wealthy you are. If a person can feel useful, needed, valued, as a sports star, as a doctor, as the president of a corporation, as a plumber, as a worker, a soldier, a policeman: it is because civilization places a certain hierarchical value on their usefulness that other people also share and believe in. This public outer validation becomes one basis for their values.

However: this kind of ego gratification is not based on a person's humanity or humaneness. So you have a conflict. Both forms of gratification are needed and wanted. Should a person base their self-esteem on being a good plumber or a good father? What good is it being the best loving father in the world if you cannot feed your family because your skills at plumbing are lacking? What are you connected to more?

What do you identify with more? Eight hours a day of working with pipes? Or half an hour a day playing with your son? How do you define your identity? As a tool? Or as a human? The point is that these two kinds of identities, these two kinds of value systems conflict. They are opposed to each other. The result is a split-up human psyche with conflicting identities, motives, aspects.

One of the worst aspects of the ego is the complete inability to admit you are wrong. Even if you know you are wrong, your ego, your pride, your arrogance forces you not only to lie to others when they show that you are wrong, your ego forces you to deny any truth... even when it is proved, beyond a shadow of doubt... that is why all human conflicts are never resolved by violence or brute force. That is the way all politics works. All national policies, all authoritarian laws, rules, etc... even when they are wrong and millions of people rise up in revolt and anger... the ones in the wrong still refuse to admit that they are wrong... so they have to be killed just to get rid of the people who hold on to the wrong opinions, the wrong values, the wrong powers, etc.

When did you ever hear a rich, successful respected doctor ever admit they were ever wrong about anything? When have you ever heard any doctor admit they ever made a wrong diagnosis of a patient's illness? Yet it is common knowledge that the majority of all medical diagnoses are wrong in the first place... and only when the patient is almost dead is the 'real culprit' ever unearthed, and blamed for 'why' the patient died.

The more status people have; the less wrong they become. The richer people become; the less wrong they are. The more powerful they are, the fewer mistakes they are allowed to make. Absolute rulers like Stalin, and Mao, never made any mistakes. They were infallible. Anyone who dared criticize them was jailed, shot, killed, enslaved. Even though people died by the millions of hunger and starvation because of their abysmal stupid mistakes: as long as they were alive: their farming programs were always called successful.

As long as you have power. You are never allowed to admit making a mistake. Once you lose that power... Then people accuse you of tons of mistakes that you made while you were powerful. The hoax and myth of might is right has been played out over and over, for thousands of years... in politics, in medicine, in government, in business, in science... in all of society. All because of our precious fucking egos. All because people do not have the intestinal fortitude, or the guts to admit when they are wrong. As long as you have a dominant ego... everybody else in the world except you is wrong. As long as you have a dominant ego: you are always right. Any person whose ego is bigger than their own humanity hates being told they are wrong. The instant reaction to being told you are wrong, or mistaken, or not right... is anger, hate, denial. This creates the insanity of six billion egos convinced that everyone else is wrong, and only they are right. So instead of societies filled with energy, like, fun, laughter, and happiness: You get societies that are filled with lies, denial, deceit, delusion, anger and fear, hate...and endless conflicts. You get human societies being shaped and driven by negative emotions, negative feelings, negative thoughts, and negative actions, instead of positive ones. This creates societies that have more hate than love, more fear and cowardice than courage, more lies and dishonesty than truth and openness. Civilization creates negative cultural packages. It sells, and spreads negative energy negative unloving myths, negative unloving values, negative unloving beliefs, negative unloving cultures, negative-unloving religions... Not positive ones.

All because every idiot who has an ego; never admits they are wrong. As a result, we have had twelve thousand years of hate, fear, anger, killing, violence, etc. Without ever learning from the past. The same stupid mistakes are repeated endlessly by each generation; because each generation refuses to learn or change... since that might mean that they are wrong... that they made a mistake. That their parents were wrong, that their religion is wrong, that their Nation is wrong, that their culture is wrong... ad-nausea... Their egos could never admit any of that.

My leaders were never wrong. My parents were never wrong. My religion was never wrong. My culture was never wrong. I am never wrong. I am right. We are right... they are wrong. Because they are not like us. Because they do not do what I do. Etc.

This leads to everybody avoiding responsibility. It leads to everyone lying to cover their own ass. It leads to massive social irresponsibility. It leads to the moral and ethical corruption of each individual person, each psyche. It leads to exactly the levels of corruption we have today everywhere. It leads to the normality of that corruption, so people are not even aware that anything is wrong to begin with. It leads to every egotist lying through their teeth... and claiming smugly:

‘What problem? I don’t see any problem. Do you see a problem...? I don’t see a problem: everything is just fine.’ Etc, etc: ad-nausea. This is called denial. As long as you have an ego: you can deny any truth that you find unpleasant. You will deny any truth that does not gratify your ego. It is the nature of the ego to accumulate and hold onto everything. All egos are greedy little pieces of shit. But by your ego holding onto pain-hurt-anger-grudges-resentment-anger-rage: it ends up in poisoning the entire psyche. It creates irrational forms of justification.

As these poisons accumulate in the psyche; people become bitter, hostile, angry and full of hate. Once a person’s self-esteem becomes based upon the accumulation of the ego, they become increasingly defensive. They become afraid of being attacked, and incapable of being honest about anything. This accumulation of the ego as it gets bigger and bigger; turns into pride, arrogance, and smugness, and self-importance and vanity, and snobbery, and megalomania. And rather than lose this accumulation, rather than humble themselves, or give up their resentments, their pride, etc; people consciously choose to cling onto everything in their psyche that makes them unhappy and miserable. They become incapable of apologizing, they become incapable of saying they are sorry about anything. The monstrous accumulated pile of pain-hurt-anger-rage makes them deny they ever did or said anything they regretted.

Then you get the basic defence of the ego: denial, conscious lying. ‘It never happened.’ ‘I never said that.’ ‘I never did that.’ Until it makes them incapable of being honest about so many things; their selective tool-brain whitewashes, avoids, censors, deflects, changes, manipulates so much of the human psyche; that you get a twisted, stunted, deformed version of reality, of their humanity... until you get pride, arrogance, smugness, blindness, inhumanity. Until they become insane.

Having an ego makes you very stupid. It has many names: pride, arrogance, self-importance, smugness, self-righteousness, etc... But all of these words merely describe people who are incapable of admitting they are wrong, or made a mistake. That automatically by definition makes them the stupidest humans and the stupidest living organisms on this planet. It makes them incapable of learning anything. Because in order to learn you have to admit that you do not know something. Egotistical people cannot admit that they do not know anything. They know everything, and they are always right, and everybody else is wrong and stupid. They are the smartest, rightest humans on the planet. Unless they meet someone with a bigger ego who is even stupider and blinder... or someone who has more power, or money, or more status.

The punishment of every egotistical idiot who refuses to admit that they are wrong has many examples. Every parent who is too proud to admit they are ever wrong to their children earns their own children's undying hatred and disgust and scorn. Every person in any argument who refuses to admit their responsibility or guilt earns the undying hatred and disgust, and scorn of their peers. People who refuse to admit they are wrong, suffer the fate of having their asses kicked for as long as they refuse to admit the truth.

On the other hand a person who instantly admits they were wrong or mistaken cannot be punished or hated. Nobody can find an honest reason to hate them or dislike anyone who is honest about their own faults and mistakes. Honest people can make thousand of mistakes, and get away with it, simply by admitting honestly whenever they make a mistake. Once they openly and publicly admit they made a mistake: they steal the thunder from all the haters and egos who want to hate them. Being unable to honestly hate an honest person is an even worse punishment for a lying hater who is fundamentally dishonest with themselves and everybody else. They have to invent lies about the honest person. They have to believe their own invented lies to hate the honest person. And they have to waste most of their life making up lies about themselves, excusing themselves so they are never to blame, and never at fault, but it is always the other person who is wrong.

An honest person doesn't have to waste his life on this kind of crap. They do not have to worry about what they said or did. They do not have to invent lies and excuses to cover up all of their mistakes. And they are invulnerable to hate. They cannot be attacked. While liars, and people with egos that prevent them from admitting they ever made a mistake can be attacked, and are attacked and hated all of their lives. All because they are too stupid to admit their mistakes ever. All because of their stupid pride, their stupid arrogance, their stupid smugness, their stupid dishonesty, their stupid ego. And are punished for their self-righteous stupidity for the rest of their lives.

It is impossible to fully develop your own humanity, your humaneness, in a tool-based society because civilization is mostly based upon ego-gratification. Nearly everything humans do is corrupted by some kind of ego-gratification. The miracle that any ego-less gratification still manages to survive in this environment is only due to the genetic-instinctive attributes which we still retain that are minimally necessary for our survival. But even these minimal requirements are being eroded and minimized down to the least amount possible. We spend as much time as possible functioning as tools and as little time as possible functioning as humans. Until you get a tool-oriented society that is dehumanized. Until you get babies dying in orphanages because they are not touched, hugged, or loved enough. But the distinction between human, or ego-less gratification, and ego gratification is not even noticed in society. Yet: the fundamental conflict in all human motives arises from the conflict between these two opposing forces. The reason this conflict exists is because there is a huge imbalance between how much humans develop their humanity and their tools. So, the question is: how much should people use tools? In what ways? To what ends? In what context? Within what kind of social structure? The same questions apply to ourselves as human animals: how much should we develop our creative potential? Our love? Courage? Honesty? Our sense of wonder? In what ways? To what ends? In what context? Within what kind of social structure? What are the root problems, the root imbalances of human existence?

If you removed all forms of ego-gratification from human society: civilization itself would disappear. Stores would be deserted. Factories would empty. Governments would dissolve. Armies would disband. Literally every activity based upon power, authority, adversarial competition or winning would vanish. That would not create anarchy, hate, or unhappiness, it would not create evil. Rather, it would create the freedom needed for people to live as they wish. It would not create the need to pursue happiness as an unattainable goal. It would create the freedom to actually be happy.

Ego-gratification comes in all shapes and sizes. Winning at something, gaining any kind of advantage over others, feeling that you are better than somebody else in some way, being worshiped or looked up to, any form of adulation. What is interesting is that all four aspects of human accumulation: knowledge, power, wealth, and fame are basically just different kinds of ego gratification. This is because all ego-gratification is based upon the accumulation of outer worth-value, not inner worth-value. Because of this dynamic, it follows the same insatiable pattern of never getting enough, always wanting more. Ego gratification is just another kind of addiction. Ego gratification is the most common form of corruption in civilization. It is one of the most basic of all human addictions. Unfortunately it is an addiction which civilization not only condones, but supports wholeheartedly and rewards. As a result: its destructiveness far outweighs any other form of human addiction on this planet. It is one of the basic motivators behind human greed, antagonism, fear, hate.

What happens; when your ego dominates your self-awareness? What happens when you live in a culture where all selfishness is normal? Then the only thing that exists are your selfish wants. Then you are only aware of what you want. Not what you have, or who you are, or how you feel. Then you deal only with 'wants'. Then when you meet another person: the predominant question in your mind is: "What does this person want from me? Then you develop the mentality of a consumer. Then you become incapable of understanding anyone who does not want something from you selfishly. Then you mistrust all good generous people and socialized exclusively with user, manipulators and shallow people whose ego-awareness dominates them also.

Ego-gratification is fleeting: it is an empty reward, a temporary high. It induces a false sense of elation, it encourages a false sense of values, and it produces a false view of the world and of yourself. It makes people incapable of being happy or being at peace with themselves. Under the lure of ego-gratification, people become dissatisfied, driven, obsessed, and always distracted or pyramidally focused on something. Civilization mislabels the ego as a sense of self, which it is not. Rather: the ego is a sense of absolute separateness from all else. Our inner-observer automatically assumes that it is completely separate because the reflective thought patterns in our brains are instantaneous. If they were not: then our inner-observer would be able to gain a perspective on how some thoughts bounce back, and others do not. Then instead of defining its own awareness as a completely separate entity, it would see itself as an unlimited awareness with no absolute boundaries of total separation.

The ego-gratification of status only lasts as long as you are on top. The ego-gratification of eating only lasts as long as your belly is stuffed too full. The ego-gratification of greed only lasts as long as you are counting your money. But if you keep your status. If you keep your money. If your ego becomes completely selfish. If you keep your antique furniture. If you save and accumulate as selfishly as possible. Then you can keep the temporary, fleeting, false sense of ego-gratification and the unearned false of a higher self-esteem: just up until you die. But just before you die. All of this false shit disappears. But then... who cares! You lived a rich life. You lived richly. You were rich!

The idea of total separation, the development of secrecy: stems from tool-use. The motivation for secrecy comes from the dynamics of fear and advantage. In order to practice secrecy, in order to gain some kind of advantage: you first need to develop a fear-based ego. You need to separate yourself from yourself and from others, and from the world around you. Egoism stems from fear, secrecy, and advantage. Peel the layers off any ego-motivation and you will find that it comes from fear. The innocence of children lies in the fact that they have not yet fully developed an ego. An integrated self sees no absolute taking apart between it and the outer world, while the ego does. The dynamic is obvious: reflective isolation-separation breeds fear. Without a sense of absolute separation from all else, the self cannot exist in a condition of fear-isolation-loneliness-unhappiness. The concept of a healthy ego is an oxymoron because the only reason to develop one is as a defence against human attack. Without the existence of human antagonism there would be no reason for it to exist. It is a necessary part of civilized existence. Remove civilization, and you no longer have any need for an ego. Egoism is merely a condition of civilization. That is why all primitive cultures are so easily corrupted by modern civilization. Their egos are not as developed as ours. They are still innocently naive and do not recognize, or have any defence against forms of evil which they have never before encountered.

One of the worst aspects of living in a tool-dominant society-civilization is an almost complete lack of positive feedback. People required only to function mechanically are rarely complemented in how well they function. During the everyday course of life there is very little of this kind of affirmation going on. Science has elatedly now found that all children learn better, grow up to become more confident, and have better self-esteem if their own self-worth is constantly affirmed by loving, caring, happy people around them. All people function better when they get positive feedback. But this kind of loving-giving-respect-esteem is minimal and usually only reserved for small children and for loved ones... and even then, it is given sparingly. People are expected to develop a sufficient level of self-esteem during childhood so that once they grow up; they can go out into the real world and be able to survive without this kind of affirmation. There is a direct conflict between competition, antagonism, ego, profit: and cooperation, giving, affirmation of others, and love. No matter how selectively you do it, you are in some way, and on some level; in conflict with yourself and others because of this. You cannot be loving and giving to everybody if you have to make a profit and succeed in life. You cannot be selfish and only take from others if you want any kind of human caring in your life. The seeking of validation and approval by the ego becomes both externalized, and internalized by the constant re-reflection between abstraction and actuality. But this is a closed loop. It does not allow the human elements of courage-honesty-love to be developed. Ever since civilization emerged, these factors have not changed in how they work, and why they work: accumulation-greed-antagonism-egoism, are all part of the same process. They are basic conditions of civilization. The causal interconnectedness of these basic dynamics is universal for all humans. These aspects are all interrelated. You cannot have accumulation without greed. You cannot have greed without antagonism. You cannot have antagonism without egoism.

Millions of years ago we were genetically programmed and designed to compete against other species in Africa. But this has long ceased to be true, valid, or useful as a way of survival. We cannot blame this tendency on any instinctive behaviour because we have already proven beyond a shadow of a doubt that humans are capable of consciously ignoring and repressing any genetic instinct we may have. There is no reason we should be dominated by such a motivation: except through our training and environment: not instinct. It is the environment of civilization that creates an ego in the human psyche.

Ego-gratification and self-gratification is basically the same thing. The more cut-off you are from yourself and others: the more you will end up trying to gratify only yourself... simply because no other forms of gratification are open to you. Basically: humans are born lazy. We were genetically designed to get only as much food as we need each day. Because we used tools, our ancestors managed to cut down the time and energy needed for survival down to a few hours each day. This is why we developed far weaker muscles. We no longer needed all that strength or time; so we became weak and lazy and let our tools work for us. We work only if we are rigorously trained to acquire this habit, with enough incentives and punishments to make it utterly necessary. But now, we do not expend our energy to survive and live: instead, we work because of our love for using tools.

Along with civilization comes the unquestioned assumption of the need to work.. This total fallacy then creates misery and unhappiness, which becomes a burden that people accept in resignation as an unavoidable fact of life. Nobody ever tries to change this ridiculous assumption. The end result is that misery becomes an ordained fate. Constant struggle, conflict and stress, becomes a normal condition of existence.

As long as people do not have any perspective outside of civilization itself, they will accept these conditions as normal and natural. People develop a totally distorted understanding of life until they believe that pain and suffering is actually necessary to balance happiness and joy: that the balancing of pain and pleasure is a natural necessary part of human existence. That you literally cannot experience happiness without unhappiness; Whereas pain is only a neural indication that you are out of balance. The numbed non-awareness of normality merely allows people not to feel, or be aware of just how unhappy they are.

Civilization is so structured; that the main form of usefulness recognized, appreciated, and rewarded is functioning mechanically. The result is that most of human self-worth and self-esteem is based upon the ability to function mechanically. People want to feel useful, have self-esteem: but to only be useful as a tool does not develop a person's humanity. The result is: billions of people leading unhappy lives full of bitterness and conflict... lives of uncreative boring deadness. Where the only escape is busyness, distraction, or mind- numbing, heart-numbing work. The concept of work derives from tool-use. Anything that is done repetitively, that becomes mostly mechanical functioning is defined as work. Anything that is creative, diverse, fun, is not really considered work. All you have to do is examine how much human contact exists in the workplace, and what kind of contact it is. How much time do people spend functioning mechanically and how much time do people spend relating to each other upon a human level? Human's value tool-functioning. Civilized societies value people being effective tools: they do not value people being human. Mainly, the first goal of any civilized society is for their citizens to become more productive, not more humane. It is the vicious cycle of work-distraction that keeps people frozen in their particular level of non-awareness. The mere fact that people must work in order to live creates their need to be distracted and entertained. Whatever level of boredom-sameness any civilized work environment has, produces the reflex-action against boredom: creating the reflexive need to be entertained. When this is all played out in the non-creative environment of civilized life, that need-reflex becomes mindless. So people blindly seek to have mindless, non-creative fun... Watching television, getting drunk, having parties.

Why? Because the rest of their lives are boring. Once inside this vicious endless loop, there are very few avenues for people to develop their own awareness and humanity simply because most of their time and energy is taken up doing other things necessitated by civilization. The development of humanness, the development of human creativity becomes virtually a non-priority, a non-interest, a non-option. The path of human growth-expansion-change-exploration literally ceases to exist, so that people end up doing whatever their civilized environment dictates: not what they want to do.

Why? Because whatever it is they want to do: won't make money, won't pay their bills. And the lucky few that do find something that even slightly fulfills both needs preach the idiotic gospel of others following their own example. As if civilization could support a billion movie stars. What would happen if all janitors decided to become brain surgeons?

In the workplace: the majority of choices are humanly vile and boring. This is why most people hate their jobs. The more creative and diverse the job is, the more desirable it is. But these kinds of jobs are a distinct minority. Yet, the lucky few who find decent jobs continually preach the obscene myth of only working at what you love. But then...who will push the brooms? Who will work in the sweatshops? Who will perform all of the backbreaking, boring, dehumanizing jobs which are necessary for civilization to be maintained? In addition, they do not tell you that only 11% of any success is due to talent and ability. No matter how much a person may want to be useful, or successful: the factor of luck, the pyramidal weaning process of competition does not reward those who deserve it most. The stacked deck of civilization does not allow billions of people any chance to improve their lot.

The virtue of work is universally upheld in all cultures and societies. But the billions of oppressed people living in poverty may toil all their lives and still not be able to free themselves from the evils of the civilization they live in: so what virtue is it to them?. Never mind the millions who are not even given the opportunity to work; because all work is based upon an exclusionary system of keeping as many people as possible out of any racket, or profession, or union, or job-opportunity which makes a profit. The idea of work as a necessary struggle for existence does not include any human aspects. Most work is neither humanly rewarding nor beneficial for most people: it is only an artificial civilized necessity. To improve human existence requires a different kind of work that has not yet even been defined. But not a futile waste of effort inside a social structure that is so chaotic and conflicted that any positive gain is outweighed by the negative gains. If you want to work intelligently, then you must work at changing civilization so it does not waste all of the positive energy and efforts of its members. That means changing the root principles by which human society is based on. Modern work is based upon excluding people from the jobs they want. Not giving them the jobs they want.

Because of its pyramidal structure: the emotional-cultural factors of capitalism are based upon exclusivity. Most civilized societies work by this dynamic. If there is a nice neighbourhood, where poor people live nicely. Happily. Healthily. What happens? Developers come in, and throw out the poor people and build exclusive expensive communities and houses only for the rich. All wealth and greed and snobbery and power is based upon exclusivity. If you are affluent or rich... you buy exclusive clothes, have an exclusive car, a circle of exclusive friends, eat only at exclusive restaurants, buy only exclusive kinds of foods, and shop only at exclusive stores.

Anything that is plentiful and healthy and good is sought to be made scarce, expensive, and exclusive. Poor people living close to a beach? Horrors. Buy up all the poor people's beach property and stick expensive houses on it. Poor people are not supposed to enjoy life as much as rich people. If they do... then the entire purpose of wealth and greed and exclusivity becomes a sick joke. So we can't have poor people being happy or healthy now... can we? If we let that happen, then they might find out that they are actually happier, and better off than rich people...that rich people are more miserable, and unhappy than they are, and that the entire rationale of capitalism is a complete scam.

This sick practice of exclusivity is practiced by everyone... subtly, everywhere, by everyone. The rich have the means and the power to make sure that the poor cannot join their exclusive clubs or afford their exclusive food, or live in their exclusive neighbourhoods. So the poor are continually shoved into the worst places, given the worst food, the cheapest things.

Yet... cancer is an exclusive disease of the affluent. Poor people who do not eat enough processed food: do not develop colon cancer. Yet all affluent cultures pity the poor Nations where there are no supermarkets selling tons of expensive, unhealthy processed food. And easily ignore the statistical facts about cancer occurrence in the world. Exclusivity is driven by profit, greed, egoism, ignorance, and selfishness. And nobody thinks there is anything wrong in most of the rich people acting like this and living like this.

All wealth is based upon exclusivity. If you have an exclusive product or service... then suddenly you can charge through the nose for it. You can bleed people dry as long as your exclusive product or service is in high demand. That is what all monopolies, and monopolistic markets practice unashamedly. Once you corner the market on something, once only you, or only a small clique of select companies has something everybody needs or wants... the price automatically goes up. Until the cost is so high that you start making less profit than when it was cheaper. The oil companies practice this regularly. Every so many months: they artificially jack up the price for gas to see if the market can stand it. If their profits go down, they reduce the cost of their gas until the profits go up again. This has a Dutch origin. It's principle in Dutch is called: Tanstaffl... or loosely translated: "whatever the market will bear. Practicing this systematically is considered highly ethical in modern robber nations. As it is systematically practiced in all modern robber companies and corporations. It is merely overloading the price with as high a profit-margin as possible... until whatever is being sold becomes so outrageously expensive... that people stop buying it. Then the profit margin is lessened just enough so people start buying again... to give the seller the maximum return for their dollar.

If the oil industry can sell oil for one hundred dollars a barrel, and only sell ten barrels at that price... And if they can sell three hundred barrels of oil for thirty dollars a barrel. Then that industry will choose voluntarily and intelligently as all the Western enlightened self-interests of modern capitalism logic and rationality demands that they should make the maximum profit of one thousand dollars selling only ten barrels of oil, rather than only making nine hundred dollars by selling thirty barrels of oil for thirty dollars a barrel. Besides... they are not only artificially hoarding their reserves.. So they will have more oil to sell at a higher price later on, with a higher profit-margin. They are creating such an artificial shortage in the market... as to make the suddenly scarce commodity even more valuable and more expensive. Allowing them to excusably charge even more for the same barrel of oil later on...that still originally only cost them thirty dollars a barrel. And making an even higher obscene profit-margin.

How? Because the Oil Industry is a mostly an oligarchic monopoly. They have their customers literally over barrel. The customer may curse and swear all they want; however, they have no choice but to pay whatever the price the Corporation chooses create as a normal price... which then automatically becomes a normalized as a higher normal profit margin.

This single, common, business practice alone is how most artificial shortages and world hunger, and starvation, and malnutrition is exported from the affluent Western industrialized nations into 3rd world nations. Creating mass misery for billions of humans on this planet. By the price control and the price manipulation of mass production, mass services, mass monopolies, mass markets and ultimately: all the billions of human consumers on this planet.

Every entrepreneur, every venture capitalist, every new business every new restaurant; searches and hunts high and wide for an exclusive market, an exclusive business location, an exclusive product or an exclusive service to sell. All, with the main goal of making a maximum degree of profit, with the minimum outlay and overhead, and cost. Department stores continually hunt for exclusive labels and products; that other store do not carry; which they try to corner, and monopolize; so no one else can sell it.

Exclusivity, and exclusion are the same thing. They both work the same way. People always want to join exclusive clubs, belong to exclusive communities or neighbourhoods, work at exclusive jobs, etc, etc... Favours... favouritism... the currency of the ego, the trading and benefiting of exclusive favours; is how all power works. Instead of sharing love: you share owed favours. Using favours, owed you money. It is how the Catholic Church worked for centuries. It is how all politics works. It is how all business deals work. It is how all the wrangling in stardom and the Media works. It is how all power structures in every bureaucracy works.. It is how all status structures work. It is how all knowledge structures work. It is how every King, Queen, Emperor, every politician; every leader has operated to show how powerful they actually are. Today... the trading of favours is simply hidden better. But if you want to find out how all this works. Follow the money . Follow the favours given and withheld. Follow the power given and withheld. All of these dynamic are based upon the pyramidal dynamic of exclusivity.

The profit motive and the civilized desire for exclusivity has one huge destructive effect: It manages to corrupt the universal human desire to be useful to others: by requiring people to be more exclusive, more exclusionary, and more selfish than giving.

It transforms all human values and tries to make them exclusive. Then you get the insane, idiotic notion, that the more exclusively you love someone... the more valuable, the more precious, that love is. So if you love only one special person: then that is the purest-best-greatest-most intense, kind of love possible, because that person is the best-richest-wealthiest, most powerful-highest status person you could get. Once this exclusionary form of love becomes normalized: then you get the insane idea that love is only a form of selfishness and self- gratification.

Then you get an even sicker consumer notion that it is only love if it makes you feel good. Then you get pure narcissism, or one-sided imbalanced self-love as the highest-best-most intense form of love possible. Conventional success has more to do with exclusiveness than with true usefulness or merit. The notion of only doing what you like-love mostly never works. Because they always leave out the single caveat in this lie: of course you can do anything you want to... As long as it makes money. If you persist long enough, you will succeed at anything... as long as it makes money. But nobody ever mentions... that this unwritten rule is precisely the dynamic which corrupts your own humanity.

And within this unspoken, unquestioned caveat lies the fact that you cannot make money unless you do it exclusively. You cannot become a successful painter unless you become exclusively famous to an exclusive clique of rich, elite art buyers, and sell your exclusive paintings only to these rich exclusive people. If you tried to become a successful painter by selling your paintings to poor people, you would starve. Unless you become exclusively famous and sell millions of copied prints of your exclusive originals at a fraction of the price your exclusive originals. But make your profit merely by mass producing so many of them that one million sold copies makes you just as rich as selling one original to a rich exclusive buyer.

Does this have anything to do with doing only what you love-like? In order to succeed at what you love-like: it forces you to become a successful businessperson. If you are not a successful at doing business: then it does not matter how good you are at anything, or how much you love doing it. You will fail. That changes the entire definition of success. Success no longer means becoming the best artist, or painter or doctor. It no longer means being the best at what you love doing. It means people who are lousy doctors, and lousy singers succeed over their betters. Simply because they are better at doing business. That means success is defined only by how good you are at business, and nothing else.

That in turn makes all true merit and ability in all fields worthless. Then since it does not matter how competent you are, or how good you are at doing anything. People no longer value true art or true competency even when it hits them in the face.

Then the best singers in the world are ignored; simply because they are not recognized as being famous. Then the best massage therapists are regarded as worthless; since they are not famous. Then the best musicians are worthless; because the entire music industry is filled with successful business people who are lousy at playing music. Then the norm of the lowest common denominator becomes worshipped as a God. Then true genius ability is scoffed at and ignored. Then only after many years after a great creative talent is dead: do people finally wake up and realize how original, and creative they actually were.

A perfect example of this is the famous painter Van Gogh. During his life: he did not manage to sell one of his own paintings: because he was too creatively original. The public and the art buyers of his time preferred the mediocre crap art of the day. Even his own peers were famous: but he was not. Now his paintings are the most sought after and the most expensive in the entire world, for over 120 years. No painter has yet to match his revolutionary vision or intensity of expression. He was the best painter who ever lived. But because he lived in an upwardly mobile, sick society that only recognized true ability by the mediocre standards of an exclusive art community full of snobs. Because he was too good, too original, too different, too talented, too honest, too selfless, and a lousy businessperson: he committed suicide because he considered himself to be a failure. This is one effect of civilization had upon his creativity and originality. Becoming successful by doing what you love only works if you are mediocre, unoriginal, selfish, greedy, good at business, and have a huge ego. And if you are lucky, competitive, belong to the right circle of exclusive people, and can make money. This is a perfect recipe for unhappiness. This is why the Myth of success being welded to only doing what you love; is full of shit.

In the pyramidal structure of civilization where most jobs are menial-boring-limiting: there is always a constant struggle and conflict going on for the more rewarding jobs; but most jobs are only financially rewarding. They do not reward you for trying harder, or being more honest, or more creative, or braver, or taking risks, or being too creative, or being funny, or loving, nurturing, caring, wise, smart, insightful etc... as a result: all this Pyramidality in human society produces dissatisfaction, envy, misery, unhappiness. It produces constant struggle, conflict, and stress. Simply because the really desirable jobs are few and far between. That is inevitable within a pyramidally structured society that functions solely by exclusivity.

Pyramidal hierarchy is the structural dynamic of civilization. You cannot change human unhappiness unless you change the structure people exist in. How many tenants does it take to create one affluent landlord? How many office workers, or ditch diggers, does it take to create one billionaire? How many poor people does it take to create one rich person? The degree of a person's greed, the degree of a person's wealth or poverty, is irrelevant. It is the pyramidal structure of civilization that creates these conditions of greed, wealth, misery, and poverty.

The problem with greed is that it destroys cooperation. The result is conflicting interests-energies: both socially and within oneself. Greed creates conflict. If you examine human conflict, you will find the same root causes: fear, hate, and greed. By existing in a structure whose basic functioning principle is one of accumulation, the condition of greed prevents people from developing their own humanity.

What civilization does is re-reflect all of these imbalances: thereby creating new separations, new evils... Each feeding off the other: greed-creating conflict, conflict creating fear, fear creating hate, hate creating conflict. The basic belief of modern civilization is that greed is not only necessary, but also good. The ethics of civilized existence is based on tool values not human values. Without the need to accumulate more, civilization would disappear. In short: human spiritual corruption is necessary for the survival of civilization. If people were not continually unhappy and dissatisfied with their lot, if the insatiable need for more of everything did not exist, if humans did not continually compete amongst themselves, if humans did not regard each other with mistrust and fear, then civilization could not exist.

The dynamic of accumulation is not cyclic except linearly, except as a vicious, unchanging cycle: it never balances. Adversarial competition does not promote harmony or balance. It creates ego-systems, instead of healthy balanced eco-systems.

You can see egos in people driving cars. Most people drive out of fear, or anger. Drivers who have the biggest egos, hate everybody else on the road. No other cars exist on the road except them. They do not cooperate with other drivers. They become instantly insulted if another driver gets in front of them.. "How dare that person get in front of me? How dare that person block me? I'm first! I'm more important! Get out of the way! You: ^ % & !!!"

The drivers with the smallest egos cooperate with each other. They let other car go before them. They see other drivers as being their equal, with equal rights. They are courteous, they smile, and they don't try to cut off other drivers, they don't honk their horns. They do not get insulted if some driver gets in front of them. How do you want to live? How do you want to feel: Insulted? Angry? Unhappy? Feeling better than others? More important? So other people's needs do not even exist for you?

On the other hand: people with no egos do not like angry, unhappy egomaniac drivers who show the finger at them simply because they did not let them in the lane. They do not like drivers who do not know the laws and regulations concerning the right of way in moving and merging traffic. They like people who are as equally competent and as aware of other cars on the road as they are. They like people who are as aware as they are. Good competent drivers who know the traffic laws and regulations and obey them do not like ignorant drivers who commit dozens of traffic violations in front of them.

People who do not drive out of fear, do not like timid, terrified people who do not drive efficiently and block traffic. People who are aware of not only the cars in front of them and besides them, but behind them as well: do not like doing anything that impedes the cars behind them. Good competent drivers who do not drive out of fear, or anger, or hate: do not like drivers who drive irrationally. Who drive either too slow out of fear, or stupidity, or timidity, or incompetence, or senility... Or too fast and too dangerously out of anger, hate, snobbery, arrogance, or being in a hurry. They do not like drivers who do not care about anyone else in the world except themselves. They like competent, efficient drivers who are polite, and cooperate with each other as equals.

Do you want to cooperate? Do you see other people as your equal? Do you treat other people as your equal? Do you want other people to treat you as there equal? Or do you want them to treat you better than they treat themselves? How big of an ego do you want to have? How unhappy do you want to be? One of the easiest ways to spot s person with an ego is the attitude of: 'Me First'. You can see this everywhere. You see it in traffic. People driving: trying to get in front of others. People becoming angry and insulted if anyone get in front of them. Exploration, colonization, Politics, Power, War, Business, Science, Art...etc; what people see as the greatest crowning glories of civilization... what success is made-of, and where it comes from... is basically just a bunch of human idiots screaming: 'Me First! I was first! Me first! Fuck everybody else! Fuck the Universe! I come first! Me first!...'

Have you ever seen a 'me first' person who was happy? Has any 'me first' person ever found love? Has any 'me first' person ever found any meaning or purpose to their lives? Has a 'me first' person ever helped anyone except themselves? Have you ever known a 'me first' person who was not full of hate and a liar and a cheat? Civilization is a system of egos; not eco's. The 'C' in eco denotes an unfinished cycle. Which needs the entire ecosystem to be completed. The G denotes the unfinished C capped off. It denotes an exploiting ego, an insular, insulated cycle-circle... that goes out of its own boundaries to rape and loot, and steal from other insular O's, or egos, or ecosystems, and hauls all of its stolen energy back into itself. That is why letter G in human language stands for good. But only in the human context of one human ego profiting from another human ego.

The expressions of this dynamic in civilization are universally harmful to all humans. For people to enrich themselves at the expense of others: does not promote happiness, health, harmony, or balance. You cannot have a society based upon trust when it is based upon profit. Profit and trust are mutually exclusive. Profit teaches and trains people to be distrustful of others. When a society is based upon greed, it becomes a society of strangers-enemies. And that spiritual sickness cannot change unless you change how that society functions and how it is structured. But this makes perfect sense as a tool-dynamic. In order to sustain the tool-dynamic you need to separate things and keep on separating things; you must perpetuate imbalance, you need to constantly sustain the stress and tension of opposition-struggle-striving. And in order for that to happen, in order for humans to sustain civilization, they must lead lives full of misery, unhappiness, fear, hate and pain.

What if all forms of payment were based upon the honour system? What if people only paid what they thought was fair? What if no financial transaction was allowed to be kept secret? What if all financial arrangements were a matter of public record? Then all human society would be stratified along degrees of generosity and cheapness. The most penurious, the skinflints would be despised as the lowest, while the most generous would enjoy the highest prestige. The greediest would become social pariahs. The need for a legal system would diminish. Then the phenomenon of human greed and selfishness would become a visible dynamic. Then it could be dealt with effectively and not swept under the carpet and hidden in secrecy.

When did you ever hear a rich, successful respected doctor ever admit they were ever wrong about anything? When have you ever heard any doctor admit they ever made a wrong diagnosis of a patient's illness? Yet it is common knowledge that the majority of all medical diagnoses are wrong in the first place... and only when the patient is almost dead is the 'real culprit' ever unearthed, and blamed for 'why' the patient died.

As long as you have power. You will never allow admitting making a mistake because if you do you will lose power. Once you lose that power... Then people will accuse you of tons of mistakes that you made while you were powerful but never dared to say when you were powerful. The hoax and myth that might is right has been played out over and over, for thousands of years... in politics, in medicine, in government, in business, in science... in all of society. All because of our precious fucking egos. All because people do not have the intestinal fortitude, or the guts to admit when they are wrong. As long as you have a dominant ego... everybody else in the world except you is wrong... unless they agree with you 100%: then they are amazingly perceptive and intelligent. As long as you have a dominant ego: you are always right.

Any person whose ego is bigger than their own humanity hates being told they are wrong. The instant reaction to being told you are wrong, or mistaken, or not right... is anger, hate, denial. This creates the insanity of six billion egos convinced that everyone else is wrong, and only they are right. So instead of societies filled with energy, like, fun, laughter and happiness: You get societies that are filled with lies, denial, deceit, delusion, anger and fear, hate...and endless conflicts. You get human societies being shaped and driven by negative emotions, negative feelings, negative thoughts and negative actions, instead of positive ones. This creates societies that have more hate than love, more fear and cowardice than courage, more lies and dishonesty than truth and openness. Civilization creates negative cultural packages. It sells, and spreads negative energy negative unloving myths, negative unloving values, negative unloving beliefs, negative unloving cultures, negative-unloving religions... Not positive ones.

All because every idiot who has an ego; never admits they are wrong. As a result, we have had twelve thousand years of hate, fear, anger, killing, violence, etc. Without ever learning from the past. The same stupid mistakes are repeated endlessly by each generation; because each generation refuses to learn or change... since that might mean that they are wrong... that they made a mistake. That their parents were wrong, that their religion is wrong, that their Nation is wrong, that their culture is wrong... ad-nausea... Their egos could never admit any of that. Then you get the basic defense of the ego: denial, conscious lying. 'It never happened.' 'I never said that.' 'I never did that.' Until it makes them incapable of being honest about so many things; their selective tool-brain whitewashes, avoids, censors, deflects, changes, manipulates so much of the human psyche; that you get a twisted, stunted, deformed version of reality, of their humanity... until you get pride, arrogance, smugness, blindness, inhumanity. Until they become senile, doddering insane wrecks with Alzheimer's disease like Reagan did...

If you removed all forms of ego-gratification from human society: civilization itself would disappear. Stores would be deserted. Factories would empty. Governments would dissolve. Armies would disband. Literally every activity based upon power, authority, adversarial competition or winning would vanish. That would not create anarchy, hate, or unhappiness, it would not create evil. Rather, it would create the freedom needed for people to live as they wish. It would not create the need to pursue happiness as an unattainable goal. It would create the freedom to actually be happy.

The ego-gratification of status only lasts as long as you are on top. The ego-gratification of eating only lasts as long as your belly is stuffed too full. The ego-gratification of greed only lasts as long as you are counting your money. But if you keep your status. If you keep your money. If your ego becomes completely selfish. If you keep your antique furniture. If you save and accumulate as selfishly as possible. Then you can keep the temporary, fleeting, false sense of ego-gratification and the unearned false of a higher self-esteem: just up until you die. But just before you die. All of this false shit disappears. But then... who cares! You lived a rich life. You lived richly. You were rich!

The virtue of work is universally upheld in all cultures and societies. But the billions of oppressed people living in poverty may toil all their lives and still not be able to free themselves from the evils of the civilization they live in: so what virtue is it to them? Never mind the millions who are not even given the opportunity to work; because all work is based upon an exclusionary system of keeping as many people as possible out of any racket, or profession, or union, or job-opportunity. The idea of work as a necessary struggle for existence does not include any human aspects. Most work is neither humanly rewarding nor beneficial for most people: it is only a necessity. To improve human existence requires a different kind of work that has not yet even been defined. But not a futile waste of effort inside a social structure that is so chaotic and conflicted that any positive gain is outweighed by the negative gains. If you want to work intelligently, then you must work at changing civilization so it does not waste all of the positive energy and efforts of its members. That means changing the root principles by which human society is based on. Modern work is based upon excluding people from the jobs they want. Not giving them the jobs they want.

Yet... cancer is an exclusive disease of the affluent. Poor people who do not eat enough processed food: do not develop colon cancer. Yet all affluent cultures pity the poor Nations where there are no supermarkets selling tons of expensive, unhealthy processed food. And easily ignore the statistical facts about cancer occurrence in the world. Exclusivity is driven by profit, greed, egoism, ignorance and selfishness. And nobody thinks there is anything wrong in most of the rich people acting like this and living like this.

If the oil industry can sell oil for one hundred dollars a barrel, and only sell ten barrels at that price.... And if they can sell three hundred barrels of oil for thirty dollars a barrel. Then that industry will choose voluntarily and intelligently as all the Western enlightened self-interests of modern capitalism logic and rationality demands: that they should make the maximum profit of one thousand dollars selling only ten barrels of oil, rather than only making nine hundred dollars by selling thirty barrels of oil for thirty dollars a barrel. Besides... they are not only artificially hoarding their reserves... So they will have more oil to sell at a higher price later on, with a higher profit-margin. They are creating such an artificial shortage in the market... as to make the suddenly scarce commodity even more valuable and more expensive. Allowing them to excusably charge even more for the same barrel of oil later on...that still originally only cost them thirty dollars a barrel. And making an even higher obscene profit-margin.

How? Because the Oil Industry is a mostly an oligarchic monopoly. They have their customers literally over a barrel. The customer may curse and swear all they want; they have no choice but to pay whatever the price the Corporation chooses to create as a normal price... which then automatically becomes a normalized as a higher normal profit margin. This single, common, business practice alone is how most artificial shortages and world hunger, and starvation, and malnutrition is exported from the affluent Western industrialized nations into 3rd world nations. Creating mass misery for billions of humans on this planet. By the price control and the price manipulation of mass production, mass services, mass monopolies, mass markets and ultimately: all the billions of human consumers on this planet.

Favors... favoritism... the currency of the ego, the trading and benefiting of exclusive favors; is how all power works. Instead of sharing love: you share owed favors. Using favors, owed you money. It is how the Catholic Church worked for centuries. It is how all politics works. It is how all business deals work. It is how all the wrangling in stardom and the Media works. It is how all power structures in every bureaucracy works... It is how all status structures work. It is how all knowledge structures work. It is how every King, Queen, Emperor, every politician; every leader has operated to show how powerful they actually are. Today... the trading of favors is simply hidden better. But if you want to find out how all this works. Follow the money. Follow the favors given and withheld. Follow the power given and withheld. All of these dynamic are based upon the pyramidal dynamic of exclusivity. It manages to corrupt the universal human desire to be useful to others: by requiring people to be more exclusive, more exclusionary and more selfish than giving.

People, who do not drive out of fear, do not like timid, terrified people who do not drive efficiently and block traffic. People who are aware of not only the cars in front of them and besides them, but behind them as well: do not like doing anything that impedes the cars behind them. Good competent drivers who do not drive out of fear, or anger, or hate: do not like drivers who drive irrationally. Who drive either too slow out of fear, or stupidity, or timidity, or incompetence, or senility...? Or too fast and too dangerously out of anger, hate, snobbery, arrogance or being in a hurry. They do not like drivers who do not care about anyone else in the world except themselves. They like competent, efficient drivers who are polite, and cooperate with each other as equals.

Civilization is a system of egos; not eco's. The C in eco denotes an unfinished cycle. Which needs the entire ecosystem to be completed. The G denotes the unfinished C capped off. It denotes an exploiting ego, an insular, insulated cycle-circle... that goes out of its own boundaries to rape and loot, and steal from other insular O's, or ego's, or ecosystems, and hauls all of its stolen energy back into itself. That is why letter G in human language stands for good. But only in the human context of one human ego profiting from another human ego.

History

If you want to understand history: take a period in history, and study the Conditions people lived under. Study the Conditions people lived in. Study their living Conditions. Study their mental Conditions. Study their emotional Conditions. Study their social Conditions. Study their religious Conditions. Study their cultural Conditions. Study the Conditions of their Cultures and religions and societies.

Most importantly...: study the Conditions of their lives. Study their attitudes they had towards other people. Study the attitudes they had towards themselves. Study what is unspoken and taken for granted. Study what was never written or spoken of. Add up all of these Conditions and attitudes... spoken and unspoken. Assumed and not assumed. Normal and not normal. Then make connections between them.

Then go back twenty-five years from that time. Study those social Conditions also. Find out how and why these Conditions changed. Find out where they changed and when. Then go forward twenty-five years from that time. And find out the same things. Then take those three sets of Conditions. List all the spoken and unspoken Conditions of the three different times. Connect them. Find out why they changed. Find out how they changed. Find out where they changed. Find out who changed them, and why and how and when and where. Find out what changed and what did not. Compare the three sets of Conditions and evaluate them. Put them into perspective. Reflect upon them. Think about them. Digest what you have learned. Let what you have learned sink in.

This is how you should study history: by relative comparison, by studying things in their proper context. By comparing things in their proper historical context. This is how you learn about history. This is how you learn everything. This is how I studied it and learned it and finally after many years, came to have a wider perspective and understanding of human history as a whole. What you have to do is find out how people actually lived. Only if you are interested in the truth will you ever find it. If you have no interest in truth, you will never discover it. Truth cannot be sold or bought: it can only be sought after and discovered.

If you study history in depth you will find that what people believed to be good and what they believed to be evil and what they assumed to be true and what they assumed to be untrue... changes... every year, every 5 years, every 20 years, every generation, every 50 years, every century. It changes so drastically that people living today cannot understand the emotions, the thoughts, the motivations, the minds, the hearts of people who lived in the past. It is by reading authors who are interested in writing about how people actually lived, discovering the truth about their everyday lives that you can get a feel for history

History books don't do this. Nearly all history books portray the history of human civilization as a triumphant forward march known as ‘progress’. They portray civilized history as a process of continual improvement. Nearly all history books have this unspoken assumption built into them. Nearly all of them assemble historical facts for the sole purpose of proving and showing and explaining how for the last 12,000 years: civilization has been getting better, and better, and better. Humans are supposedly becoming more humane, more intelligent, more rational, more educated, more affluent... all due to the supposed continual forward ‘progress’ of 12,000 years of civilization. Everything that was or is civilized is supposed to be intrinsically ‘progressive’: everything that is uncivilized or not civilized is supposed to be regressive, a step backward.

Sifting the truth from lies only works if you are actually looking for the truth. If you are looking for lies: that is what you will find. If you have a prejudiced outlook: that will color your findings and learning. You need to develop a nose for the truth. The true facts exist. There are billions of them. Most are covered up, swept under the carpet, or they are lying in plain sight being ignored by everyone else. All you need to do is go to the trouble of connecting them: and the actual truth will be revealed to you. All you need to do is want to know the actual truth. All you have to do is love finding and making connections.

But people do not do even try to think like this. The segmentation of knowledge turns them into chickens pecking at unconnected bits of trivial, useless, meaningless information. There are so many facts, so many books, so many different interpretations, so many opinions, so many contradictions, and contradictory accounts it is almost impossible to get to the truth about anything. Until now. Now: if you actually want to dig for the truth; you can find it. Now there are enough facts, enough corroborating evidence to connect the actual facts together. Because of the modern information age: most facts about the past can be found in libraries... if you do enough research. But people have stopped going to libraries: the movies, videos and the Internet has replaced books. Originally: libraries were upper class institutions only for the privileged few. Only those who could read were allowed to enter. Only the well-to-do, and the rich and powerful were allowed to use them. Then the lower classes learned to read. Then the lower classes began to be allowed into upper class schools. Then the upper class began founding libraries for the lower class: so they could be well-read enough to serve the upper class better. Then the lower classes began building their own libraries. Then libraries became free to use. Then they became public institutions. Then they became national institutions, then anyone who wanted to use them could. Then people took them for granted...and as a result they became regarded as being worthless because they were free, because they were not exclusive, because they became inclusive.

People believe if something does not cost any money, is not worth anything. People believe if it is not an exclusive privilege, if it is not hard to get: it is not worth having. The exact opposite is true. What is free is worth more than what costs money. What is equally free for all people is more useful and more valuable than any exclusive privilege. Free public libraries have more worthwhile knowledge than all the exclusive books sold for money. They contain the written history of our past. Anyone who wants to research history in depth can do so using the free information available in public libraries.

Modern Western civilization is basically a recreated modern permutation of Roman civilization. Roman civilization was a recreated permutation of Greek civilization. Greek civilization was a recreated permutation of Persian civilization. Persian civilization was a recreated permutation of Babylonian civilization. Babylonian civilization was a recreated permutation of Egyptian civilization. History repast itself; but it never repeats itself exactly. The present is never as an exact recreation of the past, it is a variation, a permutation of the past. The same vicious cycles and the same dynamics and patterns do repeat themselves generally... roughly, imprecisely, enough to be easily recognizable, that is, if you look for the connections, if you search for the truth, if you have a Sense of Pure Wonder about the Past, the Present and the Future.

For instance; why did the Romans go to war? Why was it their main occupation? Because they had been roaming pirates and raiders for hundreds of years before they settled down and became a war nation. They began amassing grain in granaries, and food and livestock. They became wealthy enough to go to war. They accumulated so much food: that they could leave their farms for seven years: and not be afraid of their families starving. Wealth and accumulation breed more greed. Greed breeds more greed. The more they amassed food and wealth: the more they lusted to have more... until they found a way to get more and become filthy rich. By leaving their farms and going off for months at a time... then years at a time... then for their entire adult lives... as killers and raiders seeking wealth. The only thing they knew was killing. To them: killing was fun. It was the only fun they had. That is how sick their filthy souls were. They gathered in the hundreds of thousands to watch people die in Roman arenas. They laughed themselves sick over public spectacles of bloody butchery and murder. They loved war. They loved to watch killing. They were the most insane human culture of their time. And they spread their sick culture: this laughing at pain being inflicted upon others because they themselves were dead inside. They could not feel their own pain. The only way they could feel their own pain was to watch somebody else in pain. That is how sick they all were. That is why they gathered in the hundreds of thousands... for hundreds and hundreds of years... to watch living humans screaming in agony...dying...bleeding. Because their souls had already been ripped apart and they were all of them: bleeding-screaming infants-babies-toddlers... screaming inside subconsciously... screaming in pain all of their lives without ever feeling their own pain. That was the insane psychopathic culture of these murdering Roman scum. They spread their insanity to all the rest of the world. Their foul culture has now infected every human culture on Earth. Nations with armies, committing mass murder upon each other... as safely as possible, and laughing about it. Their rulers were insane. Their Emperors were human monsters so insane: only the most insane humans today can imagine that they are like them. Their rulers were the most rotten foul human souls to have ever lived. That is how sick they were. A culture is exposed by who it lets rule them. Their culture was ruled by some of the most rotten foul insane human filth ever to be corrupted by the culture they were born into.

The hypocrisy of Romans knew no bounds: marrying off their high-born girls like cattle, like whores sold to the highest bidders in their scramble of upward mobility: while publicly espousing and worshipping the icon of the Roman virgin. Every single Roman tradition, every single public ethic and moral which they held up as what defined them as a culture, as a people: was the exact opposite of what they actually practiced in real life. Every single Roman virtue they espoused: they practiced the opposite, and publicly held up the cultural lie of their culture as what they stood for, while ignoring the evils of what they actually did. Rapists worshipping innocent young virgins: robbers and thieves worshipping honesty. Avarice gone mad; worshipping frugality and asceticism. Worshipping their royal lines of family genealogy while claiming to be a Republic with no King and no royal bloodlines. Senators sneering at the avarice and corruption of wealthy business men, while practicing business in secret, and being twice as greedy as the businessmen they hated because of their more open, and more honest greed. All Roman vices and sins: hating each other and laughing at each other. The more horrible the crime the more they laughed at the criminal. A lawless insane gang of swindlers, courts run by outright bribery while constantly screaming about the sacredness of the Law and judicial legality, while inventing and practicing every legal corruption possible. Elections bought and sold, favors begged for and curried, lickspittles and fawning ass lickens sucking up to Roman senators representing noble ethical principles: senators so old so rotten so senile, they divorced their wives to marry 14 yr-old girls. Every law they made was flouted by their elite in public and nothing was said or done about it.

Gangs of revenge-bent murderers and plotters, making their desperate bids for power, respectability and wealth. A chaos of civil wars and hate and treachery so snarled and convoluted; as each poisoned fiend stands out as an exceptional example of unbridled corruption gone mad ... mobs of insane populi screaming to be fed for free by the state and kept entertained. Power brokers bankrupting themselves to provide games for the masses, the killing fields of the roman stadia, buying up entire grain harvests to stage wasteful feasts for the entire city... in the hope of getting some popular support from the masses in their bids for Imperial power. The brokering of special favors gone insane. The brokering and buying and selling of power and influence gone mad. The client-classes at war with each other, betraying their own class regularly for any possible kind of advantage. Personal vendettas passed on from father to son lasting centuries. The systematic stripping of the outer provinces of all their wealth by the robber-governors; whose only reason to govern was to line their pockets as much as possible: stripping the gold from every sacred religious temple on earth to enrich themselves: taxing the masses into starvation... Wave upon wave of systematic illegal robbery and enforced taxation at the point of a sword. Centuries of oppression misery and brutality: treating all humans who were not of Roman blood as being less than human. It would take ten million books to detail all of the atrocities and crimes and sins and evil which Rome did in its 1,000 years of existence. Rome rose up the dual hydra-headed of greed and war as the only forces powerful enough to crush humanity: and called this mass insane horror: a process known as becoming 'civilized'. And after Rome fell: what was its legacy? These horrors have been repeated, relived and recreated ad-nauseum for another thousand years.

No modern human can understand or imagine the true foulness that was Rome. Humans are not as insane today as they were during Rome's time. Their entire history of humanity is a history of humans committing the worst possible sins and evils: and getting away with it. That is what Roman history has left us with: the belief that if you become as evil as they were: you will always be able to get away with anything. The higher, the worse and the bigger the crime: the less chance of you being punished for it. That the smaller, the less important, the less evil the crime: the more harshly you will be punished. Steal a loaf of bread and your hands are cut off, kill fifty thousand: and you are worshipped for all of your life and hailed as a great leader. And even after you die, you will continue to be hailed as a great leader in history books: as long as your side wins, as long as the winning side kills the losers and writes the history books, as long as children believe everything what their history books tell them and do not question authority..

The Annals of Civilized History are filled with rotten rulers... It is full of their genetic rot. It is full of the results of how the effects of inbreeding and too much; ease affected the dynasties of these royal scum. It is full of how the elite and nobility, how Kings and Queens had miscarriages, how their weak, unhealthy babies died stillborn... how seeking to sire a healthy male heir led to all kinds of political twists and manipulations. Simply because any small elite group of rulers inbreeding amongst themselves became genetically unhealthy. Charles II called Charles the Mad by his subjects is a perfect example of genetic inbreeding: He was born physically, deformed and mentally impaired. As a baby he did not learn how to stand up until he was 4, he did not learn to speak until he was 4, he suffered from convulsions and rickets, he was worse than a mongoloid idiot: he did not learn to walk until he was 10 yr old, his speech could not be understood, he drooled, he couldn't chew food so he was fed gruel and mushed pap all his life. He was mentally defective; he shit his pants because he could not control his bowel movements. Henry the Eighth is another perfect example of how a genetically, physically, emotionally, and mentally diseased King: was unable to establish a dynasty because he was impotent... and conveniently blamed his wives for it, and killed them for the sin of not siring a male heir. He was the epitome of the English Macho pig. A glutton, suffering from gout. A drunkard. A conniving hypocrite. A cunning liar. A hater of women. A momma's boy. A spoiled brat. A cold-blooded killer.

A power-mad cunning intriguer. His entire body was covered with pus-filled boils. And this shit-rot scumbag of a murdering filth is glorified to the hilt by every fucking book and web page which covers his life. Does any historian ever mention the word impotence when writing of him? No. He was impotent; he couldn't sire a fucking thing. The emperor had no clothes, he was impotent, and yet for 500 fucking years, nobody dares to even suggest such a possibility. The lies spread about him siring babies are disgusting. Since when did the Tudor line or Ann Boleyn carry the gene for red hair? How fucking obvious can you get? You don't get red hair from two brown-haired parents. When his wives knew if they did not conceive they would have their heads cut off; do you think they might want some insurance to save their own necks from the executioner's blade, eh? Like a secret dalliance with someone who is not impotent...? Has infidelity ever been historically traceable or provable? Regardless of his impotence, his heirs all three of them did not leave any descendants and that was the end of another rotten die-a-nasty-death dynasty.

English and German Kings became so genetically inbred that they periodically went mad and had to be incarcerated, while a regent or another royal ruled in their place. This genetic heritage of insanity became so bad; that England decided to replace its old Royal Family with a new one; by importing a German King from a small principality in Germany to be their new ruler. Unfortunately their choice was a bad one. The German Kings were stupider, and just as genetically diseased as Henry's impotent genes had been.

This kind of genetic rot happened to the dynasties of ancient Chin. It happened to the Hapsburg dynasty... it happened to the Kings of France, to the Kings of England, it happened predictably over and over...to all of the ruling dynasties that are now glorified in history books as being the greatest rulers who ever lived. Every ruling dynasty rotted from its own inner genetic corruption. Every time the Chinese became too corrupt and too incompetent they were invaded and conquered by nomads outside of their borders who were not as corrupt as they were. And a fresh dynastic rule began... only to rot again from the inside. Each time nomads conquered China, settled down and created a genetic dynasty, they were systematically absorbed by the corrupt Chinese culture which they ruled. Each time they also inbred themselves to a point of genetic stupidity that can barely be imagined today. Each time they became culturally brainwashed into preserving the sacredness of the unchanging Chinese culture when they themselves were not even Chinese to begin with.

The result of founding a dynasty is that you die a nasty death. Your genetic health deteriorates. Your moral and ethical health deteriorates. Your whole family becomes spiritually and physically diseased, sick. You end up dying a nasty death. You are assassinated, or poisoned, or you are killed before you become old enough to pose a threat to others in your die-a-nasty-death family. You go mad. As you grow older you develop all kinds of nasty debilitating diseases and addictions. You become increasingly evil. You commit foul abominations and sins and crimes until you become an inhuman monster. Your perception of reality and truth is regressively reversed until you live inside an insane bubble of unreal fantasy. Your siblings, aunts, uncles, brothers, sisters, mother, father. etc... all plotting against each other and against you, hating each other, trying to kill you, hating you, envying you, vying for power to be the next one in line to inherit your die-nasty familial hell of unhappiness, fear, terror, paranoia, suspicion... Until you are strangled in secret, or imprisoned, or put to death, your head cut off and stuck on a pole... Such wonderful lives lived by the great and powerful die-a-nasty death dynasties. We read about their lives and admire and worship them and hold them up as the greatest examples of humanity to be copied. Everyone wants to live in a palace and be born into an ancient family of dynastic power and enjoy all the superficial frills of their rotten lives.

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six A: The Beginnings of civilization

History books glorify and worship and admire these pieces of genetic corruption in envious admiration of these privileged powerful dynasties. History books never bother to look at the human side of their lives, or explain or rationalize why any decent sane person would want to live in such a nasty family or be born into one.

The Central Asian Steppe nomads were healthier, less corrupt than the settled cultures. They saw these rotting, unmoving settled societies more accurately as having no freedom, no freedom to travel, no freedom of motion... as something that should be done away with. But since the only written historical accounts that survived came from the unmoving, rotting, civilized societies and not from the nomads: history is-sided propaganda. Civilized people wrote their accounts according to their one-sided views. For them: it was the nomads who were evil, cruel, murderers; not them. As far as the settled cultures were concerned: it was the nomads who were the destroyers; not them. It was the nomads who were ignorant and sick and savage and brutal; not them. They were more civilized. The utter rot called History is not the civilizing of barbaric people being absorbed into a less violent society. It is the rot of civilized cultures poisoning healthier nomadic cultures and healthier nomadic people.

Read the first-hand accounts of any civilized explorer's encounters with who they deemed to be uncivilized people and you will have this truth thrown in your face at every page: over and over by simply comparing their rationalized ethics and morals and what they actually did. Until you become so sickened by the endless bigotry and hypocrisies of these famous mythologized heroes... who we are now all supposed to revere. Who were supposed to be civilized in comparison to the supposedly lowly uncivilized savages they encountered. Read what they actually did. Then you can decide for yourself just who were the more civilized.

All accurate, and honest historical accounts of what happened throughout human history have been regularly and systematically purged, and wiped out of history books, twisted, changed, covered up, rewritten, whitewashed, and reversed. The most recent victors, the latest winners install their own whitewashed and rationalized versions of what actually happened while wiping out every other version and discounting and sabotaging and demonizing other interpretations and accounts of what actually happened. Most of what people call History is filled with purged accounts of what actually happened. Why? Because the winners could not and still cannot afford to print the truth about what actually happened. If they did, they would be incriminating themselves so thoroughly, that their name would be blackened forever, and the basis of their authority would disappear and they would be universally despised and attacked and overthrown and hunted down and killed.

Any deeper research into our past, reveals that most of the conventional accounts we call history; is a total fraud. The rarity of finding any historical accounts that have not been doctored and censored into near-total fiction is damning evidence in and of itself. History rarely focuses on corruption. Once power is lost. Once Empires fade: then the venality and corruption of these past Empires becomes a boring, indifferent, curiosity: barely mentioned.

Historians are careful to never have an opinion about anything they write about: Their motto is: 'Let the reader figure it out. I don't have any opinion on it. I am not allowed to have one: and what's more: I couldn't care less about any opinion, any truth, any explanation, any understanding about what I have spent my life researching. I am just a mindless fact gatherer.'

What caused WW1? The 1st World War did not start because an Austrian archduke was assassinated by some nameless anarchist who was fighting to free his Serbia from the Austrian Empire's benevolent rule. That was only the excuse. All the Nations in European wanted to go to war. They had already geared up into a war economy, and they knew that if they did not go to war their economies would crumble. There were thousands of reasons why Europe went to war.

Why did WW1 happen? Why did Europe need to go to war? Because the common worker was having it too good. There was too much prosperity at that time. The masses were becoming too educated. Too enlightened. There were too many new grassroots movements emerging which were threatening the old established ways. There was too much of a renaissance in literature, music, dancing, art, philosophy, politics, science, etc. Going on. If Europe had not gone to war at that crucial time, the Capitalist idea of a rich privileged class, any rich upper class... might have been successfully and systematically dismantled by all of the grass roots movements demanding social change at that time in Europe. People were becoming too humane. There was too much music, too much fun, too much good times. Too many people were going outside on weekends and enjoying Nature. Too much love was happening.

The upper classes kept on having a sense of foreboding about their own imminent demise... so they plotted the demise of the lower classes... before the lower classes could wake up and plot their demise. Many lower class people were feeling the same thing... except in the lower classes, it was a deep sense of foreboding about what the upper classes were getting ready to do. They were trying to establish National identities as something every human should be willing to die for. They were instinctively trying to find an enemy large enough to deflect any attention away from their own deep corruptions that had been exploding into public view so fast, that the masses, and the cleaner lower classes, who were not as corrupt and closer to Nature: were actually beginning to not trust their own upper classes.

There had been too much peace. The masses were getting too numerous, too well fed, too lazy, too spoiled. They needed a healthy dose of struggle and hardship and bravery in battle. Time for a new war! Just the thing to tone up their Nation and bring them laurels and glory and new wealth. War had been glorified and made attractive for thousands of years. Brightly colored uniforms and parades and brass bands, national fervor, national pride, camaraderie; everyone together, united as one country. The arrogance of newfound industrialized power, better guns, bigger artillery.

But above all... there had been too many strikes, too many grass roots uprisings, too many rebellions, too many marches and demonstrations by the new industrialized working class. Too many demands for rights by the lower classes. Women's Suffrage: the right of women to vote. The newly gained rights of the working class only made them bolder and demand even more changes in the hallowed order of the privileged bourgeoisie. There were simply too many workers. Overpopulation was creating a new mass consciousness that was diverted from an awareness of a universal commonality as a single class of slaves working for anonymous masters... into abstract national identities which had nothing to do with their self-interests... They were getting too close to the realization and understanding that all the previous old, obsolete abstract social identities they had been brainwashed into believing in were all hogwash. They were getting too close to the understanding that German, English, French, Austro-Hungarian factory workers, Russian workers had more in common with each other than with the kings and rulers and bourgeoisie whom they were supposed to give their 'national' allegiance to. The lower classes of Europe were getting too close to an international entente of friendliness between all nations. Humanity was reaching a level of universal awareness of itself as a species: not as artificial enemies. But the pride of Empire, the pride of patriotic nationalism, the fight for national independence of the unrecognized ethnic cultures engulfed Europe into mass conformity of going along with whatever fad or craze was the order of the day.

This new burgeoning man awareness had to be sabotaged and destroyed. And it was; by the pride of Imperialism; an even more ancient form of mass awareness which also came from overpopulation. The pride of Nationalism. Each ethnic language-culture in Europe was demanding its own nationhood, its own national government and its own ethnic racial/cultural power.

War is always a good thing for the ruling elite of any nation. War always gets the masses behind their leaders no matter how corrupt they are: it gets them to support the very scum who keep them down and poor and powerless. It keeps the attention of the masses fixed upon an outer enemy: not on the inner enemy hiding within the nation: which is the very ruling elite who declare war. Another reason and more importantly, but unspoken... War deflects all attention away from the stupidity and laziness and spoiled rotten corruption of the ruling classes... while the poor farm boys went and got blooded and fought and died for their sacred fucking fatherlands and motherlands. Why? Because previously: for at least 500 years, European kingdoms that evolved into Nations had lived in continual vicious cycles of War and Peace which they believed were inevitable and never to be questioned or challenged or changed. Tolstoy tried to write about that vicious cycle, but with no understanding at all of what he was writing about. But... what did Tolstoy do after he wrote War and Peace? He began working in the fields along with his own serfs. He rejected all the Nobles, and all their glorifications of war as being sick and evil. He was the living example of an enlightened owner whom Marx and Engel's used to describe how the landowners could be totally destroyed as a class. Only, these two bumpkins did not understand the dynamics of power: and what happens when a power-vacuum occurs. They had no practical social model which could replace capitalism. They had no understanding of why Tolstoy's farm worked in the first place. If Tolstoy had given his serfs complete authority and power without any education or training, they would have drunk themselves into oblivion, frozen themselves to death, and starved, and destroyed the farm and themselves into the bargain.

Just before most of the royal dynasties of Europe disappeared from power, nearly all of the royal houses of all the nations of Europe which went to war against each other in WW1 were interrelated by marriage; by blood to each other. The war they mutually instigated against each other was a familial war of familial hate; no different from all the other familial dynasties of ancient Egypt to the ancient Chin dynasties. The result of their familial hate was WW1: which was the bloodiest carnage ever invented by mankind, with millions dying from disease, epidemics, hunger, poison gas, and mass murder; millions of insane brainwashed robots killing each other: how did this come about?

Where did the idea of legalized mass butchery come from? It came from the principles of European Feudalism, and the upward mobility of the lower class which industrialization created. In the Feudal system, peasants did not fight in battles: they were not allowed to own or use weapons or fight. Only upper class thugs called armored knights were given the legal right to kill people. Feudalism was based upon enslaving people by forcing them to swear oaths of life-long allegiance, obedience and servitude to a feudal lord. Legalized Permanent slavery. But not called slavery. Then the middleclass yeomen of England were allowed to enter the army and given the legalized right to kill and rape and rob and steal. Yeoman were yes-men; lick-spittle ass-kissers of the rich and powerful feudal lords. Then the lower classes of Napoleon's France were drafted into the army and given the legal right to murder, kill, rape, rob and steal. Then all of the industrialized lower classes of Europe raised their status by the Industrial Revolution creating machines that were even lower than they were, and they were sold on the legalized right to kill complete strangers and be covered with national glory. The point is: all this insanity is based upon getting suckers to do your dirty work for you; kill for you, die for you, while you remain safe and secure getting rich off their stupidity. Million of men killing and dying for one Emperor.

Chapter Six A: The Beginnings of civilization

672

Everyone killing and dying for the feudal idea of giving an oath of allegiance to the nation you are a citizen of. Why? What for?

The point is with a population of 300, war is hate and violence, with a population of 30,000, war is insane butchery, with a population of 30 million it becomes total madness, with a population of 300 million it becomes an Apocalyptic nightmare, with a population of 3 billion it becomes unimaginable horror, with a population of 7 billion it becomes pure mass insanity. The point is humans do not learn from history. The point is the changing conditions created by human overpopulation forces us to change our ways and yet civilization refuses to change its ways: this is a recipe for total extinction.

After 1814, the power of the royal houses of Europe was cunningly replaced by the power of money, by the families of the banking houses. After WW2 they allied themselves with the two remaining surviving aristocracy and the royal families of the Netherlands and England. The power of the royal families as they were waning were replaced by the newer power of national banks, moneyed capitalists...money: filthy lucre, capitalist deathheads: the Jewish Rothschild family intermarrying with English, American and other European families became the shadow controllers of the national economies of Europe and America. Secretly and cunningly taking control over the machinery of capitalistic power at their centralized source, when they were first being invented during the Industrial Revolution... until all the national banks of Europe were actually privately owned banks: a little-known fact which has been kept conveniently kept from the masses for over 100 years.

After the defeat of Napoleon, the Jewish Rothschild banking family began replacing the royal power of kings with the economic power of money, by marrying into the aristocracy: just as the feudal lords had done before them. If you check the bloodlines of the owners of all the national banks, and their banking families, you will find that they all intertwine and are a near exact copy of the royal system of elite power by intermarriage and the inheritance of power and wealth by direct descent which had ruled Europe before the Industrial Revolution. This small banking cartel of two banking families has secretly controlled the entire economy of the western world ever since.

The 1st World War was not planned as a trench war. It was planned by all of the Nations involved, as a swift, short series of decisive crushing attacks, and victories. When none of these crushing victories materialized: it quickly degenerated into what was coined a Trench War: since so many trenches were dug... not that they had planned it this way: it just happened. So they stuck this idiotic fact into history books as an inevitable evolution of modern warfare gone mad, gone insane. They had no idea of the increased killing power they were unleashing. Their previous wars had been executed in staged battles with huge, clumsy marching armies. The outcomes were usually always fast and decisive. They did not stop to think what a new form of warfare called trench warfare would do to the entire dynamic of war itself. They did not dream that it was capable of sucking entire nations dry of all their wealth, power and humanity. Or killing off an entire younger generation. Wars and killing machines have all evolved at a staggering pace since then. But humans have not evolved one bit for over 10,000 years. Historians today are still at a loss to explain exactly why the 1st World War happened in the first place. They search and search for some hidden, secret reasons and facts. They are incapable of admitting that it happened due to the pure stupidity of humans. That it was due to the intrinsic corruption of European culture and society. They refuse to connect the obvious truths about humans blindly repeating mistakes without ever learning from them.

Why did WW1 happen? There was too much goodwill between the peoples of Europe. All of the cultural blossoming of unification and goodwill threatened the upper powers on a deep instinctive level.

The Path of Splittness

Chapter Six A: The Beginnings of civilization

673

The Industrial revolution created too much affluence for both the lower and middle class. Their rise in status as a mass made the people of all European nations more arrogant, more demanding, more dangerous and more ambitious. In 1914 there were 4,000 strikes in England alone. The working class was rising up: they had to be diverted from their increasing demands for equality with the upper class. At the same time that Europe's colonial empires were crumbling: in each European nation their masses were demanding and expecting the success of their nation's imperial goals and ambitions. Why? Because they: the lower and middle classes had just risen in status and affluence... and that automatically meant that their nation must of course be successful also... and national success meant imperial military conquest and military victories. They hadn't yet realized that industrial success was not necessarily defined by military victories and battles and conquest. Europeans marched happily to war waving flags and cheering; every nation convinced that their side would win easily.

There was too much incompetence and corruption going on in the ruling class. All the European status quo was being threatened by their own venality and arrogance and insistence upon war as a cleansing healthy thing for their national pride. All of them had been building up their own national armaments and weapons... which they couldn't wait to unleash upon each other, upon what they thought, would be an unsuspecting weaker enemy. These new mechanical weapons of mass destruction were so much more powerful and destructive; they didn't dream that they ever could lose with these new killing toys. They believed implicitly that their armies and their new weapons of mass destruction were unstoppable.

Instead of the lower classes waking up and rising up and killing the who oppressed them; they were diverted by a false flag: the red flag of war, a red flag of patriotic nationalism waved in front of dumb animals. The lower class masses were easily brainwashed and sent out to kill each other by the millions, while the elite upper class profited from the industrial build-up of armaments before the war, profited from the manufacturing of weapons of mass destruction during the war, and profited from the consumer manufacturing boom in postwar America after the war. Today, the lower classes still do not realize that their own upper ruling class are their true mortal enemies. The greatest danger to the upper class is the lower classes waking up and refusing to be bamboozled by the culture of mass propaganda which they are born in.

From 1815 until 1914: both England and Europe had been wracked by lower class uprisings and movements for social reform. For 100 years, the upper ruling lass and the bourgeois class had been forced to give concessions to the growing millions of industrial workers who were rebelling against the new industrial inhumanity of mechanized slavery which western civilization had invented. Which is why this period in history is carefully brushed over and ignored in text books.

Before the Industrial Revolution, the masses of Europe had been ruled by client Kings for centuries, absentee rulers from some distant land who never even traveled to visit the duchies and kingdoms they owned and ruled by the dual oppression of the Divine rights of Kings and the Divine power of God which the Catholic Church represented. The creating, trading, swapping, accruing of territorial fiefdoms by marriage, conquest, political maneuvering, etc. had nothing to do with the ethnic/cultural boundaries of the people they ruled. The development of ethnic identity and independence began from the smallest oppressed ethnic minorities of Portugal and Holland rising in power and affluence through trade and colonization until these two small states were the envy of Europe. The Portuguese and the Dutch people were small enough as a population and lived in a small enough country to have a single ethnic language and culture awareness and identity of the oppressed masses of Europe. It changed the culture of the masses from a culture of peasant/serfs who never went outside of their small agricultural communities, never had any education and were not aware of and not interested in anything beyond the small plot of land they lived on; to a packed mass of overpopulated people with an expanded awareness of themselves as single masses of overpopulated people; sharing a common ethnic culture, background and language. This led to the struggle for ethnic autonomy and independence which then became a struggle for national autonomy and independence.

The Industrial Revolution in Europe; caused a rise in human overpopulation which changed the

The Industrial Revolution of 1700-1800 created a new class of oppressed industrialized slaves. Millions and millions of them because of overpopulation. The root of all these historical dynamics is the increasing new levels of overpopulation of civilized people having too many babies. One main reason why History never repeats itself exactly is because of the constantly changing numbers of an accumulating human population. The conditions of civilization were different at different times because the accumulated populations kept getting larger and larger. The greater the overpopulation: the worse the living conditions, the more irrational the behavior, the worse the poverty, the greater the wealth. A world with 5 million people is not like a world with 50 million people. A world of 50 million people is not the same as a world of 500 million people, a world of 500 million people is not the same as a world of 5 billion people

Just before WW1 from 1814-1914, the industrial revolution had created a new kind of slavery; a worse level of mechanized human degradation and dehumanization which had never been seen before. Masses of poor people became the slaves of machines: they were driven by the machines they operated. Living in industrial ghettos of squalor and industrial filth, and misery which had never before existed... Packed together in overcrowded cities, their numbers continually swelling and increasing. The result of this was the century of the fight for social rights by the newly overpopulated lower classes of industrial workers. The century of European Unification, 1814-1914 was also the century of increased Industrialization. These two major dynamics changed human civilization culturally more in one century than it had been changed in 10,000 years; it was all based upon the exponential increase of overpopulation married to the exponential explosion of the overpopulation of machines. The century of 1814-1914 witnessed the transition of European people from a peasant culture and identity, to an ethnic culture and identity to a national culture and identity. It was a dynamic of the overpopulation of both machines and men; creating social unrest, leading to foment, to uprisings, to revolution, to industrialized warfare. Industrialization caused human populations to explode even faster and it was the root-dynamic of overpopulation which created the new massed cultural identity of Nationalism. It also killed them faster, but not fast enough.

Before WW1: from 1815 to 1914, there had been so many lower class attempts to reform and change the rotting Monarchies and 'Empires' of Europe that the ruling classes of Europe and the bourgeoisie were in constant fear of the lower classes revolting and overthrowing them. The result was Europe's reactionary descent into martial law and military occupation and control that lasted for over 70 years, until Europe became a bunch of police states nakedly enforcing their oppression by martial might; with army barracks in every town and village and patrols and armed soldiers guarding every main road, every bridge and every border crossing,. Nobody could travel without a visa. The revolutions, uprisings and social movements of 1830 and 1848 had not changed anything. Instead, the ruling elite cracked down harder and harder... as the entire rotten status quo of the bourgeoisie and the upper classes of the feudal Age became more arrogant, smug, venal and corrupt. It seemed that military might: brute force; armies, military occupation wedded to a rotten aristocracy wedded to the growing power of industrialist and a tiny clique of international bankers was the answer to keeping the lower classes oppressed as a faceless mass of obedient terrorized intimidated slaves who were supposed to love their King and believe in God. But the Industrial Revolution changed this dynamic. The love of money trumped the love of temporal power. It trumped the love of God. It was created by millions of lower class slaves working in factories, who rebelled against this new form of industrialized slavery. There were more industrial slaves than there were soldiers. Soldiers do not create wealth.

Chapter Six A: The Beginnings of civilization

675

Instead of organizing internationally and killing their masters as they so richly deserved.... which was the next logical step in the new awareness of poor people that they were being oppressed and used as slaves for the enrichment and empowerment of robber barons and robber bankers; the upper classes brainwashed their lower masses with nationalist propaganda and sent them out to fight each other. Thus destroying the chance for an international global movement of the lower classes to organize themselves into a viable power. Ever since then: the rich have used the false flag of Nationalism, the false identity of classifying people by the nation they happen to live in instead of the socio-economic class they belong to, thus effectively destroying the social networks of the lower classes, so a tiny clique of filthy rich European bankers and European royal families could stay in power and become ever-richer.

Just before WW1, the millions of oppressed European poor were becoming too aware. They were becoming to aware that all of the Royal Families that reigned and ruled all of the Empires and Nations in Europe were all connected by blood ties and had no interest in their welfare. These idolized degenerates had been inter-marrying between each other for hundreds of years. The masses were becoming too aware that these rulers and royal killers did not have their best interests at heart. That they were only interested in each other, not their millions of subjects. What better way of deluding the masses into thinking that these Royal families were on their side, but to go to war? The schizoid split between the familial/clan togetherness of European royal society all being intermarried with each other and related to each other, and each royal family's nation going to war against the other so millions of the lower class could die in their name as mortal enemies while they retained their fucking personal friendships is a moral ethical filthiness born of pure royal stupidity, royal smugness and royal arrogance.

On how many levels and ways did the general dynamics and principles of the 1st World War play out? They played out on a dynamic of 'pal' levels; artificially created friendships based upon the common goal of killing stranger... On cultural levels, on personal levels, in ways too complex to ever simplify. Anyone who entered the military in the First World War suddenly found pals. Friends. The army was a nesting ground of male-bonding friendships. Boys and men enlisted together in whole groups and neighborhoods, in clubs. Entire schools signed up together. And died together... Leaving entire counties, cities and provinces empty of young men after the War. Every male social group was pressured by all the other male groups to enlist. If you did not: you weren't a man... you were a traitor to your country, you were a dirty coward. Blind mass conformity rose to new heights of blind mass stupidity... and vice versa. Find friendship and acceptance and status and fame and admiration and idolatry by going out to kill total strangers for an abstract identity, for no reason at all. Why? Because that's the way they usually did it.

The aristocracy of the belligerent countries all knew each other personally. They all knew each other personally. It was actually supposed to be a friendly war. No hard feelings but we have bigger guns than you have... Nothing personal. You don't mind if we kill a few million of your men, do you?... I mean that's what they're for aren't they? Just cannon fodder for us to use; so we can decide who has the biggest guns, er penis, er army.

This brings up another sick European Cultural unspoken, religious belief and assumption. The belief that the young are supposed to sacrifice themselves and die for the old. Humans must sacrifice their lives for the past. They must throw away their own futures to preserve the dead past. The old, sick, dying, senile human garbage of old, dying, useless, senile humans; are supposed to be more important, and more valuable than the fresh energy of young children and girls and boys, and young men, and young women. Better to waste all the lives of the young, to preserve the lives of the old, rotten, garbage who are in power than listen to what the young have to say. Or give the young any power. Or let them do what they want. Or make their values important. Or let them change anything. Now we wouldn't want that now, eh?

European Nations were frustrated because their Age of Imperial Colonization was dying out. Their colonies had failed.. Their colonies were dwindling. Their power and might was not being sufficiently unleashed upon the rest of the world. Their fucking 'empires' were shrinking. They were no longer as majestic and powerful as they had been. Basically, their addiction to colonial power turned all of them into imperial power junkies. Left without foreign lands to invade and wage war in: they had nobody left to attack but each other.

Up until that time, most of the actual consequences of warfare, the ugly horror of War, was conveniently whitewashed, and made attractive. The battles of colonial empire-building were fought overseas. The Europeans did not have to face the actual costs of their own destructive stupidity. War was glorified. War was good for the economy. It was good for testing the mettle of each Nation's young generation. Testing to see which empire had the biggest guns, the biggest battleships, the best armies...

The new industrialized working class cultures of Europe nations created mass cultures based upon national identities and national pride instead of working class values and ethics which it should have done. All of the masses had Imperial ambitions. All of them wanted to become huge powerful Empires. WW1 began because of injured imperial pride. The masses of each imperial European power: the entire basis of their cultural identity: their cultural pride was military power: imperial power, international power, colonial power: brute force: military might. All of the masses of Europe demanded to go to war and hailed the oncoming war eagerly. Some had a deep sense of foreboding about the oncoming War. Nobody listened to them. After WW1: did the European masses learn their lesson never to listen blindly to their leaders and to authority figures? Did they learn; never again to give anyone the power to drag an entire nation into war for no good reason? Did they tear down these elite fops and hang them, or put them into prison as criminals?

No.

The servile culture of submission to a leader, and the replacement of your own identity with a National identity remained unchanged. They had been used as cannon fodder, and as slaves, and serfs and workers for too many thousands of years to ever change their precious, sacred cultural-national-Racial-Ethnic-Religious Myths.

When the Russian Romanoff Royal Family fell from power. What did his cousin, the King of England do when the former Czar asked for asylum in England? He coldly refused to rescue him. Because he was dreadfully afraid that it might seem that he was a Russian lover. And not an English patriot; when in fact he was of German descent. Even though the Russians were fighting the same German enemy they were, his other closer cousin was the German Kaiser. So what did that Royal German/English hypocrite do? He not only refused asylum to the his cousin the Czar: as a result the entire family was murdered, and shot down because of being left stranded by the English King's refusal to give them sanctuary. Not only did he refuse them sanctuary, he had his name changed to Windsor. Why? Because that is how this family stays in power: whichever way the WINDS are going: they go with it... this way OR that way. Oh yes, and also because Windsor castle was the best known Royal landmark in England. And also so their actual German name Saxe-Coburg/ Gotha would not give the English mob an excuse to throw them out of power for being descended from German ancestry during the 1st world war against Germany and the Kaiser. Because of this vile denunciation of their own blood, the betrayal of their own history, their own past: they were the only Royal family left standing after WW2, who were amongst the winners; they were the only Royal family that survived and stayed in power... except for the Royal family of the Netherlands which had remained neutral and managed to survive also. The best traitors, and the best betrayers won. They cunningly became the richest royal family in the world by wining 2 World Wars and allying themselves with the banking families of London and allowing a Jewish banking family, the Rothschilds to marry into their aristocracy. WIND- S the cunning snake- DOR (d'or is gold in French) This alone; allowing a Jewish family bloodline to mix with the upper elite, when all of England and Europe was anti-Semitic was unheard of.

Hitler betrayed everyone including his own working class background, and his own family... not like the German Saxe-Coburg-Gotha royal family of England did, changing their name to Windsor. Hitler never changed his name to please the masses. If in order for you to keep your job; you had to refuse asylum to one entire family of your own blood-cousins and let them be murdered... And you had to change your family name and disown your entire bloodline from whence you came from, so nobody would ever mention the fact that your ancestors were of that murdered family... Would other workers in your company think you had acted ethically and morally and royally, and nobly? As an ironic comment: the German King after this betrayal of familial ties with the former Tsar of Russia was that he had gone to see one of Shakespeare's plays called 'The Merry Wives of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha.'

But Royal families live by different standards than their lowly subjects. Everything they do is automatically whitewashed of all sin by the media and the adoring lower classes. Everything they do is automatically forgiven and excused, and rationalized excuses are quickly stuffed into bullshit propaganda to cover up the ugly truth. They Royals are supposed to be living examples of the highest order. To be copied and aped and followed in whatever they do. At least this is the official line spouted in defense of keeping a Royal Family whenever the English public want to get rid themselves of their filthy rich Royal family completely and their countless holdings of rich estates and investments. But now the English Royal family has been forced to marry into the lower classes to keep from becoming inbred and going mad, and simply because most of their Royal equals are either dead or extinct. They have been forced to be friendlier to the photographers. Before the First World War: the only people the English-German King was friendly with was with his Royal equals the Russian Royal Family, the Austrian Royal Family, The Greek Royal Family, the German Royal family, and other royal families. The First World War began as a mutual arrangement between all of these Royal families

What if the ruling families of the German Empire, the Russian Empire, the Austro-Hungarian Empire, the English Empire and the French Empire had not been done away with? What if they had had their 1st WW and 25 million soldiers had died: and one of the Empires had won: and the others had lost? After battling to a standstill on all fronts without any American foreign intervention? Then all of the Empires would not have gained one single fucking square foot of territory. Then the killing of 50 million people and the ruin of all Europe and Russia would have finally exposed the complete insanity and futility of industrialized warfare and the insanity of national patriotism. Then the Royal families of the Empires would have resumed visiting each other's families: as a community of blood-related relatives: just as they had before 50 million people died.

Except that one of the families would have been the 'winner'... One of the Royal families would have 'won' the war. One of the Empires would have 'won'. Then: all of Europe and all of Asia. All the people in all the Empires: who had lost sons and daughters and children. All the communities and villages and cities that had endured the hardships and suffering and death and privation... all of the billions of people who had been faithful to their Empire, all the billions of people who had been brainwashed to love and obey their Royal leaders and Royal Families would have begun to realize that they had been swindled, had, fooled into fighting each other: when it was their upper top ruling class that they should have been fighting.

The fact that 50 million poor Europeans were killed because these rich royal families chose to go to war against each other did not mean a fucking thing to these royal scum. The fact that WW1 had only happened because these elitist scum wanted to win 'glory' and build, or preserve, or add-to an 'empire'. The fact that these stinking useless filth had won nothing but the death of 50 million lower class people would have stood out like a sore thumb. Then... all of Europe: including England: would have not only done away with their royal families: they would have hung them by their fucking balls and shot them down in public. Then finally there would have been a healthy continuation of the bloodletting that the French revolution had begun, and instead of replacing a King with a fucking 'Emperor' or a fucking 'president' or a fucking 'prime minister'... every fucking leader of every fucking European nation-empire-state: would have been killed: and a good fucking riddance to them all. And the world of Man would have been a happier, healthier, better place for it.

Do you think the idea of Emperors and Royalty and Kings is dead today? This idea has never died. It is still alive. These insane, obsolete ideas are still alive today as is witness by the media frenzy groveling of the latest 'royal wedding'.. They are alive because the side that won was the only Empire that did not get rid of its Royal family; and how? By getting one of its fucking colonies to come to its rescue and save their bacon for them. The side that won was the side that kept its fucking royal family intact. This was how human intelligence was again brainwashed and corrupted into preserving the rotten status quo no matter how much industrialization and overpopulation forced it to change all of its cultural values. This was how even though nearly all Empires and royal families disappeared from the world after the 1st WW: the idea of worshipping royalty was kept intact and refused to die out and go completely extinct. At the cost of ruining all of Europe and England, the tradition of royal privilege was kept alive. This is how old customs refuse to die out: by constant sacrifice of the young so the old may survive, sacrificing everything new and young to the most ancient obsolete filth possible.

What exactly is the abstract concept of a national identity? Try to analyze a human being and give a rational explanation of all of its numerous split-identities. Try to resolve just how your street-neighborhood-city-county-province-state-national-political identity fits with your family identity as mother-father-brother-son-uncle-aunt etc. And how all of these fit into your religious-spiritual-ethnic-historical-racial identity. And how that fits with your work-career-club-school-social identity. And how all of these identities fit into your moral-ethical-rational-scientific-educational identity. If that is not enough of a split-disconnected-splintered insanity of human identity: then try to fit the schizoid way each person treats and deals with different people; based upon their different levels of power-status-wealth-knowledge, and into all of these other schizophrenic identities. Not to mention any fanatical identification or loyalties to sports teams, or movie stars, or famous people, or media legends, historically famous people, famous musicians, famous politicians, etc.

After all of these loyalties are served and sacrificed-to: what is left of you as an integrated, sane human? Where do you put yourself and your own personal identity in all of these identities? Where do you put your own identity as a human being? After identifying yourself by all of these outer identities... Is there anything else left inside you that you can identify as your actual, intrinsic self?... The example of Xmas shows how insane and brainwashed these massed sheep were: two Christian nations stopped the killing to observe the birth of a child. British and German soldiers came out of their bunkers and exchanged gifts with each other and showed their most prized possessions: letters from their family, icons and emblems, all in friendly camaraderie for one day. Then they went back to their mud soaked trenches and resumed the bloodshed as if nothing has happened. Nationalism and hate had triumphed over their common religion. Death won out over birth. Each of them claiming god was on their side. Each one convinced they were fighting for freedom. When the actual fact was that they were all killing each other to make a few war profiteers richer. The private banking families sat in their castles and swelled their vaults with yet more bullion and money. Their obscene wealth hidden from view: unreported: invisible manipulators of entire economies. Their identities kept secret, their power kept secret, their true wealth kept secret... Little did the brainwashed masses know the actual reason they were fighting and killing each other was to make this small cartel of private banks richer. They still do not know it. They had been brainwashed into believing in the existence of a mass identity whose only function was to make the upper class richer. The only reason for their labour, sacrifice and slavery was to make a small class robber barons hiding from all publicity richer. The abstract identity of Nationalism was just a cover used by the ones in power to mobilize the masses and create even more factories spewing out death and explosives and destruction.

Unless you look at it from a distance with perspective, and use general actual truths and dynamics to analyze the entire fiasco of the 1st World War, you will never see how inevitable and predictable it all was. That is unless you read history carefully, and read between the lines, and connect the missing dots. All History is merely a way of selectively choosing what to talk about, and what not to talk about. If the missing dots are never talked about you will never know they are missing.

Basically, the population explosion which the Industrial Revolution set off... was an explosion of the overpopulation of people and the overpopulation of machines: and these two explosions of overpopulation set off the explosions of two World Wars. The power of civilized people and the power of civilized machines mixed together; each serving the others' basic root purpose: kill everything in its path. Destroy everything in its path. The face of civilization was ripped bare, and the naked horror of the Apocalypse, Armageddon, the End of the World was glimpsed, and humanity drew back shuddering in fear from staring at the mirror of which showed itself to be an insane, unthinking slaughtering beast. The culture of human civilization and the culture of machines mixed together created the horror of total war, and the total insanity of nuclear holocaust.

Why should this be surprising? The mixing of these two negative cultures merely increased the speed and intensity of the end result. The end result had always been the same. Mankind and its use of tools and its enslavement of animals had already been creating deserts of total devastation and death for millions of years. The Gobi Desert. The Namib Desert, the Sahara Desert, the Desert of Saudi Arabia, the Arizona desert, The Desert of Los Angeles, the desert of New Mexico, the Utah desert, the Australian Desert; are all creations of Man the Destroyer. The only difference of the destruction was the intensity and speed of it all. It did not take thousands of years; the end-result could be seen in one human lifetime. The merging of man and machine had created a Frankenstein monster that was more horrible than either one taken separately. Mankind drew back from the brink... better to do it gradually, so nobody will notice while the entire earth is being systematically destroyed by machines controlled and run by civilized humans. Armageddon: Armed with weapons of mass destruction

Chapter Six A: The Beginnings of civilization

Why did WW2 begin? Because of Hitler's huge success in healing German national pride by the renewing the German economy: Ostensibly: the 2nd World War started because Germany had gobbled up central Europe by annexations and lightning invasions. This huge growth in power of a formidable enemy frightened France and England. Germany had become too powerful too popular, too admired, too successful a social model. The remaining corrupt capitalist Nations knew that if they didn't do something about it, they would have another competitor on the block. In this case again it was irrelevant as to who attacked who. All of the weaker Nations ganged up on the strongest Nation. Just as Napoleon was attacked by all of Europe and England to boot because he had become too powerful. He was changing European society too much, and too fast. He was defeated for being too powerful... just as Julius Caesar was assassinated for being too powerful. Just as Germany was defeated by a group of its own peer European Nations for the crime of becoming too powerful too fast.

The real reason was because Germany did not belong to the private European cartel of private banks masquerading as national banks. These financial criminals had been manipulating the economies of nations since the Napoleonic war and profiting from aiding both sides of every war they created by plotting secretly behind closed doors and supporting and funding both sides. For them it was all a matter of the bottom line: profit. That millions died because they were greedy meant nothing to them

Hitler had suddenly built up a healthy German nation with its own currency that was not controlled by a private bank. The German robber barons and Junkers did not belong to the corrupt English-Jewish-American league of international banking criminals. They threatened to take over Europe, and if they had succeeded: all of the private banks masquerading as French, Austrian, Italian, English, American National banks would have been shut down and their members jailed or shot or hung for war crimes and profiteering from the war. By staying in the background, these scum have pulled the strings of western civilization for over 200 years... with the common man being none the wiser of their existence. The true powers of evil: the highest of the controllers of centralized power never show their faces to the public. They use puppets and intermediaries to do their bidding.

Germany lost the war. The result was this: the international banking families of Rothschild and Loeb: who had strangely disappeared from the onslaught during the war and were nowhere to be found, suddenly reappeared after the war at their usual stations of the so-called 'national banks' and took up business of controlling the war profiteering as usual in Europe as if nothing had happened. Actually what had happened is that they had filled their filthy secret underground coffers with billions and billions of more profits by funding both sides of the war. They got away with it, and continue to get away with global larceny. Now they own most of the wealth of the western world and still hide in secret; never showing their faces; never revealing the shadow governments they have installed through the western nations.

The corporate fascism of Germany and Italy was beaten into a pulp by an older corporate fascism of European robber barons who had the entire world to rape and plunder in their headlong rush towards greater and greater profiteering before, during and after the war. Do historians ever mention their existence of these profiteers or their responsibility or their criminal role in creating and profiting from war? Never. Only recently in the Information of the internet has their existence been discovered and revealed to the few who search for truth. The mass of brainwashed humans exist only as their slaves: locked into the western capitalist robber baron model of cultural greed, corruption, consumption and affluence. An affluence which is now eroding steadily as these elite criminals suck the entire world dry of money. Now the Rothschild-Loeb-Rockefeller banking families have become shadow dynasties: hiding the tentacles of corporate power, influence and organized secret societies which they control and guide for their personal aggrandizement. They are the invisible tip of the shitpile of capitalized western civilization. All roads of evil lead to them. They control the masses through mass manufacturing, mass media, mass propaganda, mass advertizing, mass news, mass entertainment, mass brainwashing, mass affluence, mass terrorization, governments, corporations, secret organizations, secret alliances, secret conspiracies, secret plans, secret agendas. And so on. Their weapon of choice is the stock market: where they systematically blow up into bubbles and then collapse them: deriving trillions in profit from both sides of the orchestrated boom & bust cycles which they manipulate at their whim.

Modern western consumers are far too ignorant and uninformed to ever realize that such a degree of centralized control could exist today in the world, that a cartel of private banks can and do control the world's money supply and own the main governments of the west lock, stock and barrel. Their mass propaganda machines have attempted to spoof the very conception of the idea that conspiracies exist. Even though history shows clearly how they already had a stranglehold on Europe and America through their network of private 'national banks' during the 19th century. What they did was very cunning. They went completely underground and allowed others: their puppets to take the flack...and the fame, and the notoriety, and the ill will, and deflect all attention away from them

Did America enter WW2 because it was attacked by the Japanese Imperial Navy? Yes and no. It was all about the money. How much money the war profiteers could make as a neutral nation selling arms, goods and grain to both sides: as they did in WW1. If Hitler had not declared war on America: these banking criminals would probably have stayed out of the war longer, and made larger fortunes from financing both sides against each other... except for Stalin and revolutionary Russia whom they tried to take over and failed. The American Robber barons sent a representative to run the war in the Kremlin, as the brains and real power behind Stalin. FDR and his government secretly agreed to enter the war in a cabal with the English Churchill as a conspiracy kept secret from both the English and American public. If the American public had known what these two war mongers were doing: both of them would have been shot for treason, and England would have sued for peace and there would have been no second world war.... It was the war profiteers, not the people... who were planning to enter the war against Germany anyways to make even more money... but they couldn't find a good enough excuse. Roosevelt had already made a secret pact with Churchill which was kept from the American public. If they had known what FDR had agreed to in secret; he would have been impeached, charged with treason and shot dead sitting in his fucking wheelchair. He was a sick cripple: a weak dying carcass filled with lies. He committed so much evil he died before the war he was responsible for instigating ended. By cutting off Japan's oil supply: Roosevelt had already secretly declared economic warfare on the Japanese Empire just at the time Japan desperately needed oil to continue its invasion of Manchuria and its attempt to conquer all of China. FDR provoked Japan into attacking the USA, he knew the Japanese were going to attack Pearl Harbor and did nothing to stop it, he allowed his own navy to be bombed on purpose...

Oh the infamy! What was truly infamous was him knowing Pearl Harbor was going to be bombed and letting Americans die so he could use their deaths to declare war. Just like Bush Jr. used the pre-knowledge of 9-11 to go to war. But FDR was only a puppet of the robber baron-class he represented. His cunning tactic was a complete copy of Wilson's. A public decry of war and advocating pacifism and isolationism... until he is 'forced' into declaring war against his will because of a nefarious attack on an island of no strategic importance whatsoever to America. Why was the American fleet stationed in Hawaii? Because America had harbored dreams of Empire just as the European nations. American hegemony was just as much a reason for going to war as all the other nations whose pride rested on empire building. Wilson's excuse for going to war was so flimsy, there are no words for it. So was FDR's. America was not being threatened by the surprise attack. A few old battleships sunk: so what. No American soil was trampled on or violated, nor would there have been any actual invasion. Japan was merely clearing its eastern side making it safe to concentrate on the rape of Manchuria and China. The rape of Manchuria: the rape of man by monkeys: monkeys raping each other and killing each other. Bestiality, hate, racism, atrocity, genocide, mass butchery: these are the marks of civilized society: this is the norm. Freed of all artificial constraints: civilized man descends to a level lower than that of savage animals. To be civilized means not just being a sub-human monster: it means being a sub-animal: more controlled by reptilian instincts than all other warm-blooded mammal on Earth.

The only difference between the two sides was that Germany's Hitler was an out-and-out dictator: while the robber barons who were the actual dictator's of the rest of western civilization, hid in their mansions and never resorted to outright displays of power. They had learned to keep a back seat and work behind the scenes in secret a long time ago. They were not nationalists: not like Hitler who passionately did believe in the superiority of the Germanic race and in German pride and Nationalism. The international bankers won against the nationalist dictators because their propaganda machines were much more sophisticated and cunning... and because the western suckers: the unwashed masses were never allowed to know who really rules them. By giving their slaves the false perception of freedom, the false perception of democracy, the false perception of nationalism: they had succeeded in hoodwinking the entire world into fighting for their profits. While millions died: millions of dollars poured into their coffers... And none were the wiser after the war as to who really profited from this mass slaughter.

History books never focus on who profits the most from wars for the simple reason: the information is not available. All the profits are kept secret from the public. There are no accounts, no ledgers, no documents, no files, no evidence of how much money the Rothschilds and Loeb's made during and after WW2 because they are completely privately owned, and since they do not sell shares to the public: they do not have to publish their financial statements for anyone to see. This is one standing joke of Western Capitalism. The wealthiest cartel of criminals has been able to keep the actual amount of their filthy ill-gotten wealth completely secret from the rest of the world for 200 years. Only at the beginning of the founding of the Rothschild dynasty was their secret wealth was guessed and estimated, and even that is an unreliable skimpy bit of evidence. Their actual wealth is a total secret. In an age when the gross national product of nations is public knowledge, and financial institutions on Wall Street blare out what they are worth: the richest banks in the world keep their accounts a secret... and nobody seems to care or notice or insist that this be rectified. When will war profiteers ever be indicted? So far the level of corruption has guaranteed their safety and invulnerability. Only bloody revolution can ever drag them out into the open.

When will the lower classes wake up and realize that all wars are bad for them and good for their rulers? If you want to fight someone: kill the fuckers who want to go to war, and there will be an end to all wars and an end to all dumb asses who want to go to war. Then decent people can live in peace without any govts, without armies and without borders and without all the fear and terror that all this military power creates. The fact is that all wars are started by using flimsy excuses. The reason they have to be started by using flimsy excuses: is because there is no excuse for war at all: all war, regardless of which side you are on, is insane, wrong and evil. The reason humans start war is because they are insane. The excuses humans use to start a war are insane. The excuses people use to start a war are evil. The reasons that humans use to start wars are hate, egoism, envy, greed, fear, jealousy, avarice, possessiveness, money, land grabbing, bickering, squabbles, pride, arrogance, stupidity, smugness, power, wealth, status, winning, glory, adversarial competition, antagonism, xenophobia, megalomania, superiority-complexes, inferiority-complexes, trauma, irrationality, rationalization, custom, tradition, religious beliefs, worship of authority, conformity, brainwashing, inhumanity, etc, etc...

The fact is both of Japan and the USA were in the wrong. These sick, obsolete political entities called Nations were using people like cannon fodder to gain power and wealth, territory, status, and fame for a small class of elite rich money-hungry ruling elite power-mongers: led by the Rothschild banking cartel who owned, controlled and ran the national banks of Europe and America and profited off the war.

Relatively speaking... all political bully nationalisms being equally evil... the gang of political nationalities called the allies, were morally more evil than Hitler because collectively they were bigger than he was. Just as Hitler was more evil when he invaded Poland, and Czechoslovakia because he was bigger than they were. Which brings up a point: why was Stalin never regarded by the west as the enemy when he was just as guilty as Hitler of invading, eh? The excuse of declaring war on Germany because of Poland was an outright two-faced hypocrisy of the allies. So Stalin is supposed to be a friend when he invades a European country and occupies it? While Germany is an enemy when it does the same thing? Can anyone find an explanation for this blind spot in human history? All alliance with Russia should have been cancelled. He had violated every single fucking treaty of non-aggression he had signed with the western allies: Yet not one of those western scum saw him as a potential enemy... which later on turned out to be their fatal error, as Stalin gobbled up half of Europe and laughed in their faces as he did it. Reducing ½ of Europe to the same squalor, poverty and terrorization as the rest of his medieval empire of starving slaves.

The American empire was not created like Rome's was. No long dreary series of wars and conquests like Rome did. Just step into the power vacuum that Europe left after destroying itself and suddenly gosh, we're mighty conquerors, and heroes and a new world power!

Hitler committed suicide because he knew he if he was caught he would be shot or strung up like Mussolini. Why don't people wake up and catch these war mongering criminals before they begin a war and hang them by their balls before they cause trouble? Any public figure who clamors for war should be held personally responsible for the war they create and they should be treated as war criminals before they can force any nation into war. If all Nations around the world did that, and strictly enforced this Law: there would be no more fucking wars anymore period: end of sentence: end of all war.

Leaders need to be taught painful, unpleasant lessons that it is not nice to profit from killing people. Until humans learn enough to teach their own leaders a painful lesson whenever they get out of line, until we learn to discipline and control our own leaders; we have no business even having leaders. Until the leaders learn that they cannot keep on getting away scot-free with war, murder, rape and robbery for 12,000 years as they have been so far... and be glorified and idolized for it later on in History books: you will keep on having the most irresponsible criminally-minded power mongers who want to get away with crimes and atrocities; fighting to become leaders. With secret plans and dreams for world-domination and power, and wealth beyond the dreams of avarice filling their fantasies.

The entire reason rulers and leaders exist is because they aspire to head a hierarchical pyramidal structure... a civilized system which makes them invulnerable. Nobody can get at them, nobody can kill them because huge armies block the path to any revenge or punishment. The only reason anyone would want to be this protected is if they did something, or do something, or are planning to do something criminal which warrants punishment. The only reason leaders declare war is because they don't have to do the killing. When will humans wake up to this basic fact? If a leader wants to kill someone: let them do it themselves; not get some poor dumb sucker to do their killing for them. You will be amazed how all war and killing disappears from the face of the earth the instant leaders are forced to do what they say. That is what leadership is based on; the hypocrisy of 'Do as I say: not as I do'. This is the basic hypocrisy of all leadership. Leadership is the opposite of personal responsibility. Leaders assume and expect and try to make every other human being on earth personally responsible for their actions... while at the same time; never being held personally responsible for anything they do and say... unless they are pulled down from their high position by the entire nation revolting against them and their fucking armies and war and strung up to a lamp post like Mussolini was. Why wasn't this shining example followed by all other nations? He was strung up to a lamp post for a good damned reason. So the light of human enlightenment could shine and act as a shining beacon of enlightenment to all the lower class people of the world. If you do not hold leaders personally accountable and personally responsible for their actions and words you will get thugs and criminals slaving and fighting to get into the highest offices of power where they are all exempt from punishment and turn all human governments into evil, corrupt cabals and conspiracies, into criminal syndicates whose only goal is to gain power, maintain power and increase their power over the lower classes... Until all the governments of all the world are a bunch of filthy criminal syndicates which only attract even worse thugs and swindlers and con artists into the competitive fray of fighting for pyramidal power over lackluster, stupefied, dumbed down, terrorized brainwashed millions of obedient slaves who now do not even dream it is possible to rip these scum from their high places.

This is the inevitable dynamic which the pyramidal structure of civilization creates; the more humans overpopulate themselves, the higher the pile of human masses accumulate: the more rotten and criminal and corrupt will be the ones who manage to clamber to the top of this shitpile and stay there as long as possible. When will humans learn that personal responsibility is the only way to live? When will humans hold their leaders personally responsible?

What has happened to American politics since the gilded age of the Robber Barons? A steady remorseless legalization of bribery, favoritism, crony-capitalism, old-boy networks and special interests. So intertwined into all other social corruption; that not only all three separate branches of the system: judicial, legislative, and the presidency; have been corrupted by collusion and graft: but the entire media and newspapers have been swallowed up by the corporations, and are part-of the very corruption they are supposed to expose.

The American military complex couldn't wait to show off their latest, new, fancy killing gadgets that cost millions and billions of dollars. The first Iraq war was a military showcase... like an auto showcase, where people gawk at the latest technology, a testing ground to be used in improving their weapons of mass destruction for future wars. The latest in spectator corruption: televised warfare; videogames of war sold to children glorifying mass slaughter.

Why are the mass murderers who are finally deposed and toppled never killed? Why do they always get away with their lives and their fortunes intact? Why do all of the rich affluent Governments refuse to use the policy of open assassination of the political heads of State who are their political enemies? Why are all assassinations done in secret? Why do the western powers refuse to kill deposed dictators who once were their obedient puppets? Gee, I wonder. The last mass murdering leader who knew he was going to be killed; committed suicide rather than subject himself to the indignity of being defeated and toppled from his height of power. After the Nuremberg Trials there has not been one single toppled leader who was a mass murderer who has ever been successfully prosecuted and killed for his crimes... except by other mass murderers who are more powerful and even more guilty and even worse than the mass murderers they accuse. Why aren't all the most powerful mass murderers accused in public and jailed and hanged? Why did Stalin die in comfort in his sleep; why wasn't Mao Tse Tsung brought to trial? Why wasn't Bush Jr. and Cheney accused of mass murder? Because they were leaders of huge powerful governments and armies? Fuck them: all of them.

685

But why do they get away scot-free with mass murder after they retire from office, eh? So nobody will ever get the idea of killing them when they are in office? Otherwise today, political assassination would be as common as it had been a thousands of years ago... before this new set of democratized, legalized killing privileges were invented for the use of the richest most powerful assholes to profit from.

Maybe war is just an effective way of a small ruling elite to intimidate a large population by never even giving them a chance to rise up, by never giving them the idea that they might be able to legally and justifiably kill the ones who are most guilty and most deserving of being killed. Why are the most powerful mass murders worshipped and adored and admired? What is so fucking great about being a leader? Is it the feeling of power that is so addictive? Or is it the feeling of being invulnerable? Or: is it the enjoyment of other people being servile and submissive to you? People enjoy winning. They enjoy being on top. But at what cost to others? Why do others allow it?

If you do not take anything for granted, then you cannot be taken advantage of. If everyone questioned everything: then leaders, nations, governments, could not use the accumulation of brute force as a political tool of intimidation and terrorization. Then they would not be able to plot, and scheme, and find excuses to go to war and kill other people.

What is war but trauma? What is war but shock tactics to terrify and terrorize millions of innocent people into mindlessly and stupidly obeying their leaders? How did WW2 begin for the Americans? By a sneak attack. How was it ended? By another sneak attack. What was the degree of shock when Nagasaki and Hiroshima were totally destroyed? The high command of the Japanese military had been warned of an attack... but did the people on the street, did the ordinary Japanese citizen know about the warning? No. What was the dropping of two nuclear bombs on a Nation that did not even know these weapons existed but a sneak attack? If it was not a sneak attack... what was the effect? What was the shock of the Japanese when the two atomic bombs fell on their island compared to the shock of Americans learning an attack had been made on a small island in the middle of Pacific? How much more were they shocked and dismayed by this compared to how shocked Americans had been by the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor? Bombed by a revolutionary new destructive force so poisonous, and so deadly; that it was a million times more shocking in its effect? The fact is that the Pacific theater of WW2 was begun by a catastrophic shock by one side... and was ended by an even greater catastrophic shock by the other side. The Japanese adopted the tactics of a Ninja assassin as their basic Naval Strategy... whose advantage of surprise lasts only a hundredth of a second... and tried to apply it to a war that lasted years. They did not understand the difference between tactics, and strategy. If you attack someone by surprise, the first blow is supposed to be the knockout blow. If you let him get up, then it's all over for you. They forgot to account for the presence of the American aircraft carriers. They were an Imperial Power; once again the Nation that obeyed authority more slavishly, the Nation that worshiped Authority more slavishly lost.

What is the insanity of mechanized warfare? The mechanical, inhuman unfeeling destruction of life. Violence without love never solves anything. Killing without love never solves anything. Using negative energy, using tools, machines and advantages without love, without feelings is the evil, sick mechanical advantage which has sustained and perpetuated civilized killing for 12,000 years. And not one act of unloving violence or killing or oppression has ever solved anything for 12,000 years. Yet

The Path of Splitness

humans continue to refuse to learn from the past. People refuse to read history and learn from it. Why do people write history books that make it seem as if violence, victory in war, winning is something to be admired? Why do nearly all history books glorify the winning killers as always being in the right? As if they accomplished something: when all they accomplish is more death and destruction. When history clearly shows that this intensification of industrialized, mechanized killing is leading us to the destruction of the entire Earth. Who needs this kind of peer example in today's modern society? Why do people insist on worshipping killers and winners above all other role models? A killer is a winner who wins by killing. A winner is a killer who kills by winning.

Have people bothered to figure out, that since our ancestors have been acting like insane raving killing maniacs for 10,000 years, that maybe there is something wrong with this 10,000 year-old wonder called civilization? That maybe we are killing each other because we are living in a system called civilization? How many wars have to happen before people realize that killing others not only does not solve anything: but leaves a gaping human cultural wound that bleeds for centuries?

Child abuse and child-rape has been practiced for centuries all over the world as a secret that is never spoken of. Now suddenly in modern times, a few affluent societies decide to publicly admit that it actually happens. Supposedly very rarely, not a lot? Wrong. At least one third of all children have been raped or sexually molested before they grow up. Then that statistic is ignored, and pushed under the carpet.... It ceases to exist as a social issue. Nobody speaks about it. Instead, the Media makes people paranoid about strangers raping their children when everyone knows it is the family, the parents, the siblings and relatives that rape children. Oops... that is an unpleasant truth so let's not talk about it. Do history books bother to find out which children were raped and which ones were not and why they were raped and who raped them and when and where? No. All of the worst atrocities are covered up, whitewashed or ignored. History books are nothing more than a way of avoiding the truth of what actually happened. Every civilized war effectively kills the most humane and progressive movements of its time, and crashes the populations back into a brutalized worsened condition so they are merely thankful that there is no longer any more war.

War reinforces the knee-jerk reaction of the brainwashed masses to obey their authority figures, it keeps the traumatized masses from focusing on their true enemies; the ones who are ruling and robbing and taxing them. It prevents the thought of rebelling against or going to war against their own Govt. It breaks the back of humane-humanitarian movements and increases the centralized power back of the power-mongers. The continuous threads of human love-family-history-culture-traditions are broken over, and over again by wars. The continuous threads of peace and happiness are never allowed to grow strong. Otherwise people might develop their own folk wisdom; and renounce the politically correct, conventional brainwashing they are fed. By destroying personal, family, community cultural connections, wars effectively keep the masses from developing any connected collective awareness of themselves. Whenever there is a movement from the lower levels to improve their lot; it is sabotaged or crushed by the upper levels of society. Very few of the true facts or history of these popular mass movements are reported or even mentioned in history books. History books are very powerful cultural tools in training the masses to ignore and not discover their own massed power and potential.

Why do people worship the history of the rich and powerful and never the history of the millions and billions of poor people who outnumber them? People flock to museums. They flock to all the palaces in the world that have been turned into museums. Into national treasures, into historical icons. Into historical preserves. They are attracted to these palaces by wealth. Power. Fascinated by the lives of the rich and mighty. Gawking in awe at the grandeur of obscene wealth beyond their wildest dreams.

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six A: The Beginnings of civilization

687

Thinking they are somehow soaking up culture... That this is somehow putting them in touch with their own past,... putting them in touch with their own history. That these huge ostentatious palaces are culturally meaningful. Thinking of all the millions of man-hours it took to build and shape all of the artificial abstract beauty...

Nobody can tell you whether these millions of serfs and peasants and workers hated their rulers, or feared them... and feared for their lives because they were killed like cattle, if they dared so much as displease these palace dwellers. Nobody knows if they worshipped their oppressors and rulers just as slavishly as the modern, ignorant gawkers in museums and ancient castles do today. Why? Because they were not considered to be important. They were considered to be the lowest: despised by the highest: yet without them the highest cannot exist: which is something the entire upper-class scum of elite bloodsuckers do not want to admit. The only legacy these workers and slaves have left behind, are the dead artifacts, the dead palaces they were forced to build. That is supposed to be their proud achievement, their proud legacy, their proud contribution to civilization: forced enslavement.

Whether they lived lives of horror and brutalized slavery, or whether they managed to live half-decently is a total unknown blank. A total irrelevant issue. People do not go to these palaces to commemorate the thousands of people who were killed, and decapitated, and enslaved, and imprisoned, and murdered by these palace dwellers. They do not erect plaques for the lost lives of their dead and murdered: like they did in the killing fields of Cambodia. Where the Khmer Rouge went on a systematic genocide of their own people. The Cambodian bodies are still there to be unearthed so there can be no doubt that the mass-murders took place.

People do not want to develop a critical awareness of the past because if they do, then they will see too clearly all the things that are wrong today. People still believe that ignorance is bliss. Historians are very, very careful not to focus too closely upon anything even slightly unpleasant that may have happened in the past. The historical conspiracy of silence, and avoidance, and deflection about unpleasant things is how our selective awareness works. All people are guilty of this in one way or another.

If you want to revere and worship History. If you want to worship at the shrines of power and privilege. Then at least get your facts straight first. Find out what really happened. And see if the actual truth about History... the actual truth about all of civilized history doesn't turn your stomach. Then maybe your urge to worship marble palaces might be dampened. Go to a quarry and see how incredibly hard it is to make anything out of stone. Try to appreciate the billions of man-hours of raw sweat and labor of human slaves that went into building these obscene displays of excessive wealth and power. And ask yourself if you would have wanted to live like them in those past times... to slave your entire life away; to please these elite Palace dwellers. Or if the meaning and significance of your entire life's work would have been fulfilled by leaving behind some dead shit in a palace for tourists to gawk at in later years.

Are the piles of dead stones of Egyptian Pyramids sufficient reason to justify four thousand years of the slavery of peasants and bought slaves? All of Egypt's human slaves and subjects crumbled into the dust and are forgotten as mindless machine, subservient to one ruler's will. Faceless masses of humanity that were used to pile these stones up. Why is History a story about only one person at the top while it ignores everyone else who is crushed beneath the pyramid of hierarchical power? Historians never ask these kinds of questions. In fact they don't ask questions at all. No civilized human asks these kinds of questions.

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six A: The Beginnings of civilization

688

Look at the historical myths surrounding the Founding of America. It is supposed to have begun at Plymouth Rock. Actually, the first settlement in the North coast of North America by the English was a series of tentative explorations, and mapping out the coastline. The settlers of Roanoke Island routinely kidnapped local tribal leaders and held them for ransom, despite relying on these "savages" for food and supplies. The Roanoke colony disappeared leaving no explanation except the cryptic words: 'croatoan' and 'cro'. The Crow Spirit of the native people overcoming the toehold of negative European evil: Crow... a toe...an-? A negative attempt. The 'and' is left unfinished... and what happened to the colony? The lost colony of Roanoke remains an unsolved mystery to this day. The Popham colony also failed. Before any settlement was even attempted at the landing at Province Town on Cape Cod Island, it was marred by an English sea captain seizing 27 natives and selling them into slavery. That also did not make a good first impression. All of the first attempts of colonization were situated on the outer islands of North America, not on the continent itself and all the first attempts were failures. Just as Jamestown was first established on an island on the South coast of what now is now Virginia. Jamestown and Province Town were planned as a dual venture; one to the north, and one to the south. The English were such arrant cowards; that they did not dare actually establish their first forts on the actual continent of America. They timidly established footholds and toeholds on the outer islands first before they ever set foot on the American continent. You will not find the true details of Jamestown listed in any text book in America, yet it was established 13 years before Plymouth.

440 of the original 500 Jamestown colonists died. 300 graves have been unearthed so far at the original site. The original site of Jamestown was in a fetid malarial swamp, the worst place they could possibly choose. The first inhabitants were not nobles or aristocrats as the lying propaganda of text books claims. The people who were unwanted refuse, social rejects, outcasts, religious Catholic heretics, Puritan fanatics, brought there to filth the purest cleanest continent in the world not yet poisoned by an overpopulated civilization, sent there by investors of the London company of Virginia to get rich quick.

After dying in droves from one year of starvation and disease and Indian attacks, a ship from England finally came to rescue them only to be turned back. The remaining few leaving the failed colony were met just offshore by a fleet of English ships and the survivors were 'persuaded' at gunpoint to return to the hell they had just barely managed to escape. The latest historical research on Jamestown has begun to lift the veils of lies and secret plots and murders committed in that first attempt. It shows how the indigenous natives the Algonquians did not want them there. How the Indians used guerrilla tactics to kill any who ventured too far from the military stockade they had built for their safety. It showed how the fort was not built as an attempt to colonize at all: it was a hasty, ill-planned get-rich-quick scheme by the shareholders of the London Company. They had not even planned on feeding themselves or growing a garden. Originally they had only intended to stay there by getting rich off the supposed gold and silver they would find, trading their trinkets for gold and food. They did not even try to find food, or grow it. When the; Indigenous people refused to give them food they began to starve.

This reveals how the American Myth of Thanksgiving is a total reverse of the historic truth. The myth and tradition of the holiday of American Thanksgiving is a complete and utter falsehood. The excuse the Indians gave to the starving English was that they were starving also; and had only enough for themselves. That was also a lie. The Indians had plenty of food. The English Fort Comfort just 35 miles away; had plenty of food also. But the starving English at Jamestown did not dare make the trip because they knew that if they stepped outside their slime-infested, disease-ridden swampland where the fort had been erected, they would be systematically hunted down and killed by the natives who lived there. They would never have reached Fort Comfort alive. So they stayed inside their fort and slowly starved to death and were inflicted by the most horrible diseases and plagues. What do you think the American Dream is? It was born of the Dream of reaching Fort Comfort. It is the Dream of attaining a comfortable life of affluence, protected in the safety of a house used as a fortress to keep everyone else outside at bay. Every man's house supposed to be an impregnable castle-fortress insulated from the reality of the hostile outer world, from the hostile natives whose land they had stolen.

The first Jamestown corporate venture failed and continued to fail for ten years and was re-manned and re-stocked over and over again with not one penny of profit to show for all this investment... It is strange, that an English venture company, ostensibly formed only for profit, should allow itself to be bled dry for years...without any return for the enormous cost of keeping a temporary fort the size of Jamestown going, which unwittingly became a settlement, when the original purpose of the London company was not establishing a colony at all.

Why?

It doesn't make sense...

That is, until you connect all of the hidden dirty little facts

Starvation, disease, famine, pestilence, plagues, freezing to death, attacked by the natives, intrigues, poisoning, plots, bad luck, led the fort to be abandoned, burned down, rebuilt and restocked with new indentured servants and political prisoners over and over. Its survival was constantly being threatened by natural disasters and bad luck. The history of the first 50 years of Jamestown were ugly... enough to make you puke when you read all of the hidden, covered-up facts.

The English built military forts because they were invading an occupied land as invading interlopers who knew they had no business being there, except the motive of greed. The English believed there was just as much gold and silver to be found in North America as the Spanish had found in South America. And they did not want to even waste the time and expense of establishing religious missions like the Spanish had done to excuse their rapacity for gold, God-fearing slaves, and silver. England was not a Catholic Nation. Their first allegiance was not to the Church and the King and Greed in the Catholic order of European evil. Their allegiance was to Greed first, then to their King, with God and religion coming last

Why do you think America became a land of skimmers and butchers? The inventors of mechanized mass slaughter and mass butchery. What is the criminal practice of swindling but skinning someone alive of their money? The inhuman horror of killing and skinning and poisoning, and greed, and hate these first English scum were unleashing upon a virgin continent that had never been raped... the huge energy potential of the growing cancerous poisons they were infecting this land with... was so huge: that these first would-be skimmers lost their own skins in the process and died horrible deaths. They were literally skinned alive by their own evils... they died with their own skins peeling off their flesh: as punishment for what they were planning to do to an entire continent. But did they stop doing it? No. Even with horrible signs and catastrophes, and sufferings, and deaths... these unwanted scum were forced back again and again, so the investors could get rich quickly and get rid of them at the same time: killing two birds with one stone as it were. Reducing the excess population of in England while enriching themselves at their expense.

The personal written accounts of Jamestown show them suffering from so many diseases and illnesses that the survivors became insane and obsessed with their own guilt and impending death. Bloody fluxes of all kinds killed them. Dysentery. Typhoid fever. Burning fevers. Their skin burning so badly that it peeled off them as they died in agony, screaming in horror and pain as their skin fell off their bodies. Much like the burning horror of Atom Bomb victims having their skin peel off them in agony as they

The Path of Splitness

690

died in horror. Much like the beloved Napalm of Vietnam that burned thousands of Vietnamese. Even after the second failed attempt when the few survivors actually managed to return to England without being forced to go back again... they continued to suffer from all kinds of fluxes, fevers, agues, and ailments onboard the returning ship. The first four attempts to establish Jamestown all failed: The fort was attacked constantly by the natives and burned to the ground and then later rebuilt on the mainland. In 1622; 350 inhabitants of the fort were killed, in 1644; 500 were killed. The natives definitely did not want these invading scum on their lands: something the American Thanksgiving myth carefully avoids mentioning.

Finally the uprising of the colonists in 1662 brought about the demise of the Virginia holding company The Crown took over the fort and it became an official an English overseas colony instead of a dirty get-rich-quick scheme that fell through and failed over and over again. Not a very pretty story, eh? Not only did the Algonquians attack Jamestown, but the settlers themselves attacked the fort as a root of evil! Who was supposed to defend it from the Indians? The Royal Crown who claimed to own that land. How the governor treated his own subjects, how England treated them, how the King treated them, how they were treated by their own Govt. and their own people is a litany of puking disgusting meanness and nastiness that will make you want to vomit. But of course the ugly facts: the details of why they rose up against their own King, on a foreign shore with enemies all around them...: are never mentioned in history books. That is because the official versions of Jamestown have whitewashed the historical truth out from all conventional history.

Why wasn't Fort Comfort just 35 miles away beset with the same afflictions and deaths and starvation and disease, and rebellion and intrigue and poisoning that the Jamestown Fort suffered? Because it had been built solely to stave off any possibility of attack by the Spanish. What happened to Fort Comfort? It burned to the ground. It was rebuilt. A hurricane washed it away. It was rebuilt again. Another hurricane destroyed it. It was rebuilt again... Re-creating the complete destruction and rebuilding of the Jamestown cancerous infestation of civilized European scum and its repeated rebuilding, re-manning... until they finally found a way to make money. How? By turning the healthiest herb in the New World into a poisoned drug. Killing and drying a green plant until it withers into a gnarled rotten death mask; then burning it and inhaling its smoke. Burning the greenest, healthiest health herb in all America: first drying the plant into brown death sticks and then burn it and inhaling it into their lungs... Tobacco. Before the European scum came, tobacco was used to as a medicinal plant to heal. Its life-energy was so powerful that the Natives could not eat it without becoming sick from all of its over-healthy properties. Tobacco was used by the North American natives for peace ceremonies. It was a sacred plant used only for peace.

What is American culture? It is the Worship of Comfort: The American Culture of Comfort was created from the 1st fort built named Comfort on American soil by the English. The 2nd Jamestown fort created the culture of how they got their comfort and bounty. What is American culture? It is the poisoning of people by giving them comfort food to eat; it is the poisoning of the idea of comfort; changing the idea of human love and kindness and caring into inactivity and sloth, into stuffing your face with food. Poisoning the idea of peace. Turning the most peaceful continent on Earth into a warlike nation. Reversing everything that is GOOD and turning it into evil

In every colonizing venture, the English built military, triangular forts because the soldiers and settlers knew they were invading someone's land and regardless of their superior guns and technology feared the natives. Every English venture, every group built themselves the best equivalent of a military fort to live in, the instant they landed; because they knew they were going to be attacked even before they landed. They never came to the New World as friends: they came as sneaky skulking enemies. This is never mentioned either in history books. At least in the beginning they were honest enough to act like they were committing an illegal invasion into the native land of other humans who did not want them there.

The first-hand written accounts reveals and exposes what actually happened at Jamestown. There is no way any sane person can mis-interpret what they wrote down It shows how they not only died from stupidity, hatred, starvation, disease, and how the Indians killing them every chance they got. There was a secret war going on inside the Jamestown fort. Protestants against Catholics; they were systematically killing each other and poisoning each other inside the fort. This shows how the entire venture was embroiled in the International European politics of that era. How Spain was actively intriguing with English Catholics and traitors to stop and destroy the colony before it ever got off the ground. The same English Traitors who were involved in the famous 'Guy Fawkes' attempt to burn down the English Parliament and restore Catholic Royal Religious Rule to England were also involved in sabotaging the Jamestown venture. They not only poisoned each other, they poisoned each others horses and dogs. Hunting for snakes outside the compound... hunting rats inside the compound in order to stave off starvation. Why? Because in a land of plenty and abundance, and food... these human snakes and human rats were attracted to what they themselves were. They had become such poisonous vermin that they could only survive by eating other poisonous vermin

The leader of the lower classes was Ratcliffe: an apt name for a leader of a bunch of human rats, trapped on a hostile shore. They starved to death so badly they became cannibals, digging up the body of a dead Indian and eating it. The Jamestown residents ate their way through their livestock, their pets, mice, rats--and each other. Many turned to cannibalism, sneaking out at night--braving Indian ambush--to dig up the graves of both English and Indian dead and eat them

There is your true American thanksgiving feast which history covers up.
There is your true European addiction of eating meat.

You have no conception of how deeply addicted they were to eating meat. There was no such thing as a healthy balanced diet in those days. Europeans ate nothing that was green, Fruits and vegetables did not exist as food, Nuts were almost unheard of and unknown. Ground flour, flatbread, cheese, bread, meat pasties boiled in lard, puddings made of suet and gelatin boiled from pigs feet, , pea soup, stews made of meat and gristle and bones, bacon, chickens, beef, and grapes for making wine, and hops for making beer. Anything that was fresh and green turned heir stomachs and made them sick. They turned their noses up at anything that was clean and healthy.

The skeleton of a young Cornish Englishman was found in a shallow grave inside the fort; killed by a European firearm. North American natives did not have firearms. It showed how the murderers hidden inside their ranks used the rat poison called rats bane on their own crew and settlement. Rat's bane that was used for the rats on the ship... was used to poison the entire settlement of human rats in the fort just after the ships were gone. The instant the ships returning to England went out of sight, some of them fell unaccountably deathly ill from obvious intentional poisoning. The written account tells starkly of the insane babblings of poisoned victims; one inmate running out into the middle of the fort stark naked, screaming that there was no God...which was blasphemy and unheard of and unthinkable in that era. Protestantism still ruled; but not in that fort. Greed Ruled. Amorality was King. Just 35 miles up the river, was a military Fort named Comfort no less... an English military fort that was living in such bounty that they were feeding surplus food to the hogs.

The Path of Splittness

Chapter Six A: The Beginnings of civilization

At the time of the Virginia Company .of London's venture into the New World, the culture of secretly poisoning your enemies was at its peak in Europe and England. Everyone was secretly doing it: the Spanish, the French, the English. People died and nobody thought to suspect poisoning because the death rate in Europe and England was so horrific and there were so many diseases and plagues which people died from suddenly and violently, that the idea of dying from intentionally being poisoned secretly could never be proven. And without proof: to accuse anyone of such a thing, accusing someone was even more dangerous than the danger of being poisoned. People kept their suspicions to themselves. Such a suspicion would never be written down simply because it gave your enemies too much leverage to attack you for making false claims and accusations. The official 'written' history of that time does have numerous attempts of poisoning, but only in the upper class and only in the highest intrigues of the most bitter hatred and feuds and struggles for power. Which coincidentally happens to be the sole focus of historians, so it is no wonder that as far as conventional history goes, the culture of poisoning was only practiced by the elite. New poisons were being invented and tried out.

Later, the Jamestown inhabitants treacherously poisoned a local King of the Chesapeake Tribe, and killed all of his family. 200 American Natives all told died of poisoning at a ceremonial peace dinner given in honor of the Jamestown inhabitants, by the natives who decided to welcome these interlopers into the New World. This is where the American of Thanksgiving originally actually comes from. The historical truth of the first meeting between Native Americans and White Europeans was covered up and reversed. This is the ugly truth about first whites in America and the American Myth of Thanksgiving. Today, American food corporations continue this tradition of selling innocent natives food that is secretly poisoned.

The Jamestown inhabitants were in a constant state of war against the natives right from the start: they were attacked by the Algonquians right from the start, they were at war with the natives right from the start, But in this war, executing the queen of a local tribe including her children? This was standard practice of Royalty plotting to gain the throne of England. But not others. Nobody else would stoop so low. For a few lousy cornfields?... Killing a woman and her children as an act of 'war'? That is so disgusting, so vile, so unforgivable, so sickening an atrocity... but if you read the true facts of European colonization in detail, you will find nothing but an endless series of sickening, vile atrocities committed by these white filth. The point is these atrocities are not the exception: they were the rule; they were the 'norm'.

Why was the first settlement such a series of disasters? Why was it called Jamestown? It was named after the Protestant English King James. Who was the woeful, somber King James? He was the English King who had the cunning idea of settling Scots in Ulster Ireland. Creating an ulcerous sore in Ireland... arousing the Ire of the Irish, creating a cancerous foreign English colony in Ireland that has festered and rotted and created hate and death and pain and suffering and religious racism for over 300 years and still counting.

Similarly... in his evil name, the cancerous colony of Jamestown was also planted as an ulcerous sore on a fresh New World. The ulcerous sore of Ulster had deflected attention away from England herself, and the Ire of the Irish people; all their energy was wasted fighting Scots in Ulster, not fighting England, .to gain her independence The success of Ulster in 1606, provided the King with the encouragement to proceed with the Plantation of Virginia at Jamestown in 1607, the blueprint for the Plantation of (the rest of) Ulster in 1610 and the Plantation of Nova Scotia in 1621. The English had a long history of banishing their worst troublemakers by sending them to penal colonies and outposts that were chosen for their hostile environment in the hopes that whoever they sent there would be killed off by the hostile natives so they wouldn't need to worry about them ever coming back to England to cause more trouble.

The policy of English colonization was a policy of both cowardice and cunning. James didn't have the courage to execute and kill his sworn enemies and condemned convicts. He let foreigners do the dirty work for him. The 'failed' colonies were actually successful attempts to get rid of troublemakers and reducing the excess population of England. And if they weren't completely wiped out by the hostile natives, why then... send more convicts and troublemakers. Let them spread trouble over there; not in England. Let them establish beach heads for the English Crown without them knowing they were being used. Let them do all the hard dirty work of establishing a working colony on foreign soil... and then, yawn... after years of toil and killing and strife, why the Royal Crown can take walk in and take over the established beachhead, and claim another successful English colony has been created and reap all the rewards of their labor and treachery and evil. Let these ostracized suckers soften up the natives until they get used to the European presence on their land, and then the might of the British navy and army can roll in. Without firing a single official shot of violence at the people whose lands they were invading... And then feign astonishment and moral indignation that any native living on their native land should have any quarrel with English forts and soldiers protecting English colonists on foreign soil. They didn't care who they sent: just so long as they could get rid of some of their excess population. Too many poor breeding like swine, overcrowding the slums of London, filling up the countryside with their hovels and cottages. How to get rid of them had been a problem argued over by English philosophers like Locke and Hume for decades. The idea of the selective depopulation of the lower classes is where the idea of planned eugenics originated from the English aristocracy's problem of too many poor overpopulating a small island. Colonies and outposts like Ulster and Jamestown were one attempt to solve this nagging problem. The historical fact is that the motives for colonizing were the worst, lowest, most cunning evil motives possible. The motives of hatred, cowardice, deception, poisoning, racism, genocide, eugenics, punishment, evasion of responsibility, greed. The complete reverse of conventional history books.

Why did the Virginia Company of London keep on losing money? Why did the Virginia company of London never make a penny of profit and why didn't it fold until finally the Crown finally took it over? The answer is it was a dummy corporation, expressly set up by the Crown for dummies of the lower classes to buy shares in. Many new subscribers reneged payment on their shares, and the Company became entangled in dozens of court cases when they realized how badly they had been duped. Over the space of 18 years, 27 books and pamphlets filled with lies and propaganda were printed to dupe the lower classes into buying shares in the Company, changing the sales pitch to fit the public sentiment because they didn't make an instant profit. The Company plastered street corners with tempting broadsheets, published persuasive articles and even convinced the clergy to preach of the virtues of supporting colonization. When that didn't work, The Company was permitted to run a lottery as a fundraising venture. The Crown kept renewing the royal charter of the company. Then coincidentally and conveniently, after the lower class dupes had lost all their money ...just when the colony finally showed a proven ability to make a profit ... zip! All the pamphlets disappeared and the public rejected the offering of the fourth renewed charter, which severely reduced the Company's ability to make decisions in the governing of the colony, thereby predictably making the offering of the new charter unpalatable to the gulled masses. The charter was then revoked and the Crown took possession of the colony and voila: the growing and selling of tobacco became a Royal Monopoly... and gold began pouring into the Royal coffers. The rich do not get rich by mistake: they get rich by conniving, cunning trickery motivated by greed.

All those lower-class suckers who lost all their money; too bad the Crown Govt. of England gets rich off their failed investments...Gee, what a fucking coincidence. Oh, you mean the shareholders of the Virginia Company of London were not privy to the correspondence going on between the King and the Jamestown colonists? You mean the shareholders were not told about the growing of tobacco, you mean the Governor of the colony reported directly to the King himself? You mean the detailed reports of the colony were sent to the King meant he was the only person who knew the true condition and state of the colony? Gee whiz... history books never mention that... How dare a rich powerful King take advantage of greedy stupid English lower class dullards who wanted to make a quick profit?

You need to remember that in 1607, there were no private corporations, there were no private companies except by Royal decree, Royal charters: which could be taken away at the drop of a hat, and changed to suit the King's whim... These charters were backed by, maintained, supplied and protected Royal Navy ships and soldiers and mercenaries paid by the Crown. The private company of London was merely one small arm of the complicated strategies and plans and plots which King James and the Crown Government of England used in their international and internal policies. The custom of politically deceiving the lower classes and brainwashing them with propaganda had already been perfected and honed into a royal art through centuries of fighting for political power. Wheels within wheels, plots within plots, counterplots and counter-counterplots with hidden motives, multiple motives, secret agenda's, secret plots... The history of Medieval England has many, many layers of hidden agendas.

Imagine sticking a bunch of ignorant fools in the middle of a new world, with no knowledge or experience in how to grow their own food and survive in the wilderness, forcing them to build their own fort and houses,, and fight off Indian attacks, and somehow keep from starving to death... and on top of all this... make a huge profit for the company... when they couldn't even stay alive long enough to build a fort while fighting the Algonquians. And you wonder why the first 19 years of Jamestown was a dismal failure?

The first ships of Jamestown took five months to cross the Atlantic, because even the Atlantic Trade Winds were against them and did not want them to cross. Five months to cross a narrow ocean like the Atlantic with the Trade Winds in your favor is unheard-of. It has never happened before or since in the history of sailing the Atlantic.

You do not believe Nature knows its enemies?

The Trade Winds were the only natural energy that was supposed to be traded between Europe and America. The Atlantic Trade Winds reversed themselves, negating their own energy and tried to stop the first English trading venture from coming to the New World.

You don't believe Nature tried to stop this European evil from spreading to the New World?

Sir Thomas Gates, Virginia's deputy governor, bound for the colony, was shipwrecked in Bermuda and did not assume his new post until 1610. When he arrived, he found only a fraction of the colonists had survived the infamous "Starving Time" of 1609-1610

You don't believe Nature doesn't know its enemies?

Look at how long it took for Columbus to reach the Caribbean Islands. Again: his first maiden voyage took longer than any ship has before or since. And there is no scientific explanation for it either. The entire Atlantic Trade winds were against him coming across to despoil an entire continent.

You do not believe Nature knows its Unnatural enemies?

The Trade Winds were the only natural energy that was supposed to be traded between Europe and America. The Atlantic trade Winds tried to stop the first English trading venture from happening. It was the only natural energy that the Earth had to stop them with.

You do not believe Nature knows its Unnatural enemies?

Read what happened to the USS Indianapolis after she delivered the 1st American Made nuclear bomb. She was sunk. Most of the men survived the sinking. Most of the men were eaten by sharks. It was the worst single at sea loss of life in the history of the U.S. Navy. This has never happened before or since. No ship sunk before or since has ever been attacked by sharks, and I mean never. Not in the entire history of naval history has there ever been a recorded instance where survivors of a sinking ship were killed and eaten by sharks. It will never happen again. Just like it will never again take 6 months for a sailing vessel to cross the Atlantic.

The dropping of the atomic bomb was the birth of American Consumer Culture. After WW2 Americans became consumers. The event that marks this birth of a new American culture was the ship carrying this evil returning to America being sunk, and Americans left stranded for days in the water, being killed and eaten by sharks, half-eaten, and slowly dying... Just as the American culture of consumerism has eaten and half-eaten the entire world leaving it to slowly die, as consumers are themselves slowly dying from their consumption. Just as America is now being eaten alive by Wall Street and the international gangsters of the private banking cartel called the Fed which is systematically feeding on the American economy and systematically ruining the entire American economy on purpose, foreclosing American homes, leaving the American middleclass stranded.

Such events are very, very important. They mark important gateway shifts in the energy of the Earth. Why was the ship's name: USS Indianapolis? Because America had already destroyed her Indians... now she was setting out to destroy the entire Earth with her new nuclear bombs... Nature could not attack the high level bomber that delivered the 1st nuclear bomb... but she could and did attack the men who brought it there to be flown in and dropped.

The names are eerily familiar to the gateway shift of the 1st and 2nd Jamestown disasters. She was sunk in the Philippine Sea. The Jamestown disaster was sabotaged by Catholic plotters who wanted to see Philip of Spain rule England instead of the Protestant King James. The USS Indianapolis was not heard from for 2 weeks. Nobody reported her late... when she was found: most of her crew were dead eaten by sharks... The same happened to the Jamestown disaster. When nobody heard from them, they came and found most of them dead from horrible fates which have never happened to human beings before or since. The first series of disaster were ignored and a second ship was sent to America... The disaster of the USS Indianapolis was also ignored and a second bomb was sent to be dropped on Japan. The USS Indianapolis's mission was top secret... so was the Jamestown mission.

These dynamics between these two historical events are not coincidence. This shows that Nature is intelligent... This shows that Nature is much more far-seeing than humans can ever hope to be. Nature knew that the English trading venture was a crucial evil which must not be allowed to happen. Nature knew that if she did not stop this venture from happening: an entire virgin continent would be raped. It was a poisoned Protestant venture: poisoned even worse by Catholics mixed into the bargain. It ended up mixing known Protestant fanatics together with known Catholics fanatics. The entire venture was the 695

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six A: The Beginnings of civilization

696

continuation of long-standing European religious racist hatred before the ships were ever loaded. That alone was enough to guarantee the failure of the Jamestown venture of greed. It was never an attempt to colonize anything.

After the English had exterminated most of the East coast tribes, or pushed them west of the Mississippi, straight into the faces of the tribes already living there... Every area settled west of the Mississippi was only settled after military forts were built first in the middle of enemy territory... and then treaties were arranged to lull the Indians into false sense of security. The Americans had learned from the English how to invade and conquer in a new way. By slow, systematic deception, lies and betrayal. Not by immediate direct conquest, but slowly, over the space of generations.... so the invaded tribes did not even realize they were being slowly taken over and exterminated until it was too late. It was and still is the sneakiest, most underhanded form of mass genocide ever committed by one race of invaders against indigenous peoples.

Humans are connected to the Earth in many ways. It was no coincidence that this first attempt of England colonizing America hit an ecological disaster. The worst period of drought that area had seen in 770 years fell upon the Jamestown effort. Nature did not want them there. All of Nature, the land and the weather, and the oceans themselves tried to tell them they were not welcome and make sure their venture would never succeed. Human history holds very understandable and simple causal reasons for everything you see around you today. There is a causal reason for everything; if you bother to connect the hidden relevant facts and make sense out of them.

Look at the history of European colonialism. Italy and Venice were the dominant trading power in the Mediterranean for centuries. Until Portugal began sending ships out into the Atlantic. And began exploring the entire Earth... with the intent of a monumental territorial and monetary greed. The intent was to Divide the entire Globe, the entire living Earth and all the wealth found on it: between the Portuguese and Spanish Royalty. They were secretly plotting an attempt to own the entire Earth. After Vasco de Gama circumnavigated the entire Earth for the sole purpose of getting rich from their discoveries. The Capital of Portugal: Lisbon was struck by a huge catastrophic earthquake that destroyed the entire city, and burned it to the ground. Did this stop the Portuguese? No. An even more rapacious killer Monarch-dictator emerged. To push Portuguese greed to the ultimate limit... Only to be outclassed in greed by the Dutch. Who were then outclassed by the English. Who have been outclassed by the Americans. Do you think that Lisbon being destroyed at that time was a coincidence? The escalating history of pure greed is all there to be read in history books. you only need to read in-between the lines, and make your own connections and draw your own conclusions.

Where does Western European culture come from? From the Mediterranean new-age system of agriculture. From the olive. And from the grape. From the agricultural addiction to oil and alcohol and the addiction to toil. From inventing more labor-intensive ways to slave away at growing food. Every single olive that was crushed represented the entire Earth, and was crushed for its oil and then thrown away. What has changed in 3,000 years? Three thousand years of crushing the entire world for its oil and wealth... while crushing as many human slaves under the toil of farm labor: I mean harm labor. Western civilization is still seeking to crush the entire Earth and harm it, still seeking oil, and still throwing away everything it crushes as being useless and still worshipping toil and throwing away as useless. Still using the thrown-away remains to distill poisonous alcohol in a still. Do you think these historical facts and semantic coincidences just might be connected?

What was the advantage of Western agriculture practiced by the Greeks and Persians? They grew grapes: but not to eat them. They grew them in order to crush the living seeds, and let the crushed grapes rot, and get drunk off the poisonous alcohol it produced: so they could numb their own bodies and minds and hearts with that poison. So they could live as deader, more unfeeling, more numbed, more brutalized, barely alive humans... all using more killing tools, all killing more.... All becoming more insane: all as a result of eating olives, using more oil in their cooking, eating more dead flesh and drinking wine. 3,000 years ago olive growing and harvesting and crushing was the most labor-intensive, most wasteful farming system ever invented. Then came slash-and burn farming. Then came machine-farming. What are these new farming innovations but better ways to crush the entire Earth and destroy it and throw it away as useless refuse? Has Western civilization learned better ways of farming in 3,000 years? Look at Egypt, where farmers owning only two acres of land still harvest their wheat crops by hand and crush the grains with small millstones. That was the most time-consuming, energy wasteful form of farming until olive growing was invented. It is one of the earliest, most organically symbolical ways of showing what tools want to do to all living things, and all the Earth.

696

The Path of Splitness

Why do Americans love eating turkey at Thanksgiving? Because the first American colonists were such lousy hunters they could not kill anything except the stupidest, dumbest, biggest, fattest bird in North America. They love eating turkeys because they are even dumber than the foul birds they eat. Turkey contains a chemical called Tryptophan... which when released into the blood stream acts as a numbing agent, a tranquilizer, and makes you mentally slow, lethargic and stupid. You are what you eat.

What has mass breeding and mass slaughter done to domesticated turkeys? It has produced White-feathered Birds with Red, and Blue heads and necks: breeding all the wildness out of them; which is exactly what has been done to the American people and to the American flag. The domestication of the turkey has whitewashed their black feathers into sickly pale whiteness. Revealing the genetic corruption which comes from domestic inbreeding. Breeding them for the domestic virtues of stupidity, conformity and cowardice. Resulting in a sickly pus-white flesh almost as sickly white as the domesticated chicken that took thousands of years to be bred into its present state of unhealthy white flesh. Now domesticated turkeys have red-blue gizzards and heads... Showing their bright-red color of veins returning to the heart... because their skins are so thin, and transparent, that you can puncture a turkey's skin with your finger as easily as a balloon. Creating the ugliest domesticated bird ever raised in captivity. Birds so weak, that are so genetically polluted by mass inbreeding they cannot fly.

Take the famous Liberty Bell. Over two hundred years ago, the Liberty Bell that has the inscription: 'Let Freedom Ring for All' was sent over by England. As a gift. To commemorate America breaking free of a British Empire that no longer had any bad feelings about the U.S. being an independent nation. The first time it was struck? It cracked nearly in two. They recast the entire bell and rang it; it cracked again. It has never rung since. Ever.

The new sapling Liberty Tree that was supposed to be the adjoining part of the celebration of liberty along with the liberty bell... withered and died. It was planted to replace the old one that had split asunder and died during the revolution... because there was so much hate going on between family members and friends and neighbors; that the Tree split apart into two warring factions: Loyalists and Revolutionaries. Nobody knew why it split like that. They all assumed it was just an old tree: so they decided to plant a new one. The new one withered and died.

How should you interpret this? As superstitious nonsense? If this had happened in Ancient Rome, in a Roman sacred State ritual; the Romans would have become terrified, and known that something was seriously wrong with these kinds of portents for the future of America. Romans would have found soothsayers who would have explained away these negative bad omens; and found some politically correct reason for the omen. They would have made it palatable to whatever convenient beliefs or superstitions people had at the time. Did these three bad omens, bother Americans even a little? Not one bit. It was an unfortunate coincidental mistake, a tiny mechanical flaw... a miscasting of a simple iron bell. Twice in a row... That's all. An unfortunate case of a tree not being healthy enough to grow... that's all. Even though it was watered, and fertilized, and babied like no other tree has before or since.

Did caste iron Bells slit open all the time in those days? Was it a common occurrence? No. The technology for casting bells had been slowly perfected over centuries, until such things simply did not happen. Bells were almost never miscast that badly. To slit open at the first striking; was unheard of... never mind two times in a row. For the Americans colonists: it was simply an annoying mechanical flaw in a mechanical object.

The historical fact is that the entire notion of the Newest Nation on Earth; proudly proclaiming its root sacred values of Freedom and Liberty... as the Freest Nation on Earth. With Liberty for All. Was proclaiming the exact opposite of the truth.

In actual truth, it was based upon the most inhuman, brutal, human slavery and bondage of imported African slaves. It was based upon the systematic genocide of the indigenous tribes. It was based on creating the new Age of Industrialized Agriculture, and Industrialized Manufacturing: Industrialized plantation slavery and Industrialized wage slavery. It was based upon oppression of the poor. It was based on the destruction of Nature; on a new horrific scale and pace of industrially destroying the eco systems of nearly half a continent.

For a Nation whose entire economy and wealth was based upon the invention of Industrial Slavery: with the industrialization of mechanized labor and machines splitting the nation into agricultural slavery of the South and the industrialized factory slavery in the North... to base its Democracy on the Principle that 'All Men are Created Equal'...

There was such an obscene hypocrisy, such a chasm between what was said and believed... and what was actually done, the chasm was so enormous that the iron molecules in the caste iron bell split in half. Twice in a row.

Why?

Because that professed, acclaimed Liberty was only true for half of its white adult population. It was only half-true... true for half of the white males who were free to slave for wages instead of being enslaved completely. At that time; it was only half true for half of the land that was occupied, by half of the people lived that lived on it. It was only half-true for half of the continent the whites had explored. The other half had not been destroyed yet by their greed for money and power. The destroyed half of that Bell represented the destroyed half of the Nation's soul at that time... with the other half soon to come.

That bell was screaming out for all who could see: the splitting divide of casting. The splitting divide of the caste systems of human society. The caste system in America between the rich and the poor widening, and threatening to destroy its unity. Twice. The caste split between slaves and owners. And the cast split between wage slaves and their employers. The two castes splitting apart from the ringing of its message: 'Let Freedom and Liberty Reign Over All'.

Chapter Six A: The Beginnings of civilization

699

And so it stands. The American Bell of Liberty has not been re-cast again. The American class system has not been re-cast since that bell was last struck. And Freedom and Liberty for All has not rung through that Nation since then either.

Today, this cracked, useless bell is considered to be a Holy National Shrine. It is an unquestioned Sacred, Cultural Icon. Americans worship it... and the token idea behind it as pure lip-service. A token idea that is never put into practice. These worshippers do not understand the true story of that bell: or its hidden significance and meaning. Historians have successfully done a very neat deflection of evading of the actual truth. No Historian dares even hint at the actual truth of why such an unheard-of thing as a splitting of a bell happened two times in a row. Things like that simply do not happen. It would be like today; connecting wires to a brand new car battery that is perfectly good; and no electricity flowing from it. Such things simply do not happen. In fact it has never happened; ever. Except in this one bell.

So finally... after the second time the Liberty Bell split almost in half... Americans grew a little superstitious. They became afraid that it might happen a third time. So they simply refused to ring that bell again; and refused to recast it a third time. Because if they had, and it had split apart again, then a superstition that maybe something was wrong with this new Nation might have spread.

What are some other main reasons why the Liberty Bell almost split in half? Reasons that are even more fundamental than the ones already mentioned. Reasons that nobody can see because they are too obvious?

European colonialists managed to steal two continents and split them between each other... and then split them into two separate caste systems... an upper class North American culture, and a lower class South American continental culture. Upper Canada and Lower Canada.

They also managed to split the upper continent of North America into two separated Nations. Which are so similar... that they have almost no reason to be culturally divided at all. The entire history of the conquest of the Americas, and America itself, the Nation... was based upon the age-old tactic of... divide and conquer. After these supposedly United States were formed... what happened a century later? The entire American Nation was almost split in half... by the American civil war. Split... Split... Split... This was the third major split of caste systems that you can see on a global scale so destructive and evil and unhealed: they remain today.

What was the second thing the white man did to North America?

Segment it into colonies, then provinces and states. Segment colonies into Burroughs and towns. Segment valleys into farms and fields. Then accumulate as many continental states as possible to arrive at the magic number of 50... the same number in a deck of cards of 48 with two jokers; the 2 jokers being Hawaii and Alaska plus one wild card which can be used to trump all the others being Washington D.C. which not an actual territorial state but a state of mind.

After the segmentation, what happened? In flooding masses of people. Accumulation. Population explosion: overpopulation, the creation of cities. Human society accumulating into pyramids, into pyramidal piles of wealth, power, status. High-rise buildings in cities of accumulated centralized populations. Rising bank accounts of Robber Barons. Rising fortunes. Rising fame. Raising barns. Raising children and brainwashing them into becoming upwardly mobile, by raising them up to a higher standard of physical ease called shopping, affluence, consumer culture. Lower standards of laziness and mindless ease. Lower standards of stupidity. Lower standards of cultural brainwashing. Reversing the perception of what is high and what is low. Now Lower means higher: higher means lower. Lazy asses are proud of how stupid and uncultured and uneducated they are.

Has anything basically changed since that Liberty Bell was first struck and almost split in half? Two centuries later... after one civil war split the nation in half, the Vietnam War almost split the entire Nation in half again... Did the Americans learn anything from it? No. America is still desperately trying to become an Empire, and still ignoring the truth about the evils of its own true origins.

Do you think that maybe before American re-casts that bell a third time, they should look into their own souls, and see if Liberty is actually flourishing there? Do you think maybe they should look, and see if Liberty is flourishing inside their country? I'll give you another historical fact. Today, America's largest mental health institutions now exist inside not in her hospitals: but inside her prisons.

Do you think that instead of being the blindest, stupidest, most extroverted Nation on Earth; Americans should maybe ask themselves whether they are at peace with their own true past, and their own true inner selves? Do you think that Americans should maybe go through the necessary painful re-healing of all the injustices and wounds they have perpetrated upon other humans in their past?

If they had done that: then they would have become the most beloved Nation on Earth. Instead of the most hated. Humans who have power, and wealth; who only understand the confidence of egoism, and killing and power destroy themselves by their own arrogance. America is launching into its third century: without any understanding of its own past.

The creation of the United States of America proved one thing. That the only human motivation strong enough to make 13 separate Colonies come together to form a new Nation was greed and fear. The pyramid of greed: the most ancient sign of accumulation, the Egyptian pyramid is printed on every American dollar bill. Americans have the inalienable right to pursue the American Dream of happiness of money. Has anyone ever pursued happiness and actually found it? Many people claim to be happy but somehow no American has ever admitted to finding happiness... except as a secret exclusive privilege which comes from having lots of money.... which they never speak of unless pressed. Ask someone if they are happy. That is like asking a person; 'how are you?' They smile and lie through their teeth. Nobody knows what happiness actually is. Nobody knows how actually unhappy they are. What would happen to the world if the richest, wealthiest, most powerful human scum on the Earth admitted that they are not happy? What would happen if they admitted that they did not bounce out of bed every day; laughing and joyous... thinking how lucky they are to be rich and powerful. Not like miserable poor people who are not happy because they do not have money and power and privilege... That is unthinkable. Rich people do not dare admit they are unhappy. No matter how full of hate and misery they actually are.

Is happiness based upon being upwardly mobile? You mean you can only be happy if other people are more miserable than you? You mean this outer definition of happiness has nothing to do your inner happiness? And has nothing to do with the state of your inner soul? So you can be outwardly happy at being rich, while others around you are poor... regardless of whether you are a murderer, or a liar, or evil, or whatever kind of person you are inside? Hmmm. In that case; all rich people are happy.

Chapter Six A: The Beginnings of civilization

701

Whether they are murderers or not; has nothing to do with happiness. What is this happiness which Americans have been given the exclusive right to pursue? Just what is it?

What is happiness? Happiness compared to what? In what context?

Happiness in a Soviet slave-labor camps once was getting a little extra meat in your gruel at the end of the day, after being forced to work in freezing cold, wearing rags... living as a work slave, under one of the most brutal, dehumanizing, evil oppressions ever to exist on this Earth; the Stalinist USSR. Since the norm of these gulags was based upon mass starvation, then having a little more food than was normal was considered to be happiness. As long as you can fill your belly: that is also the American consumer definition of happiness. Happiness is what in America? The freedom to pursue happiness; and never finding it. It is the comforting knowledge that other people must be unhappier than you.

How can you separate the feeling that you are happier than others, from feeling that you are better than others? If you cannot do that: then by logic the only way you can become happy is by developing the biggest ego. That is what happiness is, in an upwardly mobile society. Happiness is the freedom to strive for something that is unattainable. Happiness is the right to be unhappy forever.

Roman Slaves dying in African Goldmines were also striving also for an unattainable goal of freedom and happiness. How can you be free, or happy: if you are doomed to never attain what you strive to reach? The pursuit of happiness is a contradiction in terms. As long as you pursue anything: this means that by definition; you have not reached your goal. But. It also guarantees everyone the right to pursue. Pursue what? What have Americans pursued? Money. For three hundred years. And still they are not satisfied. What the Constitution actually guarantees its citizen: is the right to be unsatisfied.

If you want to understand the unspoken Ethic of American greed, if you want to understand what exactly is meant by the American Dream, and why all of the lowest human scum flocked to America and especially to the West... View the documentary series by Ken Burns. A compilation called American Stories. View his two part series of American stories called: The West. Look at personal human stories of greed, rapacity and personal degradation. See how each person committed their personal crimes of greed, hate violence, and deceit and thievery. How their personal acts... show how the personal greed for land and the personal greed for money: poisoned the entire American Nation. The expansion of the American West was merely another evolution of the ever-increasing corruption of personal Greed... personal vices, personal sins, personal crimes, buried, hidden and kept secret.

What is being played out on the World stage today? Americans betraying Nation-States whom they once helped. The lesson of that first hospitality being betrayed and poisoned by power and greed and arrogance and wealth has still not been learned. Europeans refused to change how they live when they came to America. They refused to learn from their friends and neighbors; the North American indigenous people whom they systematically cheated, and hated and feared and killed... in mass genocides: over, and over. They insisted upon importing their own foreign culture and preserving it without absorbing one single cultural lesson from the people who had been already living on this continent for over 10,000 years. Why did America become so successful? Why did it become a multi-cultural Nation without a single conforming and unifying ethnic identity and religion except the amoral ethic of greed?

Because America created a new type of culture that is still not recognized to this day as being an actual culture. The cultural values of Consumer Capitalist Greed are stronger than all other cultural identities,

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six A: The Beginnings of civilization

702

and morals, and ethical values, in the entire civilized world. America took the European Protestant Work Ethic and the new amoral ethic of personal greed... and merged them into an even more powerful way to universally dehumanize humans. And then they exported this sick culture all over the world.

Do you think the lesson of their liberty Bell splitting twice was ever learned-from? That you cannot have a sustainable spiritual life based upon greed? That you cannot live without love and cooperation? What is America; but one huge pile of the unlearned lesson of the evils of Greed and Arrogance, and Stupidity, and Selfishness? The unlearned consequences of the refusal to cooperate, and the refusal to love. The unlearned lesson of the pointless preservation of dead cultures and traditions. The unlearned stupidity of arrogance, power, smugness, and reactionary racism. The idea that your culture is superior to all other cultures. That you are superior because of the good fortune to be born into it.

These conclusions you may say; cannot be scientifically proven. You can say that all of these facts are merely pure coincidence. Find a better explanation for these facts: and I will gladly change my evaluation of them. However, I doubt anyone will challenge my evaluation. There are simply too many painful, unpleasant truths and facts in human History to digest without getting a stomach ache. The actual truth about the past is much too unpleasant for most people to stomach. That is one reason why History is not written honestly. And one reason why so many historical facts are so assiduously hidden, slipped under the carpet, ignored, and derided, and devalued.

Look at what happened after the American Colonies won their Independence. They instantly began taxing each Other trying to grow rich as quickly as possible, and fighting amongst each other over money. Repeating the same stupidity they had just finished enacting... Re-enacting the war of Independence all over again; except on the level of Segmented States fighting between each other. Fighting over pennies. Until the hate and violence became so intense: an attempt was made to ask a foreign King to come and rule them. Because it became apparent that they were incapable of ruling themselves without descending into bloodshed and war.

The War of Independence lowered the Pyramidal hierarchy of American society only slightly; by eliminating the topmost class of absentee landlords living in England. As a result of this, was there more wealth for anyone? No. During the War of Independence; American landed gentry had managed to screw the American farmers and lower classes out of nearly every penny they had, and put them into debt so bad: they were being evicted by the debts which the landowners had managed to invent and institute. The majority of poor colonists ended up indebted to the rich landowners and were poorer after the war than they were before. What do you think has been happening ever since? Credit cards ring a bell, eh? National debt, eh? Taxes, eh? Has the system changed?

Basically. The American landed Gentry had become so corrupt.that they were actively engaged in cheating their own yeoman-class of small farms and tradesman of every cent they possibly could... while this same class was fighting and dying on the battlefield for them to keep them in power. That is how stupid and gullible the lower class is. Absent from their farm chores, unable to pay all the complex tithing systems that the rich had invented, and used: to screw poorer farmers out of every penny by using every cunning artifice their greedy little minds could think up. They became so obsessed with owning as much land as possible, and cheating every person that was poorer than they were out of their wealth and property. That they did this obscene financial crime... as a single class of wanna-be Robber Barons.

To their own countrymen...
During the War of Independence.

702

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six A: The Beginnings of civilization

703

During.

This historical fact exposes the incredible level of corruption which the American landed gentry had developed before the war ever started. They used the war: as an excuse to rob their own soldiers blind, and dispossess them of their farms and houses. The American soldiers marched back home triumphantly in victory: only to faced with notices of eviction for failing to honour the rich elite their God-Given Right to be given their tax money: while they were fighting for their new country's Independence. In other words: for the rich colonists of the 13 colonies: money was far more important than creating your own Nation. Greed is far more important than fighting and dying for your Nation.

This was also exactly what happened in England after the Napoleonic Wars. Every fucking War ever fought by Europeans has merely been a thinly veiled excuse used by the rich to rob the poor. During the war and after. War is an excuse for the rich to get even richer.

The false debt created by the American rich over their own middleclass and poor during the American War of Independence sparked something that has not happened in human history before or since then... it sparked Shay's Rebellion. The lower and middle classes in the 13 colonies rose up against the filthy way they were being taxed by the American land owners they had just fought for. They marched on their government buildings; and demanded legal redress of their unfair debts. It was the first and only Debtor's Revolt ever to happen in human history. The American white colonists who were poor won one measly little battle in the fight for money. By wiping out unfair debts only once ... they went home: thinking they had won.

Imagine. Having a spontaneous uprising of the people against oppression right after a revolutionary war. Which enemies of the American middle class were worse? The English Lords who tried to rule and them from afar? Or their own landed gentry who tried to steal their farms and homes while they were off at war?

As a reaction to this, as a delayed backlash to Shay's Rebellion. The rich owners of all the Colonies became grimly furious at this unheard-of violation of their power to steal wealth, and the power to tax their own lower and middleclass into penury. This was an English custom. It was part of English Tradition. It was an unspoken assumption so ingrained into the American Provincial aristocrats that they never even bothered to voice it. They assumed that once they had won the War of Independence, they would become rich English Lords just like in England. And have all the privileges and rights and powers that the Lords of England had. The rich had been fighting the English Lords expressly to gain the Power of the English Lords.

The shock of Shay's Rebellion sparked them into action. They began to organize amongst themselves against their true enemies: the middle and lower class of the Colonies.

In secret.
Without telling the lower classes of their plans.

For a damn good reason. If the lower classes after having forced the upper class to bend to its will, had found out what these rich scum were planning: they would have marched on them again and hung them all from flag poles and trees and lampposts. As a warning to other aristocratic rich who had plans on suborning their newly won freedom from the rule of Kings and Aristocrats.

703

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six A: The Beginnings of civilization

The rich instantly realized their mistake. They went to Philadelphia; determined that it would never happen again. Determined to create a centralized power that would insure that they would never again be forced to give up money owed to them. Determined that no popular Rebellion would ever threaten them in America.

In other words: The holy stinking shit that is the US Constitution was expressly created so no lower class could never again challenge or threaten the elite laws of the governing class, and its governing bodies from doing their sacred appointed functions of taxing the poor and giving to the rich. Today this state of affairs has not changed.

The rich landowners of all 13 states had as their first priority the creation of a national Govt. that could be used to suppress any popular mass armed uprising like the one they had just suffered: Shay's Rebellion. This was the only fucking reason there ever was a Continental Congress. There was no other fucking reason. This was why only the wealthiest, the richest and the most corrupt human filth in the American Colonies: were personally called to attend it the National Congress in secret.

Try and find Shay's Rebellion in history books today: it does not exist. It has been wiped off the pages. Historians never mention it. It is a dirty little secret. It is not supposed to be important. In actual fact Shay's rebellion was even more important than the founding of the United States of America... the United States Government was created as a reaction to Shay's Rebellion. If Shay's Rebellion had not happened; the American upper class landowners would never have formed a national centralized government in the first place. This is the dirty little historical secret why there was such a thing called the Continental Congress in the first place. This was why only the wealthiest, the largest richest landowners in the American Colonies were personally asked to attend the National Congress in secret. As far as they were concerned the rich were being attacked by the poor. The rich were being robbed by the poor. For all the rich landowners and bankers and moneylenders and lawyers of the 13 colonies it was a moral, cultural, crisis. Their entire class had been attacked.

If the United States had been only a Confederation rather than the obsolete obscene model of a Roman Republic: they would have destroyed each other in quick succession, and North America would still be an unspoiled pure beautiful land: instead of what it is now: a destroyed continent. Destroyed by American Industrialization. Destroyed by human arrogance, greed, ugliness, hate, fear, cowardice, lies, bullshit, and brainwashing.

The rich American planters and owners had used and manipulated the poor white colonists. They had hoodwinked them into believing that the War of Independence was being fought purely on ethical-moral principles. Just like they did in all their later wars. The rich were horrified to find out that the lower classes actually believed the guff that had been spouted during the Revolutionary war and they were acting on it and organizing themselves against them. They came very close to ridding themselves of their own elite. An elite they had no use for, no liking for, and a deep hatred of. That was why the bickering rich planters formed their precious congress. The only thing that drew them together that was stronger than their hatred of each other was their fear of the rising power of the lower classes which had just been demonstrated in the abolition of all debts incurred during wartime.

Americans are not told this in history books. They are not told that only reason the rich colonial millionaires organized a Continental Congress; was to make sure that the mob, the majority; the common citizen; never got an even break again. They centralized themselves as fast as they could; by copying all the worst European models possible. Just so they could amass enough power and wealth to oppress and tyrannize the States and citizens, and never be threatened by a citizen uprising again. They succeeded. No majority of the American population has ever successfully marched on its own capitals to force any change upon the rich and powerful.

Chapter Six A: The Beginnings of civilization

705

Washington got what he wanted from the war: a rich plantation and social acclaim and the highest social status as 'father' of the newborn Nation. He became the wealthiest landowner in America. He had already had a taste of dealing with the bureaucrats in the government. He wanted no part of them. So for the admirable, self-denial of refusing to be crowned King, he was admired even more. For the admirable fact that his level of corruption was only the dream of all greedy planters... becoming the richest most famous man in the Colonies... and him 'nobly' spurning the vice and addiction to Power... he was held up as a God, and admired for his ethical nobility.

Huh? Becoming a famous, revered, worshipped plantation owner without bearing the responsibilities of his wealth? What? This is supposed to be showing restraint and voluntary self-denial? This is avoiding all the responsibilities OF your undeserved wealth. This is not giving a shit about what your wealth does to other people. This is exactly the unethical, immoral attitude that all greedy Americans have today towards wealth. This is the American dream he created: wealth without any social-moral-ethical responsibility whatsoever! Americans are too lazy to bother with the power that comes with their wealth. They think that their society will naturally protect others from taking their wealth away from them; without being forced to actually do the hard work of ruling and governing and making sure that all poor people do not overstep their bounds. It was and still is the lawlessness of irresponsible American Greed and American wealth which attracts refugees and immigrants from all around the world to America. Wherever they are coming from, their society has made damn sure that nobody can get rich except those who are already rich. In America, there is so much money, so much freedom and lawlessness and corruption going on that hey, anyone can get rich!

This is the American Myth. This is the American Dream.

What new immigrants find out is that yes: they can make more money...that is, if they sell their souls to the devil of greed, if they believe in the idea that Pure Greed is not only good, it is the highest good of all Western civilization. If they work and slave for years... then some of them do get lucky. But most of them never climb out of their poverty. Most of them work their entire lives away at menial jobs, and are screwed and betrayed and robbed and cheated and lied-to, just to make sure that they fail at whatever they try to succeed at. 90% of all immigrant stories are horrible failures. The media glorifies one new immigrant who made good: and ignores the actual statistics. The actual truth of American society cannot be publicized by its own Media. The myth is more important than the actual cold hard facts. Dreams and hope are more important than facts and the hard truth.

Why do you think the first National buildings of both the new European invading colonists in North America burned to the ground? Because the British Parliament... which was rotten to the core with corruption did not burn to the ground when it should have. After the fire Canada's Parliament building in Montreal was re-located to another city. The same thing happened to the first United States Federal Government buildings. Why do you think America's re-located government was built in the middle of a stagnant, stinking swamp? Because it's entire culture and elite is a stagnant swamp of corruption. The Capital of America was supposed to have been Philadelphia... called The City of Brotherly Love. That token lie could not withstand the actual culture of American greed. After the White House was burned to the ground a second time: they finally moved it to Washington.

Washington; Washing the tons of hate and racism and slavery of America... inside a token whitewashed building called the Whitehouse... representing America's token, fake, whitewashed purity... When it was actually built out of the bitter hate between slaves and owners, friends and families... America was born out of hate, greed, envy, money, and the lust for an easy profit. It was born out of familial hate. Brothers, sisters, sons, daughters, mothers, fathers... all hating and killing each other and burning each others houses to the ground. History books do not tell you of this.

More Americans killed each other during the War of Independence per capita: than all the wars afterwards. Meaning more Americans killed each other per-capita... never mind killing British soldiers; than all other American Wars including the American Civil War. That is how much these original invaders hated each other's guts. The American colonists could not stand for their capital to be kept in The City of Friends. The phrase; 'Water seeks its own level.' was proven true once again... America's capital was built in the lowest, most diseased swampland on the Eastern Seaboard. It tried to wash away the rottenness of its rulers with diseased swamp water. If you want to call that a coincidence, go ahead.

Why is the NFL football team of Washington called: The Redskins? It is an example of suppressed subconscious shame. Washington was responsible for the mass genocide of all the red-skinned aboriginal tribes in America... except the 3% and these survivors are not red-skinned. The city of Washington subconsciously took on the subconscious red-faced shame of its genocide. The city took on the political guilt and responsibility of the mass genocide of an entire continent of people.

Washington Redskins? It makes no logical or emotional sense. Would Vicksburg call its baseball team the Ethiopians, or the Nubians? Would German cities calling their sports teams the Semites, or the Jews? Why name your sports team after a race of people you have driven into extinction? Because all of them are dead. Because you are proud of killing them all off. And also because you are ashamed of it. Both reasons apply.

It would make better sense if they called their team: the Red Necks. Because Washington politicians depend on ignorant reactionary rednecks to vote them into power. The Red Skins did not vote them into power. They do not even live in the city. They are all dead. Washington's football team is called the Redskins because of the shame of stealing an entire continent from a race of red-skinned humans, and then killing them off. It is a subconscious symbol of the suppressed subconscious red rage that all white men have who are powerful. It is a token symbol of the skinning of an entire continent blood-red... ripping its skin off. As it slowly dies. The name exists as a form of whitewashing. The name The Redskins exist as a hypocrisy. It stands as a lie. It stands as a cover-up. It stands as a sign of subconscious guilt and shame. It stands as an attempt to deny that Washington murdered and starved all the red skinned humans in America into extinction.

The dynamic of emotional denial is simple. Take on the name of your most hated enemy. Pretend that you like them instead of hate them. Pretend you admire them instead of despising them. Raise them up on a pedestal as an icon, instead of as before: when you treated them as if they were not even human. Typecast them. Turn them into figureheads, and decapitated heads on coins. Emblems. Decapitated heads on football jerseys. Representing all the red-skinned warriors that tried to kill the central powers of Washington, and hated Washington and despised it. Use the abstract symbol of their extinct heads to represent what your city and your football team stands for: warriors, killers, raiding, marauding, scalping, raping warriors. Washington Robber Barons: taking on the symbol and personality of the peoples they wiped out. This is why the football team of Washington is called the Redskins. Just as their fans... all rooting for them at the end of the stadium; are called: hogs... Because of all the pork, all the greed, that Washington politicians are guilty of. Because all of them deny their guilt even when they know they are guilty.

Chapter Six A: The Beginnings of civilization

Washington's football team is called the Redskins because of the shame of stealing an entire continent from a race of red-skinned humans, and then killing them off. It is a subconscious symbol of the suppressed subconscious red rage that all white men have who are powerful. It is a token symbol of the skinning of an entire continent blood-red... ripping its skin off. As it slowly dies. The name exists as a form of whitewashing. The name The Redskins exist as a hypocrisy. It stands as a lie. It stands as a cover-up. It stands as a sign of subconscious guilt and shame. It stands as an attempt to deny that Washington murdered and starved all the red skinned humans in America into extinction.

What is the American game of football? It is two crazed teams of American athletes scrambling after an empty pigskin full of empty air... Because when you kill a pig and skin it, and eat its flesh you are empty inside: you take on the greed of that pig. Then your greed becomes a crazed scramble after inner emptiness, covered by the skin of a pig. Then possessing an empty pig skin becomes pointless. Then possessing an empty pig skin full of air becomes a meaningless ritual of greed and ownership, and the spiritual emptiness of all ownership. Then the American invention of the mass butchery of hogs, of pigs... feeding millions of Americans butchered hog parts, and clothing them in hog skins, turning the entire Nation of Americans into greedy little pigs with empty Inner Souls; now that makes sense. What other sport uses the skin of a pig for a ball? None.

Where does the game of American Football come from? It goes all the way back, 2,000 years to Rome... It comes from Ancient Roman Culture. Where the height of comedy and entertainment was one Roman fool... beating another Roman fool with an empty pigskin bladder. Only the Americans do it as teams competing against each other; not one-on-one.

When humans are in conscious denial of something they know is true the human subconscious always finds a way to expose the actual truth... no matter how much they may consciously try to suppress it.

Native American Warriors used to eat the hearts of their enemies. They believed it gave them the courage and valour of their opponent. The Royal Guard of Windsor: took to wearing the bearskin caps of the regiment they destroyed at the battle of Waterloo in respect for their bravery. European Nations often named a ship after the ship they defeated; in respect for how bravely it fought. They did not change the name of a ship they captured if it put up a hard fight. Even if the name was of a different language. Washington the football team: took on the name of the enemy the city of Washington killed. Did the Washington football team did take this name out of respect for the fighting valour of the red man because they fought so hard? Or did they take it as a safe racist joke. Because there is no red skinned American native left alive that could object to it? Which of these reasons apply to why the city of Washington named its football team; The Washington Redskins? The answer is:

All of them.

Why did the British expeditionary force in World War Two cross the English Channel; returning after a failed invasion attempt. They crossed the English Channel a second time and that time they succeeded. Two thousand years before that: Julius Caesar's crossed the English Channel and returned after a failed invasion attempt. The second time he succeeded. .

Two Roman Armies setting out on two different spots... And two thousand years later, two British

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six A: The Beginnings of civilization

Armies doing the same thing, only in reverse. Only two thousand years being the difference. Balancing each other almost perfectly in their goals and origins... in a perfect opposition. Is that just another coincidence?

Why did the successful invasion by the allies invading France happen in Normandy? Because almost a thousand years before that: It was William of Normandy who successfully invaded England. Why was the Battle for England called the battle of Hastings? Because Alfred was too hasty. If he had taken his time returning to the West coast, and gathered more re-enforcements before he fought that battle. If the English had not been too hasty in chasing the Normans down the hill: they would never have been systematically cut off and killed. He would have won. He would have wiped the army of William of Normandy off the map and killed them to the last man. Moreover, no 7,000 ships could have been launched again against England for seven thousand years. And the entire idea of invasion forces being able to conquer any country would have died there on the spot. And thousands of other invasions called by the politically correct word: 'colonizing' would never have happened. When you look for connections in history, you can find them easily.

Look through all of civilized history, and you will find that every race, every culture, every ethnic clan or tribe or Kingdom or Nation or Empire: has at one time or another: actively tried and succeeded in committing ethnic, racial, religious, or class genocide on other people. Only those who never got powerful enough yet to do it have not yet done so from lack of opportunity. Or else they did do it, and the damning, incontrovertible evidence has been buried. What? You mean as long as your group is poor, or small and powerless: then you will be wailing victims wringing your hands? And if you get some power: overnight you will suddenly become an evil, vicious oppressor?

Look at the Jews. Persecuted without a land or an organized government of their own for thousands of years. And the instant they steal some land from the poorest beggars in the Mid-East, they suddenly become a war Nation on a permanent war economy. With a permanent warlike outlook and killing culture. Seeing all other people only as enemies, or allies. Trying to oust the Philistines, like they did three thousand years ago. The country the Jews took over was not the land of the Philistines, it is now called the land of Phalestine, er Palestine... The land of the Jewish Phallus. Immigrants from the Land of the Pharaoh.

Have the Jews learned anything from seven thousand years of persecution and oppression? The entire racial-cultural-religious unrest and foment is a living-seething cancerous center, inside the greater European-Asian continent... existing off-balance... the center closer to the West than to the East... existing as an unfair pus-filled balance-point of rotten, rotting, sacred, white ideas-mistakes-territory-power-concepts that are being focused upon this land and never healing. It is a civilized pimple threatening to burst open at any time. The artificial States of Iraq, Iran, Jordan, Syria, Israel, Saudi Arabia, guarantee that there will never be at peace in the mid-east.

And the rationale for Israel's existence?

'Oh, gee folks... we were thrown out of every land we tried to live in, we were persecuted for thousands of years. Let's make sure this never happens to us again. And... now all the years of oppression and persecution they suffered is being finally being reversed and projected and vented. Finally the Jews have some power. And because of it they have become just as evil as the other powers who once oppressed and killed them. They still beat their chests about being victims even after they have become oppressors. Even after they have sloughed off their lower status, they still justify everything they do by typecasting themselves as victims.

Millions of people leave their own culture's ranks and thrive in other cultures as French, or Arabs, or Spaniards, or Jews, etc. But that small fact is ignored. They lost their heritage. They lost their cultural identity. They forsook their cultural roots. They changed their cultural identities. Now nobody can really tell who your true ancestors actually were by what kind of culture you have anymore. Your personal family tree may be made up of all the religious cultures that once hated and feared each other. Does this mean you should hate the culture of your own ancestors? Or hate only some of them? What does any culture have to do with being human? What does anything in the past have to do with living in the present?...

What does your own culture have to do with your own personal humanity and identity as a human being?

Answer: Not a fucking thing.

Regardless of your culture, race, religion, or ethnicity... whether you are Jewish, or Chinese, or English: you can be a cold-blooded murderer, or a kind, loving person: Your culture does not have one damn thing to do with your humanity.

Yet civilized people would have you believe that if you lose your culture, you will lose your humanity. They would have you believe that your culture is your humanity. That humans cannot exist without culture. When the exact opposite is true. The less brainwashed you are by your own culture... the more humane you are. The highest examples of humaneness are people like Lao Tse, Buddha, Christ, Mohammed... people who refused to be brainwashed by their respective cultures and sought to live differently. All human cultures worship cultural purity and racial purity. But only for their own culture, nobody else's. They never mention any kind of humane value that might transcend their own sacred, exclusive, religion or culture, or race... except in lip service.

Look at the geographical joke of the Arab Emirates: their boundaries... conveniently drawn around huge oil reserves. Is this how to identify ethnic identity? As the owner of a certain oil reserve? The Arabs could not fight for land anymore because that land had already been destroyed and turned into a desert by their ancestors hundreds of thousands of years ago. So they fight over what is under the land. The land itself has been worthless and dead for thousands of years. But humans have still been squatting on it for hundreds of thousands of years. They still fight over it. Why?

People still do not understand that cultural differences are not a rational reason to fear and hate other people for the sin of not being exactly like you are. Until we manage to separate our cultural identity from our actual human identity, we will keep on miss-taking one for the other. If it was normal for you to be treated as nothing but an irritation when you were a child, then when you are a parent, ignoring your own child's tears is normal. If you do not become critically aware of your own culture and put it in perspective by comparing it to other cultures... to other ways of raising children... you will never know if you have been culturally brainwashed to uncritically accept what your culture has sanctified as a glorified truth or principle, or value... or tradition or custom, or ritual etc... You will never know if what your culture teaches actually makes any sense at all. You will never find out how many lies your own culture has taught you to believe-in as sacred, unquestioned truths. You will never know if you are raising your own child rightly, or wrongly.

The best way to develop your own humanity; is to throw away all human cultures as worthless value-systems. And keep only what is universally humane. That way you will not waste half of your life sifting through the twisted distortions and interpretations of any civilized culture. Or waste your time comparing hundreds of different poisoned, corrupted cultures to each other: trying to find the few, tiny aspects in each one, which are not completely corrupted. However... if all that you are, is your culture. If you have never thought things out for yourself, or tried things for yourself. If you live all your life; conforming to what other people tell you to do. If your culture is where you originally got all of your ideas of how to feel, and how act, and how to think. Then of course: the idea of throwing away your own sacred, precious cultural identity is unthinkable. Simply because you have nothing else to replace it with.

Why? Because your cultural identity is nothing but a carbon copy. If you want to find your own individual humanity, your own, true, human identity... that means you must begin asking yourself root questions about yourself; and not copy other people. Who are you? What are you? Why are you? How? When? Where? Are you Jewish? A father? A friend? A businessman? A voter? An American? A husband? A worker? Or a human?... Or are you simply a genetic human; with a huge set of artificial civilized distinctions and differences that are mostly meaningless? What defines you? What do you believe in? What do you accept and what do you reject?

This means you must ask yourself root questions about your own culture and your own religion if you have one. That means not taking your own culture for granted. That means not assuming your culture is normal. That means not assuming your culture is good. That means not assuming your culture is right. That means not assuming your culture is more right than other cultures. That means not assuming your culture, or you, are better than other people and their culture.

Why do you accept or reject certain things? Can you make any sense of yourself? Or are your values and ideas and assumptions so irrational and conflicting that they simply do not make sense at all? If they do not fit, are you forced to laugh at all of it, as a way of deflecting the obvious irrationality? Do you use humor as a defense against logic? Against rationality? Against your own culture?

Are you forced to compartmentalize your life and your attitudes towards people because you must play a different cultural role as an employer, or businessman, or a father, or a consumer, or a Jew, or a Chinese, or a millionaire, or a customer, or a buyer, or a seller, or whatever? Until you have so many roles, that you have no inner center? Who are you? If you have no central identity that you can use to determine how you act-out each role then who are you? Are you merely an empty thing that focuses on pyramidal authorities and does whatever they tell you to do? . History does not ask these question. It does not look at human history in human terms, or ask human questions:

Experiences
Comparison
Evaluation
Perspective } equals contextual understanding

You will never develop an understanding of who you are historically, culturally, ethnically, religiously, racially, Nationally, generically, socially, individually, mentally, emotionally, sexually, etc, etc. if you split yourself up into separate abstract identities.

Why did the crew on the H.M.S. Bounty mutiny? Historians poring over the logs and records, and interviewing as many survivors as they could were all baffled by the case. During that time, its Captain Bligh was more progressively humane, smarter, and a better Sea Captain than most of the Sea Captains of his entire era. Yet his crew grew ever-more restless as time passed. During their return to England from the Pacific they finally exploded into mutiny.

One reason was dietary. Bligh substituted their bread ration with breadfruit. Then he rationed their meat intake until they grew accustomed to an almost completely vegetarian diet. It saved the sailors from starvation. However, it also raised their awareness level. They became more sensitized humans. They began to feel an instinctively resentment against the normalized brutality they had taken for granted all of their lives. They began to instinctively feel hatred for the regimentation and discipline that was supposedly necessary for any large ocean-going vessel in those days to function properly. For hundreds of years: British sailors had sailed under far harsher, brutalized conditions and never thought to mutiny. Bligh's voyage was the only ocean voyage ever taken where the sailors had stopped eating meat altogether for a long period of time.

Captain Bligh went even farther than supplanting meat with breadfruit. He replaced their daily bread with breadfruit also. In fact; breadfruit became their only staple food on their return home. And what's more, the sailors living on the islands were taught to eat it raw... and began liking it. The cuttings of breadfruit trees Bligh was bringing back; were a continual source of fresh fruit every day. Picked straight off the trees on board and eaten right away; the Bounty was indeed a bounteous ship. She was filled with living trees that produced fresh fruit every day.

Oh. You mean the fact that she was named the Bounty years before she ever made that fateful voyage; is in some way connected to the fact that breadfruit was bound to feed the black slaves of the West Indies and free them from bondage like Christian and his crew were freed by eating this healthier food? His entire venture although deemed scientific was actually a business venture. The only trouble was that they found that breadfruit trees were too easy to grow. The fruit did not need any processing: it was too easy to eat. Nobody could find a way to make a profit from it. It was only used to feed slaves so it cost the English slave owners nothing to feed them.

What is carefully hidden is the fact that Breadfruit could easily have solved the malnutrition problems of all Industrialized England. And saved other Nations the cost and bother of growing grain, harvesting it, transporting, it, and crushing it, storing it, baking it and packing, and selling it to their masses also. The possibility of millions of people never having to worry about having enough Bread to eat. would have destroyed the upper class. The only way the English upper class could justify their existence was that they were not starving for a piece of bread. The culture of poverty and starvation had to be maintained in order for the Elite to maintain their status and identity. Otherwise the lower classes could have told them all to go to hell and all the nobles, and kings and lords would have disappeared from all human existence. Now we wouldn't want that now... would we? Solve the problem of world hunger at the expense of the three major power groups of civilization: Government, Business and Religion.

This is the hidden truth why the story of the voyage of the Bounty was so important and why it holds interest to this day. The venture was poisoned from the beginning by as simple trick. Because the breadfruit was destined expressly to be food for the lowest black slaves in West Indian plantations it became a pariah: nobody who was not a slave wanted to associate themselves with such a foul connection as eating the food of slaves

So the project was a flub. Nobody bought the breadfruit. Nobody ate it except a few slaves in the West Indies. Instead; the English World was transfixed by the unbelievable tale of an entire crew sending its captain packing off into a small craft and leaving him to fend for himself in the middle of the Pacific Ocean. The voyage of the Bounty to the Pacific Islands was already unorthodox in the small amount of meat they ate. But the long stay on those islands acclimated the sailors to eating fresh food, instead of processed preserved food. During their return voyage their diet consisted of almost 100% fresh fruit every day. They drank less water. They needed less salt. They didn't even miss the ruined pork that had been rotting inside the ship for over a year. The crew itself even complained about Bligh not feeding them properly. They became too healthy. They had too much energy. They became used to being treated too nicely by the Islanders. They became too human.... Now we can't have that, can we?

After the crew Mutinied and stole the entire ship, they knew they would be hunted down to the ends of the Earth for their unforgivable sin of defying the power of a British naval sea captain. The mutineers searched for an island where they thought the British Navy would never find them. Fifteen years later: a ship chanced upon that island. Where only some survivors and their children had managed to survive. They had gone back to a full meat diet. And as a result of killing animals, and eating meat: they had experienced more strife and hate and killing in their own tiny human community than if they had lived in a huge city full of lawless violence and crime... Because they couldn't get away from each other... they could not conveniently avoid, or deflect, or run away from their actual disagreements, their actual hatreds, and their actual violent behaviour. They could not get escape their own upbringings. They could not get away from the past. They couldn't get away with anything. The huge culture clash of female Pacific Islanders, and English men in itself was a rotten mess

That island still exists today. It is called Pitcairn Island. It was discovered by an English sea captain named Pitcairn. That English energy drew Christian to the only island in that area that had been formerly visited and explored by another Englishman before him. It was the energy of the English to admire the beauty of unspoiled Nature, while at the same time thinking of ways to despoil it. It was the same energy of the human urge to despoil their first paradise. The same dynamic of the first Biblical human to despoil his own family with greed and envy. Because Christian was envious of Bligh. It was the energy-dynamic of the stone Cairns of the Scot highlanders and the Pitts of the English lowlanders... re-played all over again. An Island that pitted Cain against Able in a religious hate that exists still on that island to this day. Turning their own undespoiled Paradise of pure Nature: into a Human hell. But where was Able? The most able-bodied English seaman ever to have sailed the seven seas. He was on the other side of the world: standing to be judged in a court martial for the sin of losing his ship because the civilized concept of abstract ownership is more sacred than any life.

The human subconscious reversed the meanings of the original Cain and Abel. Instead of Cain standing trial and finding excuses to get away with his crimes: it was Abel, the most able-bodied seaman in the English Navy who was forced to make excuses for the mismanagement of his ship and his enterprise. The meaning of the name of the island was fulfilled: it became both a Pit, and a Cairn. A hole dug to hide in. And a bunch of rocks piled up to serve as a beacon of independence and freedom.

The root intention of the voyage was both inhuman and scientific. The root motive was for rich English lords, owners of slaves to accumulate as much wealth as possible by feeding their slaves as cheaply as possible. It ended in that ship being lost in the pit of the Pacific Ocean. It is a story of misdirected good intentions: poisoned by the past history of the entire human race. One brother being idolized in England, while the other hid in the deepest ocean-hole ever dug on an island that stood out from the sea like a stone cairn with sides so steep and hostile, no landing had been attempted. A merging of biblical myths. The Christian as the criminal and the Able-bodied English sea captain who was almost killed as the hero. Without anyone being murdered... unlike the biblical myths of Jesus and Cain and Abel. Christian did not kill Bligh though he could have. He simply ostracized him from his own ship. And for that crime, he himself was ostracized from the entire British Empire, which at that time was nearly half of the civilized world.

If Captain Bligh been a better captain, and a better leader of men, and a better human: he might have changed the course of human history and found a way to feed the multitudes of poor cheaply at no cost. If Christian had been a better seaman, and a better human being: there would have been no mutiny in the first place. What if Christian had not brought pigs and domesticated animals onto Pitcairn Island? What if they had become vegetarians? Then they would have been the first healthy vegetarian community ever to succeed without being corrupted by an outer civilization. Then there would have been the first social experiment to prove that humans can indeed change how they live and thrive, and become healthier. This is only a tiny glimpse of what history hides and covers up; all the missed possibilities which were sabotaged, all the good intentions gone astray. History never speaks of them, but they exist in the hearts of well-intentioned honest people

What do history books write about? They write about winning battles. Like the great victory of the English over Napoleon at the battle of Waterloo.

But they do not write about what happened after the battle the battle of Waterloo.

They do not write about the 300,000 unpaid English soldiers after that victory, returning from that battle to a bankrupt England... slowly starving to death. Or the angry starving mobs that traveled around the entire Nation, stealing food from the great estates of the Nobles. Or each estate of the Aristocratic elite; hiring militiamen in small troops to fight off the starving angry mobs from attacking and taking over their mansions.

Why did this happen? Because the rich aristocracy of England had already a past habit and practice of bilking their poor oppressed masses out of everything they ever earned by their own efforts. Because the robbing of the poor by the rich was not only perfectly legal. It was a sanctified, legal custom and tradition: which they had been practicing for years. Because the custom of the rich robbing the poor and starving them into submission was normal. Because the property of the rich was more sacred to the elite of England than its own starving people. The elite have always protected their own property first and to hell with living human beings. They were protecting their Sacred Right to Property And their sacred Rights of Ownership.

What surprise was it that the men who won the war went unpaid and starved to death? Queen Victoria did even worse than that: after her faithful small English Navy defeated the huge Spanish Armada, she kept all of their ships in irons at anchor, with all of the starving sailors dying from horrible plagues and diseases refusing to allow them to come on land... Just so she wouldn't have to pay them for saving her Protestant Royal head from being beheaded, and England returned to Catholic Rule.

Do history books ever speak of such foul, filthy, unpatriotic, evil crimes committed by elite rulers and winners? They barely mention it. And only as an, er, um, unfortunate faux pas... in an otherwise illustrious, glittering parade of pomp and circumstance. History glorifies these Royal scum. Not the men who actually earned their victory for them. England did not win the battle of Waterloo. England lost it. England lost the trust and respect of all her European allies because of the shabby way she treated them after the war. England lost her economic might because of that war. England bankrupted herself because of the Napoleonic wars. Because her elite aristocracy could not stand to see an upstart Emperor rule an entire Continent better and more efficiently than the rotten Kings he had deposed.

In those days the poor and the lower classes were not as brainwashed or as politically stupid and blind as the lower classes are today. They knew when they had been had. They knew they had been robbed. They knew who the dirty thieves and Robbers were. Do history books ever study the thousands of lower class uprisings against the rich? The Duke of Wellington has been lionized into a God-Genius. Napoleon has been demonized into an evil ogre. Simply because one mass-murderer won and another mass-murderer lost. And not one mention of what the consequences were to the hundreds of millions of poor who had to pay for these obscenely expensive bloodbaths of violence.

Throughout European history the poor masses and peasants of England were treated far worse than their counterparts on the Continent ever were. The pure savagery of the rich English elite against their own poor; made the atrocities of their Continental counterparts look like a mild, enlightened benevolence. The British Empire was based upon a system of such inhuman, cruel, atrocities and enslavement: it is almost impossible to describe. The poor were used as whipping boys. They were used as sacrificial lambs. They were beaten, starved, jailed, hung, tortured, ostracized for no reason except the enjoyment of pure sadistic cruelty of their masters. The self-esteem of the British masses has still not recovered from the mass trauma of 600 years of oppression and fear. They were beaten and brainwashed into such an abject level of whining, humble subservience that they came to actually love their masters instead of hate them. That is what brainwashing does to you: it reverses your perception of the truth.

The British poor were used as a convenient slave-pool, a slave-labor pool of workers. Pressed into slavery whenever the elite needed them. They were brainwashed into unthinking obedience until they came willingly to do their duty for the rich. The British Royal Navy was created from the tradition of the rich having the God-Given Right to enslave any poor person for life...into any menial position they chose to put them into. The British custom of kidnapping children into slavery was hundreds of years old; the British Pressgang was just one aspect of this.

Sailors and boys were kidnapped by the Royal British Navy; and kidnapped and captured against their will; ripped from their homes and off the streets and from the ships, and hunted down like rats...and whisked away into slavery. Except that the British did not call it enforced slavery: their politically correct term for it was called 'being pressed into service'. The British system of slavery was a systematic terrorization of the masses, no less random or inhumane than the terror of Stalin's reign over millions who were whisked away in the middle of the night without question never to be seen again. Stalin did this to his masses by the millions. The only difference between how the English treated their poor and how Stalin treated his subjects is that they Stalin did not 'press them into service'. He just put them into slave camps where they were worked and starved to death. England's elite did this to their poor hundreds of years earlier than Stalin. The culture of Victoria's England was different. she did not pretend to be the Mother of her country as Stalin pretended to be the Father of his country. Stalin's poor masses were fed the pap that they were actually being looked after by the State. The concept of looking after the poor masses of England did not exist in Victoria's time. It was normal for armed gangs to kidnap poor men and boys into a lifelong servitude into the Royal Navy. It was normal. It was normal for most of these British sailors to die before ever being released from their maritime slavery. 70% of all the sailors in the Royal navy were killed, or died from wounds in one year alone during their war against the Spanish navies.

The Path of Splitness

715

The Poor of England were pressed into these new industrial factories. They were taken away from their comfy country cottages just as brutally and efficiently as Stalin pressed millions of Russian poor into his Gulag death-labor camps and collective work camps and collective work prisons called kolhkozoes. The English peasants were herded into cattle cars like beef on the hoof. This is another obscene lie modern history books spout...the virtue of these new industrial railroads serving as cheap mass transportation for the poor. That is total bullshit. The railroads were built by rich Robber Barons to get rich quicker.

The actual industrialization of England. The actual mass pressing of millions of poor into factory wage-slavery by the rich Robber Barons. Came from the English obscene Tradition of regarding it as normal for their government to press any able-bodied poor male into slavery for life: into their vaunted, obscene slave-system of a Navy. The actual mass transportation of millions of poor against their will from the countryside, into the industrial factories has been completely glossed over and whitewashed by historians and history books.

What was the cultural legacy of British ships enslaving their own poor for hundreds of years in ships? The shipping of undesirables, religious dissidents, convicts, and the lowest, poorest most oppressed of its masses out of England to its colonies. Imitating the Dutch in their shipping of bond-servants and slaves to New York and finally, the shipping of slaves from Africa to America.

Were all an evolution of the same thing; elite greed.

Then the people in London were so packed tightly together, the rich rubbed elbows with the poor. They walked on the same streets as the poor. They ate at the same inns. The poor had their heroes like Dick Turpin. The rich had their constables and regiments and police. And left the poor to rot. Except... if the poor tried to rob them. Then the hue and cry was raised: and the highway robbers were hunted down and shot and hung. But mostly: the highwaymen who robbed the rich got away because the poor aided them and abetted them and warned them. Which you will never find in any history book.

The War against the Spanish Armada bankrupted the British government by increasing their National debt fivefold. It was the worst National bankruptcy in modern history. The English poor did not rise up against this system of slavery because they were being brainwashed just as the masses of Rome had been brainwashed... into being proud of being a member of an Empire. They were so proud of their Imperial power: that they whitewashed their own slavery into the famous song: 'Britannia'.

'Rule Britannia!
Britannia rules the waves!
English never, never, never will be Sla-a-a-aves!'

Germans sang proudly of their love for their Fatherland and their leader: Hitler. Today: modern imbeciles gape and puzzle over how the Germans of the 19th Century could be so blind to their own oppression as to worship their beloved, powerful leaders. When they do the very same thing themselves. The English elite have been brainwashing their own masses for 1,000 years into worshipping and loving their oppressors and masters and did it much better than most. The only difference is that their oppressors were winners, not losers. It took hundred of years but they finally did it...in England, Royalty is supposed to be loved and respected and revered and admired. Not hated and despised.

The Industrial Revolution sparked the idea of using the entire population of English lower class as not only a slave-pool for their navy and army... but as wage slaves for the rich industrial robber barons to get richer... by building death camps called factories and factory towns: and manning them with poor kidnapped peasants. The villagers of England were pressed into these factories, herded into cattle cars and taken away without explanation or reason. Why? Because they were owned as a population, as a part of the property which the aristocrats owned. They were taken away from their country cottages en masse; just as brutally and efficiently as Stalin pressed millions of Russian poor into his Gulag death-labour camps. The English peasants were herded into railroad cars like cattle on the hoof. The first railroads were used for transporting of English peasants from the countryside to factories to work as slaves, and transporting raw resources into the factories to make England's Industrial Robber Barons richer. The mass transportation of millions of poor against their will from the countryside, into the industrial factories has been completely glossed over and whitewashed by historians and history books. The practice of forcing... pressing millions of poor into factory wage-slavery by the rich Robber Barons came from the English obscene tradition of regarding it as normal for people to be owned lock stock and barrel by aristocratic landowners. They owned entire villages, and towns and everybody in them. Their government's practice of 'pressing' any able-bodied poor male into slavery for life: into their vaunted, obscene slave-system of a Navy was just one visible example of how the masses were used by the English aristocracy by calling involuntary slavery by another politically correct term. The press gangs were slavers: hunting down free people to force them into slavery. What was really obscene about this mass indoctrination was they used the slaves they had brainwashed into willingly enslaving other poor people of their own class. It was by this betrayal of their own humanity and freedom and self-respect that the lower classes of England degraded themselves into becoming running dogs for the English Royal Crown... and then later, as running dogs of western imperial capitalism. When the lower class aids and abets the upper class in their own oppression: this exposes the level of brainwashing which their civilized culture has risen to... or rather more correctly; the level of stupidity to which the lower classes have lowered themselves to.

What was the cultural legacy of British ships enslaving their own poor for hundreds of years in ships? The shipping of undesirables, religious dissidents, convicts, and the lowest, poorest most oppressed of its masses out of England to its colonies. Imitating the Dutch in their shipping of bond-servants to New York, and finally: the shipping of African slaves to the West Indies and America. British ship-culture; was a culture of sadistic cruelty and slavery for hundreds of years. The British Empire exported the culture of sadism and slavery everywhere its ships went. One of those places was America. One of the results of this ship-culture was the culture of sadism and slavery imported into America. In the 1400's. 1500's. 1600's. 1700's. 1800's. The English culture of: Raiding. Robbing. Smuggling Stealing. Piracy. Trade.

Were all an evolution of the same thing; elite greed, slowly trickling down to the lower classes. The trickle-down theory of corruption, tricking the lower classes into copying the worst practices of the upper class. The trickle-down theory is a trick... get it?

During the last heyday of English Piracy: Captain Kidd was finally brought to justice as an outlaw privateer gone turned pirate. What was he hung for? For accidentally killing a mutinous seaman by hitting him over the head with a bucket. Why were none of his other crimes ever proven? Because this would have inadvertently revealed how all the richest gentry and authorities of the English seacoast were guilty as sin of profiting from his crimes, and how they all helped him, and how they aided him and abetted him, and bought from him and sold to him. And profited by him. This is just one example of how tightly all English piracy, smuggling, murder, rape, stealing, raiding, robbing, and trade was woven together and covered up. All the damning evidence found written in the logs of Captain Kidd, and the logs of the captured ships he took: were never used in evidence against him. Because the richest of the English Aristocracy were also named in those logs as accessories to his piracy. He was not convicted for his piracy. Nobody notices that.

The culture of English greed and hate and hypocrisy was more obviously corrupt in those simpler times. It stank more odiously. The poor hated the rich more honestly. The rich hated the poor more openly. The entire fucking structure of civilized institutions of England were set up by the rich to stay rich, to rob the poor, and to get richer. All the hallowed institutions history books laud and worship and sanctify as pillars of English Culture, and English Tradition, and English greatness, and English Excellency, and English Goodness: were stinking, rotten, evil inventions created by the rich.

Read what the rich actually did to the poor for the past 12,000 years. Then look around you, and see what is happening today. Is anything any different? Human society corrupts truth very easily, by sanctifying two convenient hypocrisies:

“Never speak ill of anyone while they are still alive”,

And:

‘Never speak ill of the dead.’

That about covers it.

Civilization was born from the invention of war. War was invented before civilization. War created civilization. Civilization did not create war. War was just a symptom of the human overpopulation. The sexual lust that created the insanity of civilization. Until humans realize that the original sin of the Bible is connected to their present existence, until humans realize that the overpopulation of civilization is insane: wars will never stop happening. Until humans realize that all Empires are evil: there will continue to be Empires.

All Empires are intrinsically evil. All colonization by empires is evil. We in the West have been raised to believe in the superior humanitarianism of the British Empire. The British Empire was supposed to have been more humane than other Empires. The British Empire was supposed to have been more civilized, more scientific, more humanitarian. In a few ways it was. Yet it invented the first concentration Death camps for civilians during the Boer War.

Examine the effect of Britain on the rest of the World as a colonial power by comparison, before-and-after. In each colony: tribe-by-tribe, nation by nation, people by people. Were any better off after they were colonized? In what way? What legacy did the effects of British Colonial rule leave? The white supremacist Nation of South Africa: stolen from the German Boers, and the Dutch. The white supremacist nation Rhodesia; created out of the pure greed of one man: Cecil Rhodes..., which has since descended into a black racist supremacist Nation. How many former commonwealth colonies are now wallowing today in poverty, disease and starvation because of the fact that they had all once been colonized by the English? How many acts of genocide were they responsible for? How many more genocides did their colonizing culture spawn? These proud inventors of the first concentration camps. As their power waned in Africa and all over the world: how many colonies did they leave in the dirt of poverty and oppression? Did they leave any colony better off than they found it? The root tribal corruptions of the former English colonies have only worsened since they left.

And the British colonies in the East? The Robber Baron cities of Singapore, Shanghai, and Hong Kong; are now all bastions of super-capitalism and pure greed. They were all brainwashed into the insane slavery of worshipping the Protestant work ethic, by the lie that all upwardly mobile societies spout. Slaving away their entire lives trying to better their position. Brainwashing their children from birth into a life of pure drudgery. Their former Eastern colonies are all concentrated corruptions of strict authoritarian conformity, and rampant poverty. The less fortunate beggar colonies left behind: are all desperately scrambling to create the same desolation of Hong Kong and Singapore. The only good that came out of the British Empire; was the Nations that managed to kick them out on their asses before they were ready to leave. The ones who managed to raise their own self-esteem, by asserting their own self-worth, and independence.

What about the Americans? They almost learned their lesson. They tried to keep out of global world politics. But they were sucked into it because of their connections to Britain. They only colonized the Philippines, Panama, Costa Rica and Hawaii. Why? Because they were too busy colonizing and raping their own undeveloped Western lands. In the beginning: they did not need the natural resources of other countries for a few of their elite to become rich incredibly fast. But once the machine age made oil King... they raped every oil field in their own land as fast as they could; and then went hunting all around the world for other oil fields to rape as fast as possible. They no longer needed to attack and rape Nations. All they had to do was rape their own natural resources. They no longer needed to invade and colonize other Nations to do it. They only had to bribe their upper elite so they would let them do it. Suddenly world domination was determined by who had the most oil, who had the cheapest oil. Who could import the cheapest oil in the greatest quantities. This changed international politics. The masses of the world, the billions of dispossessed, powerless poor were left out of the equation. They were merely an annoyance to the rich countries. Ever since the end of the 2nd World War: the entire foreign policy of the United States has been based upon guaranteeing a cheap resource they could steal from other countries... oil: to be sold to them cheaper than to any other Nation on Earth.

Look at what Hitler did for Germany. He got rid of unemployment completely. No Capitalist Nation or Empire has ever done that before or since. No democracy has ever done that. He created a German folk-myth of German supremacy. And he proved that Germans were superior: by industrializing Germany faster, and better than either the English or the Americans. He proved it by the Germans working harder as a Nation, cooperating better as a single Nation; than the Americans or the other European countries.

Huh? You mean Germany actually had the highest standard of living in the world; before Hitler went to war?

Yes. Something that is carefully not spoken of and never admitted.

Just before the 2nd World War began: literally nobody in Germany was poor. Everybody in Germany had a decent job and a decent salary. Hitler had managed to completely get rid of poverty in Germany. No other western nation has ever done this. Which is why they still hate him so much and vilify him so much. That is one thing modern historians do not want you to know about. That is what capitalists pooh-pooh, and smugly laugh-at, and question, and deride, and sneer at, and do not value, and spit upon.

The only reason America ever had a higher standard of living than Germany at that time; was because their standard was; a non-existent mean average between the filthy rich robber baron millionaires, and all the millions of poor destitute farmers and laborers. It was a non-existent, meaningless average that could not compare to the actual higher living standard of health, happiness and camaraderie that all

Germans had at the time. America was still in the middle of its Great Depression with millions of people starving and poor, when Hitler had already completely eliminated unemployment and poverty from Germany.

After the 1st World War: the War-Indemnities Act had stripped all of Germany's financial wealth. The Germans experienced the good fortune of being poor all together as equals. And then enjoyed a new reborn affluence all together... as equals... this is the secret reason which made Germany become so powerful so quickly. The fact that Hitler lifted the entire German nation out of poverty: not just the robber barons of Germany. Not just the rich. This is the secret reason why he is so demonized today. The reason he managed to energize the entire nation was because he put the identity and status of German Socialist Nationalism above money, above class distinctions; creating a nations that was more egalitarian than any other in the annals of human history.

The story of how the Nazi's and Hitler came into power, how he centralized that power and kept it is interesting because it shows how all official propoganda is not only a lie but the exact opposite of the truth. For instance: the Nazi's were famous for their huge organizing skills and huge rallies where everything works like clockwork. They gave the impression of competence and organization. How the Nazi leadership actually worked behind closed doors was the exact opposite: a gang of disorganized fanatics and thugs all fighting each other to gain power. Hitler's speeches give the impression that he was constantly working for the good of the German people. The exact opposite was true. In fact, Hitler didn't rule Germany at all. He didn't have any plans, and he did not supervise or oversee anything the Nazi government did. His megalomaniac idea of ruling was like a God: Hitler would commands something to be done, and magically things would come to fruition and things were done so his visualization of Germans and Germany as the master race would be fulfilled on schedule. In actual fact, Hitler did not rule Germany. In fact after he gained power he did nothing. Once in power, Hitler slept late, got up jut before lunch, had a long leisurely lunch while reading a few newspapers, and then went for a leisurely walk in the Bavarian Alps...

How he kept power is also interesting. He pitted people against each other so they would be too busy infighting to be a danger to him. Every important position had a similar position that was so close to each other, you couldn't tell them apart. The entire Nazi government was run by people doing things they thought Hitler would want them to do. His slightest comment was used as a justification that it was 'Hitler's Will' that something should be done. He surrounded himself with an entourage of lackeys and sycophants who never dared to disagree with him, and if any of then did, he went into fits of rage like the spoiled child he was. The natural outcome of this total vacuum of control from the top was the worst elements in German society taking over power at every level and doing whatever they thought would gain them the approval of Der Fuehrer. The Nazi rule of Germany was the direct result of Hitler not ruling at all.

The other interesting thing about Hitler's racism was that it was mostly abstract; a theory. He didn't send his personal bodyguard to a concentration camp though he was of Jewish descent. He did not persecute the many Jewish officers in the German armed forces. He never personally ordered the killing or mass murders. The other thing about his racism is that it was a matter of distance. The farther away it was: the more ruthless his policies were. His policy of the total obliteration of Russian people for his 'Liebensraum' or 'living space' for the German Nation was a purely abstract plan. He himself was a non-violent person. His demonization of the Slavic people and Jews and Bolsheviks and other groups was a political ploy: an oratorical tool. The farther away from Germany a people were, the less civilized they were considered to be, the less important they were to his holding power and the less he wanted to bother in dealing with them. People who were not of an Aryan, white, European, Viking, Teutonic background and culture were automatically regarded by him as being subhuman.

As it turned out: the people of Germany saved themselves and recovered from their Great Depression by their own hard work and willingness to help each other and their basic, simple-minded, selfless good nature. The irony was that they attributed all of the achievements to Hitler: who was actually the laziest man in Germany. The German people were taken in by one of the most skillful liars and cunning deceivers ever born. You must remember that Democracy had been foisted upon the Germans after they lost the 1st WW and the King had abdicated. Hitler promised he was the 'strong man' they were looking for to save Germany from the worst depression in modern industrial history. Actually he was the weakest little snot in Germany. All the German people were lacking was somebody to tell them what they should do... a moral leader, a figurehead, an iconic strongman, a king. They had known no other form of govt except authoritarian rule. The brief experiment with democracy had been an abysmal failure. Once they were told what to do, they did it... and they did it efficiently and intelligently and well. And for once, what Hitler was telling them not only made sense, but it worked. Germans set their own house in order, so everything was organized. The famous German obsession with organization and logical mathematical strictness of rules, which had been lacking in the short-lived democratic Weimar Republic was reinstated so that everything was 'ein richtig' or correct... 'right', everything in its place where it ought to be; as it had been before with the Kaiser as their national mascot and everyone in their little niches of hierarchical Prussian society. The German people quite understandably went back to a social order they were more comfortable with: autocratic despotic rule of authority from the top on down. It was all a matter of inventing the proper officialdom, the appearance of authority; the appearance of legitimacy. Once that was in place, everyone obeyed their govt as they had before the democratic chaos of splintered political factions all fighting each other, with chaos in the streets and starvation rampant; the Nazis were welcomed because in the beginning they put an end to all the violence, chaos and poverty. Germany gained back its own self respect and its former industrialized affluence. Hitler was hailed as the wonder boy of all Europe, he could do no wrong.; whatever Hitler told them to do they did. Then Hitler told them the wrong thing...he told them to go to war and the idiots obeyed him. Just like the idiots in America obeyed Bush Jr. and FDR and Woodrow Wilson.

In actuality Hitler had no will of his own, no organized plans of his own... once in power he did nothing but watch movies and sleep in every day. Most of the evil attributed to him was not because of his wishes or his will but because of this lack of will and the wishy-washy way he unexpressed himself in vague terms, carefully saying as little as possible to hide his own incompetence and insecurities from everyone.. Hitler was an artist, a dreamer, he scribbled his dreams of empire and building huge grandiose palaces of the 3rd Reich and daydreamed, about a glorious future, while his Germany was being mismanaged and ruined by the worst scum and thugs who vied amongst each other for power. The propaganda machine of the Nazis, all the films and banners and rallies and parades and marching and singing and speeches and ranting and shouting and yelling and mass hysteria was a façade, a charade, a scam. The people of Germany did not see behind the curtain. After the shouting and yelling and mass adulation was over, Hitler went home and did nothing; he was an idle lazy artistic vegetarian who had no interest in the practical details of ruling or governing a nation.

Hitler's decision to invade and retake Western Prussia was never intended to become a World War. His invading of France was a defensive reactive counter-strike against the French and British armies who were invading the neutrality of Belgium, in their pre-emptive attack on Germany, seeking to copy the old German WW1 Schlieffen plan in reverse .and take Germany by surprise before they could mount a defense. In other words: Hitler's successful counter-strike was not an offensive invasion: it was a defensive reaction to the Allies invading Belgium first on the way to invading Germany: it was a defensive reaction to the Allies offensive attack. If France and England had not begun the offensive attack on Germany: Hitler would not have moved his troops, there would have been no counter-strike, no German forces pouring into France, no conquering of France. It was the Allies who began the hostilities: not Hitler! Get this through your fucking head. If Germany and France had not mobilized their two armies and decided to attack Germany together in the SAME fucking 'illegal' 'immoral' violation of Belgian neutrality which these hypocrites had accused Germany of in WW1... there would have been no WW2, no slaughter of millions of innocent people, no atomic horror, etc.

It was the western war mongers and the entire banking guild of the western owned private banking syndicate that created the phony image of Hitler as a threat to world peace. Hitler would have gladly signed a peace agreement with England and left the British Empire in peace after his initial military successes, but Churchill did not let this happen. Instead, Rudolf Hess was imprisoned for life for his supposed 'crime' of flying to England as a personal peace envoy representing Hitler. It was only after the invasion of Poland and the conquest of France, when Hitler took over the running of the entire war himself and decided to invade Russia that he imposed his will... and that was the worst thing he could have done. His personal decision to invade Stalin's Russia was what destroyed both him and the German Nation.

His one discipline was a critique of his speech after giving every speech... carefully marking down exactly what had roused the crowds most, and what had not. He was a gifted rabble rouser, a speech maker, a populist: nothing more, nothing less. Beyond that, he did nothing except set everybody else at odds with each other inside the Nazi regime, creating a chaos of mismanagement that was totally hidden from the public. By setting up parallel offices and bureaus: he created the dynamic of nearly everybody in the Nazi govt fighting against everyone else. Whilst all of them were fighting for their own self-advancement by gaining his approval over that of their rivals, he could act out the egomaniacal role of infallibility; which was merely a carbon copy of the same role the Kaiser had acted out as their King. It was a strategy older than Caesar himself; divide and conquer. By doing nothing but give speeches he created the illusion that he was doing everything in his power to save Germany... and the illusion worked... That is...until he grew fed up with his generals trying to talk him out of going to war... until he began believing in his own fiction and took over personal command of the entire German armed forces; and then everything he tried to do blew up in his face.

Hitler was a cunning, skillful schemer. He was not responsible for the outbreak of anger that led to Krystal Nacht he did not plan the affair; in fact he made sure it would never happen again. The Brown shirts led by Ernst Roehm were furious at Hitler because after he gained power, he abandoned his entire plan of getting the Jews out of Germany and did an about-face and began protecting them instead of deporting them. The leaders of the SS and Goebbels and the Wehrmacht saw a chance to increase their own power by removing the brown shirts as a political and military rival by convincing Hitler they were planning a coup: which they were not. Hitler himself was not responsible for the night of the long knives; he was deceived into taking this action, but he wanted to be deceived because Roehm was a growing too popular and becoming perceived as a rival to his popularity. Absolute dictators, absolute monarchs, absolute rulers cannot tolerate rivals of any sort. Roehm was too healthy and too simple-minded to be as corrupted as Hitler had become. If you put Roehm next to Hitler you can see they are two sides of the same Nazi moustache except for a crucial difference; one is empty and the other is full: Roehm's brown shirt is full, overflowing with energy and muscle, while Hitler's brown shirt is an empty sack devoid of energy. Their faces are opposites. Roehm's is full of life while Hitler's face is a flaccid empty death-mask. Roehm was not as corrupted as Hitler: his political agenda was still focused on getting the Jews out of Germany one way or another. If Roehm had not been assassinated: Roehm's single-minded fanaticism against the Jews might have won him enough power to deport the Jews out of Europe and their stranglehold on Western culture and finance and power might have been broken forever.

Hitler was responsible for invading Poland... But that was a result of 10 years of wrangling and arguing with the Polish govt over the stolen part of Western Prussia and the repatriation German people under Polish rule: it a perfectly legitimate retaking of the stolen lands of Western Prussia which the allies had taken from Germany after Germany lost the 1st World War. It was only after the Poles began slaughtering Germans in Poland on a genocidal level of mass horror and inhumanity, only after the Poles built huge concentration camps where they were starving Germans to death and working them to death and killing them and slaughtering them on a mass scale designed to systematically kill and exterminate every German man, woman, child and baby in Poland... Only then was Hitler finally goaded into action: to save what was left of the surviving Germans still alive in Poland and rescue them from the huge concentration death camps which the Polish govt had built to house the German-speaking Poles who were arrested and taken from their homes for no reason except the mass hysteria of the entire Polish Nation rising up in universal blind hatred of German people... against a people who had never done them any wrong. Hitler was goaded into invading Poland because of the Polish racist genocidal massacring of German-speaking Polish citizens. What is astounding is that he did not massacre the Poles in retaliation even after the atrocities the Poles had committed were dug up and the mass graves exposed and documented and shown to the entire German Nation, even after the photos of murdered German children and German women and girls and innocent German citizens were discovered that showed just how bestial and monstrous and inhumane the Polish hatred and vileness had been, how the bodies of innocent Germans had been burned and slashed and tortured and butchered.

In other words: every bit of fucking war propaganda you have ever read about Hitler and Poland and how WW2 began is not only a total lie and 100% bullshit, it is the complete opposite of what actually happened: What you have swallowed and been taught is the reverse of what actually happened. It was the Poles whose national policy was one the extermination of one ethnic race, not the Germans. It was the Germans who were systematically slaughtered by the Poles: not the Jews by the Germans. It was the French and the English who started WW2 and declared war on Germany, and began the military attack, not Hitler, Hitler just reacted to their aggression

In the beginning Hitler was pro-active in re-unifying the German people into a greater Germany under the banner of National Socialism. 'A Germany for Germans' is like saying 'An America for Americans'. 'A France for the French.' There is nothing wrong with ethnic Purity. In fact it was ethnic justice he wanted; which was exactly what all the other ethnic people of Europe wanted also. In fact the moral high-ground of ethnic purity had been the ethical-moral reason why Russia had invaded Austria and Germany coming to the aid of ethnic Serbia, a Slavic nation being attacked by a huge multi-cultural racially mixed, impure Empire that was coming apart at the seams because it was rotten, corrupt and not ethnically pure.

What has never been discussed is the fact that WW1 and WW2 were fought over the moral and ethical principle of Ethnic purity and ethnic national autonomy. Before WW1: Ethnic purity and Ethnic national rights was the new wave of the future: a new brave world that was systematically breaking up the huge rotten Empires and decentralizing the power and evil of civilization. The 20th century was a battle between the ancient evil of ancient Empires against the new wave of Ethnic nationalism freedom from oppression. Ancient evil won: and the spirit and intelligence of the human species went into a nosedive of brainwashed idiocy.

The idea of Ethnic purity began as the best, cleanest most rational answer to human conflict and world peace. France for the French and kick all people who aren't French out of France! Hungary for the Hungarians and kick out everyone who isn't Hungarians out of Hungary! Poland for the Poles and kick out everyone who isn't Polish! In other words: the deportation of all aliens out of every ethnic nation: back to their ethnic places of birth and origin. No more wars. No more violence. Happy people speaking the same language sharing the same culture, sharing the same songs the same dances the same customs and same traditions, the same history. The idea of sharing as opposed to the idea of not sharing. The idea of sharing opposed to the idea of selfishly not sharing anything with anybody. The most evil principle won. The best principle of National Socialism: an entire people, an entire Nation sharing their shared culture with each other in sacred friendship with each other was lost.

The evil that happened in the 20th century was this: It REVERSED this good idea of sharing and socialism, and now is turning the human species into a genetic abomination by labeling racial and cultural purity as 'racism' as being filled with hate, as being negative... When the opposite is true. It is the mixing of races who were never designed to mix genetically that is producing the human garbage of ugly, weak, misshapen, miserable unhealthy offspring today. Hitler's new idea of National Socialism was not only good and intelligent: it should have been implemented into every single country on Earth. The trouble with his idea was not the idea, it was the fact that he himself was a selfish vain pompous asshole, he did not share his idea with other ethnic races or nations. He did not try to spread the ideas and principles of National Socialism based upon ethnic purity to other ethnic nations. Instead, he overreacted and began spreading the myth of Germanic superiority, and Germans as the 'master race'.. Why did he do this? It's obvious! After Germany being attacked and snubbed and treated like a nigger nation for 30 years by the entire world, after being robbed and cheated and blockaded and starved and intimidated... Germans developed the attitude of them against the whole world because the entire world was their enemy. The entire world had ganged up against them and tried to destroy Germany for 22 years the entire world had tried to destroy Germany and failed. Hitler's answer to this worldwide propaganda was to fight it with the opposite propaganda. Instead of Germans being the worst: he told them they were the best! He told them they were better than the whole world!

What do you think the basic Hebrew myth is? It is the myth that the Jews are better than everyone else! Why? Because the whole world has been telling them for 3,000 fucking years that they are the worst: and they don't want to listen to the fucking truth.

The same basic myth applied to the Germans: they were the worst obedient robotic idiots in Europe, but they were also the most honest, decent simple-minded healthiest race of fools in Europe. Just as the Jews were the most culturally poisoned race on earth: but genetically they also were potentially the most intelligent people in the world. Each myth full of bullshit had a tiny seed of truth in it.

SO what happened when Hitler restored the German economy and everyone was employed and nobody was poor and nobody was starving anymore? The happy German people forgot all about the past and just had fun living. They were so happy, there were flowers everywhere, singing was heard everywhere, happy healthy children were everywhere in clean clothes with bright shining happy faces, all the towns and villages sparkled with health and cleanliness; everything was spic and span. There was no ugliness, no sickness, no evil, no hate, Germany had been cleansed of corruption...that is... except the center of German power. Except for the Nazi Regime. Except for Hitler... There, Hitler sat and brooded over the past and wanted justice, revenge for all the mistreatment and injustice done to Germany since it had lost the Great War. Hitler was aware of the huge international forces that were gathering against everything he was trying to do and everything he stood for.

Chapter Six A: The Beginnings of civilization

There was an insane disconnect between Adolph Hitler and the German people and an insane hysteria, a mass appeal, a mass love which was not sane or rational. The disconnect was whatever Hitler decided and declaimed had nothing to do with the German people. The German nation was not involved in the national policy and decisions of their govt. The German people were not involved in any decision making process. They were told what to do and that was that.

The other side of this schizoid aberration was that Hitler's speeches were so in tune with what the German people felt and thought, it was as if he was only speaking and saying what all of them thought and felt. Hitler's act was fairly simple: he posed as the greatest German patriot of all, the greatest most selfless, most brutally honest, humble servant of the Fatherland and the Germanic culture and heritage. Nobody dared challenge or question Hitler's patriotism. But it was a total act. Pure propaganda theater. His somber appearance to the shouting crowd in the window is the exact same stupid propaganda trick that the Catholic Pope of Rome used for 100's of fucking years.

As a pendulum-swing, a reaction to Germany and Germans being unfairly treated as an inferior race by the whole world for 20 years: Hitler's claiming the Germans were a superior race was not only natural it was justified. After 23 years of the whole world trying to bring Germany to its knees: the Germans had triumphed against all adversity; they were happier, healthier, more intelligent, better educated and what's more... more humane and more decent and more generous and more hospitable and more gregarious a people than any other ethnic nation on earth

The only trouble was they obeyed authority more unquestioningly, they worshipped military strength more unquestioningly, they were a more military culture who worshipped, idolized and obeyed military authority figures more unquestioningly than any other nation also. The basic fucking reason Hitler and the Nazis became popular and gained power was simple: they wore military uniforms all the time. Non-military cultures look at this and can't understand how this posturing fake in a military uniform that didn't even fit him ever became popular. Put on a military uniform and strut around: and shout orders and commands and the German people instantly fall into line and goose stepped their way into oblivion? Yes and no. They were cajoled and pushed and prodded and threatened by so many huge forces, factors; they were faced with so many dangers, problems, catastrophes, they went through so many shocks, collapses, swings, turns and twists of fate in so short a time, no human who did not live through that time can ever fully understand why it happened, nobody who didn't live in Germany in the 30's and 40's will ever be able to fully understand why it happened and how it happened. The threat of Stalin's Bolshevik genocidal horror; the butchering slaughtering of millions of innocent Russians right next door to Germany, had been going on ever since WW1. How would you feel if your nation is located right next to the greatest mass murderer in history who has the largest land army of over 2 million men and has been murdering, torturing, executing, sending to death camps, starving and butchering his own people for over 10 years... and you have no national army or air force or navy to protect you from invasion and extermination? That single fact alone cannot 'empathized' or accounted for or understood by anyone who wasn't German and didn't live in Germany during the 1930's and 40's.

The only trouble was that the propaganda of German nationalism included Hitler's supremacist racist ideology of being a master race and his megalomania of Germany ruling the whole world for 1,000 years, which was total nonsense.

Chapter Six A: The Beginnings of civilization

725

Here is the fucking moral and ethical sticking point: which has been fucking buried and never discussed openly by anyone since the first idea of ethnic socialism became a reason for nation building. If you were a Frenchman: wouldn't you want to live with other Frenchmen instead of Lebanese or Algerians or people whom you have nothing in common with and do not even speak their language? Racial and ethnic purity is only plain common sense! Living with your own people and not invading the land of other ethnic cultures is just plain fucking common sense!

The point is that the hypocrisy and lie of racial and ethnic 'tolerance' is 100% bullshit. Different ethnic Cultures and races do NOT get along with each other and will NEVER get along with each other and will NEVER tolerate each other. The only thing they fucking do is refuse to have anything to do with each other. The ONLY fucking reason there are interracial; marriages and mixing of ethnic people is not because ethnic people 'tolerate' other people who don't have the same religious beliefs and the same ethnic background and have the same skin color and speak the same language and live in the same region etc...

The reason any interracial tolerance exists at all is because of a universal culture even older and deeper than ethnic civilized cultures and that is of the universal culture of upward mobility: the universal culture of social climbing: of tree-climbing apes trying to climb up into higher family trees. It is because lower class cultures always seek to climb up and marry into higher class cultures. The highest ethnic cultural upward mobility dream-fantasy of the black-brown cultures has been to 'marry-UP into the highest-class white culture possible because for over 2 centuries: white culture has been defined and perceived as the highest culture most evolved, most sophisticated most modern culture in the world.

Interracial mixing and marriages is happening also because the new, worst, most corrupt culture of Western consumer capitalism is now perceived as the most dominant global culture in the world and is being copied by 7 billion fucking idiots. The Jewish invention of western consumer capitalism sold by Jews, and spread by Jewish media has wiped out and replaced the values ideals, principles customs. traditions, habits, etc. of older cultures with the negative evil values of consumer selfishness, consumer greed, consumer hypocrisy, consumer paranoia, consumer insularity, consumer stupidity, mass consumer snobbery, mass consumer paranoia, mass consumer conformity, etc, etc ad-nausea-vomit-puke.

Basically the fact is: you are a consumer first and a Hindu second. You are a wage slave first and a Chinese second. You are a buyer and a seller first and a Christian second. You are an addict: a lover of money first and a father second. All the ancient cultural identities and values are now secondary to the primary cultural practices and principles of consumer capitalism. All of the old cultures have faded and are disappearing.

Capitalist consumer culture has destroyed all the organic ethnic cultures which existed before WW1. All the ethnic cultures which had the potential of becoming creatively unique by natural flowering of each ethnic race cooperating and not competing and cleansing itself of all impurities: has been poisoned, and the Jewish propaganda of lies has portrayed racial ethnic purists as evil: when it is the filthy Jewish Talmudic Zionists who are the actual haters and racists.

Humans are not designed to fuck other humans living on the other fucking side of the fucking planet; they are designed to fuck their next-door neighbors. Racial inbreeding is only unhealthy on a local familial tribal level of incest that does not mix with its neighbors on a friendly basis. The idea of racial; mixing on a global scale is now being proven as a genetic disaster. The billions of babies now being born are ugly, weak, malformed, diseased, and scarcely able to breathe or walk under their own power. In the next 25-50 years: there will be a huge extinction of these genetic undesirables and good riddance to them. No industrial hospital culture or medical industry of hospitalization will ever succeed in keeping the sickest, most genetically warped and poisoned of the human species from dying out and going extinct.

What has happened since WW1 and the destruction and poisoning of the idea of ethnic national autonomy and racial ethnic purity as the natural birthright of every human on earth... is not only the reversal of this basic budding idea of national socialism spreading and the poison of interracial nations poisoned by languages and cultures which simply do not mix destroying their ethnic culture ... but the mockery of this ideal has been twisted into an abomination of the complete reversal of the pure ideal it once was.

Now! The only nation which practices ethnic purity is practicing it out of hate not out of love The only racist nation on earth which does not allow any immigration of aliens and is trying to ethnically cleanse itself of all aliens is the criminal illegal state of Israel. The result has been the complete filthying of the ideal of ethnic culture and beauty and justice and cooperation and closeness and harmony which Hitler had tried to achieve by non-violent deportation.. Israel has become the cesspool of the worst, most evil, diseased Jewish criminal scum on earth. Israel has become the capital of criminal mafias, Jewish gangsters organized on a global scale of power wealth and corruption. Israel is now importing and selectively accepting only the most evil Jewish Zionist scum on earth. Israel is now becoming the opposite of the ideal of German ethnic purity: it has become a 'special' nation. Protected by the most powerful nation on earth: coddled by the USA. Until it has become the ultimate pimple of civilized pus: the most poisoned the most corrupted culture on Earth, the most evil place on Earth. Because Israel is the negative abomination of the positive ideal of Hitler's National Socialism and goal of racial purity. Instead of an ethnic race of clean happy healthy loving kind beautiful German children: there is now Israel is the place of the ugliest most foul Jewish criminal gangsters, racketeers, sexual perverts, white slavers... Every known criminal activity and perversion every financial swindle every financial con every possible abomination of inhumanity has been and is being concentrated into the smallest most powerful, most evil nation on earth.

The original good principle of building nations based upon ethnicity: racial and cultural purity is not racism and is not based upon hate. The principle of France for the French, America for the Americans, China for the Chinese, India for the Hindus, Pakistan for the Muslims... is based on the non-violent model of cooperation being better than competition and conflict. When races do not mix interracially, when cultures do not mix: then they have only two possible outcomes: they either become better, healthier, stronger, more intelligent: or else they rot and die and go extinct due to their own intrinsic cultural values and principles and genetic base.

Meaning: if Hindus cannot get along with other Hindus: then let the fuckers kill each other off and good riddance to the whole fucking bunch. If Frenchmen cannot get along with other Frenchmen: let the fuckers kill each other off and good riddance to the whole fucking bunch of them. Meaning: whatever personal ethnic cultural conflicts exist in ethnic nations: let them work out their own fucking problems and keep your fucking nose out of their business because you don't have the faintest fucking clue what they are fighting about and you have no fucking clue about which side is right and which side is wrong.

In other words: no more global policemen, no more international intervention, no more centralized world power and wealth No more world wars. No more Empires. Decentralize the entire fucking human population into intelligently localized ethnic areas and cultures and allow small regional conflicts to work themselves out organically:, but no more insane world wars!

In other words: this basic idea of Hitler's National Socialism, which is basically a good idea: the idea and principle of national socialism had a huge potential for growth, it could have spread all over the world... and if Hitler's attempts to demilitarize and disarm the industrialized west had succeeded, his idea could have spread all over the world. The end result of Hitler's proposition of global non-violence on an international scale of disarmament: was the whole world laughing at him and ignoring him and continuing the international arms race of manufacturing more weapons of mass destruction. Hitler was the first human being to propose this idea: This fact has been glossed over as not important... while all the other assholes who came later: all the hypocrites who spout Hitler's original ideal solution but don't mean what they say are extolled as humanitarians while Hitler is tarred as a monster: Exposes how full of shit and how one-sided and prejudiced the Jewish media is against this one man. The fact is, Hitler's idea of National Socialism could have worked for not only Germany... it could have worked for the whole world!

The whole idea of allowing each ethnic race to work out its own conflicts and problems did work. How? Why?... Because as a punishment and discrimination and revenge for WW1, for a brief period of time from 1918 to 1945: Germany was financially culturally and physically isolated and ostracized from the rest of the world. Up until Germany broke out of its enforced national isolation: Germany had gone through many hardships and had come out of it stronger and healthier BECAUSE it suffered through hardship, while the rest of the world did not. Germany was forced to face the ultimate question of ethnic national survival: cooperate or die. Compete against each other and you will die: cooperate and you will live. Life or Death. Germans chose to cooperate with each other on a national scale out of ethnic necessity. In doing so, they won and for a few brief years: flourished... until Hitler and the Jews of the world plotted to bring Germany down in a second World War..

If Hitler's National Socialism had been adopted by every ethnic population in the world, the result would have been this:

The racist intolerant haters and killers and thugs and criminals and hatemongers would have gone extinct by killing each other off until they were all dead... while the cooperating gentle non-violent non-hating loving people would have survived by not killing each other, and flourished by helping each other instead of competing against each other.

In other words: each ethnic national society would have been forced to evolve or de-evolve based upon its own intrinsic virtues and vices, its own strengths and weaknesses: forced to either progress or regress: forced to advance or retreat, die or live. Each ethnic nation would not have the luxury of repeating its mistakes over and over and getting away with it. The Law of the fittest would weed out the sickest and weakest: and only the most intelligent and healthy of each ethnic culture would survive and prevail. And what is even more important: any ethnic race that is genetically-culturally-historically evil and negative would kill itself off and go totally extinct.

If Hitler had succeeded in deporting all Jews out of Europe into the island state of Madagascar they would have killed each other off and gone extinct. Why would they have done this? Because the Jewish race and culture are a parasitical culture that is designed to prey upon the rest of the human species like a bloodsucker on a fish or a lamprey on a sturgeon... Without any host to latch onto and suck dry: they would have been forced to latch onto each other and sucked each other dry and destroyed each other into oblivion: and the whole world would have watched this horror in fascinated revulsion as the true hidden

727

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six A: The Beginnings of civilization

728

madness of what is buried inside Jewish culture and bodies comes out and is exposed naked in its dying last screaming insane blind hatred of all Life and all Beauty and all Love.

This was the actual reason the Jewish Zionists declared war on Hitler and Germany because Hitler tried to deport all of them to the Isle of Madagascar. This is the entire hidden principle of Ethnic purity which is a clean and GOOD ideal which has been reversed now into the global filthy idea of international racial 'tolerance' which is not toleration at all: it is a filthy dirtying of every ethnic race on earth. It is a systemic way of the BEST cleanest humans being dirtied by the filthiest most diseased human scum on earth. WW1 and WW2 was orchestrated by international Jewry; it was fought to destroy and poison all ethnic racial purity and ethnic national autonomy in the world except their own filthy race of Zionist criminal gangsters.

The moral, ethical, and philosophical point which has never been made and has been buried under mountains of Jewish lies and propagandist shit is this: Hitler's ideal and principle and system of human society defined as National Socialism had only one flaw in it: 'the master race'. Take away this one flaw from Hitler's National Socialism, and National Socialism fits every nation on Earth and works just as well as it worked in Germany before the Jews manipulated the World into going to war against Germany and doing their fighting for them.

Just like all the other intelligent dangerous budding ideals and ideas of the 19th century which were poisoned and corrupted and twisted and reversed; the idea and ideal of National Socialism is so powerfully positive and dangerously capable of overturning the evils of the status quo; it is not allowed to even exist as a political party and is not tolerated anywhere in the civilized world today.

The fact of the matter and the point of WW2 and Hitler is this: The Basic idea of National Socialism is good and it works. Hitler proved it works. But the corruption of national socialism, turning ethnic nations into military dictatorships where one billionaire dictator 'nationalizes' the nation's entire economy and industry and absconds with the entire profits of that nation! That is not fucking national socialism! That is corrupt capitalist dictators stealing the national wealth from millions of poor people. Yet the fucking Jewish Capitalist media and press labels these corrupt capitalist pigs as being national socialists just because they use the fucking label of national socialism to steal their nation dry! That is like the Bolsheviks calling themselves communists: when it was they who destroyed all the communes and communal villages of Russia.

The point is this: the conventional western Jewish media propagandist shit crap of portraying Hitler's National Socialism as the most evil social system ever invented is a total propagandist lie. Take away the Nazi myth of the 'master race' from National Socialism, take away the military shit and the military uniforms and the mass hysteria and the Hitler cult: and the basic principles of National Socialism are the sanest most reasonable principles of nation building ever evolved by man. In fact National Socialism is the only intelligent way to live as peacefully possible. The utopian idiotic crap of an 100% non-violent world where there is no disagreement and no conflict and no war and no violence is a bullshit fantasy of slaves terrified of their master's brutality.

The fucking point is this: people who are brainwashed do not know how to separate the wheat from the chaff; they don't know how to take the best and leave the rest. Unintelligent people do not know how to sift out the crap and keep the good stuff. Throwing away the principles and idea of National Socialism just because Hitler was a pompous idiot who wore military uniforms that didn't fit him and made him look ridiculous is a superficial knee-jerk reaction of jerks who don't and can't think logically and critically and intelligently.

The fact that Hitler was an anti-Semite was also nothing special. Much of the world was anti-Semitic at that time; especially Europe. Even America and England refused asylum to displaced Jews after the war was over because their foreign policies had been anti-Semitic both before and during the war. Hitler's anti-Semitism was far more intelligent and specific; He singled out the international Jewish bankers, and the sects of Judaism that worship money and the Bolshevik thugs who called themselves communists but were actually not communists at all. He singled out the larcenous Jewish culture of greed and avarice as being evil and he was entirely correct. At first it was a political ploy to gain power, then once in power, suddenly and inexplicably... all his anti-Jewish rhetoric disappeared from his speeches.

Hitler saw correctly how insidious many aspects of Jewish culture is, and saw how cunningly it could successfully invade and corrupt other cultures and take them over. All the insights of his book 'Main Kampf' have been proven to be right. Since the writing of his book; Jewish culture has invaded and insidiously, cunningly taken over the western world, and the heart, the core of this cultural evil are now the Jewish banking institutions of Wall Street and London and the Jewish owned mass media.

Conventional history books fail to mention that the nation of Poland was an artificial nation which had only been created after WW1 by the Versailles treaty. Poland in Hitler's eyes, had no right to the lands of western Prussia... nor did the other artificially created nation states have any right to exist which the treaty of Versailles had created; like Czechoslovakia... which by all common sense should have been two nations: one the Czechs, and the other the Slovaks. This is what happens when political power mongers gain control of empires and join together in a secret cabal behind closed doors and begin slicing up the world according to their own personal agendas and drawing abstract lines on maps and acting as if the world is their own personal pie to be sliced up and divvied-up between them.

All the conventional rationalizations and justifications why England and France went to war against Germany are based upon the unquestioned sacredness of the Versailles treaty; when at the same time: all historians agree that it was the corrupt politics and policies and the insane re-drawing of national boundaries of the Versailles Treaty that were the root cause of WW2.

You can't have it both ways you fucking two-faced hypocrites. Either the Versailles treaty was a flawed unfair treaty, in which case it was not sacred and Hitler had every right to break it and retake the stolen lands of West Prussia and the corridor to the sea and the port of Danzig and England had no fucking business declaring war on Germany... or the treaty of Versailles was a sacred document which was both right and just and dealt with the winners and the losers of WW1 fairly and justly. Which is total bullshit. But that is precisely the moral and ethical basis upon which England and France justified and rationalized their declaring war upon Germany.

What most people completely miss is that it was France and England who instigated WW2; not Germany. It was France and England who declared war... not Germany. It was France and England who started the war: not Germany. The reason Hitler retook the stolen lands taken away by the Versailles treaty was because he did not believe that England or France would declare war, when he was only reclaiming the land of Germanic people stolen from Germany by the Versailles Treaty. It is a little trick of the Allied propaganda: calling western Prussia 'Poland', and giving that as the reason France and England declared war on Germany. The fact that Hitler reclaimed a little bit more than had been stolen from Germany is a moot point. He had done as much with Czechoslovakia, and nothing had happened. Hitler did not take all of Poland for himself. He could have, but he didn't. He just took the western half which had been under Prussia's rule for centuries before WW1.. He let Russia have the other half. A very generous agreement. The point is: Russia had no quarrel with that; so why did the other two members of the Triple entente become so enraged as to declare war on Germany and not on Russia? Russia was just as guilty of invading Poland as Germany was, so why didn't France and England declare war on Stalin's USSR? The list of hypocrisies and bullshit rationalizations and propaganda bullshit spewed by the western mass media trying to claim and explain and prove that the Allies were in the 'right' and Germany and Hitler was in the 'wrong' is easily exposed and debunked.

Hitler had just broken up their artificial alliance into shreds. Russia now had a nonaggression pact with Germany. The theory of encirclement which had been the entire rationale for this alliance was gone. Hitler had stolen a march on England and France and made sure Russia would not declare war on Germany. Yet the blustering asses in France and England still insisted on declaring war on Germany. And so again... it took the combined resources and manpower of the western nations and the resources and manpower of Asia to defeat one small central European Nation. The most unfair battle of David vs. Goliath ever orchestrated and played out... propagandized as the only 'just' war of that century with Goliath cast as the good guy and David as the 'bad guy'. The whole industrialized world against one small nation with a population of less than 70 million... You call that history? Vomit. Puke.

As long as Hitler gave speeches and did nothing else, everything went swimmingly. It was only when Hitler personally took over the command of the German Wehrmacht and actually began trying to do something himself that everything went to hell. His plan to invade Poland was a tactical disaster. His personal plan of invading Russia was also a disaster, lacking in all the necessary practical details which would have made it work. Like failing to supply the German army with winter clothes. The other person who made this same miscalculation was Napoleon. Hitler's army lost the war in the east because it had not been planned properly and because the most competent officers were removed from command for daring to disagree with Der Fuehrer. What defeated Hitler was his own megalomania; everyone who disagreed with him even slightly was ousted from power, not listened to, or ignored.

The German people had rejected the Weimar democracy for good reason...it was an utter failure. What people who live in democratic nations fail to understand is that Germany and Germans did not come from a democratic tradition. Their culture and history was one of obeying their King or lords for 1,000 years. Obeying authority was in their blood and in their whole culture. They wanted to be led by a strong leader who got things done: not by a bunch of bureaucrats who didn't know their ass from their elbow. The loss of their King left a huge gaping vacuum in their culture. Used to authoritarian rule for 1,000 year: it is not surprising at all that they rejected democracy...And even then, it took the Great Depression, and the complete collapse of their Govt, and the complete loss of confidence in their ruling class, before the Nazis gained enough seats in the German parliament to be a political force. What you need to understand is that Hitler was honest about getting rid of representational democracy; He openly stated his objectives and political beliefs long before he was voted into office: he wanted only one ruling party to control all of Germany and all other political parties were to be gotten rid of... The upper class either did not believe him, or thought they could keep him under control or feared him... But they reckoned without the will of the German people. The ordinary people wanted him to become the strong man of Germany: they wanted a dictator; because that was all they had ever known before the Great Depression and that economic disaster of the democratic experiment was a sharp lesson to them that told them democracy was not how Germany should be ruled.

They forgot one important historical lesson... 'Better the Devil you know than one you don't'. They did not know that Hitler really was not only a fanatical nationalist, a supremacist, a cunning populist, but that he was a megalomaniac whose plan to build up Germany into a war nation that would invade Europe and Russia was an overriding ambition which he kept secret from everyone but the Generals who wanted to re-arm Germany. The Generals thought they could use Hitler. Instead he used them by playing them against each other. The German people did not want to go to war. They were suckered into it. Hitler gained power as an avowed pacifist. Nobody dreamed that a WW1 corporal who had been wounded in battle would actually want to start another war. They didn't know that in private, he was a lazy indolent spoiled imbecile who did nothing for the German people except give speeches. They didn't know that the Nazi's were an illusion: all their organized rallies hid the total chaos of a small bunch of disorganized uneducated lower class thugs all at odds with each other, who had no idea of how to run or manage an entire nation.

China kept the nomads outside their borders and weakened them for centuries by playing them against each other. China spat upon nomads for thousands of years. But once Genghis Khan united the nomadic tribes. Once the nomads became more powerful as a single force, a single class, a single united society of equals. They became so powerful that they conquered half the known world and defeated great Empires as if they were cutting through butter. China was the last to fall simply because it was so huge, that Genghis Khan died before the conquest of China could be completed. The Mongols razed China's cities to the ground and forced the Chinese to grovel submissively at their feet. Any Chinese who did not bow at the approach of a mounted Mongol soldier instantly had their heads cut off. Historically, the Chinese paid for their disrespect of those they once thought to be beneath them. Now the entire Chinese Nation is a bunch of political cowards submitting to the West. Bowing submissively to political authority and not daring to raise their heads for fear of them being cut off.

The same thing happened in Germany after the 1st World War. All of Europe ganged up against Germany and forced it into an impoverished state; inflation exploded. Germany's paper money became so worthless that one day's pay of an average worker had to be carted home in a wheelbarrow. Workers starved to death not because there was no food, but because the currency was so worthless that you couldn't buy a loaf of bread with a wheelbarrow full of money. Germany became a single unified Nation of unified poor people by undergoing a unified, common, shared experience of poverty and hardship. This was the reason why Germany became so powerful so fast. This was the reason why Germany rebounded so fast. This is the crucial reason why Germans had pride and a national identity. They had gone through the same hardships together as an entire people. They triumphed over adversity and poverty as an entire Nation. Treated as a pariah nation by the other European nations and England, their response to become more Nationalistic than the any other Nation. If the other European Nations had not ganged up on Germany after the 1st World War, there never would have been a Great Depression and there never would have been a Hitler to use their national identity as a way of gaining power over them.

The reason Germany became so fervently nationalistic was because Germany was surrounded on all sides by enemies and was under the constant threat of attack. Their enemies were real: they were not figments of their imagination. World War One was still fresh in their minds; the whole world ganging up against them was not propaganda; it was real. The indemnities they were forced to pay, the world, the trade embargo strangling them to death was not a figment of their imagination; it was real, the slow starvation of the entire nation, the Great Depression was not a figment of their imagination; it was real. The more intensely Germany was ostracized from the rest of the world, the more intensely it was discriminated against, the more unfair the discrimination: the more intense the backlash, the more intensely proud they were to be Germans the more patriotic they became. With the whole world pitted against them, the more unemployed young men joined either the National Socialist party or the Communist party simply because there was nothing else to do except starve. With the whole nation in ruins and the entire younger generation jobless... political activism, joining a political party became the only way people could get enough food to stay alive. There is nothing inexplicable or surprising about the rise of the Nazi party. Western history likes to paint the rise of Hitler as an anomaly, as a freak of Nature, as something which should never be allowed to happen again. What they really mean is that they do not want to have an entire nation rise up and become politically active ever again and threaten to overthrow the established order of the Western banking cartel of the Bank of England and Rothschild et al.

If a gang of bullies manages to overpower a single strong person who is stronger than any of them individually, and then humiliates him and starves him nearly to death... Do you think that strong person once he gets healthy; might want to get revenge on the way he was unfairly treated, eh? Oh... you mean a gang of bullies who are human individuals is unfair... but a gang of Nations is not a gang of cowardly bullies? Huh? So personal ethics do not apply to National ethics? This is how people have been brainwashed. The Allies won: so of course they must be good. Even if it took most of the industrialized powers combining into a gang of international bullies to do it to beat up a single national bully who was stronger than any of them individually...

ALL national politics are evil...

The bigger the Nation, the more powerful it is, the bigger the bully, the more evil it is. Period
The Allies were bigger than the Germans: they were more evil: period.

All of Europe was responsible for the Nationalist Socialist movement that spawned Hitler. All of Europe created its own self-destruction. Europe was responsible for its own self-destruction. They got what they deserved. They should never have been bailed out by America. But it was too tempting for Roosevelt to step in, and gain all the glory, and oh, by the way... become the greatest industrialized powerhouse in the world. Cheaply. Almost instantly.

Germany re-invented its own culture overnight by Hitler reinventing Germany's mythic Teutonic past as a warrior Nation of a shared ancestry: a single race, a pure race, a race of heroes and conquerors who all have the same warrior culture. The other rich European cultures did not have this kind of invented knightly solidarity: they had history books that were slightly more honest than Hitler's history books. Germany's poverty during the Great Depression drew Germans more together as a Nation; more than they had ever been before. Hitler used this National pride that arose out of mass poverty and mass hardship; and manipulated it into feeding on his own brand of Germanic supremacy and racism by brainwashing the Germans and selling Racism as a form of Nationalism. He managed to convince Germans that the Germany Nation existed as an ethnic race of one homogeneous genetic strain of Germans when the opposite is true. Germany is a polyglot mixture of so many disparate ethnic-racial-ancestral origins and intermixing of different tribes and ethnic races: there is no such thing as German except their language. These small German-speaking states merging into one national identity was a recent result of industrialization and overpopulation merging into a mass consciousness of conformity.

Why did Germany go to War again after WW1? Revenge for losing WW1. They had barely risen out of 1,000 years of a Teutonic warrior culture. The Prussian military culture of the Junkers was a warrior culture. The Nazis found an answer to the idiocy of trench warfare by accident. The famous German Blitzkrieg was actually a strategy invented when Guiderion the tank commander disobeyed Hitler's direct command to stop after the initial successful penetration into France. His great victory was an accident brought about by a general in the field disobeying Hitler's specific command to stop. So much for the military genius of Hitler. Coordinated aerial attacks and motorized ground troops moving too fast to predict where they would hit or when was what made the invasion of France a success. Shock-attacks so brutal and fast they crumpled up whole nations in a few weeks. The energy backlash for their instigating these violent acts of aggression was the entire German Nation to be later bombed into a pulp and over-run and occupied by invading armies from both sides at once.

One reason why Germany went to War was because Hitler succeeded too well. He had solved Germany's pressing social problems so well that there was nothing left for him to solve. He wanted to enfold all the German-speaking people of Europe into a single Germanic nation. This was a perfectly understandable goal. It still is a perfectly understandable goal. One root reason for human conflict is the insanity of the abstract line, the insane notion of human beings defined by arbitrary abstract lines instead of by their natural ethnic cultural social connections and roots, geographical locations and natural boundaries. All of the treaties and horse trading practiced for thousands of years between rulers, arbitrarily re-drawing boundaries, trading and fighting over territory is the basic problem. Get rid of the insane idea of drawing arbitrary abstract lines of separation as national boundaries: get rid of the stupid idea of an arbitrary abstract line being more sacred than human life: and you get rid of not only any need for a Hitler, you get rid of civilization.

Hitler was the complete antithesis of German blonde health: just like FDR a degenerate cripple, who was the supreme antithesis of American youth and health. Just as Churchill was the supreme antithesis of English youth and health, just as Stalin was the supreme antithesis of Russian honesty and simpleness: they were all negative copies: reversed: black leading white: evil leading good into war and death: their leaders were the complete opposite of what the entire nation was and still the fucking idiots did not see what was in front of their nose. Hundreds of millions of young healthy people being led by and following the orders of the sickest most degenerate cripples and thugs and criminals alive when will people learn not to follow anyone who is sicker and more degenerate than they are?.

One thing which must be said of Hitler is that he was a consummate betrayer: His road to power was a consistent one of betrayals. He burned his bridges behind him and never looked back He betrayed everyone, and I mean everyone who helped him. When the Weimar Govt. sent him to spy on the doings of the National Socialist party, instead of spying on them he joined them and betrayed the government. He betrayed Bismarck. He betrayed the new German Republic, he betrayed his own National Socialist thugs he betrayed the rich German elite who backed him, he betrayed the German people, He betrayed every treaty he ever signed, he betrayed Chamberlain, he betrayed Mussolini, he betrayed his own SS, he even managed to betray Stalin the most cunning betrayer of them all in Europe. He even had the astrologer who had advised him and predicted his success killed. He betrayed the Hitler Youth, he betrayed Germany's future as the shining example of how much good an enlightened European culture of discipline and hardship and health and cooperation could achieve when they all work together and cooperate..

The fate of Mussolini should have been a lesson to the leaders of all Nations: who are arrogant and stupid and power-mad and greedy and full of hate: enough to go to War. If any leader does that: string them up quickly and cut off their testicles like they did with Mussolini's dead body. Then you will see very few leaders speaking about going to War against anybody. Once you make any leader personally responsible for any life lost because of their direct commands: you will have an end of the insane idea that millions of soldiers should die to protect the life of one leader. Once leaders learn that they can be killed the instant they become killers: no killers will try to become leaders. But what did the Americans do to the Japanese Emperor? They reinstated him... When he should have been strung up by his balls and shot like Mussolini was. Then the Japanese could finally get over their fucking mindless stupidity of worshipping Authority even more than the Germans.

Once you make going to war a personal crime so no leader can get away with it, there will be no more fucking Wars. All that has to be done is place one statute in the constitution of every Nation: Any leader declaring war on any other nation shall be instantly shot dead, and strung up naked by their genitals.

Who got into power in Germany during the 1930's? The worst thugs and gangsters in the entire Nation. Who were in power in England? The most venal, ossified, incompetent, stupid, landed gentry and nobility. Who was in power in America? Political bosses steeped in corruption, tied to the families of the super-rich Robber Barons. Roosevelt was an enlightened member of the Robber Baron millionaires. He turned slightly against his own kind, and tried to slightly level the imbalance between the rich and the poor with little or no effect until he was completely corrupted by evil and dragged America into a war it did not want to fight or be involved in by cunning filthy false-flag operation of economic warfare against Japan and the cunning aiding of Britain under the false-flag of false neutrality. What is amazing is after 60 years of hindsight and after the facts are now known: nobody is angry about how Roosevelt lied to the American masses and manipulated the entire fucking nation of Americans into war. Nobody labels Roosevelt as a filthy traitor of the American Nation and a betrayer of American cultural values and American Principles. Nobody calls this fucking wheelchair cripple by his right name: a fucking filthy rich scion of a robber baron corrupt class elite dynasty of a sick diseased family that was so evil and sick: this diseased man was stricken with polio as an adult.

It was the war effort: putting all Americans to working creating weapons of mass destruction, and going to war to fight and kill millions of total strangers who were not any threat to them and had no interest in attacking America at all. It was only the booming war economy that saved America from total economic and cultural collapse. After FDR's four terms in office. a law was passed so nobody could be president for more than two terms. The rich did not like their power being lessened by some unexpected politician who was even slightly trying to help poor people out of poverty. They might lose some of their sacred rights and exclusive privileges. The power bases of their oligarchic monopolies might be slightly weakened.

George Bush Sr. Went to war against Hussein because Hussein attacked Kuwait. History does not mention that Hussein asked James A. Baker, the U.S. Secretary of State if he could invade Kuwait, and Baker lied through their teeth and told him it was perfectly all right and the US would not interfere.. It was merely another entrapment of a dictator they wanted to get rid of. Using the same old: feigned 'they caught us by surprise', 'we didn't see it coming' routine when they knew about it all along. Many other small countries invaded their neighbors in that decade. Indonesia invaded East Tabor. China invaded Tibet. India invaded Pakistan. The entire war between Iraq, and Iran was funded on both sides by the U.S. Foreign policy decisions to weaken the mid-east. Was the crucial moral point of: who-attacked-who the real reason for the U.S. to suddenly become involved in saving one side against the other? No. It is merely a political excuse.

His son George Bush Jr. didn't wait for Hussein to attack first. He went to war against Saddam Hussein using the excuse that Hussein was hiding weapons of mass destruction. They never found any weapons of mass destruction after he took over nominal control of Iraq... so his oil buddies could move their pipelines through it and take control of the oil fields and get even richer quick... or so they thought. It became apparent to the whole world that Hussein's weapons of mass destruction never existed. But this was the excuse that Bush used successfully; to go to war. He sold it to the American public. And they bought it hook, line and sinker. Nobody else in the world bought it. But the rest of the world didn't matter to Bush Jr. All he needed was a majority in the congress and senate: the rest of the world didn't matter. The point is... whatever the excuse is to go to war. Whether it is: 'They attacked first!' Or ... 'They might attack first!' Or... 'They might have weapons that might make them attack first!' is irrelevant. All that matters is that it sells and people swallow this crap.

The Path of Splitness

The world now knows that Bush used an entirely false excuse to go to war against Iraq. Does anyone criticize him for it? Barely. Why is it not important that the leader of the most powerful nation on earth gave a completely false excuse to go to war... occupying a foreign country by mistake and killing how many civilians in the process? Why is that mistake not punished? Why is going to war on false premises not a criminal offense? Someone explain this to me. I don't understand. This is one way how history books brainwash people. They make it seem normal for Kings, and Dictators, and Presidents, and Prime Ministers: to go to War. They make it seem understandable, excusable and normal for Nations to go to war.... for any reason whatsoever. By repeating in history books...over, and over, endless Battles, Wars, and all the Kings, and the Dictators, and the Presidents who instigated them... and their transparently fraudulent excuses for waging war. Repeating these historical 'facts' like sacred mantras so people memorize them until it becomes a normal way of thinking. .

People read history books and assume that it is perfectly okay and normal for Nations and Kings to send millions of people to war and kill millions of people and destroy the Earth and all of its living things... But. It is not okay for you personally to go to War against any King or leader or government that does this. You don't have the necessary bullshit Authority to do so. No individual is allowed that right. Only leaders; who never go near the front lines are allowed that right. Only kings, emperors, presidents, dictators, rulers and generals are allowed to order other people to kill other people. leaders, religions, nations, cultures, everything except a human individual has the right to kill humans. Huh? Talk about an effective way to destroy all personal authority of the individual. This means you as a mere tiny individual have no right to get mad, or violent... only your king does. Only your nation does... Then if they get mad... then they are allowed to go to was and kill people... but you? You are only an individual human being. You have no right to act on your beliefs. Only a nation, a president has that right... someone explain this.

If your leader wants to go to war against another leader... he gets you to kill the soldiers and civilians of that other leader's Nation for him. A leader is too important to risk their life? Says who? Is it better that millions of people should die rather than one ruler die? Why? And the masses are actually stupid enough to agree to this. And willingly go out and get themselves killed en masse for a ruler, or a Nation, or a Religion, or a Cause. And if innocent people who have nothing to do with these leader's conflicts just happen to be killed then it is merely an unfortunate case of collateral damage.

So after all the cities are bombed, and all the millions of innocent civilians are killed, and all the millions of soldiers are dead.... Then one leader, gets to topple another leader... What for? And if one leader wins then of course... they were right and good. And if the leader who loses of course they were wrong and evil. And all the millions of people who were stupid enough to believe-in that losing leader, and fought for him, and died for him are also evil... or misled, or just plain stupid. But once they renounce their support of that evil leader who committed the sin of losing: they suddenly are not evil anymore... and all of their crimes, and all the people they killed are automatically forgotten as if they never happened. So as long as you fight for a ruler... regardless if they win or lose... as long as you are a soldier in the military... it's okay to kill other people. But if you try to do that as an individual you are a horrible filthy murderer... bullshit.

Who gives rulers the legal right to kill other people? Is it because of one leader's superior heritage? Was he born a leader? Was he born a King? Or was he born rich? Was he born with authority..? Or did he steal it from others? Or did others give him this authority without him ever earning it? In that case: who is guiltier of killing people? The rulers who order it, or the idiots who give them the authority to do it, and carry out the orders without thinking like mindless robots? What denotes a superior authority? How can you tell if a person has this superior authority? Their superior intelligence or their superior stupidity? Their superior army? Their superior bombs? Their superior killing implements?

Why are only Nations and governments, and courts allowed to kill people legally? Why can a King, or one President, or one anonymous Nation; kill millions of people legally? But if one powerless individual does it... they are a vile inhuman murderer. Is this kind of legality supposed to be mindlessly obeyed by 7 billion people, just so we can kill each other better as mindless idiots en masse obeying these 'leaders'? Someone explain this to me... I don't understand.

Kings and Presidents are allowed to kill hundreds, thousands, millions of people. Kings and presidents of governments and Nations are not considered to be murderers. A single individual, a person who kills one person: is considered to be a murderer. Only individual people without power are considered to be murderers. Only poor people are murderers. Those who do not have big armies are murderers. Only those armies who lose wars are evil. Huh? Someone explain this. Why are individuals not allowed to do what leaders are allowed to do?

The point is... that whatever you take for granted: you become a victim-of. As human societies grew in size and number, people took for granted that there had to be leaders. As their power and authority grew: they manipulated other people more and more like disposable tools... to be used once, killed and thrown away, as dead corpses. Soldiers, who served their purpose. Or served their country, or served their kingdom, or served their King, or served their Lord, or served their God, or served their cause... People took for granted that these leaders knew what they were doing. They took their authority for granted. They took their leaders right to authority for granted. But none of this is normal. None of this is necessary. It was all invented, created out of pure human imagination. Just like the Divine Right of Kings was invented, and believed-in, and worshipped, for thousands of years. Only now we no longer call them Divine, or Kings, we call them Presidents and Dictators, and leaders and rulers.

All people have to do is not give away their own authority, and their own control over themselves and there will be no armies: no leaders: no wars: no killing: and no mass butchery. This is one reason why the development of all human normality and human reality is evil, and sick. This is what happens when you do not wonder about things. This is what happens when humans do not question Authority for ten thousand years.

A ruler is just another human being: kill the fucker and save yourself millions of unnecessary human deaths. It's called being economical and intelligent.

What if every human on the face of this Earth had a sacred unalienable right to go to war against any evil they perceive that needs to be fought against? What if there were not billions of consumer-cowards; but Billions of angry educated, enlightened people, who had the courage to stand up against every single injustice, and unfairness they saw around them? So not one human paid one cent of tax to anyone else? So not one human agreed to pay any parking ticket, any fee, any tax whatsoever? So not one person went to war for someone else's rationalized excuse? What would happen then?

However you must be very careful about violent energy balances. Striking the first blow only works when you are positive. It only works when you are striking against evil, or an evil that is more evil than you are. Striking the first blow never works when you are negative. The first negative person to strike the first blow always loses. The first negative nation to strike the first blow always loses. Look what happened to Japan in the Second World War. It began its war against the United States by striking the first blow. Look how that war ended. The Americans did not do a sneak attack against the Japanese... like the Japanese had done to them. Instead... they told the Japanese they were going to attack them. And they told them exactly where they were going to do it, and when... and they told the Japanese ahead of time... that if they did not surrender unconditionally they were going to level the entire islands of Japan into radioactive dust, and destroy them completely...

Today... so far... no sane industrialized Nation dares to go to war against another industrialized Nation that has a nuclear capability of launching missiles carrying atomic bombs. What are nuclear missiles? They are negative nuclear death. Nuclear explosions separates energy at such a root level that it destroys the root energy of Life. They are machine penises with a poisonous destructive ability to orgasm death instead of Life. Out of their exploding heads comes death: not life. There are too many atomic bombs. Too many missiles. Even the rich can be destroyed in this kind of destructive insanity. It is obvious that destructive brute force is still the basis of today's civilized world. It is obvious that Europe has not changed its morality or ethics for at least two thousand years. Has it ever been otherwise? Before the Romans or the Greeks? Yes...When there were no cities to begin with. When there were no armies and no Kings to begin with. When there was no accumulation of human population to begin with. Overpopulation remains the root of all human problems and this root problem is being ignored by everyone.

How were the first Castles invented? Why were they invented? The first Castles in Europe were called Keeps. They were built by an entire communities; cooperatively. As a place where they could store or 'keep' their food and wealth in relative safety, so robbers would not steal it. Where do you think the idea for modern banks came from? Originally people did not live in their keeps. They were simply walled building built so other communities could not sneak in at night and steal their goods, or food, or livestock.

These Keeps became specialized for holding or keeping dead things inside them. They were built to exclusively keep wealth, food, goods, and things that were not alive that were not alive. They were built to accumulate dead things inside them. The living people and the living animals: lived in other buildings called: 'bairns'. But the raiding, stealing, and robbing that European communities practiced for 1,000 years got so bad that many of these communities committed all of their resources to robbing. Chiefly, humans robbed each other because it was the easiest way to get rich fast. Instead of making their own wealth by working and growing things and animal husbandry: they went around stealing, killing, robbing, and raping the wealth of other communities. That forced other communities to build even stronger, bigger, higher keeps, to keep their wealth in, so a quick raid by marauding robbers would not wipe them out and leave them impoverished and destitute.

The robbers retaliated by building their own even bigger... higher. So when the robbed communities chased them back to their keep... these keeps were so massive; that the robbers could fight off the ones they robbed and laugh at them. Safely. Because they spent more time building huge stonewalled keeps, than living, or growing their own food. This enabled them to keep their stolen wealth from being taken back. This forced the worst robbers to live inside these keeps. They rotted inside them. They were afraid to come out, because they knew if they did: the people they had robbed would kill them. The robber culture communities began building huge stone keeps. As stone prisons for themselves. To live inside all of their lives. Because the only time they came out; was to raid and attack other communities and then run back inside their safe stone castles... or keeps. Until eventually; these robber communities became the communities that had amassed most of the wealth, most of the killing implements... and could force their surrounding communities into a permanent state of submissive bondage. By taxing them, and systematically sucking their wealth out of them. Without even having to go to war. Without even having to raid them. They had found an even safer form of robbing called legalized taxation. Or serfdom... or blackmail, or military oppression, or a class system that forced the poor to work for the rich. If any community or peasant refused to pay their tax... they were burned out, and all their wealth taken, and killed, and raped, and sold into slavery and bondage.

The word keep comes from the most selfish tradition of keeping ill-gotten gains. Where do you think the phrase 'finders, keepers: losers, weepers' comes from? From successful acts of robbery. From getting away with murder. Until it became a legalized right practiced by the most powerful armed thugs: Possession is 9/10ths of the Law. All the castles in Europe were once strongholds of military elites who kept their hoarded wealth inside these Keeps which were later called castles.

Who were all these ruling elite for thousands of years? They were the worst/best professional killers in the land. They were the worst inhuman scum. We humans have been ruled by the most brutalized, most unfeeling most selfish liars, cowards, deceivers, and killers for at least ten thousand years. All these Kings, and Barons and nobles were originally nothing more than professional killers. That was their main occupation, their main profession, their main calling, their main career and their main form of livelihood.

Every child born today: inherits 12,000 years of killing; as their historical legacy of how; and why they came into this World. But since this is an unpleasant truth, and nobody wants to uncover the actual truth of their own personal past. The personal history each generation is carefully whitewashed and kept secret from the next generation of innocent children, fed fairy tales and lies.. so living elders do not have to suffer their outrage and disgust when they find out the truth. Only when they are safely dead; and cannot be brought before tribunals and courts does any unpleasant truth leak out. Then a few paltry details are unearthed, pooh-poohed, ignored and re-buried. These few details do not show the massive corruption, the hate, the fear and the cruelty that actually happened. And since it happened in the past... hey! That does not concern you or me. It didn't happen to me. We can't put dead people on trial for murder or bribery. So let's forget about it and pretend it wasn't important. It will never happen again. Why haul up the dirt of our past? Because it will happen again, and it is happening now: that's why.

'Oh, back then it was normal. It was normal to starve your peasants to death every year. It was normal to cut off the hands of starving peasants who were caught stealing bread. It was normal for Timur the Limper to massacre all the men, women and children in all the cities and towns he conquered. It was normal for courtesans to poison each other and their rulers every chance they got. It was normal for Roman soldiers to tie the legs of a woman together giving birth and throw her into the river so she drowned to death at the same time she died in childbirth from not being able to eject the fetus that was dying inside her in agony. It was normal.

There is no such thing as normality. There are only insane humans who have been raised and brainwashed to brainwash their babies into becoming inhuman monsters who commit unspeakable crimes and sins like their parents did.

The Path of Splittness

Chapter Six A: The Beginnings of civilization

What is it that history books teach? Who killed whom. And when, and where they killed them. Who won, and who lost. The grisly details of the atrocities the winners committed; and the absence of any accounts of their victims the losers that might put a better perspective on why it happened and how.

What happens when in rare instances: historical accounts try to show both sides of the story? Almost nothing. The main interest of history is still in finding out who won... and then rooting for them. With readers vicariously triumphing along with the winners. As they safely read of events that they would run from screaming in fear if it ever happened to them in person.

The entire sports media culture is based on pure winning and losing. Now people do not even bother to watch the games. They just listen in the evening to hear a list of who lost and who won. And this is called sports on TV. You mean if you are lucky; you can make millions of dollars, by just reeling off each night the list of winners and losers on TV? Gee... I wonder where Darwin got his ideas for his book; 'The Survival of the Species' from.

Try to draw a historical conclusion, try to make a historical comparison and apply it to the present. Some people may agree with you. Does it change anything? No. History is supposed to be used only by passive observers... never by anyone actually in power. Bring history into any argument, and it is discounted simply because it is not happening now... it is not a crisis now. Learn from history? Nobody has written anything to learn about in history books. Because none of human history is fully understood. There are no full, open, understandable accounts in history. So: if it is that unreliable: then why even use it? Because anyone can learn from history how not to live. What not to do. You cannot find the answer to problems of the present in the past. You cannot learn how to live in the present from history books. History is a tool that is 100% negative. But... that in itself is valuable. If everything in the past was done wrongly, for the wrong reasons. Then at least we can find out what not to do. At least we can learn what not to do.

Does civilization justify human existence?
Does civilization justify your personal existence?

What is the actual history of civilization?... Take all the history books in the world, and sort them out by categories. Then weigh each category and find out... ton-for ton... what subjects are written about the most. And you will not be surprised to find that most of history deals with what humans made, or make... and the tools they used to make them with. We are fascinated by histories of: Cars, Skyscrapers, Buildings, Cities, Tables, Chairs, Machines, Highways, Jewelry, Antiques, Ancient Tools, Paintings, and Sculptures... we call these things artifacts... Boats, Planes, Guns, Bombs, Artillery, Warships, Armor, Weapons Galore... new technologies designed to kill more people better and faster, and more safely and at a greater distance. That is what historians spend most of their time writing about. Not human lives. Only how millions of human lives were manipulated, killed, starved, oppressed, ruled, taxed, and robbed, by a small cast of manipulators. The millions of women who were raped in the process are conveniently left out. History merely is a manipulation about how humans manipulated things. Not about actual humans and how they actually lived and what they actually did. History is supposed to give you an intelligent overview of the past. And it is supposed to do it using these basic aspects:

Experience
Comparison
Evaluation
Perspective } Equals a better Understanding

The best way to develop your own humanity is to throw away all human cultures as worthless value-systems. And keep only what is universally humane. That way you will not waste half of your life sifting through the twisted distortions and interpretations of any civilized culture. Or waste your time comparing hundreds of different poisoned, corrupted cultures to each other: trying to find the few, tiny aspects in each one, which are not completely corrupted.

However... if all that you are, is your culture. If you have never thought things out for yourself, or tried things for yourself. If you live all your life; conforming to what other people tell you to do. If your culture is where you originally got all of your ideas of how to feel, and how act, and how to think. Then of course the idea of throwing away your own sacred, precious cultural identity is unthinkable. Simply because you have nothing else to replace it with. Why? Because your cultural identity is nothing else but a carbon copy of a preserved dead memory of the past. If you want to find your own individual humanity, your own, true, human identity... that means you must begin asking yourself root questions about yourself; and not copy other people. Who are you? What are you? Why are you? How? When? Where? Are you Jewish? A father? A friend? A businessman? A voter? An American? A husband? A worker? Or a human?... Or are you simply a genetic human; with a huge set of artificial civilized distinctions and differences that are mostly meaningless? What defines you? What do you believe in? What do you accept and what do you reject?

Why did the crew on the H.M.S. Bounty mutiny? Historians poring over the logs and records, and interviewing as many survivors as they could were baffled. During that time, its Captain Bligh was more progressively humane, smarter, and a better Sea Captain than most of the Sea Captains of his entire era. Yet his crew grew ever-more restless as time passed. During their return to England from the Pacific they finally exploded into mutiny.

Captain Bligh went even farther than supplanting meat with breadfruit. He replaced their daily bread with breadfruit also. In fact; breadfruit became their only staple on their return home. And what's more, the sailors living on the islands were taught to eat it raw... and began liking it. The cuttings of breadfruit trees Bligh was bringing back; were a continual source of fresh fruit every day. Picked straight off the trees on board, and eaten right away; the Bounty was indeed a bounteous ship. She was filled with living trees that produced fresh fruit every day.

Oh. You mean the fact that she was named the Bounty years before she ever made that fateful voyage; is in some way connected to the fact that breadfruit could have revolutionized the food industry in England? His entire venture though called scientific, was actually a business venture. The only trouble was that they found that breadfruit trees were too easy to grow. The fruit did not need any processing: it was too easy to eat. Nobody could find a way to make a profit from it. It could easily have solved the malnutrition problems of all Industrialized England. And saved other Nations the cost and bother of growing, harvesting, transporting, and processing, and packing, and selling food for their masses.

The investors did not even consider the idea of their own masses never having to worry about starvation. Besides, it would have also destroyed all the elite classes' power base. The only way the English elite could tell themselves apart from the lower classes was by not starving. The culture of poverty equated with starvation had to be maintained: in order for the Elite to maintain their own identity. Otherwise if the lower classes did not need them to eat: then the lower classes could have told them all to go to hell. And the sacred nobles, and kings and lords would have disappeared from all human existence.

In that day, and in that culture: this idea was unthinkable. Solve world hunger at the expense of three power groups: Government, Business and Religion? Now we wouldn't want that now... would we? So the project was a flub. Nobody bought the breadfruit; nobody grew it. Nobody ate it except a few slaves in the West Indies. Instead; the English World was transfixed by the unbelievable tale of an entire crew sending its captain packing off in a small craft and leaving him to fend for himself in the middle of the Pacific Ocean. Fuck poor people; preserve the status quo of the powerful institutions.

The voyage of the Bounty to the Pacific Islands was already unorthodox in the small amount of meat they ate. But the long period of staying on those islands acclimated the sailors to eating fresh food, instead of processed preserved food. During their return voyage their diet consisted of almost 100% fresh fruit every day. They drank less water. They needed less salt. They didn't even miss the ruined pork that had been rotting inside the ship for over a year. The crew itself complained about Bligh not feeding them properly. They became too healthy. They had too much energy. They became used to being treated too nicely by the Islanders. They became too human... Now we can't have that, can we? After the crew Mutinied and stole the entire ship, they knew they would be hunted down to the Ends of the Earth for their unforgivable sin of defying the absolute power of a British naval sea captain. The mutineers searched for an island where they thought the British Navy would never find them. Fifteen years later: a ship chanced upon that island. Where only some survivors and their children had managed to survive. They had gone back to a full meat diet. And as a result of killing animals, and eating meat: they had experienced more strife and hate and killing in their own tiny human community than if they had lived in a huge city full of lawless violence and crime... Because they couldn't get away from each other... they could not conveniently avoid, or deflect, or run away from their actual disagreements, their actual hatreds and their actual violent behavior. They could not get escape their own upbringings. They could not get away from the past. They couldn't get away with anything. The huge culture clash of female Pacific Islanders, and English men in itself was a huge rotten mess.

That island still exists today; it is called Pitcairn Island. It was discovered by an English sea captain named Pitcairn. And that English energy drew Christian to the only island in that area that had been formerly visited and explored by another Englishman before him. It was the energy of the English to admire the beauty of unspoiled Nature, while at the same time thinking of ways to despoil it. It was the same energy of the human urge to despoil their first paradise. The same dynamic of the first Biblical human to despoil his own family with greed and envy. Because Christian was envious of Bligh. It was the energy-dynamic of the stone Cairns of the Scot Highlanders and the Pitts of the English lowlanders... re-played all over again. An Island that pitted Cain against Able in a religious hate that exists still on that island to this day. Turning their own undespoiled Paradise of pure Nature: into a Human hell on earth. But where was Able? The most able-bodied English seaman ever to have been born. He was on the other side of the world: standing to be judged in a court martial for the crime of losing his ship.

The human subconscious reversed the meanings of the original story of Cain and Abel. Instead of Cain standing trial and finding excuses to get away with his crimes: it was Abel, the most able-bodied seaman in the English Navy who was forced to make excuses for losing his ship. So, the name of the island is both a Pit, and a Cairn. A hole dug by humans to hide in. And a bunch of rocks piled up by humans. The root intention of the voyage was to save money by feeding slaves breadfruit that cost nothing to grow instead of expensive bread that had to be laboriously harvested, crushed, milled and baked and rotted if not eaten right away. It ended in that ship being lost in the pit of the Pacific Ocean. A story of pointless greed, and misdirected good intentions: all poisoned by their own past. Poisoned by the past history of the entire human race. One brother being idolized in England, while the other hid in the deepest ocean-hole ever dug. A complete reversal of the truth. The Christian as the criminal, and the Able-bodied English sea captain as the hero. Without anyone being killed. Because Christian did not kill Bligh. He simply ostracized him from his own ship. And for that crime, he himself was ostracized from the entire British Empire, which at that time: was nearly half of the known civilized world.

What if Christian had prevented his people from bringing pigs and domesticated animals onto the island? What if they had been forced to become vegetarians and eat breadfruit? Then they would have been the first healthy vegetarian community ever to succeed without being corrupted by an outer civilization. Then there would have been the first social experiment to prove that humans can indeed change how they live and thrive, and become healthier. This is only a tiny glimpse of what history hides and lies about.

The European sailors who first came to the Pacific Islands, were so corrupt that they did not even recognize the happiness, or the healthiness, or the love, or the generosity of these Islanders when it was offered them. They spurned all of it: as being the evil spawn of the devil himself. The Islanders welcomed the Europeans happily in their small boats. The Europeans set about cheating them, stealing from them, feeding gluttonously off their generosity, using them and raping their daughters into the bargain. When the Islanders mildly protested: the Europeans became outraged, accused the Islanders of being evil and sick... and shot them down with their guns.

To strip History naked of all its lies and see not the myths but perceive the ugly stark raw truth is not easy simply because unless you search for the actual true facts are hidden, covered up, buried, reversed, changed, edited out, censored, made taboo. For most of my life I admired and believed in many of the myths of the American West... the myths of the great early European explorers, the myth of the great pioneer, the mountain man, the myth of the great Indian fighter, the myth of the noble savage, the myth of the American cowboy, the myth of the great gunfighter, the myth of the building the great railroads, the myths of the great empire builders of the American and Canadian West, the myths of the opening of the American West, the myths of the great cattle drives, the myths of the great American settlers, the myths of the great American rancher, the myths of the first wagon trains, the first settlers to cross the plains and the Rockies to end up in Oregon or California or god knows where... the myths of the great American Outlaws.... Then I stopped eating meat and became a vegetarian, then I stopped reading fiction and began watching documentaries and began reading some historical facts... Then I re-read the same books I had read as a young boy over again; the books of fiction I had once loved, written by Edgar Rice Burroughs and Zane Grey and Max Brand and many more.

What I learned was that all the fiction and the supposed factual history has almost nothing to do with the actual historical truth; in fact the books were a complete reversal of the factual truth. What I learned was this: the greater the myth; the bigger the lie. The louder the cry, the bigger the lie, the bigger the cover-up. Every hero, every myth, every icon I had swallowed and read about, all of them were the complete opposite of what they were portrayed as in history and fiction without exception. There are no exceptions to this hoodwinking of the public. Instead what I learned was that the entire history of Europeans colonizing the New world, all of its greatest heroes and icons and myths, the entire march of Western civilization into the New World from 1500 to 2011 can be simplified into a nutshell, and when added to the rest of the history of the Human Species and it all fits perfectly, with no exceptions. All the glory of human history is the exact opposite of glory.... Every icon and hero and myth is based upon one common theme: mass death. Mass killing. Mass butchery... horror, ugliness, destruction, the improvement of mass death, the improvement of mass killing, the improvement of mass butchery: an onward march of mechanized horror to its logical conclusion: the parasite tool, the machine taking control of humans: industrial civilization: a mechanized monster of mass death and mass destruction controlling the living creatures who control the machines.

The first order of business in the plan of total mass destruction was to destroy and kill the entire virgin North American Forest which had been untouched by man for over 12,000 years: 1,000's of square miles of hardwood trees, stretching up over 200 ft. tall, massive huge trees 100's of years old, from Maine to Minnesota to the plains of America. How did they accomplish this? Simple. Make ashes more valuable than living trees. That's right: cutting down one elm tree and burning the scraps and branches of that one dead tree gave the pioneers enough potash to buy 2 more acres of land. Tempt land hungry peasants from Europe who had never owned anything for 100's of years and sell them land on credit, then get them to buy and destroy more land. Greed. Profit. Status. Ownership. The arrogance of insane humans believing they have the right to destroy everything they 'own'. The more trees they cut down and burn: the more potash they can sell to buy more acres of land, more living trees to cut down and kill: A vicious cycle of systematically spreading death and destruction. "Ashes to ashes. Dust to Dust." The whole colonial economy was based upon the ashes of death. They used these ashes of death in everything they used: they washed themselves with it, they made gunpowder from it, they used the gunpowder to kill each other with it, and they killed all the innocent, free wild creatures of the forest who had never harmed them with it. Individually... by hand... one-by-one... these harmers of the living earth cut down the impenetrable huge ancient clean beautiful diversified forests: and never noticed the incredible beauty they destroyed and never noticed the ugliness they created to replace that Natural Wonder which is now gone forever. These harmers of the land called themselves farmers; not harmers. They were not farmers: they were harmers. They destroyed an entire continental ecosystem and tried to raise crops in the soil of an eco-system that was designed to raise trees. All they did was harm the earth. They ripped it up until it was bleeding, and sowed alien domesticated plants...only to rip them up and kill them en masse also... until the soil died of exhaustion and nothing grew from the destroyed earth, and they moved on to another plot of land where they began again by killing in a few months or years, what took thousands of years to grow. They set up shop as mass murdering scum: killing everything they could en masse. These were the glorified fucking 'pioneers' the stealers of land from people who had lived there for thousands of years and had no right to sell what they did not own. Can you imagine valuing the ashes of a living creature more than their living bodies?! and burning them just to make a profit to buy more of them to burn so create more devastation? Cutting thousand year-old trees for the ashes they could produce. Unable to use the lumber because the dead trees were too huge to cut up and move. The unspeakable waste. The mindless waste of it all is mind numbing. Words cannot describe this level of destructive insanity. The entire economy of these European harmers were based upon death: valuing death over life, valuing the ashes of dead trees over living trees: valuing destruction and death over Life and growth. Perceiving of the Indians already living there as the enemy: instead of these harmers of the land and invaders into the land of the natives living there; the invaders being the good guy/protagonist and the people being invaded being the bad guy/enemy is another reversal of the truth which myths and history spew forth..

The myth of the Mountain man... the great fur trappers... what is this based upon?

It is based upon the idea.... the goal.... of killing and skinning every fur-bearing animal in North America until there are no more wild animals left: until North America becomes a domesticated copy of Europe with imported European animals and all of its native species made extinct. Leaving their bleeding dead bodies to rot. Not killing them to eat. The mindless waste of it. The idea...of corrupting all the native people of North America!... to become running dogs of these alien monsters and aid them...by beginning to kill all fur bearing animals en-masse all over North America. Destroying natural habitats and eco-systems which had been there for thousands of years... There were too many wild animals living free... in clean unpolluted environments.... Too many to kill and eat... So forget killing them for their meat: just kill them for their fur and leave their skinned dead, bloody bodies to rot. The idea.. that trapping a wild animal using steel traps and snares is something that could be made into something romantic! The *idea...*of an animal caught in a trap... slowly freezing to death, taking days to die... or chewing off the foot caught in the trap in order to get free... to live as a cripple and slowly starve because of it... That this is the most noble and honorable profession glorified by all history books. That this should be glorified, admired, written of, praised. Kill all the wild animals. Civilized Europeans hate Nature, they hate freedom, they hate wild free spirits. Kill them all. Kill all freedom.

The Path of Splitness

744

Then comes the next myth: the great American Cowboy...

What is this myth based upon? It is based upon the exact same idea and goal as the Mountain man and the fur trappers of earlier times: to wit: destruction of unspoiled Nature; mass death; mass butchery. Raising animals only for one purpose: to kill as many of them as possible in the greatest numbers as possible. Not to love them or know them or play with them or have fun with them. The anonymous driving of dumbed-down domesticated cattle to market for the purpose of mass slaughter... What a romantic idea. I bet the Nazi guards at Auschwitz driving all the human cattle to be slaughtered were romantic heroes too. Why were these 'cowboys' driving masses of dumb cattle to be slaughtered?... Because the species of mass murderers called Homo Sapiens had managed to kill off the most numerous herds of American Bison which once had roamed all over the continent of North America in the millions upon millions, entire seas, oceans of bison... killed off: skinned, slaughtered for nothing: just the mindless drive to kill everything alive. Killing them off in a few years. Millions and millions of free-roaming bison killed and butchered and skinned for no reason whatsoever. And the idea of replacing this natural species that was specifically designed to thrive on the North America plains and forests and specifically designed to help Nature create more life and more living habitats for many, many other creatures great and small... with dumb, stupid domesticated overgrazers who turned the plains of America into a dustbowl and could not survive the North American winters and were easy prey for wolves and needed constant attention by their owners to even survive... The march of civilized progress. The goal: destroy all freedom. Destroy everything. Fence in all wild rangeland. Barbed wire. Abstract ownership of land, free land. Greed. Money. Destroy all the Natural beauty of North America. Destroy all natural diversity. Replace the beauty of Nature with identical boring patches of razed earth: destroy the earth: destroy the soil, destroy all the natural plants and trees... Majestic Trees 500 years old: tall giants that took 500 years to grow: cut down in a day. Whole forests cut down and destroyed! Entire species gone extinct. The plains of North America dug up and despoiled. Holes dug into the ground for coal, metals, whole mountainsides despoiled... all the cougars and wolves and foxes and marmots and deer and elk and moose and thousands of smaller creatures killed off and for what? Why? More killing, more destruction... on and on until there is nothing left to kill except each other... the civil war of America, World War One, World War Two: what sense or purpose is there in all this mass butchery? None whatsoever except a species gone out of control, mindlessly killing itself as it kills everything around it.

The American natives were just as culpable as the white invaders: they had no right to sell them their land because they never owned it. They did not even have the concept of land ownership. For thousands of years, the tribes fought and raided and hated each other: and the second any of them suffered a decisive loss: they just picked up and moved somewhere else and began feuding with new neighbors. The point I am making is this: the American Indian did not give a flying fuck about the land they lived on: they used land as hunting territory: unoccupied miles of unspoiled Nature: as callously and brutally as possible. Leaving an ancestral hunting ground because they had been kicked off by a stronger more warlike tribe reveals the fact that none of them were willing to die for their homelands, and none of them gave a shit about the land they lived in except as places to use and kill in. Giving away thousands of acres of land for a few beads and trinkets and muskets was their universal crime against the land they lived on and against their own cultural heritage and cultural ethics and morals. Because of the universal cowardice and greed of the red man: they were nickel-and-dimed to death. They were pushed out of every hunting ground they used because they were not willing to fight for that land and they did not give a shit about the Natural paradise they lived in; so don't give me any crap about the noble savage. The only thing that can be said about the red man's culture is that compared to the whit man's culture, is the white man's culture was a thousand times worse than the red man's culture.

But I am getting ahead of myself... How quickly did the industrialization of the White man destroy an entire continent; the discovery of oil fields... the invention and creation of something so horrendous which never existed before called industrial pollution: huge Bessemer furnaces belching fire and smoke, huge coal pits ripped open so the streams could be poisoned with heavy metals, dammed rivers and lakes, factories... the pits of hell, the slaughterhouses of Chicago... the millions and millions of domesticated enslaved cows, pigs, sheep, horses slaughtered and butchered... onward and upward! For what? Why? What is the goal?

Silly...overpopulation of the earth by human drones of course
A bacterial culture feeding and spreading like a cancer killing its host.
As it goes into a feeding frenzy. Everything it touches it destroys and kills.

We must create such a surplus of food so that the human species fucks itself from 500 million in the 1500's to one billion by 1800's, to 7 billion by 2012 in order to create an excess of mindless blobs called consumers, identical units with no purpose for their existence except to consume manufactured crap. The Mindless accumulation of human units, the mindless accumulation of money... what for? Destroy all beauty;; destroy beauty and create ugliness, create horror, create death...why? What for?

The point is, by glorifying the mighty treekillers called lumberjacks like the mythical Paul Bunyan. By glorifying the mass killing of animals. By glorifying the raising of animals for mass slaughter... these myths reverse the truth. How come nobody glorifies the Chicago slaughterhouses, eh? All the wonderful heroes of the Western plains: all the great ranchers and cowboys are not nearly as romantic as the men who actually slit the throats of all millions of animal in the slaughterhouses of Chicago, and cut off their heads and disemboweled their guts and butcher their dead bodies.... It's the slaughterhouse butchers who should be glorified; not the pansies who bring them the cattle and hogs to be killed and butchered... How come nobody glorifies the hog drivers or sheepherders, eh? Such a fucking two-faced hypocrisy is built into our myths and our modern consumer society it's disgusting. Romans were openly honest in enjoying the spectacles of mass slaughter... they liked to see the spilling of blood. Yet the new industrialized age of weak little fucking hypocrites don't want to know or see where their meat comes from: they don't want to see the squealing horror of animals hanging upside down by one foot on a moving chain while their throats are slit and their lifeblood runs out of their bodies as they scream and scream in pain and terror and fear.... Nobody glorifies the butchers who do the hard dirty work... why is that, eh? Nobody glorifies the lumber mills where they cut up all the dead tree into planks, nobody glorifies the factory workers who turn pulpwood into paper. Why doesn't Western society glorify its factory workers, eh? Could it be because these workers were dehumanized insane impoverished starving desperate scum? The USSR tried to glorify its industrial workers... and look what happened to its industrial might:

The Path of Splittness

746

The point is... the myths, the archetype heroes: the trapper, the explorer, the rancher, the cowboy, the lumberjack the railroads are all just forms of improved mass slaughter and industrialized mass butchery and mechanized mass destruction of the earth, and the only rationalized justification for all this destruction is the continued increase of overpopulation of the earth by this one species of ape... heroes are all archetypes of evil: each new one more evil than the last one.

For what reason? Why should overpopulation be a sacred goal of humans? Why should human be allowed to overpopulate the earth? Why was all the natural beauty of North America destroyed? I saw some of it destroyed in my lifetime, a very tiny part, and it makes me very, very angry. The scope and history of this destruction beginning with the first humans to come into the New World is very important... because it defines the human species not as a part of Life, but as the enemy of all living things on earth, including himself.

That is the fallacy of glorified human myths: the railroad magnate, the industrial robber baron, the factory worker, the teeming poor of the first American cities, the most desperate greedy driven workaholics, the first wave of white immigrants to come here and die like flies working for companies to make cold-blooded reptiles like Andrew Carnegie filthy rich; the masses of driven insane workers in the coal fields and iron and copper mines and the lumber companies... everyone trying to get rich quickly, the crazed masses of people entering the deep woods west of the Mississippi and beginning to hack at huge forests with the sole intention of cutting all the trees down to raise some corn and live in a shack and raise more insane units to destroy Nature... this entire glorified history... once you remove all the glory and look at the ugly hard facts, is a HORROR SHOW of escalating death and escalating mass destruction and escalating mass death of everything: plants, trees, insects, fish, animals, mammals, reptiles, birds, humans, I mean everything was systematically killed off and destroyed as quickly as possible. The destruction of North America was accomplished in less than three centuries and it is accelerating now into a fever pitch of global environmental destruction which is now destroying the oceans and the polar regions, not just the continents. And everyone thinks this is normal. What is so normal about destroying the earth you live on? Nobody wants to talk about it. Why? Nobody wants to do anything about it: why? Because they are too fucking 'polite' and too fucking 'civilized' to talk about it: that's why. Because nobody wants to admit their own insanity: that's why. Because nobody wants to admit civilization is evil. That's why. Well I don't have any fucking problem talking about it.

I guess I'm just not fucking civilized, that's all. I would have preferred if the first whites had made friends with the Indians instead of exterminating them.. I would have preferred if they had not brought their fucking pigs and goats and cattle and chickens with them. I would have preferred to have left the buffalo roam the plains of America unspoiled and made friends with them instead of butchering them and killing them. I would have preferred if the Whiteman and the Red man had learned never again to touch a dirty killing stick called a plow, and instead learned how to help all living creatures and living plants grow wild and free and made friends with all the living creatures of the Earth... I would have preferred for all the natural beauty of North America to have been saved and made even more beautiful, instead of being destroyed just so that one species could overpopulate itself into unwanted, unneeded billions... and fuck all the extra billions of pointless human units of overpopulated humanity who would never have been born. I would have preferred if the Whiteman and the Redman had learned from each other's cultures and created a culture that is better than either red or white. The point is: whatever is glorified in human civilization is just another improvement, another increase of civilized, industrialized mechanized mass death and destruction and pollution of all Life and waste: The myths of the steam engines, the myths of the car culture: whatever the machine destroys, pollutes and kills better and faster is what civilization glorifies as being good; when is this value system is the exact opposite of the actual truth. The greater the glorification the greater the evil; not the greater the good. The greater good of civilization is the complete opposite of good; it is pure evil.

The other point of studying human history is learning from it and not repeating the same mistakes. The basic lesson of human history is that our species has only one choice and that is the choice between death or Life. Civilized humans have become the enemy of all Life on Earth. If they continue on this destructive path, the entire species of humans will disappear, like the dodo and the dinosaur. On the other hand, if humans decide to make friends with all the living creatures on earth instead of killing them and fearing them: then they will not go extinct... they will become a useful, necessary part of the eco-systems of the living Earth.

This is the conscious moral ethical choice every human must make: Either to be an enemy or a friend to all Life and to all Living creatures both great and small...

However... before you can make friends with others, you must learn how make friends with yourself first. Before you can love other living creatures you must learn to love yourself. Before you can learn to love yourself, you must rid yourself of all the vices, sins, addictions and weaknesses which you hate in yourself. Before you stop hating other living creatures, you must first learn to stop hating yourself. Before you can start liking other living creatures you must learn to start liking yourself. These are the lessons of history and the lessons of life which I learned are the most important.

The Unclearness of History

History is supposed to deal with understanding the accumulated layers of the past. Cultures are layered accumulations of different norms. Each new norm is an added layer. Each new custom, each new tradition accumulates. The culture you live in: colors what you think and how you think and why you think. The norm you live in: colors how you see something. The layers of past norms, and past cultures are like semi-transparent colors. If the culture of your present norm is blue... and the norm of ten years ago was orange.... You will not see the past as being orange. You will see it as a blue-ish orange. If the cultural norm twenty years ago was red. You will see it as a blue-ish, orangey red. If you look back one hundred years, through ten semi-transparent layers of differently colored cultural norms... you will not see anything at all. Because all the accumulated layers of 100 years of colored norms and cultures will have blocked out what the true colors actually once were.

Of all the humans who ever became famous and popular:

Which of them were assassinated?

The best?

Or the worst?

Which rulers lived to a ripe old age?

The Best?

Or the worst?

Everything in human history that has been covered up... everything humans never experienced... going back for millions upon millions of years: resurfaces in infinitely creatively different ways. The very fact that our subconscious can do this. The very fact that the untold, unexperienced, covered up history of the past finds millions of creative ways to resurface: proves and demonstrates the infinite creativity of the human psyche. It proves that human creativity has been destroyed and suppressed and oppressed and brainwashed out of existence for untold eons. The only reason the human subconscious is so creative in finding a way to re-surface and expose the truth of the unexperienced, denied, covered up past: is because the truth is the only avenue not only of true Honesty and true Courage: it is the only path of true Creativity. The only people who are truly creative in civilized society: are the ones who are more truly Honest and Courageous than others. They are the one-in-a-million exception. They are the rebels. They are the ones that go against the entire grain of civilized society and refuse to conform to all of its stupidities.

Wisdom

Any civilized human teaching can only achieve segmental fulfillment, segmental peace, segmental happiness, because they are all based upon the fallacies of pyramidalized value-systems, which are all segmental. To find peace as a Hindu or a Muslim merely means you must exclude other humans from that peace. To find happiness as a nuclear family means you must exclude all others from that happiness. To find fulfillment as a farmer or engineer means you are excluded from finding any other kind of fulfillment. There is not and can never be any form of universal human peace-happiness-fulfillment within the pyramidal context of civilization. It is structurally impossible to achieve this. No civilized human teaching or wisdom has ever been truly universal. The myth of attaining human fulfillment-peace-happiness has been preached ever since civilization was invented. Countless teachings have been proselytized as ways of achieving this, and each in their own context does work: in their own context, which is the pyramidal context of a segmented civilization. The Hindu becomes a 'happy' Hindu who distrusts all Moslems. The Moslem becomes a happy Moslem who hates all Hindus. The Christian becomes a happy Christian who smugly pities all Hindus and Moslems. Which culture hates, or mistrusts, or pities, or sneers at another culture depends on which one is on top and which one is on the bottom and how huge the imbalance of that historical legacy is. How much blood has been shed over how many years by each culture trying to gain dominance over another?

The oldest of these teachings is Daoism. It has been taught and preached for 7-8,000 years. Yet, like all other teachings, it is one of elitist-pyramidal-exclusion. Throughout all of China's history it has had a minimal impact. Why? If the wisdom of Daoism could not enlighten the Chinese after 8,000 years of it being taught and practiced there... what good is it? If it has been taught and not properly practiced, whose fault is it? How stupid is it to assume that our present modern conventional wisdom will be useful to others; seven thousand years from now? Yet people love to worship the proven 8,000 year-old failure of Daoism simply because it is so ancient. Was Daoism ever designed to be used in an industrialized civilization? Since when has any wisdom of any age ever worked for a future age? Or ever been designed for the future? Or been able to predict what would happen in the future?

Daoism was never even designed to be taught, studied or practiced by the general population in the first place. Simply the amount of time it demands makes it prohibitive for anyone except the lucky few. The same can be said of many other teachings. The goal of trying to achieve a truly balanced awareness within the context of civilization is an impossibility. Merely the fact of living in civilization while attempting to practice such teachings has ended up corrupting the teachings themselves. They all become hierarchical-pyramidalized-frozen-elitist-sanctifies, holier-than-thou crap. They all become worshiped, pyramidally focused-on. Any kind of sanctity or worship that is pyramidalized is automatically structurally corrupt. Once you hear the code words of a higher purpose, a higher spirituality, a higher level, a higher self, a higher authority... you can rest assured that the rest of the message will be a bunch of exclusionary pyramidal crap. Why should all spirituality be higher? What about Lower spirituality, or Middle spirituality? Why must it always be higher? So those who supposedly attain it, can look down their nose at people who are not as spiritual 'high' as they are? Snobbery is not spirituality, nor is it something to be admired and copied.

Jesus destroyed this model and the idea of the masses being perpetually oppressed by their rulers. The idea of Christianity was that it was supposed to be able to spread, and enlighten all of humanity and humans: not just the 'highest'. It was the idea of sharing that made Christianity so powerful. But it was only a lip-service, a token, a spouting of blandishments and platitudes that were not practiced in everyday life. It was corrupted and poisoned into an elitist organization; it became just another elitist snobbery of 'higher spirituality'; just like all the other elite pyramidal social structures that oppress mankind.

Whatever the privileged or elitist category: be it power or spirituality, special knowledge, special wisdom: it is the context of that privilege and its imbalance, which makes it corrupt. All forms of hierarchical enlightenment are corrupt. All forms of teaching-wisdom, all sects or cults, which promise secret knowledge, which practice exclusivity, which try to make themselves holier than others; are corrupt. Western people do not buy this holier than thou crap from their fellow Christians. But let a foreign, imported religion that is even older than their own despised Christian hypocritical religion come in?... And they flock to it thinking that this must be holier because it is older, foreign, exclusive and mysterious. But people buy into these lies. They want to believe in them. Why? Because inside civilization there is nothing else to believe-in. Civilization has nothing else to offer to believers: except this kind of transparent bullshit.

If you start playing tennis when you are five, and spend your entire life on it: you will not become Wimbledon champion. Only one.... One token person will be lucky enough to gain that token honor. All the rest of you tennis hopefuls will fail. If you make millions of dollars and become rich and powerful, and spend your entire life in politics: you will not become President. Only one... one token elite rich person will ever gain that token honor. All the rest of you presidential hopefuls will fail.

If you leave your family at an early age, and study under famous Buddhist sages, and practice Buddhism all your life; you will not become a famous Buddhist sage. Only one... one token person will ever gain that token honor. All the rest of you will fail.

If you leave your family at an early age and go into a Daoist monastery, and study under famous Daoist masters, and spend your entire life purifying yourself... you will not become a tiny bit as enlightened as Lao Tse was, nor will you become a famous Daoist master. Only one...one token person will gain that token honor. All the rest of you will forever be of a lesser class than the masters who teach you.

Why?

Because you are stupid enough to believe that these tokens are more spiritual than you are. Because you are stupid enough to believe these tokens know something that you do not. Because you have already given away your own spirituality and spiritual authority to them, and you have become a spiritual peasant, a spiritual vassal under their spiritual hierarchy and tokenism. Because you worship the pyramidal apex of everything. Because you have been trained and brainwashed to worship only the top of piles of shit.

Any spiritual master who refuses to meet and talk to someone who is not in their own special inner circle of acolytes, or disciples is both a coward, and a fake. But you will never be allowed to become a

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six A: The Beginnings of civilization

750

Daoist master by challenging and disagreeing with their ancient 9,000 year old dogma. Unless you establish your own spiritual school, and fool enough idiots into believing that you are more spiritual than they are. In which case: you will find yourself practicing and preaching the same exclusionary, hierarchical crap as all the other idiots.

The very idea of listening to somebody else's version of wisdom and not listening to one's own inner wisdom; is the antithesis of all true wisdom. To be willing to learn from others and from oneself is wisdom. But to do so uncritically; is blind worship: it is stupid, not wise. Only when you earn your own insights by asking your own questions and doing your own exploring; can you own them. This is why it is a spiritual violation to force your opinions upon somebody else. Even if you are right: they will reject them and end up hating you for it in the process. That being said though; this is only a narrow context of ethics. To allow any form of corruption to flourish knowingly and not speak out against that evil is an even worse violation of spirituality than violating any personal code of conduct. That is why I choose to totally disregard this particular truth and write this book; regardless of how other people may react to it.

Roosevelt decriminalized alcohol. America took off in drunken glee? No. It was no longer forbidden. It was no longer sinful. The consumption of alcoholic spirits went down instead of up. Only what is venal and forbidden is avidly practiced. But the damage had been done. Alcohol had become more institutionalized and ingrained into the culture. It became sold everywhere. People no longer had to go to taverns to drink. They bought their alcohol and went home, and got quietly drunk and numb and dumb.

Drinking and getting drunk had been a symbol of privilege for centuries. All the rich elite in power had their own special sources of black market alcohol. The law was meant to apply to the poor, and powerless. Not to the rich. Being forbidden to drink alcohol by the government, while the rich thumbed their noses at this law: was recreated later by parents forbidding their children to do it, while drinking alcohol themselves. Why? The masses aped the hypocrisy of the rich. Openly drinking alcohol, while forbidding their children to do it. Guaranteeing endless generations of alcoholics raising more alcoholics. All because of the double standards of age racism. 'Do as I say, not as I do'. The same double standard which all civilized people and all civilized leaders practice. It is time to wipe out this double standard.

During Prohibition: American culture was mostly made up of the Hollywood crap of pure escapism. After that: it was Hollywood brainwashed crap about love as a pure escape from reality. Before the 1920's; it was the upper class myths about love as a pure escape from reality. Modern American culture was all about love, and love and more love... idealized and romanticized and idealized. But only as a token culture. A token love. Never actually practiced. But the masses were so gullible they bought it, and actually did fall in love. They did not understand why money did not make it even sweeter. During the 40's, 50's, 60', 70's: music was mostly about love. Did anyone listen to the messages? Did anyone learn from the songs? No. Did anyone think these songs were important enough listen to, and learn from, and teach? No. Civilization does not, and has never valued wisdom: except as corrupt ways of gaining Knowledge, Power, Wealth, And Fame. Or; as a form of hypocritical lip service; in order to sustain these four aspects. Unfortunately; these four aspects are the exact same evils that corrupt all wisdom. Uncorrupted wisdom is worthless inside the context of civilization because there is no forum, or avenue for its use. So, if you can't use it: then why value it?

If you examine the goals of Buddhism, Daoism, Confucianism, Shintoism, and all the other religions and teachings... and listen to what they promise as a reward for following their particular dogma. You will find that they are all at odds with each other and have no universal common goals at all. Moreover; they promise wildly different results. The only thing they all have in common is their elitist nature. The idea that only the purest among us will gain true immortality, or only if you are truly faithful and submissive to a God will be admitted into heaven, etc, bla-bla-bla. What do these pie-in-the-sky credos have to do with the problems of everyday life? Ask them about anything practical and they have nothing to say. No explanations that make any sense. No practical answers. No practical solutions. Need I say more?

Incrementalism

As an accumulation of unconnected segments, civilization works only segmentally. It works only incrementally. Any alleviation of inequity has always been incremental; and has always been drowned under the unending accumulation of newer and worse inequities and inequalities. Because none of them are actually universal. The result of this segmental-incremental-pyramidal approach to human existence; is that all teachings-truths are mixed with half-truths, together with total fallacies and cultural distortions. Regardless of which teaching or social institution or organization: its pyramidal-incremental structure prevents it from being universally applied to all people. All are couched in their own cultural limitations. All become corrupted by the medium they exist in: civilization.

What is the difference between selective Pyramidal focus, selective intelligence and selective Incrementalism? Nothing. They are all the same thing. What is the difference between selective indifference, selective egoism, selective selfishness, selective self-rationalization, selective self-gratification and selective projection? Nothing. They are all the same thing. What are the dynamics of selective hate and selective fear, and selective cowardice, and selective dishonesty? How does selective hate, selective fear, selective cowardice, selective dishonesty, selective self-delusion, selective self-rationalization, selective self-gratification, selective egoism and selective indifference work?

The most obscene evil ever invented is Science. Why? Because Science worships selective intelligence. The religion of Science is based upon the unquestioned belief in the superiority of selective intelligence. All selective intelligence is incremental: that is why it is so limited, stupid and so blind.

One result of Incrementalism is the concept of charity. What is charity? Charity means to give a small donation. To give only one small piece of yourself: one tiny fraction of your wealth or time. How much should a billionaire be lauded and praised for giving away millions if he still has his billions intact? If you wish to honestly gauge the charity of person: just measure what actual fraction of their wealth they give away in proportion to its actual totality. But even that is not an accurate measurement of charity. If a billionaire gives away most of their wealth and they still retain millions of dollars: how would you compare that to a homeless person giving away their last cigarette? Which one is making the bigger sacrifice? Which one is being more charitable? The wealthiest person in the world; Bill Gates, has actually been lauded for being a humanitarian because he gives away a few hundreds of millions of dollars to certain selected charities. For some reason, this guarantees him a good name as a humanitarian. He only gives away a very small part of his wealth... and only as long as he still makes billions of dollars of profit from hundreds of millions of people. He is worshipped as a humanitarian simply because he is not completely 100% selfish...because he does not keep every single penny of his billions for himself. His charity is an add-on to his primary ethic of profit-greed. He does it to keep from being hated and vilified by the press, and hated and envied by other people.

Any wealthy person can coldly decide to make a name for themselves, and be touted as a philanthropist and a humanitarian by giving money to a charity. The giving of money does not make you more humane, or a better person. Normally, the money is given to high profile charities like the symphony, or museums, or cancer research... so the philanthropists can garner the maximum publicity out of their meager charity. Not to poor people who really need it. What these high profile charities are really all about is merely the backslapping of the elite in love with themselves so they can sell to the gullible public the image of how generous, wise, and loving they are.

But they are like that only to each other... If you tried to crash their elite parties or grounds, you would be arrested and charged with various counts of trespassing, illegal entry, etc. They have an inordinate craving for each other's approval and for the approval of the public...and will go to any bounds to get it. Then this orgy of self-love and niceness is fed into a camera, and shown to the public. So the public will not hate the rich people for being rich... but rather love them for being rich and famous. Because they are so generous, so kind, so human, so funny... so much more so than the poor working slobs... who have no time to work on their social skills or urbanity; that the TV viewer can laugh and applaud and share in all this goody-goody show of respect, adulation, applause, etc... So the viewers can fool themselves into thinking that these rich people are not bad, not evil, but nice! In fact they are made out to seem to be more human, kinder, more giving, wiser, more generous, funnier, more entertaining, wittier, smarter than the viewing public... And personally, a few of them may well be... if they are professional performers.

It is easy to be generous when you have millions of dollars that you do not need. Try to be that generous with your money when you are starving and broke. Yet we idolize the rich for that... huh? How can you compare relative generosity between a rich person and a poor one? You can't. Unless you rip the rich person and force them to become homeless and powerless, and broke... and give a poor person millions of dollars. Then... compare what the once-poor person does with their money, and what the once-rich person does with theirs. And see if they are more or less generous with the same amount of self-esteem, social status, and money, and power. If the once-rich person turns out to be more generous than the once-poor person... then you can honestly laud them for being more generous than someone else. But since they will be poor as hell then, and unknown... who gives a damn how generous that once-rich person is? He's not rich anymore.

It is easy for rich people to be nice, since they have life so easy. All of their addictions and whims can be easily gratified with money. They have more power, more choices, more privileges, more opportunities, more advantages, more toys, and more things to distract and entertain themselves with. They can afford any drug, or addiction they happen to crave. They have a higher social standing. People look up to them. They are admired. Envied, revered, respected, listened-to, obeyed, etc... What surprise is it that some rich people are a tiny bit nicer? That is not them. That is their money talking. That is the wealth being nice. Take away all of their money, and then you can see if it is actually them personally who are being nice, or if it is only their money and privileges.

But if you take away their money... then who cares if they're nice or not? They're poor. Forget them; they're not important. They don't matter. There are lots of assholes in the world, both poor and rich. But somehow, people are always amazed if a rich person is actually nice in person. When they should be a million times more amazed that there are any poor people who are nice. But we keep on admiring the rich for things they have never earned, and for things that they are not. The reason people are amazed if a rich person is nice; is that a nice rich person is a genuine exception. Most of them are not nice at all. But even that fact is irrelevant. Since no poor person will ever get close enough to a rich person to ever find out exactly what kind of assholes they actually are. As long as rich people can keep the masses at bay and create their own fake persona for themselves via the Media and their news blackout of total secrecy and privacy behind walled estates: the relative niceness or meanness of any rich person is yet to be proven.

Americans are still don't realize that in a fear-based society, in a hate-based society, in a greed-based society... the ones yelling louder are not the ones who are more confident, or more intelligent, or better leaders; they are the ones who fear more, hate more and are greedier and are more cunning, sneaky swindlers. They are the ones who are more unethical. They are the better liars. They are the ones who have more to lose if the masses ever stop allowing themselves to be manipulated and oppressed by their elite. They are the ones who are richer, more powerful, more privileged, more brainwashed.

Guilty people can become instantly enraged when there is even a whiff of the possibility that they might be accused of anything. You can see them being dragged out of court; shouting and ranting, claiming their innocence after hard evidence has proven them guilty beyond a shadow of a doubt. It makes them seem morally in the right to a crowd of onlookers who never saw the actual evidence. It makes them feel morally right. Why are they so angry? They convince themselves by their own anger! It's just a way to brainwash yourself. You can see them doing it. Why do they seem so morally outraged, and so morally right even after they have been proven guilty? Why does the public buy it? Why did Ali North escape prison and become an acclaimed Republican radio personage? It works almost every time. As long as you can selectively narrow down and harp on certain lies and half-truths more cunningly than your opponent... You will get away with it. You will win. You will become rich, and famous, and revered, and admired, and morally right and you will stand bravely and honestly for family values etc... and all the other bullshit they spout.

And why do they do it? Because they are more corrupt and more guilty than other people. But... they are also corrupt more confidently. They have less guilt about it. They are proud of their corruption. They lie so well to themselves; that they can brainwash themselves better than others can. Plus... they are more filled with envy, jealousy and hate. They are more aggressive, and attacking, and more accusatory towards other people. People like Stephan Stephanovitch, and Ali North, and President Reagan, and President George Jr. Bush: are simply corrupt people who have learned to hide their own corruption and guilt by a simple psychological tactic.

Never defend yourself. Always attack the other person.

The first professional killers became powerful and rich using this tactic. That is how Robber Barons were first created. Today: this political tactic is called projection. What is projection? Projection is the art of antagonistic mimicry. It is the art of antagonistic reflection. It is the art of mirroring back everything you are accused of... so fast and so successfully; that the initial, weak accusation never penetrates your defenses of total denial. Because if you attack your accuser... even more viciously and openly than they attacked you. If you do it quick enough. They will be too busy defending themselves to attack you. Offense is the best Defense. The better liars win. The worst haters win. The worst killers win.

Projection is simply a state of total denial of any unpleasant truth about yourself. Once a person becomes that mentally corrupt and sick: they become incredibly convincing liars. Then you see almost nothing of their inner selves because they have hidden their own inner selves from themselves so deeply, they do not even have an Inner Self to worry about. They do not have an inner conscience, or inner doubt, or inner questioning, or inner reflectivity of any kind. They have perfected the art of projecting-reacting outwardly everything that is targeted at their inner selves. They are 100% egos. 100% rationalizers. 100% accusers. 100% 'morally right' 100% never ever doubting of themselves. They never doubt that they are wrong and the other person is wrong. Simply by using the tactic of Projection. By projecting everything wrong-bad-evil outside of them, and assuming that everything inside them is good-honest. Try to attack them and they will attack you instantly without even thinking they might be wrong. Projection is a knee-jerk reaction based upon secret inner fear and guilt

Look at the selective focus of the American media. Obsessing for one whole year on the O. J. Simpson trial. Obsessing for one whole year on the Rodney King trial. Two years of obsessive media coverage on the Monica Lewinsky affair. While Seven years of Legal power-plays By Kenneth Star including every mis-use of power and scandal is completely ignored. Look at the Iraq War. Two years of never criticizing the most corrupt President in American History. Oh. You mean three minutes of Clinton with a young girl; is more important that Bush fucking the entire Nation, and the entire World and invading another Nation? The American Press is guiltier of lying to the American Public than the Government is. How? Simply by selective incremental focus. Simply by selectively choosing what to focus-on and what not to focus-on. Every human is guilty of this. When you take the American Nation as a whole its level of selective ignorance and dishonesty can be demonstrated and proven simply by what Americans want to see, and what Americans don't want to see.

If an entire American Nation can be hoodwinked by the Media for two years by having a news blackout; through the idiotically simple ploy of focusing upon one news 'story' as incrementally unimportant as Monica Lewinsky... And then turn around and have a news blackout of the entire illegality of the stolen Presidential Election, and then have an even larger censoring blackout of the illegality and corruption of two years of Bush's reign in office including the news blackout of the entire World's opinion and attitude towards Bush's power-military dictatorship... by bringing up yet again Clinton's memoir of Monica Lewinsky... What happened in the rest of the world; during those years when there was no news except this one ludicrous scandal?

What does that say of humans being able to selectively lie to themselves by focusing incrementally only upon trivia instead of War, killing, atrocities, government-corporate corruption at the highest levels? Facts are found. Nobody prosecutes. Scandals are uncovered: nobody goes to jail. Crimes are committed: the entire America masses do not voice a single outcry. Why? Because the Corporate Media carefully filters all protest and outcries out of their coverage. Simply by reporting incrementally upon the most incremental, most unimportant, most meaningless news stories possible.

But they are like that only to each other... If you tried to crash their elite parties or grounds; you would be arrested and charged with various counts of trespassing, illegal entry, etc. They have an inordinate craving for each other's approval and for the approval of the public...and will go to any bounds to get it. Then this orgy of self-love and niceness is fed into a camera, and shown to the public. So the public will not hate the rich people for being rich... but rather love them for being rich and famous. Because they are so generous, so kind, so human, so funny... so much more so than the poor working slobs... who have no time to work on their social skills or urbanity that the TV viewer can laugh and applaud and share in all this goody-goody show of respect, adulation, applause, etc... So the viewers can fool themselves into thinking that these rich people are not bad, not evil but nice! In fact they are more human, kinder, more giving, wiser, more generous, funnier, more entertaining, wittier, smarter than the viewing public... And personally a rare few of them may well be.

Chapter Six A: The Beginnings of civilization

755

Evaluate them as a class... what is their effect on the rest of us?
What good are they? Are they good for anything? Or nothing?

Have you ever noticed this tiny discrepancy in newspapers and books? The poor are categorized as a class. The middleclass are categorized as a class... but the wealthy are almost never categorized as a class. The upper class are never categorized into how much money they have. The middleclass and the poor are. Why is this? Could it be that when they were categorized as a class for thousands of years... they were universally hated by all the other classes? And that they finally learned after the flaunting of their wealth publicly, during what western history calls the Gilded Age never again to flaunt their wealth and their power as a class so blatantly?

Why are the richest people regarded as Pillars of their Society... when they are the complete opposite of supporting pillars? This is only one example of the brainwashed irrational semantic nonsense that people swallow, and actually believe-in. Why is this lying ridiculous term used so much? Just so rich people will not be threatened by the possibility of poor people envying them and hating them for their wealth. The fact is they are bloodsuckers who steal the lifeblood of millions of poorer people in order to live in the lap of luxury. They are not pillars of society: they are bloodsuckers of society. Without the pyramidal overpopulation of billions of poor people whom they rob and tax and cheat, they could not even exist let alone survive.

Civilized human awareness is Pyramidal in focus and exclusively selective as hell. Have a wealthy patron contribute to build an opera house, or new sport arena, or buy a sports franchise... and they instantly become Pillars of the Community. People look in awe at the millions they have spent and assume that this pillar of the community is charitably giving all those millions for their entertainment and pleasure. When in fact the entire system of charity at this level is a maze of snobbish cliques using the organizations at the highest power levels for access to their own equals. For status, for tax write-offs, for publicity, for countless advantages that are kept secret and never mentioned in public. People rarely think as they pay money for an expensive ticket to watch a sports team that a pillar of a community' owns, that this pillar is sucking millions of dollars from ordinary working people's pockets... and is not supporting these thousands of paying fans. Rather, it is the affluent paying fan, who is the Pillar of Wealth that the rich owner relies upon to become even richer. It is the paying customer the rich need. The fan, the customer, the poor person paying good money for tickets... they are the true Pillars of their Community. Without them there would be no Opera, no Sports Arena, no Rich people, no nothing. But the high-profile charities of the Opera, or their beloved Symphony, or their beloved Museums have a drawback. It reveals the elitist nature of these charitable organizations. Most poor and working class people couldn't care less about Operas, Symphonies or Museums. Those charities are too obviously only for those rich enough to afford them, who have the time, and the willingness to develop specialized tastes for these rarified examples of culture. So what do the rich do now? Instead of operas and museums, which are all in need of funds, they are now funding medical research... school programs... homeless shelters... animal rights. Anything that might be perceived as helping poor people, and publicizing it to the gullible masses... Who only focus on the charity; and not how all the billions were stolen and how little is given back.

So where is there any Humanity in all this?

Most charities are businesses first, and charities last. They are in it for their own profit. Not for the profit of poor people; who they claim to try to help. Has there ever been a study on the actual effectiveness of charities? They get away with murder; because they are completely unregulated. Why?

Because most charities are the official domain of the rich getting tax-breaks. And consequently; the rich have passed laws that make all of the skull-duggery inside these exclusive charitable venues; nice and comfy, and secret... So they won't have to worry about any public scrutiny of exactly what they do with their charities, and exactly where all the money actually goes.

Has any charity ever had a noticeable effect on the general standard of living of the poor? No. All forms of charity are incremental and segmental. They are a noncomprehensive and non-effective way of dealing with human problems. One classic example Incrementalism was a recurring ad on PBS TV stations... asking for donations to support homeless Veterans. This charity has no interest in helping or supporting homeless children, or homeless teenagers, or homeless women... or anybody else who is homeless and is not a Veteran for that matter. In essence it is ignoring the problem of homelessness as a universal problem, it is saying:

'Fuck all the other people who are homeless. We don't give a shit about them. We just care about Veterans who are homeless. Nobody else.' Is this an intelligent way to deal with the problem of homelessness? The answer is: No.

Yet all charities suffer from this narrowed, myopic, specialized approach. Why do people deal with such root problems so selectively; that they end up not dealing with the problem at all? Why do people try to discriminate between people in need? The answer is because humans have been trained to focus, think and act pyramidally and segmentally without bothering to make any connections between them. What sense is there in spending millions of dollars trying to save a single species like the Panda; when thousands of other species are being destroyed yearly? What is the sense in some people trying to save any single species threatened with extinction: while meanwhile, the rest of human when civilized humans are systematically destroying entire ecosystems all over the world?

Look at the Dynamic of Segmental Accumulation and Separation.

While any single segment of that accumulation is being focused-on: all the rest of that Totality is being ignored Likewise: all of the interconnected effects and influences between all these segments are also being ignored. What sense is there in spending millions of dollars trying to save a single species like the Panda; when thousands of other species are being destroyed yearly? What is the sense in some people trying to save any single species threatened with extinction: while meanwhile, the rest of human society is systematically destroying entire ecosystems?

You can easily tell the difference between incremental change and contextual change. All human incremental change has one common characteristic: all people who seek to change incrementally do so with the specific goal of changing as little as possible. All contextual change has the specific goal of changing as much as possible. One is negative, the other is positive

For instance. How can you create a viable organization to stop the destruction of Nature and other Species and eco-systems? Have a universal platform that works...

Fuck. 'Save the Pandas.' Fuck 'Save the 'Whales'. Fuck 'Save the Tigers.'

Instead: Have a better idea: try simplicity. 'Save All Living Things'

Your ethic should be simple and all-inclusive, not exclusive:

'If it is alive? Save it.'

'If it is dead? Fuck it.'

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six A: The Beginnings of civilization

757

Then for once you can actually get all of the environmental splinter-groups trying to save one tiny piece of living land, or piece of living coastline, or one living species... all together in a single cooperating organized power-block. Then for once you will belong to an organization that has enormous power. And for once it will be impossible for any of you to disagree with anyone else in your organization about its main stated mission and goal. Then for once you will all be in complete agreement with each other. For once you will be able to draw support from billions of humans who will agree with you whole-heartedly. And all of you will have enormous political power.

‘You want to save a living tiger?... fine. But. You must also help us to save all other living things also. All living trees. All living species. All living wetlands. Not just your own pet living tiger ....’

Wake up. Are you alive, or dead? Do you want to save yourself or do you want to save dead pieces of shit? They only way you can save your own life is by saving the lives of all living creatures on Earth. Why don't people do this? Because if people tried to live by the credo of saving all living creatures: they would be forced to stop using cars, trucks, trains, electronic devices, they would be forced to stop building dams and using electricity, they would be forced to stop eating meat, fish, eggs. They would be forced to stop using drugs like coffee and alcohol. They would be forced to stop using pharmaceutical drugs, they would be forced to stop buying and using mass manufactured goods. They would be forced to stop buying manufactured furniture, they would be forced to stop buying mass manufactured clothes and shoes. They would be forced to stop exporting and importing consumer goods, they would be forced to stop making and using paper products, they would be forced to stop buying any manufactured item that kills a living creature, They would be forced to stop buying and using anything made from oil: like chemical fertilizers, plastic, gasoline, heating fuel. They would be forced to stop buying and using all man-made chemicals. They would be forced to tear down the mechanical civilization they built. They would be forced to dismantle every man-made device and tear down every man-made building and tear up every man-made road and give the earth back to living creatures. The fact is; human civilization only saves dead things: not living things. Civilization kills living things: it does not save them.

The answer to pollution is simple. Stop polluting. The only way you can live a clean life free of pollution and poison is to clean up the environment you live in. Once you clean up the world you live in, you will not need to clean yourself, you won't need to wash yourself to stay clean. You won't need to use cleaners and chemicals and poisons to keep your house clean and your body clean. The environment will keep you clean. That is how it works. That is how it always has worked. Keep Nature clean, and she will keep you clean. Pollute her: and she will pollute you. You cannot escape your own pollution.

The whole idea of civilized humans living in an antiseptic germ-free, clean environment while the rest of the world is filled with cancer-causing toxins and poisons. The assumption that people can wall themselves off from Nature and live inside the artificial womb of civilization while destroying the Natural World around them is a religious unspoken belief of consumer society. The idea that you can filter all germs out of the air you breath, filter all the toxins out of the water you drink, filter all the chemicals out of the food you eat, and live inside insulated, air-condition splendor while the rest of the world outside your window is filling with man-made chemical filth. The arrogance of the idea that you cannot be affected by the mass-manufacturing and mass exploitation of resources which poison and degrade the global health of the Earth you live on... The idea that it is perfectly okay to buy chemicals and support the huge corporations of Monsanto and Dow Chemical Corporation and the Colgate Palmolive Company by buying insecticides to kill bugs and buying sprays and detergents and antiperspirants and perfumes and nail polish and bathroom cleanser and motor oil and all the other thousands of poisonous toxic products which they sell you... and expect not to be poisoned by the factories that manufacture these deadly poisons because they are not located where you live... is a universal hypocrisy of modern consumers. That smug assumption is no longer true. Coal power plants are poisoning the air of other American states hundreds of miles downwind of them that do not pollute the air. China has been polluting the Arctic and the forests of Canada with its industrial air pollution for over 30 years. The air you breathe, the food you eat and the water you drink is being polluted and poisoned by the factories that make the manufactured products you buy. If you poison the Earth: the Earth will poison you. If you poison the environment you live in: the environment will poison you also. Once the entire Earth becomes poisoned by humans: you will have nowhere to run and nowhere to hide anymore. Mankind cannot escape its own destruction unless all of you wake up as a whole and stops killing the Earth it needs to live on. Not as isolated individuals but as a single educated enlightened species that recognizes the right of all living creatures to LIFE trumps all civilized values.

The answer to the mindless destruction of civilization is to stop buying all mass-produced goods period. De-centralized, self-sufficient communities that do not manufacture anything are the only answer. The only answer to the centralized insanity of mass manufacturing and mass consumption and mass markets and mass greed is decentralizing everything. Incremental attempts to fix this are a pointless waste of time and energy. The whole world needs to be educated about how the corporations we buy from are killing us and the Earth with their pollution and waste.

Only when the entire human species is educated to follow and practice the ethic of personal responsibility: only when the entire human species without exception is educated to live by the values of equality and fraternity without exception: only when the entire human race refuses to obey or follow or respect any hierarchical authority over them, only when the entire human race without exception is educated about the evils of the pyramidal system they now live inside: only then will the pile of crap called civilization be torn down and good riddance to it.

The point is: there is no other alternative. If humans continue to accept the evils of civilized existence as normal, if humans do not tear down the civilization they live in: it will destroy them so completely not one human will be left alive on the Earth. Civilization is suicide. The structure of civilization is suicide. All humans who preserve and maintain and enable and go along with civilization's practice of mass slaughter will suffer the exact same fate they deal out to the innocent creatures they slaughter every day for their meat. The Earth is not designed to support 7 billion apes who kill animals and eat meat and are not designed to eat meat. The Earth is not designed to support capitalist factories and global ecological industrialized destruction. Until every human on Earth is educated about the global ecological crisis and the destruction of all living creatures and eco-systems on Earth which this overpopulated species is committing as a suicidal crime against itself and the Earth it needs to live on: humanity will destroy itself. Until humans are educated to learn from their own past: humanity will continue to destroy itself as it is destroying itself right now. Negative destruction and negative death is evil. Civilization is a system which is evil because it accumulates death and destruction. The more humans overpopulate the Earth, the more they destroy and kill: the more certain the extinction of the human species will be unless we wake up and stop the slaughter of innocents.

All the answers to solving the problems of the world have already been found and proven to work. Refusing to implement any of them, refusing to change how we live, makes every single human personally responsible for their part in supporting civilization. There is no escape from personal responsibility any more. Everyone is responsible. This includes you and me.

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six A: The Beginnings of civilization

759

How you solve the problem of pyramidal civilization is simple: just reverse the dynamic of oppression from down to up: like this:

Once the entire population of 7 billion humans are educated as to the basic fundamental evil and insanity of pyramidal civilization and actively attack the humans who are above them instead of below them... then the ones at the top will be exterminated as they should be, and if anyone in this shitpile tries to take their place at the top of this shitpile, they will be wiped out too, until nobody will dare to try to get on top of anyone, and nobody will dare try to oppress anyone below them. This reversal of oppression will equalize humans. By oppressing the oppressors, by killing the killers, by loving the lovers, by hating the haters, by taking from the takers and giving to the givers; this will decentralize all of civilization, all societies, all organizations, social structures, all places of habitation etc. Then all wealth, power, status, knowledge, affluence, health, intelligence etc will become a matter of personally earned effort. Then each human being, if they want to achieve or gain or accumulate anything: will be forced to do so by their own efforts. Then the actual dynamic of earned income, earned health, earned intelligence, earned education, earned reputation for honesty, earned reputation for dishonesty, etc will not only bring out the best in all people and force all of us to compete on a level of equality: on an equal playing field of one-to-one, so nobody dares to organize a criminal gang to oppress anyone beneath them because if they do: they will be taken apart and exterminated by every single individual who knows about their activities, and will cooperate in the extermination of any form of oppression which is aimed down instead of up... Then the survival of the fittest will weed out the weakest and reward the strongest instead of what is now the case: where the most diseased corrupt people at the top victimize and oppress millions of the healthiest people at the bottom. Of course this requires that every single human being on earth is educated about the basic evil of the civilization which they live inside, and taught to practice Courage and Honesty: instead of what pyramidal civilization teaches now, which is dishonesty and cowardice .

It is only when every person on Earth is educated to understand that ALL of civilization is evil will there be a worldwide rebellion against all the evils of civilization. Only when every human on Earth is taught to develop the power of their own might and their own right instead of being taught to remain passive terrified little obedient sheep that ALL the evils of civilization can be done away with. Only when every human on earth stops looking for a leader to lead them and becomes their own leader and does not wait to act will civilization be dismantled and taken down and good riddance to it .

Incrementalism continued:

Basically: all environmental activist groups are trying to do the same thing. They are trying to save living things from the destructive effects of civilization. They are trying to lessen the destructive effect civilization has on all living things. But they are trying to do it incrementally. And since all of civilization is destructive towards all living things, not just some of it; an incremental approach simply does not, and cannot work.

Humans do not want to admit that civilization has a destructive effect on all living things... not just certain living things. They do not want to look at this. They do not even want to look at the destructive effect that civilization has on themselves.

Environmental activist groups are one of the few incremental organizations that try to look at what effect civilization has on the Earth, but they do it incrementally. They look at some incremental effects it has in some incremental areas, on some incremental species by taking increment samples... or samples in increments... or incremental sampling of the incremental environment they are incrementally studying. This does not work.

Environmentalists are a tiny minority who are so fragmented, so unorganized, so incremental in their approach to the environment, that as a result they are almost completely ignored by the rest of society. Environmentalists look at the destructive effect civilization has on the Earth incrementally. They are incrementally oriented. They think in increments, they deal in increments, they act as increments, their outlook is incremental, the information they find is incremental, the effect they have on civilization: is incremental,

Why don't activists all get together as a single unified organized community?

Because they are Incrementalists. They are ants. They act like ants. They think like ants, their perspective is as incremental as the perspective of an ant. Because each activist group is specialized. No activist group is interested in the interests of any other activist group. They are no different from any other human social group. Their existence is based upon by exclusion and specialization, and narrow-minded selfishness. They refuse to join together. Each one develops its own elite power structure, its own elite clique culture, its own elite exclusivity. And like all other elite power groups: they not want to share their own privileged position and power with anyone else. Each activist group develops its own bureaucracy and its own power structure; it's own office politics, its own official snobbery, elitism and exclusionary culture and attitude, and its own hierarchical levels of, incompetence, stupidity and corruption. Each one develops its own narrow views, narrow priorities, narrow opinions and narrow values. Selectively focusing only upon its own specialized issues and self-interests.

Until you get activist groups that are a party of one. One fanatic: only interested in one, single, exclusive issue... Convinced that their cause is the more important than anything else. Then you get the justifiable opinion of the general public; that specialized activists are loons: who are not interested in anything else. Activists becoming as insanely specialized as scientists: except that they are not publicly sanctified and supported by Western Society as Scientists who work on abstruse things that have nothing to do with human existence.

The dynamic of segmented Incrementalism in civilization...is directly related to the kind of awareness we are trained to have and use. Segmented Incrementalism is directly related to the kind of intelligence human's exhibit, and how we act. The Universal Dynamic is; all Pyramidal Focus produces an incremental approach to problem solving because it lacks the Sense of Pure Wonder.

What I call: Pyramidal Focus is what Science calls: Selective Awareness. The problem with Selective Awareness; is that it looks only at a narrow band of something... while ignoring everything else.

Resulting in:

Flawed logic, flawed awareness, flawed decisions, flawed solutions, flawed issues, and flawed intelligence.

Resulting in:

Limited incremental logic, limited incremental awareness, limited incremental decisions, limited incremental solutions, limited incremental issues and a limited incremental intelligence.

If your only focus is on trying to get SUV's off the road because they guzzle too much gas, pollute the environment, and are unsafe; then you are not addressing all the other the issues of using cars at all; in the first place. The global impact of the pollution they create, the Realpolitik of how fossil fuel is used around the world to maintain the status quo of Corporate Capitalism and how this affects all living things on this planet. You are not addressing all of the other areas of human life affected by driving cars. You are not addressing the culture they have created. You have not even begun to look at the impact of mechanized travel on humans and the highways, which have destroyed the 100/s of millions of acres of land. Much less the impact upon the Earth of buses, trucking, etc.

Nor are you questioning the idea of mechanized travel as an unquestioned good. Or the addiction to the ease and the laziness it has created. Nor are you questioning the addiction to, and the love of cars and machines. Or the assumed idea that traveling over something that is dead: back and forth, over and over again... is good and intelligent. Or the fact that the actual voyage has been made meaningless: except for the end-goal: simply because of the creation of roads and the car. Or why the love of machines is now greater than the love of living things in Western industrialized Nations.

Nor are you dealing with the historical reasons for why Americans became addicted to traveling hundreds and thousands of miles every year in cars. It came from the almost complete extinction of the largest population of wild grazing animals in the world: the American bison: the buffalo: who by their numbers were fast turning the entire plains of North America into a garden of Eden by their continual migrations across the heartland of America. It came from replacing the living energy of living animals traveling across a living land with the dead destructive energy of the combustion engine, with dead machines traveling across a dead destroyed land covered in concrete and asphalt. Importing the destruction of volcanic devastation into a new land that had been cleaned and scoured by countless Ice Ages until it was so clean, so freshly alive and so innocent of evil; all the living creatures in North America were easy prey for the white Europeans to slaughter them. The ape that came determined to destroy everything of beauty by the stealing of an entire continent and poisoning it as fast as they could. Drawn by the attraction of Free Land. The European swindlers did not earn the land which they stole from North American natives: as a result, the land itself became worthless in value except as an excuse which was used to despoil it and destroy it as quickly and as completely as possible. There was too much free land. Land became just something to travel over... to get to somewhere else... somewhere better than where they already were. Upward mobility was translated into the endless mindless mechanical lateral mobility of the car. Travel became worthless and meaningless except as signs of mechanized status, mobile status. Move forward: never look back at what you have done. Traveling over land became an escape. American culture became a culture of pure escapism. Riding on top of waves of destruction became the escape of its youth, who then were corrupted into riding on waves of constant distraction.

Lateral mobility became simply a way of keeping busy; staying distracted, and treating the Earth you pass over; as worthless, meaningless, shit. The cultural unspoken norm-practice-custom-tradition was created that the Earth exists only to be ignored and used, raped, destroyed, gaped-at or by-passed. By American pioneers crossing an entire continent. Ignoring the thousands of miles of free land they traveled over... Convinced by their greed that California or Montana was better than the entire lush, rich beautiful heartland of America between the East coast and the West coast. The Great Land Rush of the American West is a perfect example of human greed gone mad. When there was no more land to travel over to escape from their past, tourism was invented: touring lands, as if it were your own: never living or staying long enough to understand the land you gape at and the living creatures and trees and plants and life which live there and had lived there for millions of years. Gaping at foreign scenes became mechanized also: the nickelodeon was invented. Where poor people could go and pay one nickel: to see landscapes they never saw before, to escape from their own life, and from their own past.

In their ignorance and greed... they by-passed the best land in the world. And ended up living on land that was not worth a shit. Thousands of miles away from the markets they needed to sell their goods. Mostly it was new immigrants who went West. The westward movement was a railroad scam: sold to poor immigrants of Europe. These immigrants could have settled in the East. But nobody wanted them. The easterners tried to get rid of them.

The American West was settled predominantly by refugees, outcasts, outlaws and criminals. Ostracized criminals with warrants out for their arrest. Unwanted drunkards and flim-flam artists. Worthless lazy bums who had been fired and kicked out. The poorest of the poor and the lowest of the low. The Easterners used the West as a dumping ground for all their undesirables. Just as Britain had used her colonies as a dumping ground to get rid of its undesirable elements. Sending convicts to Australia. Sending religious purists to America. Today: Australia is one of the most law abiding, peaceful countries in the world. And now the American Midwest... the land all these immigrants by-passed to get to 'the west' is now the breadbasket of the world and has the best farms in the world.

As a result the cultural idea of the love of automobiles, the cultural idea of lateral mobility of the car: became an escape. An escape from everything. Hundreds of millions of people escaping from their past. Getting as far away as possible from what they did and do every day. Then going back and doing it all over again and running away. Over and over. Blind repeated cycles.

Focusing only upon SUV's, while ignoring all larger contexts of the new invention of the automobile: gets you nowhere fast. Incremental problem solving solves nothing. It just creates more specialized problems to focus upon and waste your time on.

Incrementalism is a symptom of Selective awareness, selective intelligence, setting selective issues, priorities. It is a basic reason why we have gotten into the mess we are in now, and why we are incapable of solving or fixing any problem of our own making. I prefer to use the word: pyramidal, rather than selective. Essentially: they both mean the same thing. You cannot think, discuss or be aware; only in a narrow selective context; without taking things out of their true context, out of their true meaning, out of their true significance, and out of their true perspective.

By selectively taking something out of context: you are automatically forced to become blind to any larger consequences, repercussions, issues, problems, etc. which are crucially relevant, and important, and need to be included to make any sense of what you are looking at.

To think as intelligently as possible, you need to put your thoughts and your awareness in as wide a context as possible. Otherwise, you will remain selectively blind, selectively unaware and selectively stupid. You will make the wrong decisions for the wrong reasons, you will make unnecessary mistakes and your actions will be out of context. Your attempt to solve any problem will be shortsighted, specialized, unconnected and inefficient.

Incrementalism is just a result of selective awareness. Splitting up life, splitting up life problems, splitting up issues into countless unconnected segments; prevents us from gaining any perspective or understanding on our actual situation and prevents us from ever finding out what we can do to effectively solve our problems. It destroys our control over everything: it destroys our ability to be truly intelligent or think intelligently. Only the widest possible awareness in the widest possible context can produce true intelligence. This kind of intelligence is called wisdom. That is why the only form of true human intelligence is Pure Wonder. Anything else is not as farseeing, not as insightful, and not as effective. The inevitable outcome of all selective awareness is secrecy. You cannot separate secrecy from conscious lying: neither one can exist without the other. This all comes from our tool brain being able to manipulate its own thoughts and feelings. The exceptions to conscious lying are total silence, total non-communication, total denial, total delusion and total separation.

People should be able to grow-mature; they should be allowed to change. But there can be no universal change unless people find common universal goals to come together for. And this means that none of these changes or goals can be based upon religion, language, race, nationality or culture. That means that all true human change, all true human evolution cannot be based upon civilization or upon civilized values-ideas. So: if you can't use anything from civilization, what can you use to change-grow-evolve-mature?

Use the universal human values of Fun, Honesty, Courage, Cooperation, Happiness and Play and Creativity: in a state of Pure Wonder, with a Sense of Pure Wonder, using the Sense of Pure Wonder to live creatively every minute of every day. Use the universal sense of Fun which all healthy human babies and children possess. If all humans came together in a common universal goal to just have fun and enjoy Life: it would solve all human problems, it would destroy all human civilization and replace it with human happiness.

Cities

Why do cities exist in the first place? Because that is where everything goes. That is where all people go. 'All roads lead to Rome.' One reason why the Roman Empire lasted so long... was because their armies built roads that led into Roman cities. Wherever possible: they built roads leading to Rome itself. These roads became giant energy pathways: effectively funneling all traffic, all goods and all wealth into Rome. This happened unavoidably: simply because of the physical paths set up by Roman road builders. If these linear roads had not been built: most of the people and most of the wealth would have not gone anywhere. If linear roads leading into cities had never been built: then cities would never have become so huge. Linear roads are one basic, structural reason for why cities became such huge centers of accumulation: sucking everything into them.

The only reason Los Angeles exists as a megalopolis of over 14 million people: is because Mulholland built the longest aqueduct in human history. The biggest engineering feat of its day: transferring water from Northern California into a virtual desert in the Los Angeles basin-area. Destroying the entire ecosystem of the Owen's River Valley, destroying the 100's of farms, destroying a farmland that could have rivaled and out-produced all of the crops grown by its use of artificial irrigation a thousand miles further south. It was the biggest con job ever pulled over an entire state's eyes. A small band of real estate developers together with corrupt elements in the City of Los Angeles: stole an entire valley's water, and made a killing from it... while having taxpayers foot the bill.

Roman Cities that were not situated on a fresh water lake or a river: grew larger mainly because of the water supplied from man-made aqueducts. Cities without aqueducts or rivers had to dig wells. They remained small and did not grow in size. It was expensive to live in cities without close access to water. You had to buy water: it was a precious commodity. There were water sellers who made their living from selling drinking water in Spain for thousands of years because water was so hard to come by in that dried out country. The famous oil painting 'The Water Seller' by Degas personifies this ancient cultural tradition of Spain.

Without Mulholland's water canal, without that extra water: Los Angeles would have stayed a mid-sized city of one or two million simply because it did not have enough water to grow any bigger. Before aqueducts were invented: people only lived where there were natural sources of water nearby. After the invention of aqueducts: we have built cities in the stupidest of places. Simply because we could steal water from one region and concentrate it into a small area of real estate somewhere else.

Why do people even go to cities? Why do people even live in cities? Because that is where the money is. Because that is where the work is. That is where all wealth is stored, accumulated and made. You can forget all about the endless platitudes of seeking your dream, or finding a career, or having a personal vision. If there was no accumulation of wealth inside cities: people would never go there, or live there. Nobody in their right minds would put up with the congestion, the dirt, the callous social coldness and all of the other drawbacks that cities have. People flock to cities only because are repositories of accumulated wealth. The bigger the city: the more the wealth. The bigger the city, the bigger the waves of immigrants moving into them... making them even bigger, making even more people flock to them, making them even larger repositories of wealth and population... etc, etc. The bigger cities become: the more they suck wealth out of the surrounding countryside. The poorer the surrounding areas around cities become: the more the poor country people flock into the cities. In a seemingly endless, one-sided, vicious cycle of one-sided accumulation: driven by human greed.

What are cities? The word says it all. Cities are places where humans sit at ease. Cities are places of artificial ease. Sit-ease: get it? What are cities? Cities are places where humans shit. They are places of human shit. That's what shitease, I mean cities are; they are cesspools of pollution and ugliness..

The Effect of Reverse Pyramidity in Human Values

The fallacy of human pyramidal focus can be put simply. In order for anyone to prioritize values, you must value something more than something else. In order to value one thing more: all other things must be valued less. Once humans developed an overly selective awareness. Once we developed a tool-brain capable of reflective abstraction or thought. This arbitrary selective process of: experience, connection, identification, pyramidal focus, prioritization, pyramidalization, etc. All of which is segmented, created human abstract reality... Created a system of values where the top-most, focused-upon, identified-with, connected-to things... arbitrarily became more important. Whatever was pyramidally focused upon; became more important. Human abstractive reality became a distorted pyramidalization of actuality. Tool-values-concepts-dynamics took over human existence. Basically: any accumulation becomes valuable simply due to its accumulated mass. The tiny apex of any accumulation always valued more than its huge base.

Superstar baseball and hockey players receive fame and huge salaries: but the farm leagues and the thousands of athletes who are trained and groomed just so a few can reach this pyramidal status, get almost no recognition at all. In civilization: the more something is accumulated, the less value is given to any structural underpinning of what is valued, while the apex of that accumulation is given more value. The older something gets, the larger something gets, the more powerful something gets: whether this accumulation is one of age, size, skill, learning, or power or wealth... it's artificial value increases. What is rare is valuable: what is most plentiful is least valued. This pyramidal reversal of actuality exists in all civilized value systems.

We have completely de-valued the Natural Environment, which used to exist all around us. Now: we only value dead things, dead concepts and dead people. The older, deader, more unchanging something is, the more it is valued. All of the imperative necessities of life: water-air-plants-animals are de-valued, destroyed and polluted. While dead metals, dead knowledge, dead ideas, dead concepts, dead artifacts made by dead people are prized. The reverse Pyramidity of human tool-values is obvious. What is non-essential to life is valued above what is essential for life. The most non-essential is valued the most, while the most essential is valued the least. A large diamond is worth millions. A drink of water is worth nothing. Farmers go bankrupt, while sports stars make fortunes. This can be illustrated by the reverse pyramid of the arena: where the importance of a few overrides the importance of the collective whole... while the collective whole gives all their motivation, passion, intensity, interest, time, and energy to the few. If you took all of the human lives that are devoted to the investigation, restoration and preservation of dead things... And took all of the money that is devoted to such efforts... How anthropologists will spend a lifetime uncovering a few dead bones... How these dead relics are valued in the millions, billions, and trillions of dollars... And how they are placed in sacred shrines called museums: where people go to gawk, stare at, and worship them...

Why not channel some of these resources into living things instead of dead things? Yet such an idea does not even arise in the human brain. Why is that, eh? Because the awe and worship of old, dead things is a universal religion throughout all human cultures and all human civilization. If only one-tenth of all this money, energy, and time were spent on living people instead of dead things: it could easily end world poverty and world hunger. The fact is, the older something becomes; the sicker-weaker it is. The deader it becomes, the more it rots. The entire focus-worship of dead things in civilization is merely an imbalanced focus on one side of the regenerative wave model of life.

Within the one-sided, exclusive focus on dead-dying things, there is an obsessive focus that is mainly based upon accumulation: In essence: we want our dead civilization to grow, and do not care a fig about anything that that is growing and alive and is not dead.

The definition of civilization can be summed up in one sentence:

Civilization consists mainly of the manipulation, manufacture, accumulation, preservation, perpetuation and worship of dead things.

The reason for this is obvious: dead things don't grow back, living things do. Living Nature does not need constant maintenance and upkeep by humans in order to flourish. But anything not living; needs to be constantly maintained in order to stave off inevitable deterioration. It is no surprise that people flock to museums. Those artifacts represent most of the human life-energy expended, ever since civilization began. Simply put: our values go where our energy goes... into our tools... into what those tools produce. Because we need to expend all that time and energy maintaining dead things; we value them more than living things. Another vicious cycle where the cart leads the horse, and the original meanings and values are reversed and turned around.

If you want a perfect example of civilization in microcosm: look at the extinct culture of Easter Island. They moved giant rocks called monoliths, piling them up around the island, and worshipped them as spiritual totems of their dead ancestors. In order to do so: they had to cut down all the trees on the island: until they destroyed their entire ecosystem and turned the entire island into a deserted wasteland that became uninhabitable, and they disappeared.

The corruption of deadness that permeates any human soul can be seen in what they identify-with. The degree to which people own dead things; is the same degree to which these dead things own them. How much value do you put on a car? A house? An acquaintance? A loved one? How much value do you put on food? Clothes? Entertainment? Self-gratification? Ease? Success? Money? Where is the commonality of all these values? How do they differ? Where is the sense in it all? The level and degree of value which people place upon things is mixed up, conflicted, and unconnected. By valuing dead things, humans corrupt the values they live by.

The vicious cycle of reverse Pyramidity is: by most of the wealth being sucked out of an economy, not only do you get the rest of the population fighting over for what's left, but it forces the entire economy to become driven by the fear of poverty and greed. The more mass production, the cheaper the product, the more it sells. The more mass production, the greater the centralization of wealth and power, the greater the concentration of wealth into fewer hands, the harder it is to earn a living, the more money-driven people become, the more each penny counts, the more price becomes a factor, the more the bottom line becomes all consuming as a gauge of worth and greed.

The larger the distribution of mass produced goods, the more removed the consumer becomes from the whole process, the less they know about it. Thus; the actual cost of production becomes hidden from the consumer; they have no interest whatsoever in what that process involves, they are only interested in the product. If someone can buy a pair of pants from the gap for 20$; they have no interest in what sweat shop it came from, or how many people are locked inside a life of wage slavery and poverty due to their buying habits. There is no such thing as consumer awareness, or education, or consumer responsibility: creating the ethic of the end justifying the means. This ethical corruption is universal throughout all capitalistic economies; it is rampant throughout the world of business. The corrupt tool ethic of tool productivity supplanting human concerns has become the ethical norm for both producers and consumers.

Only when public awareness is raised enough, so people become more responsible as consumers. Only when the entire economic process is exposed and examined, and the question is asked:

‘For my own self-gratification and ease; do I want to enrich a single, distant, uncaring wealthy, powerful corporation... or do I want my neighbors and the poorest amongst us to benefit?’

Only when you put consumer responsibility into the widest, most inclusive context, can you get humane, informed, sane, responsible spending. Without this awareness, you have an irresponsible, poverty-driven, greed-driven, fear-driven, price driven, consumer mentality of inhuman selfishness and stupidity: and you will keep on having companies such as Wal-Mart and Home Depot destroying small businesses and communities wholesale by their unfair business practices and their cutthroat tactics of greed.

The Pyramidality of Values

The result of placing ourselves at the top of a pyramidal hierarchy of life-value is the slaughter and destruction of all other living organisms being routinely done without qualms or misgivings. While human life is supposedly regarded as sacred. But humans do not stop there. For human life itself is pyramidalized in value; according to the tool-dynamic of accumulated power-wealth-prestige-fame-knowledge.

Entire nations will mourn a single great leader... while everyday; millions of poor die in obscurity: unnoticed and unmourned.

The pyramidal makeup of human value systems is obvious. The genocide of 1,000,000 black Rwandans being murdered by their neighbors: is not worth a single mention in world news, while 3,000 rich white Americans being killed by suicidal terrorists deserves a media frenzy. One thousand single story buildings being destroyed in some disaster barely gets a mention, but a 110 story office building that happens to be one of the tallest buildings in the world is seen as a global catastrophe. The most powerful nation in the world being attacked by a tiny handful of terrorists produces massive collective shock around the world, while the small defenseless country of East Tabor being savagely attacked, invaded, and conquered... with all of the trademarks of an invading army... burning, looting, rape, and murder on a systematic scale; is barely considered worth a mention years later. Within civilization: the great sanctimonious lie of all human life being equally sacred is daily proven to be an empty phrase.

What is the value of a single human life? What is the value of 1,000,000 Rwandan lives compared to 3,000 American lives? If 3,000 American citizens die: should 350 million American citizens spend months mourning them? In that case, everyone would have to spend their entire lives mourning the countless millions who die every year; and have no time to live their own lives.

That is: if human life is equally sacred and equally valued. If the value of one dead human is worth millions of living people mourning over each dead one for months on end, which it is not. What are the most commonly reported and viewed news stories? The ones about death and dying. Why is death considered more important, more valuable than life? Why is so much news based upon the vicarious titillation of safe spectators viewing things they fear? Why are people compulsively driven to gawk at what is horrible? What does that tell you about how much fear exists inside the psyches of people? People are blind to the abnormality of their own normality.

After traumatizing an entire Nation with the media blitz repeating the horror of the New York World Trade Center attack over and over again... By a media glut of exclusive, obsessive coverage that sickened most people watching it. The media then blithely returned to its normal diet of publicized disasters and fake violence without batting an eyelash. What's worse is, that nobody noticed this insane contradiction. Apparently, actual violence on TV is bad, but fake violence is fine. The death of less than 3,000 of your own fellow citizens is a horrible catastrophe, while the death of millions in another country is merely a boring news story that barely registers on your psyche. Can somebody explain this?

Basically: in civilization: tool-values dominate over human-values. This can be demonstrated by how humans value their own creativity. All humans are genetically designed to be creative: yet rather than valuing the human experience-process of creating, humans value the end-result, instead of the enjoyable process. This is because we have been programmed to think linearly. The only reason painters should paint is because they enjoy doing it. The end-result of doing it is also the end of their enjoyment. Once the painting is finished: the enjoyable part of painting is over... The painter goes on to paint something else: he does not stop and stare at it for years. Other idiots are supposed to gawk at it, and stare at it for years, and marvel how well it was done.

This is the insanity of valuing the end-result of a dead tool-product of that creativity. It is all about hierarchy, status, snobbery and elitism. Millions of people who are supposedly not creative enough... are supposed to stare at crap made by an elite idiot who spent his life trying to copy the beauty of Nature onto a 2-dimensional surface. Here: diminishing possibility comes into play. You can only have one successful, publicly recognized painter: if you have thousands and millions of people called spectators, or voyeurs, or watchers, or gawkers... who do not paint. This is merely another aspect of the negative dynamic of reverse Pyramidality. Only a few at the top are allowed to enjoy the process of painting. All others are not allowed to do it all their lives. Only a few specialized idiots are allowed that privilege.

The more humans worship the creativity of the dead past, the less scope there is for humans to live creatively in the present. This is a basic conflict of all civilization: the opposition against all change, all creativity. All new creativity is merely an incremental sprinkling on top of that dead pile... Which once it is added, goes to become part of that pile of dead-created things and joins in resisting all future change. Until people are born into dead cultures, dead cities, dead traditions that are so sanctified; that nothing of the past is allowed to be changed... until all of Europe becomes a huge museum that exists only to be preserved.

Human creativity itself is not valued intrinsically. Human creativity is not even recognized as being intrinsic in all humans. People only recognize tool-creativity, tool-brain creativity, and that only pyramidally. Whatever humans do is hierarchically valued-prioritized-pyramidalized: even their own creativity. The way humans perceive creativity is distorted. To most, the infinite creativity of the entire universe is nothing but a series of meaningless, random occurrences. Literally, if it was not created by a human, it isn't creative, or of any importance or value. Whatever most people call creativity, or art, is usually something that can be preserved, duplicated, or played, or acted, over and over. Not unless artistic creativity can withstand the test of time, not until it is dead, does it become glorified and worshipped as a classic. The older and deader this kind of art is, the more it is sanctified and worshipped. This trains people to like the same things, the same songs, artists, and develop set of preferences and tastes. By training people to have duplicated, identical tastes, values, likings, we become 'cultured'. Anyone who does not share our values and tastes are uncultured. Instead of our aesthetic boundaries being widened: they are narrowed into a one-size-fits-all formula of conformist culture. Only some supposed pinnacle of artistic expression is ever focused on and revered, while all other creativity of all other artists, all other people, is ignored.

Chaos and Randomness

The idea of chaos is closely allied to the idea of randomness. Both posit the assumption that there is no apparent reason for why things happen. Blind luck, chance, can also be put into the same basic assumption. Their rationale goes like this: if there is no reason for why or how things happen, if you cannot make any sense out of causality: then it is meaningless. People tend to see human society and civilization as being based upon Law and order, while regarding the Universe as a vast, meaningless, random, chaotic place, where things happen for no reason. Here is the curious reversal of human perception: or rather, it's reflective projection of the human condition onto the Universe. As any scientist knows: it is exactly the opposite that is true. The Laws of the Universe are far more understandable and predictable than the Laws of humans and the civilization they live in. One never need worry that the law of gravity will be applied only to certain bodies and not to others.

Human value-systems and abstract ideas do not coincide with the rest of the Universe. Human Laws do not coincide with the Laws of the Universe. However, people make the error of thinking that what they created, what they identify-with, what they are connected-to: makes sense: while all of the rest of the Universe is unpredictable chaos. People think that what they are not connected-to, what they do not identify-with, makes no sense at all. Even if they cannot offer an understandable explanation for why, and how they hold their particular ideas and beliefs. Nor can they uphold and explain their disparate opinions to each other without disagreement. The reason for this is obvious: most people are not understandable to themselves to begin with.

There is no such difficulty with The Laws of the Universe. They are perfectly explainable. They do not contradict each other. They make total sense, and anybody who wants to: can understand them. The only reason we do not completely understand them is because we have not yet completely discovered how they work. So the actual truth of the matter is the exact opposite of this popular view. The only thing in the Universe that is chaotic, random or meaningless, is human society: or rather civilization: not the other way around.

The belief in luck or randomness is inevitably, at some level, a belief in meaninglessness. In order to gamble, you must at some level and in some way, give up some belief in having control over your own life. This comes from a feeling of powerlessness. If you did not feel this way, you would have no reason to gamble. Throughout history, people have worshiped oracles, believed in soothsayers, fortunetellers, made decisions based upon studying the entrails of sacrificial animals. How different is that kind of superstition from a belief in luck, randomness or fate?

In all of these examples, people give up their belief in being able to control their own destiny, their own lives. The belief in meaninglessness and the attempt to fill that empty void with anything: even superstition, was created when humans first felt a need to invent meaning for their own lives. And the root origin of this need is the fear of powerlessness: or uselessness, which translates into the fear of meaninglessness. That is how culture creates superstition. That is also how superstition creates culture. A belief in luck or fate is an easy answer, an easy way to appease and rationalize the sense of powerlessness and meaninglessness in your life, which comes from existing inside the hierarchical structure of civilization. It is also an easy way of giving an answer to all the infinite unknown mysteries of the actual Universe. Rather than daring to explore the unknown: we simply label it as meaningless chaos. Without culture or civilization, the idea of luck or randomness could not exist.

Civilized human understanding is based upon fear. The only things we do not fear, is what we can control. Whatever humans cannot control: they fear.

The idea that laws should be predictable, has been distorted into an idea that Laws should protect you from unpredictable things you cannot control, and do not understand. Rather than trying to learn what Universal Laws of the Universe actually are, and learning how we should actually live: civilization tells us what these Laws are. But civilized laws are not universal laws. The laws of civilization are not the laws of the Universe. Instead of living by artificial civilized laws, and being protected by the artificial walls and ecosystems of civilization. If we went to the trouble of exploring our actual Universe, and learned what its Universal laws actually are, and lived by these actual laws: we would not need the laws of civilization at all.

Values

There are two basic kinds of values: one that gains value by the dynamic of accumulation, and the other kind of value; which cannot be measured, piled up or accumulated. Unfortunately, humans ascribe almost exclusively to this first kind of value. In actuality, humans should possess a balance of both; but only in a natural context of a natural, living environment-ecosystem. The natural living values of Wonder, Love, Courage, Honesty, Happiness, Fun, Laughter, Peace, Excitement, Learning, Growth, Change, etc. Do not alter in their intrinsic worth, nature, or function: but our appreciation of them can grow and we can learn to use them better. Actually: they are not values: they are conditions of being; they are human conditions of being. To even try and turn these human conditions of being... or these conditions of human beings into abstract 'values' is in itself an inhuman tool-use of ourselves, our lives-thoughts-feelings etc.

However, anything that is a dead value, and not a living one, automatically corrupts our living moral, ethical and spiritual values. Dead values do not grow or change, or evolve: they only pile up, accumulate, fester and rot. All ego-based values based upon separation, segmentation, and accumulation are corrupting values.

So: the value of dead facts: knowledge, the value of dead things-posessions: wealth, the value of using dead tools: power, and the value of social status, or human life-energy being turned into a dead hierarchy of these aforementioned values are all corrupting in their effect.

The Values of Ease and Hardship

For all other animals and all other living things except humans: hardship and ease are merely the subjective conditions of their environment. Nature throws at them periodic cycles of Hardship and Ease. But these cycles are so overlapping on different levels and in different contexts that they are not simple, two-dimensional absolutes.

For a bear in summer: hardship consists in finding as much food as possible to store up fat for the winter. Ease consists of the warmth of summer, and ease of living when food is found everywhere. The highest form of ease and hardship is seen in bears being playful, creative, exploring, having fun while finding food also. In winter: hardship consists of fighting off the cold by finding a cave and hibernating-sleeping-and saving as much energy as possible to be able to live through the long, cold winter months when there is very little food available. But this is not an absolute way bears live. They wake up in the middle of winter and go out exploring. They laze during summer when they should be storing up as much excess calories as possible.

For a Wildebeest on the plains of Africa: hardship during the dry season is lack of food and water. Having to use all of their body energy to stay alive and escape predators while migrating hundreds of miles. Then there is the winter season ease: grazing in their Northern pastures that have no predators to be wary of. Then there is the hardship of the return migration to the Southern Plains while running a gauntlet of predators. Then there is a mixed condition of the wet season in the South. Food all around, mating, birthing... but also every night there is the terror of the killers stalking the herds. So during the Southern wet season: generally you have an intensified condition of both ease and hardship going on... First there is a swing of daily ease with relatively few predators that are active... and then the terror of predators stalking the herds all night; with continual unrest among the herds, stampedes of frightened Wildebeest running blindly in the dark; as the killers pull down their victims and feed on them. There is also the physical reverse of ease and hardship: resting-sleeping at night and being active during the daytime. The natural cycle of ease-hardship on the Serengeti is destroyed by predators making sure that grazing animals never get a good night's sleep. This makes them vulnerable to attack during the daytime also because their senses are dulled, their awareness is dulled from lack of sleep and exhaustion.

These are only general examples. Hardship and ease are merely general terms for the kind of experiences they undergo. Since all living things are at the mercy of forces that are greater and more powerful than they are; they adapt to them. So they seemingly, and invariably take the path of least resistance. Not the path of most resistance. Or in human terms: the choice of laziness, the choice of cowardice. The word adaptation itself is merely a human assumption that all living things are lazy cowards and do not want to experience paths of high resistance. Whether that is true or not, to what degree it may be true; varies with each molecule-cell-muscle tissue-organ-organism. If you want to have as many different and interesting experiences as possible... then it also makes sense to avoid the path of most resistance... You try to avoid all conflict that is not interesting and different... or does not suit you, or whatever you do not like.

What sense is there to go out in a storm looking for food... when all the other animals are safely hidden away in burrows, and the rain and wind make it almost impossible to detect where they are? But if you first find those empty burrows when it is sunny... with the animals gone. And mark each burrow with a long tall Pole that is easily visible in a daylight thundershower. Then going out to these burrows in a thunderstorm suddenly becomes a very efficient way of getting meat. Since the rain will drown out the sounds of your approach, and the animals will be caught literally napping. Approaching the burrows when it is not raining? The sound of a foot stepping on dry grass or twigs? Many sentinel animals giving the warning to your presence are simply not on the job during a thunderstorm... Hunting nocturnal creatures in their burrows in the daytime... by reversing your tactics. You gain an incredible advantage. A retreating army that suddenly reverses its retreat into an attack can take the winning army by surprise and turn a rout into a victory. Why? Because they decided to attack at the most difficult instant, in the most difficult conditions.

This idea has never been studied, or evaluated, or compared or exposed to human awareness. The idea that the more hardship you seek out: the more efficiently you expend your energy. And the better return-reaction you get for it. Catching a sleeping animal in the day makes your kill quicker and easier. Catching them in a thunderstorm when they think they are safe is also another advantage of surprise. Catching your enemy when they least expect it allows you to beat them faster, and more decisively. Climbing up a seemingly inaccessible cliff to suddenly attack your enemy from behind, or even from higher up, can be so demoralizing that they will retreat or surrender. Whereas if you attacked them easily from the front... slowly climbing up, and showing them how much you have to hide from them in order to even get into position to attack only gives them more incentive to attack you and prevent you from gaining any advantage over them.

The secrets of voluntary hardship, the success of voluntary hardship works on all levels, in all ways.

What sense is there is expending precious energy doing anything? Unless you have a good reason for it. Once you have eaten enough to stop being hungry, you lie down and digest that food. Once you had an experience, you lie down and digest that experience. The term ease is only a way of describing how living things hoard, save and preserve their energy for the times when they will need it. By not depleting their energy reserves; they can have more interesting experiences, they can learn more, change more and become destructively wiser in avoiding paths of the most resistance. All living things are lazy as hell. When lions makes a kill and gorge on it; they flop over and instantly become the laziest things on Earth. The instant humans finish doing all necessary chores, or hardships... they instantly become lazy. Unless they can find more interesting experiences... like hobbies, or sports, or TV, or whatever. If there is nothing interesting going on around them, if there are no interesting alternatives or avenues or paths to choose from: they instantly become lazy. That is what we call ease after expending energy.

The question is: should you seek out more interesting experiences, or is that seeking a waste of energy since even if you spend tons of energy seeking interesting experiences, there are simply none to be found? Whether humans actively seek out interesting experiences, or go into a state of ease or laziness is determines by the law of diminishing, or increasing returns. Or negative, or positive energy flow. If the more energy they expend, the less interesting their experiences are... they stop expending energy because it is a waste of energy and become lazy, do not move-think-feel. If the more energy they expend. The more interesting experiences they have, then they expend more energy, experience more interesting things that make them feel more Pure Wonder... and this energizes their life-energy so they can become more active, and think-feel-do more things.

This depends on how we were raised and the conditions we were raised in. If we were raised in interesting conditions, in different, changing, diverse conditions, we will seek to keep on living in the same kind on actively changing conditions. If we were raised in non-changing conditions, where we were not allowed to be active, or explore, or run and play and laugh, etc; we will seek out conditions that were like the ones we were raised-in, or the norm of activity or slothfulness that we got used to as children or babies. This is the imprisoning hold our subconscious minds have on us. For whatever reason the early conditions of our lives were active and interesting... or boring and slothful; we are imprisoned in that early normality by the programmed wiring of our subconscious mind.

Unless... we become aware of the destructive program that is forcing us into unintelligent habits and consciously fight that unconscious program and do the opposite of what it is telling us to do. That creates an unholy hell of inner conflict inside us that depletes all of our energy reserves. So even consciously fighting your own subconscious programs does not work. Your subconscious merely fights until your energy reserves are depleted... and only when you do what it tells you to do; will it stop depleting your energy and allow you to do anything. All humans are prisoners of their own subconscious programmed unloving reflexive responses. The only way to re-wire these unloving reflexive responses is by reflexively replacing them with loving responses... or positive energy.

All positive energy flows are more powerful than negative energy-flows. This rewiring is merely following a path of higher-more resistance, rather than less resistance... Only that path has more interesting positive feedback or love or fun, or pleasure in it. It also has more difficulty and hardship in it. It has a reward of increasing return instead of a diminishing return. The only thing anyone needs to do to change subconscious negatively programmed reflexive responses that are unintelligent and bad for you... is find a way of living in a condition, or environment that replaces these negatively programmed paths with positively programmed paths which allow you to explore more paths and have more interesting experiences. The only way you can change the conditions of your own subconscious; is by finding a new environment that has more hardship in it, and more ease in it. So you experience more positive and negative energy-flows. The experiencing of more positive energy flow, and negative energy-flow is a condition of hardship. The experiencing of less positive and negative energy-flow is a condition of ease.

These two values or Conditions can to be defined good or bad; depending on their context: whether they are life-oriented, or tool-oriented. The hardship of undergoing difficulty by living within a living environment is a necessary, good, positive value. It forces us to grow, learn, adapt and change: both spontaneously and creatively. It helps us learn how to live better under different, changing conditions; it helps us to deal with adversity, it helps us learn how to have fun. By having to adapt to it and deal with it on a close, intimate level:. Hardship is a necessary element of living in Nature. It is the essential element that gives our lives meaning. Without human hardship, there would be no stories to be told, and nothing to be learned-from. Natural hardship teaches human values. Tool-hardship does not. The ease and comfort of any repetitive tool-use: whether it is using our bodies, or our minds as tools, indoctrinates people into non-learning smugness, blindness and unawareness. The hardship of living in Nature and not apart from it, gives us so many things: it gives us an appreciation of all the beauties, dangers, and wonders of Nature, which we would otherwise not have. It forces us to learn and grow by being constantly challenged by new difficulties and conditions. It helps us develop our sense of inner and outer wonder. The beauty, peace and stillness of a natural environment reflectively evokes that beauty, peace and stillness in our own psyches-souls. The effect is a natural biofeedback of inner and outer balance that is self-healing: because Nature itself is a naturally self-balancing, self-healing system.

Another area that demonstrates the complete corruption of tool-hardship is our genetic health. Every geneticist, every biologist, every naturalist will tell you that one major reason the human species has been producing more sickly, weak, damaged, deformed babies... why more and human babies are born with all kinds of health problems from missing brains to failed kidney functions, to hundreds of specific genetically transferred dysfunctions, weaknesses, diseases, susceptibility to all kinds of diseases, allergies, viruses, etc... and an untold host of other physical, emotional, psychological, organic, cellular, glandular, health problems; is that humans do not practice what Darwin called: natural selection.

Ever since humans have become civilized, ever since nature stopped weeding out all the less healthy humans, ever since humans have used tools to insure that they survive: regardless of how genetically unfit they are, the human species has become steadily a sicker and more diseased species... producing proportionally more sick infants and children. For every baby that is born completely healthy: there are progressively more and more unhealthy babies being born. Because of civilization, humans do not need to undergo any natural hardship. Civilization protects humans from all natural hardships and replaces them with artificial hardships, which have nothing to do with keeping humans healthy, happy and well balanced as strong, vibrant animals who produce strong, vibrant, healthy babies. This comes from the artificial ease that tools give humans. It comes from the artificial ease of never having to face any natural elements or hardships. Tool hardship only produces stronger, more vibrant tools while parasitically sucking the life-energy from their symbiotic-hosts and slowly making us more disease-ridden, weaker and more sickly. Forcing humans to pour huge amounts of resources trying to fight all kinds of illnesses when all we need to do is simply stop trying to save every weak, sickly, diseased human from the horror of dying as they were supposed to.

The civilized concept of humanity and humaneness is completely genetically, logically, emotionally, psychologically, insane, inhuman and vicious. It forces weeping mothers to waste their entire lives feeding and caring for genetic blobs that were never supposed to have been born alive. But because of the machine-wonders of mechanical technology, modern medicine is saving these diseased creatures by the pack load so their parents can agonize during their entire lives over them and sacrifice their own lives for no good end, no good purpose, no good result. Why keep any human no matter how useless or diseased alive even if the suffering creature itself wants to die and wishes their torturers would leave them alone to die a simple, natural death instead of being kept alive to suffer pointlessly for no reason.

The only reason for this is the fear of dying. Their parents are such arrant cowards, that they cannot face the pain of losing something they think they have become attached to and love. When all the time it is merely the basic human fear of dying being projected from the insane fear-filled parents and medical torturers onto the unhealthy victims who would much rather die as quickly as possible... instead of being forced to endure untold agonies for what? For an unhealthy unproductive, pointless existence.

One of the worst myths of modern false humanity is how all this pointless creation and preservation and accumulation of human agony is supposed to ennoble self-sacrificing people... who waste their lives sucking on the misery of their sick victims. As if human happiness can be achieved, if you are next to someone else who is sick and in pain... and there is nothing you can do to heal them, or make them any better, or feel any better. There is so much pointless self-sacrifice, so much energy wasted just to keep rich people from dying. Do these rich families care about healthy young babies that are dying from completely curable problems? No. They would rather spend millions of dollars upon their own genetically unhealthy offspring than use those millions of dollars to save hundreds, even thousands more children. Who could actually repay their generosity and become valuable assets to society: instead of one-way drains of huge resources that could be spent better, more intelligently and more humanely. This produces genetic cripples such as Stephen Hawkins. Our sanctification of the disabilities of human cripples allows him to spout all kinds of non-scientific gibberish and be publicly hailed for it. Simply because most people are terrified of disagreeing him and being seen as attacking a cripple. Science is not interested in how many more genetic cripples are born to genetically flawed humans, who should never have given birth to another genetic cripple in the first place. We humans are far too addicted to our own tool-ease to ever try to undergo any hardship that might improve the genetic health of our own species. We do this to other species without a thought of being inhumane. We allow millions of healthy babies starve and die of malnutrition simply because their parents are poor. While rich people have genetically defective babies who are coddled and fortunes are spent keeping them alive. Hawkins is a genius. Why? Because he was the first to discover the sickest, deadest thing in the Universe. Black Holes. And figured out what is inside them. Gee. What a coincidence.

Having babies... having as many babies as you want... sex... pleasure... peer pressure... customs, culture... the entire myth of civilized living... the fear of death... the fear of dying, makes all humans refuse to address the truth of our own genetic sickliness honestly. We try to breed our own domesticated animals to be as healthy as possible. But we do not try to do this for ourselves. Nature does this to all living things naturally. But we have placed ourselves above the Laws of Nature, and chosen to ignore the Laws of the Universe, the laws of Biology, the laws of Physics and the Laws of Evolution... Because we do not want to die... we do not want to go extinct... we do not want to endure any hardship if we can possibly avoid it. All because we have chosen civilized tool-hardship over human-hardship...

over natural hardship... genetic hardship... biologic hardship... physical hardship, emotional hardship, sexual hardship, mental hardship, social hardship, personal hardship; because of using tools.

For example take fasting. Fasting mimics the conditions our ancestors lived under for millions of years. Those who could endure starvation better and longer outlasted the others. Fasting, or short periods of starvation, helps the body to periodically rid itself of many built-up toxins. It purifies, renews and re-balances our entire system. We are genetically designed to be healthier under certain natural parameters of hardship. That is why it is actually good for us to go on intermittent fasts for short periods.

However, through the invention and development of civilization: the increased ease of tool-use pushed the natural parameters of health-hardship-fasting out of balance until civilized norms completely replaced the natural ecosystems we lived in. Today; all civilized people starting from birth, are trained in the ethics and principles of self-gratification and ease; not hardship. Instead, we are trained to avoid human hardship. We are trained to reject the ethic of self-sacrifice and the ethic of giving. But life is not possible without self-sacrifice. All the humanizing aspects of love, marriage, raising children, cooperation and team sports, are not possible without self-sacrifice. Self-sacrifice is the necessary training all people must undergo in order to develop and discover the deepest joys and happiness, which comes from true giving. Hardship becomes a humanizing force only if there is some element of self-sacrifice. People are humanized through suffering only if it is selfless, unselfish and self-sacrificing. By not training and teaching our children hardship and self-sacrifice, by only teaching them the ethic of self-gratification: modern consumer culture has doomed billions to shallow, unhappy lives; poisoned by greed, selfishness, egoism, arrogance, smugness, cowardice, dishonesty, and all the other vices that modern civilization nurtures and promotes. Tool-oriented hardship does not humanize us. The hardship of using tools comes under two headings: it either forces us to become highly specialized, so we only use a tiny part of our human potential, or it becomes boring; so you end up doing something repetitively, replicating things, motions, over and over without learning anything new in the process. Or both.

The value of ease can also be categorized in these two ways. The life-ease of living within a living environment due to its natural diversity is interesting and refreshing. It inspires us to use and develop all of our life-values. However, the tool-ease of living within a dead environment does not do this. Either it inspires us to escape its boring deadness through busyness and work, or it inspire us to escape boredom by being distracted and vicariously entertained, or it inspires us to escape it temporarily by having holidays or vacations. It inspires us either to be active or non-active tools... either to work or vegetate in some vacuous, mindless, non-active, non-thinking, non-feeling, nonphysical way.

The terms of hardship and ease are merely one-way of describing the energy-flow of living organisms. Whether you describe energy as flowing up or down, as a wave, or back and forth as a vibration, or hard and easy as in life experiences: the point is that none of it can or should be ever one-sided. Once any energy-flow becomes one-sided, it stops flowing, it stops evolving, it stops experiencing and it stops changing. For human lives to be dynamically balanced: all ease should only be a dynamically balanced result of hardship... and all hardship should only be a dynamically balanced result of ease. Both should be dynamically balanced. You cannot have any meaningful ease that is truly satisfying unless you earn it through hardship. And you will never experience any hardship that is truly satisfying unless it is rewarded by ease.

Happiness comes from harmonic balance; it comes from a complex dynamic balance of hardship and ease in your life. It comes from first recognizing which hardships are unavoidable, which are desirable and which are undesirable and avoidable. Originally, it was a blend of our ability to evolve-adapting-learn-change... and our changing eco-systems that were evolving-learning-adapting to the changing Universe. Living organisms are on the bottom of this dynamic. The dynamic balance of everything smaller is more affected by the dynamic balance of everything bigger. The bigger context always defines the smaller context more than the smaller context defines the bigger. The whole is always greater than the sum of its parts. The greater context is always more powerful than the smaller context. To a large extent, the more powerful-greater context of the eco-systems we lived in; determined which hardships we underwent and which we did not. Eco-systems determine which species go extinct and which do not: based on their multi-functional usefulness to that eco-system. The more specialized any species becomes, the less useful it becomes: the more easily it can lose its usefulness to its eco-system, the more easily it can go extinct.

Humans found a way to escape having to be useful to the eco-systems they lived in... by creating their own artificial tool eco-system based upon tool-principles, tool-dynamics, toll functions that are not universal, and are not useful to the rest of the universe. We replaced natural hardship with tool-hardship. But we are not in control of our tools! Tool-hardship is not manageable. We do not throw them away when they get too easy to use. We almost never go back to using simpler tools. We almost never use tools that are harder to use, or take more energy and more time to use.

Because we worship our own tools, we have created tool-systems that preach working hard with tools... and the persistence of never stopping ever... as the way to succeed. But... billions and millions of people following this gospel never succeed, never achieve their goals... simply because the pyramidal exclusivity you find everywhere in the world. Regardless of how hard they work or how talented people are... only 11% of any success is determined by how hard you work or how good you are. For the most part, the Protestant Work Ethic that is based upon the Fairy Tale that hard work is always rewarded is an obscene lie. The belief that ability, talent, competence, intelligence, effort, is recognized and rewarded is an obscene lie for most of the people on this planet. This creates massive, mass hopelessness in the workplace. This creates massive unhappiness... resulting in the boredom of the masses, frustration of the masses, and the craving for distractions in the masses. It creates a yearning for every imaginable kind of escapism.

This is one reason why natural hardship is better than any civilized tool-hardship. In nature, you either succeed-live... or fail-die... on your own merits, your own abilities, your own efforts. Humans and our ancestors managed to get around this by using tools. Humans do not want to introduce that level of hardship into their civilized systems... it is too inhumane. Too unloving... as far as humans are concerned: a dead tool is more loving than the entire Universe, because civilization was made and created exclusively by humans to make our lives easier. Humans are simply not intelligent enough to know what is actually good for them. We constantly make the wrong choices, and never solve our problems. We only make things worse instead. That is bad enough... but we keep on repeating the same mistakes. Nature has an easy answer to animals that do not learn-adapt-change. They go extinct. We refuse to allow natural forces to teach us anything. We refuse to die. We refuse to listen to or abide by any universal truths or principles. Is that a more humane, more loving way of living? Hardship is only healthy if it stretches your capabilities to the utmost. You either overcome natural hardship... or it kills you. If the hardship you are experiencing is not testing you to this degree, then it is not a natural-balanced hardship.

Without this dynamic balance, you can never become truly happy. If you look at the happiest people around you, you will find that they have had more hardship in their lives than others, and that this hardship ultimately gave them a saner, more balanced ease. Happy people seek out hardship; they thrive on it: because they already possess a glut of too much ease; which they instinctively cannot stand, and pointedly go out of there way to avoid. The fundamental dualistic balance and dynamic of hardship and ease can be shown in countless examples: and is evident in both tool, and human aspects. Only; humans are not aware enough to discriminate between these two entirely different levels of energy-flow.

Civilized happiness is the complete opposite of actual happiness. It is based upon self-gratification, status, wealth, power, knowledge and exclusivity. It is based upon exclusion, not inclusion. If you are exclusively wealthy, exclusively famous, if you have any exclusive power, any exclusive privileges, any exclusive knowledge, any exclusive skills... why then; you have to be happy... You must be happy. .

Why? Because you are randomly lucky for no logical reason. You did not earn your luck. This results in the insane, obscene notion that happiness is a matter of pure luck. And what has this insane superstition created? The moral-ethical-spiritual plague of lotteries and gambling; exploding all over America and the Capitalistic World.

You are more fortunate than billions of people who are poorer than you. You are more famous than millions of other people. You are better at some skill than millions of other people. You are married to a woman who is more beautiful than millions of other women. You have a more expensive car, a bigger house, better clothes, better friends than other people. You are more educated than other people. You are in the elite top class. You are a success. You are rich. You have millions of dollars. You have machines and toys. You have more leisure time. You have more time to play. You have more time to have fun. You do not have to work and slave all your life away like most other people. You have servants. You have power. Other people admire you. Other people envy you.... So of course you are happy. You must be happy. Because you are luckier than millions and billions of other people. And they are not happy. They are unhappy. So if millions of unhappy people envy you... why of course, then by relative comparison you must be happy. This outer definition of happiness comes from the fact of hierarchy and the separation and isolation of classes and alienation of people from each other. Rich people are forced to distance themselves from poor people. :

- Emotionally.
- Psychologically.
- Culturally.
- Mentally.
- Physically.
- Socially.

And every other damn way they can dream up. Simply because if they are too close to them... it gives them a bad conscience. It makes them feel uncomfortable. It makes them feel ill at ease.

That is not happiness. That is:

That is a state of denial. You cannot be truly happy when you are in a state of denial and delusion.

People who define themselves by the outer civilized values of their society do not know what true happiness is. They are mentally dead inside. They are emotionally dead inside. They are physically dead inside. Because they have never developed or explored their inner selves. If they did so, they would realize that they are actually desperately unhappy. They would realize that some lucky babies are born happy. But by the time they grow up and become civilized: they become unhappy. And that they will only become happy when all the humans of this Earth are happy too.

True Happiness is inclusive: not exclusive. Happiness is the host of a party welcoming everyone who walks in equally... and not discriminating between his or her guests. Happiness is when everyone sits down at a table to eat. So they are on an equal footing with everyone else at the table. So they are all equally fortunate, or unfortunate. True happiness is the joy of sharing things equally with equals. And the instant any exclusivity comes into it: true happiness becomes poisoned and corrupted into luck... into privilege. Into Marie Antoinette whining pettishly about the ungrateful starving peasants who had no bread to eat, so why didn't they eat cake instead?

How can you be truly happy if you are secretly gloating to yourself about how lucky you are not to be one of the lower class rabble who envy you? How can you be truly happy, if you are so insulated from the pain and suffering of millions and billions of humans, that you do not give a shit about? Your happiness becomes a selfish, unthinking, arrogant evil. How can you be evil and truly happy at the same time? You can't. This is why the supposed happiness of famous stars and famous elite is pure bullshit. This is why most of their marriages fail, or they are total shams.

They are supposed to be icons of elite happiness. They are supposed to show to all the world that rich, famous, fortunate people are happier than poor people are. Try living with one of these icons day and night; and you will find them insufferable, spoiled rotten, with so many failings and weaknesses, and addictions and whims and vices: that you will leave in disgust. They are primped, padded, bolstered and held up by all the privileges and servants and help, and connections... having things done for them. If you had all their privileges: you would be spoiled too. But you will not be happy.

Their token happiness is only good for public show. They are only good for showing up at a gala event, and smiling at the cameras. When they go home: they are not smiling and happy. When they wake up: they are not happy. They are unhappy. They are only on in front of an audience. They live for it. They are addicted to the attention and adulation. Once they fall from fame: they go through painful readjustments, trying to learn how to live without the fame and success they became addicted to.

One reason for tool-technology, why it exists at all, a basic motivation that pushes it, a root justification for it... Almost every rationalization for it is physical ease. A good example is car technology. Cars have become easier and easier to drive until now, even a child could drive one. They have become increasingly comfortable, until they have become cocoons of pure luxury, convenience and endless new refinements. Until a cars are mostly judged by how easy it is to work its various accessories, how easy it is to read the gauges, etc.

The effects of physical ease technology are generally the same. The easier anything gets, the more people take it for granted, the more necessary they think it is, the more addicted they become to using it. The easier anything gets, the less it is valued, the more it is devalued, the more meaningless it becomes, the more addictively it is used and needed, the more money, time, effort energy and focus is spent on buying it, using it, and maintaining it. The easier a cell phone is to use, the more addictively people use them. Civilized technology exists mainly for the purpose of providing humans with greater and greater forms and conditions of ease. Any notion of removing or reducing any of this ease once it becomes normalized as an addictive-necessary habit-custom-tradition is universally resisted or completely ignored. People would rather die than give up the slightest modicum of ease they have become used-to... even when cell-phone use is a proven cause of injury and death in car accidents.

One reason for car accidents is that cars have become too easy to drive. Human are not designed to function linearly, doing only one thing at a time. We are designed to function non-linearly: doing-sensing more than one thing at a time. People eat, listen to the radio, do their hair, yell a their kids in the backseat, and drink coffee while driving. All because it takes almost no skill or concentration to drive a car most of the time. Any simple, linear function like holding a wheel for hours just to follow a single dotted line is so boring it would drive you crazy if you did not have something else to distract yourself with. Many car accidents are caused by daydreaming, letting your concentration, your awareness, and your focus slip... simply because you were never designed to focus your awareness like this in the first place. You were never designed to anything this easy. Making things too easy turns you stupid.

If making things easier made us perform better, function better: then making cars easier to drive should reduce car accidents. But the exact opposite is true: instead, it increases the incidents of collisions with people falling asleep at the wheel. This is why the incidents of car accidents on racetracks are much lower than on the streets and highways. Human are crisis-oriented animals, designed to function better under certain kinds of challenging, enjoyable difficulty and hardships rather than under the boring condition of too much ease. The harder it is to drive a car, the more challenging it is, the more difficult, the more dangerous and the more aware you are of that danger... the less accidents you have. Too much ease lulls you into a false feeling of safety... and that is deadly when you are driving a car. Ease is an artificial, drugged, condition of non-awareness.... Unless it is a direct, connected, causal reward-result of hardship. Hardship is rewarding, if only for the satisfaction of overcoming that hardship, and feeling that you actually earned the resulting lack of stress-struggle.

People do not understand that they do not choose pyramidal types of hardship. They choose them because they are the only choices they know of, or the only ones available... the only ones offered, allowed, approved of, etc... That is how civilization is structured. That is how our awareness has been trained. People choose careers that require them to climb various kinds of hierarchical social ladders. People seek to raise their earnings, their status and their physical standard of living. We are driven to raise buildings, pile up stones, huge earthen burial mounds... We are driven to take on all kinds of physical challenges and hardships. When Edmund Hillary was asked why he climbed Everest, his answer was: 'Because it is there.' But why do we worship only physical-mechanical hardship? Are we supposed to revere Hillary because he was better at putting one foot in front of him than someone else? Or because he was first? Or because the mountain he climbed was higher?

So find the biggest pile of beer bottles in the world, and be the first to climb the highest mountain made of beer bottles, and be put into the Guinness book of records as someone who is famous. This is the kind of insanity you get from selectively worshipping anything. You cannot find any hardships in civilized communities that are integrated, and challenge all of your human potential and abilities. Why not challenge all of yourself, instead of a tiny bit of yourself? That means: emotional, mental, sexual, biological-healthy hardship; all mixed together. So merely by living... you stretch all of your human abilities and potential. This kind-model of hardship does not even exist as a concept inside civilization. Civilized people only choose hardship selectively and by exclusion... not inclusively.

Civilized societies exist on various levels and kinds of comfort-ease addiction. Each level has its own set of normalized addictions. By removing as much hardship as possible, while increasing ease as much as possible: the effect is universally corrupting for all humans. It makes people addicted to all kinds of unhealthy, useless, unsane, evils. Because they have not earned their ease through hardship: they remain unhappy. The pleasures of all one-sided ease are all temporary and fleeting; spurring people to seek it endlessly, without any lasting effect. The self-gratification that comes from shopping vanishes almost instantly once you get home with your purchases... unless they are necessary and useful; in which case you will not get any thrill from buying them in the first place. The more superfluous your purchases are, the faster the pleasure of buying them disappears, the more you are driven to buy more junk that is useless. This is the universal sickness of our modern global consumer culture. Constantly striving and straining for ever-more ease, more comfort, more luxuries, is a universal civilized sickness today. Until half your life is spent trying to decide which toilet paper is softer, which brand of butter tastes better, which vase fits better with your bric-a-brac, which blouse matches which slacks better, which restaurant has better tasting food, or has better service, or a better ambience...

When you imbalance human awareness to this extent; then you get the insane waste of resources and money trying to make food and eating a luxury instead of a healthy necessity. Then you have people eating off gold plates. Then you get the convenience invention of the sandwich. Then you get the addiction for meat. Then you get the destruction of nearly every eco-system by over-populating it with domesticated animals to feed this meat addiction to overpopulated humans. Then you get the invention of fast food. Then the eating of food becomes a contest to see who can make the fastest, juiciest hamburger. Then you get countless kitchen appliances; all striving to make cooking easier. And on, and on, and on... Then you get nearly all of modern technology harnessed in striving for the easiest, immediate, most distracting, most entertaining forms of self-gratification possible. Then you get 100's of millions of sloth-bound, lazy, indifferent, smug, corrupted, comfort-addicted individuals all obsessed and focused solely upon their own selfish self-gratification... while meanwhile, billions of other less lucky, less fortunate people on this planet are doomed to living in hopeless, continual poverty, misery, oppression, and ignorance.

Tool-technology is only good for different forms of ease: physical ease, mental ease, emotional ease, social ease, individual ease, etc. All kinds of things that are easier; is universally sought after, glorified, and worshipped by people. While all forms of hardship is avoided, hated and considered to be evil. Why? Because much of tool-hardship inside civilization is unconnected to any rewarding pay-off. There is no reason to suffer tool-hardship if it only makes you bored or tired. Boring, meaningless linear functionality does not give your life meaning; it does not give you happiness, or make you any healthier. Tools have a one-sided, imbalanced usefulness: they only serve a one-sided purpose. They are only good in creating slothful tool-ease and boring tool-hardship. They only train us in linear functioning, mechanical functioning, distraction, pyramidal selective focus, abstractions, absolutes, separation, segmentation and accumulation. They cannot create human ease or human hardship because they are not alive. They have no Honesty, Courage or Love in them. They cannot give what they do not have.

If something feels good: that does not mean it is good for you. Unless you understand how the dynamics of hardship and ease work, unless you can tell the difference between human-ease, and tool-ease, between human hardship, and tool hardship: you will never learn how to be happy. Instead, you will be addicted to what the U.S. Bill of rights calls: 'The Pursuit of Happiness'... This is only a guarantee of perpetual unhappiness and unfulfillment. Civilization forces people to pursue happiness but never attain it. It forces them into an outer mechanical ethic of ease, or self-gratification: which promotes an inner ethic of self-gratification, with all the ensuing vices of cowardice, dishonesty, non-love, numbness, indifference, boredom, sloth, laziness, fear, envy, hate, etc...

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

The past 4-6 million years of tool evolution, tool addiction, comfort addictions and ease, has trained humans to avoid all kinds of hardship. It has trained us to avoid the slightest unpleasantness. We have become trained us to be emotional cowards, emotional liars, and emotional haters... instead of emotionally courageous, emotionally honest, and emotionally loving. We have become mental cowards, mental liars and mental haters. Instead of mentally honest, mentally courageous, and mentally loving. We have become physical cowards, physical liars and physical haters. Instead of physically honest, physically courageous, physically loving. The last 10,000 years of civilized existence has only been the latest evidence of the constantly accelerating effect that tools have had on us.

Throughout civilized history, people trying to escape all forms of civilized hardships has caused the flocking of people from the countryside to the cities... in an endless addictive need for easier physical living conditions. Have any of them found happiness doing this? If not, then why are still doing it while at the same time bemoaning how much they prefer their less-easy, less wealthy, less alienated former lifestyle? The answers are the same all around the world: no work, no money, no distractions, boredom, hardship. But money is money. A job is a job. Affluence is preferable to poverty. Distractions are preferable to trying to create your own fun. Ease is preferable to hardship.

Witness the social experiment of taking three modern-day families and making them live as homesteading pioneers for only six short months in the PBS television Docu-drama: 'Pioneer House'. After the experiment was over, one year later on the Oprah Winfrey show: they all voiced nearly identical sentiments: that in their modern existence there was just too much stuff, too many choices. That modern life was boring, compared to the challenges they had to face as pioneers. When Oprah idly asked them if any of them, given a choice; would go back. Every single one of them. The parents, the children, the family from L.A. the family from the Midwest, the newly married couple: a black man and a Jewish girl; all of them raised their hands so fast in unison: it was shocking. Their hands shot up so fast at the same time; it was as if they had practiced it.

When she asked them why: they said that as homesteaders, they were closer to each other and their neighbors... that the few simple possessions of 1880 held more personal meaning for them than all the modern conveniences they were inundated with. The unique perspective they gained was not only cultural, but also historical. By coming back to their old lifestyles, they had a different lifestyle to compare it to. Moreover, by comparing how they had felt and lived in the pioneer houses, and how they felt and lived in their modern car-culture consumer houses: they discovered a very profound truth. They found that the simpler life was, the harder it was, the more hardship they endured, the more challenging their life was; the more fun it was and the more meaningful it was also. Individually and personally; they had all come to this same conclusion ... but only after they had first lived in modern society all their lives, and then lived in a temporary, artificial pioneer society for six short months... and gone back to their old way of life in modern society for one full year. They had all individually had the chance to practice the four things needed to gain a better contextual understanding of the two different ways of life:

Experiences
Comparison
Evaluation
Perspective } equals better contextual understanding

They had all come to the same understanding that the harder life is; the happier they all were. Without even knowing it, they had exposed the entire fallacy of modern consumer culture and its ethic of self-gratification. Only... they did not have the greater understanding and perspective to realize what they had discovered. Moreover, the TV audience watching did not understand their unanimous confession either. It was merely an interesting observation. To be ignored and forgotten as just another one of the jam-packed distractions and unconnected, meaningless insights of that particular show. Simply because none of the tidbits of insight are ever put into any proper perspective, or put into any larger context that can make sense.

One big problem with the information age is that nobody bothers to digest the information, or try to connect it to other bits of information. If we did, we would understand many things. This illustrates how civilization represses, suppresses, stifles, denies, our healthy genetic yearnings... and turns them into sick-twisted yearnings... incoherent urges that are stifled and blocked so deeply: they only can surface in convoluted, distorted zigzag paths that destroy the pure intent of our blind healthy instinctive energy trying to get out of us. This creates an automatic condition of stress and unhappiness no matter what we try to do... simply because we are not allowed to express or experience our healthy genetic yearning directly and honestly. Simply because we live inside civilization.

The National Park where this pioneer experiment was tried; only allowed them to live there for six months. And then after they left: it used their leftover homes as a museum: as newly preserved examples of how early settlers had once lived.

Imagine yourself finding a better, happier, healthier way to live. And then having it taken away from you, forever forbidden to you, after six months... and that happy place then made into a museum. Having it ripped away from you, and never allowing you to ever return to it. And in addition: Returning to a culture, which you find suddenly, is not what you want at all. Returning to a normalcy and culture that ignores your unhappiness; because nobody else around you has ever experienced living in Nature.

If someone doesn't want to live in a consumer society; what can they do? Nothing. We have no choice of how we should live. We only have choices of consumption. It makes no sense go back to Nature alone; unless you are a hermit and like living alone. Nor can you do it successfully as a family. You need an entire community to do it successfully. What energy or interest is there to do this? You have to first create an entire community that wants to do this. Can you find five families that get along together on a close intimate level anywhere in America?

Actually one cabin was built by a single man, and his new to-be- bride joined him only after his cabin was finished. The three families in this experiment did not get along with each other at all. Yet they still became closer to each other than to the people they had known all their lives in modern civilization for a simple reason; they shared hardship together, the hardships they endured were the same because they were the hardships of the common environment they lived in. Nature. Not civilization.

Try developing that kind of closeness and intimacy when you don't have to. And then taking that intimacy onto more painful, more difficult levels voluntarily; in a Nature setting. Where anyone can leave instantly if they are not pleased. The experiment would fail before it even started. Why? Because there is an easier way of living just a few miles away; with tons of easier ways to do things, and consumer products.

In the beginning of this experiment: these three modern families thrown into a harder life all wanted to quit. The only reason these three families even stayed the appointed six months; was because of contractual obligations and the shame of losing face and backing out in front of all the world watching them, since it was being televised and documented in detail. Humans are designed to live as Nature forces us to. The very fact that we have invented tools and civilization; means we now need to find a way to do what we Nature used to make us do. Only now we have to do it to ourselves. We have to find a way to create conditions for ourselves, which forces us to live better, happier, healthier lives. We have to find ways to create unavoidable hardships.

After Oprah Winfrey saw this instant raising of hands from three different families... from four different cultures: Black, Jewish, White-Anglo-Saxon PROTESTANT and Southern Baptist. What possible reason could the richest woman on Earth have had in phoning the producers the next time they made a similar docu-drama called Colonial House, to ask them if she could participate in it? Why would someone who experienced poverty and being a second class black living in the most racist country on Earth against blacks... want to become a menial servant again? Because she did not get enough degradation when she was growing up poor in America? Because she did not get enough hard work? What was it about these social experiments that made her do this?

All film of her role in the project was cut from the documentary. The producer only showed her being warmly welcomed by the adulating worshipping 20th century participants in Colonial house. But not one shot of her on camera as a working member of the colony. Not even showing her leaving it, or saying how long she had actually been there.

Why? Because she was given special privileges. She was rich. She was famous. Her participation in Colonial exposed how corrupt the idea was in the first place. The idea had been to re-create the establishing first Jamestown colony using modern Americans instead of 16th Century Englishmen and women.

The Jamestown Colony never had any black servants to begin with in the first place: why would they want to stick in a rich black Prima Donna? And have her go through the hypocrisy of pretending to be a servant?

Every single one of the original Jamestown colonists was a European, English and White. The original colonists had come from Europe. Not from Africa. The word itself: colonist is a complete historical fraud. The first investors who sent these people to the New World never planned to colonize anything. It was only after they found the natives had no gold that they tried to find some other way to make a quick profit. The entire series was a complete historical fraud. The idea of the entire show was to recreate the historical conditions of the first Jamestown's attempt to survive for three months as closely as possible, using modern Americans instead of 16th Century Europeans. The whole thing was a farce that ignored the actual historical truth about the Plymouth Rock settlers. Putting Oprah Winfrey into that reenactment was like the first colony in Plymouth putting Queen Elizabeth in the colony as a menial servant. In the original colony; that kind of surprise would have been like sailing for six months to a new, unexplored continent: and three weeks later, seeing Queen Victoria walking out of the forest dressed in a servants garb to join them.

Oprah made them take out every clip of her in the colony, and used the footage for her own TV show. How could she learn anything from this experiment, when she went there only to visit as a privileged guest, and was never committed to it? Why did she have to have a companion coming along? Just to ease the first greeting. Meeting strangers terrified her. Her coming was planned as a complete surprise. None of the modern colonists knew she was coming. Why was she so terrified of what kind of reception she would meet? Was she terrified of being socially rejected? Why was her inclusion in the project as a special guest, kept secret from all of the other committed colonists? Why was this sprung on them at all? African people were not the first settlers to colonize North America. One of the most adored television personalities going to mingle with the little people; in a historical recreation documentary? In a safe controlled environment? And even then. She shows how much of a coward she is by worrying out loud on film how she will be greeted: and if the colonists will like her...

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

Does this begin to tell you how sick it is to become used to being worshipped by the masses as an everyday norm? Imagine if you were so socially pathetic, that you had to bring a companion along for emotional support to meet anyone who did not already worship you. Because then, you couldn't handle the rejection and the pain of not being worshipped. The humiliation of not being fawned upon. Not being greeted with hugs and smiles by total strangers. Huh?

'Eeek. I can't go out today. Some stranger in the street might not recognize how famous and rich I am. Eeek.'

Do you realize the sickness that Oprah Winfrey epitomizes? Having the power and control, fame, status; of being the most famous TV afternoon idol in America. A world famous celebrity. And yet this person was so envious of a few lucky families who experienced hardship together for six months. That she went out of her way to dabble her toe in a similar social experiment just to see what it was like. If the richest, most powerful woman in America acts like that. Would you want to be like her? What does that tell you of her inner insecurity and unhappiness? The entire concept of an upper class is based upon replacing inner values with outer ones. It is a trick, a slight of hand, an illusion which has been sold and swallowed for thousands of years.

The curse of modern civilization is by making life easier, civilization also makes life more meaningless and more boring; until all it can offer and all that is left is pointless ease, pointless self-gratification, pointless trivia and pointless trivialization.

In another PBS docu-drama called: 1900 House. A single modern family; lived in a Victorian house circa-1900. With no outer social life to ease the bone-crushing boredom of being totally isolated from all other people in society which was not the case in that era, and which automatically made the entire experiment a total fraud. They were loaded down with all the boring menial work of that earlier lifestyle. When the project came to a close; all of them regretted leaving. They were literally in tears when they left. The mother; who had worked harder than anyone else; expressed the greatest regret.

But the maid quit halfway through the project. She realized the hard work for little pay, and social degradation of being a household slave: was simply not worth it. She was the one who had worked the hardest and been paid the least, and been ignored the most. Maids of that era did not have the luxury of quitting and going back to a 20th Century lifestyle. Let people share hardships together as equals; and they are happy. But bring the separation of class and privilege into it: and you get rebellion, anger, disgust, backbiting, rage, conflict, unhappiness, social destruction and disintegration.

All humans instinctively, unconsciously and subconsciously yearn for, and crave: challenging living conditions that stretch their abilities in more ways than one. But it is the challenges of Life, and living that humans avoid, and run from... hiding in the much easier hardships of being forced to live as numbed tools. Why was this family so distraught at leaving all its Victorian hardships behind? Unless modern civilized humans are unhappy and unfulfilled without even knowing it. That is, unless they have a chance to compare their modern lifestyle to another way of living, and reflect upon it, compare the two... evaluate them, and put them into perspective.

We never know how unhappy we are unless we can compare our normality to another normality that has more hardship. We can only find out how much happier we can be; if and when we are faced with challenges and crises that we normally avoid like the plague.

Modern civilization is mostly a dead wasteland of old, dead, dying cultures that have been accumulating for 10,000 years. It is empty of challenge and challenging conditions. Incoherently, blindly; people unknowingly yearn for, and seek for what does not exist in it.

What is the challenge of modern civilization? Where are the challenges? Inside air-conditioned offices? Inside cars? Inside modern houses? What is the latest craze of working out in expensive gyms but people whose civilized lives are so easy: that without working out in these gyms, they become so horribly unfit and unhealthy that they cannot even stand to look at themselves?

One of the main pillars of modern destructive consumer morals is that every parent is morally obligated to give their children a better life. This is their rationale for becoming workaholics, neglecting their children when they need them the most. That rationalized morality is full of shit. What people are actually trying to do is give their children an easier life... not a better one.

Ask any person with any wisdom or insight at all on their deathbed; what their life would have been like; if they had had everything easy... If everything had been given to them instead of earning it. Ask them how much better off they would have been. And the ones with any brains will tell you they would never have amounted to anything, or accomplished anything without the hardship they endured.

This is one unavoidable stupidity of becoming too rich. Then you end up supporting your entire family, and their relatives... and your grandchildren as well... and their grandchildren. As they all manage to live off the dole of your amassed wealth after you have died. And the richer they get, the easier life they have, the unhappier and dumber they get. Do you want your grandchildren to have it easier than you had? Why? Is that intention good for them or for you... or for anyone?

Rich people get too fat. Many of them go to fat farms regularly; trying to rid themselves of body-fat. Their fat is an unavoidable byproduct their too-easy lifestyles. Affluent people living in affluent societies constantly develop all kinds of complicated medical conditions and illnesses; that poor people in a poor countries never get. Poor people die from an excess of accumulated poverty. Affluent people die from an excess of accumulated affluence. Both ways of living are sick.

Does modern civilization preach moderation, balance and equality? No. It preaches consumer excess. Civilization preaches, worships, values, and lionizes ease and gratification. Civilization preaches and practices accumulation.

If you want an historical perspective on the ever-increasing ease of civilized life: just read books that glorify civilized progress. These books are filled with the advantages a few modern humans have, from the benefits of using and owning the latest gadgets and machines. The trend towards greater ease is a universal.

Even in Religion, most modern Christian churches have thrown out the belief in Hell because it is too unpleasant an idea. It does not matter whether modern Christians sin or not. There is no Hell where they will be punished later. Only Heaven for the good, and a lack of heaven for the Evil.

What happens to killers and rapists? Just a neutral limbo where their punishment consists of merely being excluded from the grace of Heaven. What kind of religious-moral-ethical system is that; but a public, tacit, unspoken carte blanche for the practice of Evil all your life without ever having to worry about a Hell. What does this kind of ease-based religion teach? That if you can get away with murder without being caught while you are alive: you can get away with it after you die also. This is the kind of religious belief that is created, when literally everything is easy and nothing is hard or difficult.

Hardship-Health vs. Ease-Accumulation

Ease stems from one-sided accumulation. Health stems from non-accumulation. Civilized illness comes from accumulating something.

Cities attract all kinds of microbes, viruses, bacteria, insects and animals; to eat and process the accumulated rotting things which accumulate in every city. They are breeding grounds for disease simply because they places of ones-sided accumulate. Dirt, filth, poisons; come from one-sided accumulation.

Every kitchen in the world has problems with flies, insects, cockroaches, dirt, stains, unclean eating areas, unsafe, unhealthy foods rotting, and the problems of disposing accumulated waste. Living without accumulating anything produces zero waste. There is nothing wasteful or poisonous or rotting in Nature because it does not accumulate. The harm people do, the waste people create, the destruction people cause, the diseases people are infected with, the illnesses people suffer from: comes from the civilized custom of living in one place and accumulating things. Accumulating traditions, values, ideas, and preserving and perpetuating them: to rot people's minds with obsolete, outdated idiocies.

If you walk amidst the beauty of pure Nature and eat only what you find, and pick it straight from its living source for its much higher, incredibly nutritional power and value. If you keep on moving... then you end up with zero pollution, zero accumulation, zero rotting stuff, zero poisons, zero health risks, zero laziness, zero tools, zero ease and optimum health.

Hardship is merely a constriction of positive energy... making positive energy more powerful: by becoming normalized to being constricted and constantly fighting against that constriction. This way: positive energy can expand more, farther, learn more, experience more, experience living more intensely, become even more powerful, more wondering, more curious, more playful, more alive, more dynamically balanced, more fun, etc... That way your positive life-energy can be recycled and regenerated not as the same old energy, or a slowing down, dying energy... but a speeding-up, flourishing, more exciting energy.

All Life-Energy is designed to work positively by positive feedback systems. Hardship-ease is a positive feedback system only when there is more hardship than ease. Civilization is mostly made up of negative feedback systems; not positive ones. Civilization has more ease than hardship. That is why civilization's basic energy is negatively charged. That is why all mechanical energy is weak, and can only survive through the artificial mechanical energy and power of machines being fed huge amounts of raw resources, which they use inefficiently and wastefully. That is why machines break down, and run down, and rust, and malfunction, and never work properly and need huge amounts of maintenance to keep them running. Waterways and airways do not have to be continually repaired, and overhauled.

Civilized roadways, and power-grids and power-places of governments and businesses need endless maintenance just to keep functioning.

Where did the idea of ease come from? It grew slowly. From using tools. Different forms-levels of physical laziness became culturally accepted; until they were considered to be normal. And then it became a custom, and then it became a tradition. Until each new norm of ease: becomes such an integral part of the fabric of a culture... that it is not even noticed. Then it becomes invisible. It is taken for granted. It becomes assumed. It becomes unspoken. Nobody speaks of it. Like breathing.

From the first walking ape to sit on a rock. To the first Chief who was crowned sitting on a rock. To the first King to be crowned sitting on a throne. To people sitting down on chairs. To Kings sitting: holding huge feasts with too much food. To poor people eating while sitting down. From nomads sitting on horses, to warriors standing on chariots while being pulled by horses. To rich Kings: being pulled while sitting in rolling chariots called coaches. To every modern human sitting down whenever possible: eating, watching TV, on the computer, or on the phone. To modern humans traveling hundreds of miles a week sitting down in rolling mechanical chariots called cars, to hundreds of millions of people traveling through the air sitting down in mechanical birds called airplanes. As people become weaker and weaker... and sicker and sicker... and paler and paler... as their souls become deader and deader. All because the first powerful rich people forced others to work for them, and were carried on the backs of their slaves because they were too rich and too powerful, and spoiled and lazy. Until now you have a global culture of the worship of laziness as the highest elite culture. The whole history of human progress is regress not progress and it is stupid.

All self-gratification is corrupt. The word good in English comes from the French word: Gout. It means to taste. The word Gout in English means a disease that comes from self-gratification. The symptoms of gout come from a sedentary life style, the obsession of over-eating, and the addiction to rich food: this results in poor circulation, the lymphatic fluid in the legs not draining properly, swollen legs, aching joints, obesity, varicose veins; and other symptoms: which go on to create other illnesses and diseases.

Gout is a sickness that comes from the Middle Ages in Europe. It is still found today in fat people; who eat too much and are not physically active. Good: Means gout. Gout means to taste. To taste means to gratify your obsession to eat by only eating things that you like: not things that are healthy for you. The ethic of self-gratification is actually bad for you. Whatever civilized food you like is not good for you: it is bad for you. Whatever gratifies you instantly: is not good for you. What you think is good is actually bad. Gratifying your taste produces gout: not good. Gratifying your taste is not good: it is bad.

This sanity goes against all corporate policy. It goes against the unspoken religion of all consumers. It goes against the entire idea of creating an artificial ease called civilization in order to gratify yourself.

Human Suffering and Hardship

Suffering is necessary for people to heal. It wakes them up. You cannot heal from any painful experience until you either experience, or re-experience that pain; fully. If something was, or is too painful to experience. You are designed to experience that pain only if you are in a safe, loving, nurturing place. Where those who truly love you and accept you and understand you are willing to listen to you, care about you, be with you, help you, encourage you, and give you all the positive energy they can. So you know that you are not alone. So you can cry, and weep, and talk about what you feel and think that is important and relevant to you. Where you are allowed to do what you need to do in order to heal yourself.

Each person has things they need to do, to heal themselves. Moreover; only you know what those unique things are; for your healing path to be realized. You need to be amidst loving people who are wise enough to let you do what you need to do. Without them interfering with your personal healing path by thinking they know better, and telling you what you should do. Only by experiencing your own suffering fully, realizing it, understanding it, digesting it and accepting it: can you ever finally let go of your own pain fully. This is the inner hardship, which all humans need to go through in order to become more aware, more balanced, more sensitized, more healthy, more honest, more courageous and more loving.

The pain and suffering that comes from keeping your emotions and thoughts frozen, and locked up inside you is unnecessary. It is precisely this kind of frozen pain that all humans suffer from; because we all lack the inner honesty, the inner courage and the inner self-love needed to undertake the most difficult hardship of all: our own self-healing. We all lack the necessary loving support from others needed to fully experience our own pain totally. We lack others with the courage to share our pain. We lack the courage to share our pain with others. The result is; that we never heal from our pain. Unshared experience, undigested experience is frozen experience. We die with all of this pain locked up inside us. In essence: we suffer from this kind of pain unnecessarily, because there is no attempt to ever fully heal ourselves from our own inner pain.

The only sane approach to Life and living is one of healing. The insane approach to living; is functioning like a machine or tool. If you are not dedicated to healing yourself and others, then you are in the other camp. Then you are in the camp of the enemy, the camp of the machines: where people care nothing about inner suffering or healing, where people care nothing about their own inner pain and suffering; because they are too numbed and brutalized to even realize or feel their own inner pain... much less being sensitive enough to realize and empathize with the inner pain and suffering of others. Then you are in the camp of all the numbed, dulled, normalized humans who do not admit, or even know that they need to heal in the first place.

Rage and Unhappiness

Every human who ever lived has been unhappy. Every human living has rage and anger in them; civilization does not allow humans to express it. Why? Because if we did civilization would be destroyed as it should have been a long time ago. We are forced to live unnaturally inside civilization. We are forced to do things we do not like doing. Civilization forces us into doing things we hate because we live inside an artificial system which makes us unhappy. Civilization forces us into unnatural wrong ways of living. It is time for people to become aware of this.

Nature and Science

The scientific religion of amorality, the religion of convenience, the fad religions of the latest convenient theories. Has turned Science into a meaningless insane evil. The sick hypocrisy of Naturalists who call themselves scientists... wasting their lives; recording how animals live.

Without ever drawing any ethical moral or spiritual conclusions from their observations.

Nature... as something to be observed mindlessly.

For what?

Why?

To learn how other animals live?

If you refuse to draw any conclusions from your own observations; then what good are all these studies? Why not observe your own species? You have a much better understanding of how they think and what they feel and why and how. Try to find out why your own species is killing these animals and destroying their natural habitats as fast as possible. Instead of observing something that is being systematically being destroyed by civilized humans, and doing nothing about it.

Studying lonely bored, spoiled Pandas... who have developed their own culture of bored, spoiled laziness and elite snobbishness; from being the spoiled toys of Emperors for thousands of years. Why? All they are studying is how corrupt an animal can become from its contact with humans. Any sick, unfeeling, invasive observation of any species follows the same law of sub-atomic physics: Animals have been already corrupted for thousands of years by humans watching them, and by humans killing them. There is no such thing as an unspoiled wilderness or an unspoiled animal who behaves naturally. Once you observe an animal negatively, in other words unfeelingly. Scientifically. They instantly behave the way you think they will behave. They simply respond to the negative feedback they receive from you. No matter how sick and unfeeling your scientific observation is: it expects to see something. Every scientist has an entire litany of assumptions and beliefs and myths in their sick souls about Nature and wild animals. And they are almost never disappointed. Why? Because animals give them what they expect.

Unless you have no ego. Unless you live with the animal as an equal. Animals have so much they can teach us. We have so much we can teach them. To stick spoiled lonely bored, snobbish Pandas into a zoo environment and study them, thinking you will learn something by merely watching them? Treating them as things to be stared at? Objectifying them, and treating them like spoiled babies. Without any discipline or guidance, or love. Without setting any positive example. Without living with them. Without getting to know them. Without establishing trust and respect. And watch as they act like stupid, spoiled, destructive, fat idiots. Since they learned this behavior from watching the stupid spoiled fat Chinese mandarins who looked at them for thousands of years? And call this watching, this looking-at of animals, this staring-at animals... a scientific study of behavior? What if animals stare at us all the time? While we have a shit, while we have sex... 24 hours a day. Would you like that?

People should train these pandas to behave decently. They should discipline them severely if they are badly spoiled. Have you ever seen a dog that was spoiled and allowed to do anything they wanted to, and was never punished for whatever they did? This is exactly how Pandas behave.

Love them. Live with them. Play with them. Do not let them get away with anything. Give them a sharp lesson of discipline and teach by example, and you will be surprised how quickly these natural attributes, which scientists think are genetically programmed, disappear.

The Vicious Cycles of Civilized Ease and Hardship

If you study the 12,000 years of civilization emerging, growing, crumbling, building back up, crumbling again. Building back upon the ruins of older civilizations, older cultures. Which tells you nothing about how these people actually lived at any time. But if you look for the small telltale anecdotal evidence from many different sources, you will see the underlying universal dynamics involved. Each powerful Empire, Nation, State, City-State, Kingdom, Tribal Rulership, all the way back to the original bands that came out of Africa over 100,000 years ago... had a rise and decline of power. Each rise in power gave that ruler-elite class-tribe-kingdom-city-nation-empire more ease, more wealth, more power, more affluence. And each time; that increase of ease, that increase of wealth, that increase of power, that increase of affluence, that increase better tools was precisely the cause of their downfall: every single time without exception. And each time: they missed their past high-point of dominance and privilege, and sought to regain it.

Has this obvious historical lesson ever been taught? Has anyone ever warned people about it? The Old Testament of the Jews is full of warnings about the evils of Empire. The Israelites ignored their own prophets and were enslaved twice; and only after the third exodus; were they banished forever from a land of milk and honey; which they no longer deserved to live in. Now for a fourth time; this culture is ignoring the evils of Empire and becoming a warrior Nation again. What good are the famous Ten Commandments of the Hebrew Bible, if its own race steadfastly ignores them for three thousand years? What good is any Commandment never practiced if only lip-service is paid?

If you want to understand human history; you must be able to separate what people said, from what they actually did. Otherwise you mix lies with truths; and end up with a snarled mess of contradictions that make no sense. Look at the earliest surviving records of civilization. They are nothing more than a litany of rising and falling Empires. Each one bigger than the last. History is nothing but a continual extolling of how Empires became huge and how glorious they once were.

Is the vicious cycle of the rise and fall of Empires necessary for the existence of humans? Humans believe that this is the only way you can live. History is based upon a religious belief, that upper classes must oppress lower classes, or else the lower classes will rise up, and throw them out. Only to replace them with their own elite class. Every elite class has the perpetual problem of how to keep the lower classes down. Every culture, religion and society has found countless cunning ways of doing it.

Unfortunately: the only way they can do it, is to keep the lower classes as ignorant, lazy, drugged, distracted, and brainwashed as possible. If the lower class gets any idea that they are living under a system that is unfair. If the elite let the lower classes ever creep out of their normalized strata of total resignation, and indifference to their appointed lot in life. Then the existing elite class is in a lot of trouble.

How can this be avoided? History is a lesson book in how elite classes try to solve this vexing problem. One of the basic ways they have done it is to destroy the concept of fairness itself. Make fairness an impossible pipe dream. Make fairness nonexistent. You cannot miss it what you never experienced.. How can you miss the right to vote, if your Nation and your Culture never had it? How can you miss a TV: if you never saw one? But let the lower classes be exposed to anything better or easier, and let it be denied them: and then you will have trouble. You will have unrest.

If the lower classes are given the slightest bit of power or affluence: then they will start hungering for more. They will start becoming hungry for more power, more wealth, more affluence, more control. The culture of the divine right of Kings kept the poor masses in misery and ignorance for thousands of years by not allowing them to even entertain the idea that they had any right to power. But now; some Nations have actually allowed their people to vote. Now suddenly all the poor oppressed masses are unhappy because their dictators and rulers will not allow them that privilege. Now the entire world of humans will not be happy until every person in every Nation has the right to vote. For thousands of years; poor peasants lived happily as poor peasants: because the right to vote had not been invented yet. Now: all the poor peasants in the world are unhappy because they cannot vote. Today: every political power-group on Earth has turned the right to vote into a powerless joke by fighting against each other, and by corrupting the system every way they possibly can. Voting has been turned into a futile waste of time. Now the powers that be; are desperately trying to corrupt the power of the vote before that power is even given to poor people.

All of the oppressive systems that the elite of every society use to keep the lower classes down: rots the physical-moral-emotional-mental health and intelligence of those lower classes. Until they become less and less productive. Giving the elite less and less wealth, power, control. So the elite need to conquer-colonize-takeover more territory, more lower classes and more resources. To get more wealth, more power. Lower classes who are poorer, and more productive, and more uneducated. Who exist at a higher level of hardship, are more powerless, more gullible and can be exploited more easily.

Unfortunately in doing so, they go through the inevitable process of destroying their own power base of their own lower classes. This happened in huge obvious historical brushstrokes to the Romans. Their entire city became a welfare state that was on a perpetual public dole system merely to allow their elite the freedom to conquer other lands and kill, rob, rape, destroy them into total submission... into the Roman ways of civilized brutality, extortion, etc. By sucking nearly all of the known world's wealth into one city, they managed to extend their domination over Europe and the Mediterranean for hundreds of years. Waxing and waning in its power. Depending upon their elite rulers to keep things in order.

They did this by finally extending the rights of vassal-ship of the lower classes and letting them in on some of the spoils. At first, it was the citizens of the city itself that provided the soldiers necessary to fight their wars. Once that population declined into sloth and corruption, they used the outer farms as a source for their soldiers. Once they declined into stupefied stupidity and incompetence, they began hiring mercenaries to populate their armies. Once the mercenaries became too fickle to be trusted, they tried playing them off against each other. Until it was only the Praetorian Guard that decided who the next emperor would be. Their choices were at first good, then worse, then they became corrupted by the politics of the city and emperors were made and unmade so fast, there is barely any record of them because they were killed so fast they had no chance to rule at all. That put the power into the field commander's hands.

Then you had an endless series of Roman Generals in outlying provinces that invaded their own city in order to conquer it. Just as today: American Robber Baron Corporations invade their own land to conquer it and abscond with their spoils

Each time they did that, the Roman bitch... the entire city came out and submitted to them as obviously as a dog rolling over on its back, spreading its legs and wagging its tail. Romans came out in droves to slavishly welcome their latest conquering General just as American Corporate heads are now slavishly admired. In terror of staying home and being reported as not supporting the latest, new regime. Until they were so sated with the latest idiot who came conquering; that nobody showed up. That incensed the conquering generals so badly that they went on rampages... killing, burning and looting the entire city. Until the Romans finally learned to show up for these triumphal marches.

There are many first-hand accounts of the abysmal stupidity of the medieval Romans. The city became a pigsty of idiots... and every human with half a shred of intelligence fled its borders until it was almost a ghost town. The bottom line was that after Rome lost its dominance; it took Rome centuries of slowly enduring more hardship; until the stupidity of its worst cultural practices were finally slightly weeded out; so the intelligence levels went up again... slightly.

How fast have the IQ scores of college entrance exams gone down in the last forty years in America? Go look at the statistical evidence. A fairly similar test done over a long period of time is more than a bell curve, or a wave indicator. It is an indicator of whether the wave or curve is resting on a rising or sinking ocean of the norm of human intelligence.

The model of the Chin Dynasty in what became later to be known as China; was the same. Only they had organized an entire class of civil servants to run the entire Empire regardless of which bunch of murdering savages came in to rule them. Their empire was so huge that the new barbarians, no matter how much they pillaged, could never pillage all of it. So the Chinese learned to keep their faces down and bow to anyone on horseback as their nominal rulers. This tradition of cultural submission went perfectly along with their total worship of their own ancestors and the worship of all seniority and all age. And all oldness, all power, all wealth. So, what happened to the authority systems of the first ancient Chinese Empire? They were frozen into place and never changed for 7,000 years. What happened to the people living inside these Empires for seven thousand years? They became a huge mass of servile cowards: so incompetent and so stupid: that they rejected every new discovery, and tried to keep the foreign devils out.

Until finally after seven thousand years... new, healthier barbarians invaded China. However, this time they did not stay to become absorbed into Chinese culture. They merely breezed in, and breezed out. China was so backwards, the newcomers were so disgusted by levels of corruption that were so venal and so sickening: that European professors debated for decades whether the Chinese were even of human origin.

Then the tiny island of Japan invaded China during the 1st and 2nd World Wars and ripped the entire Nation into bloody pieces. Just like the tiny Island of England invaded Europe... Getting their revenge for China's aborted attempt to invade them a thousand years ago? No. Simply asserting themselves over their larger neighbor; who had dominated them from birth. And from whom they had stolen every cultural and technological secret and invention... and improved upon it. Reversing 7 thousand years of being treated as ignorant savages back at the Chinese. And treating the Chinese as ignorant savages instead of the Chinese treating them as ignorant savages. It is not good for any Nation to dominate another Nation... even if it is by sneering at other races on the basis of cultural superiority without even invading them physically. You will still suffer an historical backlash. You will still be punished for it. That is the historical fate of any Nation that becomes too negatively powerful. Because the inevitable backlash will be more negative. If you are positively more powerful... then the backlash will only be more good things happening to you, instead of more bad things. The curse of becoming too powerful, too smug, too stupid, too mired in its cultural rigidity, superstition and ignorance and too far behind the times... is the historical curse that all the hallowed, sanctified, revered, worshipped Chinese ancestors bestowed upon modern China. China it is still struggling to catch up with the Western World. This is the same historical curse and fate of Egypt, and Persia, of India, and South America, and Africa. All these areas once were Empires... and were later invaded and sacked and colonized by other Empires. Now they are second-class nations; with a population of third-class, or third world billions of impoverished ignorant starving, powerless people. Who still cling to their outdated, useless cultures. Today the only true industrial super-powers in the World exist in the only two areas that were not colonized by an Empire, or developed an Empire before: Northern Europe and North America. The overlapping of Europe over the old Roman Empire exists in part; only because Rome paid for its mistakes and learned from those mistakes enough to become as educated as the rest of Europe. While parts of the old Roman Empire that did not pay for their mistakes fully and did not learn are still mired in poverty and corruption.

What happened to the Russian Empire when it crumbled? It was hijacked by thieves and liars and murderers who were even worse than the Czars and the aristocracy ever were. What happened to the Chinese Empire? It was taken over by even worse thieves, liars and murderers than the warlords and the Emperors ever were. Why? Because for thousands of years; these Empires had evolved slave cultures of conformity. Where the populations were trained and brainwashed, and oppressed, and killed, and robbed, and stolen-from, and dominated into being the most obedient, passive, ignorant, brainwashed, submissive cowards possible... incapable of instigating anything on their own. Incapable of personal responsibility. Every time these power structures collapsed: they were instantly taken over by worse liars, worse criminals, worse murderers.

Why? Because the oppressed masses had no culture of self-responsibility, freedom, or self-esteem. They were slave cultures for thousands of years. They did not understand the idea of freedom and responsibility going necessarily hand-in hand each other. Because they only knew how to live like domesticated oxen, pigs, sheep, cattle. And their new masters gladly treated them like that.

After the fall of communist U.S.S.R.: Russia was taken over by the worst criminal elements of the KGB. They now rule it as capitalistic warlords. Why? Because all the power and wealth was already concentrated at the top when the Communist power elite disintegrated. Nothing changed except a huge power vacuum at the top was created by the Communist Government losing its power. So that corrupt hierarchal society merely changed heads. Every criminal element suddenly was free to rob, kill, lie, and grab and sell and buy. Russia is now a classic Robber Baron society. Robber Baron Mafioso, and an impoverished powerless mass. Where the only upward mobility possible is up through the hierarchical ranks of criminal organizations.

Mao Tse Tsung took over China... A population of one billion people. Why? Because in both the former Empire of Russia, and China; they were used to being ruled by authoritative regimes for thousands of years:

It was normal for them to obey without thinking, questioning, or rebelling.
It still is.

Mao knew his people. He was not a bloodless Mandarin or a naïve Mongol. He did not want their hypocritical, servile shows of false respect and slavish conformity. But he craved adulation. He was addicted to being worshipped as a God. He wanted to rip all the sickness out of Chinese culture and out of his people completely. So he went with the flow of events. Just at the time in human history when there were more young people than old people in the world. He cunningly praised young children and youths: and tried to brainwash them by using the peasant-wisdoms of his 'little red book' as their only Bible. Nothing else was allowed to be written, or read, or spoken except what was in Mao's 'Little Red Book'. Which he re-published and re-wrote all his life. He was a complete hypocrite. Praising the healthiness of hard work and working outdoors for the masses. While he himself became a fat, lazy city dweller. The older Mao got, the more powerful he became like the ancient Chinese emperors he had replaced, the more power he accumulated: the more arbitrary and meaningless his orders became. The more bloodthirsty his policies became. The older he got, the crueler he got, the fatter he became. His own fat; insulating him from his own humanity. The older, and fatter he became, the more impotent he became, the virgins he raped every day and night had to become younger, and younger, until he was only interested in raping virgins who were 10-12 years old. He was no different from all the filthy sex perverts, pedophiles and child rapists who came before him: all the oriental rulers, Emperors and Potentates with their seraglios and sex dens, and eunuchs and harems and little-boy sex slaves. Because Mao so openly despised all of China's past, because he refused to study it, or learn from its history: he repeated it. He duplicated almost exactly what ancient rulers had done to the Chinese masses for 7,000 years... only he did it even more stupidly, more arrogantly, and more destructively. He tried to destroy China's connection to its ancient past. He burned every old book he could find. Every Empire, every ruler, every authority tries to destroy all connections to the past. Every new rule creates a new set of historical lies... until the layers of historical lies are so deep, that the past is buried in pure dishonesty. They have to do this. Otherwise the people find out the truth about what happened, and want to find out the truth about what IS happening, and demand an accounting of their rulers.

In spite of Mao's Cultural Revolution, the Chinese masses refused to relinquish their superstitions or their customs or their ancient beliefs. Why? Because they had become used to being oppressed for 7,000 fucking years, Only Mao's oppression was worse. Worse injustice. Worse lies. Worse hypocrisy. Which only lasted a mere sixty years. After suffering under 7,000 years of regime changes and arbitrary laws and plagues and famine and wars and bloodshed and chaos and order; a 30-year period of one megalomaniac mass murderer was taken in stride. Besides, the Chinese don't know how to change their culture. Nobody has ever taught them how to change anything. They only know how to be ordered about by others... While seeming to submit humbly to their new masters, they have passively resisted all forced change for 7,000 years... So resisting Mao's short 30-year attempt to brainwash them into even lower levels of stupidity and conformity; had very little effect on the roots of their culture. The Chinese still hold to the same basic values they have always adhered to. Ancestor worship. Worship of the elders as virtual Gods.

This is one effect of an Empire like China on humans. It turns huge populations into servile, weak, stupid sheep who are easily manipulated. It turns them into mindless conforming babies incapable of looking after themselves. They need a Motherland... or a Fatherland to cosset them and love them. They need to be told what to do. That is why all totalitarian, and all authoritarian states crumble into corrupt masses of incompetence after that power is gone. No body knows what to do with any freedom or any responsibility. Nobody knows how to cooperate, or organize anything. Nobody knows how to be honest. Nobody knows how to be courageous. So a worse pack of thieves and killers take over, and historians tut-tut about all of the failed, sabotaged revolutions and uprisings.

There is however one political experiment that has never been tried by any authoritarian regime. No authoritarian Regime has ever tried to make people become better instead of worse. No authoritarian regime has ever tried to force people to be more honest, or more courageous. Instead: all regimes try to force people into becoming worse liars and worse cowards. No authoritarian regime has ever tried to force people to love each other. Instead they try to force them to mistrust each other more and hate each other as much as possible. No Authoritarian Regime has ever tried to make people more equal. No powerful elite has ever tried to be positive rather than negative. Instead, the rich oppressors and rulers always try to turn the masses into poorer, and more powerless victims. That is a negative intent. That is a negative goal. That is negative energy.

The few times and places any actual improvement was tried incrementally: it succeeded beyond all expectations. If you study history carefully: you will find that the legal equality of Bonaparte's Civil Code; and the English Parliamentary system of representative Government are the original roots for almost every beneficial aspect of modern, Western Culture today: simply because they were based upon a more inclusive idea of equality, and a less exclusive idea of privilege. Once that happened: where do you stop? At first this widened inclusiveness of privilege was only for the rich born and the rich merchants who were white men. Then it for was rich white men who were not peasants. Then it was for all white men whether they were rich or not. Then it was for all white men, and white women. Then it was all men and women. But only in certain exclusive nations and Kingdoms. Now the demarcation between privileged and unprivileged nations and peoples is the main cause for conflict. Now the East and West is the difference between democracy and no democracy. With all of the people who cannot vote: hating and envying those who can.

What is this demarcation boundary between the West and the East in Europe and Asia? It is the exact boundary line where the Mongol empire stopped expanding almost a thousand years ago. The difference between modern Cultures of the West, and the old, obsolete cultures of the East: was determined by how far the Mongols managed to advance from Asia into the Mid-East and Europe. On the western side were left small kingdoms that evolved into Nations... free enough from the oppression of huge Empires: to fight and compete against each other on relatively equal terms. On the eastern side was a single monolithic Empire that broke up into smaller Empires: that did not change their basic political-cultural-technological traditions, structures or habits.

Now; Russia has something called a democracy. But Russian democracy is even more corrupt than their previous corrupt non-democratic totalitarian state. Now China has small corridors of elite cities that practice the same brand of Robber Baron Capitalism that America practiced 100 years ago... But with no democracy. Now the masses of Russia are worse off in a democracy, than they ever were in Totalitarian Communism. Now the Chinese masses are exploited worse, work harder, and are paid less, and have less benefits than they ever did under Mao. Granted they are not starving by the millions or being brainwashed by him personally, or living in continual terror. Now they have been given back their God Given Right to be a mass of poor peasants... forbidden to enter their own rich capitalistic cities.

Why do you think the ancient capital of China has been called: The Forbidden City for thousands of years? Because for 7,000 years: all of the poor people of China were forbidden to enter it. The Chinese's own rulers despised their own masses so much: they pretended that they didn't even exist. That is how deeply Chinese culture has degraded its own people. Ruled for thousands of years by people who did not want to even see them, much less talk to them.

Now, China has what we call Capitalism. It is not Capitalism at all. Rather, all the Chinese have done; is to adapt and add Western Capitalism; into their ancient peasant-mandarin culture as a new, expanded format of the same old thing. Their cities are still forbidden to the poor. Since when is this kind of society Capitalism? All the West thinks China is becoming modernized: when it is sinking back into an even older level of corruption that goes back to before the white foreign devils invaded their lands. At least during Mao's Time: poor people were not forbidden from living in cities. During Mao's reign nobody was allowed to go anywhere. Nobody was allowed to travel, or move their place of residence at all. There was no selective freedom given to people living in cities, which were denied to the people living in the country. They were all more equally poor under Mao. Creating a new hierarchy of a rich, elite privileged class in China instead of having everyone being equally poor has created more social unrest and tension than when the rivers ran red with blood from the mass executions of suspected dissidents. Without Mao's bloody purges and reign of Terror, and mass famines and starvations: the people of China are even unhappier now than when they were under his rule.

The entire idea of public dissent is being wiped out from the human psyche by the rich controlling all mass media and all mass culture. Nobody is allowed to disagree with mass culture. Americans see the pogroms of Mao's red communism as pure evil for crushing all dissent. They do not realize that now the Chinese are now being crushed just as effectively by Capitalism. Only... more subtly and slyly, and more slowly.

Capitalism was supposed to save the masses of Russia, and China from poverty, by making them so affluent, that they would develop their own functioning democracy. This never materialized and will never happen. The entire Capitalistic world sees the Token Westernization of China as a positive sign. As a sign of progress. What? You mean it is not important if you live in a democracy, or a totalitarian state... as long as you are a greedy Capitalist at heart? You mean only if all the people in the world become greedy capitalists in their hearts, minds, bodies and souls, will there be world peace? The fact that billions of these would-be corrupted Capitalists are dirt poor is not important. As long as they are capitalistically greedy.... That's all that matters.... Huh?

So now only rich Nations are allowed to have democracies that actually work? Poor Nations are not allowed to have them? But rich Arab Nations do not have democracy either. And they are the richest per-capita Nations on Earth. Except for the U.S and India: the larger nations have capitalism... but no democracy. Huh? Oops. Democracy is a meaningless quibble. Something no other large Nations should enjoy, or small ones. Only the ones who already have it. The other nations who don't have it, and have millions and billions of people who want it; screw'em. Not important. Not our problem.

The arrant Global hypocrisy about Democracy is so obvious; that a monkey can see through it. Is this hypocrisy ever exposed by the Media? Does any person with any power admit to it? No. All they do is spout more platitudes about Democracy, and utter more hypocritical notions, and beliefs, and statements: which are nothing but sugarcoated lies and evasions, and deflections from the truth. The actual truth; is that the idea of Democracy has never been even attempted, or written down: much less lived. Every Legal Constitution ever written, every Republic ever founded: was founded on a complex set of hierarchical privileges that do not allow for any actual Democracy to exist: period.

Every so-called Democracy that has ever been founded: was founded by the rich, of the rich, and for the rich: period. None of them ever have been, or ever will be actually Democratic. Unless they destroy all hierarchical privileges of Power, Wealth, Status, and Knowledge. In other words: unless someone creates a human democratic society that is not based upon 12,000 years of civilization. Once you realize this historical truth: then reading history becomes a snap. Then you can fill in the missing dots and connections easily. Then you can easily see what was carefully left out of history books.

In order to have even a democracy only for an elite class: you need to have those elite people to actually be self-sufficient and sustain themselves. You need elites who are smart enough to actively get together and cooperate with their peers. You need elite who have some semblance of personal and public responsibility. Empires systematically destroy these attributes in their subjects. They do it systematically, gradually: but remorselessly and brutally and inevitably.

The most backward cultures: are the ones that change the least, are the most corrupt and are the weakest. Once a culture gets used to any higher level of ease; it does not want to go back to any form of previous hardship at all. Except when it is forced to do so. Or... given the freedom to improve itself: by going backwards in time intelligently: to an earlier form of hardship. Rediscovering the fun of living without electricity and making your food on a wood stove. Or going camping. Walking instead of driving. Dancing and singing together as a form of entertainment instead of watching TV. But you can only do this; if you critically evaluate older cultures and lifestyles as opposed to the modern culture you live in.

When was the golden Age of American Music? When simple African American Ethnic Music merged into the mainstream of Pop Culture. When Rock'n Roll was invented... When the old simple ethnic folk songs were rediscovered. When music was reduced and simplified down into three simple chords. In the 50's and 60's... Music was reinvented... re-created again... All over again from three simple chords. It became incredibly creative because it was simplified.

What happened in America? In England? Trying to create a Welfare State like Rome did; and then realizing that it was choking their economic vitality to death. As Rome's vitality was choked by it. The worsening of all education systems across the board, world-wide, as all reading and writing skills are disappearing in the older industrialized Nations. Creating a privileged class of consumer-workers who are so badly mis-educated, so ignorant, so inept, so incompetent, so lazy: that third world workers are taking over their jobs at a breakneck speed; and doing the same jobs better, faster, more competently for less money. Now America is trying to outlaw all forms of welfare. And reinstate a Capitalistic System of hardship... of Civilized poverty and ignorance?

In both England and America: the middle class is already been half-destroyed by a steady, protracted, systematic attack by the rich that is now over 100 years old. The entire mass of consumers living from hand-to-mouth on credit cards, slaving away as employees... are eating worse and worse processed, mass-manufactured food, brainwashed into buying, and using more and more gadgets that make everything physically easier, getting more and more out of shape, fatter, more unhealthy. As cancer rates increase, and new diseases are created by the entire cancerous stress-poison of civilized ease and chemical toxins added to our food and environment. Being fed worse and worse media entertainment to dull their minds with, creating dumber and dumber levels of stupidity as a national norm. As the national norm of test scores plummet, and insulted parents scream that their children are not more stupid than the ones twenty years ago.

Well... guess what? They are more stupid. Anyone who has lived enough years to compare more than two generation in their lifetime knows that the children today are more arrogant... more idiotically crass than ten or fifty years ago. Every that is 'in' with teenagers these days, is based upon bad taste and ugliness. Trying to outrage their parents and create a unique identity in a conformist consumer culture... subconsciously screaming for the attention they do not aware they want and need.

And they are terrified of the older more competent people who do not even admit they exist. Teenagers are the most invisible people in America.... Except as consumers... what do you think will happen to the new American hegemony that is just now finally getting up a timid squeal at world dominance? How long do you think America's dominance will last? Right now America is still vital due to its latest immigrants. Do you think a lifestyle of TV and hamburgers and cars and computers will out-compete the rest of the world because it has better gadgets?

Play and Sports

The single most common trait found in all animals, the single most cohesive element in human existence, the most common element in humanizing people and keeping them humanized is: a sense of play. It is the most integrating process humans can experience. It brings together all other aspects of our humanity. You cannot separate play from fun, kindness, empathy, hugging, touching, laughter, giggling, love, warmth, security, joy, confidence, self-esteem, belonging, acceptance, etc. including sex

Play and fun is the most powerful motivation for learning. It is how we learn. It is why we learn. Animals learn by playing and having fun. When you are playing... you are open to new experiences. When you are playing... you are spontaneous, you are creative, happy. When animals play... it guarantees they will learn what they need to learn in order to live their lives successfully. Without play; the most basic building blocks of socializing and being human; cannot not be learned. Without play... No animal can learn anything. If animals did not play. If humans did not play... we would all be extinct. Every mammal that forgot how to play has become extinct.

Play teaches us in many ways and on many levels. It is the best way to learn anything. It is the fastest way to learn anything. It is the easiest way to learn anything. Learning comes from a complex integration of play-exploration-curiosity-wonder-fun-comparison-evaluation-perspective. Play teaches how to establish healthy boundaries, how to socialize with others. It teaches us how to be comfortable with our own bodies. It teaches us how to have fun, how to love, how to gain acceptance, how to be happy, how to do all of the things we need in order to fulfill ourselves. It teaches us how to be spontaneous, how to be creative. It widens and sensitizes our awareness. Play is an active form of Pure Wonder. When we are playing; everything is wonderful.

When did our ancestors begin to slowly lose their sense of play? How was the original sense of play lost? The same time they lost their sense of Wonder, the same way they lost their sensitized wider awareness... by using tools. Any duplicated, repetitive act stops being play; and becomes work. By using tools, we created work and boredom. By working more, we played less. Simply by not having any time for play, by not allowing it to be developed: the habit of work destroys our sense of play. Along with that deprivation, there comes the loss of spontaneity, the loss of creativity, and a sense of Wonder.

What do civilized adults play at? Abstract things. The most unfeeling things possible. Not with their own bodies or their own feelings or their own thoughts. Usually; they only play with words. It's called conversation. Banal endless chatter. Meant and designed to keep people distracted. What does most of this chatter focus on? Me. I. Us. What I did. What we did. What we said... mechanical details of the dead past. Focuses on the dead past, and on dead things. Or on the future... what might happen. What should happen. Not on anything relevant. Not on the present. Why do you think children find adults boring?

There are multi-million dollar simulators that you can sit inside, and play at; being a fighter pilot. You can play in this simulation device... pretending that you have your own, personal, multi-million dollar toy of a modern jet fighter. The ultimate virtual reality game of exclusive elite killing-power. Pretending to fly a machine costing millions of dollars landing on another machine costing over half a billion dollars... by playing at it as a fake simulation in an expensive million-dollar machine. Huh? You mean only when every adult and child has their own multi-million dollar jet fighter, and their own billion dollar aircraft carrier.... Then all the people in the world can play and have fun...? Oh. We can't afford that. Its too expensive. So we can play at playing at flying expensive jet fighters; by simulating it with another expensive machine. Huh? How insane is our love of machines today? How sick is this kind of play?

Oh. Excuse me. That's only for a few special lucky, wealthy, famous elite people. You'll never get the chance to have that kind of exclusive fun. Oh... now i get it. Nowadays, the idea of fun is only fun; if it is exclusive as hell. Otherwise, if everyone had their own expensive jet fighters, and their own expensive aircraft carriers: why then, all the rich elite would automatically turn their noses up at that kind of fun... simply because it has stopped being exclusive. They'd automatically go and find some other kind of fun that is too expensive and too exclusive for the majority of poor people to enjoy.

Play is not a connective, integrative way of living in Western Society. It is split up and specialized into narrower and narrower categories. The unrealized potential of our intrinsic sense of play is unexplored and abandoned. Physical play has become dehumanized into something called exercise, and made as mechanically boring as possible by using machines to perform repetitive motions. Play has become an exclusive luxury that only the rich can afford. It takes a lot of money to go skiing, or camping, or sailing, or horseback riding, or mountain-climbing, or white-water rafting. Only affluent people with leisure time can afford these expensive activities. The poor have no time to play because they are too busy working just to make ends meet. Instead of nurturing and developing a sense of play, we try to wean our children away from it as early as possible; in order to get them ready for the job market so they can become good little boring, unplayful tool-slaves and wage-slaves.

Elite superstars of stage and screen get to play on stage. And are paid millions of dollars for it. Professional athletes get to play sports, and earn millions of dollars from it. What is so special about the ability to fake an emotion so well, that other people are fooled by it? Does that mean that a person who is incapable of faking anything, someone who is not able to act; can never become famous, or be admired?

Play has become the exclusive domain of the rich. Poor people have no right to play. Poor people must work and suffer and never, ever have the right to play as much, or as well as rich people. Meaning: the poor must never be allowed to have more fun than the rich. Otherwise: what justification could the rich give for their greed except not to be poor?

That is a negative reason originating from fear and cowardice. There is no positive reason to become rich. It does not exist. This is one reason why all examples of fun by the rich are more corrupt than the fun poor people have.

How did play become an exclusive elite pastime? Read about the Roman Emperor Sulla, who ripped Rome into the first Stalinist Reign of Terror in civilized history. He invented the mindless, random terrorizing of an entire State. And after he had destroyed Rome, and brought it down to a state of pure fear and cowardice. He left Rome in a circus parade; dressed as a clown. Clowning. Smiling. Telling everyone that he had only been having his brand of fun. His elite brand of butchery, assassination, rape, murder and fun.

Trace the history of the playboy; from Hugh Hefner's Playboy Bunnies, to the Princes of Royalty, to the Emperors of Rome. Play was corrupted by civilization when the first cities were built. When the first God-Kings had wealth and time on their hands to waste and show-off. When the first chiefs could afford gold armbands, and amulets to be made for them. The effect of the civilized mass-need to pyramidally worship something, has stolen play away from the poor, and given it to elite upper classes to, professional fakers called actors, to athletes; and corrupted the sense of play by exclusivity.

Who... You? You're not a famous superstar. You can't sing perfectly. So don't try at all. Why?

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

800

Because you're not famous. You can't dance perfectly: so don't try at all. Because you're not famous. You're not allowed to play. Why? Because you're not famous. You can't play football perfectly. Because you're not famous. You can't act perfectly. Because you're not famous. The pro's can do it better. They are allowed to sing and dance and play sports. Not you. You're not as good as they are. So don't even bother to try. Unless you are as shallow as they are, unless: you only want to do one thing for the rest of your life and are willing to sacrifice your entire life to this one thing and do it more perfectly than anyone else.

You can't sing, because you can't do it as perfectly as famous professionals. You can't dance; because you can't do it as perfectly as famous professionals. You can't play football; because you can't play it as perfectly as famous professionals. You should be ashamed that you can't do it perfectly. If you can't do something perfectly: then you are no good at all. That is how the sense of splay had been poisoned by civilization.

Don't even bother trying to do anything. Because if you do, everyone will laugh at you and tell you you're not good enough to be a professional. Everyone will tell you how lousy you sing, how lousy you play music, how badly you play sports. So don't even bother trying. You're not good enough. You'll never run the 400 meters as fast as an Olympic athlete. And they have been training all their lives and only a few of them are famous. Most of them never won a single Gold Medal in the Olympics. There are millions of people in the world who can run faster than you. So don't even bother getting off that couch. Just sit there and watch how perfectly the paid professionals do it.

This is how the media elite and all the elite cultures shame working people into being ashamed of not dancing, or sing as professionally and as perfectly as someone who has spent their entire life doing it. This is how anything you want to be creative with, or have fun with: is sneered-at as being worthless since you are not making a profit from it. All creativity that does not make a profit... all creativity that does not make money: is spat upon and scorned. Anything that does not make money is spat upon and scorned and considered to be useless.

One reason why consumers sneer at anyone else having fun is that they themselves have forgotten how to play. They look at other people having fun as weird crazy idiots, making fools out of themselves. The need for approval, the need to conform and the fear of being laughed-at is what destroys playfulness. It is also what creates the mass culture of the ego. Why don't adults play? Because when they grew up as innocent children who wanted to have fun and had not yet developed an ego; they were laughed at, criticized, sneered at whenever they wanted to have fun. Because of the countless, sick, social cruelties practiced in sick cultures: where laughter and derision is used as a weapon to create toxic, poisonous shame against children that love to play and have fun. Until they stop being spontaneous. Why? Because the reaction to smiling and being happy; is scorn, sneering, and denigration. It is the mean, narrow envy of other children and other people; hating anyone who they see as being better or happier than they are. Being funny, having fun, playing, just being yourself... becomes shameful. The lesson civilization teaches is this; you do not have the right to be happy unless you are an elite of the upper class.

'Do not smile. Do not be happy. Do not have fun. Do not stand out from the crowd. Do not be unique. Do not be different. If you do; somebody will shame you.' Do not be happy. Do not smile. Do not be positive. If you do: then other people will think that there is something wrong with you. Because they are not happy. They are not smiling. They are negative. So you must be as unhappy and as negative as they are.

All you need is to have more negative than positive people in any group: and automatically: all positive ideas are shot down. All positive ideas slowly die out. All positive ideas are ignored. And slowly: all smiling faces stop smiling. All fun disappears. All happiness fades. All positive energy fades and disappears.

People who have forgotten how to laugh: they look at happy laughing people with envy. They are afraid of genuine happiness and genuine laughter. Too much fun is evil. Fun is frowned upon. The peer pressure of workaholic Protestant Ethic societies. If you laugh too much at work... you are fired for it. Work is not supposed to be enjoyable. This is one sick lesson many civilized people teach their children. The few who do not swallow this; find some way to beat the system, by doing as little work as possible. So what did they do? Everyone began copying this genuine laughter of happy people. Now all miserable people put on a fake face and smile and laugh whenever they go out in public and talk to someone. The instant the confab is over: their faces go dead: end of farce: back to dullness again. End of fake happiness: back to the hordes of dead souls with dead eyes and dead faces: none of them smiling or laughing as they all ignore each other on the street. That is not genuine happiness. That is not genuine laughter: that is a social psychosis of fake manners and fake politeness.

Exercise has become an extension of the consumer culture of waste. Wasting oil and hydroelectric power. Food, cloths and appliance being thrown away every day. Now waste has infiltrated play. Play-energy is being wasted on exercise machines. Mechanical human energy being funneled into these machines. Jogging on treadmills. Because it is more boring than jogging outside in the outdoors breathing fresh air. Because you can be more of a machine when you jog on an expensive mechanical treadmill. Working out in Gyms. Working out on Nautilus machines. Play has become a form of expensive mechanical slavery. A status symbol of humans functioning as machines; by using expensive exercise machines.

How to make play as mechanical and as boring and non-social as possible. How to make all fun and play as machine-oriented as possible. Walk? Heck. Buy an expensive 4&4, or a moto-cross bike and drive all over Nature... destroying the land you are driving over, blasting noise everywhere, wasting gas, being distracted, having mechanical fun. How do you have fun with a machine? How to waste as much human energy as possible by using machines? By buying an expensive machine. And not talking to other people, or having any fun with them. Machines are fun. Machine-People are boring. So to hell with people. Lets have fun with machines, not humans.

What for? Does fun with a machine make you happy? Does it make you feel loved and respected and liked after you finish having fun with a machine? No. It leaves you empty. After you turn off that machine you are still lonely, bored, unhappy. You are also numbed and distracted by it. You have become roboticized by it. You walk around like a machine: perfectly happy-numb... perfectly numbed-out, perfectly unhuman-inhuman. As long as you feel nothing unpleasant, and only feel pleasant distraction: then everything is A-OK. If you want to exercise: do it with a machine: not a human. Look at all the benefits: The worship of your own physical body. Fitness. Narcissism. The self-gratification of your own muscle-health. And not having to bother with people whom you do not like.

There are millions of better ways humans can keep fit and have fun at the same time. By playing with each other and socializing with each other. Rather than exercising alone...mechanically, exercising with a machine, wasting their energy straining mindlessly against resistance machines. Exercise which is supposed to be a healthy release from work... has merely become more boring, more repetitive work. Some people actually like it. They like being machines. They like functioning unfeelingly and repetitively. Because it is normal. Feeling nothing is normal. Babies bang their heads against the wall. Because the pain of boredom, the pain of silence, the pain of no stimulation whatsoever... is even worse than the pain of boring, repetitive, mind-numbing-self-damaging shocks to their growing brains and awareness. Nowadays: much of adult recreation is called a workout. What does a resistance machine teach you? That you must always keep straining and struggling against resistance. You must always strain and compete against yourself, against machines, against other humans. That is not exercise. That is a cultural norm of physical slavery, physical drudgery, physical work and boredom. With no fun or play whatsoever.

‘Did you work out today...?’

‘Yeah... my abs are really coming along... but I got to keep working at it...’

No wonder people who sign up for these gyms never come back. If parents do not play with their children, if children are not given the freedom, opportunity and time to play: it is no surprise that children grow up never learning how to play. By stifling a sense of play, by taking all play and fun out of everyday life, we turn people into sour, humorless, boring workaholics, spectators, comfort addicts, drug addicts, criminals, etc... all because when growing up: people never learned how to entertain themselves, how to play and have fun. This is due to the dehumanizing effect of civilization replacing play with work by using tools too much. In essence, civilization has destroyed play, as a way of life. It has destroyed all of our ability to be happy. It has forced us into a fruitless, endless search for happiness in all the wrong ways and all the wrong places.

What is the most spiritual form of fun in America? What form of exercise epitomizes American Culture? What is the purest form of American Culture? Not baseball. Not football. The marching band. 100% extroversion with 0% introversion. Public displays of pomp and importance and loud noise for large crowds to cheer at, to make themselves feel socially important, and included as a faceless mob. All safely anonymous and alienated from each other.

What has the culture of marching bands turned into? No longer marching down the main streets of small towns. No longer a part of the community they live-in. No longer marching just for the fun of it. Specialized, super-exclusive, elite drum corps. From the richest, most elite schools. Competing madly against each other. Touring around the nation, performing in special drum corp. stadiums. Only to compete against each other for prizes. With special judges marking them on military perfection. Elaborate choreographed extravaganzas. Training for months. Striving to become as perfect as possible at your tiny specialization. Striving to synchronize yourself as a cog in a machine to all the other mechanical specialized functions. Striving to become an assemblage of perfect coordinated cogs in a human mechanical machine called a drum corp. Striving to give the grandest, most overblown impression of synchronized physical perfection possible. The greatest overblown self-importance and strutting pomposity. The loudest, most blaring, most deafening noise possible. And what’s more: they can only be watched from one side of the stadium. The other side is empty. It is a one-sided performance. Given only to one side of the stadium. Because the entire choreography is designed to be seen only from one side of the stadium. The side the judges are on.. The crowd sits at the same vantage point of the judges. They can make their own critical, judgmental evaluations. The audience become critical spectators and judges; waiting to be impressed by more, and more, and more extravagant shows of meaningless pomp, and circumstance. This is exactly what the Roman Games turned into. One-sided shows to impress the Emperor and the Senators... seated on only one side of the Stadium. Talk about one sided entertainment. A one-sided audience. A one-sided stadium. A one-sided form of exercise. A one-sided form of fun. Talk about exclusion. Status. Wealth. Expense. Specialization. Talk about the most meaningless form of extroversion that reeks of escaping the inner self. Sacrificing yourself to become part of a human machine. Talk about ego. Importance. Talk about excess, elitism, obsession, talk about the most perfect example of over-intensive tool-use. Using their minds, hearts, bodies, musical instruments, props, costumes, music, percussion, loudness, noise... to impress to other people how important they are.

What would these young hopefuls be, without their exclusive clubs and activities? The annual crop of drum corp. volunteers is auditioned by scouts, and only a select few are ever allowed to participate in these elite clubs. They have been organized just like Professional sports, and all the true fun has been leached out of them. Hundreds of hopefuls... auditioning for one position. Fuck the thousands who are not chosen. Sorry: you're not good enough.

You have to study and sweat your ass off and practice every day and lose your entire childhood and destroy your entire life and become obsessed with it and waste your entire young life on it... and then you are thrown away because you are not professional enough, you are not perfect enough. You have to devote your entire life to certain kinds of perfection: and if you do not make the grade: if you are one of the 99% who are rejected: where is your self-esteem? Where is your reason for living anymore? What happens to your own self-worth when you allow yourself to be judged by others? Drum Corps spawn human robots. They spawn happy unthinking brain-dead unaware idiots who are only happy if they are a member of a special elite clique... What is the benefit of it all? With all the fun drummed out of it long before you get to the rarified level of elite top corps. These lucky chosen select few... get to carry this experience of selective specialness with them for the rest of their lives. Giving them a permanent reason for them to believe that they are better than other people. Giving them an ego-boost. Giving them privileges and advantages. Giving them a greater ego-esteem.

It is one of the only times their society openly shows any kind of official approval. How sick is that kind of exclusive social validation? Validating only a select, lucky, chosen few. Validating only the superficial trappings of self-worth. The mechanical, dehumanized perfection of coordinated robot marionettes... under one supreme coordinating power-commander-instructor. Is this a good way to train marines or human beings or children?

Is that what all the rest of the world should emulate? That only a chosen, lucky few are ever good enough to have a higher level of self-esteem? And even amongst them: most end up as losers. Except for the winner: picked in secret by anonymous judges. The triumph of one single band with the ego-honor of crowing that they are: number one justifying a hundred thousand elite losers. Even the losers are more important than ordinary people. They belong to an elite organization. They are special. That is how humans are supposed to have fun. Huh?...

In order to humanize yourself: you need to play more; and work less. But the dynamic of civilization is the exact opposite. It forces each new generation to work longer hours for less pay. This vicious cycle has happened more than once. People working longer and harder: until the entire humane fabric of society crumble into ruins and has to be re-built. People worked 10-16 hours a day without weekends for centuries... until they rose up in revolt. Now... Society is slowly forcing people back into being workaholic slaves. In order to humanize civilization: its root values and dynamics must be turned upside-down. Human values, traits, abilities need to be placed above tool values and abilities. The importance of play in our everyday lives cannot be emphasized enough.

The saying of: 'He who dies with the most toys: wins.' Exposes the cynicism, spiritual bankruptcy and corruption of modern civilized tool values and ethics. It reveals essentially, that almost everything ever made today by tools or machines is only made to be played-with. But... tools do not know how to play. Tools cannot be creative or spontaneous or laugh. Their repetitiveness and one-sided imbalance, turns play into a mechanical travesty that is basically destructive. The fact is; the less tools you use, the simpler your tools are; the more creatively you can play with your toys... the more creative, the more spontaneous, the more fun your play becomes. What I am pointing out is that; it is entirely feasible and practical to not only have a simpler more ascetic lifestyle using less tools: but that you can have more fun and be happier doing so by simply playing more than you work... by changing your values, perspective and priorities around 180 degrees.

What if play-fun were the most important thing in life instead of work? What would our lives be like then? How different would our entire society be? But the only way to successfully realize this would be to do away with all forms of accumulation: from overpopulation and over pollution to over intensive tool-use. Only when the root factors that cause us to be unhappy are removed: accumulated wealth-power-greed-status-knowledge, can we ever truly be happy.

If everything you do, you do playfully, if everything you feel, you feel playfully, if you think is done playfully: then this basic coloring of your soul makes all of your life fun, it makes living fun. The same can be said for the spiritual colors of honesty, courage, love and wonder: it is how you choose to color your own soul that determines the kind and quality of life you have. Now: if you merge these three basic primary colors together, you get the full spectrum of human experience, the full spectrum of life being lived to its full potential... you get a wider, more sensitized, more intense awareness of everything. But this is only possible if the playfulness of children is not slowly extinguished by the boring, workaday adult world.

Only if playfulness is nurtured, encouraged and developed throughout human society as a necessary part of doing anything, only if adults remain playful and teach playfulness as a living example of how to live playfully can the intrinsic human qualities-abilities of spontaneity and creativity be fully realized and sustained. And that does not happen because by its very nature of using too many tools, by the dynamic of accumulation; civilization systematically destroys the Sense of Pure Wonder and the sense of playfulness. The ingrained competitiveness of human society is so all-encompassing, that it swallows everything and destroys it. It destroys all fun, all play, until people only play destructively... hurtfully... trying to hurt their opponent... until the most popular sports and games become only hurtful games. Games where your score a point against your opponent. The person you play with is no longer your friend, but your enemy, your opponent... your antagonist; who you must fight against. Until the most lucrative and famous sport in the world has become the most physically, mentally, emotionally violent game of tackle football. Where the level of hate and anger needed to even play it; becomes a psychotic abnormality; which millions of spectators feed off; vicariously enjoying the violence as safely as possible. Because they do not have the courage to be that violent themselves.

Children are taught not to play with their food, not to play inside, not to play at all... Unless they play to win, to hurt... to demean the loser, to crow in triumph. This only demeans themselves... it makes them into meaner children... being taught that niceness and kindness is to be laughed at and scorned. In sports, they are taught that the only confidence they are allowed to have; is the confidence derived from the empty satisfaction of winning a game. This literally destroys all friendship and all socializing in sports. Once the destructive game of trying to win at all costs is over: the winners find they have no reason to even talk to the losers.

The Path of Splitness

805

Suddenly... all-socializing is cut-off at the root. Suddenly after the game, they feel empty... lonely... because the only way they have been taught to get together is in a game which pits them against their own former friends and artificially turns them into enemies... until they grow to hate their former friends because they lost to them, or scorn their friends as not worth talking to because they did not win... until after the game they start talking to their former friends demeaningly... as winners, as mean people who have no love or kindness in their hearts. Until all the love and kindness in them is systematically twisted, poisoned, stifled, ignored, laughed at... until they find that emotions are not allowed to be shown, or felt, or even spoken. That is what modern society calls fun today. That is how most modern sports corrupt our children every day.

Competitive sport is not play. They are ways that civilized humans manage to say-show-prove, that: "I am better than you." Until you remove all accumulations of power, wealth and status from human society, until you remove the need and the opportunity for advantage in the first place; you will always have people trying to prove that the other person is not as good as they are.

Selective competition is a hypocrisy. It carefully and unfairly selects what you should be competitive about, and how you should compete and against who. Competition is about: dominance, power and control. Whoever can catch a ball better, hit a ball harder, throw it farther, kick it farther, jump or run, or skate faster under control... is considered mechanically better than another person in a certain selective hypocritical way. People are worshipped, glorified, become famous, idolized, rich, etc... because of their tool-skills... not their human skills.

Michael Jordan earned hundreds of millions of dollars simply because he could dominate the game of basketball, and had more powerful jumping muscles, enabling him to out-leap and out-jump his opponents, and he could control his power-leaping better. The rationalized excuse for him to be wealthy beyond all reason is simply because of a single mechanical advantage... an advantage of a few inches: selectively developed to be used only in the sport of basketball. He tried to play baseball competitively and failed miserably because he had trained all his life in developing basketball muscles, and basketball coordination. That is the wastefulness of all specialized sports. You can practice and train for years, but if you want to play any other specialized sport, you need to train and practice for years all over again with the same difficulties of learning an entirely new set of coordination skills.

Tiger Woods is filthy rich because he can mechanically hit a certain kind of ball with certain kinds of clubs; farther and more accurately... in a game called 'golf' than most. Put him into any other professional sport? And he would not make the farm team. The lesson is simple. If you want to be rich and worshipped and famous: do only one thing, and do it as mechanically perfect as possible. And waste your whole life doing it. And if you really have a huge ego try to want to become number one in the world... spend years, weeks, months of your childhood, adolescence, adulthood doing only one mechanical skill-career. Everything else is of secondary importance... because everything else you spend less time and effort on. The result is that you become more of a machine than a human. Your machine-mechanical skills are better developed than your human skills are. The other side of this cultural message is clear... who cares what you are like as long as you are rich? Who cares what you are like as long as you win? Let Tiger Woods start losing and he will disappear into faded glory. People will remember his fantastic mechanical abilities. Is that what he will think of when he is dying?

'Remember that putt I sank... that made me a better person... I was only truly alive when I was functioning purely like a machine.' What is the point in worshipping this boring idiocy?

805

Could you have a competition for the wisest, or the kindest, or the most loving people? Could you have a competition for the most honest people? The bravest?

In what context?

In regards to how they treat their family? Or their employees? Or people they meet every day?

Could you have a competition for the most humane person on Earth?

In what context?

If people cannot even agree on what is humane, what is wise, what is loving, what is courageous... how can you measure or judge things you do not understand enough to even have a general universal context to put them into? How can you even hope to have a humane society: when nobody even knows what it means to be human in the first place...? When there is no universal definition of 'human' that humans can agree upon? How can you have a human society based only upon absolute physical measurements and abstract judgments: when all humane aspects of humans cannot be measured or judged mechanically in the first place? And since all humane aspects of humans are not abstract?

It is impossible to measure human values and worth mechanically. The only way you can compare anything is directly. Not abstractively. Not absolutely. You can compare human values generally. And also directly. But there is no way of doing this identically. No standard absolute formula works accurately for everyone.

General principles work generally because they are generally true. The context of each person's values are unique and different. There cannot be any universal context, or form of measuring or judging them. Which only demonstrates the entire idiocy of measuring or judging anything by any linear model. Without comparing it, evaluating it; and putting it into the widest general context possible. That is the problem with all of linear civilized life. When you try to analyze it, evaluate it and compare: you find it is full of irrational, meaningless crap.

You mean it is far more important to hit a ball accurately, it is far more important to win an abstract game; than live in happiness, and love, and wisdom with other people? Somebody explain this to me. What if all mistakes were deemed funny? What if everyone admitted their mistakes and laughed at them and admitted their mistakes honestly? What if there were no egos to 'insult'? What if there was no negative connotation at all to making any mistake? What if the point to making mistakes was to not make them again? What if the point to make mistakes was to reflectively learn from them? What if people are raised to automatically ask each other and themselves whether something is right or wrong... good or bad... if something can be done-felt-understood better? What if uncertainty was sought after and encouraged because it produces more mistakes, and people learn more, and grow and change more? What if there was no such thing as winning? What if learning more than one thing was more important than special mechanical skills? What if any kind of reliability and predictability is boring? What if people's awareness were not negatively fear-based? So they would want any predictability or safety or security?

What if there was no negative feedback at all? Every advanced study of sport-coaching has proven that any negative feedback whatsoever on any level: has been found to be more destructive than anyone has ever imagined. How can you get rid of all this negative feedback? By doing away with any idea of adversarial competition in the first place. By completely doing away with any form of hierarchical exclusion and any us-them mentality.

What if all humans were educated enough to understand that we are genetically-biologically-instinctually-subconsciously so similar; that the .00015 % of our makeup that is slightly different, is so insignificant that it is not worth bothering about? What if we based our cultures on our human skills and not our mechanical skills? Then the most lovingly funny, selfless, kindest, most passionate, most honest, most courageous, most outrageous, most creative, most intuitive, wisest, simplest, most balanced all-round poorest humans who lived under the greatest hardships, and undertook the most difficult challenges, and explored the most, and made the most mistakes, and learned the most, and were the most positive, and experienced the most fun, the most love, the deepest emotions, the deepest thoughts, the most intense highs and lows.... would become the 'heroes' and 'idols' and 'stars' for the next generation to emulate.

Then maybe the people with the greatest Sense of Pure Wonder might become the true pioneers in how to live and be better humans. Might that not be a better set of culture values than the one we have today? If you have as your general main values: Honesty, Courage, Love, and the Sense of Pure Wonder... not in any set priority, and your only interest is to have as much fun as creatively as possible, and you trust your own instincts so that you become spontaneously insightful, and creative, and wise, and funny.... All at the same time.

Then without using anything but these pure basic human qualities: you will find that you need nothing else to be happy. Or to put it in another way... If you can play with truth... then you will become truthfully playful. And if you can truthfully play... then you can play truthfully. You will become full of fun-playfulness-truth-honesty-happiness-love-courage.

As long as you are not filled with anger, hate, fear, doubt, low self-esteem, greed, envy, etc.

What is sports but as accumulation of abstract things called 'points'? Fuck the abstract things. Screw the past plays: have fun in the present: play the game in the present without accumulating shit of the past. If people played sports just for the fun of it, and not to accumulative abstract things which only exist in the past: then nobody could win. If winning: if the concept, the idea of winning in sports did not exist, then the reason to play sports would necessarily be for the enjoyment and nothing else.

This is only one example of why civilization is stupid. This is only one example of why abstraction is stupid. Civilization destroys human joy, and fun. Abstraction destroys human happiness and fun. Accumulation destroys the happiness of living in the present. Preserving abstract imaginary shit of the past and imaginarily accumulating something which cannot be accumulated: Time; is one of the insanities of human civilization. The past is not an accumulation. You cannot accumulate time. You can either repeat the past or be creative and do something different. The present is never the same as the past. When you repeat the past: you are destroying the present. The present is designed to always be creatively different from that past. The same stupid repeated identical things called sports: the few idiotic physical activities preserving the ancient insanities of the past is so lame and so uncreative, and so boring, and so limiting and so repetitive and so hidebound in obsolete custom and tradition of the past: all of sports should be thrown away and never done again. There are an infinite numbers of different ways that people can have fun and be happy actively without any sports at all. There is no play in sports anymore. People do not play and have fun when doing sports.

Toys

How has tool-use corrupted the sense of play in humans? It has mechanized it. How has the sense of fun been corrupted by civilization? By becoming mechanized, by humans only playing with machines: not with other living things, not with other living humans. The machine has corrupted all human play, fun and love to the point where people treat their own children like toys. Giving them mechanical toys to play with, and then treating the children themselves like mechanical wind-up toys. Treating their pets like toys. Treating each other like toys. Toying with each other. The sick addiction to the meaningless mechanical manipulation called toys has permeated Western culture so deeply: it is now imbedded inside the cultural concepts of fun, play and love. People love toys. People love machines. People love dead things. Grownups love grownup toys called cars. People love houses. People love toys called tools. People love spending their lives working to buy houses, cars, playing with toys called tools. They do not love living things. They love dead boring things. If people ever tried to live with living things instead of dead things: they would find that living things are much more interesting than dead things. Living things surprise you. You never know what a living thing will do. You always know what a dead thing will do: it either functions mechanically or does nothing, or breaks down. Dead toys are boring. Living things are never boring.

Humor

Nobody has ever written a history about the development of humor. Nobody even knows where it came from or when it first appeared. Read history and you will find that the first appearance of humor came in the Middle ages in Europe. There were court jesters and court fools to make the King laugh. Why? Because being a king was and still is the most boring fucking way to waste a human life. Before then: Kings and Emperors had no idea that they were missing laughter in their lives. What did these jesters do to make the Kings laugh? There is no recorded evidence of what they did. The mythic tale of Till Eubinspiegal is one of the first cultural evidences of the of humor in Europe.

In the Middle Ages in Europe: anyone who smiled too much or laughed too much, or was too happy: was put to death. People believed these people to be possessed of evil spirits. They were believed to be mad, insane. Anyone who was too honest or too brave was also legally put to death with the full approval of the entire society. So was Till Eubinspiegal. He was too funny. He played too many jokes on too many people. And he was hanged for it. Nobody today can have the faintest idea of how people lived then. You would have to immerse yourself in their culture and live how they lived, and see and feel what they felt to even begin to understand what kind of people they were.

For thousands and thousands of years... people were dragged out of their houses and butchered and raped and murdered, and killed. For thousands and thousands of years people were only allowed to show fear and submission in public. The slightest sign of a lack of fear was a sign for knights or samurai or Cossacks to come in the knight, and drag out the screaming terrified inhabitants and butcher them in full view of the other villagers... because someone noticed that one person in that house did not show the proper respect for them as they rode past.

For thousands upon thousands of years: the slightest sign of the lack of fear was a death sentence. The slightest sign of the lack of misery and unhappiness in the masses was an excuse to kill and rob them and torture them. To keep them in a permanent state of terror. The history of how this universal tactic of keeping the masses down, was slowly eroded has never been written. But it was eroded. And humor began show up in human society. Until the aristocracy tried to make it an elite, privileged monopolized commodity by having court jesters. Anyone else who was caught jesting was put into jail or in stocks or put to death.

How the lower classes slowly took back this elite privilege and how the upper class elite slowly lost it, and re-gained it, is a history that has never been written. How some lower classes slowly gained some power, and lost some of their fear of their oppressors has also never been truthfully written about. What kinds of cultures millions and hundreds of millions of lower class subjects lived in is an empty void in history books. History obsesses and only speaks of how the richest and most powerful lives. And even that has been so whitewashed and distorted, it is a complete lie.

We have no understanding what function humor has in society. We have no understanding of what it does or even what it is. We are completely uncritical about what we think is funny. For instance: how much civilized humor is a negative put-down of someone else? How much of it is one-sided humor; that is not funny to whoever is being made fun of? How much of it is thinly veiled nastiness...? Modern American TV and movies portray all siblings as hating each other... constantly sniping at each other as viciously as possible without coming to actual blows. This is funny? Hating your brother or sister is funny? Why? Why is all showing of affection in public something to be ashamed of? Why is any liking-affection-love derided, sneered at, laughed at? Why do people only feel comfortable showing their liking for each other by some negative comment? Humor is only truly funny when it is completely inclusive... when it makes everyone laugh. Where can you find that kind of humor in civilized societies?

If people did not have egos, if they did not have a need to feel that they were better than others, if they could empathize with other people's misfortune instead of jeering and laughing at it... how much of this kind of one-sided humor would still be considered funny? Humor is only healthy when it is balanced, or helps balance imbalanced human conditions. The town mayor slipping and falling without being hurt is funny because any figure of authority needs to be taken down a peg. However, a young child falling and being badly injured so they need to be rushed to the hospital is not. An overblown ego being deflated is only funny if the person whose ego is being deflated can see the ridiculousness of it. But if you can deflate somebody's ego regularly enough. If everyone he or she deals with honestly tells them they are egoistic asses. If they no longer can get away with being egoistic asses. If they are publicly, and personally, and universally shunned and scorned: then just maybe they might find out that egoism does not pay. But that means you have to have more non-egoistic people than egoistic ones. You need to have a majority for any social dynamic to work. How can you do that? If everyone laughed at pompous prigs how long do you think they would remain sheltered in their pomposity? They would either have to become recluses and stay in their holes: or stop being pompous.

The effectiveness of all social dynamics is determined by Power. Laughing at an egoistic ass is very effective. But only if it is done by those who are actually in power. In a true democracy where the majority holds power: it is effective only if the majority does it. In a totalitarian State like Stalin's USSR: it is only effective when Stalin does it

If a prisoner tries it with his jailers and is beaten to death for it; then it is not funny. Playing a joke at someone else's expense is only funny when they can afford it, when there is no harmful result, no bad intent, no desire to feel better than those being laughed at. Unless it is done as a moral lesson to those who need to be laughed at because they are too egoistic and too serious.

Then there is gallows humor... people laughing about things that are not funny at all. Laughing about their arms being cut off, or their parents dying... or a nasty comment someone said to them that made them feel horribly hurt... Using laughter as a way to deny their own feelings, their own pain, their own sadness, loneliness, as well as all the pain and sorrow around them. Because if they admitted other people had painful feelings, troubles, or woes; then they would be dangerously close to admitting their own pain, which they habitually stuff down, repress and deny simply by using inappropriate gallows humor.

Any one who laughs for no reason, any one who titters, or chuckles as a habitual part of their conversational vocabulary is in this category. Their laughter is not funny, it elicits no laughter from others and it becomes an irritating fakery; that people who can laugh, and like to laugh; find repulsive. To have someone constantly tittering, or chuckling as they try to prove to others that they are in good humor, that they are happy, upbeat; so others will like them; is very wearing and boring to listen to. There is much humor that is a total fake. People laughing for no good reason or out of habit the humor of dishonesty and lies and denial and avoidance of anything unpleasantly true; that true humor is almost nonexistent. We are so bereft of being able to be funny ourselves, we are so incapable of making ourselves and others laugh; that millions of people flock to see professional comedians; whose only job is to be funny and make other people laugh. Their existence is a blatant admission of how much people lack a sense of their own humor. Having to go see professional comedians in order to laugh, because they are not able to be funny themselves.

Fake, false humor is emotional poison. It corrupts truth emotionally by poisoning the meaning of what is said. Turning tragedy into comedy, and comedy into tragedy. False humor is an emotional lie. There is the prototypical false laughter of the evil monster, the villain and the mad scientist... as they cackle in total fake humor about whatever gruesome evil they are bent upon... why does the image of anyone who is truly evil always have this gallows cackle...? The executioner leading the innocent victim to their certain death and laughing as they do so... the evil witch cackling as she stirs her vile potions... instead of being horrified by their own evil, the evildoer laughs at their horrible things they are doing to some poor victim. It is the subconscious message that all infants and children receive growing up. When that are in pain, crying, unhappy, terrified, abused by people who pretend that what they are doing to them is funny, so it is okay to do it... it is okay to neglect them, beat them, ignore them, scold them because they want attention and love... and laugh at them when they do not understand why they are being mistreated, laugh at their ignorance, laugh at their innocence, laugh at their childish, infantile ways. Until they learn that laughter in all civilized societies is just another tool that is used to make inhuman brutality normal... until they learn that nearly all civilized laughter is actually a refined form of cruelty... until nearly all civilized humor is about something bad, painful or humiliating.

There is almost no loving humor left in civilized societies. There is almost no gentle, caring, understanding, graceful, innocent, honest, courageous humor left in civilized societies. There are billions of people living today who have never even been exposed to this kind of humor. There are billions of people who do not even know what true humor really is... or even the bastardized versions existing in elite nations. Yet, you will hear more laughter in third world countries than anywhere else on earth. The rich tourists are always puzzled and dumbfounded by this. Mostly, they cannot understand how people living under such harsh conditions can be laughing all the time... and they do not understand why these poor people's laughter is much more genuine than their own snide, hypocritical, intellectual, unloving, uncaring, sneering humor.

The way most civilized comedians get people to laugh is to either deliberately portray themselves or others as the fall guy, as the stupid one, the evil one, the one with no sense of humor... who does not see anything unusual about horrible, nasty, degrading, painful situations or conditions... or portraying or asking why other people are stupid-nasty, etc. And they have to exaggerate this to the point of grotesqueness; they have to blow up their extreme, polarized comments and ideas to such an obscene extreme before they can get any numbed, brutalized, civilized person to even chuckle at what they say.

The pratfall; falling down, is universally funny because all humans have fallen many times as babies before they learned walk. But that is still a form of cruelty. Only if an infant or baby falls harmlessly without hurting themselves at all, and giggles, or laughs at his or her own clumsiness; could a pratfall ever be considered funny. Why? Because if a loving parent laughs with their child instead of at them, then they are not objectifying that child. They are not removing themselves from that child's feelings. Then their laughter is shared...honestly, and with love and understanding. Does any civilized person think that is true humor? A baby falling down harmlessly and laughing at themselves and with their parents who are watching him or her as they struggle to learn how to walk...? No civilized person would go to see this kind of humor. It is not even considered funny. They go to see movies with car crashes, they go to see something happening to others... while they sit safely in their seats and laugh at something they are not connected to. In effect they are all saying:

‘Thank god that is not happening to me... I can only laugh at it happening to other people... it is only funny when it happens to someone else, not me...’

This is the kind of sick, one-sided humor civilization which fosters, this is what civilized people think is funny. All imbalanced humor that has a negative intent is sick. The most obvious kind of imbalanced sick humor is the humor of the torturer, the sadist. The more the victim screams in pain, the more the sadist laughs, the more the sadist's victim suffers, the more they smile. You can see this kind of sick humor acted out in children all over the world... children who have been raised in a culture of cruelty, who have cruel, unloving, punishing, negative parents. That is their imbalanced kind of sick fun they have because they do not know any other kind of fun. They have never been exposed to loving fun, or loving humor... or if they had, it is so minimal it does not change their basic normality enough because they are never rewarded for being kind or loving or gentle, but only when they are being unfeeling, and cruel.

But when you share your misfortune, with others, when you find something in common that both you and someone else has suffered or experienced, when you laugh at yourself, and your own misfortune, so the other person finally sees the silliness and the humor in their own similar misfortune... then you are sharing laughter, you are being honestly funny, lovingly, caringly, understandingly funny... sharing your own mistakes, your own foibles and eccentricities with others, and not only not caring that they are laughing at you, but trying to make them laugh honestly... as you vent all your woes and unhappiness and frustrations publicly... only in a funny way. That is only an honest form of laughter if doing that makes you laugh also. The best kind of laughter, the best kind of humor, the best kind of funniness, is when it is infectious... when it spreads like wildfire... when everyone is laughing... when there are no non-laughing onlookers. It does happen. But it happens so rarely, and it has happened to so few people, that it merely stands as a testament to the utter emptiness of civilized existence where people almost never laugh, and if they do, they laugh for the wrong reasons, and in the wrong way.

What are people laughing at things that are not funny... except a fake, false, lying humor that teaches people how to easily deflect anything that is painfully true? What is this kind of humor except a way of training children at a very young age to be as cowardly and dishonest as possible? Humor is a very gradual thing. If you use humor as a deflection of unpleasant truths in order to slowly accept those painful, unpleasant truths, then that humor is still slightly positive. If you can learn from laughing at something, then it is helpful. But if you use humor to keep those painful truths permanently deflected and have no inclination of ever coming to terms with them, then that humor is just another addictive defense mechanism that only prolongs your own unhappiness. But which is it? Which joke is good and which is bad? Which humor is healthy and which is sick? What is healthy humor? Has there ever been a study done on this question? Have civilized people ever tried to honestly evaluate their own sense of humor and the humor of others, and compare them and draw any sensible, common sense conclusions from the comparisons?

If you cannot laugh at yourself: then you have no right to laugh at others. If you have no ego, then you will not care if others laugh at you because you have no pride, arrogance and pomposity to be humbled. If you are comfortable with your own self-esteem, then you will not be bothered whether other people laugh at you or not. The price of an ego is the price of separating yourself from others, feeling better than others, it is the price of inner isolation, inner rage, inner unhappiness... feeling insulted if anyone looks at you in the wrong way, or says anything you choose to be insulted by... Egotistical people hate being laughed at. They lack any sense of themselves as being funny in any way, shape, or form. Unfortunately, civilization is turning out these humorless robots by the billions and inflicting their sour dispositions upon every living thing around them.

Laughter, humor, fun should only be a way of sharing love, not a one-sided affair. Ultimately, what people find funny is more a commentary on themselves. It exposes what, and who they are far more clearly than what they are laughing at: simply because all human awareness is reflective. Whatever we do is always a reflection upon ourselves. And carefully do not look at our own reflections, or inside, but only outwardly. We reflect what is inside ourselves outwardly, and do not ask what it is we are reflecting, or why, or how... or why we need the approval of others, or why we need to conform to others, or be reinforced by others having the same views as we do. You cannot be a fully rounded, humane person without a reflective sense of humor. It helps to keep you aware of how silly you actually are. It helps to keep you aware of how irrational you actually are. It helps to keep you aware of your own faults and failings. It helps you to put things into more than one perspective.

How many people try to develop a sense of humor? How many people can entertain themselves and others by their spontaneous sense of humor... without ever wanting or needing to go see a movie, or watch TV? How much fun can you spread around by making yourself, and other people laugh: without denigrating them or yourself by any bad intent? What would humans be without a sense of humor? What kind of humor is humane; and what kind is not? Generally, the more ego you have, the less fun you have, the less you laugh, the less funny you are, the more boring you are, the less humane you are. Charlie Chaplin tried to poke fun at Hitler's megalomania in his film: The Dictator. But he never exposed the true sickness of Hitler's dictatorship. Nor did he try to portray it honestly. Anyone who has ever truly gotten to know selfish and self-important people; knows that they are not in the least bit funny at all. They are boring... pathetic, psychotic, mentally disturbed, sick... and once they get any kind of power; they become insane murderers, rapists and criminals... They become horrible, nasty, mean, vengeful, sick, insane monsters.

How can you make the truth about neurotic, egoistical people funny; when they are not funny at all? Except by whitewashing out most of their sicknesses and covering their evil up and saying in effect:

‘Its okay to be selfish. It’s okay to be like Homer Simpson.’

They managed to stuff every known American vice, and sickness into that cartoon character; and somehow magically make it all right to watch a character that is even more gross, more stupid, more greedy, more addicted to all kinds of things, more lazy, more irresponsible, and the worst parenting example in American history.... And still make him likeable and funny. So people can laugh at his countless sicknesses and vices and evils and not feel bad that they are like him in any way, shape, form, or manner.

That is how you normalize corruption. Make it funny so nobody takes evil or corruption or sickness seriously anymore. So nobody takes anything seriously anymore... so anyone can do anything they want to since there are no values, standards, or ethics left in an amoral consumer society that only wants to sell you something and make you laugh at things that are dead serious. Is that a healthy kind of humor? Put a starving child next to you on your bed; and it is not funny at all. But put films of children dying in Ethiopia from starvation and have rich white Americans watch this and it is turned into a joke:

‘How does an Ethiopian fall out of a tree?...’

Then the hand gesture: showing how a leaf gently falls to the ground, because of how thin it is.

But why have Ethiopia and many parts of Africa been perennially the worst areas of drought, disease, civil war, brutality, inhumanity, starvation, etc? one reason is that these races refuse to grow out of a tribal culture that became obsolete and out-of-date before the first Egyptian Pyramids were built 7,000 years ago. These cultures have managed to preserve their worst, their sickest, their most evil, their most brutalized, traditions and customs. And flatly refused to allow any thing better into their culture.

Also. These regions have a long history of cultural corruption that dates back to before Egypt ever was founded. Ethiopia was an Empire long before Egypt ever was. Where do you think slavery was born and practiced before civilization was even invented? Who do you think sold slaves to the Egyptians for 5,000 years? Who do you think sold their own children and bondsmen into slavery to the Arabs? Who were the Arabs? They were desert insects. Scarabs. Scared Arabs. Scared beetles. Scampering over the sand when frightened. Armored. Black. Fast and deadly to smaller insects. Preyed upon by larger creatures... Why does this description fit the Arabs in Africa today so well? The term: scarab was used by the Egyptians. As a sacred animal. To denote what? Bringing new generations of beetles emerging from a ball of dung. Rolling a globe over the desert. Trying to own the whole world, manipulate the whole ball of dung, turning the world into a ball of shit. What have the politics of the Arabs manipulating the world oil markets done? A tiny backwards Nation trying to dominate world politics. Why does this fit not only Arabs, but scarabs? The scarab is one of the earliest forms of Ancient Egyptian symbology. Used as an amulet to signify many things. One of the first forms of writing. Used as sacred Amulets to denote meanings of sacredness. Battling beetles. Warlike insects hoarding balls of shit. Unsuccessfully trying to rule the world. One of the earliest human, abstract, sanctifications of ownership. Worshipping an insect because it seemed to like owning a ball of shit. Did Arabs come from Egypt? No they were marauders that attacked Egypt. But the Egyptians named them well. As black, warlike insects scurrying over the sands.

Where do you think the Congo trade for slaves originated from? It came from Ethiopians enslaving Africans... until all of black Africa copied their rotten culture and they began enslaving each other for thousands of years long before whites began enslaving them. It happened because Europeans paid more money for black slaves than the Arabs did. The African slave trade had been going on for millennia long before the white man ever took part in it. Trace the first slaves sold to the English and the Americans back to their roots: and you will find that they all came from areas that are today, now inexplicably incapable of raising themselves out of their own cultural pits of filth, poverty, tribalism, hate, racism, prejudice, squalor and ignorance.

Then there is the humor of fear... but if you are not afraid of whatever is being portrayed humorously as 'funny'... then what is there to laugh at? If you are not afraid of the dark, why laugh at people who are: unless you like feeling superior to them? What is funny about self-important snobs and megalomaniacs? Then there is the humor of dishonesty... making people who lie seem funny... but if you do not lie, then watching idiots who do lie, is irritating and stupid, and not funny at all. Honest people do not laugh at liars: they dislike them intensely and they despise them: but they do not laugh at them. Then there is the humor of cowardice... but if you are not a coward... then what fun can you get from watching idiots who you despise? There is the humor of stupidity. If you are not stupid, and do not like people who are stupid, and have no sick need to feel or be smarter than others... then why watch a bunch of stupid idiots actually glorifying their own stupidity as something to show off in public...? If you do not, and never have felt envious towards anyone else; what is funny about someone being envious of others? Then any attempt to make envy funny is boringly stupid. What is funny about addiction or greed... if you are not addicted to anything and are not greedy? What is funny about stupidity, cowardice, dishonesty, greed, addiction, and fear...unless you share these attitudes, values, beliefs or characteristics. Using humor to excuse your own faults, and avoid facing them is a way of escaping your own self; your own self-responsibility.

If you took envy, addiction, greed, stupidity, dishonesty, cowardice, and fear out of the human psyche, what would there be left to laugh at? Then you would have to find something you share with other people in humor that is not sick, corrupt, evil or bad. Then you would have a positive humor, a positive culture, a positive ethic, a positive moral. Then you would have to find a way of making jokes about love, about courage, about honesty, about all the good things in people and glorify and focus on these good, healthy things and share them with others... instead of focusing on and glorifying the sickest, worst, nastiest aspect of ourselves as the only kind of shared experience that publicly admits we are human... huh?

If you explore any situation, enough you can find something funny about it. Humor is just an exploration and comparison and evaluation of different perspectives. By exploring any situation, anything whatsoever: you will find an anomaly, something that does not fit, that does not make any sense and cannot be fully explained. But if you explore any anomaly enough, you find that it becomes understandable. Humor is basically a tool used for understanding something better. It is learning tool, a socializing-bonding tool, a love-tool, a loving-tool. If you use humor dishonestly, in a cowardly way, in an unloving way: then it becomes a bad tool. If you use it honestly, courageously, in a loving way: then it becomes a good tool. The most humane cultures are the ones that poke fun at themselves the most. The least humane cultures are ones that have the least humor.

In most modern humor: cruelty is seen as funny, and love and kindness is scorned and looked down upon. If popular consumer culture accurately mirrors what consumers like, and what they are like: does this mean that when modern consumers are with their spouses or mates...they have the urge to vomit on each other in disgust; since their culture portrays love and kindness to be disgusting? Do they watch Nazi Death camp films to laugh themselves sick because the old Nazi forms of brutality and inhumanity are much funnier than our modern forms of inhumanity? Do civilized humans try to be as cruel and unloving as possible just to conform to what their society expects of them? Is this kind of mindless conformity, evil, hate, cruelty, and corruption, hiding under the guise of modern humor, good for us?

One effect civilization has on humans is that it turns civilized humans into emotionally sick people, with emotionally sick attitudes, and emotionally sick values and ideas about what is funny.

But there has been progress in Western culture. Today people can actually smile in public without being killed. In the middle ages: pranks were enough to get you killed. Read the story of Till Eulenspiegel. A madcap prankster who was hung for his 'merry escapades'. Look at the basic cruelty of his pranks. In his age: this kind of humor was the most humane humor there was. The sadistic humor of sadists playing pranks upon their victims.

In the middle Ages, and for most of civilized history: people were terrified of seeming even slightly different from each other. And were usually killed for it. Only the most powerful got away with it. People went around with stone faces. Serious attitudes. Ritualized, somber, greetings. For most of humanity: laughter did not even exist. Fun and happiness did not even exist even as a dream, or an ideal. Only in a few, rare, cultures... where the strictures of ritual were loosened in certain ways; did laughter, fun, and humor develop. Only where babies were loved and cherished, and children were allowed to do what they wanted at an early age: did laughter and fun develop.

Try to find any humor in the oldest myths and legends. Try to find it in the Myths of the Greeks, and Romans, or the Persians. You will not find it. The closest thing to fun or humor is the dry, ironic wit of Caesar, and the madcap antics of insane Emperors. The highest form of Roman humor was a blown-up air-skin called the flatulent paddle that made a farting sound when striking someone harmlessly, letting everyone know who the real ass is

Try to find humor, laughter or fun in Jewish history and culture. It only appeared after they came to America. Only then did they feel safe enough to make fun of their own culture and themselves. Jesus never laughed. He knew kindness. But not fun. There is not a single story of Jesus having any fun. Or of him making a joke. Humor did not even exist during that Time. Try to find humor in Chinese history and culture. You will not find it. Try to find humor or fun in the history and cultures of India. You will not find it.

But today: you can find fun and laughter in some healthy children... in some homes. In some places where people actually smile naturally... and make kind jokes which are harmless, and not intended as a put-down.

Where did modern humor come from? It came from the Jews. Where did modern western culture come from? It came from the Jews. Why? Because Jewish culture is still the most mentally detached, the most insane, the most irrational inhuman culture on earth. Jewish-western culture spread over the world because it was and still is the worst form of human corruption on a mass cultural level... Jewish culture is better at corrupting humans faster than any other culture. It is more convoluted, more sly, more dishonest, more cunning, more deceptive, more filled with lies and hypocrisies, more evil than any other culture on earth. The core intention of Jewish humor is: avoiding facing all unpleasant truths: by laughing at other people's misfortunes, and in doing so, laughing at your own misfortunes. Why is laughing at other people's misfortunes and your own problems: evil?

Because it is all a way, a sick, filthy, cunning, sneaky way of not dealing with any human problem at all. It is a sick evil way of not feeling your own pain honestly, or the pain of others honestly. It is a cowardly way of distancing yourself from yourself: by distancing yourself from others.

The typical Jewish 'joke'. A man walks into a doctor's office and says: 'Doctor... it hurts when I do this. And the doctor replies: "Well, don't do that!"

What does this attitude do?

It is an authority figure telling the person who is poisoned by something... not to investigate what is wrong with them, or try to find a cure, or try to heal or get better... It is a cunning way of telling people 'never search for root causes', never try to find out the true cause of your ailment, which if you did, would enable you to get rid of your sickness forever and never have to see a doctor again.

If the person has a leg that hurts whenever he walks?... Why then all he has to do is stop walking, become a cripple: accept the fact that he is a cripple, never try to get better...and live a miserable life until he dies of his affliction: which the doctor ignores: and does not try to help him and does not try to make it better because he is a quack, a fake, posing as an authority figure, and never searches for the root cause of what is wrong with the patient.... Which by the way is precisely why all western medicine is a pile of useless shit, because it does not search for the true root causes of sickness.

What is Jewish humor? It is mass laughter at common insanities that most people share: and should face and admit that it is wrong and bad and evil. It is the masses laughing at everything... as a temporary relief from their pain and anger and woes and problems. It is a way of temporarily sidetracking people from doing anything constructive about anything that is obviously wrong, bad and evil. It is a temporary drug. It is a temporary avoidance. It does worse than nothing. Laughter: laughing at evil... is the worst evil possible. It is how Jewish and Western corruption became normalized, accepted, unquestioned and remains unchallenged as a permanent fixture of a sick society which refuses to look at itself critically, seriously, refuses to act, refuses to connect insight to action and refuses to stand up for anything and anyone and refuses to fight for anything and refuses to fight against anything. The universal panacea, the drug of Jewish laughter was the origin of all American escapist culture. If people did not use this form of mental detachment, this form of mental insanity called Jewish humor: they would get angry about what is wrong... and stand up and do something about it. Mass laughter is a way of deflecting the healing healthy anger and rage of healthy people who do not like evil, and allowing all evil things to go unpunished and unattacked. Jewish humor is based upon the assumption that all masses are victims and cannot better their lot ever. Jewish humor is based upon rationalizing and excusing the worst evils on earth. All mass humor in all mass media is based upon this principle. Every new fad or wave of the latest 'humor'... is merely helping people to ignore and accept the latest worsening trends of evil in human society like gambling and homelessness, and lotteries, etc.

It is a cunning way of destroying all serious opposition to evil, by sidetracking it into detached insane laughter... laughing at something which you are guilty of... avoiding the unpleasant fact that you are guilty of these evils. By laughing at gambling: religious people now see nothing wrong with legalized gambling. Once any new-worse evil is laughed at in public by the masses... this means that the population is becoming normalized to this new-worse level of evil. Until it becomes so normal, that people no longer 'laugh' at it... they just 'accept it unthinkingly' it is not 'funny' anymore. Only the newest the latest the sickest the worst new trends in human culture are systematically 'laughed' at, and systematically normalized into becoming an impermeated part of human culture. However... this only works when it does not happen to you personally. Break your leg... and you will not be laughing. You will be screaming in pain and in shock. However... since the sharing of any kind of pain has become forbidden in human society. Since human empathy has been systematically destroyed in living humans by civilization... after you come out of the hospital... you turn your story of breaking your leg into a ‘funny story’... which other people can conveniently ‘laugh’ at. Because they do not want to hear the truth of how much it actually hurt.

This is the basic evil of modern Jewish-western humor. The only reason humor is needed in human society is because human civilized society is obviously insane. All of it is insane. It is so insane... so many things are insane... that living humans cannot handle it, cannot understand it, and cannot digest it or realize it completely. So they block out 99.9999 % of the insanity, and ‘laugh’ at the .0001 % that seeps through their deadened normalized brainwashed awareness... just so they will not become emotionally upset or angry or hurt or feel any empathetic humane feeling or reaction which is normal and healthy for all humans to have. Just so they will not feel any enmity against the evil bastards, the killers, the brutes, the robbers, the criminals, the cheats, the liars, the evil-doers... who if they did not use laughter to cover up their outrage and anger... would be shot, jailed, killed and we would get rid of the worst influences in human society.

Jewish laughter is the coward’s way out of any dangerous situation. If you can make the person who is about to hurt you or rob you laugh and forget his evil intention towards you... if you can ease them of the inner constant unhappiness they have from living a miserable life where nobody loves them and nobody cares about them... then this temporary ease of inner pain... becomes addictive. They want to forget more! They want to laugh longer! They want to forget they ever lived! They do not want to think about their own lives or their own problems. Because if they did... if they did not go to comedy houses or watch sitcoms... they might actually stand up and do something about it. Jewish humor was and is a systematic way to culturally cripple all decent honest outrage against anything that is criminal or evil in human society.

Modern humor is a cultural way of cunningly introducing the newest, latest lowest, sickest-worst human decrepitude... and turning this rot into popular, accepted norm which is emulated, admired and looked-up-to.

Jews can laugh at everything, even at their own god. But they cannot laugh when you deride their culture as an inane hypocrisy of a religion which is not even a religion but a pack of obsolete and absurd rituals. Jews say they can laugh at anything, any misfortune. Except their own Holocaust... Oops. That’s too close to home. Which is my point. What’s good for the goose is good for the gander: If you can make a joke about an Ethiopian falling out of a tree then why can’t you make a joke about millions of people dying instead of just one Ethiopian? What is funny, and what is not funny? What is sacred and serious and what can be laughed at? Where do you draw the line, when the line is continually being pushed back and back, lower and lower until everything is supposed to be funny?> Until nothing is sacred and nothing is serious anymore? Once you do that: life becomes meaningless and loses all its value. Once you start laughing at everything indiscriminately, it stops being funny, it becomes an insane universal kneejerk reaction of a mad scientist cackling at everything because he is clinically insane. Once you reach this level of sickness you stop being human altogether: you become an insane inhuman freak.

The hypocrisy of: ‘Thou Shalt Not Laugh At Anybody Else unless they laugh too or they are not there in person to confront you about it. Thou Shalt Not Sneer Or Laugh At Anybody’s pain unless they laugh too or unless they are not there in person and smash your face in... then you quickly stop making jokes about that. Thou shalt not laugh at anyone else’s shame unless they laugh too or unless they hear about it and go after you and sue you in court and win... then you will not be making anymore jokes about it. Thou shalt not make a joke about anyone if they think it not funny unless you can get away with it.

The comedy of satire: poking fun at the corruption and evils of the powerful and corrupt rich does expose their evil: but it is one-sided. Poor people laughing at rich people's foibles: rich people laughing at poor people's foibles. What for? To create a false sense of superiority, making you feel you are better than the ones you are laughing at. Comedy is ultimately a culture of cowardice. It is only when people stop laughing at corruption that corruption will be wiped out. The culture of comedy is ultimately a culture of resignation and personal fear of standing up and fighting seriously against anything you know to be wrong. Every evil which needs to be righted, every serious attempt to change the world for the better is not aided or helped by people laughing at atrocities and crimes and corruption. Ultimately the culture of modern comedy is a sick diseased way of detaching yourself from painful truths, detaching yourself from ugly truth, detaching yourself from brutal truths which need to be faced seriously; not laughed at. Too many honest attempts to fight the evil within human souls have been derailed by cunning hypocrites using the culture of comedy to scorn and mock things which are not funny at all. Too many times comedy is used to derail and avoid painful facts and painful truths. Too many times comedy has been used to avoid being logical and honest about serious issues. The ultimate flaw of comedy is that it is based upon the unspoken assumption that everything is insane and nothing can be logically explained and understood. Modern Comedy is used as a way of avoiding being logical: it is a way of avoiding being honest. This is why Math and Physics is not funny. You can only make fun of something if it is not logical and cannot be understood. You can only use comedy if you can't explain it, or don't want to face the logical, painful; brutal unavoidable truth about something. Or because you don't want to feel the painful truth, you don't want to face the truth. Ultimately the culture of comedy is an escape from reality. It is an escape from facing and feeling and dealing with things which need to be faced and dealt with. It is a superficial way of avoiding all seriousness. As long as you are not serious about anything, then you will not be forced to act, you will not do anything about things which are serious and which matter. Comedy is a way of trying to make light of heavy things. But it is a false lightness. The way to take all the heaviness out of heavy serious things is to face the problem, fix it, overcome the difficulty, solve the problem; honestly and with Courage: Once you have done that: making light of the difficulties you overcame and the hardship you underwent is a way of devaluing yourself and the truth. If something is hard, difficult, dangerous, serious: giving the false impression that it was not or is not is not being honest with yourself and with others. The negative energy of modern comedy is a way of avoiding becoming actively involved in any injustice. As long as you can laugh at unjust laws and unjust regulations and unjust wars and unjust practices... why then... you have just found the perfect excuse to do nothing about them.

But you say... babies laugh. Infants giggle. Children smile and laugh. How can this be evil? In answer: a newborn baby does not have a reflective brain which can detach itself from its own actual circumstances and laugh as an adult laughs. The happiness of a healthy baby is simple a way or radiating its own happiness and well-being out into the world. An unspoiled baby is good: not evil. No baby is born evil unless they were poisoned in the womb by something evil. A good baby radiates goodness. To a healthy baby, all the world around it is good. Everything it sees it goes : 'goo' at. because it has not yet separated itself from the world it lives in, it sees everything AS itself. It is not detached itself from the rest of the world yet like adults are, it has not developed its critical faculties yet. if it feels good... why then all the world around it is good also. After the baby matures it finds out that this not true.

If you study infants you will find that they giggle and laugh when they are genuinely happy; not when they are making 'jokes' at someone else's expense. Babies laugh and giggle when.:

When they are loved

When someone pays attention to them and smiles at them.

When they make a mistake

When they learn something new.

When they discover something new, or see something or someone new.

When they play with someone living like a dog or a human: not when they play with something that is not alive and does not respond to them..

This kind of natural happiness in discovering things and exploring and making mistakes: is how they learn. It is why they learn. Without the natural instinctive ability to play happily at everything they do, babies could not and would not learn.. This form of innocence does not last but should. There is no reason for adults to stop acting like babies. If you make a mistake and laugh about it and admit you mad a mistake.. that means you are learning not to make that mistake again. Babies never laugh at other people's mistakes or unhappiness or misfortunes. They only laugh at their own mistakes if they think it is funny or funny. The more mistakes they make, the more fun they have: the faster they learn and the easier they learn. Laughing with people is a form of empathy. Laughing at other people is a form of unfeeling detachment...

Adults who smile at happy giggling infants are not laughing at them, or laughing with them: they are simply sharing the happiness of the child with the child. And if the child does something outrageously innocent and honest... they smile at that: because honesty is what babies and children are all about. Infants cannot understand Jewish humor. They cannot understand sick adults laughing AT somebody else's pain or misfortune or unhappiness. If a baby is unhappy and starts to cry... other babies will cry also and share that baby's pain or sadness or hurt. They will never laugh at a baby that is crying and unhappy unless they have been poisoned into this sick form of not feeling another human being's pain.

This is one reason why modern Jewish-western humor is evil. It is a sick Jewish way of avoiding the sharing of suffering and misfortune by sharing detached laughter instead of sharing honesty, instead of sharing honestly: Jewish humor shares dishonestly. It is a way of sidetracking the natural impulse of empathy and caring. It is a sick evil way of brainwashing humans to be come apathetic mentally deranged unfeeling, inhuman brutes and cold filth who turn their back on all other humans in need. It is a way of brainwashing people to become passive, mentally detached, powerless victims: who never stand up for themselves or anyone else. It is a mass culture of human helplessness, human resignation, human hopelessness, human irrationality, human insanity.

For example take the pre-eminent comedian of America, the late George Carlin, who outlasted all the other comedians in the waning days of the Age of Comedy in America. He started out as a kid who just wanted attention: one common motive of children growing up in an adult world that constantly ignore their very existence, a common reason and excuse to get into the entertainment business. He only became well known when he decided to stop pandering to the older generation and latched onto the new culture of the young generation protesting the Vietnam war. The older he got, the more cutting and caustic his comedy became until it was a pure cutting satire which ripped to shreds all of the sacred cows and corruptions of civilization he could sniff out. His last show before he died was his most brutal and caustic. In fact it was not funny at all. He was not doing comedy: he was railing and ranting against all of the insanity and stupidities of the human species as brutally and honestly as he could because he knew he did not have much longer to live. In it he said one good thing. He told young people to question authority: but he did not tell people to fight against it: he just told them to question it because he knew that all authority is a bunch of bullshit. He spread his brand of nasty negativity like a toad filled with poisonous hate. He became a role model for millions of impressionable young people. Before he died he admitted that he had given up on the human race long ago, that he was just a disinterested bystander; which was a lie. He was passionate and vehement about the lies he exposed..

Why is this important? His confession is important because he was the best of his breed, he was the best of the entertainment industry and mass media. And if that is all the best of comedy can offer, then is it not worth a piece of shit. The dynamic of his profession relies on millions of people watching one twit and doing nothing about what the twit says. The entertainer/spectator industry dynamic is based upon escaping from reality and giving up on not only your own life and trying to escape from your own problems, but giving up on all levels in all ways and becoming a passive vegetable which laughs at everything and does not move. Carlin gave up fighting against what is wrong in the world long ago, so why should any of his followers and worshippers do any different than their beloved idol? His last message to all his fans was a message of empty nirvana: become a mindless cackling maniac laughing at the entire human species ... but don't even think of getting up off your seat and doing anything about it. Give up on everything. Commit suicide; blow your fucking brains out because it's all hopeless, the rich have you by the balls and they own you. There is no hope. Everything will only get worse. It's no use fighting city hall. And that's from the one comedian who stood far above all the rest: the one whom all the others either secretly admired or openly admired, made his final negative cynical evaluation of humanity and died soon after he did it. George Carlin represents the pinnacle of comedic nihilism. Just as Sartre represented the pinnacle of philosophical absurdity. Both were dead ends. Both of them could not find any reason to live. Both of them did not give any value to their own life. Both of them did not give the coming generations any reason to live for. That is why the culture of philosophic seriousness died when Sartre died, and why the culture of comedy died when Carlin died. They were the last gasp of western civilization trying to justify and understand its own existence. From Angst-to-Existentialism-to-absurdity-to-comedy-to-satire-to-resignation-to-death: the logic of these popular icons points to nothing but the extinction of the entire human race and death for a simple reason. None of their words were ever put into action, None of their thoughts and ideas and feelings were ever put into action. The idea of reading a book about the meaninglessness of human civilization and doing nothing about it, watching a comedian destroy everything civilization stands for and doing nothing about it, is why their legacy and the entire western world is doomed. One basic reason George Carlin was a hypocrite is that he was chasing the same values of money, fame and status which he sneered at and badmouthed on stage. He kept a blind eye to his own corruption. He became rich and famous by entertaining the masses and giving them what they want: an escape from their own dull boring lives. By being part of the entertainment industry and profiting from other people's inability and unwillingness to entertain themselves, he was just as much a part of the propaganda machine that sold the fat people whom he personally despised, their pizza and beer. He was just as much a part of the corrupt system of personally selfishness, greed and ambition as the owners of America whom he was against.

Why is comedy ultimately evil? Comedy is often much more honest than the rest of human civilized society, in fact this is exactly why it has such a universal attraction and why it is has so successfully spread like a flash all over the civilized world. Yes: comedy is often more honest than other forms of public propaganda. Comedy exposes the truth, comedy is more truthful... but it does one basic thing which is totally evil... it teaches you and trains you and programs you into laughing at the truth and doing nothing about it. Comedy brainwashes you into laughing at serious issues; it brainwashes you into not taking anything seriously. Carlin was corrupt because the culture of comedy itself is corrupt at its root core.

The culture of sitting on your ass and doing nothing comes from the upper class; the lower classes copy the upper classes. Comedy is an attempt by the lower class to copy the snobbery of the upper class by looking down and laughing at it. This comes from the pyramidal hierarchy of civilization..

All abstract culture is corrupt because it is an escape from the real world you live in. All escapism, all entertainment brainwashes people into avoiding serious problems and painful truths. All escapism brainwashes and programs people into avoiding doing anything about the problems they face. Anything that programs you into sitting on your ass and doing nothing: anything which turns you into a detached spectator; anything that detaches you from reality is corrupt. Humans do not have feathers, we are not birds: we are not designed to stare at things from a safe distance and fly away if anything comes too close. We are designed to live in close proximity with all living creatures and touch them with our loving sensitive hands:

Now... if Carlin had given his shows as a serious lecture on the insanities and wrongs of human civilization. If the masses who paid money to see him were expected to take his opinions seriously and not laugh at what he said. If Carlin had demanded that the people listening to him get as angry as he was at the stupidity of human civilization, and get off their fucking lazy asses, and actually do something to change the society they live in... he would not have been corrupt at all: in fact he would have become a force for good. But if Carlin had attempted to sell his series of rants as a serious lecture instead of as a form of entertainment... nobody would have paid to see him. Do you think anyone would have paid one nickel to go see him if he hadn't put his ideas into a comedic context? The answer is... NO. He would have been regarded as a crazy loon

This is why the culture of comedy is evil. It has taken all seriousness out of the human soul, it has taken seriousness out of human awareness and human practice. It has made the brainwashed masses ignore anyone who is not entertaining or funny. This is the catch-22 of the culture of modern comedy: you are only listened to if you are funny: but if you are funny: you are not taken seriously. Anyone who is too serious is regarded as a nut.

Truth is not designed to be laughed at. Truth was never supposed to be laughed at. Truth should never be laughed at. Laughing at the truth is an abomination of evil. Laughing at the truth is a sacrilege. Laughing at the truth prevents you from using all of the potential connections and insights which these truths hold.. Laughter is used a sociopathic drug. A few centuries ago the only people who laughed were madmen, maniacs and insane monsters. It was their way of detaching themselves from the atrocities they were committing upon their fellow man. This social stereotype of the total madness of laughter still exists in the film industry: the stereotype of the mad scientist; the mad ruler gone totally insane, the vision of Nero, playing his fiddle as Rome burned around him; uncaring of the horror going on all around him; totally dissociated from reality. That is the ultimate goal of laughter: to disconnect you from reality; to disconnect your senses so much, that you go become completely detached from life.

Laughing at the truth shows not only disrespect for truth: it shows contempt for the truth. When you laugh at anything which is true; unless you do something about it; unless you respect the truth, unless you use the truth to heal what is wrong and evil, unless you use truth as a positive force for GOOD in your life: then what you are doing is what all consumers do... taking valuable precious resources and spitting on them and then throwing them away into the garbage. For thousands of years the concept of truth was held up as the highest most sacred values of the wisest spiritual leaders ever born... Now: every comedian makes jokes about the truth, now billions of civilized human laugh at the truth. In essence, this is why George Carlin is an evil man. He only told truths only as long as he could get people to laugh at the truths he told. Which is what all comedians do, regardless if they are the best or the worst of that breed and culture. Truth should not to be laughed at: neither should it be sanctified or worshipped. Truth is an accurate perception of reality which is not distorted, twisted or poisoned by lies and propaganda .

Why was comedy invented? Why was this culture ever created? Because people in the entertainment business discovered that if you ever tell the truth too bluntly and too seriously and too cuttingly: the masses turn off their machines: they turn off their minds and hearts and souls: and sought some other fluff-garbage to escape into rather than face and deal with any unpleasant ugly harsh truth. You will notice that this book does not use comedy to sell you on the Universal Principles and Truths which I outline and explain. This is because Universal Truths are not funny: they are perfectly logical and understandable. Universal Truth is not a product of human civilization. Universal Truth is greater than human civilization, Universal Truths are more powerful than you are, and are to be respected and understood and studied seriously: not superficially. If you wish to laugh at the Law of Gravity then step off a cliff and see how long your laughter will keep you alive before your body is smashed into pulp, see if your laughing at the Law of Gravity will keep you from dying. The fact is: if you fall off a cliff you will not be laughing at the Law of Gravity: you will be screaming in fear and terror, and it will not be a detached experience which you can laugh at. All laughter is a detachment from truth and reality.

Why is laughter of modern comedy evil? Because it allows you to escape from reality. It prevents you from changing anything for the better. When the humanity is being pushed slowly in the direction of suicidal self-destruction, laughing about it is not funny. The time to take truth seriously is when you hear it, not just before you die. Read Charles Dickens "A Christmas Carol". When Scrooge was faced with his immanent demise: he was not laughing. He was on his knees begging, pleading for a second chance to live and do the right thing. Regardless of how civilized human deny important truths, the point is: laughter is used as just one more way to avoid facing and dealing with all of life's problems and realities. This why the comedy of George Carlin is evil. Not because he an evil person, but because the profession and culture of comedy is intrinsically evil. By the very motive of trying to make people laugh at everything that's wrong with civilized society, he sullied all of his personal honesty by not being taken seriously. When you tell the truth as a joke: when you create a culture in which truth is not taken seriously: you automatically destroy the value, the sacredness and seriousness of truth across the board. You have created a culture which devalues all truth. You have created a culture which places entertainment and laughter and escapism and fantasy and fiction above truth. That is why Carlin is evil. A nihilistic negative example of a professional comedian who has given up on his own species a long time ago a disinterested spectator of humanity, a little boy craving attention... Ultimately he became no better than the millions he entertained: he could not find any justification or reason for human existence, and he couldn't find any reason or justification for his own existence. As a pop culture philosopher; he spread gloom and doom and hopelessness and lies and negativity, and his audiences ate it up because they were also negative bystanders who did nothing but watch the world go by without participating in life. His love of destruction; his love of watching people suffer and die on TV, speaks to his basic negative outlook and personality. His inner rage against everything unjust and unintelligent in this world was corrupted by selling his views and his hate through humor His audiences laughed at the truths he told them because he was a comedian. When only comedians are allowed to speak of serious ethical and moral issues, when truth is greeted with laughter instead of being taken seriously: then that culture and society is beyond redemption.

The basic difference between good laughter and evil laughter is the difference between sharing and selfishness, between connection and disconnection. When people use laughter to disconnect themselves from reality. When people laugh at someone or something; that is a disconnection of spirit and intent.

When people laugh with you, they are sharing their happiness and good intent. It is the difference between feeling directly and detaching yourself from your feelings. When you do not share yourself: you do not feel the harm you cause, and thus are free to commit horrible wrongs without even realizing it. When you are empathetic and share your feelings and yourself with others, it automatically prevents you from causing harm to others because in doing so, not only do you harm yourself, but you feel it, and stop doing it instantly. Empathy is just a word for increased sensitivity. The more sensitive you are towards yourself and others, the more aware you are, the more intelligent you are, the more humane you are. That is the difference between empathetic laughter and the negative humor which Carlin practiced. He did it cunningly: he used humor to get people to laugh at other people..

Getting audiences to laugh at truth is bad enough... but to laugh at everything... to laugh at corrupt crimes, to laugh at moral and sexual depravity and drug use... to brag about your own depravity, which is what the culture of comedy had deteriorated into... there are no words for that. Getting an audience to laugh at the truth is bad enough... but when comedians use comedy to twist the truth and reverse the truth and present lies as the truth: that is evil. The culture of comedy is now being used to drag all of human society down to the lowest possible levels of self-indulgent filth, down to the most disgusting the most revolting behavior. The culture of comedy has been used to normalize the masses into tolerating the worst while sneering at the best. The entire culture of professional comedians has been turned into pushing the envelope of 'how low can you go' to lower and lower depths of disgusting vulgarity... until what was vulgar yesterday becomes accepted behavior today, until what was once bad taste becomes good taste, until it is nothing but a screaming confession of the corruption of human souls. Comedians have become confessors; they confess to being guilty of the worst, lowest, most disgusting things in order to get a laugh. Instead of pushing the social norm higher, this pushes it lower. Carlin did this also. By marking the best of them as intrinsically negative for the crime of making his audiences laugh at truth, no words can describe the utter foulness of what is called comedy today.

However, if comedy is not used as a tool to detach you from reality, if you do not use it to laugh at things which are not funny at all and should be taken seriously: then laughter does have its rightful place as an expression of genuine human happiness. It is how we live, it is how we use our lives and our abilities and potential which determines whether what we do is good or evil. If you use laughter to spread joy and happiness and health all around you like happy children do: then it is not evil, it is GOOD. But modern comedy does not do this. Modern comedy is a commercial drug used to desensitize the masses and turn them into detached passive spectators. The culture of modern comedy is not positive: it is totally negative and evil.

The Culture of Modern Comedy

Every professional comedian sells one thing:

A false moral authority, a false moral assumption, selling the false idea that everything in life is supposed to be 'funny', that everything in life is supposed to be laughed at. The idea that everything in life is funny implies something that is very dangerous.... It implies that nothing in life is serious, that there is nothing in Life which should be taken seriously.

The reason this idea is very dangerous is not only that it is not true, but because it is a detachment from reality, it is an escape from reality. It is dangerous because every professional comedian sells this unspoken assumption as a universal truth...

subliminally; on a subliminal level of perception.

This message that everything in life is funny carries with it an unspoken assumption which is:

“If it’s not that bad... if it isn’t bad enough to be taken seriously... why then, there’s no reason to actually do anything about it.”

Why is this unspoken subliminal assumption dangerous? Because the corollary to comedy is seriousness. Because it is not true. Because it is one-sided. Because it is not balanced. Because the other side is never mentioned. Because this assumption is not sane. Because without seriousness, you cannot have comedy. .

By this detachment from reality, by the twisting and manipulating human perception; this is one way of how mass media programs program the lower class masses into the passive role of inactive, brainwashed spectators who do nothing except sit and be entertained by professional comedians. This is one way how the people in power, how the status quo uses weapons of mass distraction to maintain their power and keep control over the masses.

Another reason the culture of comedy is evil is, every professional comedian sells the same false negative perception of reality: that everything in life is horrible and bad; that nothing in life is good; that nothing is beautiful, that nothing is clean.

They do this because anything which is clean, beautiful and good cannot be made fun of, and thus; is not funny. Comedians hate anything that is good or clean or beautiful because they can’t make jokes about it... unless they filthy it, and turn it into something that is ugly, dirty, nasty, disgusting and horrible.

Another reason the culture of comedy is evil is if enough people think what a professional comedian says is funny, they accumulate a FALSE moral authority based upon their popularity: not on what is actually true. When they become so famous that millions of people listen to them, they develop their own personal FALSE picture of comedic unreality filled with lies, and sell it to the masses as the actual truth, as in... “The world according to George Carlin... or Jerry Seinfeld, or Jackie Mason”

They become to be regarded as modern prophets, as wise seers, their every word and opinion is listened to and valued. They are regarded as the modern wise men of today; replacing the ancient wise men of the past, who were serious and never funny. The Jewish culture of professional comedy has reversed the entire dynamic and perception of what wisdom actually is. Originally, wise prophets who were never funny they were serious; they were persecuted, killed, crucified, disregarded and ignored for centuries before their moral teachings were taken seriously.

Now, professional comedians who are never serious, become world-famous overnight, and suddenly everything they say is listened to and valued as insights and nuggets of wisdom. Why? Because what they say is the opposite of ancient wisdom, because what they say and how they say it is the reverse of what wise men once said in the past.

Another reason the culture of comedy is evil is their funniest jokes are based upon the reversal of truth. Their funniest material is based upon lies, and exaggerations that are stretched so far into the unreal realm of pure insanity that they scream out the opposite of what is actually true. Their best, their 'funniest' jokes are when they manage to reverse an actual truth around and make the audience laugh at this reversal and accept it... so their perception of truth is reversed. Their 'best' jokes are the jokes that successfully reverse the perception of what is actually serious into something that is perceived to be 'funny'.

Modern professional comedians try to make out that everything is funny: that nothing is sacrosanct from being laughed-at as being funny. That there is something 'funny' in everything... no matter what it may be.

The fallacy of this perception of reality is obvious and simple. Anything can be made out to be funny... but only if you are detached from it. Anything can be turned into a joke, but only if... you detach yourself from it. Anything can be made funny if you are not personally involved. Anything can be made to seem to be funny if you are a spectator... if you are only a detached bystander.

It is not funny if it is happening to you... unless: you detach yourself from your own experiences, unless you become an insane detached freak who doesn't experience anything directly and honestly. Professional comedians don't do this. They come from the assumption that 'Hey, the whole world is crazy. Everybody is crazy! Everything is crazy! Everything is meaningless! Everything is 'funny'!'

If you want to explain the difference between what is funny and what is not funny to a professional comedian go up to him or her with an axe, and chop off their fingers. As they lie on the floor bleeding to death screaming in agony: ask them why they aren't laughing. They will be in too much pain and shock to answer you. But one thing will be certain: they won't be fucking laughing about having their fingers chopped off with an axe.

And after they come out of the hospital, and spend the rest of their lives as one-armed cripples: they will not try to make their living by the practice of standing up in public making fun of things which are not funny at all. This is one basic reason that I don't like professional comedians; they are liars and hypocrites. They make money by selling hypocrisy and lies to the masses. They are crowd pleasers; they pander to the lowest, filthiest instincts of the mob; they filthy everything that is good and decent; they do not respect Honesty and Courage. They are dishonest liars and hypocrites.

George Carlin in his last 3 HBO specials was not funny at all. Instead, he was visibly angry about all of the corruption which he had uncovered during his lifetime as a crowd-pleaser; to the point where he not only despised the upper elite who had complete control of the society he lived in, he also despised the brainwashed fools: the masses who paid money to see him perform for them and laugh at everything he said... when most of what he said was 100% serious; and was meant to be taken seriously.

But nobody took him seriously. Why? Because professional comedians are not supposed to be taken seriously ever. Because these professional clowns are used by the power that be to stifle all serious opposition and dissent against their control and power over society. In other words: Carlin gained his fame and influence by never being taken seriously, and instead of becoming active opposing the evils he discovered: he just continued to make more fucking money, getting richer and richer, piling up all of those fucking dollars, and keeping his professional identity as an entertainer who was not serious about anything he said. The result was and will be that his unspoken message to the masses is to resign yourself to all the corruption and evil and insanity of civilized existence and never stand up and actively fight against any of it:... just make snide remarks about what is wrong with human society and do absolutely nothing to fix it or change it or make it better: just remain a fucking detached observer, a passive brainwashed spectator and obey your bosses and owners and masters and live as a hypocritical coward who knows better but does nothing to stop the insanity of civilized humans destroying everything they touch. Carlin's message was clear: he said over and over again that he had given up on the human species long ago. He was a confirmed nihilist: a corrupt paid entertainer... who just happened to be slightly more honest than most of the other professional clowns who are paid to make people laugh by detaching them from reality and brainwashing them into passive obedient terrified little cowards and slaves of the rich and mighty. That is why George Carlin was an evil influence upon his viewers. He was the worst example of cowardice possible. Someone who rebelled against authority and then gave up all rebellion against authority and decided to 'play the system' to his own advantage by becoming a disc jockey and then a professional entertainer so he could have an affluent rich life and get the attention which he craved as a fucking child. You think maybe he would have grown up and not craved that false attention anymore..? Do you think he might have woken up and realized that all of this attention he was getting and all of the approval he got was based upon lies and hypocrisy and bullshit?

No.

That imbecile never made that crucial connection in his soul. He never grew up. He remained a stupid spoiled child seeking the approval of his elders until he died as an angry disillusioned old man whom nobody took seriously. All of the insights and truths he spoke were wasted.

If he had decided to become seriously active in fighting against the corruption of the society he lived in; he would have been thrown in jail and never let out again: like the writer and poet Ezra Pound, who had been jailed for becoming too vociferous as a peace activist against the corruption of the war mongers who pushed an unwilling America into both WW1 and WW2.

If he had become serious about fighting the evils he had discovered: nobody would have paid one cent to go see him because then he would not have been trying to be 'funny', he would not have been a professional 'entertainer'.. Then the brainwashed masses would have never known there was a person called George Carlin, and he would have spent the rest of his life as a complete unknown.

This is how completely sick and diseased and corrupt and evil human civilization is. People will only listen to you if you lie to them. People will only listen to you if you aren't serious about what you say. People will only listen to you in order to escape from the ugly truths of reality. If you try to tell them the harsh truth, if you try to tell them anything they don't want to hear: they will block you out and never listen to a word you have to say. This is why all civilization is evil and should be destroyed. When there is no truth, no honesty, no courage, no decency in human society any longer: it no longer has any right to exist. Except to spread more evil and that is not a reason to exist: that is a reason to destroy it.

Does this mean laughter is bad for you? No: it means anything which is negative, anything which is done for evil motives, anything which has an evil negative intention is bad for you. Carlin's so-called humor was one of increasing hate, envy, ugliness and rage. Positive laughter comes from Beauty: it does not create ugly toilet jokes about cursing, foul language and human feces. Positive laughter comes from Beauty, Happiness and Fun and Love: not ugliness, anger, hate, envy and unhappiness.

In order to laugh at things which should be taken seriously; you have to suspend your critical awareness, and detach yourself from all of your critical thinking skills... until; this mental detachment, this total lack of criticality, the total lack of all seriousness becomes an ingrained, programmed response of detached insane laughter.

This doesn't mean you should be serious all the time. When you are happy: spread your happiness to everyone around you; when you are sad: spread your sadness to everyone around you. When you are aware of serious things which are wrong and need to be faced and dealt with: spread your seriousness around to everyone around you: communicate your feelings and thoughts to everyone around you openly and honestly. But civilization does not let you do this. Civilization is filled with countless taboos and customs and unspoken negative assumptions of what you are allowed to say and what you are not allowed to say... what you are allowed to feel and what you are not allowed to feel, what you are allowed to think and what you are not allowed to think, what you are allowed to do and what you are not allowed to do.

How do you spread happiness and laughter? By having FUN creatively, by being creative every day of your Life. Happiness originates from the ability to Create Positive Energy. Happiness originates from having FUN. If you don't know how to have FUN, if you don't know how to play and have fun: then you can't be happy. Happiness comes from HEALTH. If you are sick: you cannot be happy. Happiness comes from LOVE. If you are unloved and you love nobody else: you cannot be happy. Happiness is only a symptom of CREATIVITY, HEALTH, FUN, PLAYFULNESS and LOVE. Rather than having happiness as a goal in your Life: your goals should be to become as creative as possible and as healthy as you can, by playing and having as much FUN as you can, by making FRIENDS with all positive-energy creatures, and LOVING as many positive loving people as you can. Not paying money to go see someone... to make you laugh. If you need a professional comedian to make you laugh, you are sick.

Negative Laughter

The dynamic of negative laughing is the same dynamic as the luffing of a sail. Negative Laughter has the same effect of a luffing sail. Instead of catching the meaning and holding it, the meaning spills out. Laughter paralyzes you like a luffing sail paralyzes a sailboat, it prevents you from acting, it freezes your reactions, it leaves you dead in the water unable to decide which way to turn, unable to decide whether something is good or bad, unable to move forward or back. Negative Laughter prevents you from catching, holding onto, and understanding and using the truth to go forward. The culture of negative comedy and negative laughter is a symptom of mass sociopathic conformity and detachment from reality; it is a brainwashing tool used to paralyze the masses. It is a numbing drug, an avoidance of pain, a way of avoiding facing reality, a way of forgetting your own misery and unhappiness, it is an escape from painful truths.

Failure and Success

In civilization, our tool-concept of success is based upon accumulation, and the dynamic of separation. Power, wealth, status, knowledge is only considered successful if it accumulates. Whereas, our tool-concept of failure is based upon fear... the fear of separation, the fear of dying-death. Anything that diminishes, dies, or goes extinct is considered a failure. However, in the actual Universe, there is no such thing as success or failure. In the process of energy-experience-evolution, there is no demarcation between survival and extinction, life and death, or success and failure. No success can exist without countless failures. All energy-flow in the Universe, all the creativity and diversity of life itself, is based upon constant, unending failure. In essence, all change, all learning, all evolution of energy, is based upon failure: not success. Success does not cause things to change creatively and evolve: failure does. What we label as failure is actually a necessary process for all evolution, all change, all learning to even happen. It is billions of times more important than any success. But since our values are mostly based on the tool-dynamic of separation and accumulation, we focus pyramidally only on the apex of a success while ignoring the huge number of failures necessary for any success. By this misperception of selective awareness you get a reversal of actual values. By valuing success more than failure, by creating a fear of failure, we strangle our own willingness to ask questions, explore, fail, learn, change, grow and evolve as humans. Instead, our tools evolve while we are beset with the same recurring problems, the same mistakes, never learning from those mistakes, never finding true happiness, true love, true joy, true peace, etc...

Human Values vs. Tool Values

What is the value of life? What is the value of living things? If you wish to value life over death: then you must place a higher value on living things than dead things. Yet inside civilization, the exact opposite is true: people buy and sell living animals for a pittance, while placing the value of dead things in the millions and billions of dollars. This demonstrates the complete value reversal that civilization produces. And incredibly; humans have never bothered to organize their values into these two obvious categories. All human self-esteem, self-respect, self-worth, is something which you earn-accumulate. But what are these values of worth, esteem and respect based upon? What kind of respect, what kind of esteem, what kind of worth? How are they earned? By accomplishment? Effort? Perseverance? By overcoming difficulties? By success?

A famous basketball coach once defined the idea of success as the personal knowledge that you did your utmost: that you gave it your all: regardless of the outcome. In other words: he completely discounted all of the external trappings of success. However, even that definition of success is based upon the assumption of struggle, antagonism and adversarial conflict against somebody or something.

There is a basic hypocrisy in all competitive sports. The ethic of true sportsmanship claims that it isn't whether you win or lose but how you play the game. Athletes insist that the real fun they get out of sports is just the game itself. Yet, all sports are designed as adversarial combats with winners and losers... and the winners are always lionized while the losers are forgotten. To justify any sport, the ego gratification of winning is touted as the supreme goal and reward for playing a sport: which is a complete, hypocritical contradiction against all the supposed ethics of sportsmanship that all athletes pay lip service to. But in that case; there is no reward or reason for the losers to play. Why play sports if you lose? For the pure fun of it? In that case; why bother about winning or losing? The reason why sports are not designed to be fun for everybody all the time, instead of a battle, the reason why they are an unloving conflict, in which only a handful receives adulation, is because they are merely a training ground for the conflict of civilized life, which all humans must grapple with. By glorifying the concept of adversarial conflict, the idea itself becomes a sacred cow; worshipped unquestioningly. It becomes a universal civilized value. It becomes a universally accepted lie. Every athlete who has ever played competitive sports knows that winning is not worth the misery of losing.

If winning was worth the misery of losing: then competing would make sense. Competition creates more negative energy than positive energy. It separates winners from losers. It shames everyone who loses. It shames millions of competitors so a few, lucky winners can be glorified. Competitive winning is an empty, worthless piece of shit.

Even at the highest level of competition, the best results are only achieved when the athlete completely puts aside the need to win and concentrates only upon their performance. Even more; they must stop thinking altogether and let their bodies take over, so the closest synchronizing of mind and body can be achieved. The true joy of sports is being physically creative with your body, by existing purely within the moment. And that is achieved by not thinking: by only existing purely in the present. It has been scientifically proven that optimal performance in sports happens when the two hemispheres of our brain are the most balanced.

In effect, the best winning performance is achieved only when you are not intent on winning. The only actual competition that exists is the desire of the inner self to continually stretch ones abilities and limits. This reveals the fallacy and hypocrisy of all competition that professional athlete do not want to admit. Otherwise... if everyone found out how much fun it is, and started doing it themselves: who would be left to pay money to watch other people having fun playing sports?

To judge human performance by inches or seconds, while ignoring relative bodyweight, lung capacity, body size, muscle tone: is just as arbitrary as judging athletes for what kind of artistic impression they may have on their audience. Why? Because no two people are identically the same weight. No two people have the same lung capacity. No two people have the same muscle mass. The idea of competition being fair or equal or balanced; is a complete fallacy. Trying to use finite measurement, to determine any human value is ludicrous. The concepts of winning and losing are absolutes that have nothing to do with the human aspect of any physical activity or accomplishment. Awarding medals or trophies; is merely an attempt to preserve and glorify competition. It is only relevant and valid for those few participants, on a certain day, in a certain place, at a certain time. You cannot accurately measure or compare athletic performance. If the Olympics were held all around the world everyday. Then every minute... you would have thousands of different winners: who win an Olympic gold medal.

Selective equality is a fallacy. Selective equality is the biggest bullshit brainwashing ever sold to people. If equality is selective: it cannot be equal period. Equality is a Universal principle. Equality works only as a Universal principle. Not as a selective principle. Things work better when all things are equal. Not when only one thing is equal, and all other things are unequal.

‘All things being equal...’ is a hypothetical, non-existent assumption. It is a phrase used as lip-service. It is never put into practice. But the idea works. But you can make things more equal. Water always seeks its own level.. All things seek their own level. Water is the most self-equalizing substance in the Universe. 75% of your body is made of Water. Life works because it is made out of Water. We ignore what we are made of. We ignore the equalizing Dynamic that water works by Equality. We ignore the Universal Law of Equality at our own peril.

Since we are crisis-oriented animals who respond to stress and crisis in certain ways: the adrenaline rush of athletes and thrill seekers is genetically designed into us already. However: becoming addicted to crisis situations, becoming thrill seekers, competing in sports, is only another way of escaping the boredom of living in the dull, non-physically challenging environment of civilization. Winning and losing, the urge to win, the entire dynamic of competition polarizes everything. Antagonism, adversarial conflict, and the struggle to succeed: polarizes everything. All this is only a byproduct of how tools work, how our tool-brains work... this is all based upon the absolute... seeing things in absolute terms... tools separating things absolutely, humans separating things into absolutely separated words, focuses, ideas, without connecting them.

That is what creates unhealthy stress. This what creates imbalanced lifestyles. The very idea of working most of your life is a permanent imbalance, an unhealthy imbalance that creates distorted awareness, distorted cultures, distorted values, distorted norms. All because everyone is supposed to win, because everyone is supposed to work, succeed, etc...

What if you remove this civilized norm? What if there is nothing or nobody to struggle against except Nature itself? What if there is no pyramidal context at all? What if you have no pyramidal goals to strive for... struggle for? Then how do you define the idea of success? What kind of value-worth-esteem can you earn without any pyramidal context of conflict-struggle? Originally; the challenge of survival in the Natural World with only the aid of a very simple tool kit; was enough of a challenge. Until our tools got too good: then we started getting bored. So we started making fancier tools to escape that boredom.

There is only one kind of value-worth-esteem-respect that is actual, not abstract: and that value-worth is the value of usefulness. What is crucial however is the context of that usefulness... useful to what... who? How? If you are only useful as a tool, as a civilized tool, if you are only useful to civilization, then you are only artificially useful. How useful you are to yourself, to others, to all living things, and ultimately to the Universe that you are a part-of... so there is no paradoxical conflicts involved in being useful to all these things is what your actual usefulness should be composed of. Then there is the dichotomy between the universality of all things being intrinsically useful, and the idea of having to earn usefulness. People admire a butterfly just for being a butterfly. They value its beauty. The butterfly is useful because it is a butterfly. It was designed to function as a butterfly. You cannot separate function from designed functions or designed usefulness... except in civilization.

What this actually means is that anything that exists must be intrinsically useful in some way. A tree does not have to separately earn its usefulness in order to be a useful tree. Everything it does as a tree earns it that usefulness. Similarly, if a human is intrinsically valued for just being human, that value is based upon only what a human is: not what they do. Because what you are designed to be cannot be separated from what you are designed to do. But we are experiential animals, we develop some of our human usefulness by learning: not by our intrinsic genetic attributes or traits that were designed into us. Valuing who and what we are intrinsically is hopelessly mixed up with valuing our ability to learn and use tools. Valuing who we are, is a merging of two different processes: the dynamic of constant change and the dynamic of accumulation: being and becoming, living and learning, growth and change, experiencing and accumulating experience.

However, in the context of civilization, this dualism of value is imbalanced. The civilized concept of usefulness boils down to being able to function only as a tool. Being able to accumulate knowledge, things, power and wealth. Being able to struggle higher up this pyramidal heap regardless of the effect you have on those you are scrambling on top of. So because of tool-values: most human-values are based upon adversarial-antagonistic-conflict. The entire wealth and power of civilization is based solely upon the dynamic of accumulation; not the dynamic of a balanced regenerative process like life. What are banks but places of pure accumulation? What is power but another form of pure accumulation? Because the dynamic of accumulation is one-sided, because it is not balanced: it is intrinsically destructive towards all forms of balanced regeneration.

Civilization is intrinsically destructive towards all of Nature and towards all living things: that is the nature of civilization. It is obsessed with piling up and accumulating dead things. It does not allow people to live in harmony and balance with each other or with Nature. Instead, it traps people inside a completely unnatural, arbitrary, artificial, hierarchical environment. It forces people to fight and scramble to the top of this accumulation called civilization in order to avoid being crushed by it.

But within the context of the actual Universe: this does not apply. The usefulness of a grain of sand is not determined by how much it can climb on top of other grains of sand. How useful living organisms are, is not determined by how well they can dominate or control other living organisms. Their usefulness is determined by their designed purpose. If a living organism such as plankton is designed to proliferate so it can feed a multitude of other organisms while also flourishing itself: then that organism is successful. If a grain of sand is designed to form beaches, flats, as an ingredient in soil, to become compressed into different kinds of rock, to be used as an abrasive to shape the geography of rivers, as a component of deserts: then that grain of sand is successful.

So: what is the designed usefulness-purpose of humans? What are we worth? What kind of value do we possess? Here: all you have to do is examine how we were genetically designed to live. Humans were designed as scavengers, hunter-gatherers. Once we developed better tools, we evolved out of our specific ecologically useful niche. And once that happened, we lost any intrinsic usefulness to other living organisms because we no longer fit into the balanced ecosystems we lived in. We were no longer necessary to the ecosystems as sand, or plankton, or other animals. There is no pyramidal arrangement of life or the food chain. This is a myth that ecologists now know is a fallacy. It is all cyclical: all based on dynamic balance: not endless accumulation. Humans only have one usefulness left... Which is not to the planet they live on: but to each other.

So: the actual definition of all earned human usefulness is ultimately based upon cooperation with everything: not only your immediate group not conflict between your own species and the Natural Hardship which Nature determines to give you: Not artificial hardship you create by living inside an artificial system that forces you into conflict with your own species. You can still earn your self-worth: just don't do it on an adversarial basis against other people, or against Nature. The only useful characteristics which should be developed in humans is not adversarial conflict or antagonism, but the aspects of giving-love-sharing-helping. However, in civilization these values are corrupted since no matter where you find them, they are subverted to be used in some kind of adversarial conflict: whether it is a sports team cooperating in order to compete against another team, or an entire nation cooperating so it can wage war against another nation.

Moreover: with the advent of civilization, this conflict was inevitable since the earth was never designed to support such a large population of mammals our size: just as it cannot support 6 ½ billion wolves, or deer, or porpoises. The excess accumulation of human population made human conflict with each other and with their environment unavoidable.

Human Values

What are human values? Human values lie in the simplest experiences of living. Joy, fun, laughter, sadness, curiosity, pleasure, pain, love-connectiveness, play, wonder, happiness, peace. They are the values of living-being-experiencing-changing-growing-feeling-thinking-acting-reacting. They are the universal process-values of dynamically balanced Splitness, of energy-experience-evolution. They are not the tool-values of non-change, normality, reflective fear, separation, segmentation, specialization, accumulation, pyramidalization, prioritization, imbalance, abstraction, corruption, trauma, non-experienced experience and non-experienced pain: they are not the values of deadness, accumulation and dead things. Human values are the non-values of living, being, creating and enjoying life as a process of dynamically balanced Splitness. Human values have no finite goal, no finite value, nor have they any finite beginning or ending. They are merely a part-of the unfolding path of balanced Splitness: which is infinite in scope, infinite in possibility, infinite in creativity. The only way humans can live fully is to connect themselves to that actual infinity by the only means they possess: their awareness. By trying to develop their awareness, expand their awareness, grow, change. The only way that can happen is through the sense of pure wonder. Only when the reflective awareness of the human animal, instead of staying imprisoned inside its own normality, uses its sense of pure wonder to expand beyond its reflective normality, can it even slightly, barely, get an intimation of the actual infinity it exists in.

The basic universal differentiation between Good and Evil can be simply stated as the difference between dynamic balance and imbalance... Or the difference between regeneration and accumulation... Or the difference between human-values and tool-values... Or the difference between actuality and abstraction... Or the difference between valuing living things and valuing dead things... Or the difference between valuing human life and valuing money-profit... Or the difference between a sensitized awareness and a desensitized awareness... Or the difference between a Sense of Wonder and a dulled sense of normality... Or the difference between courage-honesty-love and fear-dishonesty-hate... Or the difference between giving and taking... Or the difference between selflessness and selfishness... Or the difference between non-possessiveness and possessiveness... Or the difference between generosity and greed... Or the difference between ego-less gratification and ego gratification. They are all aspects of the same thing, the same process and the same dynamic.

The trouble is that the sense of Pure Wonder cannot exist in a condition of fear. Fear extinguishes wonder. By this: I mean reflective fear, not instinctive fear. This is a crucial dynamic of all hominid-human evolution, which led up to the emergence of modern man. It is the invisible untold story of what actually happened to produce civilization. When did humans first develop a separate reflective awareness? When did hominid-humans first experience reflective fear? When did hominid-humans develop the sense of pure wonder? No one can say. Except that reflective fear and the reflective sense of wonder are both products of a reflective human awareness. One is the product of an imbalanced awareness. The other is the product of a balanced awareness. The only thing we do know, is that reflective fear won out: it managed to dominate human awareness. Our species has a hidden past; the history of each un-examined soul is a black mystery shrouded in secret fear and the secret destruction of Pure Wonder.

We live by accumulation, we survive by the experiential accumulation called: learning. But the exact reasons for that accumulation are hidden from us because of the blackness, the non-awareness of each human soul hiding from its own truths. The actual history of human existence has never been told. In order to discover the actual causality of each human life, each human soul must examine itself through the questioning of Pure Wonder. Since no human soul has ever achieved this clarity, the history of humans: not civilization is an empty void of billions of untold, non-fully experienced, non-fully examined lives.

What humans call history is only concerned with the empty, dead shells of living things left behind: not the actual connective truths of living-life. The actual connective truths of how-who-when-what-where-why, lies buried in each human soul. We spend billions of dollars preserving dead artifacts in museums. An artifact is something made by using tools. This is civilization's form of historical preservation. But the life history-experience of a living person is almost never preserved except in terms of tool-accumulation, i.e.: knowledge-power-wealth-fame. Because of this the history of our human past is an obscure mystery, while our tool past is painstakingly recorded in expensive museums.

Human Values and Energy Flow

To arrive at a truly universal value system is only now possible. Science and Physics have finally provided us with the three Universal relative constants of the Universe: Time, SPACE and Energy. If you want a sane value of human life: it can only be done by reducing it down to its most basic, fundamental, Universal Elements: Time, Energy and Space. Human life is a form of Energy existing in Time-Space. To value it: means you can only value it as a form of Energy. But... the entire Universe is also filled with infinite forms of Energy.

You cannot sanely value one form of Energy over another, or more than another. Because the only value Energy has... is its usefulness, or how it fits into the Time-Space-Energy Triality of our Universe. You cannot develop a sane value system based on a premise-context of finiteness. Only the premise and context of Actual Infinity can give you a sane, proportional, balanced, relative value system.

So to begin with: if we are to value human life-energy, we must also value all other Energy as well. And we must value it on the basis of its usefulness. But how can you hierarchically prioritize Infinite numbers and kinds of Energy according to their usefulness when they are all inextricably combined and intertwined with each other? The answer is that you can't. You must value them all equally. But since we living humans are alive, it is natural for us to value Life-Energy more than other kinds of Energy for a simple reason: our Life depends on the well-being of other living creatures. Without them we would be dead. That is the logical way of looking at it, but humans do not value Life, they value tools.

Humans are mostly connected to their condition of being tool-users. Their values only mirror what they are connected-to... To what degree they are connected, and how they are connected. Mostly, they are connected to a pyramidal jumbled up mess called civilization, in jumbled up chaotic ways. If you remove this pile of values and replace it with Pure Wonder, then you also open up an infinite number of inner and outer connections that go on expanding infinitely. And since these kinds of connections are not hierarchical or linear in structure and because your Inner and Outer Universe is not so structured either: you must change your entire value system. You must change the way it is structured.

Each person's development of their own humanity teaches that human values cannot be prioritized. We all learn this lesson through the three basic aspects of Love, Honesty and Courage. Love cannot be pyramidalized. If it is: it becomes corrupted. If a parent loves one of their children more: then there is envy, jealousy, sibling rivalry, conflicts, constant fight, bickering, and quarreling. If the children learn that nobody has an advantage over the other, if children learn that we are all equally, genetically human. If all children are equally loved and disciplined: then there is nothing to fight about. Then, there is no imbalance; there is no conflict, no unfairness, no inequality and no unhappiness. The truths people discover through their own Honesty and Courage cannot be pyramidalized. If they are: they become corrupted. No single truth is truer than any other truth. No single truth is any better than any other truth. The examples of these discovered truths in each person's life are endless. What is truly valuable or useful; is what is not prioritized, not finite, not measurable.

If you do not value the air you breathe, the water you drink, or the Earth you live on: how can you value Life at all? The most valuable things in the Universe are the Energies that are the most Transparent, the most INVISIBLE and the most Intangible.

Air, Water, Living Space to play in, Life-Energy, Fun.

If you only selectively value a few dead things: how can you have a Sense of Wonder about anything else? The point is: hierarchical exclusionary value systems are not sane. To value your own life and nothing else is not sane because it is based upon ego, fear, separation, imbalance and the fear of death. The true test of happiness is the absence of fear and pain... and the absence of any urge or need to accumulate. Only an open, continually changing awareness can possess an open, continually changing set of values. Since all tool-values are based upon the dynamic of accumulation, you get the relative value being determined by scarcity and by demand: the less you have of anything, the more valuable it becomes, while the more there is of anything, the less valuable it is... thus everything that is plentiful in nature becomes not only devalued, but raped, and made as exclusive and as scarce as possible for the motive of making money from it. People rip down entire forests as fast as they can to accumulate as much money as fast as they can. Value systems based upon accumulation become pyramidal in nature and corrupt.

The problem with human tool-values is that they have no universal context or basis. What value do you place on a human life? What value do you put on any living organism? What value do you put on anything made by tools? What value do you put on tools? It is a crazy-quilt patchwork with huge missing gaps. Human life-energy was never meant to be bartered, exchange, traded at grossly unequal, uneven, unfair, imbalanced rates of exchange. No human life can be intrinsically worth more than another's. But once you transform human life-energy into tool-energy... Once you pour it into the making of dead things... Once you abstract this energy into a finite, measured value system... And do so arbitrarily.... Bent on advantage, profit, greed; the inevitable result is inequity, injustice and suffering.

Within civilization, the dominant value system of abstraction and money is self-perpetuating. By concentrating most of the wealth in a few hands, the scarcity of that wealth turns people into greedy, mistrustful, antagonistic-competitors and enemies. The scarcer money becomes, the more people have to struggle-fight in order to obtain it, the more antagonistic they must become towards each other.

The more money is valued-worshipped, the more people spend their entire lives pursuing it; rather than pursuing or developing anything of any human value or interest. Inside civilization, the only context that exists for the value of human life is the basis of hierarchical accumulation. Meaning that any human life at the top of this pyramidal heap; is valued more than those below it. While any connection between human life-energy and all other life-energy is totally ignored. In short, there is no sane value placed upon either human life or upon life itself. In the sane context of actual infinity; life is merely one unique form of energy among an infinite number of unique forms of energy. They are all sacred, not just one of them. Every quark, every atom, every molecule is sacred. But the only condition-state of human awareness which is even capable of arriving at this obvious fact is the sense of pure wonder. If all human life were valued equally, then one hour of a person's life would be equal in value to one hour of any other person's life. If all life were valued equally, then humans would not go around killing off other species merely for the sake of convenience.

The effect of tool evolution on people is that our values became abstracted. Once human values became abstracted: actual human values became secondary. The basic abstract value system humans use; is money. As a result, the value of human life becomes secondary to the abstract value of money.

Why do people starve? Because they have no money.

This fact alone condemns civilization. If money is more valuable than human life to civilized people. Then all civilized people are sick. Then all civilized values are evil and sick. Inside civilization, you are considered worthless, if you have no money. Outside of civilization, this value system does not exist. Everything inside the Universe that does not have money is not considered to be worthless: except this tiny pocket inside civilization.

So if millions starve or go hungry because of the lack of money, it is nothing to be wondered at by civilized values. Then what happens? Then a few try to appeal to other people's humanity or charity to donate their money. In all this there is no actual humanity or human contact going on. It is merely the transfer of abstract value: money in an imbalanced system. The givers do not become more humane, the starving who do get relief are merely given food: not a recognition of their human value. No amount of food or money can give a poor person back their own self-respect. The mechanical transfer of money to food, to people; does nothing to change the basic problems or improve anything. It is only at temporary stopgap, where a lucky few are benefited slightly.

A person starving to death because their life is worth nothing while one hour of another's life is worth $1,000 is humanly insane. However, it makes perfect sense based upon the pyramidal hierarchy of tool-values. Tool-values are based upon imbalance, accumulation and mechanical functioning. People starve because of tool-values, not because of human-values. The dynamic of how tool-values dominate over human-values is simply a process of becoming cultured-civilized. Resulting in people relating to each other on an abstract level, not a human level. Being impersonal, indifferent, is merely a symptom of people functioning predominately as abstractive tool-brains using abstract values. As long as humans relate to each other mostly upon an abstract level, dehumanization and inhumanity will continue to exist.

The reason for this dehumanization is once you turn human life-energy into dead things, dead ideas; that energy flow is no longer human. Money has no feelings, no morals, no intuition, no sensitivity, no awareness of what it is doing. It is a dead concept, it is dead piece of paper that can be used to do anything. There can be no control over how humanely power-wealth-money is used. If all people want is money; if all they want is a profit: then how that profit is made: where that money comes from becomes irrelevant... as long as their money makes a profit.

Rather than interact with each other directly on a human level, we interact with each other using only money instead. Then, all inhumane practices, deals, sales, purchases, can be done! With perfect ease! Somebody owning stock in a mutual fund can be completely oblivious as to whether his profits come from child slavery, environmental destruction, or the manufacture and sale of arms to death squads, or the sale of jet fighters to oppressive military regimes. All human relevancy, human values, human ethics, human morals, are drained from this process. The energy-flow of money becomes a global corruption that coldly ignores all of the atrocities and injustice practiced in the name of profit. Until money-profit-tool values supersede all human values, all human needs, all human concerns...

And people wonder why there is so much poverty starvation, and suffering in the world for billions of human souls just like you?... Look in your wallet! Look in your purse, look in your bank account, look in your investments and savings. Look into all the things that you accumulate and value and revere and worship. Look and see if there is any love for humanity in these dead accumulated valued things. All the power and evil of the world stems from the desperate needs and fears of civilized people. From our need to escape hardship, our fear of poverty.

Putting most of your soul and energy onto a belief in money? Into a desire to avoid poverty? Once you have done that. Once you have become addicted to that ease and affluence. Has any person ever gone back? And thrown it all away? Never. We only seal the fate of our souls by seeking more affluence, more ease and more wealth. And you wonder why there are so many starving children in the world? Why there is so little love in the world?

The reason humans do not act to humanely toward each other is not only a combination of the dehumanization which language and culture creates, not only the abstract value-base of money being dominant in society: but the segmentive, pyramidal vastness of it all. People watching a TV show about babies dying in Ethiopia are completely disconnected from that reality. Their reality and values are based upon their need to buy a dishwasher or go to a movie. Most people react negatively when anyone tries to make them feel guilty of their own good fortune. Rather than even begin to deal with any possible social responsibility, they reject it completely.

This is why most people do not give money to beggars. They do not see how any small donation can make a difference in such overwhelming social problems. And they are correct. The giving of money alone does not work because the system does not work. And why should they be charitable? Why should the poorest people be the most charitable, giving the largest fraction of their tiny bit of accumulated money when all the filthy rich corporations, billionaires, nations, banks, businesses never give a penny to these causes? Why not take all charitable donations only from those who can afford it? But who can? Even millionaires say they can barely make ends meet. Even the richest are terrified of getting one dollar poorer. Wealth exists largely because of the fear of poverty. The fear of poverty is an invisible corruption of rich people. It is the secret fear they hide deep in their souls. It is the secret obsession they are plagued with every minute of their lives. It is the secret crippling sickness they are poisoned by.

There is a basic hypocrisy between the true ethic of civilized society, which is accumulation and greed... and the lip service of charity and giving. The few who slightly practice an ethic of charity; do end up being slightly happier, and more humane.

But for everyone to be giving all the time, for everybody to be happy all the time... you would have to destroy the basic ethic of capitalism completely: which is, making a profit. The fact is: people manipulate their values to suit themselves. Values are merely a way of rationalizing one's own beliefs. Unless you actually question your own beliefs without trying to defend them: you will never be able to develop a sane, balanced, logical, value system that is not self-contradictory, conflicted and irrational. Every example of imbalanced accumulation is structurally-dynamically corrupt-evil. The relative degree of this corruption is irrelevant. It is the principle itself, which must be understood. As long as you allow this process to continue unconsciously, it will continue to produce endless forms of imbalanced misery, suffering and destruction. Humans need to become aware of this basic dynamic before they can even begin to deal with it. If you do not first understand this: you cannot do anything about it.

To only call one imbalance evil, while ignoring others is not contextually sane simply because this kind of evaluation lacks a wider perspective. To jail a bank robber because he steals $20,000 from one bank while allowing oil corporations to rake in millions of dollars of illegal profits by raising the price of gas 3 cents, so each theft is barely noticeable, is not a contextually sane way to structure human values. It is the overall accumulated effect of an imbalance that determines the degree of its evil, or harmfulness. Something which humans have turned a blind eye to ever since civilization began. If you want to have sane human values, you must put them into a context that makes sense. But civilization separates human existence into unconnected aspects, so that such comparisons are not even allowed to be made.

In order to think causally, to be causally aware, means that you must be able to intuitively and accurately judge the consequences of your actions. And you can only do this through the sense of Pure Wonder. Only the sense of pure wonder allows humans to even faintly understand the infinite causal interconnectivity of all things. Only a balanced awareness can make balanced decisions. You cannot separate human abstract values from their effect on the world. Nor can you separate civilization from the earth it exists on, or any life-energy from other life-energies. Until human abstract value systems reflect the actual interconnectivity of the universe, they will continue to exist as imbalanced distortions that only produce unhappiness, misery and destruction.

Humans have yet to understand the basic concept of energy flow. All energy flows in only one direction at a time. Humans take their own life-energy and spend most of their lives converting it into dead, mechanical tool-energy. Life-energy can only be sustained by regeneration. Dead tool-energy can only be sustained by accumulation. Any attempt to balance tool-energy: say an exchange of goods or services without profit, is a dead balance: very little if anything happens dynamically. To funnel most of your life-energy into dead tool-energy is an imbalanced waste of your life.

However; balancing Life-Energy involves the entire process, and this process is constantly changing. In order to balance it better you must allow all the energies involved to flow better-more freely. This principle applies to both tool-energy and life-energy. But tool-energy does not balance: it only separates and accumulates. To try to balance the resulting accumulation is only a minor secondary balance. The only healthy thing about Capitalism is that it does not completely eliminate small business while allowing corporations to merge into ever bigger gigantic accumulations of wealth and power.

The industrialized mechanization of human society has freed a fraction of its population from poverty and oppression by creating an enormous glut of wealth and consumer products. But this slight amelioration of physical living conditions for a distinct minority of the Human Race: happens only at the expense of the billions of poor in the 3rd world nations. It happens only at the expense of ecosystems being destroyed and polluted.

You cannot look at the improvement of the physical quality of human existence for a few hundred million people: without looking at what the consequences are to the quality of all life on this planet. You cannot try to balance only one thing, while ignoring everything else; and expect any kind of beneficial result, or any sane perspective.

The destruction of any dynamic balance is also the destruction of all creative potential. The more dynamically balanced energy is: the more dynamically creative it becomes. And since all Evolution of Energy is through Experience: the entire process of Energy-Experience-Evolution; is effectively destroyed by not evolving fully as it should: not evolving as creatively as it was designed to. All energy in the Universe possesses creative potential. When you destroy the potential creativity of any energy in the Universe: you are damaging and destroying that energy's basic functions. The destruction of potential creativity is the root of all destructiveness. There is nothing more destructive than destroying something before it has a chance to grow, and evolve creatively. If you kill a tiny seed. That seed could have grown to become a tree. By killing the seed before it could grow: you have effectively killed a tree before it could even exist. The most cowardly way of killing Life: is by killing it before it can grow up healthy and strong. If you allow a living thing to grow up and become healthy and strong: it become a million times harder to kill. This is the cunning of human evil: killing living things before they can develop their creative growth-life potential fully. A fully grown man can kill a baby easily. But let that baby grow up to become a healthy strong man, and then what? Then the killers will find themselves being killed... oops. Can't let that happen, now: can we? We must kill all living things before they can grow up to be healthy and strong.

Yet the effect of this destruction is completely intangible, invisible: it cannot be measured, weighed or seen. It is only in a mind that wonders about things, that this fact even surfaces. It is only in an expanding awareness that is constantly wondering, that the idea of creative potential can even exist. The idea of the unknown loss of creative potential can only be slightly intuited through the expanding sense of Pure Wonder.

You cannot hold the concept of dynamic balance as the most important principle in all existence without a sensitized, expanding, wondering awareness, without a wondering imagination. You cannot exist in a state of dynamic balance unless you also exist in a state of Pure Wonder. And you cannot refrain from destroying your own dynamic balance, and the dynamic balance of others, and the dynamic balance of the world around you, unless you exist in a state of Pure Wonder.

Each imbalance in a person's psyche, body-mind affects other balances. The causal trails of these imbalances are infinitely subtle, infinitely complex, and beyond our grasp. But that does not mean they do not exist: they do. But because none of these imbalances are mechanically measurable: we ignore the fact that they exist. Just as we ignore the completely intangible destruction of creative potential that is an inextricable part in the destruction of any dynamic balance.

Inside civilization, humans are forced to function on two opposing levels-ways-dynamics. Humanly, the only way humans can allow their life-energy to flow more freely and become more dynamically balanced is by being more connective-loving-giving. Mechanically, tool-wise: the only way humans can survive inside civilization is by profiting-taking-accumulating. This is the universal conflict within each human soul.

One could write volumes on the benefits of giving. But one basic truth is that you can only give of yourself, to the degree that you actually have yourself. How much that is, depends on how much of yourself you have discovered as an integrated totality.

If the mechanical tool-energy of humans were balanced so that one hour's expenditure of a person's life-energy transformed into goods and services; was exchanged equally for an hour of another person's life, this would change nothing except on a mechanical level. It would merely be a null result: neither would be happier or healthier. If one person profits from this exchange while the other person loses, then it becomes a human imbalance, corrupting the profiteer by his greed and selfishness and harming the loser through destitution and poverty.

Giving away money, goods, services, is only beneficial to the degree that there is direct human contact and the degree to which the entire result is balanced dynamically. It makes sense to lessen imbalanced accumulation of any kind. But the balancing of dead tool-energy, wealth-power-knowledge-social standing: is a waste of time. It is a wasting of energy upon irrelevant, abstract-dead things. Equality comes from intimacy, trust, respect and living together. However, if you put your energy into living things, if a person gives one hour of their life to another in some way freely; then this improves life-energy flow generally, making them both feel better-happier. Why? Because giving your time and energy to another person... is not giving at all: it is sharing your time with somebody else. Both of you feel better for it, because the energy dynamic between close interpersonal human relationships flows both ways between both people. Regardless of who is doing the giving.

The Conflict of Tool-Values vs. Human-Values

To illustrate the opposition between human life-energy and tool-energy, look at the health-care system in America. If a hospital manages to prolong the life of a terminally ill uninsured patient for 30 days at the cost of $200,000: who profits more from this? The terminally ill patient gains 30 days of life while losing 30 years of life-savings. So... what if he had never worked for 30 years? Then the hospital couldn't rob him of 30 years of life. Then he wouldn't have lived for 30 years working like a slave to save money. What if he told the hospital: fuck you, if I'm going to die, I'll die without your 30,000 dollar bill. I'll go home and die in comfort. Then he would have saved his family 30,000 dollars. So what has the hospital given him for 30,000 dollars? 30 days? Is 30 days of more life in a hospital waiting to die: worth 30,000 dollars? What kind of life is that? While losing over thirty years of life-energy savings which would have otherwise gone to sustain his surviving family. The hospital loses 30 days of tool-energy goods and life-energy services, while gaining over thirty years of a person's life-energy savings.

It is true that people can be helped somewhat, in certain ways, if the right treatment is done at the right time by the right person. But because of the basic corruption of the entire system, this is becoming more and more the exception rather than the rule. There are simply too many conflicting interests involved, which end up canceling out any positive results and reversing all positive energy into a negative result.

The lesson should be obvious. All energy flows only in one direction at a time. You cannot make the same energy flow in two directions unless there is mutual intelligent cooperation with both sides possessing a positive intention and direction which is shared. But in the linear system of the Capitalist profit motive: you cannot try to help others and yourself at the same time. But that is exactly what the hypocrisy of civilization tries to do. That is exactly what civilized tool-energy attempts to do: split human beings into opposed, conflicting interests. If you examine the dynamics of any win-win situation, you will find that there is no separation, no conflict between inner and outer interest-energy, no profit interest, no seeking an advantage over someone else, no adversarial competition. All beneficial effects occur only as dynamics of willing cooperation and giving: where there are no conflicting interests.

You cannot expect to profit from the suffering of others and at the same time help them. If you try to do this in the capitalist system, you will end up canceling out any beneficial effect either for yourself or others. If your self-interest is greater than your desire to help the other person: you will profit. If your desire to help the other person is greater than your own self-interest: they will profit. But if these two interests conflict with each other, then either one, or both suffer.

Energy is energy: whether it is the accumulated life-energy of a person's life-savings, or the life-energy of his body, or the emotional caring-love energy of your heart. If you care more about the person you are trying to help than yourself, then you will not care whether you are paid or recompensed for your effort and time. But if you care more about yourself than about the person you are trying to help, then... you will find that the person you are helping is actually giving you more life-energy than you are giving them. So in actual life-energy... in actual life-time lost... in life-time gained, they are helping themselves more than they are helping you. This is what the profit system is based upon..

If a poor person needs to work ten hours for 5 dollars an hour; to earn enough money to pay a licensed plumber to work one hour for 50 dollars an hour to fix his leaking pipes... then that plumber has in effect stolen 9 hours of life-energy, 9 hours out of that poor person's life. If the poor person goes to the hardware store, buys his own pipes and tools and fixes the pipes himself... but it takes him 6 hours to do it: then he has in effect saved 4 hours of his own life

That is; presuming this 6 hours includes the time needed to go to the store, and that the cost of his buying the pipes is the same cost the plumber would have charged him for those pipes. But if he has to buy tools also to do the job himself, and the tools cost him 5 man hours of labor, or 25 more dollars: then he will have not saved himself any time or money in fixing the pipes himself. He will have lost 1 hour of his life because he did not hire the licensed plumber to do it.

But if the poor person tries to fix his own pipes and does not do it right because he doesn't have the proper tools and the right know-how, and the pipes leak and he has to do it 3 times before the job is done right, or if it takes him 20 hours to do the job... then the plumber has saved the poor person some money? No. Then this exposes the impossibility of equalizing any specialized civilization. It exposes the inequality that tools create. Tools create inequality.

Furthermore: if that poor person has no money at all, then he is powerless. He cannot hire the plumber, or fix the pipes himself. If he is unemployed for one year, then for all intents of civilized human values, he has lost one year of earning power to make money; to represent the year of his life that he would have spent working. Meaning that an unemployed person's life... has no value whatsoever inside civilization. As far as civilization is concerned: humans are a commodity: people are things to be used as tools: they are only valuable when functioning mechanically as tools. Human time, human lives, are bought, sold, traded, bartered, manipulated, wasted, stolen, all in the name of work... money... as the only way to exist, the only way to live. As far as civilization is concerned: people are ants, civilized slaves: to be used by civilization, in order to maintain its mechanical functions: nothing else.

But if it takes that poor person only 6 hours to do the same work a licensed plumber can do in one hour, presuming all other considerations are equal... then he is still losing his life energy and time in comparison to that plumber. Because his life is valued 10 times less than the plumber's life. Because that plumber working that same amount of hours he does; will make 10 times more money, and get in exchange, 10 times more life-energy time and 'man-hours' from other people than the poor person. So as far as civilization is concerned: the plumber's life is 10 times more valuable than the life of the poor person. So civilization treats that poor person ten times worse than the plumber, and trains and brainwashes each of them to accept their respective value... and use that sliding scale of earning power, or wealth, or money as the basis for their self-esteem, their own self-respect, their own social standing, their status, their own intrinsic self-worth as a human being...

The question in each abstract transaction of time-money-materials is: who is making the most profit? Who is helping whom? If you are poor and go to a millionaire doctor and are charged a huge sum of money for some ailment that could otherwise have healed itself, if you had used common sense in how to treat your own health. Then that rich doctor did not help you at all. He only helped himself get richer, and helped you get poorer. He gained many hours of your life in exchange for very little time of his own life. Then that doctor becomes convinced that his time is more precious, more valued than anyone else's. Then you get institutionalized systems of medicine that operate on the insane principle of the sanctity and mindless worship of Doctor's; and becomes a Gospel that is unquestioned. As people wait in their waiting rooms like meek sheep. To be fleeced of their wealth. For the great Doctor to come and save them, cure them, and somehow; fix their ailments. So... how can you train humans to be equal to each other? It is quite simple. All you have to do is place an equal value on all Life, on all Living things, on all Living humans, on all life-hours. So nobody can claim that their time is more expensive, more valuable than anyone else's. This is how you begin to develop the awareness that all people are equal. By using logic and developing your Sense of Pure Wonder.

But even that is an insane form of identity. How many hours of spending Christmas with your family would you give up for how many dollars? How many how many life-dollars, or 'man-hours' of 'money' would you exchange for sleeping-with, and spending time with the mate you love? If your job becomes more important than your family: then you have automatically been dehumanized by your own work ethic. This is one way how all of us are trained to become insensitive brutalized, uncaring humans by developing a work ethic. This is what trying to equate abstract ideas with actual life does to human values and cultures and lifestyles. Trying to translate any abstract ideas, values concepts and absolutes into the infinite dynamically balanced Relativity of the Universe is basically trying to fit a two-dimensional model onto a three-dimensional actuality.

What is one hour of your life worth to you? Is your life worth more than another person's life? Would you give one hour of your life away for nothing? Would you give one hour of your life for one minute of another person's life? If people insist on exchanging life-hours with each other, they should at least make it as equitable as possible. Actually, you cannot compare between the life energy of any living thing. No life energy is identical. Each life-form, each life-energy is completely unique.

But humans have created a weird system of identity; and tried to pretend that by one human working for another human, they can be paid for their lost time, and life, and energy: by some weird abstract thing called money. Money is merely as way of training humans into believing that all human life-energy, all time, all work is identical... on a sliding scale of selective value.... Huh? That definition is a fucking oxymoron! Even a moron knows that the value of their life cannot be determined by money.

But then... civilization takes this insane notion and manipulates it into a completely expedient self-serving creation of people trying to decide what their time is worth in money, and have a sliding scale of me-worth, and other people's worth in a hierarchy that is completely arbitrary. So human life-energy is valued differently based on whatever it is you happen to do... how many years you have wasted going to school to get a degree to enable you to legally charge more for you life-hours than other people...?

Take the private health care system in America. Robbing a person of thirty years of life-energy savings so they can live six months longer at the end of their life is not a balanced exchange, much less a healing dynamic. However: because the causal chain of this imbalanced energy-flow in civilization is so segmented, split-up and untraced: people do not admit that this is true. Who is helping whom? Who benefits? Where does the money, the product of human-life energy end up? In whose pockets? What are the consequences? Because most human life-energy is converted into tool-energy, money-wealth, because this is kept secret, hidden: we only see the causal effects of all this generally. The universal result is that the rich benefit while the poor suffer. And the root of all this conflict-ego-greed is the tool-dynamic of accumulation.

The question is: where does human life-energy go...? What is it funneled and concentrated into? It goes mostly into making and using tools. Every tool, every machine ever made or manufactured is a repository of human effort, sweat, effort, focus, obsession-energy. Today in rich countries, people drive around in machines, in cars that are repositories of thousands of hours of work, and thousands of destructive chemical and manufacturing processes. A single NASA rocket is a concentrated repository of millions of hours of labor, research, testing, manufacturing, planning, designing, etc... being thrown away. A NASA space rocket is an even more insane waste of human lives and energy than the Great Wall of China. The Great Wall was supposed to keep the nomads at bay. It never did. The rockets are supposed to do what? Nothing. They are one of the purest examples of the religious worship of technology on Earth... and they still blow up... regularly... and everyone ignores that slight quibble easily.

Why do machines mirror organic life so closely? What is the difference between something that is mechanical and something that is organic? Why does the roar of a jet engine sound like the roar of a volcano? What is the difference between a dead, metal bird called aircraft and living bird? Metal birds have wings, tails, a body and a head. They are bigger than living birds, they fly faster. But they cannot turn and swoop gracefully. They cannot turn their heads. The most they can do is slightly lower their heads for a landing, and slightly widen their wings for a landing. They cannot land anywhere they want to. They cannot sing. They cannot flock together. They cannot have babies. They do however, migrate back-and-forth along routes. They do have nesting sites where all of them land, fuel and take off again. All they are good for is carrying humans and human cargo. Living birds do not cut the air so sharply that the air itself screams in agony at being torn into a million pieces. Living birds do not pollute the air. Living birds do not cause the air to scream in high-pitched notes that damage the hearing of every living thing around them.

What is the difference between the circulation system of a living mammal, and the circulation system of a modern Nation? Both have arteries. Only the metal cells flowing along highways have a problem. Their arteries are flat two-dimensional. Living arteries are three-dimensional. Living mammals have arteries that criss-cross each other easily by going over or under each other. The cells flowing along living arteries never have to stop to let other cells flow along another artery. The flat, two-dimensional arteries of roads and highways block each other's flow at every intersection. Only the most modern and most expensive National arteries called freeways are built somewhat like the arteries of living animals. On the basis of a one-way system with overpasses and underpasses like living arteries in animals. Living arteries are multi-linear. Every cell can flow over-under-around any other flowing cell easily. There is never a complete stop in the flow. But Freeways are linear. Their flow jams up and comes to a dead halt at the slightest mishap. If living arteries were as mechanically inefficient and linear as the mechanical arteries of Freeways: every animal on Earth would die before they were born. Because the blood-flow of their cells would jam into gridlock fifty thousand times a second.

Mechanical arteries called roads and highways are insane. Every moving cell called a car or a truck is trying to go to a different place for a different reason. There is no coordination. Living arteries are sane. All the moving cells are moving for the same reason. They are keeping the body of the animal healthy by replacing broken-dead elements with fresh new ones. They are all devoted to maintaining the body of the animal. No blood cell skips across the body to see their mother, or buy a cup of coffee. They are not moving at cross-purposes to each other. They do not get in each other's way. They do not crash into each other and kill each other. They do not slow down when there are more of them. The artery itself easily expands to allow for more traffic. Mechanical arteries cannot expand to make room for the morning rush hour. Living cells are not parked uselessly in garages. They are being used and maintained 24 hrs a day. Living cells do not rot and pile up in wrecking yards and junkyards. They do not waste fuel by idling at a standstill at stop signs. They are not made only for the richest parts of the body. They service every living cell in the body equally.

Why has the reflective insanity of modern machines created crude mechanical circulation systems which copy the circulation system of a living animal? They are so crude that they can only barely function if they are made thousands of times bigger. Try building a mechanical circulation the same size as the arteries in a living animal and see how far you get. And even then: these mechanical circulation systems do not work. Compared to the complex smoothly functioning systems of organic life, they are bad copies, insane, Frankenstein creations. Ugly monstrosities, insane horrors:. What for? To create more ugliness?

Some questions that have never been asked are...

What would have 4,000 years of Ancient Egyptian civilization been like 7,000 years ago ... if those ancient Egyptians had not spent most of their wealth and time and energy building dead, useless pyramids of dead stone for their, deified rulers?

What would those millions of ancient Chinese peasant's lives have been like... if they had not been forced to waste their energy, resources and lives building a huge, useless stone wall thousands of miles long?

What would the National Federal Budget of the United States of America be like; if there were no NASA, no rockets? No spewing trillions of dollars of man-hours and resources into outer space? Nobody asks these kinds of questions. They are unthinkable. They are not allowed to be thought-of. They are instantly discounted as worthless, silly, absurd and laughable. They are never taken seriously.

What could have we done with the billions of dollars left by J. Paul Getty, one of the richest oil-tycoons of his age, instead of deeding all of it to one lousy useless museum which collects junk for people to gawk at? All those hundreds of billions of dollars are concentrated in the smallest space possible, buying the most expensive dead, oldest junk called antiques and ancient artifacts in the world. So a few people can go stare at them and mindlessly revere and worship this junk.

That money could have been used to create literally millions of jobs. Hundreds of schools. It could have fed half the poor-starving people in the world. Was this ever considered? No. Getty explicitly left his money to collecting art objects. The older, the better... the deader, the better. He loved old, dead art. He wanted other people to enjoy the same love of precious dead artifacts as he did. And since the sacredness of dead people's wishes is untouchable... these hundreds of billions dollars, of badly needed wealth and resources are supposed to be forever reserved only for buying obscenely expensive artifacts. The oldest, deadest, most expensive objects they can find.

Why? Maybe because if Getty and all the other rich people did not waste all of their charity money upon such causes:... then there would be no 'great,' glorious civilized artifacts to worship? Then the worship of dead things might actually be noticed as a distinct sickness of rich people who have money to waste by poor people?

Civilization brainwashes you into wasting money. If you have excess money that you do not need: you are supposed to waste it on the most selfish, the most self-gratifying, the most self-aggrandizing way possible. You are not supposed to use it for anything that is constructive... except using it to make even more money... for yourself and nobody else.

The entire basis of Consumer culture is spending money on yourself, and nobody else. If each new, younger generation did not regard the wishes of the older generation to be absolutely sacred and untouchable... they might actually change something. Horrors. That is unthinkable. Then all of the wills, and trusts left over by dead people would be contested. Then most affluent people who have affluent elders who leave money for them in their will: would spend half their lives fighting for the accumulated wealth leftover by dead people. Because that would be the easiest way they could get rich.

So: the only way any accumulated money, or accumulated wealth left over by dead people can be used...is by creating Laws that sanctify the wishes of the dead, and ignore the wishes of the living. Huh?

For some reason, whenever anyone uses the word: preservation. And links that word to something that is old, and dead: it magically becomes a sacred mission, a sacred project. People get together and pour millions of dollars into some old rotting building because it is considered to be 'priceless'. But try to save anything that is living? Like a forest? Fuck it. Not interested. Try to get living family's better housing? Jobs? Fuck it. Not interested. But try to restore the Guggenheim Museum? 200 million dollars collected easily. This is one example of how, and why; the entire context of civilized values and dynamics is totally corrupt

Why are dead things more valued than living things? Why are old dead relics, artifacts, art, buildings, temples, churches, buildings, etc considered to be so priceless? The rationale is that we are somehow preserving a part of our past. A part of our great, glorious heritage, our glorious civilized history.

The history of what? Of dead tools? Of dead tool-use? How many people have preserved the history of their own families? Do you know how your parents were raised? How they grew up? What they did? Why they did it? What about the rest of all your ancestors? That history is not only lost: it is hidden, avoided and never spoken of. Your own history is a blank. It is an unspoken secret. It is never mentioned or spoken of. The rationale of why people preserve old things... is because these old relics can never be replicated. They are supposed to be rare... hard to find, one-of-a-kind; unique; irreplaceable.

Well. I've got news for you.

Everything in this world that lives, every living thing, every living organism, every living plant, every living tree, every living animal, every living insect, every living bird, every living reptile, every living microbe, every living bacteria, every living cell in your body is also one-of-a-kind. Everything living, everything that is alive is also unique. Every microbe, every virus, every cell, every leaf, every tree, every fish, every animal is billions of times more unique and more irreplaceable than a bunch of old dead shit in museums.

Living things are irreplaceable: dead things are not irreplaceable in fact they are useless to living things. This is one truth humans do not want to admit;

Dead things are supposed to be replaced by living things: not preserved at the expense of killing living things. You are not supposed to replace a living thing with a dead thing. It's the other way around. You are supposed to replace a dead thing with a living thing.

You are not supposed to stop living in a living forest and replace your living environment with a dead one. You are not supposed to cut down living things and kill them, just so you can live safely inside their dead skeletons. We have been living inside the dead skins and bones of animals and plants, as an advantage over other living things for over a million years. Now we are killing all the species we can, and destroying the Earth as fast as we can. That is one of the effects of civilization upon humans.

If everything that ever lived and died was somehow preserved because it was irreplaceable. Then there would no life at all. No human beings at all. Then all organic material would live once... and then die forever, and never be used to create another living thing again. Is that what you want your own life to be used for? A one-way ticket to a dead museum to be gawked at but never understood? If every dead thing is preserved and sanctified into irreplaceability, then where will living things get the energy and matter to exist at all? Huh? Somebody explain this to me. I don't understand.

Humans do not preserve their own living heritage. They preserve the dead heritage of their tools. This single sick, demented sorry excuse for avoiding any living closeness with other people... is universal all over the world regardless of what culture or class, or language, or background you have. It is responsible for more pointless waste of human energy than anything else. But... the huge amounts of time we humans spend on our tools and our machines is normal. We like doing it. We don't like doing anything that forces us to be humanly creative and inventive except by using tools. Changing our normalized tool-intensive lifestyles and values is unpleasant, difficult and painful.

The human animal was never designed to live as a tool-slave. The human conflict caused by over-intensive tool-use causes people psychobiologic pain. Civilization is structured so that its human inhabitants have no choice but to exist in a state of conflicted interests. Humans were never genetically designed to harbor conflicting interests literally every second of their lives in the first place. It causes emotional-spiritual-physical suffering and pain. But for all civilized humans: the condition of civilized conflict is normal. By living inside this condition of normality, they are numbed, non-aware of their state of conflict, of what this condition does to them.

To become aware of our own normality means we must examine ourselves, our own feelings, and our own thoughts, our own souls... and try to put it all into some form of understandable perspective. But in order to do this: we need the integrating human emotional skills of Courage-Honesty-Love and a Sense of Pure Wonder. If we do not develop these skills, if we do not develop our own humanity, then we will be unable to handle the conflicts which arise inside ourselves. The condition of perpetual distraction, work and busyness, which civilization creates, is exactly the condition which prevents all people from embarking on this path of self-discovery. The civilized condition of pyramidal accumulation is precisely what creates conflict in all human society. The existence of fear, advantage and secrecy comes from the context of existing inside a pyramidal accumulation. The reason for secrecy can be boiled down to either fear or advantage. If there was no pyramidal accumulation of civilization: there would be no need for advantage, secrecy, or fear.

All human conflict and distraction prevents human life-energy from flowing freely. If you look at all the forces, influences and conditions of civilization upon each human soul, you will find that all humans are caught up in a perpetual bind between functioning mechanically and functioning humanly. Civilization is not geared to advance the health, happiness and well-being of humans. Rather: civilization is basically a mechanical eco- system designed to allow tools to flourish: so all tool-energy can flow as freely as possible. In order to do this it must never stop accumulating. The entire condition and dynamic, of civilization is designed and structured to corrupt, imbalance, suppress, repress, destroy, damage, numb disconnect, and de-sensitize human awareness, and reduce it to the level of a tool.

Without greed or profit; civilization would collapse. Civilization cannot afford to balance itself. It cannot afford to balance its own tool-energy, never mind human life-energy. At best, if this tool-energy balances; then nothing accumulates and nobody profits. The stagnation of non-accumulation, of no profit, no corruption; would mean the death of civilization. If you remove the desire and need for profit, if you remove human greed from the equation then everybody benefits humanly, because then all human life-energy is freed to flow more dynamically. But civilization does not allow this to happen because greed is necessary in order for humans to function inside civilization,

However; in a dynamically balanced human society where greed is not necessary for survival, where people are not forced to function mechanically most of their waking hours, where people are not trained to become antagonists, where all people are givers: there is no limit to the development of human awareness-potential-creativity-happiness-joy-fun. This cannot happen as long as people live by civilized values-dynamics-principles.

Comparative Tool-use

To make a comparison between relative degrees of tool-use, let's simplify the models. And only include tools you make yourself, and use yourself. And not include any tools made in the past by your ancestors. If you want a lifestyle that requires a bow and a spear. How much time would you spend making and using your tools, and how much time would you have left over for yourself?

If you want a lifestyle which requires a large house, an even larger barn, 200 cleared acres of fields, livestock, fences to keep in that livestock, a smithy to make all the iron implements, a deep well dug near the house, a glass furnace to make windows with, a spinning wheel to make yarn, a weaving machine to make clothes, a kiln to make pots and dishes... How much time would you spend making your tools and then using them? And how much time would you have left over for yourself?

Now if you want a lifestyle that has a dishwasher, a fridge, a car, a TV, and a computer... How much time would you spend making your tools and using them? And how much time would you have left over for yourself? Never mind the time studying and going to school to learn how to make all these things. And use them.

Now... say you want to be the captain of an oil tanker. How much time would you need to spend just making it? How much time would you have left for yourself? Oh. It would take you 2,000 years just to build it. So, use other people to make it for you. And use the machines your ancestors made: to make bigger machines, in order to make it. Huh?...

What for; what's the point? Who is getting the better part of the bargain here? You, or the 2,000 workers who built it for you? You, or the Earth you are raping; by stealing and exploiting its resources? You, or the machine? You, or 10,000 years of tool evolution? A spear and bow: becoming a giant oil tanker? Or 10,000 years of human tool-workers wasting their lives building bigger, more complex machines? Exploitation is exploitation. It means using something for your own advantage and to hell with the consequences. It is one of the few semantically honest words left in the code-words all business uses to deflect and avoid saying what they actually do and how they actually do it.

But who is exploiting what...?

or

What is exploiting Who?...

How well did that spear and bow exploit Humans to become a giant oil tanker?

While humans exploited the spear and bow for their own advantage... to become what?

Happier?

Healthier?

More humane?

Lazier?

More intelligent?

Who got the better of the bargain?

One captain of an Oil Tanker; leaving his own human family behind for months on end, to spend most of his life taking care of a huge complicated machine? Or a huge oil tanker that is lovingly cared for, maintained, serviced, repaired, painted and kept running, by hundreds of humans... and other machines? Or thousands of consumers who don't have to walk while driving to work and back. So they can out as much distance between themselves and their families for as many hours as possible? And function like machines themselves? What do we take better care of: our machines and tools or our children? What do we spend more time on: our machines and tools, or our children?

Creativity

No atom is more creative than any other atom. No animal is more creative than any other animal. One species of bird may go through countless changes of genetic variation during a period of 100 million years, while a shark may remain relatively unchanged during that time. The only criteria, which determines how long any species, exists before going extinct is its usefulness. How long any form of life is useful, is totally irrelevant. That is one obvious truth that Darwinian theory and ethics does not address. It makes no damn difference how long any form of energy stays in any particular shape. Or how long any species exists before it goes extinct. A grain of sand can find usefulness in many places. It can be used in many ways. And when it is no longer useful: Nature and the Universe changes that bit of energy into something else which is also useful. This changing of shape and forms of usefulness we call creativity. But living creatures also live creatively. You cannot narrow the term: 'creativity' down to only a creative change in the shape or function of an organism.

Whether it is a bird, or a shark: both manage to survive each day by reacting to and adapting differently and creatively to each new condition and situation. It is irrelevant what path any form of creativity takes or how it is expressed, or on what levels or in what way, or for how long. All animals survive by being creative. All energy is creative. All experience is creative. Nothing is more creative than anything else. A butterfly is not more creative than a glacier or vice versa. The glacier may move slowly, but it ends up re-shaping an entire landscape. While the butterfly may exist only for a short time, but its delicate interaction with flowers have their own far-reaching creative consequences. Each form of energy moves at its own pace and in its own way. But all energy is intrinsically creative. The entire universe is creative. To pick out any one form of creativity and worship it, or place it above others, is only due to our poor, limited selective awareness that focuses narrowly upon something while ignoring everything else. Only by living in a state of Pure Wonder, can we lose this tunnel vision and become more widely aware of all things, including not just our own undeveloped potential for creativity, but the beauty and creativity of the entire universe.

Creativity and Human Values

How much human creativity can be gotten from giving one million people, $200 each; and telling them to be creative with that money... to do anything they wished as long it as it was creative? Compare that result with the movie called 'Titanic': the story of a ship disaster that cost $200 million to make, and where everybody already knows the plot. How would you compare the amount of human fulfillment, happiness, joy, fun, love, created by the first use of $200 million to the second? Which use of that money is more creative? Would the creativity of one million people given two hundred dollars each to be creative, produce more creativity than a movie that copied a story from real-life, tried to duplicate that ship rivet-for-rivet... and plaster a fake bullshit romance on top of it? So the only reason the millions were spent to make the titanic seem real was to fool people into believing the Hollywood crap fake romance actually happened? Do you think one million people given two hundred dollars each; might come up with something more creative than that? As an example of people's obsession with death: the auction value of a Titanic luncheon menu is 100,000 dollars.

That is the insanity of all pyramidal creativity. Spending 200 million dollars to tell one stupid story where the ending is already known...? Who gets to decide which story should be told? Whose version is put on the screen? How many truths have been left out, or slanted, or twisted in that version? Who, or what controls those decisions? The desire to make a profit? Then you get every fool with a script trying to sell it: no matter how idiotic it may be. Then; instead of any groundbreaking originality, you get an endless re-hash of the past. Then you get hundreds of billions of dollars being wasted on making movies that are pure junk. Then you get an audience that becomes used to this pure junk and is brainwashed into actually believing that this junk is the highest form of creativity possible. If you make any art form so only a few elite, wealthy few can practice it... Then your creative motives become poisoned by the desire to make a profit. Then it automatically becomes less creative.

By people idolizing and pyramidally worshipping movies, and movie stars, by worshipping other people's creativity and calling it "art": they effectively do not develop their own creativity. By valuing anybody else's creativity as being better than your own: you effectively de-value yourself, your own creativity and your own humanity.

Now: if you give $10 worth of paint and art supplies to 20 million kindergarten children each: how much creativity-joy-fun can you create? What do we value more: a few jars of finger paint, or a movie about death and destruction? What do people value more: the process of being creative, or the dead product of that creativity?

Humans value the imagined over the actual. We worship actors for pretending to feel something rather than valuing our own feelings: simply because we are too numb to feel our own actual feelings. Fake passion, fake excitement, is sold via the media as a vicarious opiate to fill up our empty, passionless lives. We prefer the reflections of living to actual life because we are bored: so we watch movies to see other people pretending to live. The more people are passionately involved in their own lives, the less interest they have in such vicarious reflections. There is a reason all entertainment is basically escapist in nature. There is a reason people want to escape their everyday lives. As long as you do not exist in a state of pure wonder, you will be bored. Boredom is a condition of civilized human existence. You cannot have civilization without boredom, and the resulting need for distraction. You cannot spend most of your life functioning only as a tool or machine and not get bored.

What if you removed all fear-pain-dishonesty-cowardice from any kind of human enjoyment? What if all fear-pain-dishonesty-cowardice was seen as boring, repetitious nonsense? Then there would be no plots, no movies, no books based upon such conditions. Then all you would have left to have fun with, would be the three basic aspects of your own humanity: love courage and honesty. How would you characterize this kind of fun? How much fun could you have just being creatively human? The only way people are able to have true fun is through the process of being continually creative. And you can only do that through a sense of pure wonder. The aspects of love-courage-honesty are merely the three major spiritual-emotional-mental spectrums with which people creatively paint their own lives and the lives of others.

In each culture, children are taught unquestioning obedience to an entire array of rules, routines, norms and laws. Above all, they are taught to respect and obey their elders. What is never studied is how the intrinsic creativity of children is slowly suppressed, stunted and destroyed because of being forced into unquestioning obedience. All creativity stems from Pure Wonder. Unfortunately, all unquestioning obedience, respect and worship of authority stunts, strangles, limits, and destroys the Sense of Wonder. The most unimaginative, narrow minded and least creative people end up as police officers and soldiers. The least creative fields of expertise are ones that deal almost exclusively with finite measurement: while the most creative fields of art, acting, music, and dance use the least measurement, have the least authority, power, knowledge.

Throughout this process of growing up: there is a universal dynamic taking place: the effect of all that duplication, repetition, sameness, routine, mechanical functioning: all of the imposed absolutes, all of the rules, all of the boredom: results in limiting the naturally expanding awareness of children into blinkered outlooks of a single family, a single culture, a single norm, a single society. All, so they can successfully function inside the context of civilization. It is precisely this training, which slowly destroys the sense of Pure Wonder in each growing child.

What if we did not force people into boring repetitive tasks? What if, instead of training people how to function like a tool, we tried to only develop our human qualities? What if all people were taught how to be creative in all ways? What if the only teaching that we gave children was how to have fun...creatively? What if all people learned how to have fun creatively all the time? Who would be silly enough to just be a spectator when they could create their own fun: which would be a million times more enjoyable than any vicarious enjoyment? Then there would be no movie stars. People would actually live their own fantasies instead of watching the fantasies of others. Then there would be no sports stars: people would play their own games instead of watching others do it. Then life would be nothing but pure creativity and fun.

But in order to do that, to live like that: you need a Sense of Pure Wonder.

Tool Creativity vs. Human Creativity

There is a crucial difference between tool-creativity and human creativity: both are products of human life-energy. Depending on how you focus and use human energy: the actual effect can be miles apart. Yet, no notice is taken and no difference is made between these two root forms of creativity. This is not surprising since it is impossible to truly separate them into easily labeled or recognizable categories. Here is the question: how can you discern between tool-creativity and human creativity? Humans create tools and use them ostensibly for human needs and purposes. Yet, if you examine the root of these purposes and needs, you come up with a basic conflict. That conflict is the difference between acting like a tool, or acting like a human. What is human creativity? What is tool-creativity? What are we being creative with? Our tool-brains? Abstractions? As human tools? Or mechanical tools? How creative is it to compose and sing a song? Or sing the same song repeatedly for centuries? Or perform the same dance over and over? All tool-use, no matter how creative it is; has repetition, duplication, and ritual involved. But in what way? How much?

Another way to ask this question is whether human creativity is focused upon life, upon living things; or upon dead things. Human survival is based upon tool-use: manufacturing implements to hunt with, or grow food. As a result: on a purely mechanical level, human survival is based upon tool-use, and how creatively we use them. However: beyond the stark physical necessity of survival lies the creativity of living and life itself. And therein lies the basic conflict. Generally: to use a tool, you must be repetitive, you must duplicate things, and using them: you must act and think mechanically without any emotional involvement. But to act humanly, you must do the opposite.

Living creatively does not require the boring repetition of tool-use. You may fashion a spoon to eat soup with. And use that spoon repetitively. But how many ways can you eat a bowl of soup? First: you can fashion any number of implements to eat it with. You can use these implements in an infinite number of ways. Or you can just lap up the soup with your tongue and pour it straight from the bowl into your mouth without a spoon... or use your cupped hand and fingers to aid you. But this does not even cover in what fashion you might eat the soup. Grinning? Leering? Scowling? Dancing? Frowning? While speaking? To the soup? Or someone beside you? Holding your nose while doing so? Pulling your lower lip down so it fills up the space between your lip and gums? Sloshing it around your mouth? Slurping it noisily? Sucking it silently? Lapping it up like a dog?

If you can have fun eating a bowl of soup differently each time you do it: then what you are doing is transcending any repetitive duplication or ritualized behavior that tools tend to force human existence into. But if you do not bother to be creative in this mundane activity; and take the eating of soup for granted: then the tool takes over... it will force you to hold the spoon in the same fashion and use it in the same fashion every time. Simply because it is easier to do so. Until you get into the habit and routine of doing it mindlessly and without any creativity. Until you get comfort addicted to your spoon. But we stifle all the natural tendencies of children to play and have fun. We insist that they not play with their food. Until they grow up and stop playing altogether. And as all the play and fun slowly ebbs out of their lives: so does all their creativity, spontaneity and happiness.

The question of human creativity is: how creatively do you want to live? If you just want to use tools and allow expediency to rule your life: then you become lazy, dull, boring and non-creative. If you decide to be creative: you become energetic, entertaining, spontaneous, fun and more human. Which elements of yourself you use to be creative with... the human tools of your body and facial expressions, the sound of your voice... whether you choose to include elements of love, courage, honesty, or wonder: or the abstract elements of your tool-brain, or implements, or ideas... is all mixed up. The question is just how cohesively you connect them all. If you only work at becoming mechanically creative or skilled, if you do not include all of these elements: then you lose the merged-human totality of your own creativity. To be truly humanly creative means to include all aspects of yourself into every act-thought-emotion. The more interconnected that creativity is: the more human that creativity is. The more abstract, specialized, separated, mechanical it is: the less fun it is, and the less fulfilling your creativity is. True wisdom is the ability to have fun creatively all the time. And that creative fun can only come from developing the human tools of Love, Courage, Honesty and Wonder.

The Idea of Perfection

The concept of absolute perfection is also the concept of absolute boredom. What can you do with a perfectly flat wall? There's nothing to look at: except a boring expanse of perfect flatness. What's the point of looking at anything without any interesting imperfections? What can you do with a perfectly straight line? Ignore the linear process that gets you to the end of that line... so the only point in this perfect line is to get to the end of it: nothing else. Once you achieve perfection of any kind: what is left to? Nothing. The worship of perfection is actually the worship of nothing, the worship of nothingness. The worship of perfection is the worship of meaninglessness.

What does any kind of rationality that is perfectly linear do? It ignores every other line of thought completely. You can't argue with it because it will not listen to any other line of thought or opinion; it ignores all other truths, realities, logic, etc. What is the point to a mathematical linear problem? Finding a perfect answer.? Once you find that perfect answer, your job is over, finished, the problem is solved, ended. You have gotten to the absolute, finite end of that linear line. Yet... all the linear logic of civilization has not solved one human problem. So why do we persist in trying to solve our problems linearly without trying another way of solving them? Why do we even use lines at all? Has any person ever asked this question of themselves?

What can you do with a perfectly round ball? If it is indeed perfectly round; then its bounce and deflection angle, and speed and direction can be perfectly computed, and anticipated so there is no uncertainty or imperfection in how it will react. Only if you add the physical imperfection of a human pool player and the actual imperfection of an imperfectly round ball; do you get anything interesting. Otherwise. The sport of Pool would not be worth playing, because then everyone would know what would happen before it happens... so why do it in the first place?

What can you do with a perfectly white canvas? Put some imperfect paint on it... imperfectly; to generally give an imperfect impression of what you generally, imperfectly see. What do interior decorators do with perfectly flat-white walls? They put faux or fake irregular finishes on it to make it seem that the wall is not perfectly flat-white-smooth... Just to make it slightly less boring to look at.

Why do people fill their houses with clutter? Because an empty, flat-walled room is boring to look at. Only, no matter how much stuff you put into it; once you get used to seeing it: you stop even looking at it. You ignore all of it because it does not change. The dead clutter stays the same-looks the same every week. You would have to live there 200 years to notice the slight-gradual-slow deterioration of it into a rotting mess... as it becomes uglier and uglier to look at.

If you could attain perfection in your life: then what would be left? Nothing. But all humans constantly strive for some kind of perfection. They remain forever dissatisfied and frustrated because their actuality does not match their vision and standards of perfection they have set themselves as a goal to strive for and achieve. So... the idea of perfection is actually a dynamic of finite deadness: that results in boredom, endless frustration, struggle, meaninglessness and nothingness.

The concept of perfection is based upon an absolute. Absolutes do not actually exist in the Universe. We merely imagine that there exist; and then strive to realize them... and make them concrete, so that they become an imagined normality or an imagined assumption. We constantly try to realize or make concrete, or attain, or reach something that does not exist, has never existed and will never exist and cannot exist. Absolutes are boring. Absolutes are imaginary concepts that we create, and wonder why we cannot find them in the Actual Universe. Many people spend their whole lives in the pursuit of some kind of absolute perfection. The trouble is, that we pour our life-energy into them, and waste most of our lives upon them.

Even worse: we imagine, and create, and make concrete only one kind of absolute: mechanical absolute. We seek to attain a very superficial, mechanical absolute of perfection. Training for years how to run hurdles as perfectly as possible. Or trying to hit a golf ball as perfectly as possible. Or trying to find the perfect mascara... etc.

There are no attempts to attaining any kind of humane perfection... only mechanical ones. How much time do people spend getting better at something? Do professional golfers spend as much time with their children as they do on the tour? Or as much time as they do practicing their mechanical swings? Do computer programmers spend as much time trying to become better lovers as they do on their beloved computers? What is the point in trying to perfect a machine? We do not even do that. We only create more imperfect, more complicated machines that are less perfect, work worse, break down more often and are more time consuming to use and repair and maintenance... What we are doing with machines is merely a reflection of ourselves. The more complicated our personalities get. The more we break down, the more dysfunctional we are as humans: is reflected by the machines we create.

The entire culture-dynamic-concept of sports is based upon mechanical-physical perfection. It punishes people for making a mistake. It brainwashes people into hating the idea of making mistakes. It brainwashes people into wasting their entire lives trying to become physically-mechanically perfect. It brainwashes them into repeating the same mechanical motions for year... trying to become mechanically perfect.

What is the point in trying to become a perfect machine? The famous African American slave John Henry tried to out-hammer a steam engine. It made him famous. It also killed him. Is becoming famous after you die, worth wasting your life on? What is the point in living? Seeking mechanical perfection? Abstract perfection?

Ice skaters, Gymnasts, track athletes, train, and work, and practice... for years, and years... trying to perform certain physical maneuvers as perfectly as possible. If one of them manages to do these physical activities more perfectly than their competitors: then they win. Then they get a gold medal. They become world famous. They become rich. They become idolized by all of the young children who also want to be the best in the world at doing certain physical feat. So, that locks in a guaranteed negative feedback. Out of millions of children... only one is fortunate enough, skilled enough, and slaves harder than others; to win. While all the rest of these millions of children lose. And all these hundreds of millions of children get to feel bad, like losers, not winners. They all get to have bad, poor self-images, bad poor self-esteem: just so one child, one person can have a better self-image than the others, just so one person can feel-think-believe they are better than the rest, just because they are comparing themselves to this one super-athlete. Just so one child out of all of the others gets to feel temporarily good, and have a positive reinforcement of being valued as a better, more perfectly functioning machine. Is this a sane reason to poison millions of children with such an insane degree and intensity of competitiveness? Until they break down in public and weep openly because they did not perform physically, and mechanically perfectly enough in an Olympic Competition to win a Gold Medal? In that case: all the other children in the entire world should be weeping their guts out for years... because they were not even good enough to get on the Olympic team... much less win an Olympic Gold medal.

The more you do anything; the better you get at it. Why not try to get better humanly instead of mechanically? The more you give, the more joyous fun you have, the more love you share, the more passionate you are, the more dynamically balanced you are, the healthier you are, the more honest you are, the more courageous you are, the more of a sense of Pure Wonder you have... the more spontaneously creative you can become.

Why spend your entire life getting better at a single specialized mechanical function when you can get better at a million human things that are much more enjoyable and satisfying by not specializing? Why obsess over any idea of absolute perfection? Just do the best you can each day, try not to repeat the same mistakes, try to have as much fun as possible: and you will be amazed at how perfect you actually become. Simply by you following actual truths, dealing with actual problems, being actually honest, having actual fun.

The trouble is; that we think in abstractions, in absolutes. Everything we think; is absolutely perfect. Everything we think is an abstract absolute. We actually believe that our abstract thoughts and opinions and feelings are somehow perfect, and absolute.

“Yes, I agree with you. You are absolutely right.”

“You are perfectly correct...”

“Yes, I agree with you... absolutely.”

“Yes, I understand you... perfectly.”

“I am in perfect agreement with you.”

Whenever someone wants to compliment someone they revere; they say:

“Yes; he had a perfect sense of ----- ”

“He had an absolute ability to ----- ”

“His ----- was so perfect.”

The great lie is that happiness is supposed to be only found by chasing perfection... and never actually attaining it. Every corporation lives by this credo; every competitive activity of civilized humans is based upon the endless pursuit of perfection. The American Constitution guarantees all of its citizens a sacred ‘right’ called ‘the pursuit of happiness.’ It never mentions that people never attain it, simply because of how they live, and what their values are. And you wonder why people are never happy, and never satisfied?

There is no such thing as absolute perfect happiness.

There is no such thing as absolute perfection

Science has already proven this. If you look at anything more closely: you will find out that it is not perfect. Striving for any kind of imaginary perfection is striving for something that does not exist.

However. You can strive to be better. But in what context?

Do you want to strive to be better only on a two-dimensional level? Only one a mechanical level? Only on a physical level? What kind of perfection do you want to strive for? Do you want to strive for the perfection of a more perfect dynamic balance? But a dynamic balance is always changing. That means that you have to strive to change as quickly, and as effortlessly, as honestly, as painfully, as joyfully, as sadly, as angrily, as coldly, and as hotly as possible. That means you will have what people call moods. That means you will become moody. That means you will react quickly to everything.

But... if you react too fast... if you over-react... then you get out of-balance. So... what is too fast? What is too slow? Then the idea of perfection, the idea of striving to become a better human being becomes a totally open question. Then the best way of developing the most dynamic balance possible is by developing a Sense of Pure Wonder.

But then... if you develop a Sense of Pure Wonder... all... any... concept of striving, or perfection disappears... then all you do is be. All you are doing is be-ing... be-coming, discovering, learning, expanding, Improving, sensing, realizing, digesting, thinking, feeling, acting, reacting.... wondering as you do and be and become; about all of these many, complex processes.

‘What am I feeling? What am I sensing? What am I digesting? What am I understanding? What am I doing? What am I being? What am I becoming? Why am I feeling? Why am I sensing, why am I doing? Why am I reacting to all of these things? What am I reacting to? Why am I being? Why am I becoming? How am I feeling? How am I thinking? How am I digesting? How am I understanding? How am I doing? How am I reacting? How am I being? How am I becoming?’ ..... Etc, etc, etc, etc....Until you stop trying to force it, and just let it happen. Until you find a goal and strive for it. When to strive and when to relax? Timing is everything. So you need to add to this list of questions:

‘When should I feel? When should I think? When should I act? When should I react? When should I sense things? When should I do things? When should I digest things? When should I understand things? When should I just ‘be’? When should I ‘become’? When should I wonder? ...’ etc, etc...

Try striving for that kind of perfect dynamic balance.... and see how completely impossible it is to attain even a semblance of it. So how can you strive for the perfection of perfect spirituality, a perfect body, a perfect face, a perfect life...? Try to have perfect fun. Try to be perfectly honest. Try to be perfectly courageous. Try to be perfectly loving, or just try to have a Sense of Pure Wonder. Try for Pure Fun, Pure Love, Pure Honesty, Pure Courage... But Purity does not like to be penetrated... and moreover; the only kind of Purity that wants to penetrate it is the Purity of Pure Wonder. And the only kind of Purity that wants to be penetrated is the Purity of Pure Wonder. If you strive for any other kind of Purity or perfection without wanting to have your own purity, or perfection penetrated and sullied... then you are being imperfect and Impure. Then you are not being Honest, or Courageous, or Loving... then you do not have a sense of Pure Wonder.

The Evolution of Beauty

If you study the fossil record of Life with an artistic eye for its aesthetic beauty; you will discover that the evolution of 1 billion years of Life is based upon Life creatively creating living things that are [progressively more and more beautiful. If you look at what species the evolution of Life has preserved, you will discover that Life preserves only the most beautiful of a species. For example: Look at the fossil record of reptiles and predatory fish. The eldest species of predatory fish which have been kept from extinction is the shark species because the aesthetic design of sharks was more beautiful than the aesthetic designs of all the other extinct predatory fish of the sea. If you look at the evolution of insects and plants: you will discover that the Nature of Life preserves only the most aesthetically beautiful living organisms. Take the Age of Dinosaurs as an example: what is left of reptiles? Only the most aesthetically beautiful tiny salamanders, snakes and birds still proliferate. Reptile species that are ugly; shrink in population and eventually disappear into complete extinction. The same is true for mammal species. The Nature of Life is an evolution towards living organisms that are becoming more and more beautifully designed. Look at the evolution of the cat species. The older cat sub species are large, ungainly and aesthetically disproportioned. The domesticated cat is small and is more aesthetically proportioned and more aesthetically beautiful. If a species that is aesthetically ugly and does not evolve into a more aesthetically beautiful form: it is scrapped and goes extinct. If a species is aesthetically beautiful: its design is kept and preserved for hundreds of millions of years. The same is true of apes. Our ancestors were uglier than we are. We humans became so beautiful, we shed our fur and hair so the beauty of the newly designed human body could be seen and touched by all living creatures.

Darwin is wrong. The Evolution of Life is not the survival of the fittest, The Evolution of Life is the survival of the most beautiful. Life is always evolving organic designs that are more and more beautiful. The Wonder of Life is that it designs and creates organic beauty on all levels naturally. The Beauty of Nature is the Beauty of Life. That is the Beauty of Nature: Nature creates Beauty that is Alive. Nature does not create ugliness that is dead. Nature is beautiful because it is Alive. The Universe is Beautiful because the Nature of our Universe is Organically Alive. The Universe is Beautiful because all the Energy of the Universe is Alive: not dead. Our Universe is beautiful because it is Organically Alive and is organically designed to create Beauty.

The purpose of Life is to create BEAUTY. This is very important! It is important because it gives meaning to your Life. The meaning of Life is to create BEAUTY. You are meant to create BEAUTY. You are designed to live beautifully. You are designed to live IN the Beauty of Nature. You are meant to have the Beauty of Life all around you. You are NOT meant to live in ugly, dead cities filled with pollution and concrete; walled off and insulated from the Beauty of Nature

Why is this truth so important? It is important because it gives a clear purpose to your life.

The assumption that mankind cannot find any meaning in Life is bullshit... the fucking search for the meaning of Life, the thousands of years of idiots called philosophers: who couldn't find any meaning to their lives... does not stem from the fact that Life has no meaning, it stems from the fact that civilization has no meaning... it stems from the fact that civilization has no purpose except to destroy and kill Life. THAT truth is what people always conveniently deny or miss. THAT is why civilized people can't find any true meaning in their lives. If you go outside of civilization, and see it for the abomination it actually is, you will find you have all the meaning and purpose you need to Live. As long as you stay inside civilization; as long as you live inside civilization, you will never be able to find any true meaning or purpose to your life because you are living inside a system that is the mortal enemy of all Life.

Love and Beauty

All forms of Beauty are merely connective forms of dynamically balanced Splitness in differently perceived contexts. Connectiveness itself is Beauty. When we connect to somebody else on a deep level, or fall in love; suddenly our senses are heightened; food tastes better, everything seems sharper, everything around us becomes wonderful. The world suddenly becomes beautiful because our awareness of it is intensified. The Sense of Pure Wonder is an intensified and expanded condition of human awareness. Love is an outcome of the heightened perception of Beauty. Connectiveness is also understanding. The more- the better you are connected to someone, the more you understand, the better you understand what you are connected to. In terms of love and actual connectiveness, the longer you know somebody, the better you know them, the more you love them for their beautiful qualities in spite of their flaws . . .

To fall in love: what comes first? Beauty? Sex? Love? Romance? Friendship? In what order? In what way? Which way is natural? How is Love Genetically designed to work? How are we supposed to fall in love? What is the purpose of dating? What is the purpose of meeting somebody? To fall in love? To have sex? Raise a family? What is the context of that meeting? What is the context of that dating? If the context itself is unnatural, then the outcome will be unnatural also. In what context, in what social parameters were human relationships genetically designed to function? In what kind of social unit were bonded pairs designed to function? How were they supposed to become bonded? What was the process before civilization buried and destroyed the natural ways that humans came together? We do not know because we have no comparison, no alternate examples of how to fall in love.

Civilization manages to corrupt even the dualistic polar connective bond of sexual-social-personal mating. Instead of developing interpersonal awareness, civilization deadens it into a form of normality. Even the deepening of this basic human connectiveness is slowly corrupted by dull routine, deadness, so that love is classified into two separate kinds: Limerence, the immature projection of one's idealizations onto the other person, and mature love; as people actually get to know each other. Both are distorted corruptions of imbalanced human awareness. The surest way to kill love, romance and intimacy is by taking the other person for granted. This is what happens to married couples. This is what happens to all the Wonder of Love in civilized society. Normality is the biggest killer of Love.

Why? Because the genetically designed process of human mating and bonding is gradual, it should be gradual... while the catalyst of love, or pheromones, attraction, charisma, what-have-you is instantaneous. If people already exist in a state of Pure Wonder in a properly dynamically balanced mate relationship, then both aspects should exist at the same time, all the time, not one gaining dominance or one waning, ever. Anything else is a watered-down, imbalanced version of Pure Wonder. Both aspects feed each other in developing and heightening human awareness and connectivity by a continual process of heightening, sensitizing awareness on all levels, which is as it should be.

The fact that a polar bond has a balanced dualistic process of feedback; should be natural and obvious; not rare. Because humans have never learned how to exist in a continual State of Pure Wonder: they also have never learned how to properly love each other. It is the condition of civilized society which is responsible for this. By making the accumulation of wealth a necessary condition of marriage, you already poison the dynamic of its relationship. As long as you have greed competing with love inside the human psyche, you will never have a healthy expression of love. Once you segment the human psyche into conflicting aspects, you destroy its integrity as a whole.

Civilization is not loving. It never has been. Civilization is a mechanical horror. It forces people to not love each other. Civilization teaches and trains humans in tool-use and using their brain as a tool. It does not teach them how to love... it does not teach them how to connect to each other, and to the actual Living Earth. What few segmented scraps of love some people are lucky enough to be born into, find, come across; does not change the fact that the condition of love in our species is an exception; it is segmented, exclusionary, exclusive and flawed. Civilization has never bothered to train or develop human skills in people; collectively or individually. It has mostly trained people in tool-skills, tool-brain skills and abstractions. But how to love, how to connect? That is left mostly to chance or luck. It is almost never spoken of, dealt with, focused on. Each generation passing on what niggardly scraps it was lucky enough to be given... Each new set of parents frozen in their respective cultures, steeped in ignorance and normality: given nothing but the example of their own upbringings on which to model the raising of their own children is not Love: it is a travesty of Love.

The inability to give or receive love stems from countless factors. Love should be a natural part of living-growing-learning. But once humans began spending more time using tools than just living with each other, once they developed egos, once they became competitors-antagonists, they became strangers. Once their psyches became split-up, once civilization emerged, once we started building walls around ourselves: we began walling ourselves off from each other. The walls of our inner emotional-spiritual life came to mirror the walls of our outer life. By living inside an artificially concreted set of walls and separations, the human psyche developed its own barriers which cut off, stunted and distorted the development of Love, Giving, Trusting, Happiness. The word "Love" merely signifies connectiveness: it is not an absolute, nor is it identical. No love is the same; each one is different. So: what is the right way to love? What is the right kind of love? It is all a matter of context and balance. The wider the context, the more dynamically balanced it is, the better, the healthier, the more profound it is. The more the energy-flow, the deeper it flows; the stronger it is. In order for love to exist in its most dynamic form, it must be reciprocated; there must be a continual give and take, a continual energy-flow.

Loving is a learned art: as is the art of learning how to live. When people are never taught how to love, or how to live... When they are traumatized, trapped by their own fears, then as a norm: human intimacy-closeness-love is slowly lost and ceases to be practiced. Instead: mechanical functioning becomes primary: work, doing chores, going to the store become more important than Love. Any time for closeness, even in a marriage, becomes rare until it shrivels and dies a slow death. Simply measure how much time each person spends loving-giving-being human, compared to functioning mechanically, and you will see what I mean.

Animals have been accidentally paired by humans in the strangest kinds of assortments: a horse and a dog, a cat and a bird, a raccoon and an owl, and the same thing happens: by living together, they become closer to each other, they look after each other, they end up creating connections, they become attached to each other, and loving each other. If you just spend enough time living... not functioning like a tool: if you spend time with someone just living... not functioning mechanically... never mind with a human, with any animal: you will naturally develop a loving relationship with them. .

The practice of loving as a way of life has been taken up by countless people who do it every day. It is called having fun... enjoying living. But they are buried under the constraints and demands of civilization, of functioning as tools in their society. And they are actually invisible to all of those who are not on their wavelength because they are usually the humblest, the least wealthy, the least famous, the least smart or knowledgeable... and they go through their lives with as little conflict as possible... They almost never get to be famous or well-known. And the only reason that they find happiness, love, contentment, peace, joy, is because they put more of their life-energy into the serious practice of happiness as a mostly silent art form than all of the goals that people are supposed to focus on in order to be successful. Simply practicing the art of being gentle and kind to yourself and to others takes up half of your day: who is interested in doing that? People are supposed to work all day like machines.

There are so many ways that civilization has made nearly all kinds of caring, gentleness, love, empathy, kindness, to be shameful and avoided at all costs... that it would take a thousand books to even begin to document all of the unconscious and conscious ways love is prevented from ever happening, or openly shown in civilization. Love is so rare, that it is spoken of as a fantasy, a dream, an ideal. It is reserved for movie stars. People who never experience Love are convinced that it is a complete fabrication and does not actually exist at all. They sneer cynically at people who speak of it and never show any Love to others. This imaginary love is only supposed to exist in secret... In privacy and secrecy... hidden away behind closed doors and never mentioned except as what people claim to have in secret... huh? If a person does not see any example of love in their whole life, of course they will assume that it is all a big lie. How can this be called love? If the only way you can express love is in secret, excluding everyone else, then it is not love; it is a travesty of Love. This is how civilization successfully poisons and corrupts all love within its boundaries.

The problem of balance between being a tool, and being human is not easy. But above all, it is a continual balance. One is being an unfeeling inhuman machine that is emotionally dead. The other is being a sensitive feeling living creature that is organically Alive. A balance that humans must be continually aware of each day if they are to keep their sanity and perspective on the civilized environment they live in. If this awareness is lost, then the long slide back into pure mechanical functioning and the dulled unawareness called normality is inevitable. Couples, who are in love do not need to be distracted or entertained: they do not care about work, money or power. Why? Because they are living in a heightened state of Pure Wonder and Beauty: they are not bored or unhappy. The rarity of this in itself proves how civilization poisons the human psyche and prevents Love from happening. The way civilization is structured destroys Love, it prevents people from loving each other. It destroys the very possibility for love to happen. The tragedy of all over-intensive tool-use, the tragedy of all tool societies, the tragedy of civilization is that people spend more time learning how to use tools and using them than spend time learning how to love.

The true test of love is giving all of your life to others. Giving all of it. Not just a stingy bit of it. But... how can you give your life if you are not willing to give your death also? You cannot live fully unless you are not afraid of dying. If you are afraid of dying, then you are also afraid of living. The true test of love has never been giving anyone your life. It has always been giving someone your death. That is the true test of love. If you are willing to die for someone; then you do not truly love them. But who ever does that? Civilization trains people not to die for other living people. Instead we are supposed to die for dead ideas, for dead religious concepts, for a dead Nation, for old, dying, senile, impersonal masters and kings, and old, dead abstract ideas. For a dead ideal called a greater good, that has not worked for 12,000 thousand years.. What kind of sick abstract, inhuman love and delusion is needed, before anyone is crazy enough to do that? But stories of self-sacrifice are everywhere. Throughout wars, famines, droughts, disasters, in times of crisis: people who love each other have died for each other honestly, courageously, lovingly... and selflessly.

People give their death to the past. They die for old dead ideas and old dead cultures. They give their death to preserve old dead things. They do not give their death to nurture young living things. They do not give their lives to living things either. What you give your death to: you also give your life to. If your allegiance is to dead things: you will fight for, and die for these dead things. You will never fight for and die for living things ever. You will love dead things: not living things.

Your country is a dead concept: it will never love you back. Your church will never love you for sacrificing yourself to it: it is a dead concept and a dead institution. The only valid reason for dying, for giving your death to anyone living... is out of love. If you give your life and your death to an unloving idea or entity that is dead; then you are propagating the lie that it is okay to love something that does not love you back; that is okay to love dead things. Civilization supports and develops one-sided love: the love of dead things. Loving dead things that feel nothing.

The sick selflessness that Nations teach; dying for your country is a total brainwashed sham and a lie. The sick myths of selfless people giving themselves to their Fatherland or Motherland, is a reversal of what should be. Parents should give their lives for their children... not the other way around. Much less projecting that obscene cultural imperative that you must love your parents even if they do not love you into this imaginary myth about your country being your father, or mother. The self-sacrificing idea of giving your life to your father, or mother is one the sickest of role reversals that civilized societies preach.

This is merely the sick twisted practice of unloving, unlovable parents hoping that no matter how much they themselves do not love others... no matter how unloving they may be towards their own children... that their children must love them as a sacred duty... While they have no duty, no responsibility to love their children. This sick belief is rampant all over the world in most civilized cultures. It is the worst kind of one-sided death worship. Loving only the old and the sick and the dying. Nobody ever mentions that it is the parent who must first show love to their child first: not the other way around. Nobody dares mention that if a parent does not know how to love, and cannot teach their child how to love: then it is the parents fault if they are not loved in return. Parents are supposed to teach children how to love. Somehow: this detail has been forgotten, and thrown out of all human societies. If parents do not teach a child how to love... then how can you expect them to love their parents? But we hear constant complaints of how ungrateful and how unloving the modern generation of children is to their parents.... Who taught them to be that way? Especially with children, you reap what you sow.

What is one of the sickest customs of human parents and human cultures? The total absence of open affection-touching-approval-intimacy-love. They do not show love. They think it is transmitted invisibly... without them having to show it. They expect their children to understand that going to work and ignoring them and neglecting them and being too busy to listen to them or even be with them is a sign of love; horse shit That this is proof that they love their children? The child is supposed to understand their parent's inability to love and to show love without any explanation given? Bullshit.

And then all children are supposed to forgive their parents for their inability to love... and still love them back? Regardless how horrible the parents may be as humans, or how bad parents they are. This is kind of one-sided, sick obscene love which people are expected to have as a normal way of loving... is then translated into all kinds of sick, idiotic emotional attachments and identifications. Then you are supposed to love your country, your city, your state, your county, etc.... Without ever being loved back by any of these abstract entities. That is: unless you die for one of them. Then maybe... just maybe, it will honor you and recognize you. after you are dead. And if you do not die for an abstract entity? Then you are not honored or recognized. So if you want to be loved and honored by an abstract identity-entity like a Nation, or an army, or a police force; die for it. If you want to be ignored by the abstract entity you love: then don't die for it. The idea of dying for an abstract piece of imaginary shit is sick.

Let some of these people who love their county, and their city, and their sport teams, and the company they work for, and the brand products they use, and their State, and their County, and their Nationality, and their religion, and their church, and their ethnicity, etc.. explain exactly how they parcel out all of their love and attention upon these abstract things... and just how much of their love is left over for living people. Do they love people at all? How deeply? How superficially? The term 'love' is bandied about so easily by the Media: that mere tolerance is now being called love. What exactly is it that these people love? See if they can explain how all of their many hundreds, if not thousands of loves fit together... and how much time and energy they have to love living-breathing people also.

Loving anything that does not love you back is a waste of time and energy. It is stupid. Loving someone who hates you, or hating someone who loves you: is an example of how emotionally insane, and emotionally dysfunctional, and emotionally stupid, and emotionally immature, and emotionally stifled humans actually are.

Civilization teaches people to love Blindly; Unfairly; Stupidly. One-sidedly. Civilization teaches machine-love, the love of machines. Not human love. Would your parents die for you? If not; then they do not truly love you. Period. Would you die for someone you love? If not; then you do not love them very much. If you are going to give all of your life to somebody. This means all of it: including your death. Do you parents live for you? If not, then they don't love you. If you are going to love someone, this means giving your life to them. There is no Love without Giving. There is no Love without Life.

If you are going to love someone: then do it intelligently and lovingly. Love someone who is as giving and generous as you are. As true equals. Not unfairly. Not incrementally. Not stingily. Not selfishly. That kind of qualified measured, doled-out love only leads to dissatisfaction. The perennial problem of couples is always that one does not love the other as much as they are loved. When you start parsing out your love in tiny little selfish bits, nobody will be satisfied by it, including you. If you love completely, and fully, and openly... and are intelligent enough to choose those who love you just as completely: then there is nothing to argue about or be jealous of. If you know that you have all of her love, and she knows that she has all of your love, then arguments disappear. The trouble is that people do not know how to love completely as complete human beings. It is an art-form that has never been developed or even tried, except inside corrupt cultures that have poisoned the very notion of love from birth.

We have a crisis-instinct program in our genes that can sometimes literally override all good common sense; and we throw our lives away trying to save strangers. That is because that instinct was developed before there was any such thing as a stranger. When for millions of years...anyone you knew; could only be someone from your immediate band: and therefore, it made logical sense to sacrifice yourself for them... without thinking. Instinctively.

Now, today: people actually glorify giving our death senselessly to total strangers by some transcendental, rationalizing, abstract crap about a subconscious love for the collective mass of all humanity. There is no such thing as a love for all humans. It is an idea. It is a token. It is an Icon. It does not exist. You can say this shit, and think this shit, and believe this shit all you want. But not one person in this imaginary collective pile will feel this imaginary crap you call collective love.

Love is killed in many invisible, secret ways. We do it unconsciously. Not even aware that we are doing it. Every day humans kill love by loving their tools more than they do living things. Every day humans abandon children because we love working with tools more than we love spending time with our children. Humans kill love sneaky, underhanded, devious ways. Humans withhold love from those who need it. Humans hate people who are vulnerable and needy and need to be loved. So humans carefully make out that they are too busy. And carefully stonewall the any admission of love even existing. For most humans: Love does not exist. They have been so deprived of it for so long: that they do not even know what it is. Humans hate giving anything of themselves. They would rather give money than love.

The denial that such a thing as love exists permeates all civilization. If you investigated the hearts and lives of every civilized human on Earth... every day for the last 12,000 years: you would find only one heart in a thousand... one heart in a million, one person in five thousand... at any given time with love in their hearts, or doing a loving act. You will find millions of humans fucking each other. But you will not find them loving each other while they do it.

Civilized people hate each other much more than they love each other. Cultural-national-ethnic-religious hatreds are centuries old. It is called by many terms: racism, fanaticism, extremism etc. There is no such thing as Mass-love; only mass-hate. You cannot love an abstraction, or a mathematical number, or faceless hordes. You can only love people one-by-one; individually.

What is the condition of love in our civilization today? We live on a starvation level of subsistence from it.... Just barely enough of it to keep us functioning. Why? Because our symbiotic Tools are sucking most of our love, and attention and focus away from humans and onto machines and into abstract distractions. Look at Modern American culture. What is the American Media pushing? What is the American PBS television network pushing? The Love of Houses, the love of Cars, the Love of Antiques... the Love of dead things... the Love of secrets, Secrets of the Dead. Even the Love of Graveyards for shits sake. This is what civilized people love. The love of money, the love of power. The love of what money and power can give you.

We give our children; a teeny, tiny drop of love. Hopefully just enough; so they won't want to die of love-starvation outright. But many times... that teeny, tiny drop of Love is not enough... and they die prematurely. They die in their cribs by the thousands, in fatal, victimized, weakened conditions. They grow up with stunted self esteem. They grow up unloved. They grow up never knowing what true love is. Then they do the same to their children.

When a human child reaches adulthood: that tiny drip of kindness we call love is cut off. And then for the rest of their lives these love-starved humans go around seeking it obsessively, craving it, never getting enough of it, trying to save it, hoard it, as an exclusive, expensive luxury. And they must go out into the cold, hard machine world... and fend for themselves. Without any love to sustain their self-esteem. And if they do not have enough of it when they are little: being thrown out when they grow up, makes them shrivel up and stop living. It makes humans walk around for the rest of their lives in continual pain. Perpetually love-starved... slowly dying from a lack of love. Until they become numb, unfeeling machines. Which is exactly what civilization wants you to become.

What does the lack of love do? It creates stunted, starved, barely human love-skeletons. It makes people stuff themselves with every imaginable substitute as a replacement for love and attention, and kindness.

Has there ever been a glut of too much love in humans? No.

Only a perpetual condition of love-starvation... petrified and ossified into cultural normalities.

Has there ever been a starvation of not enough tools with humans? No.

Only a perpetual glut of too many tools and tool cultures: petrified and ossified into cultural norms. What is the difference between the energy of the first humans and the energy of humans today? What makes us today; more different? More destructive? Only one thing; tools. Today, we spend 95% of our time with tools, using ourselves as tools, using our minds as tools, using our feelings as tools, using our bodies as tools. 100,000 years ago, we did not spend so much time, and focus, and obsession on all these tools and machines. Otherwise, human Life-Energy is still the same. 100,000 years ago: humans were not savages or ignorant fools. They were living far more intelligently by living with other living things. By living in Nature. Not against it, not in opposition to other living things. Not in opposition against all living things... Then civilization was invented and human love and sex became an artificial, competitive battleground called: 'stress'.

Take away 95% of the pointless tools we are glutted with today: and humans can once again find a sane balance in learning how to live. How that can be done is easy. People need to be aware that it must be done and needs to be done. If you want to be happy, spend less time using yourself as a tool and more time being human. That is what love is all about. But today we have no time for love. We are too busy being distracted by trivia.

There is so much emotional sickness and insanity in humans. There is so much emotional secrecy, emotional hate, emotional cowardice, emotional hypocrisy and emotional deflection... all because we are not allowed to show our feelings.

How can you leach emotional poison out of humans? Let people show love and affection openly. Let happiness and smiling and laughter be shown openly... then: the ones who do not smile, who do not laugh, who do not show affection and love openly will be known to be sick. Go up to them and ask them what is wrong. Ask them if they are sad. Ask them if they feel lonely. Ask them why they are not dancing, ask then why they are not loving and laughing.

And if they refuse to tell you. If they think that their feelings are supposed to be kept secret, hidden away.... Then throw them out of your society and never let them back in. Unless they are emotionally honest with you and tell you honestly what they are actually feeling. Any culture that does not openly celebrate and support joy, happiness, laughter, dancing, singing, love, affection, intimacy, closeness, kindness, and caring... is a deathly sick culture. Any religion that does not do this is sick also. Any family that does not do this is sick also. Any person who does not do this is sick also. The fact is; most humans are emotionally dead. That is what living inside the artificial mechanized horror of civilization does to you.

If you want to expose the emotional sickness of people: you need the emotional healthiness of showing love in public openly. You need everyone to be emotionally included in a social group in public. You cannot have exclusive love, you cannot show love exclusively and you cannot express it exclusively. Every person must have the same right to love, and be loved, and the same right to show it openly. Every person must be included in being loved and cared about.

Then you will see how each person reacts to that love. Then you will see people being finally forced to show others what they truly and honestly feel. Then you will find people who feel that they do not deserve to be loved. Then you will find people who are very shy and afraid of showing their love. Then you will find people who are afraid of laughing. Then you will find people who are afraid of having fun. Then you will find people who do not know how to have fun. Then you will find people who do not know how to laugh. Then you will find people who are so emotionally numb and unfeeling and insensitive, that they feel nothing. Then you will find people who do not feel any love, who do not feel anything is funny, who do not feel the need to smile, or laugh, or show affection. Then you will find many people who are emotional illiterates, and emotionally numb, who feel nothing.. who do not know what they feel. Then you will find people so disconnected from themselves and other people that they do not know what they should feel, or when they should feel, or how they should feel.

Then you will find the sickest people of all... the ones who actually hate being loved. The ones who hate all love, all kinds of open showing of affection, all forms of kindness, all gentleness, all caring, all laughter, all fun, all joy. They are the haters. They do not know what love is. All they know emotionally is the feeling of hate. They are secret haters.

Only when all people are emotionally included in a group. Only when all of their emotions, and feelings are allowed to be expressed openly in public., can the sick poison of emotional secrecy be exposed. Only then can you begin to work to develop and create emotionally healthy communities, emotionally healthy people and emotionally healthy cultures.

Only then can emotional hypocrisy be publicly exposed.

Then you will finally see and witness the clear distinction between people who would rather live their lives full of secret hate, and secret grudges. Who love hoarding and accumulating all of their secret inner bitterness and hatred, and hugging it to themselves in secret. And people who are not interested in accumulating hate inside themselves. Who would much rather have fun, and laugh, and dance, and enjoy themselves and Life without any stupid hate. Then you can finally clearly choose which group of people you would rather be with. Then all of the haters can go off and spend their lives hating and being miserable. And all the lovers can go off and spend their lives loving and having fun. Then you will never again have the two cultures and beliefs mistakenly mixed up. Then all of the liars, and haters, and secret keepers, and deceivers can be winnowed out and banished from the communities that prefer honesty, openness, love, intimacy, fun and laughter.

Only when you create a culture of emotional honesty. Only when all people are emotionally honest with each other and with themselves... will you ever find out how truly miserable, and unhappy, and lonely, and sad, and lost people actually are.

Only then will you find out how much hate and fear and lies and self-deceptions, and self-delusions, and egoism, and envy and greed, and scorn, and arrogance, and smugness, and stupidity and corruption lies at the bottom of human hearts. Only then can you begin cleaning people's hearts of all the secret shit they have been amassing, hoarding and accumulating all of their lives.

As long as people are not emotionally honest. As long as they hide their true feelings. As long as manners and politeness are the norm and not Honesty and Courage. As long as hypocrisy and cowardice and dishonesty and fear and hate are the social norms of your society. As long as you have a hierarchy of privileged, exclusive love as a social norm. Then all of the poisonous emotional shit in every human soul will stay there, and continue to accumulate and rot, and fester... creating more epidemics of emotional sickness and emotional insanity as a continually worsening social norm of overpopulation.

A basic sickness of over-intensive tool-use. A basic sickness of all tool-societies: is the complete absence of emotion. Civilized humans are raised in a social norm of an emotional vacuum where nobody shows any human emotion. Feeling nothing Emotionally. Relating unemotionally to everything from birth to death: using dead tools. There is a huge, hidden, silent taboo in all civilized societies against the showing of any human emotion.

'Don't get too excited. Take it easy. Listen to reason. Stop being irrational. Be quiet. Don't cause such a fuss. Don't get too emotional.' Don't cry, don't yell, don't laugh, don't run around, be quiet! Be a nice obedient little machine.

This is pounded into every child's heart and mind by example, and by punishing every child for having feelings in a very simple way. What happens when a weeping wailing child is heartbroken over something? The adult acts as if the child's feelings do not exist. Their feelings are completely ignored. Beginning from an early age they are brainwashed that their human feelings are not important. They see people all around them ignoring human feelings. They are taught from an early age that their feelings do not exist. They are taught from an early age to have no feelings, no emotions. They are born into a world of adults who show no emotion. They see humans all around them having no feelings. They see all feelings and emotions being ignored, punished, laughed-at, jeered-at, scorned, attacked.

In order to even begin sensitizing people to their own human feelings would require a complete reversal of civilized values. You would need to create a culture where humans are more important than machines. You would need to create a social norm where living things are more important than dead things. You would have to create a culture where the ownership of dead property is not more sacred than human life. You would have to throw out the idea of owning dead things altogether. You would have to throw out the idea of owning living things also. You would have to throw out the idea of using anything as a tool for your own selfish advantage. You would have to throw out the idea of slavery, the idea of enslavement, the idea of power, the idea of wealth, the idea of greed, the idea of accumulation. You would have to stop sanctifying dead objects. You would have to stop putting most of your time, your life and your energy into the accumulation, preservation and perpetuation of dead things.

Once there are no dead sanctified possessions and objects for people to care about, and waste their lives on: then they can spend their time as they were designed to: with their children. Then a child cannot do anything that is wrong, or bad because there will be no dead objects that have to be maintained, preserved, polished, kept safe, cherished, owned, bought, etc. Then no parent, no adult will ever have to tell a child: no. Then children will not have to be raised negatively by being told: No a million times... and almost never: yes. Then a child will never have to be told:

'Don't touch that. Don't do that. Don't go near that. No, you can't go outside and play.'

The modern industrialized concept of love began to evolve into a more exclusive kind of love back in the middle ages in Europe when the concept of medieval romance was invented to keep the professional killers living inside castles occupied and distracted because there was less continual fighting and killing going on. Instead; there began to develop huge picked battles. With huge picked armies that mutually agreed to let the outcome of a certain huge battle between two huge armies decide who won the war.

Fighting and killing became a more exclusive, selective pastime... but it also became less steady, less frequent for the elite killers and fighters. So the idea of a more exclusive form of male-female courting was developed as a hopeless futile pastime. By putting the two code-words of kill, and night together... a knight; signifying the black color of death, a professional killer was supposed to fall hopelessly in love with a noble, pure; lady who was hopelessly out of reach, because she was already married to his liege, his master, whom he had sworn an life-long allegiance-to... promising to fight only for him. The idea of also falling hopelessly in love with his master's, his lord's wife, was one more cultural way of cementing his enslavement to a certain warlord, and making sure he did not switch allegiances to another warlord.

The entire idea of medieval romantic faithfulness... was invented to ensure that a warlord's killers remained faithful to him, even while they were not fighting for years, and were forced to survive upon lowly stipends that beggared them and kept them almost as poor as the peasants working in the fields.

The Path of Splittness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

865

Then came the revolutionary idea of not falling hopelessly in love with the warlord's wife... but with one of the ladies of the castle, or the 'keep' instead; was broken by the idea of the killer knight flaunting all conventional traditions and customs and running away with the lady they were supposedly in love with.

The word keep is a code-word for greed: keeping all wealth and power concentrated inside a small, cold, drafty, ugly stone monstrosity of a building only built for war and defense. Built out of fear that a marauding band of killers might have greater numbers and massacre the killers in that area, and take over all of the peasant-wealth of tilled land.

This flaunting of the customs of romance created a huge public approval by the lower class that finally could vicariously triumph over their hated rulers. Only when the majority of the lower classes approved of this kind of tale did the Romantic Myth spread into all the levels of society of that time. Becoming so popular that books were actually printed, and bought and sold: just for a chance to read about flouting the hated laws and conventions of these killers... As reading these romantic tales: the lower classes vicariously had a chance to spit in the eyes of their oppressors by rooting for two elite rebels who defied the entire sacredness of the customs of the day.

The myth of the perfect knight was invented to hide the actual truth of where knights came from and what they actually were. Instead of a dirty skulking killer hiding under the cover of night to do their killing, hiding under the cover of steel armor to do their killing, hiding under anonymous metal masks called helmets to do their killing. They were portrayed as being more good, more gentle, and more loving, and more noble than ordinary commoners. The motto of knighthood became idealized into the famous French phrase that signified the perfect knight. 'Sans peur, et sans reproche'... Meaning that the perfect knight should be without fear and without reproach. He had to live a perfect life. He could not be reproached for anything because he had lived a perfect knightly life. He had harmed no one during his entire life. He could not be accused of any evil whatsoever, because he was the perfect knight, and supposedly lived all of his life by a higher standard of perfection that ordinary lower class people could not hope to reach or live by.

Of course this fairy-tale Myth was a complete obscene lie. But it was useful in covering up the true nature of knights, and protected them from accusation and guilt and recrimination. It was the perfect smoke screen of falsity used to brainwash and hoodwink millions of peasants and serfs for hundreds of years. But it was also a powerful myth. Some people actually came to believe in it. Some people actually tried to live by this standard and example. People actually tried to set living examples of this kind of knightly perfection. Their lives were mythified into other myths. Like the life of Roland, and the life of King Arthur, and his knights. Like the life of Lancelot of the Lake. And Queen Guinevere. These myths and fables were so powerful during the Dark Ages of Europe, during a time when more murder, mayhem, and human abominations were committed in secret and openly... by all the knights and Barons and Kings of Europe: that the peasants of that Age blanked out all of the human misery and horror they had suffered, and only kept the fairytale Romances and Epics alive in their cultural memories. They rejected the horrible truth and only accepted the whitewashed lies. Because the actual truth of Medieval Europe was so filthy and horrible: no human could ever believe what these human monsters called Knights and Barons and Kings had actually done.

This began the entire process of the whitewashing of European History. All the actual atrocities that happened during the Dark Ages were wiped out of all historical accounts. Actual history replaced by the escapist fairytales of these Myths. This is where all our fictionalized media and fiction culture comes from. Preferring to read fiction instead of the truth. Fictional Knights and fictional Kings replaced actual folklore and actual events. Europeans came to be raised on a diet of escapist literature, cultural myths and lies and distortions so obscenely false; the chasm between their Legends and Myths and the actual history of the European Dark Ages was so huge, that all true accounts of that Age disappeared and were quashed and pooh-pooed as being untrue. Rather than just the tip of the iceberg of human insanity and filth that poisoned that continent for hundreds of years under the cultural Aegis of Knighthood, Baronetcy, and Kingship.

You can see the modern equivalent of exclusive love in Harlequin Romance novels. Where the heroine falls in love only with the most handsome, the most wealthy, and the most powerful man available. Who is hidden as a rebel, or a black sheep in disguise. While the actually most powerful-wealthiest-handsomest man is the evil manipulator who tries to win her by using only his power, wealth, and status... without any Romantic Love. But regardless of which elite male she ends up with... Romantic Love is reserved exclusively only for the elite. It is not for anyone who is not powerful, who is not wealthy, and does not have huge upper class status.

Do you ever see any heroines in these novels falling in Romantic Affairs with a male who is not perfect, who is not an abstract ideal? Who is poor? Who is of a lowly status? Who has no power? Never in your life. Humans are only allowed to fall in love with those of their own class. Falling in love with a lower class person is not considered Romantic Love. That is considered to be Ugly, Low-class, despicable, Unromantic Love. Do you ever read of these Harlequin heroines loving poor, starving children in third world countries?

Never in your life.

Do you ever read of them loving poor starving families; who need help, and who need to be taught how to love themselves? No. Never. Poverty, starvation, and the miseries of the lower classes simply do not exist in these books. These romance novels are pure selective adult fairy tales: whose format, plot and content; have not changed for hundreds of years.

This is one example of how modern consumer culture is corrupted and poisoned the Historical idea of Romantic Love. It has brainwashed all of the oppressed lower masses to search for, and pine for... Romantic Love: no other kind of love. It has brainwashed them into worshipping others above them: rather than loving themselves. Someone who is not a winner, not an elite-rich-powerful person: is not romantic. Basically: losing is unromantic. By poisoning the idea of love with the elite pyramidal concept of romance: people are brainwashed into selectively rejecting all other forms and kinds of love that are not cast in the exact same mold.

Girls are taught from birth to let themselves fall in love: only with the handsomest, wealthiest, most powerful males.

In other words: 'To Hell with all lower-class males. Let them remain without girlfriends. I will hold out for my imaginary myth fairytale romance, my shining knight in white armor, my upper class Mr. Perfect.'

Unfortunately there are only a few eligible millionaire bachelors in the world. There are only a few elite, exclusively rich families who would even consider allowing a poor person to marry into their family. So millions of lower class snob-girls trying to marry above their station. Above their class, um, well, darn... only a few of them ever do it. As for the rest of the millions of lower class snob-girls? Fuck'em. Once a girl marries above her class: she disdains all of her former equals. What a nice way to create hate, envy, snobbery, cliques, alienation, fear, etc in millions of humans. Just by giving millions of wanna-be upwardly mobile people false hopes.

How many lower class males feel shame because their own social females are such hypocritical social climbers: that they are snubbed and scorned and ignored? Until this cultural poison has spread into a blind public snobbery of all girls towards all males. Which has spread the hate and rage of males for females so deep into Western Culture: that they can only express their power by raping girls. This is not the only reason for rape in human society. Human love, and human sex has been so poisoned and misused and manipulated for so many thousands of years that it would take a thousand books to even begin to detail what is wrong with how we love and how we have sex. How females selectively define their own love in terms of selective power is just one of these factors.

Do these female social climbers give a damn about anyone who is poor? No. The supposedly noble concept of romantic love... the cultural obscenity of exclusive love is so deeply imprinted into all consumer societies, that the lower classes of affluent Nations do not give a shit about all of the lower classes around the world.... They are only obsessed with worshipping and revering, and envying their own elite cadre of handsome-wealthy-powerful-famous icons. This is one example of how love has been poisoned in Western Culture.

The entire evolution of Love: from the ethic of Jesus preached... to the ethic of Romantic Love... to the modern Western Ethic of Love is a progression of increasingly civilized humanity dehumanizing love. The Western evolution of Love for two thousand years has been a regression of dehumanization; not a progression.

The entire concept of love that the Christian church preached for hundreds of years was a love that was inclusive and included all of its members. Not exclusive. The poor brainwashed masses were supposed to love everybody regardless if the other person was good or evil. They were supposed to be humble and meek, and non-violent, and gentle. They were supposed to love each other blindly. Christian Love was actually a Religious Law invented to keep the serfs from rising up and slaughtering their masters. Any who were not humble, meek, gentle... were seen as a danger to the church and to the entire system of feudal servitude. Christian churches preached and espoused the love of martyrdom. They preached the ethic of the victim. They glorified helplessness. They glorified gentle loving people being tortured to death while loving their torturers and forgiving them for the sins and crimes as they were being burned to death.

The masses were taught to love everyone in their community and their society. Without exception. This kept them completely ignorant. It also kept them easily brainwashed, easily manipulated and easily governed. Only the elite rulers were allowed to love exclusively. Only the elite of the church had the exclusive privilege of loving God more directly. It was only when European village communities became so dysfunctional; that the European masses began aping the exclusive 'love' of the rich and powerful knights. Only when levels of greed, selfishness, affluence, power, status and knowledge rose among the masses... destroying the integrity of their communal villages: that exclusive love began to be practiced by the masses as the elite practiced it. As a corrupt, hypocritical sneaky way of only worshipping power, wealth, status, and knowledge exclusively. And to hell with actual human beings or babies or parents or poor people. They do not exist in romantic myths.

Now the ethic and ideal of Western Love has become so corrupted by the ethic of exclusivity: that most people can only love themselves. Now the ethic of selfishness and instant self-gratification has poisoned Western civilization that people grow from babies to adulthood and die: without every being loved or knowing what love actually is.

The idea of a community of selfish modern consumers loving each other: without exclusion, without exclusively walling off other people in their own society as being unlovable... is a joke. It is an impossibility. You cannot have, you cannot practice inclusive love in a consumer society. Inclusive love cannot exist inside modern civilization. It has never existed inside civilization.

It was only a token idea... an ideal that existed. And it existed only because the elite rich and powerful could use this token lie, this token myth, this token fallacy: to manipulate and control their peasant slaves, their vassals, their subjects. Now; even a token of the idea of inclusive love; does not exist anymore in Western civilization. This is how far Western society has regressed and corrupted and dehumanized the idea of Love. Just as it has corrupted and poisoned the idea of Beauty. What do humans consider beautiful? What is full of beauty? Nature. It is so full of beauty that it is a glutted with it. There is so much beauty in Nature... in one Nature-Scene... that artists spend hours, days, weeks: just trying to capture a tiny abstract pale representation of one tiny bit of it. What else is considered beautiful? The human body. Artists spend hours trying to capture the beauty of a face or body in a pale, abstract dead sculpted stone representation of a living body that changes its aspects and shape every second.

Most art, most civilized beauty has become abstract, dead, unchanging. Now machines are considered more beautiful than Nature. Now machine-like movements of the human body are found to be more beautiful than living natural movements. Its called dance. Machine-songs of hate and filth are taking over the souls of the younger generation: it's called: rap. When did humans begin to dance in repetitive, ugly, boring rituals? When we strutted around: mimicking the repetitive movements of our tools. When we crept around the fire: mimicking the ritual of the hunt, and the death-agony of the killed animals.

Now we see the Earth as being dirty. And the human body as being beautiful. How can we find the Earth that created us to be ugly, and what it creates is somehow separately beautiful from the Earth? How can Nature be ugly and loathsome, and dangerous, when a flower is considered to be separately beautiful from the Earth it grows from? That is the insanity of all selective focus in humans. We only consider some things to be beautiful selectively.

People love pea soup. They love all kinds of soups and stews. People love all kinds of mushy things. Love is called: 'mushy'... because it mixes everything up. People and children love turning things into a mushy mixture where you cannot separate anything from anything else. But soil. Earth. Is the source of all this mushiness. It is the primordial mush that all living things need and grow-in and grow-from. One handful of earth is full of beauty. Compare the beauty in one handful of earth to a handful of human skin and muscle. Which is more diversely beautiful? Which has more different things in it? Each tiny bit in that Earth is beautiful in-and-of-itself! The entire Universe is full of beauty. The stars are beautiful. The galaxies are beautiful. The Earth is beautiful. Our planet is beautiful.

If you look around you with a Sense of Pure Wonder... then everything in the Universe is beautiful... Except civilization. Except filthy slums and industrial plants. Except boring stale, dead, suburbs. Except ugly apartment buildings. Except ugly, boring dead concrete sidewalks and highways. Except machines.

If you have a sense of beauty that is Universal... then you will be able to become aware of many different kinds and levels of beauty. And become aware of what is actually ugly. Not selectively admiring the curve of a glass vase... whose curve is dead, and antiseptic, and unchanging... compared to the constantly changing curves of a living girl or a living tree with thousands of leaves and branches souging gently in the wind... constantly changing their curves... constantly changing their beauty.

What artist can successfully capture the pure beauty of a tree with a breeze blowing through it? What music can capture the beautiful sounds of its faint, subtle rustling? Or capture its heavenly clean smell of pure freshness? Or capture the feel of that heavenly breeze on your cheek? But what do humans do? We try to capture a painted abstract dead rendition of something that Actual exists, and regard this derived symbolic representation as not only being beautiful, but more beautiful than the actual living creatures and plants they are derived from. We try to create music using huge expensive symphonies to imitate the sounds of Nature. We try to capture the beauty of a tree in the breeze on film... without being able to smell the breeze, or feel it, or feel the tree, or look at it from different angles. We try to distill plant-essences that capture the smell of certain selected plants... and use them as perfume to adorn ourselves with to cover up our own natural smell because we have poisoned our bodies with toxic substances that are unhealthy for us. Has anyone ever successfully replicated the smell of a tree-breeze as it passes your nose? Or the smell of fresh hay, or grass? No. That beauty is by far too subtle to replicate. All art is merely a pale, two-dimensional reflection of the actual beauty of Nature and the Universe. That is all Art is. Just a reflective, dead abstraction... and a poor one at that. How in hell can you expect to capture all the three-dimensional beauty of a living tree on a two-dimensional canvas? You can't do it. But these idiots called artists never stop trying to do it. And waste their entire lives trying to do it, and failing miserably in the process with their crude dead flat canvases filled with dead oils.

That is what pyramidal focus, or selective focus does to human awareness. It blinds all of us... and blinkers us into not being aware of the actual beauty of everything around us. It makes us think that civilized dead, abstractions and representations are supposed to be more beautiful than the actual article. So we unthinkingly destroy the Natural wildlife and Natural ecosystems around us... while flocking into stuffy opera houses and museums to stare at something culturally beautiful. Why? Because a human created it. Not Nature. What kind of idiotic double standard is that? But that is the reflective blindness of humans. Unless you become aware of your own blind spot: you will never know you are blind in that area. We are blind in the area of natural beauty.

'Oh... that's just an, ordinary flower. That's just a bunch of trees... that's just a bird singing... That's not Art. That's not real beauty. Abstract beauty is created by humans. We are the most creative beings in the Universe. Nothing in the Universe is as creative as us humans. Nature is ugly. The Universe is boring. Show me a painting by Matisse. Let me hear a symphony by Beethoven. Forget Nature.' Why? Because we train ourselves to be only sensitive to certain kinds of abstract beauty and ignore all actual beauty of Nature. We selectively-reflectively train our ears to appreciate only certain kinds of music.

Oops. You mean Beethoven's most loved, and most popular 6th Symphony was trying to capture the sounds and beauty of the countryside? I.e. Nature... not the houses, or people in the country. You mean Matisse was trying to capture the beauty of those flowers in that vase?... And they all failed to capture that beauty completely? Even though they spent all of their lives trying? Oops. What a blow to the egos of all the great 'genius artists' we worship so ardently.

But if we should not worship the beauty of abstract art... then what should kind of beauty should we worship? The fact is that we should not worship anything to begin with. But weak humans have an instinctive need to worship things. Small children who have been brutalized and taught how to be afraid have a need to look up to something bigger than they are. Small children who are denied love; crave it from something bigger than they are. Weak apes look up to the trees they yearn to climb but are too weak and afraid to climb. Worship is complex a form of weakness and fear, blind unmet yearnings, cravings, needs, and instincts translated into civilized abstractions. Artists love and worship Nature reflectively and endlessly try to translate a tiny bit of its actual beauty into abstract beauty. The results are pathetic. We love artists for their attempt to abstract things. We worship humans who try to capture and preserve beauty into abstract art forms unsuccessfully. We think it is the artist who is creative. Not the beauty that was created that they are trying to unsuccessfully capture.

Oh. You mean no human can create a flower? We can only gaze at its natural beauty in awe? Who created that flower? Who created beauty? If the entire Universe is beautiful except human civilization, then it sure as hell wasn't created by us. We did not exist 14 billion years ago when our Universe was created. So why do we worship civilized things more than the beauty of Nature and the Universe? Why do we love abstract beauty more than actual beauty? Why do we love civilization more than Nature?

The fact is; everything in the Universe is infinitely beautiful except human civilization. That is the trouble. There is so much beauty all around us that we have to block out all that beauty. Otherwise, we would just stand and stare at one tree for Hours, Days... Weeks.... Months. And never be able to completely drink in all of its beauty that is constantly changing every second.

So we selectively chose not to look at the tree, or at the grass. We selectively chose to focus on our tools instead and what we can make with our tools. We ignore everything else except the things tools can offer us. We value things tools can give us.

How aware are other animals to the beauty of Nature around them? The eyes of chipmunks sparkle. They are bright with curiosity. They dart around everywhere. Are they aware of beauty?

Look at the eyes of domesticated cows. They are dull. Opaque. Ignoring everything around them except the grass they are eating. What kind of eyes do you want to have? Sparkling eyes? Or dull eyes? The eyes of a domesticated animal that has no interest in the beauty around it? What is more beautiful? The sound of a bird singing, or a duck quacking? Wild birdcalls are beautiful. The sounds of a domesticated duck are gratingly loud and ugly and coarse. Is the sound of a cow mooing beautiful? It is a boring, low disgusting sound of stupidity

The visible difference between the beauty of Nature, and the ugliness which civilization creates is obvious. Civilized humans are in love with separating things. They are in love with cutting down a flower, killing it, taking it inside a house...and admiring it as it dies a quick wilting death.... We are in love with all kinds of dead beauty. We are obsessed by dead things, killing living things, and death. Humans are not interested in preserving living beauty. Humans destroy living beauty.

Only after we cut down a tree and kill it, and carve a dead unchanging abstraction into it, and throw most of that dead tree away... does the carved object suddenly become an artistically beautiful object. Or an object d'art. We love objectifying everything. We love turning everything into a dead object. So we can stare at it. So it does not change as we stare at it. This way we think we can absorb more of its dead unchanging beauty by obsessively string at it.

But if you have a sense of Pure Wonder then the idea of killing anything just to stare at it: becomes so crazy... it becomes absurd... so meaningless. It becomes a travesty of actual living beauty. What would you rather do; look at a living beautiful girl? Or kill her, and look at her beautiful corpse? Look at her changing beauty as she smiles and flirts with you? Or stare at a dead unchanging photo that only catches a tiny glimpse of her beautiful personality, and her moods, and her expressions?

What is Love, anyways? If you want to understand it scientifically. Just watch what happens when two microscopically small cells meet under the magnification of a Microscope: in a science film:. You will see the two cells nestle together. Then you will see a very strange, thing happen. All of the DNA strands inside the two cells will line up in parallel rows inside each other. So they are not only parallel to each other inside each cell, but also parallel to in relation to each other's lined-up DNA. Then slowly: the DNA material from each cell kind of migrates across the barrier of the two touching cell walls, and ends up inside the other cell. As this happens: the parallel lines of DNA pass between each other effortlessly. Like trains on parallel tracks going in the opposite direction from one terminal to the other. So most of the DNA trains from one cell end up inside the other cell. And most of the DNA trains end up inside the other cell ends up inside the first cell.

That is spiritual love demonstrated physically on an organic level. Each cell finds a compatible mate. And goes:

'Here. Here is everything I am. I give you all of my essence. I give you everything that is inside me. Please take this. I give myself to you. I live inside you. I disappear inside you. I am nothing. I empty all of myself into you. I lose all of myself into you'.

The only difference between the love that these two tiny cells have for each other, and the love two humans have for each other is a slight change in the wording. When two humans fall in love they say in essence:

'Here. Here is everything I am. I want to give you all of my essence. I want to give you everything that is inside me. Please take my love. I want to give myself to you. I want to live inside you. I want to disappear inside you. I want nothing for myself. I want to empty all of myself into you. I want to lose all of myself in you.'

Whether two humans have ever actually done this as well, or as easily, or as completely as two tiny, simple cells is very doubtful.

But the wondrous magic is that when you try to do that. And when your mate also wants to try to do it too. When both of you actually try to love each other spiritually and completely, then you find that she has given you all of herself also. You find that her soul resides inside you also. And your soul resides inside hers. You find that you are incapable of doing anything she does not want to do. You find you are incapable of disobeying her or doing anything she does not want you doing. And she finds the same thing is true for her also and the both of you are in perfect accord, perfect harmony without any conflict, without any unhappiness because you love each other so much, you are sensitive to the slightest unhappiness of thee one you love. You find yourself only living for her. You find yourself in a state of bliss. You find yourself open, vulnerable, and loving it. You find yourself incredibly responsive to her. You find yourself incredibly sensitized to her slightest mood, or wish, or whim.

And if she loves you equally: she will have the same thing happen to her. Both of you become genetically unable to hurt each other. Both of you now exist as a shared, bonded, spirited, sprightly, lively, spiritual union with more energy, and happiness, and bliss, and love that you ever imagined you could feel. Both of you become happy and energized. Cozily nestling against each other. Constantly sharing and exchanging your deepest secrets and feelings. Building the shared spiritual bond and strengthening it through a lifetime of living closely together. Exactly like these two simple, tiny cells. But simple cells only do this for a short while in their lives: and then they go on to do this with other cells. They do not mate for life. They mate with any cell that will exchange DNA with them.

Is this a fairly close analogy of how two humans love each other? Is this an accurate genetic description of the deepest most spiritual human love? Why have Scientist never noticed this? Because scientists have never experienced what true spiritual love actually is. That is the reason they are scientists in the first place. Science is spiritually blind. But so are all organized religions. So are all civilized humans.

Science is merely a sick kind of detached curiosity that has no love in it, and no human emotion. Would any sane person who is in love; trade their life, for the life of a scientist who feels nothing at all? Scientists should be pitied for their emotional blindness. They should be despised for portraying all life and all living things unlovingly and unemotionally. Rather than try to coldly examine the sex-life of two organic cells: they should try to coldly film and photograph their own sick, loveless, lives and sex lives: and try to figure out why two simple cells can love each other more deeply and more simply than they can their own wives and girlfriends. That is; if they have anyone they love at all of the opposite sex in the first place.

Modern scientific people, who do not know what true love is, and have never known true love call the: fantasy, and unreality of love-at-first-sight: Limerence. They insist that it is only a temporary delusion. What these blind scientific idiots do not realize is that they are witnessing this delusional, temporary love in every cell under their microscopes that shares or trades its own living DNA with another cell. They think this kind of love is only experienced by elite, exclusive, lucky, humans: not by all the living things on this planet on a cellular level. If scientists are that blind to the most obvious facts of DNA transferrable... how blind are they to all of the other wonders which they stare at objectively? How blind, and unaware is Science? How unloving is it?

What is love anyways? When do people feel 'loved'? when do people not feel loved? What is the difference of being loved and not being loved anyways? What is the difference between loving and not loving anyways? The difference is very simple and very obvious. The answer is simple and obvious. What we humans call being loved and not loved, what we call the difference between love, and no love... is simply the difference between inclusion and exclusion. Period. Nothing else. That is what human love is. That is also what not loving is.

Why do the rich and wealthy feel more loved? Why do their fans and the masses and the public not have as high a self-esteem as these privileged rich people? Because the rich can exclude the masses from being loved. They can exclude them from their wealthy, exclusive clubs and restaurants, and mansions. This makes the elite feel more loved.... by exclusion. The definition of elite love is not who you include into your circle of exclusive friends; but who you can exclude from it. That kind of love is evil shit poison.

It is the love of exclusion. It is the love of exclusiveness. It is the love of ego. It is the love of feeling special. It is the love of feeling you are better than others. It is the love of proving you are better than others. It is the love of flaunting your exclusiveness, your specialness, and your exclusiveness in front of others. It is the love of adulation. It is the love of attention. It is never getting enough attention. It is the addiction to getting more and attention. It is the feeding of the ego. It is pure egoism. It is pure self-indulgence. It is pure spiritual corruption.

Why are the Christmas holidays felt to be so loving? Because for one evening... we can exclude the rest of the world and shut our doors and have our own special exclusive Christmas. Because the beginning of winter is when the weather turns cold. People can come in from the cold and find a nice warm blazing Yule log burning in the fireplace and exclude the cold world outside from the warmth they enjoy. They come in from the cold outdoors when Nature turns cold, and meet the artificial warmth of their superficial friends, and the artificial warmth of a burning fire.

Love became physical warmth only after we humans lost our warm fur. When we were forced to press ourselves closely together each night so we would not freeze to death every night when it became very cold. The history of exclusion is not one hundred thousand year old. It is not one million years old. It is four billions years old. Our brand of Human exclusion began six million years ago.

That six million-year-old legacy of us losing our warm fur coats forced us to define love by closeness to each other. Other animals, who are perfectly warm inside their own fur coats no matter how cold the weather gets, do not have this definition of love, or of closeness. Animals, who do not live in cold climates, have different definitions of love. That is why we see and feel, and think that Nature and our World, and the Universe is cold and unloving.

Feeling warm and included: wrapped up inside someone else's loving arms: is a sensation of inclusion. Feeling protected. Safe. Insulated from all unloving, cold things that do not include you, but exclude you. That is what expensive restaurants sell very easily. The feeling of exclusive privacy, secrecy, intimacy, closeness, exclusivity. By excluding every other human from their rooms and services except your special included party of exclusive friends.

This is why we wrap ourselves, and insulate ourselves, and wall ourselves off from each other. So we can feel loved exclusively... not inclusively. Our modern unspoken assumption of the idea of inclusion is so small, so unaware, so insulated, so selectively hypocritical: it is merely the Stone Age ethnic tribalism re-enacted, played out, repeated ad-nauseum for 65, 0000 years and still going strong. That is not progress. That is the ignorance of tribal exclusivity hiding behind hypocritical lies and bullshit.

This is why each family closes its doors to all strangers during the winter holidays; and huddles together to celebrate their own closeness by shutting out the cold weather, and having a warm fire, food, drink, and supposedly good times, and feel good doing this. They are still acting like naked savages with only a burning fire to keep them warm. Not love. Just fire, and food. Artificial warmth: not love.

However... the trouble is; if you have no family, if you are not included into a special clique or family. If you are homeless. If you are alone in the world. Then as far as you are concerned: all these supposedly loving, happy people locked inside their homes huddling close to the artificial warmth of a fireplace, or food, or drink, and gratifying themselves... are actually the coldest, most uncaring, selfish bastards alive. Then you look at all these people as cold, uncaring, horrible inhumane people: who do not give a shit about whether you starve to death, or freeze to death outside their warm, insulated, exclusive homes.

The ritual of Christmas clarifies the concept of what we humans call love. It also clarifies our inhumanity. It shows how much each clique and group huddles together... and also how much they intermingle with each other. And who they exclude from their circles. It clarifies which people are social enough to have such groups to huddle into, and which people do not. But of course. Huddled all together inside your own family or group on Christmas Eve or Christmas morning... That by definition prevents you from ever knowing the loneliness and sadness and bitterness of those people who are not so lucky. And you will never know how much these lonely people hate all the people who have locked them out, and excluded them.

By definition: the practice of inclusion is the most practical way of never having to know exactly whom you have excluded... except by this one custom like Christmas, you have effectively excluded the rest of the entire human race from your love and warmth and inclusion. So to ease the consciences of the affluent: there are charities, and shelters and churches that supply free Xmas dinners to the homeless on Christmas. Just so the poor will have a sense of inclusion during a meal. But only once a year... as a hypocritical token. This token charity is supposed to be the same as your feelings of special inclusion inside a special house, with a special tree decorated by you and your special family... passing special presents between special people. Ritually strengthening token family bonds... that are ignored the rest of the year.

So by gathering a bunch of homeless people who are strangers to each other for one free meal: you are supposed to be practicing the principle of Christian charity and love... and not have a guilty conscience about it when you leave the homeless shelter or church... to huddle into your own exclusive family unit. A family unit these homeless people do not have at all. A house these homeless people do not have. With expensive gifts these people do not have. With long-term relationships these homeless people do not have. And all the other advantages and insulations like warm expensive cars and clothes and warm heated exclusive offices to work inside, and companies to belong to, etc...

This is the weak definition of exclusive love defined by weak, cold, humans; who cannot even warm their own bodies... never mind warming their own hearts or minds. Never mind radiating that warmth out, to include other people around them. That is the weakest token form of inclusive love. Each family and group shrinking down to only people who they supposedly are actually be close-to.

But what if you increase the strength of this love? Even though the definition itself is six millions years out of date. What if you try to include as many people as possible into your Xmas celebrations instead of as few as possible?

Then these tiny cliques begin to overlap each other. Then one party, one Xmas dinner spills over into another. Then people travel from house to house where everybody is welcomed warmly, and nobody is excluded at all? Then if any Christian person sees a person who is alone or poor, or sad, or alone, or in need of cheering up on Xmas, they might invite them to their party or dinner. And if all the people at all the parties are not exclusive snobs busy snubbing and ignoring others at the party to feel exclusively included by only talking to only their most closest friends... then anyone walking into the door might be welcomed, given food and drink, and good cheer... and then all the lonely, homeless, poor people would be dragged protesting... and laughing, as the rich affluent givers insist they come to their party instead of the other rich person's party. Because then the more poor people, the more lonely people you invite to your exclusive party and dinner... and the more gifts you give them... and the more welcome you make them feel, and the more you talk to them and get to know them personally... the better you will feel about even having such an exclusive party and celebration only once a year. And the more you will enjoy yourself, and the people around you. The more people you will meet, and the more friends you will make. And the better chance there is of these poor and lonely people finding someone of their own to love and be close to. The better chance of them finding a job. A place to stay. The less homeless people there will be. Until there are no homeless, lonely, sad, poor people at all.... Now we can't have that now, can we? ... Why not?

If there were no poor people, no lonely people, no excluded people... then how can we feel warmly included inside a small-insulated house, with our small circle of exclusive superficial friends? Then it would not matter which house or home you walked into. It would not matter which dinner or party you went to. You would be warmly welcomed and made to feel at home. And the filthy practice of weak, exclusive, inclusivity would disappear from the ritual of Christmas, and from society as a whole. Horrors. What a thought. Change rituals? Change anything? Change Christmas?

The ritual of Christmas has been changing every year for thousands of years. It is being systematically corrupted worse and worse; every year. To bring any old-style traditions of Christmas back... even those as recent as twenty or thirty years back: you would have to uncorrupt all of human society from thirty years of the steady increasing commercialization of Christmas, and the steady increasing commercialization of human society in general as a whole.

And that is not easy. Unless you can educate people about what Christmas once was. And the 2,000 years of its history. And show how when humans became horrid: their Xmas became horrid affairs also. And when people became more generous and happy and good: their Xmas became more generous, and happy and good.

But that is only one day of showing love ritualistically... and only in a narrow, exclusive, superficial, social way. If you want to define all love more strongly: then you will have to radiate your love out to all people every day of your life. You will have to include every person you see every day into your loving circle of included friends and loved-ones. Then you get something that the Hippies of the sixties tried to practice but failed miserably. The concept of 'free love' which was actually just free sex: not love at all. The concept of no hate. The concept that if you simply remove hate from your definition of being human: all you have left is love.

But then love becomes worthless because it is no longer exclusive. It is no longer special. It cannot be bought or sold anymore. And that would destroy the commercialization of Christmas and the selling of expensive diamonds and gifts as a way of showing how much you 'love' someone by how much money you are willing to spend on them. Then the currency of money becomes worthless as a commodity that can gratify you. Then all you need is the love of all the people around you. And there goes capitalism down the drain. Oops. Let's keep our greed and scrap our love. Now we can't have that... can we? .

Why not?

We need poor people to feel special ourselves. We need special restaurants, and special gifts, and special homes, and special trees. Why? Pyramidal focus. Selective awareness. Focusing like a predator only upon one thing at a time. Not the wider, more inclusive awareness of prey animals. That is supposed to be a lower form of awareness. Because six million years ago: we decided that we should model our society after the predatory societies in the Serengeti plains that dominated and terrorized those plains by selective vision, selective focus, selective tactics, selective cunning... and tons of hate and violence and killing.

Not love.

Is that an intelligent way of modeling human society? Is that how we should define love? By how naked apes defined it six million years ago? Is the watered down practice of commercialized Christmas once a year the best way humans can show love to each other as a whole? Huh? Someone explain this to me.

When did people begin giving mechanical toys to children as Christmas gifts? When people began treating children as mechanical slaves in coal mines; that's when. Look at the entire spectrum of human society and put the symptoms into a proper perspective. The upper classes were so rich: The European elite were so rich and wealthy: that they no longer needed to use their own children as slaves, or as machines. They were so rich that they could actually afford to treat their own children a little bit better. So instead of loving them: they treated them as machines. Their children became meaningless toys to them. Their children were taught to act like toys. European aristocracy became a toy-society. Just as China created its own upper class toy-society and its toy-icon of an Emperor. Who merely existed as a symbol to be worshipped. Just as all corrupt rich societies turned their own elite into a bunch of useless, meaningless toys.

When did people first give children special food for Christmas? When they themselves were so glutted by an overabundance of food: that they gave their children a tiny token extra bit of it. In European towns that were so filthy rich, so glutted with wealth and food, and machines... that some of it was given in token of the baby-Jesus holiday; when people were supposed to worship the Christ-infant. Do you want to sanctify this rotten kind of spirituality? Or understand it?

When did people start loving toys? When they admired and envied the intricate, obscenely expensive, useless toy music boxes, and clocks, and jewelry boxes made out of gold, silver and platinum that rich people gave to each other. That the obscenely rich elite wasted fortunes upon to have made for them. Cheaper copies were made for the bourgeoisie, and the upper middleclass. Until the poor masses of the industrialized West finally could afford cheaper mass-produced copies and ape the upper classes.

All because these useless things originally had been exclusive status symbols of the wealthy. Because they were the most useless things ever made. Because they symbolized a completely conspicuous waste of money, energy, time and meaning. Because the first toys were useless things made for a useless class of wealthy humans who loved beautiful dead objects, and did not give a shit about starving-dying poor humans. And the poor were stupid enough to copy the rich in everything they did. And waste their hard-earned money to buy useless trinkets and toys for themselves... and finally for children on Christmas...

And what do we have today? A useless, meaningless, toy-society... with its useless-meaningless toy-people buying useless-meaningless toys for its useless-meaningless toy-children. So their toy-children can throw away their useless toys when they get bored with them, or when they break them. So these toy-children grow up to become toy-adults. Throwing away marriages and relationships if they get bored with them, or if they break. Adults who have forgotten how to play, buying toys: computers, cars, planes... costing thousands and millions of dollars.

Do you want to get a truthful perspective on the sanctity of Christmas; or do you want to hug your beloved, precious customs; and preserve and perpetuate them? Do you want to understand the history of your own customs and culture or not? The evolution of machines turning humans into useless, meaningless toys is one effect of civilization upon humans. Christmas is just one example. Where does the concept of destructive exclusive love come from? Where does the idea of Romance come from? It comes from Roman civilization. It is a Roman corruption of love: loving only certain people. It comes from their culture of owning slaves like property. It comes from their concept of the exclusive ownership of humans by other humans. It creates jealousy and envy. It creates hate. It creates inequality and inequity.

This was how the concept of the love that was created in the poor communities in the Roman Empire came to be corrupted. Roman citizens were more important. When the idea of love was invented: they became the heads of their respective churches and communities. They Romanized that concept. They destroyed it.

Before the concept of Romanized love. The Greco-Roman concept of love was pure sex lust. It had nothing to do with marriage or children or kindness or emotional intimacy. It was the concept that regressed back to the first lizards. It was a re-creation of the pre-copulation rituals between two healthy lizards that were sexually attracted to each other.

The love between two people: the exclusive love of any couple living in a community of couples who are not also in love: dies. Period. It dies a slow death. It rots. It shrinks. It withers away. The only way any love between any people can become stronger and healthier: is for it to be shared equally by all. Period.

Myths do not lie. Fables do not lie. All legends and tales of Romance have tragic endings. All exclusive love is a tragedy. It is a dynamic of dying. It is a story of how love dies. It is a story of how the healthy energy of lovers is poisoned and corrupted by the unloving emotionally dead society and culture they live in. Children's fables try to cover this truth up. But not the main myths. The Arthurian Legend, the Legend of Roland, the Ring of the Nibelungen, the Green Sword, and on and on... all of them paint in huge broad strokes the impossibility of exclusive love surviving inside human civilization. Civilization is based upon hate and fear and death: not on love.

Sexuality

The instant human ancestors began having more babies increasing their population to excessive numbers; sex became sinful. Sex is dirty and shameful simply because there are too many of us. There are too many of us because human apes are genetically imbalanced: we live too long: we have too many babies. If human life expectancy had been 12-18 years: humans could not have overpopulated the world.

Changing from a monkey to an ape that stood up: the straightening out of the curved spine and bent legs at the hips: changed its sexuality. What is safely hidden and protected by the position of 4-legged mammals between its 4 legs and the earth: unseen and inaccessible, and ignored: becomes exposed and vulnerable to attack, and visible. What happens when by this physical change in their stance, the male genital are flagrantly exposed out in front, and the female genitals become hidden between the upright legs? The male develops a bush to hide its sexual organs: the entire underbelly of the male and female becomes exposed to full view. Unable to attract the male by the exposure of its genitals which had been easily visible from the rear when it went was a monkey: its entire frontal area and its buttocks in the rear was used to attract the male to what was hidden between its upright legs. Changing the stance changed the positions of the genitals, and it changed the sexual positions also: Instead of facing the same way: They faced each other face-to-face, opposing each other ... thus began the war of males and females fighting for dominance: the battle of the sexes was born. However...

The reversal of sexual positions and directions: opposing instead of facing the same way changed human sexuality in other ways. Sex became more personal: they could see each other's facial expressions when having sex. They could explore each other's bodies, they could hug each other, hold each other more closely, more personally. Even when they did not have sex they could hug and touch each other. They could sleep all night holding and hugging each other, they could be together all night holding onto each other. Their skin became more sensitized to being touched and touching. They lost their hairy bodies: their skin became bare, smooth, naked. They came to depend on each other's warmth during the night, they came to depend on each other in new ways...

The dynamic of using tools changed human sexuality. The dynamics of separation-segmentation-accumulation changed humans. Instead of piling up dead pieces of chipped stone: they began piling themselves up into concentrated areas of Overpopulation. Any human society that packs its members into too small a space that is genetically unnatural, must enforce artificial constraints on its members to suppress and repress sexuality. But in doing that, it destroys the balanced design of genetic dynamics of sexuality itself. Once sex becomes suppressed-repressed-forbidden, it becomes imbalanced. Sexuality was automatically distorted, and intensified by the accumulating population of civilization. But worst of all: it was kept secret. The entire history of human sexual practice is a secret. Children are curious. Whatever is forbidden for no reason, without giving a reason, they want to explore to find out just why it is forbidden. The story of eating the forbidden fruit of carnal knowledge has been repeated ever since Adam was tempted by Eve.

The invention of absolute privacy allowed this unhealthy situation to create the endless cycle of infant-child abuse. The community lost all rights or oversight on this essential part of human existence. The conservative estimate today for the sexual abuse of children is one-fourth to one-third of the population. And that is only a civilized evaluation of what sexual abuse even is considered to be. Meaning it only indicates the pathologically detectable cases. Its prevalence is much higher than official records show.

One universal truth is; whatever you keep secret becomes corrupt. Whatever you keep secret: rots. Since sexuality is a part of the deepest level of human intimacy, because it involves our instinctive and subconscious, it reveals too much about each person: it is not talked about openly or honestly. Keeping all sexuality secret: by not integrating our sexuality into the rest of our psyche only creates more sexual distortions-inhibitions-phobias-fears-perversions.

How do you separate the level of touching-intimacy-trust-openness-sensuality-love-fun from sexuality when the only form of touching allowed is sex? You can't. The result is an imbalanced sense and awareness of touch that is pornographic; that is the basic reason the human species have been overpopulating themselves ever since they stood up. Only when touching is no longer forbidden. Only when the human species allows its babies and children to touch everything, only when the damning evil culture of 'look but don't touch' no longer exists. Only when humans touch living life: living grass, living trees, living leaves, living flowers, living insects, living mammals, and allow the grass and leaves and flowers and trees and bushes and insects and mammals to touch them... only when this naked ape allows the winds and air and rain and earth to touch its skin, and touches the air and rain and wind and earth with its skin, with a Sense of Pure Wonder: only when this naked ape grows up and stops touching dead things, and using dead tools and building dead civilizations: only then will the human species find its rightful place on the earth as a friend and healer and teacher and lover of all things that are alive and have no evil intentions towards any living thing.

Human sexuality is a reflected microcosm of the condition of a person's psyche, culture and upbringing. Just how integrated that person is, will show in how integrated their sexuality is: whether it includes love, fun, passion, kindness, or sensuality, etc. Or whether it has been cut-off into an unconnected aspect of their personality-psyche. It is also a perfect mirror of a person's trauma. It shows how people's lives have been affected and damaged by their past. They are all only indicators of the health of a person as a whole and the society it lives in. The level of any society's or person's honesty and openness is inseparably linked to their level of sexual honesty and openness. Unless a person's sexuality is an integrated part of their psyche, it is unhealthy. Only when people try to deal with their own lives honestly as an integrated whole can you have a chance of healing as a whole.

What is the point in having sex with someone you don't love? Sex, without love and intimacy, is just a form of lubricated friction. It is a meaningless release, a meaningless form of instinctive sex-self-gratification. Which is what all masturbation is. If you have unloving sex with someone else; you merely practicing mutual masturbation. You are only concerned with your own needs, as the other person is also. What is the point in having sex with someone you don't love? What is the point in lying to a girl and telling them you love them when you don't, just to get sex? Even if the girl does not become pregnant, you destroy the burgeoning relationship by being dishonest, selfish and unloving..

The point is: when both the boy and the girl are selfish and dishonest: when both are only interested in sex-gratification, when both are addicted to sex, then there is no humanity in the relationship. Then the sacred act of sex: meant only for reproduction; meant only for the best of each species to propagate and in doing so improve the health and strength of the species as a whole; which is supposed to happen only at the pinnacle of virility and maturity by the best of the species, at the best time, for the best reasons... when this biological-genetic law is violated and dirtied: everything as far as gratification and intensity of experience is concerned: everything after the act of sex is down: is an anticlimax; is worse and less. Because after the act of sex:: instead of more sex: maturity is supposed to happen: a baby is supposed to be born and raised; and the couple that had sex 9 months ago is supposed to still be together because they are truly in love with each other, and they are supposed to truly love the baby which they created out of true love for each other.

This is why Beauty exists. The awareness of Beauty: Inner Beauty and Outer Beauty: the awareness of strength, confidence, happiness, positive emotions, happiness exists. This is why fun exists. All boys want to have fun with beautiful girls: not sex. All beautiful girls want to be touched. The sickness of only allowing girls to be touched by a look: by eyes: and nothing else: is genetically sick. Humans are not designed to be able to have unspiritual, unloving sex without hurting each other. The inevitable outcome of all immature, premature, sexual intimacy; is unavoidably harmful. It comes from people valuing self-gratification above all other moral and ethical truths. It comes from the human psyche splitting up into un-connected, un-integrated aspects. It comes from the countless ways humans devalue and dehumanize themselves and all other living things.

When the sex drive is disconnected from the rest of the human psyche: it becomes an uncontrolled, uncontrollable instinctive aspect of the whole. It is not enough to excuse this by saying that since its root is instinctive: humans have no control over it. To separate ones instinct from ones conscious awareness, and have them in conflict with each other, is not a sane or healthy form of existence. A person whose sex-drive is integrated with the rest of their life and their psyche has no trouble in balancing and controlling their sex-drive. But because civilization has splintered and segmented the human psyche, and the human way of living: sex has also become split-off from the rest of life. Moreover: its expression has become abstracted and specialized into different niches of aberration which mirrors the split-off, aberrant development of the human psyche within a segmented social structure that has no balanced or universal code on how to raise its children.

It is interesting to notice that in the human version of creation... That is: a Triality emerging from a Duality, or the birth of a child emerging from the union of a man and a woman: the sexual act, or more accurately, the beginning of this process of emergence... This inner experience of orgasm... The white-hot inner explosion of the human Inner Universe exactly matches the white-hot explosion of the Outer Universe in its original emergence from Duality to Triality. Even the subsiding red-haze of the human sexual aftermath matches the cooling of the Outer Universe after its first explosive entry. Through sexual orgasm, our Inner Universe mirrors the penetration of a singularity into a virgin Universe and its subsequent explosion into Space. That is: if a person's Inner Universe is dynamically balanced and sensitized enough to accurately and faithfully mirror that intensity. Ancient Tantric practices have long taught that through the refinement and sensitization of sexual energy-flow, humans can experience the oneness of the Universe.

It is also interesting to note that a certain clairvoyant woke up in the middle of the night next to his wife, after making love to her, and claims to have visibly seen the actual spiritual creation of his own child at the instant of its conception: when his sperm traveled far enough up her uterine passage to penetrate her egg. He describes the event as the most beautiful, spectacular explosion of light that looked exactly like the visual depictions of the creation of the universe... right down to the egg-shaped result of pure white light. And that it communicated with him... Telling him in effect:

‘Hi!’

This demonstrates that the microcosm of our Inner Universe mirrors the macrocosm of the outer Universe. What I call a Sense Of Pure Wonder or the expansion of our inner awareness-universe mirrors the expansion of the Outer Awareness-Universe: not only on the level of sexual awareness: but on all levels. That is why when you close your eyes at night: you see a milky glow. You are merely seeing your own inner universe. That hazy light matches the hazy light of the Outer Universe.

Sexuality and Touching

Human are a species of naked apes. The largest organ we have is our skin. We are designed to touch and be touched by all living creatures. We are designed to learn about the world we live in by touching everything with our skin. Our skin is the most sensitive organ we have; it is also the most human organ we have. Of all our senses: it is our sense of tactile touch, our skin which teaches us what is good and what is bad, what to do and what not to do. What civilization has done has been to insulate us from feeling the world we live in by covering our skin with layers of artificial insulation which we do not need. Civilization forbids touching. Civilization has a horror of nakedness. Civilization has destroyed the genetic human need to be touched in millions of ways. From birth: human babies are swaddled in layers of numbing layers of insulation. Never allowed to develop their sense of touch; never allowed to learn by touching living animals and living plants, and flowers and trees and leaves and grass, never allowed to go outside and let their skin be touched by the air, the sun, the rain, the wind, never allowed to be touched by Nature. Never allowed to develop their heat glands, never allowed to feel themselves in Nature, not apart from it, never allowed to become aware of the beauty of the world around them, and the beauty of Nature: kept in cages called cribs with bars keeping them imprisoned, never allowed to go out of their prisons and explore the world around them. The taboo of touching is how civilization destroys the humanity of civilized people. The taboo of feeling is how civilization makes civilized people inhuman. When you can't feel yourself, when you're not allowed to feel yourself, when you can't feel others, when you're not allowed to feel others, when you're not allowed to have any feelings, when you can't have any feelings because your sense of touch, your entire skin is numb, when you feel nothing... when you are emotionally dead... it is easy to kill other people and commit horrible atrocities. It is easy to rape and torture and inflict pain when you can't feel the pain you are inflicting upon others. People use tools to distance themselves from what they do. People use tools so they won't feel what they do to others. If there were no tools: there would be no murder, no rape, no torture, no killing, no unfeeling, numb, emotionally dead people who don't feel anything through their skin. There would be no fat people insulating themselves from the unfeeling inhumanity of civilization by developing layers of fat under their skin in order to numb themselves to the pain of not being allowed to grow up as Nature intended: naked; free; without fear, without being force-fed fattening food from the first day they are born. If there were no tools: there would be no unfeeling people. We Humans were designed to live naked: we were not designed to live clothed, covered up, insulated from the world and Nature, not feeling anything. We are designed to be feeling creatures, and the largest feeling organ we have is our skin. We are designed to be empathetic animals. We are designed to empathetically feel what it feels like to be another animal. We are genetically designed to empathetically understand all living creatures large and small by letting them touch our skin, and by touching them with our skin.

By forbidding all touch; by forbidding humans to touch each other, by not allowing babies and children to touch and be touched, by not allowing living things to touch our skin, by not allowing us to touch living things with our skin: civilization has forced the genetic need and the genetic urge to touch and be touched down... down into our lowest, basest, most unhuman area of tactile stimulation: sex. Civilization can and has destroyed all of the most sensitive, the most advanced of our human capabilities and potentials... but it has not been able to completely destroy the sex urge yet. The only reason civilized humans have overpopulated the world is because they have been forbidden, they have not been allowed to touch anything with their skin... except to have sex.

If babies were allowed to live touching each other and sleeping together holding each other all night and play with each other all day, naked, without wearing any clothes. If babies were allowed to live outside, in Nature and were not kept indoors inside stifling boring dead rooms and houses, if human babies were allowed to explore the world they live in without parents and civilization keeping them imprisoned in cages; then they would grow up to become naked children whose skin would be their most intelligent organ; the root source of their intelligence. Then these children would abhor touching dead things, and spend their entire life only touching and playing with alive living animals that are interesting and interested in them, as they are with all living things, naturally. But civilized parent do not allow their babies to live naturally.

The point is: if you live naked. If you are born naked, and live naked: you will learn more through your skin than all your other sensory organs combined, you will learn more through your skin than through your eyes, or nose or ears or mouth. This includes your brains and hands. If you touch living people with your skin every day and every night; you will not have any pent-up unconscious need to be touched sexually when you lie down to sleep, you will not have any unnatural need or urge to have any sex at all. You will not suffer from tactile deprivation, you will not be starved for love, you will not be starved for affection, your sense of touch will not be focused down to the lowest most base, crudest animal instinct you have. It will be raised to such a high level of sensitivity and awareness, that you will not need words or language to communicate with other people. You will be able to understand and communicate with all living creatures large and small just by what you feel through your skin. Until humans live without having secrets, until we stop covering ourselves up with clothes and lies, until humans learn to live by the naked truth and live naked; human civilization will continue to be a massive evil that is destructive towards all Life on Earth.

This is not science fiction. What I say is not fantasy. It is not a wish, or a dream. This is what actually will happen if you raise your babies without civilization, and without trying to civilize them. The original sin of Adam and Eve was sex. Babies who are born naked and never wear clothes are not ashamed of their genitals. Children who live naked and never wear clothes do not develop an obsession to see what is hiding under those clothes. People who are born naked and live naked do not become sex addicts; they do not become obsessed with sex. People who are born naked and live naked do not have any shame and are not guilty of any original sin. The shame of civilized people comes from covering their skin. The sin of civilization comes from not living naked as we are designed to live. What happens if you kiss your baby with water instead of letting them suck on a nipple? Then they will go around kissing every living creature they find. All babies need is a little water; not milk. When mothers do not push their baby's mouths against their breast, when they kiss then instead with a little water in their mouths; then their babies will be happy and loved and will know that they are loved and will not feel empty inside and will not be bored because they will be allowed to do anything and everything they want.

The secret to raising your baby naturally is to never say no to it. The secret to raising your baby naturally is to take all civilized things out of your living area. The secret to raising your baby naturally is to raise your baby outside of civilization. When people live naked: outside of civilization; then there will be no reason to say no anymore to anyone, not just your baby. When babies live naked and are loved and kissed: then they cannot do anything wrong because you have not taught them anything that is wrong... because you have not taught them by your example anything that is wrong.. Learning how to live naked; learning how to live without civilization; is what you must do if you want to be happy... if you want your baby to grow up healthier than you are in all ways, wiser than you are in all ways, better than you in all ways, stronger than you in all ways...

But, if you want your baby to grow up sicker than you in all ways... more unwise than you are in all way... weaker than you are in all way... if you want your baby to grow up to be worse than you are... then by all means raise them inside civilization and give them a civilized upbringing, and have them hate you, and envy you, and depend on you, so you will never be rid of their whining immaturity because they you never allowed them to grow up better than you were raised.

This is the crucial ethical decision of sex that every adult human who wants to have their own family must face and deal with. The idea of owning your children is not natural. You do not own anything. Rather, you owe it to the world to give back more than you were given. You owe it to your child to give them a better chance to grow up than you were given.

This is the crucial difference between a mature, responsible human being, and a civilized, covered-up ape obsessed with sex. No mature human adult ever has sex unless they feel they are ready to have a family and are able to look after their children and take care of them. The fact is if you live outside of civilization, you don't need to look after your baby. You don't need to look after your children. All civilized customs of raising babies and children are only ways of weakening them, by keeping them inside an artificial environment, by using artificial means of overprotection in order to brainwash them into being afraid of everything. Babies and children don't need civilization to grow up healthy and wise and strong. They need a complete lack of civilization in order to grow up healthy and intelligent and wise and strong. They need the absence of civilization in order to grow up healthy and intelligent and wise and strong. This is the myth, the lie, this is the artificial hoax, this is the false trap which civilization sets for all civilized adults who have never learned the true happiness and freedom and fun of living outside in Nature without any civilization at all. I am the luckiest person ever born. I was lucky enough to have a chance of living in the beauty of Nature without almost no civilization. Words cannot describe the beauty all around me that was the Nature of my childhood. I want that for every child born; I want to give every child ever born the same chance, the same luck, the same gift I was given. No civilized person can ever understand how truly ugly human civilization actually is, unless they live in the beauty of Nature and have a chance to compare the difference between Nature and human civilization...

Sex is not Love: Love is not Sex

Sex is the oldest genetic instinct there is. Overpopulation is the oldest genetic tactic to insure the survival of a species there is. The oldest bacteria-virus in the world: the oldest forms of life still use sex to insure they will not die out as a species by overpopulating themselves. The only genetic tactic to insure survival of a species that is older than sex is cloning: duplication: this is how far back the most intelligent species in the world has regressed. It is trying to clone humans. Since it cannot clone and duplicate itself naturally: it is doing the duplication unnaturally, artificially; using tools. Since it cannot duplicate living things: it is duplicating dead things. Even more insane; the human species actually believes that this unnatural, artificial technique of duplication... called the industrial revolution: is its greatest proof of intelligence as a species. Other species cannot turn out duplicate cardboard boxes, cars, dead strips of wood called lumber, computers. Etc. Other species cannot overpopulate themselves into the billions without going extinct. In essence; what the human species calls intelligence: is actually its cunning ability to escape the Laws of Nature, its cunning ability to temporarily escape being punished for violating all the Universal Laws of the Universe.

One cunning way humans have overpopulated the world is by mixing up sex with something called 'love'. By making sex mean love; humans have managed to brainwash and fool billions of young people who are too immature and too young to know what love is, into having sex by making sex the only allowable expression of touching that is tolerated in civilized human societies.

The hippy generation of America in the 1960's swallowed this myth. Instead of loving each other: they had sex with each other: their young healthy instinct to reject money as being evil led them to have something called 'free sex'. Before the 1960's, sex was not free. You had to pay for it. You had to go to a prostitute, or you to pay money to go to a movie and pay money to go to a restaurant with a girl before they would shell out and have sex with a boy, or you had to get married, and make enough money so your wife could stay home and raise children from the sex you had with her; and that is very expensive.

The American youth of the 60's rejected the guilt associated with sex because they had been brainwashed into thinking that sex is love. Love is supposed to be good: not dirty: so why pay for it? But... sex had been done under the covers at night for 1,000's of years. The fad of free sex lasted a few years and vanished. But mass media uses sex to sell things. Generations identify any commercial mass-produced product they have been brainwashed into wanting and buying with sex. This subliminal brainwashing bred the next generation of consumers who became porn addicts. Pornography is now the

No.1 cash industry in the world. More money is spent on buying pornography than any other consumer product. The result is now: love has been wiped out; eliminated from human society. The human emotion of love doesn't exist anymore; it has been drowned out by sex. If the human race destroys itself before it develops past the stage of a brainwashed baby: it will never know what love is, and what love can do. The fastest way to destroy any love between two people is by having sex before you grow to love them. Sex without love is just lubricated friction: it is empty and meaningless and degrading. The 'in-out' repetition of sex, the corruption of touch of tactile feelings channeled into selfishness and self-gratification; is an addiction. The invention of marital bondage: gluing two people together into a wedlocked hell which they are not allowed to get out of. The idea of ownership: owning a wife; owning a trophy sex-symbol: using a wife as a slave: just so there the guaranteed ritual of the lowest, most base self-gratification can be repeated every night or week: eventually and inevitably becomes so banal and disgusting and revealing: nearly all married couples stop having sex and get separate beds simply because they know each other too well. When you get married only to have sex: then the entire intention of this legalized fucking is already disgusting before the marriage is even legalized, and it automatically poisons the entire relationship.

But... if you fall in love with someone without the intention of exclusively possessing them or owning them like a piece of property. If you do not love them with the intention of having sex with them, if you spend your lifetime getting to know the people you are in love with. If you have sex only once: to have a child: and never again do you have sex unless it is to have another baby... then sex become a rare jewel: a sacred moment: that is so intense and so loving and so special: that any idea of a repetitive self-gratifying act of fucking will be so nauseating and disgusting: no human being would ever think of doing such a disgusting revolting boring stupid thing.

This is what the human species must learn about sex. Sex is not love: either people stop fucking like rabbits and stop over-multiplying like bacteria do in a petrie dish, and stop overpopulating the Earth with pointless billions of more useless apes; or our species will go extinct just as fast a culture of bacteria in a petrie dish goes extinct once its food supply runs out.

One huge disgusting despicable evil of the human race: is that it excuses itself of its own worst sin. Raise the topic of sex and overpopulation: and nobody dares to suggest self control. Nobody dares to say that before you have sex: you must be in love with the other person.

Nobody speaks the truth of love: nobody has spoken the truth about love until now: i am the first and only person in the human species to spell out what love actually is, and what it is not. You can tell when you are in love by how much you are attracted to a girl, and how much she is attracted to you.

But here: is the point. The attraction of love: is beauty. Not sex true love is an attraction that makes you want to get to know what she is like deep inside her soul first: before you ever even touch her. True love is not crude. True love does not have any crude animal instincts attached to it. True love is not insensitive. True love is sensitive. True love is the most sensitive awareness there is in the universe. True love wants to know the truth about the one you love. True love does not fall in love with superficial appearance or health or youth. True love is intimacy that becomes closer and closer: and the closer you get to another human soul when you are in love with them and they with you: the more sensitized you become to each other: the deeper your understanding of each other becomes.

For true love to exist: babies must be taught to love the truth and hate lies. Untrue love is an abomination. True love has no sex impulse. True love cannot exist inside the poisonous corruption of civilization. The only time true love can exist is when human beings clean up their intentions and souls and lives and their society and dismantle and throw away their tools and clean up the earth so the earth becomes a clean environment, so the earth becomes clean enough for humans to have clean emotions and clean thoughts and clean feelings, and clean actions. Only when human intention is integrated so all human emotion-feeling-thought-action is one thing; and not separated into specialized insane compartments. Only then can true love grow. Because human civilization has become regressively worse and more corrupt: love is nipped in the bud before it can grow: just like all the zillions of blades of grass are cut short by civilized machines before they can grow tall and healthy and wild and passionate and strong. Mechanical civilization destroys humanity and humaneness in humans.

The Aesthetics of Pure Wonder

In a tool-functioning society, with tool-brain functioning totally dominant; humans must function like tools for most of their waking hours and only if they are lucky is it that they can practice being human in their off hours as a non-essential luxury. Thereby implying that only when a person works are they alive; or 'on'... So mechanical terms of tool-functioning come to replace the human concept of life-living. When you're 'on': you're working, you're a mechanical robot. When you're 'off' you're trying to recover from being a mindless robot; exhausted from the drain of forced boredom, having no energy left, just wanting to do nothing. Neither of these states are human.

By creating an abstractive environment in concretion where everything is segmented, separated, where the abstract-drawn line of absolute separation is made if concrete, where linear abstraction is King, where human existence is literally determined from cradle-to-grave by arbitrarily created abstract lines, artificial separations, which are then made concrete by society... Where it becomes necessary for people to exist side-by-side as total strangers, the result is; all human connectiveness, interpersonal closeness, intimacy and trust suffers.

If you look around you right now, and try to count the number of abstract lines which have been made concrete: you will come up with a number that runs into the billions. Today our existence is shaped, determined, ruled, governed and controlled by countless byproducts of the concept of the abstract line. Try counting the number of lines that exist inside a single room. Try counting the number of linear threads your shirt is made of, or how many lines exist inside a single microchip. Humans exist in an environment made up of self-created, abstract linear reality which has nothing to do with the world outside these linear abstractions... Human civilization is made up of Reality, not actuality. Human Reality and Human Actuality are two entirely different things. One is a human abstract tool-brain manipulation-creation: the other is the Actual Condition of the Universe. And we fail to make the distinction between the two.

The emergence of reflective self-awareness coincided with the emergence of abstract beauty, or art. Tools only became aesthetically shaped or ornamented with the development of culture. Tools became a way of expressing and creating abstract beauty.

All human abstract beauty, which is tool-made, is only a reflection of the Actual Beauty of the Universe. In essence: the difference between the Actual Beauty of the Universe, and the abstract beauty of tools, is that tool-beauty lacks Infinity. Actual Beauty is Infinite. Tool-beauty is finite: it is incomplete: it is mainly a process of finite separation, segmentation, and fragmentation...

We can see this in how anthropologists recognize the tiny subtle differences between a stone chip that was naturally formed; and one that is man-made. Any sign of regularity or lack of randomness; which is not actually randomness, but merely infinite creative diversity... anything from the outlines of a foundation, to a pile of edged stone chips, can be instantly recognized. The infinite diversity of shapes made naturally never repeat themselves. While all tool-use is merely a repetitive attempt at duplication. From this immersion in abstractive reality, comes a distorted perception of connectiveness and beauty. To humans: abstract lines are beautiful because they are connected to them and identify with them. They are human creations, and we are far more intimate with our own creations than with the rest of the universe. So: ugly-boring starkness and deadness becomes normal, taken for granted. Unchanging deadness and sameness becomes beautiful, while all of the constantly changing infinitely creative beauty of nature is ignored, used, manipulated, non-valued, except as a temporary respite from abstraction.

One glimpse of a natural landscape is worth a million painted or photographed ones. That is because no matter how hard humans try, the best they can achieve is a poor-pale-general-crude interpreted reflection of that beauty. That is the difference between all human abstraction-reflection-duplication, and the actual universe. Abstraction can never replace Actuality. If you work at any reflected abstraction, you will value it more simply because of the energy you put into it. If you live in a medium of abstraction, if you live in a condition of abstraction, you will value it more because you are more connected-to it, so that abstraction is more real to you.

In Actuality, the contrast between our living planet and our dead cities is hugely obvious. One is beautiful: the other is ugly. One is ever-changing, infinitely subtle, diverse, while the other is non-changing, crumbling, dead, boring, always the same. Exposure to one sensitizes our many levels of human awareness; exposure to the other deadens all human awareness.

What is Actuality? Actuality is the living reality of the Actual Universe Actualizing itself. Actuality is constantly dynamically active, balancing, re-balancing... Infinitely... on countless hidden, unperceivable, imperceptible, Infinite levels and energy forms.

In order to even begin to develop a sense of Pure Wonder; you need to be exposed-to and immersed-in... the actual Beauty of the Earth, the Universe, rather than the stark, boring deadness of civilization. The Aesthetic Beauty of Nature sensitizes human awareness. The aesthetic ugliness of civilization deadens human awareness. Unless we are lucky enough to have a basis for comparison and perspective, unless our Sense of Wonder is not stifled and is given a chance to develop: we have no way of changing our own accumulated base of unquestioning, normalized perceptions. As long as your awareness is limited, and deadened, and walled off, and stifled, and stunted, and destroyed by Finite perception, by abstract limits, abstract Laws, abstract artificial norms... as long as your awareness is limited by fear, hate, greed, envy, dishonesty, self-delusion, selfishness, egoism etc: you will remain blind to all of the Infinite Beauty that exists in the Universe and in Nature.

How many Natural things are you exposed-to each day? How many artificial unbeautiful things are you exposed to? If your environment consists mostly of dead-flat surfaces, like the surfaces of walls, buildings, sidewalks, asphalt, rooms, doors, windows... looking out upon more dead-flat surfaces of walls, buildings, streets, all stratified into dead-flat planes that never change: then you have nothing interesting to look at. You have nothing wonderful to fill your eyes with. But anywhere else in the Universe where there is no civilization: is filled with things that are wonderful, and to be wondered about. Yet humans do not go outside civilization. They stick to civilized things, civilized cities, civilized ideas, etc.

The sense of Pure Wonder is the most optimal degree of reflectivity of human awareness. Once a person starts taking things for granted, not questioning, not curious: they become less dynamically reflective. They become deadened: brain-dead, spirit-dead, emotion-dead, awareness-dead, desensitized to themselves and their environment. This is the effect civilization has upon humans. A higher level of dynamically balanced reflectivity produces more connectiveness. More connectiveness produces a higher level of dynamically balanced reflectivity. Therefore... as an energy dynamic;

A higher energy level of dynamically balanced Splitness,
A higher energy-level of dynamically balanced reflectivity,
A higher, more dynamic level of connectiveness,
A higher more dynamic level of awareness:
A sense of Pure Wonder,
All experiences which are more connectively intense; Fun, Joy, Passion, Love, and Beauty...
Are all basically the same thing.

The civilized concept of beauty consists of abstraction. What have the richest, the most powerful Kings and Emperors surrounded themselves with for 12,000 years? Not living beauty. Not beauty that lives and grows and changes. Not the beauty of Nature. But the beauty of dead, cold marble. The dead beauty of stone. The beauty of stone statues, stone palaces, gold encrusted, jewel encrusted artifacts made by living human artisans. Unfortunately: for a single King, or Aristocrat to surround themselves with the dead beauty of artificially manufactured artifacts: they need to have hundreds and thousands of living human slaves and artisans and workers... Each one specializing in their own expertise of using tools. Each artisan they enslave or hire. Each worker they use to surround themselves with all of this artificial abstract dead beauty means that none of the thousands or hundreds of living human artisans and slaves and workers who spend their lives working for one ruler or rich person: have any time or money to surround themselves with the same abstract beauty.

If you throw away the idea of civilized concept of abstract beauty being better and more beautiful than natural beauty. If you get rid of the idea that dead beauty is better and more beautiful than living beauty. Then civilization would disappear. Then no living person would waste their life surrounding themselves with dead abstract artifacts, or dead abstract things. Then millions and billions of living humans would not be forced to waste their lives creating dead abstract shit for other living people who think that an abstract oil painting on a flat surface is worth money: but the beauty of a living tree outside their window is worth nothing. If you get rid of the idea that staring at dead unchanging abstract things is better than looking at living things in nature that move and change. Then all the abstraction of civilization will be thrown away. If you get rid of the insane idea of surrounding yourself with dead beauty: and surround yourself with the beauty of Nature and living things: civilization will disappear.

Now we can't have that now: can we?... Why not?

Horrors. Look at the beauty of a living tree? Instead of looking at a dead abstract two-dimensional image of the same living tree? Artists who spend their life studying how to create two-dimensional images which fool the human eye into seeing a three-dimensional image: stared at that living tree for hours. Just so they could capture a tiny bit of its living beauty on canvas. Just so other people could admire what they admired about that tree. Oh. You mean the only trees that are beautiful are the ones artists look at? Not the trillions of other living trees that they did not bother to paint because they couldn't? You mean an actual living tree is not as beautiful as the abstract image of a painted tree on canvas?? What kind of rationalized bullshit is this?

Civilized humans like fake things because they are fakes themselves. Civilized humans like fooling their eye: because they like fooling themselves. Civilized humans like fooling other people. Like attracts like. The more fake, the more of a fool you are, the more dead your soul is: the more you will like dead things. The more abstract you are: the more you will like abstract things. The less alive you are: the less you will like living things. Water seeks its own level. The degree of abstraction in any living culture shows how the people in that culture have been brainwashed into worshipping two-dimensional shit.

Food and Health

Ever since the overpopulation of civilization was created, people have been forced to exist mostly on a few basic staples. Supposedly because it was the only practical way to feed any large population. The practice of eating the same things every day has existed ever since civilization was born. However, doing the same thing every day, eating the same thing every day, living in the same environment every day produces ill health, boredom, and a whole host of other problems.

Just as cross-training has become almost mandatory for athletes because it improves their performance: diversity should exist in all aspects of human life: not just diet and exercise. We should also be constantly stimulated by an ever-changing environment and also an ever-changing diet, if we are to become truly balanced and healthy. Even in affluent countries today with an overabundance of food: the lack of variety in diet persists and is further degraded by the prevalence and preference of processed food over unprocessed food. Every nutritionist will tell you that all unprocessed food has more nutrition, is healthier, and better for you than any processed food period. That the more diversity you have in your diet, the healthier it is.

Consider these nutritional facts of food:

0% of nutrients are lost in your food if you pick it fresh from the ground, and eat it right away.

25% of the nutrients will be destroyed if you rush that fresh food and process it by putting it into a pot and boiling it before you eat it, or cutting it up or doing anything to it before you eat it.

75% of the nutrients in your food will be destroyed if you process that food by freezing it.

92% of the nutrients will be destroyed if you process that food by canning that food.

But if you process that processed food further... if you freeze it... and boil it... or can it... and then after taking it out of a can: boil it again. It will have no nutritional value left whatsoever. It will just be a non-nutritional filler with zero nutrition. The only thing it will be good for: is to fill up your empty over-expanded stomach: to give you an illusion that you have actually eaten something that is good for you.

This is exactly what the food industry does. They pick a living vegetable, let it sit for hours or days until it is mostly dead not alive... and freeze it to death, or boil it to death. Then we buy it, and then boil it, or fry it, or bake it or heat it again before eating it.

How many nutritionally destructive processes does food go through: before it reaches our mouths? The processing it undergoes, the chemicals added, the time it has spent on a shelf, is completely discounted in measuring its nutrition. Huh?

Now the most popular way of heating food is by microwave. Which kills not just the little nutritional value left in it, but virtually all of it...

What state of continual nutritional crisis have modern humans forced their bodies into? How numbed, and unhealthy have civilized people become? Why do all industrialized societies have higher rates of cancer, heart disease, diabetes, tooth decay, and a whole host of illnesses that simply do not exist in non-industrialized societies? Are there any comparative evaluations done between different social norms, lifestyles, cultures... of different states of human health? No. All science, all medical research, all data, all facts, all diets, only compare the relative norms of how we live and what we eat inside one, isolated norm of one general normalized civilized lifestyle. There is no comparison between the norms of different lifestyles-culture-nations-income levels. There does not exist any norm outside of civilized lifestyles to compare them to and determine if any other way of living is better. People come up with different conclusions since whatever particular norm they look at is looked at in a different context: which are never compared. Making it impossible to evaluate anything since there is no universalized context for that norm to be placed into.

Until measurements were identicalized in England: the measurement of an inch was the length of your own thumb. No thumb is the same length. Their size and length vary enormously. Until there is a genetic universal context of health to use generally, so health can be relatively measured on a general basis... every medical assumption so far is open to doubt. One fact is generally true. The cheaper the food, the less it has been processed, the fresher it is, the shorter time it takes to go from the tree or from the earth into your mouth: the healthier it is for you, and the better it tastes.

This fact is continually being re-discovered by consumers... and buried and hidden by producers and sellers. This creates a farce of products and food becoming so over-processed; they are so toxic, and so unhealthy that the consumers stop buying them. Then the producers add natural ingredients that are supposed to be pure, or natural... or simply lying labels that scream out: 'All Natural'. Then you get high-priced specialty stores that sell only natural products... that are supposed to be less processed than the usual ones. But... are more expensive because they are not produced on a big enough mass production plant, and not geared for the mass consumer. Then you get stores selling unprocessed whole grains for thousands of times more to the consumer; than the mass producers buy it from the farmers. So even unprocessed food becomes corrupted by the desire for profit and the selling points of exclusivity. The entire capitalistic marketplace is rigged to prevent the consumer from buying anything that is both cheap and healthy.

Go to a cheap, small store; and you will find healthier food than if you go to a large expensive store. Only... it does not have a fancy package. It is not wrapped three times in cellophane and plastic. It is not attractively presented. It has not been processed by countless decontamination methods that are supposed to insure it's germ-free quality and antiseptic cleanliness. And it does not have as many preservatives. But it is more nutritious, better for you, and healthier... Gee, how 'bout that?

Consumers have been brainwashed to fear all contamination from anything coming from the Earth. We have been brainwashed into believing that Earth (soil) is dirty, and full of germs... Rather... it is we who are full of contaminants and germs: not the Earth. Consumers turn up their noses if there is the slightest blemish on anything. Everything has to be perfect, perfectly clean, perfectly wrapped, perfectly processed and perfectly safe. Natural unprocessed food is not perfect or perfectly safe. But it is healthier, more nutritious and cheaper. This goes against the grain of affluent consumers buying only affluent food from affluent stores. Rather than be déclassé: affluent consumers mostly avoid going to poor neighborhoods and shopping in the small stores where food is actually cheaper and healthier. Supermarkets throw out blemished fruit and vegetables by the ton each day... food that is perfectly good to eat. All to satisfy the consumer's spoiled pickiness for some exclusive idea of ultimate perfection and safety, and the paranoia about germs, and the obsession with antiseptic cleanliness.

Any food with the slightest superficial blemish is not eaten. The food we eat must be superficially perfect. Has any human ever tried to live up to the same standard of superficial perfection they demand of their own food? What if imperfect, fat, rotten, blemished human bodies do not need to eat food that is superficially perfect? What fucking difference does this make? None whatsoever.

The obsession over perfection, image and appearance has made nearly all consumer preferences and choices irrational and wasteful. Clothes are constantly thrown out by the ton each year because there is some blemish on them. All kinds of food... every consumer product imaginable; is thrown away, if there is any slight blemish. That is exactly what the producers and sellers want the public to do: throw away more, so they can consume more, so the producers and sellers can make more profit from you. So they push the ideas of perfection to the most insane degree possible in every sly way possible.

For instance... the less processed any soap is, the better it is, the cheaper it is, and the longer it lasts. Most ordinary soaps are far better than any expensive, specialized shaving cream ever made: because they have more emollients and lubricants in them. But do any affluent people men use ordinary soap to shave with? No. In fact: they do not even think of using ordinary soap.

The entire idea of shaving cream goes back to the Middle Ages; when the thicker the lather of a soap; the better it was considered to be. When actually it is the complete opposite. The more bubbles a soap creates: the less effective it is. People tried to make a soap producing the thickest lather possible as a class statement, like eating white bread instead of black bread... when black bread is ten times more nutritious than white bread.

The superstition people still hold today: is that the lather, the air bubbles... is the key to holding in the moisture when the beard is wet, and lubricating the razor so it could cut the beard more smoothly. Which is total crap. Until people started making soap specifically for shaving that produced a lather so thick; it was like whipped cream.

Since then: soaps for washing have improved enormously. But they do not have the incredibly thick lather that the specialized shaving soaps have, so they were not used for shaving. Over time; the shaving soaps became nothing but pure lather... with none of the emollients and lubricants that ordinary washing soaps have, until they became so full of weird chemicals that they needed to add an emulsifier; and it could only be turned into lather under pressure. That created the insanity of all people who shaved, having to buy shaving cream in cans of compressed air... then they further toxified the shaving cream either with an emulsifier that expanded outside the can on contact with air, with only a slight amount of compressed air inside the can to spurt out the gel... or when it was rubbed on the skin, or both. Now people buy soap that is supposed to be made out of oatmeal. This is another consumer lie. Consumer preferences and buying habits are full of cultural superstitions and old wives-tales, and irrationalities such as the near universal buying of shaving cream, when ordinary soap is much better.

There a few ordinary household products like Vinegar and Ammonia, and Cream of Tartar, and Hydrogen Peroxide: that when mixed in the right proportions, are far better than all of the thousands of toxic, destructive specialized cleaning products that flood the market. But do consumers try to educate themselves about this? No. They buy things off the shelf because it is easier... period. The entire farce of consumer products and what is actually good for you, and actually healthy for you is a rigged, corrupt, lying pathetic joke. If people bothered to educate themselves about nutrition, chemicals and biology... they would not but 99% of the crap they buy now.

Facts cannot change consumer buying habits, or consumer dietary habits. Unless the conditions of human existence change, unless the awareness of consumers change. The basic condition which is responsible for our buying habits and dietary practices is: civilization.

Why is the richest Nation in the world: America, also the most overweight and out-of-shape? People can easily be trained in self-healing techniques. Guidelines to healthier lifestyles, diets, exercise programs, books, are a huge profitable industry in America. But the general public is getting even more unfit. Why? Because in civilization, your tool-health, your ability to function as a tool is far more important than your biological health; never mind your emotional, mental, and spiritual health. The focus of civilization has never been on the priority of human well-being. As our population increases and accumulates; so does the number of illnesses and diseases we are afflicted with. The basic truth is; that people would be healthier, less sick, if they did not over-accumulate or over-eat, or over-work, or watch too much TV, or be on the computer too long, or play video-games too long, or drive too many hours commuting, or eat too much pizza. All excess is unhealthy. Only... the excesses of the affluent are a hundred times more unhealthy than the excesses of the poor.

It has been proven over and over again: the secret of all health and happiness lies in simplicity. A simple diet, a simple lifestyle. Moderation, balance and diversity. Moderation simply means avoiding any gross imbalance. But civilization's tendencies are the exact opposite: it seeks to put more and more chemical-organic processing and manipulation into the production of food. And the more any food is processed, the more chemicals are added to it; the more unhealthy it becomes. By giving people a huge diversity of processed foods, by making fast food easier to prepare, easier to eat: nearly all natural unprocessed food is slowly squeezed out of our diet.

If people ate Food that is fresh. Food that is not processed, or contaminated with artificial chemicals. Food that is not frozen, or boiled, or fried, or baked, or roasted, or broiled, or micro-waved. Food that is not minced, or diced, or crushed, or cut up, or dried, or salted, or fermented, or pickled, or canned, or sweetened, or preserved. Food that is not transported, allowed to sit, allowed to decompose. Food that is not polluted with hundreds of trace elements that are poisonous. If people ate Food that is fresh, pure, is alive, and nutritious, and good. Then you would be amazed at how many diseases and ailments, and sicknesses, and illnesses, and health problems, and mental-emotional problems and cancers, and tumors would literally disappear from existence. Don't take my word for it. Take any Cancer patient, and put them on a strict diet of Pure Fresh Food and watch what happens.

When cooked, or processed food is chewed even slightly: it turns into guck. The guckier it is, the better... the faster it turns into guck in your mouth: the better. What are the most popular fast foods? The ones that when they are chewed become the guckiest. Pizza and Hamburgers. In fact, Pizza is the world's number-one fast food: simply because it is almost pure guck. In most modern, industrialized nations today, infants are not weaned on natural food at all, but on all kinds of processed, and pureed stuff. Babies have been so programmed from birth to eat only pureed and processed food: that if any food does not turn into guck inside their mouths: they spit it out.

This only further reinforces the insanity of giving people only what they like and not what is healthy for them. Because they assume that a baby knows more about nutrition than an adult does. So after the baby is brainwashed by the food it is forced to eat... then the parents think that their instant aversion to anything they have not been accustomed-to, must be 'instinctive'... and followed religiously. This gives consumer babies a lifetime aversion to anything that is not processed or cooked; which in turn leads to a whole host of health problems, ailments, illnesses and diseases. However, if an infant gets used to chewing on tough substances every day, its gums become desensitized to pressure. As a result: their teething becomes a relatively painless experience. Also, by biting down hard and chewing on things, their teeth can align themselves properly at this crucial stage. One reason why so many people need braces later on, is simply because they never ate natural unprocessed food as infants.

Try a comparison test with any baby. Give that baby a choice between fresh peas picked from the garden, and pureed peas in a can. See which one they prefer. That is... before you totally brainwash them into becoming used to eating only pureed food by giving them nothing to eat but pure guck.

Try a simple performance test with any professional athlete. Measure their performance on a diet of junk food... and then on a diet of unprocessed food. Then measure their performance on a diet of whole unprocessed food where not one single food is cut-up, but each food is eaten whole, as-is... exactly as it is grown and found in Nature. And compare and evaluate the three performances on these three different diets.

Nearly every human ailment: from obesity, to diabetes, from bad breath to ulcers... can be traced to the eating of processed food. Colon cancer comes from a lifetime of eating food that our intestines were never designed to digest. Without any roughage, this food creates gases, which force our intestines to bulge out. These bulges then become permanent pockets of trapped, undigested food. This begins to rot, producing inflamed cysts; which can become cancerous.

Why do all humans love crushing living herbs and spices, and adding them to their food? Because their taste buds have become de-sensitized. They the want flavor to be more intense.

If you study civilized eating habits, you will see how food has steadily become more chemicalized and processed. More powerfully drugged foods are necessary for increasingly, brutalized conditions. All addictive substances gained popularity and mass acceptance only after being used for soldiers-warriors who needed chemical courage, or chemical energy to function as fighters, and killers. Ancient tribes brewed their concoctions and gave them to their warriors just before battle to give them artificial chemical courage. This practice has not changed. The British Navy gained world dominance by feeding all of it sailors and officers on a steady diet of rum, tobacco and buggery. World War One soldiers fought and died by living on a diet of tobacco, alcohol, coffee, tea and chocolate. World War Two soldiers did the same with added things like Benzedrine, soft drinks, K-rations, and every addictive substance they could get their hands on including hashish, marijuana, cocaine, opium, and a host of pills called uppers or downers. Even in middle of combat: the allied soldiers threw away their K-rations every chance they got. The shit tasted so horrible, it had no nutrition, and made the soldiers so sick that they died from it. Until the government learned to improve the quality of the mass-produced chemicalized poison called food that they fed their killers with.

The history of civilized food is a story of how civilized humans needed food that is more convenient: so they could work longer. Needing better preservatives. Needing more drugged foods to fill up the ever-increasing emptiness of civilized existence. All kinds of chemicals were used in processing food so it would last longer. One of the earliest is vinegar. Vinegar is made from sour grapes. Vinegar was created from rotting wine. If wine is allowed to ferment: turns into vinegar. It was used in many ways: both as a spice and as a preservative. It was used by the poorest people. The poor took the leftovers of the rich. They used the run-off sour grapes to make a second mash from it that fermented too long.

They found that they had a left-over product that to their surprise was healthy, and preserved food. Then instead of drying, smoking or vinegar: salt was used to preserve food. Then it was spices used for the jaded palates of the rich. Then spices were used to preserve food. Then spices were mass-produced for the lower classes. Then alcohol was used to preserve food. The history of food: is a history of rot, privilege and accumulation. It is a history of humans copying the worst examples. It is a history of lower classes copying what the upper class eats.

The first human killers ate the flesh of their victims. Only those who killed animals: ate dead meat. The children and women were not allowed to eat it. They ate what they could find and gather. This is one reason why they were called hunter-gatherers. Each person had their own diet. But killers had higher status. They were respected, feared, worshipped. They became heads of their tribe. They set the worst example. They became addicted to eating dead meat. Everybody else became envious of their privilege. They wanted to eat dead meat also. Slowly: over thousands of years... this once-foul practice of killers eating the dead meat of their victims was equalized. Slowly.... Some women were allowed a little of this over-rich protein and over-rich fat source. Slowly dead meat became a staple in their diet. Slowly... over untold thousands of years: even children were allowed to eat it.

If you study the history of human food: you will find that it was always the most rotten and corrupt humans... who found the most rotten, corrupt and unhealthy food to eat... and tempted the rest, or fooled them into becoming equally corrupt and equally unhealthy and equally. Once human society became pyramidal: by its very social dynamic of human scum always reaching the top: the pyramidal apex of every tribe became inhabited by the most corrupt, weakest, sickest humans possible. Once the most rotten humans became heads of their societies: they found rotten food, which were as rotten as they were. Like attracts like.

Once this pyramidal dynamic became a universal cultural norm in all human cultures: then came one of the most cunning pyramidal dynamics of them all... the trickle-down effect. The headman gains power. He hides his power. It becomes a secret. This creates a mystique around him: the people around him become privileged. They develop their own cult. The dynamic of the accumulation of power stops all life energy from growing. Nothing is allowed to happen. Everything is controlled from the top down. The culture of the entire group stagnates; its energy stagnates, and separates. Just like rotting stagnating milk will spontaneously separate itself into curds and whey: the most rotten human scum separates itself from the body of liquid and sits on top.

Then.... Every rotten practice, every rotten ritual, every rotten thing this upper scum do and eat... becomes exclusive. The upper scum become jealous of their privileges. They look for and find any and every possible thing that will mark them as being special, apart, exclusive, better than the lower body of their society. They forbid the lower body to eat or drink what they eat and drink. They forbid the lower body to wear what they wear. They forbid the lower body to act like they act, or speak like they speak, or do what they do. Everything they do, everything they eat, and everything they drink: is regarded as super-special. The lower body of every human cult, culture, society, tribe, clan, etc: is systematically, gradually and unavoidably brainwashed, sold, inculcated and fooled to think... that what the top scum eat and drink... is da best! Stuff... da richest! Da most expensive! Da rarest! Da hardest to find! Stuff. Da mos' special stuff!

They do not know that it is actually the diet of the poorest and lowest: that is the healthiest. They have become programmed to think only in pyramidal-hierarchal ways and terms...

So... the result has been in the history of food: that the most royal, the most imperial most powerful humans on earth: throughout all human history: have been the ones who introduced the worst most poisonous, most rotten, most unhealthy food and drink into the human diet. How? Like attracts like. Rot attracts rot. Rot sucks on rot. Parasites sucking off the dead flesh of trees: becomes the favorite delicacy of the Pharaoh of Egypt. Because he lives by sucking off the dead flesh trade of human slaves between Ethiopia and Babylon. The Pharaoh discovers mushrooms and forbids the entire lower body of his Empire to eat them upon pain of death. Only the Imperial family is allowed to eat rotten parasites like mushrooms.

The lower body becomes envious. They steal out in secret and find them and eat them. Many die horrible deaths: since only 1/1,000th of all mushrooms are edible. The other 999 kinds are poisonous. The lower body does not know this. This makes the eating of wild mushrooms forbidden and mystically proves that only the Pharaoh can eat them without dying a horrible death from eating them... Then by accident: the right mushroom is eaten by the poor and they do not die. They create a peasant culture of eating rotting mushrooms to add diversity to their diet: especially since wild mushrooms are free, and not controlled by the Imperial state. Except by official edict forbidding it completely. This turns mushroom eating by the poor masses into a secret exclusive club. Other poor copy them. Mushroom eating becomes common throughout the entire world. Even though 999 kinds of mushrooms out of one thousand: have no nutritional value whatsoever. So: another drug-food is added to the list of human food.

Together with thousands of horrible toxic poisons.

Human civilization became a culture of poisoners. They poisoned each other by the boatloads, and by the villages and by the families. The discovery of poisonous mushrooms is not a natural addition to human food. The discovery of the one variety that was not poisonous by the Imperial court: was because they had already been poisoning each other for hundreds of years using this foul parasitic plant to kill each other... and by accident, found that one variety did NOT have the desired effect of killing whoever ate it when it was put into their food. They used poison mushrooms because this poison was tasteless, odorless and almost impossible to detect.

What is poison? Someone who tries to get a position by poisoning others. Poisoning the minds of others. Poisoning the hearts of others. Poisoning the stomachs and bodies of others: to get a higher position over others. Position is poison... Which is what has been going on inside the upper scum of human culture for 100,000 years. Destructively. Systematically. The result of this Imperial Egyptian upper class of human scum killing each other by using these poisonous plants 7,000 years ago? Today: the entire world eats mushrooms. Even though mushrooms have almost no nutritional value whatsoever. Their nutritional value is so slight: it is negligible. Why? They sprout fast. They are easy to use. They can be conveniently used as an effective poison; that kills without leaving any trace of just what killed you, but more to the point: it was a safe form of murder. It was done in secret. People died: and nobody knew that they had been poisoned, or that murder had been committed. It was a safe way to kill someone.

The same story happens with all the other poison foods and poison drink. The top scum accumulate grapes. The accumulated grapes rot. The rotten heads of society eat the rotten heads of the grapes, and then drink the poison called wine: and forbid the body of their culture to drink it. The top scum of each human culture decapitates the heads of grain, and crushes them between stone wheels, separating the nutritious chaff from the gluten, separating the starving poor from the gluttons and make white bread out of it. The remains are given to the poor lower body: and it is called black bread: and shunned and hated as a sign of lower class poverty. All European peasants worked and slaved to bring their healthy grains to the miller for hundreds of years: just so they could eat white bread, instead of the despised healthy black bread...

The same story happens with olives. It happens with rice. With potatoes. With every new poison the top scum find: with every new poison they are attracted to.... Because their culture is rotting more and more... and becoming more and more poisonous: they are naturally attracted to steadily more and more toxically poisonous drugs in food and drink form... in snuff form... in inhaling, in sprinkling them onto other poisonous foods. Until the entire human diet of civilization: becomes pure poison. Until what civilized humans eat and drink becomes so poisonous: their shit and urine becomes equally poisonous. Until their bodies become so poisonous they cannot be buried in shallow graves: because their dead rotting bodies kill the soil and roots of every green living thing... until humans are forced to bury their dead at least six feet under... so deep: that their dead bodies will not poison the grass roots growing on the surface over their graves.

The trickle-down effect of rotten rulers finding poisonous things to eat and that poison trickling down to the lower class is older than the 1st Pharaohs of Egypt. It is older than the first hunters

The upper scum of human society became brainwashed into thinking that whatever they did first or sate first or drank first... and trickled down to the lower body of human society... was good for the lower body: since they liked it. This is where the 'trickle-down' policy of Ronald Regan came from. This why the upper scum believe, and are thoroughly convinced that they have a good effect of the lower body of society. This is the rotten religion of the upper scum of all human societies.

Empires were built-on, and sustained by many kinds of drugged food, and drug-foods. The trading of food, food markets, food producers, for an increasingly large massed population; became a mass business of profit, to feed the masses. As cheaply and profitably as possible. Until they became food industries. Until they became chemical industries. Until they became poison industries. Until today all these industries manufacture poison.

Food became industrialized; all because of human overpopulation. All because of one-sided accumulation. All because of accumulating food. All because accumulating food rots. All because humans who accumulate power: become rotten. All because all rotten scum rises to the top. All because humans have been brainwashed to worship the upper scum of human society. All because the poison of this upper scum trickled down to the body of human society, and slowly and systematically... has poisoned human food into becoming such pure, pure poison... humans are dying from poison they eat. The spice trade. The sugar trade. The alcohol trade. The tea trade. The coffee trade. The addiction to fat. The addiction to salt. The addiction to sugar. All buttressed by agricultural slavery, trade, mass consumption, mass addiction and the plantation system, the trade in human slaves, colonization, and Empire building. Corporate capitalism. All these things were born from the wealth that these drug-foods created and the centralization of that wealth.

The British Empire did not really take off, until the lower classes of England started drinking tea instead alcohol. Before this: Alcohol was the main drug of the poor. At that time: only the rich could afford processed cane sugar and tea. In Europe: the normalization of alcoholic wines and liquors created Nations of drunkards, who beat and neglected their children, and neglected their work also. It produced drunk workers; who were unreliable, did shoddy work and produced shoddy products.

Then the English elite decided to convert the lower classes to a more civilized drug-food. Substituting tea laced heavily with sugar, and boiling hot rum or alcohol. This changed a bare piece of bread and cheese into a banquet. With hundreds more calories, and enough artificial sugar-energy to work longer, harder, and more importantly: sober. Hundreds of tea gardens were built. Where the lower classes could enjoy this new high-class beverage in high-class surroundings... and feel as if they were cultured and affluent and high-class also. Unlike alcohol: Tea was allowed to be drunk by children... less addictive than alcohol: it was also less socially destructive.

Why was this one of the worst drugs the upper heads of the British Empire discovered? Because Tea contains caffeine. It gives you a false feeling of emotion. It gives you false emotions. It disconnects you from all of your true emotions. You become completely emotionally disconnected from your emotions. Your head becomes detached from your body. You live in your head. You treat your body like a machine. You have no sensitivity to your heart or lungs or body. This trickle-down effect. This effect of the upper heads of the British Empire discovering this amazing new drug... and then spreading this new drug freely to the masses of Britain poisoned the health of British workers so badly they have never recovered from it.

Now Americans are doing the same thing with their workers. Substituting the healthier food-drug of coffee and setting up thousands of coffee-gardens all over the Nation... improving the work output, making people work longer and harder than they ever did before... Mentally: not physically. It is the perfect modern food-beverage for the modern computer age of office workers.

What is the coffee bean? It is a coffin. A green mummy-cocooned bean: roasted until it is black and dead inside. It gives the cocooned-reflective energy of a completely insular vibration. It is made for people who live insularly inside their brains. It makes all of your body and brain energy vibrate faster... insularly. It prevents your body and your mind from relaxing into its normal cycles. It destroys all emotional energy: by disconnecting your body and your brain from any emotional input. You become an emotionally numb mental machine... vibrating faster inside your brain, your thoughts bouncing around reflectively faster... making you crazed-distracted-busy-energetically active. Completely disconnected from your emotions.

The coffin bean, or coffee bean; has come into its own as the number one addictive drug for humans who are addicted to mental insularity and distraction. If you don't think it is addictive: try to get anyone to stop drinking it. If they do: their entire personality will change. They will go into withdrawal symptoms. They will find some other drugs or defense to fill the void of drinking coffee. Coffee eats up tons of needed nutrients in your body. It keeps you continually on the verge of exhaustion. It is a crisis drug. It is a stress drug: for people addicted to stress. It is a chemical symptom of social stress in human cultures. People feel more alive when they drink it. It makes you feel more alive. It makes you feel as if you are living. It makes you nervous. It gives you an artificial feeling of nervous anxiety. It replaces actual emotional anxiety and mental anxiety with a drugged anxiety that is a fake form of intensified mental awareness.

Try eating a coffee bean that has not been roasted. It will give you so much fucking energy you will not know what to do with it. Green coffee beans are too healing for civilized people to eat. We have to roast it dead first. Until the energy becomes enraged and black and evil. Then the energy suits people just fine.

What did drinking tea; do to the health of the English when it was first introduced and wed with the food-drug known as processed sugar? Which is not a food; it is an organic chemical. This turned the British people into weakened, pale, fat, sallow complexioned idiots: who became addicted to the worst non-nutritious junk, and drug foods they could fill their empty lives and souls and bellies with. It addicted them to all kinds of drug-foods; laced with artificially added sugars. Processed sugar; which had once been an expensive, rare commodity; used only by the rich upper heads of the British Empire, and kept in expensive locked cabinets in the parlor... as a status symbol of conspicuous, over-abundant wealth... became a drug so much in demand, it became so cheap, that other new staple drug-foods were introduced for the masses. Jams, jellies, and preserved fruits in jars and cans. All laced and filled with this molecular chemical that is not food.

The thousands of tons of this drug-food fueled the Caribbean slave trade, and the inhumanity of the Plantation system, and the colonization and oppression of the Caribbean Islands... Just as once rare, and expensive tea from India became so much in demand in England: that it fueled the colonization, enslavement and industrial slavery of all of India. Drug-foods created corporate plantations, industrial farming and industrial slavery. So did Cotton. Once expensive cotton garments and sheets became so much in demand: that it fueled the explosion of cotton mills, cotton presses, cotton factories, sweat shops and factories. Steam engines replaced water wheels. Railroads replaced canals. Machines exploded onto the scene and multiplied, and thrived.

The technology of preserving mass produced foods was improved. Suddenly many foods that were never available before in mass quantities: were available everywhere in stores. Preserved by the cheap sugar that was supplied by the slave plantations of the Caribbean. Lower class children that came home to an empty house with their parents working late in the new factories: could slather preserves called jam onto a piece of bread and have an instant meal that did not require any cooking. As a result, the gross national production of English factories, farms and mill exploded. England became a Nation of tea drinkers, jam users and sugar addicts. Much like America today becoming a Nation of coffee drinkers, pizza eaters, hamburger eaters and processed-packaged food addicts.

Then along came commercial canning ... Allowing more kinds of foods to be mass-processed, and mass distributed to the growing mass of overpopulation called modern civilization. Allowing even more kinds of foods to be preserved: by cooking them in such intense heat: the food did not rot or decompose as fast as fresh food did. We see this as a human good; when it is a pure evil. If the techniques for mass producing and processing food had not been invented in the first place: there would not be 7 billion humans overpopulating and polluting the Earth today.

Canned food was faster and more convenient. Even less time was needed to prepare it. It gave people even more time to work as wage slaves. What is not mentioned... is that the intense heat of canning; kills most of the living ingredients in all canned food; and destroys most of its nutritional value.

What were the drug foods that Europe used and exported until all the world now uses them as staple drug foods? Wheat, grains, butter, oil, fat, sugar, salt, eggs, milk, cheese, bread, meat, fish. In short: whatever could be mass-produced, or mass-picked, or mass-caught and is processed so it can be preserved. If you only ate these staple foods: you would quickly grow fat, become sickly and die in short order.

Sugar consumption has risen steadily from the 1700's up to the present and it is still rising. People are eating more and more sweets today than ever before.

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

898

As a general overview of how humans have used food in the last few hundred years:

The Plantation System.
Industrial farm Slavery
Industrial factory Slavery
(Mass slavery, and mass slave trading-selling-buying; for profit.)
Massive overpopulations creating Mass markets
Corporations.
The Growth of Corporate Profits and Power.
The birth and sustaining of Empires by corporate entities.
Colonialism.
International Banking and Trade....

This is only one general dynamic of how human slavery, human enslavement, human desensitization, dehumanization of human health, systematic poisoning of the human diet, and systematic destruction of human health that can be traced to how humans dehumanized their own food into identicalized staples of rice, tobacco, coffee, sugar, chocolate, salt, spices, potatoes, wheat, barley, alcohol, rum, wine, pasta, bread, etc. By reducing food to a few, boring, identical products. By cutting food up so fine... grinding food so small: that it loses all of its uniqueness. The history of how humans profited from food, manipulated it and used it to their advantage is one of the staple roots of civilization's growth and development of human corruption.

How did civilized food become unhealthy? How did they become poisonous drugs... deadening our bodies and senses; instead of nourishing us and giving us energy?

The answer is glaringly obvious. Our food became unhealthy when we became greedy and tried to accumulate too much of it for too long. It began to rot. By accumulating grain until it began decomposing into a rotten stinking poisonous mush: we discovered grain alcohol. Africans still make beer from bananas that have been kept too long. You can create an alcoholic poisonous food simply by not throwing out the bananas you buy. They will turn black: the color of death. As long as you eat the banana when it is still green: it will give you energy. You will not need much of it to have the energy you need. If you wait until it is yellow: you are eating a half-rotted fruit that is mostly sugar. If you wait until it is completely black as leaking pus from its skin... you will have a semi-alcoholic completely rotted, poisonous mush that is not good for you to eat.

Drug beverages and drug foods were developed, found, discovered and used because humans tried to be too greedy. They tried all sorts of ways to preserve food. The result was, and still is unhealthy for you and poisonous to your system.

Did humans for 12,000 years kill animals and eat meat because they believed they needed animal protein to stay healthy? Did they have any concept of the word: diet? Did they eat anything because it was nutritionally good for them?

No.

But today: we have hallowed and sanctified what human idiots ate for thousands of years and created dietary bibles that sanctify the shit they ate even when it has been scientifically proven thousand of times in thousands of scientific studies that the shit they ate is not good for you at all. The 12,000 year-old tradition and belief that eating dead meat of dead animals and dead fish is good for you is still religiously believed-in by nearly all humans regardless of all the scientific studies and facts that contradict this completely. Food was and still is used and eaten as a symbol of class: period. People still go to expensive restaurants as a way to state how wealthy and affluent they are: no matter how unhealthy or nutritionally bad for you the shit they serve may be. What humans eat has nothing to do with nutrition, or truth, or common sense, or practicality, or intelligence.

The entire meat and fish industry of the world exists only because ignorant humans who did not know what was good for them; killed and ate dead meat until they became addicted to it as a drug food that killed and desensitized them to their own pain. There is no nutritional, or practical, or sane reason humans should eat dead, killed animals period. Except as a source of self gratification. Except the fact that we can kill animals and fish, and get away with it. The entire civilized human world could eat ten times less food and become ten times more healthy... if we ate food intelligently. The entire world of humans could go cold turkey; and stop eating animal and fish protein tomorrow. And become healthier, more wealthy, feel better, have more energy. Period.

BUT... doing this would bring up too much pain in humans. It would bring up the fact that they are bored; too painfully. All of the desensitized rage, pain, anger, fear, hate, sadness, loneliness, etc; that staple foods, especially meat and fish manage to deaden, would explode. The rich elite would not be able to control the masses by drugging them anymore. They would not be able to drug themselves and deaden themselves by eating dead animals and dead fish anymore. People would actually feel their pain more.

Now.... We can't have that now: can we? We need staple drug foods; so we can remain as dead, and desensitized and as stupid as possible. Otherwise: we might start feeling that something was wrong with our lives. We might start doing something about this pervading, intangible wrongness. We need to eat dead meat, and staple drug foods to stay civilized.

Look at the history of one of the worst of all staple foods: Corn.

How did it ever even become domesticated in the first place? Because it was easily portable. A human walking ape could strip off one ear of corn, and chew only on as many kernels as it needed. And keep on walking until all the kernels were eaten. And then throw away the empty useless husk. What did that do? It developed the idea of throwing away something after you were finished with it. Leaving an empty useless husk with all the kernels stripped from it. It created a litter problem. Throwing away and leaving behind something no other animal wanted or could use. It was a naturally portable packaged food that did not go bad, or spoil with time. Each kernel is sealed in a transparent wrapping of cellulose: much like the plastic wrap that affluent people use today. Apart from the pomegranate: it is the most segmented food on Earth. In order for it to even be digested properly so its nutrients can be released properly into the human body: it must be eaten with other staple foods like beans or squash. It lacks certain key nutrients like niacin that need to be added to it before its own nutrients can be properly digested by the human body. The indigenous American natives solved this problem by mixing their corn the ashes from a fire, or lime or alkali ...to replace the phosphates, calcium and other nutrients that corn steals from the body to digest itself in the human body. Corn replaced millet as a staple crop after it was discovered in the New World and brought back to Europe, and destroyed the American colonist's diet even worse. Why? Because it could be more easily preserved than millet. You can eat it fresh, or dried. It lasts longer than other staple crops. It doesn't go bad.

Unlike other domesticated plants, corn cannot grow in the wild. It depends on humans to be planted and tended, and fertilized, and weeded, and watered regularly. It has the longest growing season of all human food plants. It is more labor intensive. It takes more work to raise corn than any other crop. And on top of all this: it is the most non-nutritious food humans can eat. Any other staple food has more nutrients and vitamins than corn.

We feed domesticated animals more corn, than any other staple food because governments subsidize their farmers to grow staple crops, and corn has more artificial uses than any other staple crop. Modern humans eat more kinds of food made from corn, than any other staple crop.

Why is it so popular in America? Thousand of years ago, corn was an integral part of Mayan culture. It has been used as a staple crop in the Americas almost as long as wheat and rye has in Asia and Europe. The first European colonists were saved from starvation time and time again by finding hidden hoardings of Indian corn. They were naturally attracted to the one thing greedy Indians hoarded in secret because they were so greedy. They found it naturally. Just as later: when the level of American settlers greed increased, they naturally found Gold. North American Indigenous tribes saved corn for the long winter months as a last resort in case they began starving: and the starving whites were always given corn when they came begging for food at their door. What the white man did not know was that the Indians were giving them the worst thing possible for a starving population. They were giving them what they themselves did not want and could not eat, and could not digest. It was a last resort, worst option, crisis food.

And so, like in many other instances, the worst inedible shit of one culture became the most prized delicacy of another. Simply because the European diet was already so lacking in any nutrition, so horribly unhealthy, and so toxic: that they never noticed that corn was even worse for them than the other European staples they had imported and tried to grow. . Out of thousands of instances when the natives gave them nothing: the one time love and generosity was given to them: it made such a deep impression on them: they made it into a National Holiday. That is how powerful the cultural memory of the exception to their own culture of stinginess and selfishness was.

Corn came to represent giving to these early settlers just because of one single act of generosity. They brought it to barn raisings and to festive occasions as a gift denoting the intent of generosity. Little did they know that their attempt at hypocrisy in these occasions had already been poisoned by the hypocritical generosity of the indigenous Americans who had given it to them as a poison gift. Hoping they choked on it and died.

Corn has been responsible for spreading the most destructive uses of artificial agriculture on Earth. It has been used as an excuse for slash-and-burn farming, and slash-and-burn cattle raising. Penning livestock, sheep. Pigs, all manner of animals in unnatural penned prisons where they sickened and died while being force fed this unnatural food they were never meant to eat. So the animals were butchered as early as possible before the actual effect of the poison food could show up after the adolescent growth spurt. This led to humans eating meat that made them even sicker than before. People began to die from fresh-killed meat that was not supposedly diseased in any way. This led to the practice of aging meat for two weeks before eating it. This made the meat so non-nutritious, so dead and so useless, that it became merely a stomach-filler. And clogged the colon, which has now led to colon cancer in epic proportions.

Ask yourself: if a freshly killed animal's meat will make you sick, but leaving it to wither and dry and rot for two weeks does not make you sick: how good is eating this shit for you in the first place? How many other kinds of food are poisonous to you if you eat it fresh? Compared to letting it sit for two weeks. Most food that is good for you: if you let it sit for two weeks is so rotten that it is inedible. But corn is almost pure sugar. It is almost a pure carbohydrate. With nothing else in it that is any good for human stomachs. Of all the plant sugars: corn sucrose is the hardest to digest, and the worst for you. Yet modern food industry has found that corn syrup is even sweeter than pure cane sugar. Cane sugar was another unnatural staple crop used as a pure drug in the 1900's to destroy human nutrition and health. Europeans became so addicted to its sweetness that it became regarded as a necessary staple, not a refined luxury sampled slightly only once a year as it first had been. But once corn syrup was found to be even sweeter than cane sugar: the entire world switched to using it inside processed food.

Corn, and corn syrup: has a shelf-life of over a thousand years. That is because it is one of the deadest, worst foods ever invented by man. Anthropologists have found dried kernels of it hundreds of years old and still 'useable'.

Corn is directly attributable to the fattening of the American Diet. It is used in everything. Form glue, to buttons, to starch, to matches, to charcoal, to tooth paste, to detergent, to instant coffee. Simply because it preserves things so well. Most consumer packages are made with it. It is directly attributable to the huge increase in dental decay and gum disease. It drives the wheel of modern economy. Without corn almost: every modern process in factories would grind to a halt. It is responsible for addicting modern humans to a diet of meat instead of vegetables. Because it normalized human digestive systems into such a low absorption level; that eating anything more nutritious merely went through peoples intestines like so much water. So to even survive: humans were forced to eating foods so rich in protein that even though that protein was rotten and dead... some of it managed to find its way into the organic processes of the human organs and kept human bodies barely functioning. It is fed to 85% of the world's domestic animals. Most meat and milk are part-corn. Making those two staples even less nutritious than they ever were before.

Corn has the most concentrated yield of food-per-ton by the acre than any other staple crop. Another huge reason why our modern agricultural culture based upon greed and machinery grows more of it than any other staple crop. It is a pure death crop. Left alone it would go extinct by itself. It represents the huge macho phallic power of male patriarchal human civilized society. It represented human fertility to the Indigenous Americans. It was used as an aphrodisiac because of its destructive addictive artificial sweetness. All sorts of Mystical powers were attributed to it. All sorts of legends and myths were linked to it. Originally it was a death plant. Completely black in color. Until it began to be artificially maintained. Then its kernels turned red and blue and black... in various DNA codes of poisoned, mutated, watered down death. Then the Modern Europeans and Americans got hold of it, and now these mutated plants have kernels that are completely yellow. An even worse death color. The color of Gold. The color of cowardice. The color of yellow pus. The color of pure rot.

The symbiotic uses of this death plant by a death species... how this plant has magnified and played upon the corruption of humans to corrupt them even worse could fill a thousand books. Corn is now one of the most cared-for, one of the most intensely farmed and the most raised domestic plants on Earth. Each kernel of corn looks so identical to all the others that they cannot be told apart. Today; there are more corn plants growing on Earth than there are humans growing on Earth. The Corn plant has triumphed; and found a symbiotic species that dotes on it and cares for it... Better than its own children.

Corn is better cared-for than any other domestic plant: except maybe rice. Rice is another labor intensive crop designed to enslave humans into raising it and breaking their backs growing and harvesting it. Both rice and corn have made slaves out of humans taking care of them. Both are responsible for corrupting humans into growing mass populations of millions and billions... just to satisfy the mass instinct of domestic staple crops and their need to multiply into the millions and billions. Humans did not eat staple crops for 100,000 years. They did not need them. We still don't need them.

The excuse for raising corn to eat is that it tastes good. That is the biggest lie. Corn is the blandest, most unappetizing shit ever grown. But it is overly sweet. Just like beetroots are sickeningly sweet, red, and taste like blood. Corn is sweet and tastes like the pus of a rotting flesh wound. When cooked, it turns into a glutinous guck. When eaten: it combines the pleasure of crushing each kernel into an instant guckiness, with its sweetness.

Why was corn eaten? Because of its artificial sweetness. Corn is addictive. When wild animals get into a corn patch: they go crazy. They start tearing down and eating the ripe corn cobs, and leaving them uneaten, and ripping more cobs off the stalks. From raccoons to deer: the effect of eating corn is addictive. You can't get enough of it, you can't stop eating. Why was corn picked out in the first place? Corn is the symbol of female fertility. Hunter-gatherer societies with males away hunting and the women gathering, and finding this phallus that needs no lubricant. Smooth, yet knobby. It is obviously phallic in shape. Why wasn't corn a symbol of male fertility? What purpose do you think it was used for originally? Do you think a girl could get an orgasm from using it? How obvious can you get. Why did the first human pick corn to eat? Why did he choose corn? The answer is obvious. Corn is segmented. Each kernel, each segment of corn; seems almost identical to the others. To an animal using tools, to a human; brainwashed into using tools to separate, and segment things... so they look almost identical to each other: they instantly recognized that kind of identity.

Why did corn become so popular with stone-age humans? To a human bead-maker who spent his life making thousands of beads that look almost identical to each other, what surprise is it, that upon finding a plant which produced hundreds of identical-looking kernels that look almost exactly like the beads they were making; that they should take this plant and save its kernels? A bead-making plant? A plant that makes beads? So they could accumulate more beads without having to make them individually by hand? Case closed.

Why is the corn kernel almost identical to the billions of 'beads' humans made 36,000 years ago? What came first? The making of beads, or the growing of corn? How could a plant mimic the product of human tool making so closely? They are exactly the same size and shape. The only difference between a corn kernel and a 40,000 yr-old mass-produced bead made by a human: is the hole in the bead and its color.

Food was never designed to be eaten for the purpose of pure self-gratification at all. That idea is a civilized corruption. There is a crucial difference between what tastes good, and what is good for you. If you bother to educate yourself about which foods are actually good for you, you will find that Natural Food follows the same dynamic balance of hardship and ease that all Nature follows. Some food will taste good, and some will not. Nor is food supposed to be used as a drug. But the simple fact that all of us possess a huge amount of unprocessed Psychobiologic Pain within our bodies, minds; hearts. lungs and souls... because we have not learned how to digest and process our painful, traumatic experiences. Because we need to stuff down our pain in any way possible. Food is unavoidably used not as a source of energy to become as healthy as possible; but as a drug, to fill up our inner emptiness, to numb our pain with, and desensitize us.

Why do we eat food? We eat it to comfort ourselves. We do not eat it for energy. We eat it to fill up the emptiness we feel inside. Food is used as a replacement for the missing love and comfort we lack in our lives. Food is artificial comfort. Civilization is a system of artificial comfort. It is an artificial eco-system. The only food we eat is comfort food. We do not eat uncomfortable food. We do not eat the food that helps us grow up to be strong, vibrant and healthy. If food was used as a source of energy instead of artificial comfort, we would not be brainwashed into consuming the drugs, the artificial comfort, feel-good crap we eat. This can only change when humans comfort and love each other naturally instead of unnaturally. Sitting down to eat comfort food with other people is not a form of love or comfort: it is a replacement for human touching and comfort and human love. When you are loved and comforted naturally, by holding and cuddling the ones you love every night for 8 hours. When you touch and comfort all living creatures, and let them touch and comfort you in return, you will feel so good and warm and filled with goodness and happiness inside that you will not need to eat anything. You will not need to eat at all. This is what Jesus discovered, in the last supper with his disciples. He had found that by touching other people and letting them touch him; he had lost all need to eat food and drink wine. It was to have been the last supper his disciples ate food. It was the last time they would need to eat food. His disciples didn't like what he told them. They began arguing with him and each other: something they had never done before. As a result of his attempt to heal the inner emptiness of his disciples: they decided to get rid of him.

Health, Food and Medicine

The steady increase of all human overpopulations around the world forced people to find better ways to mass-produce more food. And better ways to preserve that food. As a result: civilized foods became more and more preserved. More and more dead. Less and less nutritious. More and more chemicalized. More and more drugged. There is no biological reason for the consumption of sugar. There are no sane, rational biological reasons for most of the foods we eat, or how we prepare them, or why we process them. Period. Every informed chef on the world will admit this. And laugh about it. Because all humans on earth are addicted to gratifying themselves by eating drug foods. There is no human who is not guilty of this.

The history of civilized food is a history of drug addiction. The history of the spice trade is a perfect example of a drug trade. Europeans discovered new drugs that grew in the East which they could add to the drugs they already used. They discovered new drugs that they became addicted to. Spices are drugs. Humans have been drugging themselves with anything they can find for thousands of years. The spice trade is an example of what happens when an entire continent wants to use drugs grown on the other side of the earth. The fortunes, the fates and policies of European kingdoms and Empires were determined by who got to the drugs first, who sold them and which country used them. The spice trade was fought over by European Empires for hundreds of years because spices are a drug. Until the trade became so cheap and so common: it was no longer used as a sign of status. Until everybody was using them.

So... if all humans do it: why then it must be normal. It must be good. It must be natural. It must be unquestioned. It must be sacred. It must be preserved. That's what we usually eat. What's the big deal? Oh. Destroying forests and grasslands and farmlands by raising animals and killing them so we can eat dead meat. Destroying the entire eco-systems of the oceans and the continents so we can keep on killing and eating dead fish and dead animals. What's the big fuss? Oh. 99.9% of all the fish in all the oceans have already been killed off. Oh. In 30 years: all the oceans of the world will become dead deserts with no fish at all. But there are plenty of fish in the supermarket! Nobody told ME that most of the fish in the oceans are gone. I mean: if the fishing industry knew this: they'd tell us: wouldn't they? Oh. The statistical facts have already been published. People just don't want to hear the unpleasant truth. Oops. Mass starvation and mass death: guaranteed. Billions of humans will be starving and dying. But hey! I'm not starving yet. So never mind about boring statistics. Statistics mean nothing. So far: so good!

Civilization has now, spawned a proliferation of artificial food substances, which have been modified all the way down to the molecular level. Each year in hundreds of chemical laboratories; new, ever-more poisonous chemicals are being created by the thousands. And most are highly poisonous in their own right. Only recently are studies now showing that the countless toxic residues found in all processed food are responsible for most of the modern illnesses suffered by industrialized societies who eat mass produced processed food.

The reason these toxic residues are poisonous is simple: they accumulate inside us because our bodies cannot metabolize them, or break them up into harmless, elemental organic substances, which can be used and recycled again in the ecosystem, or processed and ejected out of our bodies. This tiny bit of news however, is quietly squelched, never given any exposure and allowed to mold in the back pages of scientific periodicals. Since such residues take years to accumulate, this slow buildup is gradual enough for it not to become an immediately perceivable crisis. Humans refuse to look at the bald fact that we are introducing chemicals and artificial substances that other organisms not only can't use, but are poisonous to all living things. And we are spewing these deadly substances out onto the planet by the millions of tons.

This has recently resulted in a steady decline in the general level of human health due to our increasingly industrialized environment: a decline slow enough to become normal. Generally, it takes about thirty years of an unhealthy lifestyle or environment before it shows up in the human body as a pathological illness. We are already addicted-to and controlled-by our chemical-industrialized lifestyle; so it is no surprise that such statistics are not publicized. It will take another 50-100 years for the ripples of these effects to fully surface. And by that time, the level of toxicity in our environment will be even worse. Not to mention the fact that combining any one toxin with another; almost doubles its original toxicity.

How did this happen? By Science gradually replacing Religion as the ultimate Authority on many fronts, and in many aspects of human existence. By governments buying Scientific Services... just like the church used to buy the services of their clergy; by supplying them with vast estates. Only now: scientists are much cheaper to buy. The difference is that most clergy actually believe their own propaganda. But most fake scientists know that they are lying... Because they have to work very hard at twisting unbiased scientific data to make it seem to support their company's, or official viewpoint.

How did this happen? By chemical companies hiring their own fake scientists to publish fake statistics, by the university research departments being funded and controlled by private corporations, all honest scientific research has been muddied and distorted by conflicting opinions of experts. Now: Universities themselves will not allow any honest, comprehensive studies to be done on this issue. This policy of misinformation has been so successful, that large chemical corporations have stopped using many high-priced lobbyists: simply because a few fake credentialed scientists are much cheaper.

How did this happen? By corporations steadily merging to become larger and larger concentrations of wealth and power and pooling their interests and resources with the other large accumulations of wealth-power-knowledge. By people taking things for granted, by never questioning what they are told. By people never looking for different sources of information or experience. By not going to the trouble of comparing more than one source of information. By having no perspective on the actual condition of the society in which they live. By people becoming tool-slaves, work-slaves, consumer-slaves of the corporate-consumer culture. As their workload slowly increases, prices increase and their earning power slowly decreases... What is happening?

Not only are people becoming less healthy, but poorer as well. The same old cycle of the collapse of civilization is going on as I speak. But in our time, the speed of this dynamic will not take 1,000 years to crumble. It will be much faster, and its collapse will be much more disastrous and destructive. If only from the warming of the polar ice caps at the unheard of rate of 5 degrees in one year due to fluorocarbons released into the atmosphere: thus producing an ozone hole over the south pole larger than the Antarctic continent. The last ice age came about from a difference of only 9 degrees in the polar icecaps. Not to mention the fact that the carbon dioxide level in our atmosphere is increasing a thousand times faster than ever before.

Humans refuse to look at things connectively enough, or widely enough to try to make sense out of their environment as a whole. All you have to do is look at the process of how these chemicals are created. Just monitor the sequence, and number of separations and connections. The second you take any element out of its natural dynamically balanced context, and attempt to use it in some unknown fashion or way: the end result will be an imbalance, and the unknown consequences are usually more harmful than good. The bottom line is that man-made chemicals cause progressively poorer health-illness-cancer-death: and we are using them at an ever-increasing rate and volume.

We as humans will never realize the ultimate consequences of our actions. Because those consequences are too far-reaching, too complex, and their effects go on forever. Why? Because we are using tool-processes that are too complex, because we use tools that are too complex. Because we will never be able to understand the consequence of using a dead tool on a living thing. Only if you deal as a living thing: directly with another living thing; do you have any understanding of whether you are harming or hurting that living thing. Only when you are in tune with your own living energy; can you control it and use it without harming other living things. If you can do that: then you do not have to worry about the consequences at all.

However: by the use of hindsight, we can at least see in which direction we are headed. But for this realization to even occur: you need the widest and most inclusive perspective possible. Or in other words: you need a sense of Pure Wonder.

As far as Western Medicine goes, the Western pharmaceutical-medical industry is hopelessly over-tool-oriented. And the cost of these expensive machines automatically forces their use to be strictly limited for the benefit of only the rich. So again you end up with a selective, pyramidal elite who enjoy the benefits of medical technology, while the rest of the earth's human population cannot afford it. Western medicine is competent only on the crudest chemical-mechanical levels. Most of its chemical applications are toxic and produce countless harmful side effects... so much so; that they more often than not do more harm than good. The reason for this is because each drug or pill is supposed to address only one aspect of your health, or one problem in your body. But the human body does not function as a bunch of unconnected, separate segments. It functions as an interconnected whole. Each delicate organic-cellular-biological balance of your body is changed drastically if you ingest any kind of artificial non-living chemical substance. And because no doctor has the slightest understanding of your own specific organic-cellular-muscular-mental-emotional-environmental-biological condition: their blind prescribing some pharmaceutically advertised pill or new, more expensive kind of treatment has nothing to do with what you actually need to heal your countless, complex, subtle imbalances.

Most of Western Medicine's mechanical applications are brutal and invasive. Most of its focus is upon crisis situations rather than prevention. The average length of time a doctor spends with a patient is less than 3 minutes. Why? Because the more patients he sees, the more money he makes. You will never manage to improve the quality of any health system unless you remove or reduce the profit motive. The attempt to treat the human body as a machine which can be fixed, the conflicting motives of trying to profit from helping others while helping them, its goal of trying to kill disease rather than improve health; are all tool dynamics which corrupts any humanity involved. Killing anything does not promote better health. You cannot get healthier by acts of destruction or killing. The idea of selectively killing only certain things ignores the entire context in which all health and all life is based upon. If your body is out of balance, if the society you live in, and your environment is also out of balance. Trying to selectively destroy or kill something will never solve the basic root cause of any illness. To develop better human health, you need to dynamically rebalance how human society is structured and how humans live, what they eat, and how they eat. This means drastic, difficult, painful, systemic changes. And that is what all institutionalized medicine and all conventional wisdom opposes. One of the most obscene things modern Western Medicine does... is what it does not do.... It does not try to find out why people are sick... Case-by-case: no doctor is interested in why you got sick.... Or in how it actually happened. Even when they do, they carefully do not pay very much attention to it, and do not even tell their patients to do the simple things that will make them better. All the countless of proven remedies, and researched things that work; are pooh-poohed, buried, ignored, or given lip service to. Western medicine is not interested in finding out why people get sick. They do not want you healing yourself or doing it cheaply. It is only interested in its own crisis-bureaucracy medical priority of 'fighting' illness.

Western Medicine has developed such a bad reputation; that people are only rushed to the hospital when they are almost dead... still screaming that they do not want to go into that hell where they lose their humanity and are butchered, and treated as cattle, not humans. Western medicine does not connect all of the medical facts about anyone, or their society, or their environment in their protocol for healing. It does not bother to understand the facts that exist. It only follows its own Medical Bible of practices; and sneers anything that has not been medically proven by sanctified studies costing millions of dollars. And guess what kind of studies are done: the studies that try to selectively prove that Western medicine actually works. And when their results do not fit what the funding project-manager had been ordered to find: then the study is aborted and another selective way of 'studying' something is invented...

Unless you live inside the culture of a Medical Institution: you will never understand how they think, or how cold blooded they are, or what they actually worship and revere. Western Medicine is based upon crisis. It is based upon the fear of dying. Nothing else. Western Medicine profits destructively from the near-death, screaming terror of sick people who are afraid of dying. It is the same context as the fire truck rushing to a scene when there is a five-alarm fire. And they are worshipped for the same reasons firemen are. They are trained to handle screaming people in agony as if they were cordwood. Just like their butcher ancestors cut off limbs by the dozen every day in the Civil War. And thought they were doing a good job of it: Instead of spreading disease and plague with their infected bloody butcher's knives unwashed for weeks... cutting off limbs of screaming victims who were all afraid of dying and getting gangrene. When in actuality it was the surgeons, the butchers who were spreading the killing disease of gangrene throughout their hospitals, and justifying cutting off the limbs saying that they were doing it to save the screaming soldiers from death.

Unfortunately; there was never a Civil War hospital that did not cut off most of the soldiers damaged limbs and cripple most of its patients, so it cannot be historically proven that Civil War Surgeons were worse killers and spreaders of disease than the bloody battles that killed and maimed the soldiers in the first place.

But in the Middle Ages: hospitals were simply places where poor people went to die. Period. They did not go there to be healed. Nobody tried to heal them. The concept of healing did not even exist then. Then: these hospitals actually were humane. They were giving poor starving, old people: who had nobody who cared whether they lived or died, the comfort of not dying alone. That was how sick the original European cultures had become from the religion of Pure Greed. Until some kind wealthy Dutch patrons gave money and established a house of dying, people died alone starving to death, sick, and terrified. That is another hint at how sick European culture had become. That they used the word: 'Hospitable', only for a house in which poor people who had no money; could die. So they could be ministered their last rights by religious do-gooders, and not go screaming in terror into death alone. This was their obscene idea of hospitality. If you look at what the true function of a hospital is today... you will see that hospitals are still being used basically for this purpose. The modern hospital is still used as a place where people go to die. Only now the ethic of hospitals in America are sicker and more corrupt. Hospitals no longer admit poor people in to die. They only admit rich people in to die.

Try justifying that kind of Medical culture and rationalize it. You have to turn your entire brain into a rigid linear machine and believe only what you tell it to believe. You will have to believe that butchery is a sanctified, and is a humane form of healing. If you do not believe this, then why are you in Medicine in the first place? Only true acolytes go through the hell of eight years of insane dehumanization and mind-numbing work to be allowed into the inner circles of the elite butchers. For anyone to do this: they have to be so humanly dead, that they are basically walking psychotics, parading as people. Nothing means more than basking in the sacred holy images of beneficial Medical Godliness. And for them to live like this: the medical establishment is obeyed in fear. Any specialized Ant Doctor Ants are the only other species in the world today who work as much as we do, and who specialize as we do.... Whoever does not follow all medical 'protocols' religiously; is branded a heretic, and cast out of the profession.

So the Doctor has two choices: be a good Catholic, or be expelled and excommunicated and burned at the stake, and lose your job, your standing, and the 8 years of blood and sweat you poured into getting your sacred Doctor's accreditation. That makes the overwhelming number of Doctors so rigid in their outlook, that if you ask them anything they are not equipped to answer with total Godly assurance, they will ignore you completely and avoid you as assiduously as possible. They have been trained in a medical culture that does not allow anyone who is not a devout believer to graduate. They have been trained never to admit that they do not know.

Meaning that for a Medical Doctor: anything not included in their sanctified treatment protocol... literally does not exist; as medicine, or even as a fact... Including exercise, nutrition, emotional and mental states, environmental factors, social factors, the past history of the patient, etc...

'Oh, you have a---? Then take this pill for--- or this treatment, or this operation. Don't bother me with the details of how and why you got sick. We are not interested-in that at all. We prescribe this mass produced ---- as a cure for your mass-identical ailment... or this identical operation for everyone with your -----identical condition.'

Giving the obscene lie; that all human illness is an identical, mass-produced normality of living. That all illnesses are identically the same. That everybody gets sick. That it is normal to get sick. Huh? That there is only one way to treat an illness: an identical way.

Medical doctors breezily confess they have no idea of why or how anyone gets sick. And think it nothing to confess such ignorance. Illness is supposed to be a mystery... nobody is supposed to know why they got sick, or how they got sick. That way they can escape all questions about illness. If they are forced to give you an answer: they spout Grey's anatomy, or some holy medical terminology and mass-studies done on certain 'identical conditions', and turn a deaf ear to even the slight possibility that this is not what the root problem actually is.

It is easy to understand why most Doctors have a fear and distaste of an informed patient. Argue and discuss, and ask questions about their illness? Have a different opinion from the doctor? What if everyone knew why an illness happens, and they simply stop doing the things which make them sick? This would destroy all Western Medicine, and all the doctors would lose their high-priced, high-status jobs.

Modern Western civilization has successfully sold and bombarded the public with the necessity of declaring war on everything from poverty and drugs, to disease and cancer. None of these strategies has ever worked: nor will they ever work. But as long as certain groups can gain power and influence from this adversarial opera of "Them vs. Us"... as long as billions of dollars are spent, and these destructive institutions can profit from the billions of dollars: then their myths will continue to be espoused, and their sanctity of being worshipped as an unquestioned good will remain.

In every research laboratory around the world: chemists and scientists are busy isolating the enemy... Hoping, that if they can find this illusive, invisible enemy inside the human body, then they will be able to selectively sting it to death and kill' it. What is this enemy? Anything that they decide is causing something it shouldn't. Scientists actually believe that illness and disease can be isolated inside your body and brain... Why? They actually think they know what is causing what inside your body. They actually think they know what are the good parts of your body, and what parts need fixing, and which parts have an enemy in it. They actually think they know every cell, and every organ intimately inside your body... after three minutes of talking to you? After what test? huh? Why?

Because they have already had success killing things inside your body without completely killing you. Only giving you develop so many 'side-effects' from their idiotic treatment with prescriptions: that you are end up with a lifetime addiction to expensive drugs... and stay sick for the rest of your life? Only one-in-ten thousand of their protocols actually work. Many are done without explaining that the patient would have a better chance if they were not treated at all. Doctors assume that disease can be fought inside the living battleground of your tissues, cells, and organs... by trying to kill selectively only certain cells, certain tissues or organs. How? By arbitrarily declaring that a certain tissue or cell is the enemy. And then spending thousands of millions of dollars searching for just the right poison that can kill these enemy cells and leave the good cells alone.

'Hmmm. Let's see if we can selectively kill this... Darn. 20 years and 300 million dollars later: No cure at all.... There is still no cure for Alzheimer's disease. Modern medicine still does not even understand the disease. As is the case with any medical research trying to fight, kill, or cure anything selectively... without putting the disease into context.

Alzheimer's is merely a symptom of all the poisons in our modern industrialized cities, and all the unhealthy things modern, affluent humans do, that accumulate into a toxic senility that is merely the slow, rotting death of people who are terrified of dying. It is merely a modern version of slow rotting death. senile people dying more slowly, more painfully, more gradually, more toxically poisoned than a hundred years ago when people assumed all humans slowly rot into old age and senility.

Medically... Scientifically. You hear of people searching for a cure, hoping for a cure, convinced that there is a cure just around the corner... Have they ever found one? No. A cure for what? First you need to identify and define what you are curing. And if that definition is flawed, then so is your entire damn approach. If what you are trying to cure has millions of different root source origins: then attacking one of the symptoms inside your body is the most ludicrous bullshit imaginable.

What is this imaginary enemy inside you? It pops up at different times for different reasons. What causes the enemy to appear? Chemical laced environments, stress, inhuman conditions, bad food, bad water, bad air and bad relationships. Anything that is unhealthy; will cause the enemy to appear in your body. But does Western Medicine or Science, ever face, and admit that there are actual general root reasons and causes for this enemy to appear? No. Have they ever suggested that maybe you get cancer because you have been exposed to poisonous chemicals all your life? That maybe if you went to live somewhere where there are no poisonous chemicals, no foods loaded with chemicals, no water laced with chemicals and poisonous elements that were never supposed to be there, no toxic poisoned air... that your body would heal itself naturally without any fancy expensive shit? That if you cleansed your heart of all the toxic, poisonous feelings, and your mind of all poisonous thoughts, and your body of all toxic, poisonous things... you might not be sick in the first place?

Where can you find such a Shangri-la to live in? How can you escape all these cancer-causing poisons? Oops. Not inside civilization. Oh. You mean civilization itself causes Cancer? You mean if we want to get rid of Cancer, we have to get rid of every man-made chemical and poison in our life? You mean we have to get rid of civilization itself; if we want to get rid of Cancer? You mean there is no choice in the matter? That as long as we use chemicals and live inside civilizations, lead civilized existences: we will never get rid of Cancer? And all the research and money and technology in the world are never going to change this? Oh gee. What an inconvenient conclusion. What an unpleasant truth.

Medicine never tries to closely explore the actual history of your body or your health in a sane context, or connect it to your actual life, where you actually work, who you actually work with, what you actually do, what culture you actually live in, what eating habits you actually have, what exercise habits you actually have, what emotional habits you actually have, what mental habits you actually have... they just concentrate upon some imaginary enemy inside you that is supposed to be attacked, destroyed and killed. If you try to ask a doctor how this enemy got there, why it appeared, when it appeared... they will spout something that makes no sense and expect you to believe them... Because they are the experts. They are the Gods when it comes to 'medical matters'.

They just want to kill this imaginary enemy in your body. They do not want to kill the causes outside your body. That is not their domain. That is not their specialty. They cannot make a profit doing that. They only want to kill certain unhealthy 'symptoms' in your body. So you go back to your chemical-filled, toxic-filled civilized existence and expect to be cured?

Trying to cure symptoms that never go away and keep on occurring and re-occurring in the general public: is very profitable... don't you know? Building a car that does not break down mechanically: will not make you a profit. Cars that break down regularly: do make you a profit. The same principle of planned incompetence and obsolescence applies just as much to the Health Industry as it does to the Automotive Industry. You want a competent health care system? Get rid of the profit motive and you will be amazed at how quickly doctors become intelligent and caring and effective in their diagnoses and treatments... that will not be expensive. The myth of only the most expensive treatments, the most exclusive treatments, being the best is pure bunkum. The myth of only the most expensive health care being the best, is locked into our capitalistic culture. Only when this myth is debunked publicly and exposed, can Western healthcare ever begin to actually improve.

Western Medicine sold and brainwashed its masses to believe in a Crusades just like Western Medieval religions and churches and Kings and nobles once brainwashed its masses to believe in Crusades.

What did the Medieval Crusades accomplish? They created a permanent state of hatred and racism and prejudice between the Eastern and Western civilizations of the world. They created a legacy of hatred and violence and evil: that has been kept alive and preserved for 100's of years.

The killing culture of Western medicine: is just as full of evil superstition as the Western Medieval killing culture was. Both cultures believe that in order to become healthy: you have to kill something. Western Medieval killing culture projected their sick diseased state of existence outwards: and aimed its hate and need to kill something at people they never saw or knew thousands of miles away. That was how insane they were. Western Medical culture projects their sick, diseased state of existence inwards: and aims its hate and need to kill something at cells inside your body that you never knew existed, thousands of times smaller than you are... The superstitious rot of Western Medicine's 'fight against cancer' is a perfect example of the irrational lunacy of its rationale and its religious dogma.

How can you fight something: when you don't know what it is, or where it comes from, or what causes it? How can you fight an enemy: if you cannot identify the enemy? Ask any Western medical professional to tell you where cancer comes from... and they will tell you that they are still 'working on that problem'... After over one trillion dollars in research money has been spent...? They still can't identify the enemy. What! Does this tell you that there is something that stinks in their rationale?

The words that Western medicine uses to brainwash people with; its 'fight against cancer' is one hundred percent pure fucking semantic meaningless gibberish. If you can't identify your enemy: you can't fight it.

This is the complete hoax of western reasoning and research. If after spending over 1 trillion dollars searching inside human bodies for an enemy to fight and not finding it... people have still not woken up to the fact that the 'enemy' is not there. Cancer does not exist as an 'enemy' inside your body. Cancer is created: by the culture you live in, the toxic civilized food you eat, the toxic artificial chemicals that exist in civilization, the toxic stress that living inside the artificial environment of civilization. It is created by killing. If you kill something it will attack you and try to kill you also. If you do not try to kill anything. Then nothing will attack and try to kill you either. If you live inside a culture and believe in it, and practice its evil sin of killing living things, then you will develop cancer as a reactionary response to how you live and what you believe and what you do and what you feel and who you actually are.

The entire weak western attitude towards western medicine: is exactly the same as the weak western attitude towards its religions. 'Save me! Save me!' people go to church: expecting to be 'saved' from their own corruption. People go to hospitals expecting to be 'saved' from their own corruption. If weak western people just stopped their unspoken assumed normalized attitude toward western medicine of 'expecting to be saved' by it. Then western medicine would disappear: and vanish from the face of this earth: in one minute. If weak western people just stopped their unspoken assumed normalized attitude toward their religion of 'expecting to be saved' by it. Then all western religions would disappear and vanish from the earth in one minute.

This unspoken attitude, this unspoken assumption, this unspoken expectation is merely a symptom of western weakness and ill health. Strong healthy happy people do not expect to be saved: because they do not need to be saved by anyone. Only weak sick babies need to be saved. Western culture keeps people in a state of weakness. Western civilization brainwashes people into a state of weakness. Western medicine: merely makes money from this. It profits from sickness. It profits from weakness. The sicker and weaker Western people become: the more they cling to the idea that they can be saved by either western religion, or western medicine, or both.

As far as medical institutions of civilization are concerned: the degree of their corruption is in direct proportion to the degree of their power, wealth and influence. There are no exceptions to this principle. It is no surprise that during the hospital strike in Los Angeles in the 70's; the death rate actually went down. It is no surprise that banks reap a harvest of 1,000 foreclosures per month in Los Angeles County alone... due to debts incurred by medical bills. All institutions devoted to healing suffer from the fact that they are institutionalized and pyramidalized. Like all specialized forms of human expertise, medicine is totally myopic in its research: such as looking for a medical cure for cancer... when our entire civilized environment is cancerous.

The entire focus of what civilization considers being humane is itself completely distorted and corrupt. Its order of priorities are completely reversed. Its priorities are so revered: nobody dares tell them to their face that their priorities are full of shit. The majority of all medical costs for saving human life are devoted to people who are already dying: not upon the ones who need it most: the babies and children who are just beginning to live. One of the greatest icons and examples of humaneness in modern times is the figure of Mother Teresa: whose entire life was devoted to the care of dying people. But what produces the greatest good? The care and feeding of a child so it will grow up to be healthy and happy, or the care of an old, terminally ill, dying person whose life is already over? What if this obsession with dying and death did not exist? Then, maybe the highest example of humaneness would be the care and feeding of babies and children: not old, dying people. But that would destroy the entire pyramidal focus and structure of idolizing any one person, or obsessing over what we fear most: death, dead things and dying. Then you would have to glorify and worship everything that is alive... then you would have to worship and glorify every mother who has a living child to care for. Then you would have to focus on living things: not dead or dying things. You cannot judge the level of humaneness from how much people care for the old or the dying. Rather: it is how much people care for their young that determine the level of their humaneness. Ever since civilization began: the practice and relative humaneness of childcare has been mostly swept under the carpet and ignored.

Then there is the insane practice of specialization. Trying to medically treat only one isolated aspect of a person's health and only treat that one aspect: as if it was not connected to the rest of the body-mind-heart-soul... and furthermore: expecting that there will be mostly no side-effects from doing this. And more stupidly: expecting to be cured. The complete disregard for any wider contextual approach to human health and illness illustrates how the progress of segmentation and the progress of technology: splitting things, separating things without connecting them, is basically a detrimental process for all living organisms.

The reason most forms of counseling, therapy, psychiatry, and psychology have such a bad track record; is that they do not operate through the dynamic of giving. The very motive of therapists making a profit from their clients prevents them from being truly effective as healers. The ethic of objectivity, or impersonality: of any separation between the giver and the receiver insures that there is no human equality, no true caring, no true honesty or love between them. Regarding it as normal to pay a person just to listen to your problems merely reveals the lack of human closeness in today's society. To pay a person to be empathetic, or care about you is not a healing dynamic: it is a self-neutralizing, self-defeating dynamic. To claim to want to help other people, while automatically excluding billions of poor from that category is a hypocrisy beyond description. Poor people cannot afford these kinds of counseling or therapy. To treat only a miniscule percentage of the world's richest human population for their emotional-mental health, while letting the rest of the human race go to hell: is like a medical physician refusing to fixing your broken arm if you are not a millionaire who can afford a doctor's services out of your own extra money; purely as an exclusive Luxury Service. The stark contrast between how civilized humans view mechanical health, and non-mechanical human health reveals how truly dehumanized civilization actually is. We have hospitals for broken bones but not broken hearts or broken minds or broken spirits. Those types of injury are not important. Emotional, mental and spiritual health is a luxury: not a necessity.

Eastern Medicine is more concerned with the body's dynamic balance and consequently: it is not as conducive to accumulation. It is not as conducive for Profit-Power-Wealth. But it is not geared to treat terminally ill, or pathologically ill people whose imbalanced health requires extreme measures. The basic truth is that the only healing which occurs is the body's genetic ability to balance itself. Wasting billions of dollars on tool-research has nothing to do with health. What should be studied is the question of: what is a healthy environment for human existence? What should be researched is how people should live in order to be healthy. Not how to try to fix them after an accumulated lifetime of unhealthy living practices while living in an unhealthy environment. But medicine like all other human institutions chooses to ignore such root problems and mostly only deal with health problems when they reach a crisis-level.

Do you have any idea of how deeply, personally, corrupting it is; to take somebody's money and give virtually no beneficial result in return? Or refuse to help those who cannot afford it? It requires that you place your own self-interest above the person you are supposedly trying to help. It forces you to become a complete hypocrite in both your actions and your words. You end up thinking in terms of normalized lies... speaking in code-words to cover up the truth... denying and avoiding all possible paths and thoughts and feelings that might come too close to an unpleasant truth, or feeling, or thought or act. It requires that you cut and yourself off from the suffering of others and become detached from all human suffering including your own.. You develop a subconscious guilt about any ethical or moral aspect of your work that you over react to any questioning your good intentions. You construct completed ready-made rationalizations and explanations in your own self-defense internally... so you will be ready to justify yourself in case anyone dares to question you at all.

Would you spend thousands of dollars on a car repair that didn't fix the problem? Would you pay a plumber; if your pipes still leak after he has installed them? Why shouldn't doctors be treated the same? Shouldn't doctors be paid only if their treatment works? Why should they be treated any different? Just because when people are sick, they are scared of dying and will grasp at almost anything no matter how irrational it is? Just because sick people have no choice? Just because they are willing to do anything, pay any amount of money? So doctors take advantage of the fact that when somebody comes to them, they are that person's last hope? You can laugh and walk away from a car repair that is overpriced. You can shop around as long as you want. But you can't laugh and walk away when you are bleeding, when you are seriously ill. You can't take your time and shop around when you are screaming in agony. You can't refuse to sign away all of your legal rights to question the later charges when you are in convulsions of pain. So: the medical industry takes advantage of this and charges people regardless of whether their treatment helps them or kills them. Does any other industry practice this kind of ethic?

'Your ----- died on the operating table, but you owe us money...' 'Our treatment had no effect: but you owe us money.' For doing what. Killing them?

Or they die after the operation was a 'success'... from the trauma of being operated on. Or they die two weeks later... because of the operation. If they die two weeks later: the concealed fact is that if they hadn't had the operation, they would have lived longer than two weeks. If they die two months later... the concealed fact is that they would have lived longer than two months without the operation. This can be easily proven. Take two groups with the same terminal illness that western medicine uses surgery on. With the same age factors, the same other factors. Have one group be operated on by surgery, and the other group not operated on at all. See which group lives longer. Do you think any Western research will allow such a study to be made? Never in your life my friend... Because if they did: they would have to publish it. And the entire scientific and medical community would have to silence them before their findings ever came to print. What? Have a scientific study that scientifically proves most of modern western surgery is worse than doing nothing at all? You mean all those billions and trillions of dollars are spent on pure quackery? You mean the sacred religious belief that hospitals can help you instead of harm you is bullshit? The entire religious culture of hospitals and the worship of doctors and surgeons as veritable god-like authority figures would be destroyed... Now we can't have that can we? Make people be responsible for their own health? Unthinkable. Make the masses responsible for everything but their own spiritual, moral, ethical and physical health.

Once this supposed health system... which is actually a death-system; has a guaranteed profit regardless of what they do, or how they do it, or how expensive it is: why should they change? Then the overriding motive becomes how to make things more expensive... how to make more profit. As a result of this monetary corruption: the entire system increasingly becomes a way of finding more excuses to overcharge sick people for stuff they don't need: and give them all kinds of unnecessary drugs and treatment that are often harmful and even fatal. Then it becomes a completely dehumanized system where the kind and quality of care has nothing to do with the illness or the patient. Then doctors end up spending only 3 minutes with each patient: because they have become sophisticated money machines... processing as many patient profits as quickly and impersonally as possible. Then you get the dehumanized medical procedures of modern Western Medicine. Then people come to hate and despise all hospitals and all doctors. The more advantage any profession, any industry has; the more it is envied, worshipped, and hated by the less fortunate. Does that sound like a recipe for greater trust and love in the world? Is this how we are supposed to heal each other? Our culture worships doctors as gods. We give them the power of life and death. We do anything and everything they tell us to.

Ask yourself this: If any person other than a doctor spent only three minutes trying to find out what is medically wrong with you... would you listen to him? How the hell can anyone know what is really wrong with you after only three minutes? Do you think tests and samples are all you need to know what is wrong with you? In that case have the test and sample results sent to your home and screw the doctor... who is only telling you what those tests and samples mean. Huh? Phone the lab that did the test and they will tell you what they mean... or buy their test-glossary that tells you what they think it means. Or buy a medical dictionary and find out that all of these tests mean nothing without an exhaustive study of each case that takes weeks and months and varies uniquely individual-by-individual... not three minutes of talking to you.

The number one sin of all doctors is that they do not educate their patients. If any expert in any field is unable to explain to you what they do and why they do it: you should leave before you pay them one red cent. If people did not worship Doctors: they would never stand for the way Doctors condescendingly treat their patients, as if whatever they do and why they do it is too complicated for them to understand..

Number one. If any expert, or any doctor admits they cannot explain what they will do and why they will do it: they are admitting they are too stupid, and too incompetent to be trusted at all... period.

Number two: if they try to say that a full explanation would take too much time: they have not already proven number one, but also proven they do not give a shit about you and are not interested in anything but your money, and as far as they are concerned: you are worthless and to be kept ignorant.

All people who are honest and want to help you, and know what they are doing: will take the time to explain what they do before they do it. Any help you receive from any doctor should be understood by you so clearly that it is transparent. All patients should be informed enough about their own health problems to make their own educated decisions on how to treat themselves.

That means taking all the specialized knowledge of all the specialists in Medicine and every other specialized field of knowledge out of the hands of these specialists and into the public domain. However...this also means that every person who wants to be treated for anything by anyone; has the personal responsibility to do their own research before they even speak to any specialist. This means that each person has the responsibility of becoming an expert on their own health, their own body and their own problems. This means the end of all patient-doctor medicine period. If you have cancer; and are too stupid and too lazy to read up about the illness which may kill you, then you deserve to die. If you do not care enough about your own life and your own health and your own body to take proper care of it, then you should never have been given a life to waste, you never should have been given a body to ruin a your health to despoil in the first place. If you do not have the intelligence to learn how not to die: then you deserve to die. What percentage of people takes this approach of self-responsibility to their own health and their own life? What percentage of people take responsibility for their own health? What percentage of people become victims of Doctors and health specialists?

What percentage of people does anything at all to become healthier? The answer is simple. People who live as victims: die from their own irresponsibility. People who refuse to be victims; live longer depending on how responsible they are for their own health. Ignorance kills. What you don't know can and does kill you. The history of every patient a Doctor ever treated should be printed in full. And should be required by Law to be available to the public, and be in his front office for every prospective new patient to read. Every Doctor's success ratio in treating patients should be emblazoned by the State on his front window before even entering... just as every restaurant in Los Angeles has a state grade of how clean their kitchen is. Then before you even speak to a Doctor: you will have at least enough information to whether he is a total quack, or not, by already knowing if he helped cure only 10% of his patients, or if he helped cure 90% of them.

What if doctors were only paid if their treatment worked? Then, all unnecessary and ineffective drugs and treatments would be eliminated. Then, all incompetent quacks would go out of business. Then, only doctors who are effective at what they do could make a living. Then, the treatment of all pathological illness would become a losing proposition, while all forms of preventative care would become profitable. Then, the entire priority system of health care would be turned upside down. Health care would no longer be crisis oriented. People who wanted to become rich would not go into medicine in the first place. Health care would no longer be dominantly profit oriented. Health care would become a long-term proposition, and not structured only for pathological emergencies. Then the practice of medicine would necessarily include all aspects of living and become truly holistic: not over-specialized. Then, we would no longer treat our bodies as machines; to be fixed only if they are visibly, mechanically broken. But of course: health professionals and the pharmaceutical industry would never agree to this. Why? Because it would destroy their huge profit margin. Medicine is no different from any other profit motivated system. As long as health care is a business, those who profit from it will be unwilling to sacrifice their own wealth to improve the well being of others. The conflict between giving and taking is obvious.

Every person living inside civilization must face this ethical dilemma; whether they like it or not. This fact remains as an unavoidable conflict within each human soul. Is what you're doing making you more human? Or more like a tool-machine? How much do you want to help others? How much do you want to help yourself? How much are you helping others? How much are you helping yourself? What you may want to do and what you are actually doing are two entirely different things. Who benefits more? Who wins? Who loses? Add up all of the factors and see which way the scales tip. The trick is to find a way to help others in a way that also helps you: and the only way you can do that is mutual cooperation. But civilization is structurally designed as to make this option nearly impossible to realize fully.

However, here is the catch: no person without a Sense of Pure Wonder would even possess the desire to ask such questions of themselves. No person without the developed abilities of Honesty and Courage will ever try to ask themselves such questions. Throughout history. In all walks of life: the anecdotal evidence is endless. People are happiest when giving of themselves. The happiest people are givers. But this flies in the face of how people are forced to live... how they are taught to live. In the end, it makes little difference. Civilization does not teach people how to be givers. It teaches them how to be takers. In all civilized societies, giving is only practiced incrementally: through separate, unconnected acts of giving, which are few and far between. The result is a barely detectable difference.

The concept of health care itself is a destructive civilized myth that trains and brainwashes people into unquestioning mental-physical-spiritual-emotional state of powerlessness and laziness. The idea: that you are not responsible for your own health...

The idea that: someone else should take over that responsibility... and hold the power of life or death...over your own body... and take over control of your own health... for a tidy profit. And that they only do so; when you are already almost dead anyways. The idea: that you do not even want to know these unknown, anonymous people who will have the power of life and death over you until the last moments of your life. The idea that you will not even speak to them during your whole life... unless you are almost dying and in pain and find that you are deathly afraid... that you are afraid of dying; and then, suddenly, these unknown strangers are supposed to save you from dying. They are supposed to save your life. They somehow are supposed to somehow, magically save you from dying. They are supposed to suddenly care about you? They are supposed to love you? Care for you... as if you were a tiny helpless baby? Because you have no understanding of why you got to be so sick? Why is that? Why do you expect that this destructive irresponsibility to your own health can be easily ignored, and you can do anything you want, eat anything you want, live anyway you want... and only after the consequences of what you ate, and how you lived, and what you did catch up with you: this idiotic Myth called a healthcare system is supposed to somehow mechanically fix whatever you have been doing wrong all your life? Using only expensive drugs, chemicals and mechanical repairs? Is it because you are too lazy? Or is it because do not have enough time to deal with your own health? Or is it because you actually believed all the guff spouted about medicine, and the special powers of Doctors? Is it because you have taken the level of your own health for granted all your life?

Or is it because you are so disconnected from your own body: that you do not notice it getting sick. Is it because you are so numb to pain... any pain: that you only feel it when it is too late, when you have already been so sick and unhealthy for years that you are dying. Is it because you have avoided feeling anything that is painful or unpleasant all your life: that you have been in a state of denial about your own illness for years. Is it because you have refused to deal with any of your own health issues until you literally can't function physically anymore. Until you are so sick, that it is a waste of time trying to save your sick body and soul at the last second. Because your body cannot make up for a lifetime of unhealthy living in a few days or weeks. Because even your bodies miraculous healing power cannot heal you when you only want to be healed enough to function physically.

When you are so sick emotionally, and mentally: that you refuse to do the emotional and mental healing needed to heal you physically. This is what happens when you are brainwashed into functioning only mechanically as a civilized human. The idea of giving up most of your power to other people. Giving up political power; so someone else can build your roads for you and supply you with water and electricity. Giving up your money to others, giving them the right to tax you: so you do not have to build a school or hire teachers for your children. So that everything is done for you by The State, the Hospital, the Doctor, the Mechanic, the Plumber, the Corporations, the Monopolies. That is a universal civilized assumption-value-attitude. And that attitude and assumption of powerlessness is what keeps us victims. Simply because we want to have an easy life. And all of these entities makes our lives easier.

We blame doctors, and hospitals, and HMO's, and Insurance Companies; for how poor the healthcare system is. Do we ever blame ourselves, for allowing ourselves to get sick in the first place? Do we ever hold ourselves responsible for having bad, unhealthy eating habits, sleeping habits, lifestyles, customs, routines, cultures, etc., that make us sick? Does anyone blame the consumer for having an unhealthy consumer lifestyle? If you get colon cancer from 35 years of eating pizza and junk food and not exercising... why blame the hospital for not treating your condition properly... when you never treated yourself properly to begin with?

It is ludicrous to point the finger of blame at only one aspect or any one set of factors. The unpleasant truth is; that even though all of us are responsible in different ways and to different degrees: nobody wants to admit it or own up to it. Nobody is willing to take their fair share of the blame. It has become taboo to blame anyone about anything. Everybody is blameless. Everything in civilization is either nobody's fault, or somebody else's fault. Anyone accused of anything; loudly proclaims that they are not responsible... that they are innocent. And somehow, the perpetrators and guilty ones are never found, never proved guilty...never proved to be responsible. Until it becomes almost meaningless to accuse anyone of anything... because people already know that the guilty ones will find some way of getting out of it.

Try apportioning blame selectively and what happens? Enraged denials, guilty cover-ups and explosions of hate. Fear. Lies. Misdirection. Avoidance. Rationalizations, etc. You get illogical ranting and irrationality. Suddenly people stop being logical. It does not suit them to be rational, simply because the truth is too unpleasant. People do not get together to honestly admit their failings and weaknesses, and problems. People do not try to honestly and courageously accept responsible. Not even for their own health. Not even for their own bodies. That is just one effect that civilization has had upon human health.

Not only does Western Medicine Demonize certain symptoms of bad health, and attack them and try to kill them... All of Western Society Demonizes certain addictions, while making other even worse addictions perfectly legal. It's okay to drink alcoholic beverages, coffee, tea and soft drinks. Its okay to take prescription drugs. But its not okay to smoke tobacco, its not okay to smoke marijuana. It's not okay to take LSD, or opium, or cocaine. Its okay to take prescribed opium derivatives. Its okay to take barbiturates. Its okay to use over-the-counter drugs. So... you have over-the-counter drugs, Prescribed drugs, food drugs, liquid drugs, under-the-counter unprescribed drugs... and then you have illegal drugs. Huh? Everything civilized people ingest is a drug.

Why demonize coke addicts killing themselves, while letting 350 lb. Junk food addicts eat themselves to death? You want an effective drug program? Make all drugs equal. Make all addictions equal.

'You want to help me my drug addiction? Okay. But only if I help you get free of all your addictions too.'

'So let's see... what are you addicted to? Power? Money? Food? Coffee? TV? Movies? Pizza? Soft drinks? Laziness? Junk food? Work? Alcohol? Sex?... Watching Sports?'

'Okay: tell you what. I'll let you help me help me get rid of my bad cocaine habit: and I'll help you get rid of all of your bad habits... okay? What's that?... No? Huh?... Why not? I don't want to be addicted... Don't you want to be free of all your addictions also? Huh? I thought you wanted to help me. Oh... You mean you don't want to help me? Oh.... You mean don't want me to help you! Ohhhh...'

'But, but... you have more addictions than I have! You need my help fifty times more! Being addicted to fifty thing at the same time is much harder to get clean of than any single addiction!.'

'Oh... I see. Your addictions are good, and my addiction is bad...
Bad for whom?... In what context?'

Oh. You mean your addictions are normal, and my addiction is not normal... Compared to what? In what context? In your context, not my context? What context is that? You mean I am supposed to define my normality by your normality? Why don't you define your normality by my normality? Ah. Your addictions are socially accepted and mine is not. Your addictions are taken for granted, and mine is not. Oh. Your addictions are good, and my addiction is bad... oh.'

When we spend most of our lives looking after the health of machines, and abstract-machine-systems. When we spend most of our lives functioning as machines instead of humans. When we work a thousand times more than we play. What surprise should it be that human health is so poor?

If you want to actually trace the causes of human ill-health down to its roots: you would have to go back to when our species first started eating dead food instead of living food. When they first discovered fire and started eating carbonized food millions of years ago. When they first started fighting between each other. When they first began killing other living things destructively. When we first started living in caves, and settlements. When we stopped walking outdoors every day.

Anyone who cares to do a little research and reading; can uncover the history of the many logical reasons for human ill health. All the pertinent facts have already been uncovered. It is simply a matter of putting them together.

If half the time we spent fixing our machines were spent on ourselves... if half the energy and time we spent maintaining all of our civilized contrivances, and gizmos, and civilized mechanical infrastructures were spent on our human infrastructure... then we would be so damn healthy we would not know what to do with all this health. We would be bursting with so much energy, and vitality, and health; it would be coming out of our ears.

What we need is a re-birth of the entire concept of human health. We need to place human-health before machine-health. We need to prioritize the importance of human health sanely. Countless pamphlets and research has been published about what we are doing wrong. Until the elite; publicly recognizes the importance, and value of humans to be more important than machines; we will not become healthier; we will only become more sickly. Until the elite publicly places the importance of human health above the importance of power, wealth, knowledge, and status: will not become any healthier. Until all Nations, all Governments, all Cultures, all Religions place the importance of humans above their own sanctified Laws, Traditions, Ideas, Dogmas and Values: we will not become any healthier. We will only get sicker. The fact is that civilized humans are getting progressively sicker and weaker as time passes. Out of all the babies born in America in the year 2,000: one third of them will develop diabetes. That is how poisonous civilization has become. Yeah for civilized progress!

Every civilized racket has their ritualized culture of respectability. When you enter their hallowed halls, or sacred temples; you must be humble and follow all their rituals of abasement. When you go to a chiropractor: you must respect the chiropractor. When you go see a doctor you must respect the doctor. You are not allowed to show disrespect to them. Even if you bad mouth them after you leave.

What if people realized that ALL civilized institutions are nothing but rackets? What if nobody went to these witch doctors and charlatans? What if nobody bought any drugs? What if nobody bought anything corporations and businesses sell? Then these rackets would disappear instantly as if they never existed. And people in the future would marvel at how gullible we were. Just as we marvel and sneer at how gullible past generations were to uphold the sanctity of their now-obsolete rackets. Civilization is nothing more than a bunch of rackets. Scams.

What if all people took responsibility for their own health?

‘You’re sick? Then get off your ass and do something about it. Do something that will make you healthier! Don’t come whining and complaining to doctors, expecting some miracle cure.’

What if healthy people despised sick people? What if healthy people ostracized sick people from their society? Then sick people would be socially humiliated, and openly spat upon in public and told to get off the street. Then sick people would be forced into their holes and stay there: until they finally decided to take responsibility for their health. Until they stopped pitying themselves. Until they stopped acting like helpless whining nauseating victims.

Then you would have an honest social class system that openly values health: not sickness. Then all the sick people would die off and we would not be plagued by their genetically sick progeny. Then the entire human species would become healthier.

Oops. Now we can't have that now, can we?... Why not?

Instead, we put the sickest people in power: and give them three expensive heart operations just so they can still go on existing and committing more evil like Dick Cheney. Health systems are hypocrisies. A small minority of rich Nations pamper and spoil their citizens: while billions of poor have no health care whatsoever. Civilization does not value health. It pays lip service to the idea of health. The idea of civilized health is a pure hypocrisy. Spending trillions of dollars on health budgets for spoiled consumers who eat unhealthy food and do almost no exercise whatsoever... While poisoning the spiritual health and physical health of billions of poor people to make sure they are not healthy. If poor people were educated to live intelligently: they would be a hundred times healthier than rich people. And then what would happen to the ethic of greed and Global Capitalism? Billions of poor people living healthier and happier lives than rich people? Oops. Now we can't have that now... can we? Much better to make everyone sick than make them healthier. Besides, there is no money in making people responsible for their own health.

All it would take is a one-week course in hygiene, nutrition and simple basic principles. Easily taught and explained. Without needing years of university courses. But this would step on the toes of the powers that be. This might educate people. This would contradict all the false lying theories and terms Western Science uses to make it almost impossible to explain how the human body actually works. This would revolutionize all human knowledge. This would go against what all civilization stands for. It would mean a huge change in the status quo. And we can't have that now can we?

Psychobiologic Health

By desensitizing our feelings and thoughts through the deadening process of normality, we deaden ourselves in order to function as machines: and in doing so; we become less human. The cost of living desensitized lives is doing hurtful things to ourselves and to others. This produces psychobiologic pain in others and ourselves. Moreover: this pain accumulates. To the point where the amassed accumulation of our unfelt pain penetrates so deeply, and is so painful as a whole; that we simply do not want to experience it or feel it at all.

When you create a state of unhealth that is farther and farther away from true health; all you are doing is polarizing these two conditions destructively into a worsening condition of weakened imbalance. Until you become progressively more and more unhealthy than healthy. And then the dynamic inexorably runs towards worse, more imbalanced, unhealthier conditions of living. Until there is no way of comparing a healthy condition to an unhealthy condition. Only different relative conditions of unhealthy living. And as the ongoing process of becoming sicker, number, more unhealthy is normalized, even the idea of reversing this process becomes unthinkable. Until there are literally no resources, no concepts, no cultural values, no traditions that even try to make people healthier. And if anyone tries to do it even slightly... going against a millions of year-old dynamic, they encounter such huge opposition that they must sweat blood to gain back one inch.

But by humans being trained and normalized into cowardice... this makes even such an attempt so rare, that it is not a factor in human understanding. People believe what is convenient for them to believe.

They do what is most expedient. The automatic reaction to anything that goes against this millions of year-old process is instant rejection on a subconsciously trained level.

The result is denial. The result is all humans growing up to become emotional cowards: unwilling to admit or accept anything in themselves or others that is painfully true. You cannot sensitize your awareness unless you are willing to change the normality you live by. And you cannot develop a sense of pure wonder unless you completely let go of the idea of normality. To a person living in a state of pure wonder, there is no such thing as normality: everything is strange or wonderful: nothing is normal. If you ask the question; why humans do not choose to change or heal? The answer is simple: Pain... Fear... Fear of Pain... An Imbalanced Time-Awareness.

In other words: a lack of Pure Wonder, a lack of Love, a lack of Courage, a lack of Honesty; or... Hate, Greed, Weakness, Cowardice, etc.

All Integrated, Psychobiologic Healing; is painful. In order to heal emotionally as well as physically, humans must go through all the painful traumatic experiences of their life which they have not fully experienced. However: pain equals fear... and humans have been mostly trained into becoming emotional cowards. Given the choice between feeling something painful and not feeling it; we opt for the avoidance of pain. People do not ask painful questions of themselves. Moreover, if anyone does ask even slightly unpleasant questions, people react defensively: rejecting the question before it is even asked... refusing to even look at it.

The greater the level of pain a person possesses, the greater their condition of fear. A normal well-defended human can go through their entire life functioning successfully, mechanically, and never be forced to deal with their own psychobiologic pain. It is much easier to remain numb than voluntarily choose to undergo an agonizingly painful process of self-healing. It is easier to deny one's own truths than face them if they are too painful. Moreover: in a mechanically functioning society where the healing of human emotion is almost non-existent, there is little or no opportunity for this to even happen.

All healing is, is a re-balancing of ourselves, so our energy flows more freely, more dynamically. Even the attempt itself requires an enormous amount of courage and self-honesty. The process of healing is the most painful experience any human can ever undergo in their entire life. Compared to this, there is nothing that is more terrifying or agonizing. So it is little wonder that humans shrink from this kind of pain. And since there are almost no truly connective-loving communities with the needed support which is necessary for healing to occur in the first place; it is no surprise that this kind of healing almost never happens. Because civilization is segmentive and incremental in nature, all human forms of healing are segmentive and incremental in nature. We try only to heal certain isolated aspects of ourselves, or our minds, or our bodies, or our emotions. As a result, all human change-growth-healing is segmentive and incremental.

The greatest punishment a damaged human can ever suffer: is to be healed of their own imbalances. The worst possible punishment you could inflict upon a murderer is to force them to live with the victim's loved ones and have them experience for the rest of their life; the suffering they caused.

If the murderer is not totally frozen into their own numbness. If the victim's family themselves are not totally frozen into the inability to forgive or heal. If they are not frozen into their own damaged sickness of hate; then that would be the worst punishment of pure torture a murderer could ever suffer. The murderer would suffer their own inner remorse, agony, and guilt, a million times more horribly than being insulated and locked into a prison, comfortably insulated and separated from the consequences of their actions.

But... however: the family of the victim would also be forced to deal with, and face the murderer's pain and their damaged past also. In this situation there would be no choice for either the victim's family or the murderer but to help heal each other.

But that level of closeness, that level of vulnerability, that level of agony, that level of healing, is unthinkable in a civilized society: where numbness and mechanical functioning is the norm. Instead: civilization's concept of punishment is based not upon connectiveness, not upon healing, but upon separation-numbness-dehumanization; locking them away, or the ultimate separation of death. If someone has already been brutalized to the point that they are capable of murder, for society to further brutalize them only spreads this dehumanization so it infects the entire society.

There is a reason victims' families do not want to take in the murderer of their loved one. There is a reason for people being addicted to distraction, entertainment, work, food, drugs, the accumulation of meaningless facts... there is a reason people do not want to heal themselves or their loved ones, or anybody else for that matter. The reason is pain... no civilized person wants to experience anything even slightly painful. Civilization has propelled human into an artificially safe-dead-numb environment. It has prevented humans from experiencing any pain or hardship until people become spoiled, lazy, cowards. Until modern culture actually embraces and celebrates cowardice, lying, deception, selfishness, etc.

Without a good, steady diet and background of Hardship, Honesty, Love, Courage and developing your own Sense of Pure Wonder,... you will never have the Courage to live with the murderer of your spouse or child. You will never possess the Generosity, the HONESTY and the Courage to do it. But it has been done. Many ancient, relatively uncivilized cultures had that practice. Today, we try to explain away this incredibly forgiving, humane ancient custom as merely a barter arrangement... a convenience... merely replacing a missing valuable resource with another living body. Today, we cannot even personally conceive of the Humanity and Courage needed to do this. We cannot imagine that maybe our ancestors were more humane, more loving than we are now. What if we are wrong? What if instead of a continual 10,000 year Progress of increasing Humanity, it has been a continual regression of decreasing Humanity?

Most modern historians believe that people in the Middle Ages ever experienced what we know today as love. Historians try to tell us that the notion of romantic love is a fairly new invention... that it only arose from medieval ballads and books. They say this because they see very little mention of it in earlier books. What they do not tell you is that it was only then that books were beginning to be written, read and printed. That it was only then that people began to become literate. One reason historians think romantic ballads became popular in the middle ages is because that it was not expunged from the official records... of earlier historians. The idea that if it was not written; it never existed: is an absurd idiotic self-serving, easy way of not looking at the past in human terms at how humans actually lived. You cannot learn that from a book.

This is why the idea of taking in the killer of your wife or husband no longer exists today... yet it did in many cultures in the past. Modern civilized, societies are more hate-based than ever before; not more love-based. That is why Europeans managed to colonize, rape, pillage and oppress the rest of the world's existing cultures... because they did not consider any new, strange, barbaric cultures as even being human. But...these other humans did not know that the Europeans did not even think of them as being human. They did not know just how inhuman Europeans were. They did not know how civilized they were. They welcomed the Europeans into their houses and wined them and dined them... and the Europeans smiled politely, lied through their teeth and stole everything of value they could lay their greedy paws onto. And in the process: brutalized and raped these barbaric cultures, enslaved their populations, and ruled them with a callous inhuman indifference unheard of before then.

Even the ancient Romans whose entire Empire was based upon slavery still understood that slaves were still humans... Just they had power over them. Slaves were simply powerless people. They were people who had all power taken from them... by force unwillingly. Now we have countless ways of enslaving people willingly. And not by force. This is another semantic hypocrisy of civilization. Any enslavement of anything, anyone, any animal... as long as the animal does not actively fight back... is not enslavement. Even if the enslavement is done so gradually that the animal does not notice it. Until the enslavement becomes normal. All slavery that is taken for granted. All slavery that is normal... is not considered to be slavery at all. Rulers addicted to power and ease; are not considered to be slaves. During the Middle Ages: Europeans considered non-European peoples as beasts: not of the same species

Now Historians do that regularly to all humans who once lived in the past. It is called objectivity. It is called historical perspective. It is called distance. It is called a lot of things, but it is still the same thing: dehumanization. For medieval Europeans: other people, other cultures, were no longer even slaves to them. They were just alien things. They were not even considered to be human. This semantic fiction was done mainly as an excuse to rob them and rule them, and gain wealth and territory. This endless litany of behavior is coldly recounted in all history books as if it was normal for that time-period. In that case... shouldn't Hitler and Stalin also be 'normal' for our time-period also? Why selectively detail the history of Jewish atrocities, when nobody looks at, or cares about the hundreds of millions... literally billions of civilized people, who have been systematically slaughtered and raped and robbed for thousands of years throughout all of written history? Because the Jews were the only ones that became a dominant culture and gained control of our modern media.

Do historians ever try to explain why all of this endless brutality even happened? How many even bother to explain it? Most of them simply notice it... in a few lines... while devoting all the rest of their books to recounting how the winners killed the unimportant losers. History books are basically a justification of winners killing losers. Whoever the winners were: they were automatically considered to be more civilized. By automatic assumption alone... all winners were more civilized, and in the right; and were justified in doing what they did. Every history book easily explains the triumphant march of machines and wars and horrors as an understandable dynamic of civilized progress that has been proven to be good for all humans. That is: as long as you do not look too closely. As long as you do not read too many different history books. As long as you do not start comparing and evaluating and asking questions... or doubting conventional assumptions.

So... how does this tie in with people not being able to heal? Civilized people have not even learned how to live yet ... Much less discover, and develop a healing way of living. A healing way of life is even more difficult than a healthy way of living; because not only must you find and practice a healthy, happy, loving way of life... that is enough challenge in itself. But on top of that, you must find a way to improve that way of living... a way to slowly heal all of the pain and unhappiness that has accumulated throughout your life. And that is not only extremely difficult... but extremely painful also.

There are endless personal accounts of people healing from certain selective things. Only... what they are healing from is usually a selective, separate factor of their entire life. A crisis, a death in their family, a divorce, the loss of a job... being robbed, or raped. Their attempt at healing is usually only trying to get back to a previous normality... and they never do. Why? Because they are not willing to change anything else in their lives except that selected damaged area. Their attempt to heal is so niggardly, so cheap and so parsimonious; it barely has any effect at all. People simply do not try to change how they live...except incrementally and unconnectedly: it is that simple.

Healing can be done... But we have not yet learned how to heal ourselves. We only know how to function inside the civilized medium that we were raised-in. We have not yet learned how to heal the twisted souls of our criminals. Just as we have not learned yet how to heal our own souls. Because we fail to explore our inner selves, our souls, our psyches; because we are not in touch with our Subconscious Middle Brain: we lack the inner knowledge and wisdom and perspective: needed for inner healing and balancing. Just as we have not yet learned how to properly raise our own young: just as we have not yet learned how to discern between a balanced dynamic of existence and an imbalanced dynamic of existence.

Why are there so few criminals in Sweden?... have other Western Nations ever looked at this...? America has the highest per-capita rate of prison incarceration in the world... yet not one American governmental body or authority will touch this issue about Sweden's incredibly small number of criminals... why might you ask? Because all of their law and order political rhetoric... that gets them elected is based mostly upon the concept of punishment, and if you study this issue, you will find that inside all of the leaflets and code-words and lip-service phrases; there is no mention of healing. The system itself is based 100 % on the concept of punishment with no healing whatsoever. So inevitably, and automatically: the American system is designed to make 'bad' people worse.

However... in Sweden there were no prisons after WWII. What? Yes. No prisons. All the people guilty of any illegal offense were sent to hospitals instead: ostensibly to be healed... However even the prospect, even the possibility of any criminal having to go to a hospital because they were in some way sick... was so socially damaging to their own criminal self-esteem, their own identity as a criminal: that they often committed suicide; rather than go to any hospital... simply because they did not want to be healed against their will. This in itself should have been a lesson for other Nations as to which approach to criminality is better. But it was not. It was ignored. And now Sweden is succumbing to American mass culture and becoming like all the other crime infested industrialized countries.

You cannot separate physical health from nutritional health, sexual health, emotional health, mental health, financial health, social health and environmental health. You cannot separate these aspects from each other if you wish to effectively treat human health. Just as you cannot separate physical trauma from sexual trauma, emotional trauma, mental trauma, financial trauma, social trauma or environmental trauma if you wish to effectively treat human health. Specialized health care cannot treat the whole person. The problem with all relative degrees of human illness or health is that it is almost always considered to be normal unless it reaches crisis proportions. However poor a person's health is, they rarely try to improve it unless they are at death's door... or some other kind of crisis: be it physical, emotional, mental, or all three.

Segmenting and separating the aspects of human health is not practical or effective. It is counterproductive to maintaining a person's over-all health. Each factor can severely damage a person's health, or significantly improve it. A person who has no friends, no loved-ones, will have poorer health habits. A homeless person with no job will have a poorer level of health. A person who does not eat healthy food will have a poorer level of health. Anyone who was ever been mentally-emotionally-sexually traumatized will also have a poorer level of health. People who live in an unhealthy environment of any sort will have a poorer level of health. Does a medical doctor even try to deal with these health issues? No. Spending less than three minutes with does not even give him a chance to find out about your medical problems... much less all your other imbalances and illnesses, and ailments that produced the result of your 'medical' illness.

Nothing happens for no reason. There is such a thing as Causality. This Universal Principle which has no exceptions is something that most people prefer not to look at, or admit, or face. If you are sick.... Then why are you sick? What are the causal reasons for it? What were the causal processes, actions-reactions that finally culminated in your physical illness? If you can find and trace reasons why you got sick, then it becomes perfectly understandable why you got sick. People actually believe that they get sick for no reason at all. People believe that health and sickness is mostly a matter of luck. There are perfectly good reasons why people get sick. If you ask enough questions about something, you will eventually find the answers.

But most people do not even want to ask these questions, especially not of themselves. Most people do not want to ask themselves anything. Instead of trying to listen to their own inner wisdom and instinct: they listen-to; and obey a total stranger: who spends less than three minutes with them, and tells them what is 'wrong' with them.

Huh? If a stranger on the street came up to you and tried to tell you what to do about your illness: would you listen to him? But people listen to Doctors because they have a Diploma. They have Status. They have Authority. They are Respected. They are Rich. They have special knowledge that is kept secret from you.

Their excuse is: that they do not have enough time to explain things because it is too complicated. They have too many other patients they need to destructively see. And treat like cattle in a meat-processing factory... just like they do you. Except their processing factory is not a slaughterhouse, but neat little sterilize cubbyholes. The actual grisly work of butchery is done elsewhere. Their victim must first go through an indoctrination of waiting. Waiting in waiting rooms. Then waiting in the cubbyholes. Until they are subdued enough for the Doctor to process them as fast as possible without them complaining that he is not giving them enough of his time because he is so, so busy. Until they succumb to their own fears, to their fear of dying... and finally resign themselves to whatever the doctor prescribes.

Then there is Invasive surgery... the last alternative. For hundreds of years: This butchery was a side-practice of lowly barbers . Now it has been sanctified, and given elite status. And turned into a sacred, ritual involving hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of tools, and tens of thousands of dollars worth of bills and expenses. But all of this fancy, expensive medical protocol hides the thousands of unscientific lies and corruptions, that have become institutionalized into modern Western healthcare. It hides the fact that Western Surgical Medicine kills more than it cures. It hides the fact that surgeons are butchers: and the ugly fact that Western Medicine is mostly a butchery.

You do not believe this? Search for the history of their surgery patients. What happened to these patients after they were admitted into the hospital.... How many of them got out alive? No hospital will give out this 'privileged' information. Otherwise: people might actually realize that hospitals are killing more people, than they are helping. Ask to see the follow up programs to see whether their patients are better off after their hospital care compared to their condition before they came in. They will attribute any negative result to the patient's illness. Not their treatment.

Once they leave a hospital; most patients are never looked at again. There is no follow-up to most hospital care. After they have your money, you are history. The only thing that they follow up on; is if you do not pay their exorbitant medical bills. In Los Angeles County alone... banks process over a thousand foreclosures a month due to the owners being sued for medical bills.

'We tried to help you... but you refused to die in our hospice as you should have... now we want to put you out onto the street and make sure that you die...'

Why is this dynamic so eerily a modern way to recreate the exact results and conditions of the first 'hospices' created in Holland? When the hospital employees went on strike in Los Angeles... the death rate went down... not up. Less people were dying in the city: because sick, dying people stayed at home: and lived longer.

Did this curious statistic change anything? No. People still go to hospitals when they are sick. Out of fear. And usually as a last resort. When you are afraid, you have no business trying to make any important decisions. When you have lived in a condition of fear all of your life: the fear of dying and death is so huge, that you do not make intelligent choices or decisions. Nor do people who are terrified of losing their loved-ones. Western Medicine uses fear... to charge more, to get the patient to buckle under, to agree to anything before they treat them. The fear of, illness, of death and dying is the medical industry's permanent advantage. It is not important if the doctor you go to is incompetent, or the hospital you go to is inept, or corrupt. You cannot afford to quibble with them when you are in pain and scared.

But mis-diagnosis, and missed diagnoses of illness is built into the entire Western tradition and culture and system. It cannot help but be bad for you... simply from how they process your illness. They use a standardized model! They assume that all humans respond identically to a drug. And then have to recall a drug when a bad reaction that did not show up in their studies shows up in the general population, or when a side effect does show up and they ignore its consequences.

Western medicine assumes that if all humans have: 'xxx' disease if they exhibit 'xxx' symptoms. If you were a car, and were mass produced in a factory... then this diagnostic model might be of some use. But ask any experienced mechanic. Even mass produced cars are not alike. Even mass-produced cars can exhibit identical symptoms, yet their mechanical illness can be caused by different things in each car. Even an automotive mechanic will not operate on a car unless they find out what the actual problem is. But car mechanics have a huge advantage in tracing, and finding out the root source of the car's mechanical illness. The car is not alive. They can rip things out of the car and inspect them. They can do standardized tests because the cars have been mass produced.

In case you don't know... humans are not mass-produced. Trying to diagnose any illness through a mass produced, standardized test; does not work on humans. You can't do exploratory surgery like you can on a car just to find out what the problem actually is. You can't rip out someone's liver to see what is wrong with it. But what do doctors do? They treat you worse than a mechanic treats a car. They do exploratory surgery and if you die, they still charge the dead person's family with their bill, they still manage to bilk people out of millions of dollars. Have you ever heard of a mechanic trying to fix a car, and then having to junk the entire car... and still charge you for trying' to fix it? No. People expect much more competence out of a mechanic than from a Medical Doctor. They expect the mechanic to first find what is wrong by an accurate diagnosis, and then to fix it without destroying the entire car. However, what do doctors do?

‘Hmmm...’ Studying the test reports.... Not you;

‘You have ‘xxx’ symptoms. Hmmm... I’ll have to see some more test results.’

And after the test results come in.

‘Ah. I see. Of course, you have ---... That is because your test result shows that you have... --- ----- “
Doing Tests, and ordering tests, and giving tests, by the way are how they make most of their money.

And their solution? ‘Here... take this pill.’

A chemical drug, sold to them by the Pharmaceutical Companies that designed your test... So it would result in a diagnosis that is supposed to be cured by their drugs... which they send to the doctor. And by the way... doctors make the rest of their money by prescribing the most expensive drugs possible.

Huh? You mean your doctor has no idea, not even a concept of what is wrong with you...? Unless it is the same identical condition someone else had? You mean the tests tell him, by confirming that you have an identical condition to millions of other people? So Modern Science, and Modern Medicine, and Modern Technology: can cure people by the millions... In a mass-procurement system, of mass-produced drugs, for a mass customer base, based upon a system of mass-diagnosis that assumes that all humans are identical machines?

They sure as hell hope so... because if this is wrong.... Boy are you in a lot of trouble... Oops. I forgot. If you die because of their mis-diagnosis, and treatment and drugs and tests... They will still be fine. Only those who survive their treatment this can complain about it. And those who are not sick yet; don’t know, and don’t care. Until they get old, and poor, and feeble, and senile. Is there an effective lobby of sick dying people in Washington? Only the survivors, only the surviving families ever try to fight the huge allied powers of the Medical Establishment, the American Doctors, the Pharmaceutical establishment, the Scientific establishment, the Chemical Corporations... so guess who wins? How many ‘laws’ and statutes have these power-groups put into the law books over the last 200 years to make sure that they will win?

Gee. How nicely convenient for them. This way they don’t have to waste any time talking to you. They don’t have to waste their time trying to find out what is really the matter with you. They don’t have to waste time getting to know you. They don’t have to waste time asking you any questions. They don’t have to do anything, except line you up as meek, mild sheep waiting to be fleeced of their money in their expensive waiting rooms. Talk about a convenient setup. Talk about a racket....

And if they do not find an instant answer to your medical ill-health, if your symptoms do not fit a standard profile, if you do not have the identical disease or malady etc, that millions of other have: if your illness is not identical to millions of other humans... then they throw up their hands and give up, and tell you they cannot find anything wrong with you, or that they cannot treat your illness, or tell you have nothing wrong with you, or tell you simply that they cannot help you... Which is one of the stupidest things they do, and even dumber yet... their patients go away frustrated but still believing in the all-powerful omniscience and wisdom of these quacks.

Their total indifference to sick people who do not fit their mass-profiling of standardized symptoms of illness is total B.S. How they actually delete these sick people from all of their statistics and data...

their complete ignoring of all human illness which is not inside their narrow definitions of illness is so disgustingly arrogant and blind; no words can describe this idiocy. No two humans are the same: no two illnesses are the same. No two symptoms are the same. Each one is unique and different from all the others. Trying to assume that the human body is an identical machine: there are no words to describe this kind of arrant nonsense.

So... one anonymous laboratory receiving thousands of anonymous samples can determine precisely what is wrong with you, and somehow decipher all of your unique symptoms? Which they never get, or bother with... that is supposed to be the doctor's domain. And your doctor merely has to memorize the standard protocol and treat you identically the same as all other patients with the same identical test-result?

Chinese medical books have at least 200 different tongue-sample pictures in their medical texts to give them a general indication of what may be wrong with you by looking at the color, texture of your tongue, the smell coming out of your mouth, that color of your teeth, the color and condition of your mucous membranes. All depending on the smell, the color, puffiness, whiteness and shape of your tongue. The Chinese system gives the doctor a choice of making over 200 different general diagnosis. The Western system however, only allows him to make two choices: Yes, or No. On, or Off. Malignant, or non-malignant. How can you expect this kind of mass-produced system of mass-diagnosis based upon two absolutes, and the assumption of identity... to work effectively and accurately? It can't.

By having trillions of dollars devoted only to physical-mechanical health-functioning: while the environmental-social-emotional-mental-spiritual aspects of human health are mostly disregarded. The imbalance of human health in the medical-health industry is glaringly obvious. This merely is an outcome of living in a tool-dominant society. Once mechanical functioning takes priority over human functioning: any holistic approach to human health is almost never even considered. While the time, energy and resources used to improve the tool-health of humans is so vast and all-pervading; I could not even begin to even generally outline them.

Hospitals keep on acquiring more fantastic, expensive machines. This only makes health-care more elitist so it becomes affordable only for the richest. If you try to deal with health selectively, you become incapable of dealing with crucial aspects of health that overlap each other. The more affluent and mechanized a society, the more sedentary, overweight and unhealthy its population becomes. Why walk when you can drive? Life becomes more specialized and segmented; exercise becomes separate from work, work becomes separate from socializing, socializing becomes separate from the family, the family becomes separate from the community. What we call health care is actually purely physical in its application; it is not human care, but only addresses the tool aspect of our functioning.

Why do we spend trillions of dollars exploring our Outer Universe and refuse to spend one penny on the deeply personal exploration of our inner selves, our Inner Universe... our subconscious, our soul? Where is the balance in that? Why are we humans afraid to undertake such an exploration? Because the comfort addiction of our tools helps us choose the easy way out. Rather than deal with any painful, unpleasant truths, rather than deal with any painful, difficult root issues: we just use more tools. Rather than go to the trouble of educating ourselves about our own bodies, and how to live healthy, balanced lives; rather than going to the trouble of eating a healthy diet, and exercising; we develop exorbitantly expensive machines to diagnose and treat illnesses which could have easily been avoided if were not so corrupted by our tool-ease. Now we expect doctors to fix us instantly... by giving us drugs and pills so we do not have to do anything even slightly difficult or unpleasant: like developing healthier living-eating-sleeping-exercise habits and lifestyles.

A necessary part of all-psychobiologic healing is forgiveness. To let go of whatever was done to you, you have to forgive whoever did it. But you can only forgive people, if you know what happened. If you can find out what actually happened, remember it, experience it, and fully understand what happened to you, is it possible to forgive.

But, if you yourself are in denial of what happened, if your memories are somehow blocked or distorted, you will never be able to fully forgive something you have never fully experienced and realized. The dynamic of forgiveness is exactly the same as all other psychobiologic healing. Every person has to re-experience whatever un-experienced, undigested, experiences-traumas-hurts they ever had in order to heal themselves. Re-experiencing that pain, digesting it, processing it, understanding it, is a process of forgiveness. The two are the same.

How does one do this? With the only human tools that we are born with: a sense of Pure Wonder, Honesty, Love and Courage. If you want to change, if you want to heal, and if you work at developing these human potentials within you, you can do it. There is no blueprint for human healing. Each person must untangle his or her own soul. Each process, each soul is unique. But once you yourself actually discover the amazing truth that you are capable of being creative... That you are infinitely creative, that you have always been infinitely creative: then nothing can stop you from healing yourself and others creatively. How many different ways can you eat a bowl of soup?

There are many kinds of pain-release and healing: on the cellular level, organ level, hormonal level, neuro-chemical level, muscle level, emotional level, and mental level. Many kinds of healing do not regard the total recall of experience as being necessary for true healing to occur. Their goal is simply to re-balance the organism in whatever way possible and leave it at that. If you can achieve that: a certain degree of healing will occur naturally.

Moreover, the repeated re-experience of painful experiences is like re-opening and exacerbating an old wound. Biological research supports this in a certain way. Posttraumatic stress disorder shows that people who have not integrated a traumatic experience do suffer from re-living it over and over without any beneficial result. Because the sub cortex takes over the brain's equilibrium mechanisms and only reinforces the original instinctive reflex responses in a closed, vicious cycle of stress response; which merely repeats itself as a mindless reflex. The reason this happens is because the person suffering from this disorder is not integrated enough to process their original trauma, and furthermore, have not even attempted to do so... nor do the medical professionals who deal with this disorder have the slightest idea of how to properly treat it since none of them have any understanding of how the human mind-body-heart-soul works and heals. The entire concept of exploring and healing your own Inner Self is completely absent from modern western Medicine. Because Western Medicine focuses only upon our mechanical functions, it is incapable of using any holistic approach and continues to ignore countless connective aspects of healing which can transform the entire process from a specialized, incremental form of healing; to one of total, all-inclusive health.

It is true that stress and trauma can be relieved and balanced on many levels, in many ways. But in the end, for the entire experience to be properly integrated into a person's psyche, it must be recalled and experienced completely; not partially... that is; depending on how much any person can assimilate at any point in their life. Usually, only bits at a time can be uncovered; that is merely a natural, gradual healing process. Psychobiologic healing depends on the level of health of the totality, how much pain or shock you can handle at any given time. Unfortunately, most humans live in a degree of such ill-health, their energy is so depleted, their stress levels are so high, that they never improve their over-all level of health enough so they never develop the extra energy, strength and resiliency needed for their bodies and psyche to gain a higher level of health. Nor do people willingly explore their traumatized inner selves.

But when any traumatic experience is finally experienced fully; then that experience as a whole can be integrated, understood, felt, realized, on many levels... and as it reverberates throughout the psyche, it can touch off an entire new spectrum of insights and perspectives... and go on to initiate more healing, by re-living other painful experiences that were never fully experienced. Once a painful, traumatic experience is fully experienced and recognized: it can be let go of completely. Even more importantly; it can also be recalled at will and used in all aspects and levels of a person's life and awareness. Then it becomes a rich resource of further learning, wisdom, understanding and insight. Throughout history; personal suffering has been the primary catalyst for any expansion of awareness, for the development of one's humanity, love, kindness, compassion, tolerance, for any universal understanding of other people. My objection to any partial form of healing is that it leaves out the infinite scope of increased awareness that only a complete understanding of our past can give.

The problem with any kind of empirical healing practice; is the inadequacy of approach and understanding. A perfect example is Chinese traditional medicine: which is a very practical method of healing developed from 1,000's of years of hands-on experience; that has been proven to work. So? Big deal. Has this teaching ever gone to the trouble of understanding more fully; just how and why it works? No! It still relies upon ancient, obsolete, Stone-Age metaphors, to explain its healing processes. Nobody has bothered to hook up these two huge reservoirs of modern and ancient medical knowledge and experience... when today, we have acquired a vastly improved understanding of biology and human health. Instead, we have an old, Stone-Age organic discipline: and a modern, scientific-age machine discipline. Neither supplies us with enough knowledge of the healing process to understand it better.

You cannot heal only organs, or only organic machine-functions and expect a significant positive result. You have to heal all facets of yourself, all aspects of yourself. That means healing your body, your heart, and your feelings, and thoughts as one whole. That means healing from every trauma you ever experienced in your whole life. Human health care does not even begin to address this. All traumas are damaging. Regardless if they are mental, physical, social, organic, emotional, or environmental.

The idea that any traumatic experience is too traumatic to fully re-experience: is pure bunk. It is only when a person becomes addicted to suffering, when they replay the tape of their trauma without integrating it, that re-living traumatic experiences are more harmful than good. If a person has buried a traumatic experience and stores it as muscle tension: finding a release for that muscle tension so it does not recur on a purely reflexive level is in my opinion; only a partial healing of the original trauma. Why? Because they have not gone to the root of their trauma. They have not experienced it fully with a full sense of Pure Wonder. They have not digested all of its consequences. They have not felt that trauma deeply enough to go through it completely. Re-living a traumatic experience only on a shallow, almost painless level; prevents the person from benefiting from the accrued wisdom of their own experiences. It prevents them from connecting their painful traumatic experiences to the rest of their life. Since most healing processes are gradual in nature: this over-all, general truth can be easily put aside if people are only looking for some partial relief of some partial aspect of their health. Deeper Healing takes Courage, Honesty, Love and a Sense of Pure Wonder to even happen.

In the end: for true healing to be fully attained, all the levels of health, all connectivity, must be balanced dynamically and integrated. Your cellular memory must connect to your muscle memory, as well as your instinctive memory, your subconscious memory, your emotional memory, and your intellectual memory. Human health is ultimately a totality; no matter how many ways we try to split it up.

The true reasons people do not willingly choose to even want to explore themselves or heal their inner selves as an integrated change: re-balancing of all aspects of their life... from environment, to diet, activities, attitudes, values, feelings, thoughts, physical health, sexual attitudes, social attitudes, can be found in the complex reasons and unique causes of each person's own history, situation, environment, unique biology and personality. But the major reason is the basic unwillingness to delve into any inner-awareness that is potentially painful. People shy away from this because of programmed-trained reflexive fear. Fear and pain are the deepest subconscious blocks to this path of self-exploration and increasing awareness. Very few people willingly choose anything that is painful: or willingly try to face what they fear.

How can you get people to willingly undergo something painful? How can you get them to realize that the painful process of healing and change is ultimately beneficial and good for them? Usually only when the pain of ill health becomes unbearable, only when the fear of dying comes up, only when illness reaches a crisis level do people try to change.

It is only the long, hard training of Courage, HONESTY and Love that can overcome this reluctance to change. Since these abilities are not taught and practiced, the necessary hardship of healing is never even attempted. Since there obviously is no easy solution to the process of self-change and self-healing: very little is done to approach this question except incrementally and mostly only in crisis situations. How do you get people to realize they need to step outside of their own normality? How do you get people to even want to do this? How do you get human awareness to be raised sufficiently... So people develop a realization that this even exists as a fundamental problem with their own awareness? What are the most practical ways of even approaching this question? The field is open to any and all suggestions, possibilities, attempts and solutions. The question remains: will this issue ever be tackled? Or will it be left to collect dust as an intellectual curiosity?

The question is not what is wrong with you, or what is bad or good, or what is healthy or unhealthy... the question is what are you missing? What are you missing in your life that will make you truly happy? What are you missing that will make you truly healthy? The entire question of Psychobiologic health is a matter of dynamic balance. If you are missing certain crucial key elements in your diet: you will never be completely healthy. If you are missing certain important vitamins, or minerals, or nutrients in your body: you will never achieve an optimum level of health.

If you are missing certain crucial social things in your life: you will never be socially healthy. If you are missing certain crucial mental things in your brain: you will never be mentally balanced. If you are missing certain crucial emotional things in your heart: you will never be emotionally healthy.

The problem of human health and happiness is a problem of deficiencies. The basic reason we are unhappy and unhealthy is because Civilization is deficient in nearly all of the crucial elements that make for a dynamically balanced, healthy, happy person. Even worse: Human Civilization never had them to begin with. We do not even know we are missing these crucial elements. We are not even aware of what we are deficient in. We are not aware of what civilization is deficient in. We are not aware of our own deficiencies.

Instead, we live inside finite, limited, deficient normalities, and never wonder if there is anything better. What wonder is it that humans are not aware there are so many things missing in their lives: when they have been missing for twelve thousand years? Due to the machine-culture we live-in: we are steadily losing our own humanity to the machine. As we make the mistake of replacing our human activities with machine ones. And we do not even miss it, or notice that our human self is slowly fading away. Does a bored child; playing video games for ten hours straight inside a house... ever miss going outside and climbing trees? How can they miss this kind of a challenge? When they never had a chance to climb one when they were younger, and full of energy and vitality... with the burning drive to climb, and clamber over everything they could find? If the motor skills of your child have not been actively challenged and stretched every day up until the age of five: the rest of their development will be equally stunted. Yet we think nothing of raising children in places where there are no trees and no challenges, and nothing to do, and drive them so crazy with boredom, so they play video games for ten hours straight. While parents shake their heads and wonder what is wrong with their children. When their own children have nowhere else to go? When they are not allowed outside? When they have nothing else to do that is even a little fun? What do you expect? Wake up.

Did their parents ever let them go out and climb trees? Did they ever live where children could go outside and play and climb trees? These parents never missed climbing trees either. Because they never climbed them when they were little. They have no idea of the fun, and excitement and challenge it is when you are little, and testing your abilities every day, and stretching them every day. They have no understanding or realization of how seriously they are damaging their own children by raising them in an environment that is so depleted of all healthy natural things... so deficient of all necessary elements for the raising of a healthy child... an environment that is so fake, so artificial, so abstract: that it is pure poison.

What are we deficient-in? How many things are we humans missing that we need? That are good for us? That make us healthy and strong and happy?

Millions of things.

Unless we try something different. Unless we expand our awareness. Unless we change how we live, unless we develop a Sense of Pure Wonder... we will never be aware of what those million things are that we are deficient-in. We will never become aware of what we need, we will never become aware of what we are missing: unless we develop a Sense of Pure Wonder.

Does Western Medicine know what causes any illness? No. Does Western Medicine know the causal root of any illness? No. Does it care that it does not know the root cause of any and all illness and diseases? No.

Western Medicine treats symptoms as causal roots. This is one example of how insane Western medicine actually is.

Unless you know the causal root of an illness.

You should not treat it at all. You should let it heal itself.

Unless you find the causal root.

If you find the causal roots of your illness... then you can treat yourself correctly.

If you make the wrong diagnosis: you may do something so seriously wrong: that your mistreatment, your mistaken conclusions coming from a missed diagnosis... can kill you faster and more effectively than the original illness. This is the main fucking reason Western Medicine kills more people than it heals. Does any fucking doctor or medical professional admit this unpleasant truth? No. Healing only works if you make the correct diagnosis. If you make the wrong diagnosis: you will not only not heal: you will probably make your illness even worse by mistreating it as something else. If your illness kills you. Then the Universe is telling you: that you are doing something seriously wrong to yourself. Until you find out what it is that you are doing wrong. You cannot heal yourself of the causal root of that illness. You can only destructively cover up the causal root of your sickness. By avoiding finding out what is actually wrong with you.

If enough people die from doing wrong things and living wrongly. If there is no artificial safety blanket, no artificial treating of symptoms. Then ten million people dying of obesity and cancer caused by eating processed food: will force humans to manufacture processed food. Then all humans will eat healthy, natural unprocessed food: and that will be the end of the bullshit hypocrisy called Medicine. If enough modern consumers become seriously sick in their teens and twenties; without being treated by Western Medicine. Then they will be forced to find out the causal roots of why they are so sick. Then the entire lifestyle of the modern consumer will be abolished and wiped out. And there will be an end to the bullshit hypocrisy called Capitalism.

If enough millions of people become sick from overwork, stress, etc... and die prematurely because of it, and become physical-mental-emotional wrecks... this will force humans to stop living in cities and working all their lives. And that will be the end of the bullshit hypocrisy called civilization.

But in order for this to happen... People must become introspective. They must ask themselves questions. They must doubt everything. They must live in a State of Pure Wonder. They must develop a Sense of Wrongness. And a Sense of Rightness. They must develop an ethical sense, a moral sense, a physical sense, an emotional sense of wrongness and rightness. They must become sensitized to their own bodies, they must become sensitized to the world around them. They must become sensitized to the people around them. Instead of becoming brutalized and numbed, and desensitized to everything inside and outside them.

How insane and how corrupt is Western Medicine?

Put it this way: the largest cash business in the world today: is pornography. More people spend more money on pornography than on anything else.

But sexual illness does not exist in western medicine. Western Medicine turns a blind eye to all sexual dysfunctional practices. Western medicine is too filled with shame and hypocrisy to ever deal honestly with one of the most basic human drives: sex. Western Medicine pretends that sex does not exist. That most of the affluent people in the world who have money: are not sick sexually, that they are not spending it on sexual pornography. Western Medicine is also pretending that mental illness does not exist. As far as Western Medicine is concerned: the only illness that exists: are illnesses that are physical in nature. That is insane.

Western Medicine turns a blind eye and a dead heart to people who do not have its specific brand of physical symptom-illness, or problem. Western Medicine washed its hands of 41/2 billion poor people a long time ago: and now is still trying to pretend that these 41/2 billion people do not exist and have no illness.

Western Medicine turns a blind eye to its own insanity. Western Medicine is blind to all pain and all suffering. Western Medicine is an unfeeling horror... which only those who disappear into its maws find out when they are coldly and systematically put through the system and killed and poisoned and operated upon until they are mindless insane gibbering wretches. Barely kept alive and breathing. Words cannot describe the evil that Western Medicine is. Words cannot describe the destructiveness of Western Medicine.

Go inside a Western Hospital and see what they actually do there. See if you can stand it for one week before you vomit and run out of the building. Only the strongest stomach: only people who are so emotionally dead that the pain of others does not exist for them, only people who are so mentally detached that they are clinically psychotic: have the kind of personality that can work in a Western Hospital. And even then: they break down and leave and quit... over and over... as new brainwashed believers in Western Medicine fill their shoes... and then quit... over and over.

The reasons Western medicine does not work is because it is based upon the wrong principles, it uses the wrong dynamics, it uses the wrong assumptions.

For instance: take the miracle cure of the new Sulpha drugs discovered during the Second World War. These antibiotics do not kill germs. They only help to heal a wound because it is white and in a powder form. If Science did a comparative study on the curative properties of Sulpha drugs by trying 100 other things that are pure white and in a powder form: they would find that all of them have the exact same curative properties as Sulpha drugs. Ordinary white flour in powder form will be found to cure infected wounds even better than Sulpha white powder.

Why will Science find this to be true? Because your body and every living thing recognize that the color white: is the last color in the healing stages of a self-healing wound. By putting white powder into the wound: this fools the body into thinking that the wound has progressed so far in its healing that it is already almost completely healed. It gives signals for all the healing agents in the body to catch up to this non-existent, nearly healed part of the wound. All the infection-bacteria once they get the signal that white pus has been found in the wound: give up trying to infect the wound further: because they have already been genetically brainwashed to react like this for a billion years. Your G-nomes... all G-nomes are genetically brainwashed to interpret chemical-hormonal-organic conditions in your body and react accordingly. If your body is getting the message that it is almost healed in that wound: it will simply oblige and make the false interpretation actually true.

If this study is ever done in a lab: on humans with infected wounds: this single study will explode modern science and destroy the entire reason for Western medicine to even exist. It will be thrown out completely: and good riddance to it. Hospitals will be burned to the ground or used as schools for children who will put life energy back into the surroundings.

Psychobiologic Pain

All psychobiologic pain is blinding. All psychobiologic pain cuts down the range of our awareness and narrowly focuses it upon whatever is painful. Or... if we choose to numb it, avoid it: then we must ignore and not be aware of anything that is connected to this pain which further dulls our senses and awareness and understanding. Psychobiological pain dulls our senses. Psychobiological pain reduces and limits the range and sensitivity of our awareness. If you refuse to explore this pain, if you do not know why you even have it in the first place, where it came from, how it happened, why it continues to happen, how much of it you have... then what wonder is it that people do not understand themselves...?

What wonder is it that they do not even realize they have a disposable ego that is unnecessary? What wonder is it that they do not know just how unaware they are? What wonder is it that most people do not even know that they exist in a condition of pain? Pain is the blind spot of your awareness: unless you face that pain and try to deal with it, everything that pain is connected-to; you will be blind-to. You cannot follow your joy, your bliss, your ecstasy your happiness, your hope... unless you also follow your pain, your fear, your sadness, your loneliness and your hopelessness. As honestly and as courageously as possible. There is no such thing as one-sided happiness.

Joseph Campbell of PBS fame: very neatly left that out of his over-simplified dictum he called: 'Follow your Bliss'. He knew that if he added any unpleasantness to it whatsoever... then people would not even try to 'Follow their Bliss'. That is the insane imbalance of consumer society. It tries to develop only one half of the human condition: the easy half. And you wonder why Consumers always try to get something for themselves, and find after they get it; they are not happy. And you wonder why Consumers are never satisfied? They are missing the other half of their life; and they do not even know that it is missing.

This does not mean that you should focus only on hardship, and not pleasure. You need to do both in a balanced way. Trying to find that balance, is what makes Living an Art-form. The point is: whatever proportion of ease and hardship you have in your life, the more you replace ease with hardship, the healthier you get. The higher the level of hardship, the more powerful you become.

Once you become used to a higher level of hardship... then it stops being a hardship. It becomes easier... it becomes normal. Then you seek a higher level of hardship. Until that becomes normal also. This way you can never get bored. Because no matter what challenge or goal you reach or overcome: you can always find something more difficult, more challenging, more fun and more exciting.

But if you seek to have an easier life... then your life will only get more boring. Then you will become less healthy, less powerful, less interesting, more boring, and weaker... until you become completely spoiled, arrogant, stupid and senile.

If you live with a sense of Pure Wonder, and use all the potential of your instinctive wisdom and intuition, and all the potential of your subconscious wisdom and intuition, and all the potential of your conscious wisdom and intuition... then you will be able to dynamically, and creatively balance these two main aspects of being human. The problem is that people only pursue physical-mechanical pleasures; and not emotional-mental-spiritual-physical pleasure as a totality.

Pain as a only a physical-mechanical experience is worthless. Pain just as physical-mechanical pleasure is worthless. Only when you experience your pain, and happiness by trying to connect both of them together can you even begin to try to balance them dynamically. If people did not live in civilized societies; then they would not be in pain in the first place. The pain we suffer from is a 12,000 year-old phenomenon: not a genetic inescapable fate... it is the pain of living too easy a life. The pain of boredom. The pain of frustration. The pain of weakness. The pain of ill health.

Boredom and Pain

How much of all psychobiologic pain is simply the pain of not using all of our faculties, abilities and potentialities? How much of all psychobiological pain is merely the pain of using less than 1% of our brain's capacity? Recent studies have shown that most pain is psychological, not physical. How much of that pain is mental? How much of it is emotional? How much of it is both? How much of that pain resides within our subconscious? Has there ever been any human who reported experiencing any pain when they were not bored? If there was no boredom: could that in itself, eliminate nearly all psychobiological pain?

If all psychobiological pain is a product of boredom: when did it first originate? When the first walking ape made the first boring, repetitious actions in order to make the first tools? Could it be, that all human psychobiological pain comes from using tools too much? Could it be that if we used less tools: our psychobiological pain would diminish? Has this ever been tested? If we use less than 1% of our brains' capacity to use tools and think like tools: how are we supposed to use the rest of our brain? How can we use 100% of our brains' capacity every waking moment of every day? Not by using tools: that's for damn sure. Has anyone tried to find this out?

Looking back at any time in your life: how can you tell whether you were happy or not... when were you really happy? When you were not bored, and when you were not in pain, when you were not doing something you did not want to do, when you were not in an uncontrollable situation, when you were not in a life-threatening crisis, when you were not in fear, when you were not scared, when you were not under intolerable stress. Take away all of these unhappy conditions of civilized existence and what is left? A few rare moment of true happiness? Or never even knowing what true happiness is because you have never experienced it? Is that a good reason to value a tool-oriented lifestyle?

Love, Healing, Dynamic Balance, and Causality

A single length of thread can demonstrate the linear dynamic of causality. If you hold up a length of thread with one end representing the single cell you developed from, and the other end representing you at the present moment: then that thread will represent the entire causal history of your life. If that thread is unbroken: then you will be able to take anything and everything that ever happened to you and integrate it into the rest of your life. Thus: developing an integrated understanding of all your experiences. But if the causal thread of your life is broken up, if the causal threads of your thoughts-feelings-actions are split-up, separated, segmented, unconnected, if at any time during your life any traumatic experience made you separate your feelings from your thoughts, your feelings from your body, or your thoughts from your body: then you stop being able to grow-learn-change: just as a plant stops growing once its stem is cut. No matter how vague this dynamic may sound: it is the only practical approach to dealing with any human healing. If you do not understand the simple principle of connectivity, if you do not attach any importance to this basic concept, if you do not value it highly: you will find yourself at a loss... unable to understand your own life, or the root causes of your own problems, or how to deal with them. If you do not use this root-dynamic: no true healing can happen. Healing only comes from connecting things, understanding them in a larger context, and balancing them. Healing is understanding... understanding is healing. That is precisely what every electron, every atom, every hydrocarbon molecule, every enzyme, every oxygen molecule, every fat molecule, every hormonal molecule does inside every living organism: they all seek to understand the larger context of their surroundings and balance themselves in it. They all seek to understand how best to interact with their neighbors; they all seek to find the highest dynamic balance possible. Everything in the Universe: from Galaxies to Quarks: is continually, actively, doing the same thing: dynamically balance itself to the largest context possible.

Love, Courage and Honesty

The evolving change of how people relate to each other and in what context, and why, can be put into the context of our tool evolution. As nomadic foragers who only required 2-3 hours a day for the gathering and preparation of food, living in small bands: the necessity of cooperation, the long-term nature of these relationships needed in their mutual survival... in this context the necessity and practicality of the human skills and values of love, courage, and honesty are obvious.

But inside civilization: who needs human Courage; when your survival is based mostly upon your mechanical skills? When you are protected by all the advantages of a civilized society from the elements of Nature? What human-based honesty is required in performing tool-skills? Where is honesty needed in civilization? In the honest ability to count and read?... That is mechanical honesty, not human or emotional honesty. If you spend more than 2-3 hours a day practicing your tool skills and have less long-term relationships and less time to develop any: what need is there for you to develop your ability to love in order to survive inside civilization? How much does the need to compete overshadow the need to cooperate?

Quite simply: by the over-development and use of tools: civilization has made the human development of Love, Courage and Honesty a secondary concern, a secondary activity... with most of ones time and energy spent on the development and use of tool-skills rather than human skills. People are fired from their jobs due to their inability to perform mechanically: not due to their lack of humanity. Love, Honesty, and Courage; are the only aspects of human awareness that can overcome and undo the imbalances of human self-deception, denial, reality, belief, corruption. The courage to connect rather than separate, the willingness to do so, the intent of finding connections, seeking them out; are all only different aspects of the Sense Of Pure Wonder. The difference between wanting to find out the actual truth no matter how painful... and wanting only to find a way of rationalizing one's own inbred prejudices and beliefs, is totally dependent upon one's own level of love-courage-honesty and pure wonder. This in turn determines the level of connectiveness at which each person's awareness exists. Your own self-understanding determines how well you understand others. It determines the level of closeness, intimacy and trust on which you deal with others and yourself. It determines how much you can love yourself and how much you can love others.

One reason for fear is dishonesty. If you have a mistaken or distorted view of the world, of yourself, of others: then anything that threatens to contradict or conflict with this also threatens the integrity of your self-identity. Any person unwilling to change their understanding of anything usually does so because they are clinging to some abstract idea, or belief, or value that is not actually true. A person who is completely honest cannot be emotionally or mentally hurt, because they are not trying to cling to any false beliefs or values. Being honest means being totally open to change. The only time you can emotionally or mentally hurt a person is if you upset their false impressions and expectations. Or if you do not raise a human fetus-infant-child-adolescent as it was designed to be raised. Or if you treat any human in any uncaring, inhuman manner that they were not designed to be treated.

The more honest a person is, the less fearful they are, the less defensive they are; and the less they have anything to be deceived about. Honest people can be easily misled, lied-to and deceived: because they assume that everyone else is also honest. But... no matter how much others lie to them: an honest person will invariably find out the truth, because they are always questioning themselves. They are always seeking the truth. Honest people are truth seekers. Truth seekers are people who are trying to be as honest as possible. Honest and truth are basically the same thing. Truth seekers are constantly doubting, questioning, wondering comparing and double-checking what they think they know and understand... and never, ever take anyone else's 'word' as a final 'authority. They never ever believe that 'what is written' is necessarily true. They their own final authority on truth.

By civilization erecting linear-abstract-normalities-values-concepts, it becomes impossible to develop, practice or teach complete honesty. The main reasons for the existence of secrecy is either advantage or fear. The only reason for advantage is the pyramidal structure of civilization. If there were no secrets, it would be impossible to take advantage of others. All secrecy is merely a refusal to connect. All denial-secrecy-dishonesty is a refusal to connect. All avoidance of pain is the refusal to experience-connect. All avoidance of pain, all refusal to experience-connect, all denial-secrecy-dishonesty works by the same dynamic; namely the dynamic of separation.

If you examine why people are secretive, you will find the same root reasons: hate, fear, cowardice and greed. These roots are interconnected. Fear of emotional pain translates into emotional cowardice. Fear of poverty translates into greed. The greed of wealth translates into fear of others robbing you of it. All hate is fear-pain-hurt projected outwards. Any kind of addiction can be traced down to psychobiologic pain: all pain creates fear. The pain of spiritual emptiness is never even spoken of. Yet it exists universally within all humans. All of these elements are at work in the process of human corruption. In order to understand how the human soul works you must understand your own soul. When you deal with one aspect of the human condition, you must deal with all of it as a totality. And you cannot understand the totality of your own condition unless you understand the condition of the greater totality which you exist in: civilization. So you can see and understand the process of. silence-secrecy-pain-fear-hate-greed:reflected-magnified-distorted... abstractively creating norms, normality, .nonawareness-disconnection-abstraction-numbness-dehumanization-deadness-denial-rationalization-belief-reality. All conditions which you are born into and involuntarily develop. All conditions of civilization.

Because of conscious dishonesty, lying, denial, evasion, self-deception, rationalizing; then any truth that people do not wish to face becomes too 'brutal' to face... too violent. It is necessary to be brutally honest when there is a direct conflict that goes against any truth. On the other hand, when people actually want to be honest, then it is easy to be gentle: because everyone is working in the same direction. Then there is no opposition, no conflict... Then it is just a merging river of truth, all flowing in the same, and all mixing together. Not a huge cataclysmic violence of two opposing forces. You cannot blame truth for being too truthful... or as people put it: "too brutal"... You can only blame yourself for trying to oppose it, or not being able to accept it. Universal truths are multi-directional, they have many levels of meaning, they are not dogmatic, they are not linear, they have no single meaning or use, they are not defined in an either-or context. As a result, they do not oppose lies, half-truths, false beliefs, and imbalanced lifestyles... they just effortlessly go around them and ignore them... leaving the imbalanced energies alone. This is why living your life by slave-truths makes you unhappy and always striving, struggling, and living your life by universal truths lets you avoid unnecessary hardship, unnecessary ease, unnecessary unhappiness, unnecessary conflict, unnecessary struggle and stress.

What about truths that people are not ready to face? Not able, not prepared?... These perceptions are all excuses for people who simply do not want to change, grow or be honest. There is no such thing as an indigestible truth. There are only people who refuse to digest them. However, the process of unfolding truth inside each person does have its own sequence and timetable. Whichever truth you need to digest first before you digest the next one is different for each person. If you do not arrogantly choose to oppose the entire energy-flow of the Universe, if you do not choose to oppose the truths of your own soul, you will not be in a state of complete conflict with yourself and with the Universe. Instead you will be in a state of lessening conflict. The more truthful you become; the less conflicted you become. But how do you discern between an actual truth and the entire 12,000-year mess of civilized beliefs-abstractions-myths-rationalizations? By never stopping the process of questioning and of wondering. By always trying to be aware of what context you put a truth into. If a truth is not universally true: then it is a flawed truth, a partial truth.

Love, COURAGE and Honesty are all based upon the Sense of Pure Wonder. Once you split yourself into unconnected aspects, once you split the way you relate to other humans, once you can treat an employee, a customer, a clerk, as a mere cipher, then you have also split-destroyed not only your own connectiveness, your own ability to love, trust, to change, grow, learn, but you have also split-destroyed your own humanity, your ability to be a whole person. It is only by living as a whole person with a whole sense of Pure Wonder without splitting it up into conflicted segments that people can develop their own humanity.

What this means is that there is no such thing as an objective fact-truth. Any truth that is split-off from a totality becomes a split-off truth, a half-truth a partial truth, a non-truth. All truth is contextual. To only focus upon any single fact or unconnected truth is a form of falsity. That is why all kinds of specialized knowledge are insane. That is why all of science is insane. That is why human justice is hopelessly insane... that is why it is incapable of understanding the why of anything... because it never puts anything into the proper context. Instead, it attempts to impose absolute laws-labels such as: yes-no, right-wrong, guilty-innocent. That is why if you criticize a person about one aspect of their humanity without taking into account the person as a whole, then you are lying to yourself by distorting your own perception of that person selectively. Only by trying to understand the person as a whole and putting any single aspect into a larger perspective, can you arrive at any deeper truth or insight of that person. Being as honest as possible means being totally honest in the largest context possible.

In other words; the wider, the more inclusive, and the more sensitized your awareness becomes; the more honest you become. And you can only do that in a Condition of Love, Courage and Pure Wonder. These three aspects of the human condition can only be properly balanced in a state of pure wonder. It is interesting to note that these three roots of humaneness have nothing whatsoever to do with any abstract-civilized-cultural-religious values. By this, I mean that you could strip someone naked of every civilized attribute, and they could still retain these three basic, human, genetic qualities: they could still retain their innate humanity.

The general aspects of Love-Courage-Honesty, work as a Triality. No single aspect of this Triality can exist without the other two aspects. You cannot have Love without Courage and Honesty. You cannot have Honesty without Love and Courage. You cannot have Courage without Honesty and Love.

Furthermore: you cannot have any of them without a Sense of Pure Wonder. The problem is: that these three basic aspects of humanity and humaneness are not needed to survive inside civilization. In fact, they are often a hindrance to any success in the world. As a result: they are never really developed because they are not really needed to succeed in a tool-dominant society. The more civilized society becomes: the less value is placed upon the human qualities of love, courage and honesty. In aboriginal tribal societies, these qualities often determined a person's social standing because they were also crucial to the survival of the group. But in civilization: this is no longer as true.

The instant you become able to separate yourself into unconnected thoughts, feelings and actions: you have destroyed your own self-integration as a whole person. That is exactly what civilization trains people to do. By splitting up the human psyche into unconnected segments: it becomes possible to deny any truth whatsoever. All denial is simply a refusal or inability to connect... which is merely an act of conscious separation. As long as humans have a selective awareness which they can control and manipulate, they can selectively choose to ignore and deny any truth, any fact they want to.

If your love-courage-honesty is integrated, then you are able to digest truths even if they are painful. If your love-courage-honesty is not developed, not integrated: you are unable to digest-realize truths: especially if they are painful or unpleasant it is the integration of your self, your psyche, your personality, your soul, your spirit that determines which truths you can handle and which ones you can't. So... How many dynamics are involved here?

- No. 1: Instinct-Subconscious-Conscious
- No. 2: Inner Awareness-Observer-Outer Awareness
- No. 3: Thought-Feeling-Action
- No. 4: Honesty-Love-Courage
- No. 5: Dishonesty-Hate-Cowardice

Do you begin to see the incredible complexity of it all? And the incredible delicate dynamic balance required to keep it balanced, and nurture and develop a sense of pure wonder? A sense of inner wonder?... And outer wonder? And then integrating both into a totality of Pure Wonder? When you can do that: you get Pure Fun, Pure Love, Pure Honesty, Pure Courage, Pure Creativity, Pure Intuition, Pure Wisdom... you get an integration of Pure Spontaneous Fun-Love-Creativity-Wisdom-Intuition-Honesty-Courage.

The Triality of the Human Condition

The three aspects of the human condition can be described as a Triality:

All of these aspects are interrelated and interconnected to: how courageous you are emotionally and how honest you are in dealing with your emotions determines how deeply you feel them. How courageous you are in dealing with your thoughts and how honestly you connect them to your emotions determines how deep your insights will be. How closely your actions are connected to your emotions and thoughts determine how noble or despicable those actions are. This Triality however, is also split into the inner and outer universe of our awareness. Outer honesty-courage-love, and inner honesty-courage-love. When you have an imbalance in these two Trialities, you get destructive selflessness, or destructive selfishness. This imbalance is a universal condition in all humans: our inner universe is less developed than our outer one. That is why physical courage, physical honesty, physical love, the fear of death-dying, the fear of physical outer pain is sometimes overcome... while the fear of inner pain is rarely overcome.

That is why exterior bravery in a physical-mechanical battle is common; while the arena of Inner Honesty-Courage-Love is consistently feared, avoided, and not dealt-with. The reason for this, is that you cannot separate this inner Triality into unconnected segments without losing your Humanity. To develop Inner Honesty-Courage-Love, you must go through the painful process of Inner Healing and Integration. When these three aspects of humanity are all connected, then they become an integrated experience... which must also then be integrated into all your other experiences. This is the process of digesting experience.

A: Balancing and integrating both Inner and Outer Experiences.

B. Integrating and balancing them into your Totality of Experiences.

The result of this compressed, simplified integration is; Wisdom. If there is any disconnection between these three aspects, you get an imbalanced, un-integrated experience. If you react only emotionally or only mentally to something: then they are either emotionally, or mentally disconnected from yourself. But if you consciously choose to disconnect yourself from either an unpleasant emotion, or a painful thought: then you are practicing either emotional, or mental cowardice... then you are practicing either emotional, or mental dishonesty. If you only act on a feeling without thinking through your feeling... or your actions are only based upon thoughts, and not feelings: then you are either emotionally, or mentally disconnected from your own actions.

But if you consciously choose to disconnect any emotion or thought from your actions because it is too painful, or unpleasant: then your actions are dishonestly... then your actions are cowardly. If you experience something only mentally or only emotionally: you are experiencing it only partially. If you feel something and do nothing about it... or think and do nothing about it: then you are living unconnectedly, you are living as a coward, dishonestly, and unlovingly. The business of connecting these elements into a cohesive whole takes work, practice, effort and focus. If you do not consciously work to connect your own thoughts to your emotions and actions: then you end up developing all kinds of cowardly, dishonest habits and practices: you will develop all kinds of ways to avoid unpleasant experiences, unpleasant truths, unpleasant thoughts and unpleasant actions. You will develop all kinds of mental, emotional, physical dissociative skills and abilities. You will become able to rationalize your own lies to yourself, and convince yourself that your own lies are not lies but the truth.

Only by constantly comparing, relating, connecting, and evaluating your thoughts, feelings, and actions to each other... only by constantly doubting yourself, asking yourself questions... only by constantly looking at things in new, different, fresh perspectives... only by including all the pieces of the puzzle of yourself together and looking at all of your feelings-thoughts-actions, and trying to understand them as a whole: can you ever start understanding yourself and other people better. This is the basic work all people need to do... every day of their lives...in order to become more humanly connected. But in order to do so, you have to go looking for what is missing. Where are the missing connections? What do I feel, but never think of? What do I think of, but never feel? Do I think before I act? Do I act without thinking? Or without feeling? What do I feel about what I am doing? Because when you act: you should also be thinking and feeling in a balanced way. This is the art of living; this is why you need a Sense of Wonder.

How can people integrate themselves? By finding their balance point: that center of their awareness in their own subconscious. By unraveling all of the unasked questions and clues that lie in their own subconscious. By trying to become more aware of what they are doing-feeling-thinking. By asking themselves: 'Why and how am I doing this-feeling that-thinking this?' The trouble is, people split up these three aspects without bothering to connect them at all. And if they do: they do so in a linear, segmented fashion. But when a person becomes integrated, then these three aspects happen simultaneously. The result is creative spontaneity and intuitive insight. The result is laughter, fun, joy. Then living-life-experiencing flows effortlessly. When you do that successfully: you end up living in a state of Pure Wonder. Human society does not train people how to do this. It trains them how to use tools instead. It trains them to use their brains as tools. It does not teach them how to be creatively human or how to live in a state of pure wonder. It is literally the in-betweenness of all this... the dynamic balance of it all, that determines how well or badly it works, how happy or unhappy you are, how sensitized or deadened your awareness is, how simple or complicated your life is, how wisely or unwisely you act, how deep or superficial your awareness is, how intuitive or unaware you are. It is much more fun to be spontaneously creative all the time, than having to plan, work, spend most of your life using tools to do a few specialized functions. Humans have not yet evolved to the level of pure wonder-fun, where spontaneous creativity is natural and doesn't need to be worked at, replicated or duplicated. But once you see all life, all living, as just fun, once you see no reason to stifle or suppress your impulses, once you are in tune with your instinctive self: then having fun becomes naturally spontaneous and creative... and being naturally creative becomes fun. Then there would be no need or desire to preserve any creative act or product. If you know that you are creative, if you can be creative with anything in any way; then why waste time trying to preserve some old-dead creativity when you can have much more fun being spontaneously creative all the time... when the process of learning-wonder-creativity is more far more enjoyable than any form of replicated, repeated, preserved, dead product of creativity?

The crucial difference between humaneness and inhumanity is simply a question of connection and balance: you can see this acted out every day in ordinary life. Ask yourself each day: Do you love more than you hate? Are you more courageous than afraid? Are you more dishonest than honest? Do you mostly exist in the numbed state of mechanical functioning? That is; a condition of separation, non-feeling, indifference. Do you function more as a mechanical machine, or as a human?

Then there are the determining factors of ego and fear. How much of your life is controlled by your ego? How much of your life is controlled by conscious or unconscious fears? What do others evoke in you? What do you evoke in others? How connected are your feelings to your actions and thoughts? How disconnected are you from yourself? From others? The impersonality of complete detachment and indifference is just as damning a proof of inhumanity as active hate, dishonesty or cowardice. It is merely a condition of separation. It is the curse of only existing and functioning mechanically. How much are you separated from yourself? How much are you separated from others? How much separation do you practice in your dealings with others? All separation that is practiced without connection is ultimately a form of inhumanity.

What if people examined themselves by these guidelines? What would they find? How flawed is any self-examination by the lack of perspective, honesty, courage, love or wonder? How can any self-examination have any perspective, accuracy or truth if there is not any honest feedback from others? How intimate or close do people need to be with each other for the balance to be tipped towards love, courage and honesty instead of hate, cowardice and dishonesty or indifference? How much connectiveness do people lack in themselves and in their lives?

How much connection-closeness there exists between people determines their level of happiness or misery. If, as in modern tool-society, the disconnect between people, the separation is so huge that there exists no true closeness between people: then true happiness cannot exist. If, on the other hand, human social inter-actions are based upon equality, intimacy, trust and cooperation: then true happiness can exist. There is no way around it: tool-use and being human are two separate aspects that need to be recognized as crucial components of existence. How they interact and affect each other must be studied in depth. This basic question must be looked at in as many different perspectives as possible. Because ultimately, these two aspects determine what kind of life you have, how you live it, what you do, why you do it, how happy you are, and the future of humanity. If you want to live in a humane society instead of a tool society; then people should live in love, surrounded by love all the time, loving those who they live with and spend time with.

Love should be the social norm: not tool-use, or work; not functioning mostly as a tool and relating to others on the basis of separation-fear-indifference. However, this is simply not possible in a tool-intensive culture. It is an unreachable, unattainable ideal... a completely impractical utopia. You cannot be loving all the time if you spend most of your hours as an engineer, or mopping floors: in civilization, in work; tool functioning, is far more important. The only way the fundamental condition of human existence can change is if the fundamental principles of civilization are also changed. No tool society will allow you to explore the hard-nosed, practical questions of what you should do with your life, how you should live it, what kind of society you would like to live in....

As long as accumulation is worshipped; 10,000 years of dead detritus will crush any attempt to upset that historical accumulation of old ideas, old cultures, old ways of living, thinking, etc...

Within this social context of machine civilization: the question of individual dynamic balance that is crucial to the happiness of each person: as they live second-by-second cannot even be addressed, much less dealt with. The balance between love-numbness-indifference and outright hatred is never looked at. The balance between honesty-denial-and outright dishonesty is never faced. The balance between courage-action-procrastination-inaction, and outright cowardice is never spoken of. Most of human existence lies in the nether-world of separation. Most of human existence consists of the in-between world of numbness, indifference, denial, procrastination, inaction and the refusal to act, feel or think connectively. We do not feel connectively. We do not think connectively. We do not act connectively. This is the kind of machine-like, tool-existence that civilization fosters.

Ultimately, all forms of inhumanity are caused by separation and insulation without any connectiveness. The degree to which a person is separated from anything is also the degree to which they do not identify with whatever they are separated from. And the degree to which they are separated from anything is also the degree to which they act-feel-think separately and destructively.

Take the example of life: it is a continuous unbroken process-flow of regeneration. If a woman is pregnant and is not fully connected to her fetus, she may decide to have an abortion because she does not fully identify with her fetus as being human. While a dictator like Stalin was so separated from other humans, thought nothing of killing 20 million of his own countrymen. But all life is continuous; there is no exception to this. Since most people live in cities separated almost completely from Nature: they think nothing of cutting down and killing millions of trees each year. A human fetus, 20 million Russians or 20 million trees: they are all acts of killing: they are all acts of separation: they are all a discontinuation of the regenerative process of life. But humans do not view their acts of killing as simply a one-sided act of separation because they are not connected to what they kill. They do not act-feel-think connectively about what they are doing. If a woman has a deeply personal connection to her own unborn fetus, she will not be able to kill it. If Stalin had been deeply and personally connected to his own countrymen, he would not have been able to kill a single one of them. If people lived in the forest all their life, then they would not be capable of killing the trees that surround them. Rather than see the interconnectivity of all life; humans view things separately. By existing in a condition of separateness, of separate deeds, thoughts and feelings, humans end up being destructive towards themselves and all Life.

The most horrible, destructive, inhumane power that all humans possess is the power to separate without forming a balancing connection. This destructive power is used every day in civilized societies by everyone. This destructive ability dehumanizes nearly all our social interactions. As long as people are trained to develop this ability, the dehumanization of civilization, or more correctly: the turning of people into machines, will continue. You can see this in all human transactions involving money, wealth, power, knowledge and social status.

It is the trained and developed ability to separate your emotions from your thoughts and actions.

It is the power to separate your thoughts from your emotions and actions.

It is the power to separate your actions from your emotions and thoughts.

It is the power to function and act like a machine instead of a feeling-thinking-acting-alive-living integrated human animal.

We train ourselves, we develop and use this destructive, dehumanizing power until we can do it instantly at any time to anyone, or anything. How? By working, by doing a job, by functioning only mechanically for hours, days, weeks, years. If your job is to drive a truck, fix pipes, or punch a cash register; you are acting like a machine and not like a human. Each specialized job, or career can only be done if you stop being an integrated human and dehumanize yourself by doing separate mechanical functions... by detaching your brain, from your body, and your emotions. Any specialized tool function, any specialized ability that does not allow you to use all of yourself in an integrated fashion is dehumanizing. It is this universal tool-dynamic of detachment which is responsible for all of man's inhumanity towards man and towards the Earth.

If your job; how you earn a living is to cut down trees or sell them, or anything made from that wood... if your job is to produce oil, sell cars, or manufacture something, if you act as an authority figure, or act only narrowly, or think only narrowly, or feel only narrowly: you are dehumanizing yourself while you are destroying the Earth... because you are detached from yourself...and what you are doing. You are not connecting all the dots inside yourself, inside your society. You are not making the connections which will enable you to become more aware of what you are doing and the consequences of your thoughts-feelings-actions. By successfully specializing-limiting-separating-stunting-destroying all human creative potential and awareness; civilization has turned humans into mindless specialized insects who have no greater awareness or understanding of what they are doing, or why they are doing it, or how they are doing it and what the consequences of what they do.

Every act of separation inside the human psyche, every separated thought, every separated action, every separated feeling produces non-awareness and numbness. This destroys all higher sensitized sensations and perceptions. It produces the separated, numb, non-feeling, non-thinking actions that allows a person to be inhumane and destructive by simply doing his "job": simply by doing only one thing, thinking only one thing, feeling only one thing.

But even worse is the total separation and total destruction of our human qualities and potential. You can call it by many names: indifference, apathy, voyeurism, being a spectators, audiences, non-participation, smugness, arrogance, alienation, disempowerment, etc... once you are totally separated from yourself: once you are totally separated from others, from your society; you become even more destructive. Once your integration is destroyed, then you have the power to feel nothing, think nothing, do nothing: you have the power to become a complete inactive, non-thinking, non-feeling blob: a dead, resting tool. And that corruption is spreading like wildfire throughout all highly industrialized societies. One example is the term: couch potato. Somebody who only sits like a vegetable in front of a TV, and allows themselves to be distracted or entertained by abstract images on a two-dimensional screen.

By mechanizing our society, we have effectively dehumanized it, and turned ourselves into machines. And since this is considered normal; there is no outcry, no outrage at what has happened and what is happening to our society and to people. The power of tools-machines to destroy human feelings-thoughts-actions is simply not looked at or considered. Instead, we only look at crisis situations selectively; and point fingers of blame selectively at separate acts, things, people, etc. We never try to understand the entire context of it all. We never try to explain the why or how of anything to any great depth. Our normal ways of thinking, feeling, acting, have become so separated, that we are not capable of any greater awareness or understanding of what is happening around us or what we are doing or why we are doing it.

As long as people do not actively question and explore what they are doing/feeling/thinking every second of each day: this process of normalized dehumanization will continue. As long as people do not live in a continual state of pure wonder, they will continue to function-feel-think as unaware machines.

Social Dynamics of Separation

Once you split-up and destroy the connectiveness of a loving community based upon Courage and Honesty; you irrevocably change the way it works. You irrevocably transform the dynamics into a new dynamic that is based upon fear-hate-cowardice-dishonesty. Then All Truth becomes distorted and is systematically destroyed. Then Wonder disappears. And they cannot be re-introduced; unless what was destroyed by one-sided separation: is re-balanced and healed by connectiveness. Hate, fear, cowardice and dishonesty are only different symptoms of one-sided separation. They exist as an integral part of any civilized existence. You cannot have hate-fear without cowardice-dishonesty, and vice versa..

The point is: all fear-based societies, all fear-based cultures, all fear-based psyches and all fear-based egos: do not face truth because they do not want to. All hate-based societies, all hate-based cultures, all hate-based communities, all hate-based psyches, all hate-based egos do not admit truth because they do not want to. And our entire civilized dynamic is based upon the fear of dying. If there was no fear of death, there would be no hate, cowardice or dishonesty either. There would be no outer authority based upon mechanical power, there would be no urge or motivation to kill, rape, violate, destroy, hurt, dehumanize... except the urge to destroy all hate-fear-cowardice-dishonesty. The motivation for outer power and authority comes from the lack of inner power and authority. The motivation to obey-submit to outer power and authority comes from the need for safety-security: i.e. Fear.

Because the human psyche has never been allowed to grow, heal, and fully mature out of its traumatized, dehumanized civilized upbringing: because people have never fully grown up, matured, changed, learned, healed themselves, re-balanced themselves: because all civilized societies-cultures-communities-psyches-egos, are imbalanced by the dominant dynamics of fear-hate-cowardice-dishonesty: people become either... Followers still yearning to worship-adore-love some safe-secure, parental authority figure or icon, or movie star... willingly giving up their own autonomy-power-responsibilities, because they do not have the courage-honesty-love-wonder needed to grow-learn-change-mature-act out of their own inner authority... and the result? Powerless followers and victims; terrified of being hurt, jailed, killed, raped, or murdered.

Or... leaders enjoying the delusion of their own omnipotence, (a universal infant-child fantasy), enjoying the safety and security of never being challenged or exposed as ordinary fallible mortals, enjoying the delusion of their own immortality-self deification- narcissism... leaders who manipulate their own reality to suit themselves, who manipulate the reality of others, who rationalize their own manipulations, who act-out immature, distorted realities based upon fear-hate-cowardice-dishonesty... and end up manipulating and oppressing the masses-victims-sheep-followers.

This works the same on every level, and in every way in civilized societies: it is the same in all piled-up, pyramidal-hierarchical social structures, groups and organizations.

Punishment

All motivations for punishment; loss of temper, anger, fear, rage, hate, revenge, are undigested, unprocessed experiences being reflected back as "an eye for an eye." Instead of processing any hurt or pain, it is bounced back as an undigested experience. This is a dynamic of separation, non-integration, reflection and projection. As long as any kind of hurt-damage-pain-trauma is not fully felt and experienced, it will be forever separated from the integrated totality of one's psyche. Punishment is ultimately a negative, tool-based concept; it merely amplifies what is negative. On the other hand, the concepts of love, forgiveness, understanding, are connective and positive. But since we live in a tool dominant society, our dominant values are tool based, not human based.

The worst form of punishment for any evil intent or act is not a one-way dynamic of retribution; it is love-connection-healing. Allowing the evildoer to actually feel-realize-understand what harm they caused others, instead of separating them from those who they harmed. However, no healing can happen if the intent to heal is not there. No one with a negative or evil intent can heal. No one can be forced to heal. This leads to the unavoidable conflict between good and evil, or any status quo that refuses to change or evolve any further.

All evil or imbalance is intrinsically harmful to all living things: and the principle of all harm is based on the dynamic of imbalanced power. Without imbalanced power, you cannot harm anything.

This is one reason; why civilization is so harmful in so many ways. It gives people imbalanced power. It allows people to accumulate power. It gives people the power to do harm.. Power that has many consequences. Civilization gives us Power that we have no understanding of. And no personal control over.

Unless humans control their own destructive power to commit evil, unless people balance themselves: civilization will remain an evil, destructive force that is killing all living things on this planet.

Because the context of civilization is imbalanced to begin with, inside civilization: there can be no such thing as an absolute good. Nor any such thing as absolute non-violence. China invaded Tibet, and not all the spiritual goodness and nonviolence of the ruling monks helped them fight off a larger invading army. Non-violence only works when enough people have enough courage to stand up against their violent oppressors so their sheer numbers can overwhelm a relatively small, violent, minority. And even then: it only works when that minority refuses to use violence simply because the ensuing butchery, killing and death is so repulsive to them: it would make them feel so guilty: that they could not live with themselves. But in a system where that squeamishness no longer exists; non-violence is simply a one-way ticket to death, torture, further oppression and defeat.

Non-violence only works when you outnumber your oppressors by a vast majority... and when a significant number of your oppressors are secretly on your side. But even then: Passively opposing them morally; without using physical violence, is still a use of power, merely a less violent form of it. The same principle is still proven: the greater force or power always wins out over the lesser one. Only in the case of non-violent resistance: in a less destructive manner.

By condoning any evil, by normalizing it, by making it a part of our normality, our culture, our habits, our beliefs, our customs, our traditions: we become evil merely by not opposing it actively. Once you allow selfishness to become accepted, and normal, you have allowed evil to triumph over good. Once people become more selfish than giving: they become evil. Whether they know it or not. Whether they like this unpleasant truth or not. Selfishness has been ingrained in civilized societies for so many thousands of years: that trying to root it out single-handedly is a futile waste of energy. That is why the awareness level of ALL humans needs to be raised. Not merely a small elite. Unless you can actively change something for the better for everyone; your efforts will be kept inside insulated pockets of civilization, and never go any further..

Inside civilization: it is impossible to destroy the evil of imbalanced Power without using some form of Force, and Power to oppose it and destroy it, or nullify it. There is no such thing as an absolute good, or an absolute evil. At best, you can only replace a greater evil with a lesser one. It is the main thrust or direction of your intent which determines how good or evil it may be. That direction is determined by how much good or evil your intentions hold. Any intention to create a less oppressive form of government, any intention to reach a higher dynamic balance, a more sensitized level of awareness, a more humane way of living is relatively more good than the worse bad, or evil which you are opposing actively. But how you carry out your intentions determines their ultimate effect. The means determines the ultimate outcome: but it does not justify it. The end justifies the mean: is merely a backwards, selective, rationalization that all the winners of history have used to legitimize their use of power; by claiming that they were on the right side: might makes right. If you are on the right side, then the other side must be wrong, or bad, or evil” This has never changed throughout human history. By using absolutes, by creating imaginary absolute separations between us and them, we can demonize, kill, rape, destroy, brutalize and dehumanize any other race, nation or creed that does not exactly mirror our own. Any differentiation can be imagined, created, magnified and used to turn anyone into an enemy. The result is a 10,000-year litany of endless violence, hate, mistrust and fear.

If an entire Nation rises to overthrow its rulers violently and replaces that regime with a less oppressive government, and if less violence is done in the process than would otherwise have been done by the original government: then that violence is justified as a lesser evil. However, if a small minority manages to manipulate an entire people to revolt and gains power only to maintain the same level of oppression or create an even more oppressive rule: then that violence can never be justified as being more good than evil. The less violence used to institute any more humane government, the more humane and less corrupt the end result will be. The more violence used to institute any change, the more corrupt, and evil the result will be. Whether you should use violence to fight any particular form of evil all depends on the context of that evil. Experience cannot be destroyed. If you want to heal from violence: the accumulation of more violence and killing only makes things worse. That is... unless you can get to the root of killing. Unless you can find, uncover, discover and get to the roots of human hate. Unless you can strip all the lies and dishonesty from people. Unless you can force them to be courageous, and honest, and loving.

If you completely obliterate the root of the problem... it does not matter how violent or non-violent you are. But...if you leave one seed unobliterated... if you allow the dynamic of evil to survive. Then you are merely wasting your time trying to stamp out one weed while a thousand new ones take root elsewhere. The question of whether to fight evil with violence or not depends purely on each unique individual situation, and there is no universal answer to what is right or wrong. The actual problem is: tracing evil to its root, finding its actual source, and destroying that source so it can never grow back again. And then getting rid of that root. How you get rid of it is irrelevant. Once the root of evil is gone... it cannot grow back again ever. It is much easier to find one root of a problem and fix it, than try to fix a host of recurring symptoms that keep on springing back up no matter what you do. If you fix a root of a problem, you never have to do it again. Of you fix a symptom, you are forced to fix the same problems over and over... and these problems create new problems, which create yet more new problems... until you are drowned in a sea of unsolvable problems.

All because you never went to the root of the problem. All because you allowed the dynamic of one-sided destructive Splitness to continue unchecked. All because you did not fix the root of the dynamic of one-sided accumulation. Where is this root? Where can we find it? By examining the millions and billions and trillions of connections between all problems that arise from this imbalanced dynamic; each symptom can be connected to other symptoms. By finding the actual working connections between symptoms, we can get an understanding of what we are actually dealing with. By tracing only roots, not symptoms; we can we get to the underlying causes of what is wrong, why it is wrong, and how it happened and why it happened.

If we can remove the generating, and regenerating root systems of evil, greed, violence, fear, hate, reflective pain, trauma, abstraction, absolutes, etc... we will be much better off. To begin with: we need to educate all people about the importance of dealing with root problems, and develop ways to do it.

But there is an even simpler way to destroy Evil. Without wasting your time focusing on it. Simply make Good energy stronger than Evil energy. Simply focus only upon positive things instead of negative things. Make Good things grow instead of bad things. Then Good things will kill off Evil naturally. If there was more love in the world than hate: love would choke off all hate easily. But there is more hate than love in the world. Evil keeps on trying to kill off good all the time, and fails to kill it off completely all the time. Simply because Good is more powerful than all Evil. Evil can never kill off all Good. But... if Good ever outnumbers Evil... it can and will kill off all Evil forever.

The only sane, logical way of destroying Evil is by developing more Good in the world globally across this planet, so Good outnumbers and overpowers all Evil. Once that is done: all Evil will disappear by itself naturally, without having to be fought against. Evil will become extinct, or so weak as to never be a threat to any healthy good human community ever..

Only when civilization becomes so dynamically balanced that there is no imbalanced inequity of the powerful and the powerless, can you ever hope to live in a truly non-violent society. Only when morals and ethics are no longer based upon different cultural or religious values and ideas, only when the entire world population is educated to use the principle of dynamic balance in how they live, in their moral and ethical values, decisions and actions... only then: when all humans share a common, universal ethical and moral code, can civilization ever be cured of its imbalanced power, evil, and oppression.

Choice and Will

All Universal Truths are merely tools that humans can universally apply and use. To only read them and do nothing is an active choice of not using these tools. There is no escape from the choice of choosing or not choosing. The choice of inaction is still a choice. There is no such thing as no choice: it does not exist. Each procrastination, each denial is a conscious or unconscious choice. How conscious or unconscious this choice may be is only a matter of degree.

The dynamic of all human relationships, like all other energy: travels in only one direction at a time. The engine that generates this energy is your will. And you can only generate it in two directions: ill will, or good will. How healthy or ill your psyche may be determines the quality of the energy you generate. But more importantly, it is the direction in which you generate it that determines its effect. And that is a conscious act. To actively feel good or ill, to actively wish good or ill, to actively think good or ill, to actively do good or ill, is all the same thing.

When people disconnect from each other, when they are trained to only relate abstractively, impersonally: as strangers, adversaries, as antagonists: then there can no longer be any good will between people. Leaving only the condition of indifference-mistrust-fear as a social norm. All this is merely the effect of separation... of living inside a separated, segmented, accumulated society. This allows negative energy to flourish. It is this kind of abstractive dehumanized social condition which civilization fosters. The crimes and sins of omission and commission perpetrated by each human are not determined by any abstract legal system. To know what is right and wrong is not dependent upon any arbitrary law. The only ethical imperative of human existence is to do no harm. The art of not harming others is the art of living a balanced life. The only way this level of self-knowledge, insight, wisdom, can be achieved is through the Sense of Pure Wonder. The only way people can gain the desire to change or heal holistically is through the sense of wonder. The only way that the attributes of Love, Courage and Honesty can be fully developed is through the Sense of Pure Wonder. It is this type of awareness that is absent in civilization.

Passion

Passion is merely an expression of Integrated Totality. But human awareness is segmentive. Being passionate about something: about a loved-one, or art, or baseball, or one's work: like all segmented feeling, segmented awareness, is a bastardization of true passion. Passion is merely the ability to think-feel deeply. It is not what you project or express. It is what you are. And the degree or level of your passion does not ever depend upon what you narrowly focus on. That is not passion: that is a form of pyramidally focused obsession. The degree or level to which you can be passionate depends entirely upon how integrated you are. If you can understand who you are, if you can understand why you think-feel as you do: then, when you do choose to engage yourself, or commit yourself, or find something you want to do, or are challenged by something: then this merely provides you an opportunity to use your human potential. The more integrated and less specialized your potential is, the more powerful it is, the more passionate. Because then you can funnel more of your creativity-feeling-thought-effort into whatever you are being passionate about.

Passion is only a symptom of Pure Wonder. If you can develop your own outer sense of pure wonder so you can experience your life as intensely and fully as possible and if you can develop your inner sense of pure wonder to digest and integrate that experience as intensely and as fully as possible: then you have passion on tap.... To be used as you see fit. Then you have all of yourself to use as you see fit. Then you can channel all of yourself as you see fit: not just a cut-off piece of yourself. Passion is balanced intensity. Passion is the intensity of aliveness.

Hitler was a skilled orator. But he was also an actor. His hate and passion was actually a carefully contrived act. His true personality was very mild: he himself was not a true hater. In person, he was a mild mannered, unassuming sensitive soul. He used both his oratory skills to sway the hearts and minds of millions. TV preachers also use this kind of melodramatic fakery: and the blind masses mistake it for true passion. True passion is a balanced integration of what you think and feel. True passion is the conviction that comes from the courage of total honesty. Passion is pure wonder. Passion is everything and anything which you feel-know-understand and integrate honestly. There can only be true passion about what you know and understand and can integrate and can express fully. If all you know and can integrate and express is hate, you will become a passionate hater. The more of yourself, the more of your integrated totality you use, the more passionate you become. How a person uses their passion is irrelevant. What sparks that passion is irrelevant. To this date, there has never been a true integrated use of passion.

All integrated potential-passion is a dormant, undeveloped ability. When any person becomes intense segmentally-pyramidally, they become passionately insane-imbalanced. But when a person becomes intense as an integrated totality: that terrifies all who have never experienced their own passion. That threatens their numbness, their normality. In civilization, all true passion is forbidden, not allowed. People are not allowed to feel-think deeply except in safe, segmented, insulated, isolated pigeonholes. Very few, if any, can even recognize or understand the difference between imbalanced-distorted insane passion and balanced-integrated sane passion. It is all lumped together as unacceptable behavior, excessive.

Conventional wisdom that tells people to love; not hate. Conventional wisdom that Preaches moderation, tolerance: has one huge part of humanity missing in this message. Raw emotion. Raw passion. Raw anger. Raw hate. It teaches basically that all humans should not be deeply emotional or deeply passionate about anything, because then; all you get are explosions of uncontrollable, insane fear and hate. This subliminal message of manners and decorum tells us to remain as we are: emotionless, machine-functioning tool-users. This kind of status quo and non-passionate mildness is easily tolerated by civilization: it does not threaten the dominance of our tool-brains, or the dominance of tools. However, it is a very subtle, deep, sick, wrong, distorted, twisted truth. If people want to become more human and less like a machine: then they must develop their emotions and not repress them or have them suppressed. People must develop an emotional functionality and an emotional vocabulary in order to become human just as we have already developed the tool-vocabulary of abstract words and the tool lifestyle of functioning like unfeeling machines. Instead of being able to perform any physical action mechanically, completely cut off from our feelings: we should become incapable of performing any action unfeelingly; without our emotions being fully integrated and involved in what we do.

Most of human life... most of living should be made up of emotionally connected thoughts-feelings-actions. There should be no such thing as an emotionless act in your entire life, or a thoughtless one. If you exist in a state of normality; most of your acts, thoughts and feelings are unquestioned and unexamined. That is the gulf between mechanical, machine, tool-existence and human-existence which must be bridged if humans as tool-users are ever to develop their humanity fully. But in order to do this, people must go through the painful re-connection of their lost emotional life. And that emotional-spiritual-psychobiologic pain is so intense and scary and frightening that all conventionally wise people draw back in horror and plead for people to be rational thinking, mild-mannered, moderate machine-beings: not raw emotion or passion about anything. That is the trap of tool-functioning normality. If you do not have the honesty and courage to feel anything deeply or passionately, if you choose not to be passionate: you will never escape the dominance of your tool-brain and your ego over your own true self, your own psyche, your soul.

Here again is the question of balance. Imbalanced emotion and passion is insane and harmful. Balanced passion and emotion is not. How do you distinguish between them? If both are intense, what is to stop hate from dominating people's feelings instead of love? If people are more hate-filled than love-filled: of course the release of their emotion... allowing hate to take over their actions produces killing, murder, war, genocide. That is what conventional wisdom abhors and preaches against.

But there is no quiet, moderate, painless, non-intense or harmless way to balance this huge imbalance. It must be a violent re-balancing: it cannot by its very nature be mild or gradual. The only way people can become passionate, the only time emotional healing can occur is when it goes all the way... When it does not listen to machine-reason or moderation. But that also means that it should not stop itself from feeling painful emotions out of cowardice or dishonesty either. The main reason people abhor being emotional is because most people do not have the emotional courage to feel anything deeply. They have the emotional courage to love deeply or feel their own pain deeply. If you feel anything deeply, you will, and must feel everything else deeply. You will not be able to selectively block out anything that is deeply painful. Beyond the superficial level of feelings that all civilized people exist in, lies emotional pain and agony far more painful and agonizing than anything they have ever felt before. People instinctively recoil from feeling anything passionately... when people see the bloodbaths of human violence erupting from hatred around the world, they all cry:

"Stop. You must not hate. Hatred is bad-evil-sick."

As a permanent emotional imbalance this is true. But in order for humans to ever become completely emotional-feeling-loving people: they must go through their anger and hatred in order to reach the deeper hurt in their souls. Hatred is only a symptom of deeper hurt. As an emotional process, an emotional re-balancing, an emotional cleansing you have to go through your anger-rage, you must feel your hate fully if you are to let it go. To do that, you must experience it fully, understand it and find out the root reasons for that hatred.

But there is so much guilt-shame-cowardice... There is so much feeling and truth which people do not want to face... That conventional wisdom makes this blanket statement: 'you must not hate.' Why? Because people who are guilty of horrible sins and deeds do not want to be confronted by their victims. Because polite society is based upon the denial of all unpleasant, painful emotions... everything that is overly emotional is supposed to be swept under the table. No emotional intensity is allowed to be expressed. Everything should be mild-polite. That is one reason for the existence of social graces and manners.

But this is not how human emotions work. Anger exists. Hate exists. And trying to deny it or never feel it: simply does not work. People need to feel their anger, find out where it comes from, examine if it is logical or if it is a deflected rage against someone else they do not dare to face or have been brainwashed into not being angry at them in order to heal from it. If you are to heal emotionally from hate: then you do not keep it alive and feed it by reflectively magnifying it until it becomes distorted, and irrational.

Hatred is simply anger and rage that has been bottled up and allowed to fester. You should not keep resentments and grudges building up forever until they explode into physical violence and murder. But rather than go through this painful emotional process: anger is preserved, reflected, re-reflected until it becomes hate; then it is projected outwardly or inwardly as a perpetual state of emotional imbalance. The subtle, silent universal message is: "don't get too emotional, don't get excited, don't become passionate..” Why? Because the first emotion to erupt is often hatred or anger. So rather than even recognize the existence of anger or even begin to deal with it: any intense emotion, any and all passionate feelings are suppressed and repressed. People do not understand their own emotions. There is a difference between hate and anger. Hate is a cowardly and dishonest form of honest anger. It is only when honest anger is suppressed-repressed or subverted that it begins to rot and turn into hate. Actual, passionate, honest, courageous anger is a completely natural and necessary part of all love-courage-honesty-wonder. Honest anger, honest rage is not evil. It is necessary and good for you. If you can be instantly, honestly angry, then after your honest reaction is over; then that anger is gone. There is no anger or resentment at whatever happened left over that you have repressed. Then you will not carry any destructive grudges... destructive negative energy that saps and destroys all of your positive energy. Hatred is a result of suppressed anger. Hate is created by the suppression of all true human emotions and actions. The taboo against anger and the irrational result of suppressed anger called hate was created so criminals who commit crimes and atrocities within human society could get away with murder and rape and never be caught and punished for their crimes.

By our tool societies becoming a vast tide of indifferent, numb strangers, by civilization becoming more mechanized than loving, there is no time-place-arena for people to be emotionally open, honest and vulnerable. We are too busy working and acting like machines to worry about our human feelings. Since anger is socially unacceptable, it is never fully dealt with, or faced. Since there is no acceptable way for people to work through their feelings of anger-rage-hate; most of it becomes sublimated, suppressed and hidden on a subconscious level. Only when people actually work at exploring their hidden feelings can any of this be brought out into the full light of day and be looked at and dealt with. Society has placed such a stamp of shame over the very expression of hatred or anger of any kind whatsoever... that people never honestly admit that they actually hate anyone or anything; they never allow themselves to openly express any anger at all. As a result, all this suppressed anger is not examined or questioned, and festers and rots and is projected outwards into blind, meaningless hatred. This hate then also becomes suppressed, and lies beneath the surface festering: until it becomes a part of the very fabric of their existence, their being and their culture. Or even worse: it becomes culturally approved of and preserved.

No anger is bad as long as it is Honest and Courageous and Loving enough to feel the hurt underneath that anger. But that is only the anger of the victim. The rage of being taken advantage of when there was nothing you could do about it.... There is also positive anger: when a powerful person sees a wrong and becomes outraged at its injustice and rights the wrong with the power of their rage. Christian religion has mixed up both kinds of anger and used both of them to rationalize and excuse every form of hate, envy, jealousy, and fear imaginable. The living example of a courageous powerful person who is angry and enraged because they are in the right has disappeared from civilized society. And because of this sickness of human deception and self deception... now anyone who becomes morally outraged at any kind of evil is instantly labeled themselves as an evil hater....

Why?

Simply because this particular ploy has been used by all the hate mongers throughout history for so many thousands of years. Because there are almost no examples of a person ever being truly morally outraged and angry against injustice by being openly angry about something. Instead... the sick, weak, victim-mentality and culture of Christian victimization when faced with huge injustices like mass genocide, and mass racism, and mass discrimination... expresses its opposition to all of this evil... as weakly, and as cowardly, and as dishonestly as possible, by barely voicing any dissent at all. Instead:

there is the wringing of hands... a host of meaningless blather... all crying out when faced with millions starving, millions killed, millions oppressed, millions living in poverty, millions living in ignorant misery:

“Oh what shall we do... oh this is so awful, this should not be....”

But does anyone get openly angry about it? Does anyone do anything about it? Do people go into action? The only way human societies allow people to fight social public injustices is without anger. Without rage. As weakly, and as disgustingly as a bunch of massed cowards, seeking support inside a safe, anonymous crowded majority. The only way you are allowed to be an activist today is by giving money. Gosh. If you are not allowed to become angry against the evil people who cause millions to starve to death.... If you are not allowed to feel any kind of anger, or rage when you see evil being done publicly. How can you become passionate about justice? How can you become passionate about any just cause? How can you fight evil at all?

Charities on TV show children starving in Africa. And beg for your money to feed them. What they do not show you are the people who starve them. The people who kill them. They do not expose the evil tribal cultures: that makes all of this human misery inevitable. They do not interview the tribal robber barons; who are responsible for killing and destroying farms, burnings, lootings, torture, rape, terrorizing entire areas. They do not show their hired thugs kidnapping these starving children and forcing them to kill with their own hands members of their own tribe, and ethnic race.

They do not bother to even try to explain why there are millions of starving poor in Africa. They do not even try to point the finger at the established powers in the west that insure this systematic brutalization of nearly an entire continent is fixed in stone. With 24 billion dollars in international aid frozen in the accounts of the common market nations because the relief organizations that need this money to feed the starving poor did not grovel enough, and act as properly servile slaves for the privilege of accessing a few thousand dollars of these billions. No. Rather than try to shame the European euro-government by publicizing their stingy inhuman cold uncaring attitude towards mass starvation in Africa,: they try to beg for pennies and dollars from poor TV viewers instead. What is a poor TV viewer? Someone who has less than 24 billion dollars saved up in an account expressly for world aid and emergency relief purposes.

So if a viewer sees this, and has nowhere to vent their rage and disgust at any perpetrators... because the people responsible are kept safely hidden from view. If they are supposed only to act out of their ‘guilt’ at having food and money. If they are supposed to be emotionally blackmailed to feel pity for millions of starving children in another continent? And not have anyone to be angry against. And not have any enemy they can fight. And not have any explanation for why these millions are starving. And not be allowed to openly show anger about it. Then the viewers treat these programs just like the euro-relief fund treats them. As if they do not even exist. Because these charities have no power. They do not come out of a position of moral power. The charities themselves do not dare show anger openly against the governmental bodies who are responsible for this mass starvation to go on unheeded, and unaided. Nobody is allowed or supposed to feel anger or rage against the hugest human evil in the world. It is forbidden to become angry at evil. It is forbidden to get angry in public against anything. So? Relief efforts without an enemy to fight, without any chance of getting angry at anyone, without any honest moral or ethical basis of accountability, without any human integrity, or honesty, or courage, have no passion behind them. These efforts have no moral passionate moral conviction, no moral power: except that of a beggar. They only attract beggars... begging other beggars to relieve the misery of other beggars. Without any significant success. What surprise is that?

If you are not shown how this evil works and who is actually responsible, and who are the actual enemies: then who can you get angry at? If you are not allowed to get angry against any evil in the world, then what can you do? What happens? The answer is obvious.

You take it for granted. World poverty, and mass starvation becomes normal. You take it for granted that there is nothing you can do about it: because nobody else will do anything about it also. All because nobody is allowed to show anger in public.

If a mob of people show anger against atrocities? Oh. That is bad. We must never be violent against those who are violent against us. We must never show any anger or rage in public.

We must never show anger and rage against evil people in power . If we do: we can only so it in private secretly... never in public... huh? Oh. What a convenient way for these evil people in power to have an excuse to kill anyone who dares to become angry at them. See? It was an angry mob. They were out of control. Because they could not get at the evil perpetrators. They could not kill them. Because the evil people had an army blocking their path. So it was entirely normal for that army controlled by the evil people to kill these angry people. Because they were out of control with their anger. See? All anger ends up in being killed. If you are angry: then all of human society will attack you, and fear you. And call you a fanatic, a threat to national security, and jail you for it.

Why do people fear the anger and rage of others?... Because it often leads to violence and someone getting hurt . Because they have been taught all their lives that anger expressed openly is forbidden. Because they are guilty of doing something evil which if known will spark anger against them and violence. Because the religion of non-violence has taken over consumer society, and anything which might lead to any kind of action or violence is feared. Victims if they are allowed to be angry openly... and are supported by other people; finally begin to find that they can do two things. They can express two different kinds of rage.

One: the rage they feel against their oppressor, the rapist, the murderer, the violator, the wrongdoer.

Two: the rage they felt against their own powerlessness when it happened.

Only once they have felt both rages. And felt them in front of their oppressors... can the rest of their healing can commence. But if they are not allowed to do this. Then they will never completely heal from the hurt they suffered. Only when a victim takes back their own power: can they stop being a victim. Only when you take back the right to feel all of your feeling do you become emotionally powerful and passionate. Only then can you stop being an emotional victim.

Only when people can honestly express what they feel without being shamed out of it: can they ever get to the root of their hatred. But then; they must also stay with, and trace the source of that anger or hatred back to its true source of hurt and pain. And in order to do that: you need to love yourself enough, you have to be brave enough and honest enough to willingly feel that pain and hurt. And the person who listens to you must do so lovingly; so you feel safe enough to speak about what is painful to you. But this entire process is nipped in the bud and aborted by the public censure of all emotionality. Anything that interferes with our mechanical functioning is publicly frowned upon, laughed at and shamed.

This healing process of becoming feeling-emotional humans instead of machine-functioning tools is halted by not allowing anybody to become overly emotional for the simple reason that so much of that pent-up emotion is imbalanced, unconnected and ready to explode into violence. So: rather than admit that people feel hate... Everybody is supposed to repress their own feelings of hate because it is an unacceptable emotion. Public shame and morality forbid it. As a result, it is bottled up and accumulates: until there is more hate in the world than love. Keeping feelings bottled up, allowing them to accumulate and fester, keeping one's thoughts and feelings to oneself, keeping them secret, are all different descriptions of the same corrupting process. What you get is a façade of politeness with every imaginable inhumanity being practiced secretly inside closed minds, behind closed doors, inside closed societies, and closed communities.

What is one result of the emotional repression of anger as a social norm? Police brutality. Mass fear. Mass cowardice. Mass dishonesty. Mass denial. Dysfunctional families. Child abuse. Battered children. Battered women. Domestic violence. Murder. Psychopaths. Serial killers.

If this kind of emotional dehumanization has been going on for at least 10,000 years: how much suppressed, and repressed anger exists in the World today? Enough to find cause to explode an Atomic Bomb? How much hate? How much pain? How much hurt? How much fear? It is little wonder that conventional wisdom tries to keep a lid on all of this. We simply do not have 6 ½ billion emotional therapists to help people deal with their suppressed feelings. Much less any cultural ethic that supports the idea of getting people to open themselves up emotionally and become emotionally vulnerable. Such ideas are regularly lampooned and sneered at by today's popular culture. This is another effective form of public shame that makes the exploration of ones own feelings taboo. People have not yet learned how to be human enough to heal themselves emotionally. They have not learned the healing dynamic of developing their emotional abilities rather than their tool abilities. The knowledge needed for emotional healing already exists: as does all knowledge needed to solve human problems. But this knowledge is only used and applied incrementally, segmentally, and hierarchically. In this case: it is simply not applied or used for most people on this planet. You cannot allow yourself to be emotionally vulnerable in a competitive, adversarial, hierarchical society that is tool-dominant.

True passion is logical. The only true logic is passionate logic. You cannot be passionate unless you are also logical and truthful. If you do not follow the logic of your own truths, if you avoid your own truth, if you avoid any truth at all, if you refuse to be logical and honest and courageous enough to seek truth, explore it, digest it, understand it logically... then you will be avoiding your own passions, your own experiences, and never feel passionately about anything... or think passionately about anything, or act passionately about anything. Which is why there is so little passion in civilized people: since civilization abhors all truth-seeking, honesty, courage and true logic.

Passionate people are unpleasant when they are blocked and don't get their own way. They are not mild, or superficial, or submissive. They are not mediocre, they are not sheep, they are not conformists, they are not cowards, or liars. They are not fear-filled, timid or mindless. Mediocre people dislike passionate people intensely because they stir up all kinds of things in them that they do not want to face or deal with. All true passionate people have been used as scapegoats, martyrs and sacrificial lambs by the mainstream of civilized societies. It is only when passionate people are safely dead that they ever get to be lionized and become famous. What kind of reaction do you think the historical Jesus would have if he came back to find out how his teachings had been corrupted? Do you think he would praise all Christians? Or on the other hand: would he start a movement to abolish and destroy all Christianity as it is now being practiced? It is very unpleasant for followers to have their asses kicked by their idols.

It destroys their entire worship mentality. That is why no spiritual leader has ever gained worldwide fame while they were still alive.

The emotional result of oppression is oppressed, suppressed and repressed anger. That is why the instant the fear of retaliation, the fear of authority and all of the brainwashed strictures in every culture and society are weakened: there is a huge explosion of anger and hate. That why all rulers are terrified of any loss of control. That is why they nip every sign of discontent in the bud, and crush it as savagely as possible. It is a question of balance between fear and anger. Fear and hate. Love and anger. Awe and equality. Cowardice and Courage.

Every human who has ever been oppressed in any way whatsoever: possesses anger. That is why all civilized societies are in terror of increased awareness. That is why the elite are constantly terrified of the masses ever gaining any personal self-esteem. Because if they ever begin to realize how badly they have been scammed and lied to. If they ever begin to realize the injustices they were forced to suffer for no good reason except to be kept down. Then their anger will build. Then they will for once realize that they have anger. They will realize that they have tons of passion inside them. Once it becomes allowable to show anger publicly, once people develop the courage to confront and challenge their oppressors: they suddenly realize that they are in the right. They suddenly realize that the oppressors are in the wrong. Suddenly they become more powerful than their oppressors. Suddenly there is revolution, revolt, uprising and violence.

Why are revolutions called revolutions? Because all that happens in a revolution is that the status quo revolves. Those who were down are up, and those who were up are down. That means almost no basic change. Why are they called: revolts? Because when a mass becomes so disgusted that they are openly revolted by some injustice. When they feel enough revulsion, disgust... and they actually do something about it... and the movement grows, the feeling grows: until something is done to change it.

Revolutions happen only if there is passion in human hearts. If there is no passion: then there is no revolution. Then millions of victims allow the authorities to herd them into cattle cars. Then millions of people obey everything told them, believe everything told them, and then wail and weep at how unfair life is. Then millions and hundreds of people do not resist their oppressors at all. All civilized societies are terrified of passion. They are terrified of open anger. They are terrified of people who cannot control themselves... meaning showing any dissent or disrespect or disobedience to any authority. As long as people act meek, with hat-in-hand... as long as people are submissive: everything is fine. But the first sign of the slightest uprising, the first time anyone raises their head.... They are crushed fast... so the idea of even raising your head and protesting about anything is scotched before any momentum of resistance can begin. That is why a revolt is also called an uprising. That is why rulers demanded all their oppressed subjects had to bow to them... kneel, kow-tow, grovel, and bend down in submission. All so they could lord it over their servile backs. Because anyone rising with a blade; was instantly cut down before they could kill their hated masters.

The perpetuation of Civilization is based upon the emotional powerlessness of the masses. As long as the masses do not feel their own feelings. As long as they are emotionally powerless. As long as they are not passionate about anything relevant... then rulers can breathe a sigh of relief and sleep safely in their beds inside their elite walled, guarded compounds. The point is civilization is passed upon preserving and perpetuating emotional dishonesty. The entire fucking culture of 'manners' and 'politeness', not being allowed to show your true feelings and express your true thoughts is a stinking pile rotten garbage which should be thrown out and replaced with HONESTY: emotional, intellectual, spiritual, physical honesty. The only reason hate and anger exists is because there is no honesty in civilized societies.

The lack of passion in modern life comes from the idea of accumulating dead things only as an accumulation of death. The accumulation of pleasure only is an accumulation of death. Life experiences are made up of both pain and pleasure. If you try to accumulate only half of them, the other half not only dies, all of your human emotions die. The modern capitalist consumer religion of accumulation of pleasure only, of self-gratification is the most mind-numbing, deadening existence you can have. Trying to label all pain as evil, as taboo; trying to outlaw all pain and discomfort, all hardship; trying to make everything easier and easier: makes you deader and stupider until you are a dead robot walking: a dead mechanical android.

Trying to pretend that you don't feel any pain: that pain doesn't exist by insulating yourself by eating processed crap and layering your body with fat cells so you can't feel the world around you and you can't feel your own pain is a form of deadening yourself into deadness. With the ease of a life of self-gratification comes all the evil sins and vanities of Man: arrogance, smugness, cowardice, fear, paranoia, pride, snobbery, egomania, egoism, etc.

The instant you don't feel pain: you don't feel pleasure either. The entire emotional spectrum of human emotions cannot be selectively chosen which ones you 'want' or 'choose' to feel. If you want to be a human being you must have the Honesty and Courage to feel all human emotions: not just one of them. Once you stop feeling pain: you stop feeling everything, you become dead inside; you become emotionally mentally, spiritually, physically deader and deader until you are a senile walking zombie: a crippled freak that can barely feed itself. You become an obedient servant to your owners and bosses. You become a passive conformist, fear-filled timid little mouse, a sheep, a spoiled rotten baby, an infantile imbecile incapable of any adult responsibility or intelligence.

This is why Nietzsche's aphorism of. "Rather than want nothing... man wants nothingness." is true of all civilized corrupt poisoned human beings. Meaning that rather than want nothing, civilized people have only one goal in life: to feel nothing, to do nothing, to think nothing, to know nothing, to see nothing, to hear nothing to speak nothing;

His aphorism is just an analogy of the 3 stupid, fear-filled monkeys of ancient fable who were all cowards

'Hear no evil'
'See no evil'
'Speak no evil'

This level of the denial of evil is just transposed into modern western society: when everything around you is evil and you are also evil: when all human civilization is evil: then the only way you can pretend that evil doesn't exist is to become a fucking zombie, an imbecile who wants to fill its belly; a descent into the insane creed of Buddha staring at a wall and getting fatter and fatter and more and more insane and more mindless and more idiotic.

The point is; life is a flow. Life is movement. That is why the idea of humans not moving and settling down in one place is the most insane evil thing that these undead filth ever managed to poison living humans into. That is why all of human civilization is insane and sick. All the dead pieces of stone piled up in the pyramids of Egypt and all the other piles of dead rock of all the ancient civilizations is a dynamic of death; the dynamic of all human civilization is a descent into death and the total extinction of the human species.

Innocence

Innocence is something all people lose. The point is; it is only lost due to the loss of your Sense of Wonder. Wonder and Innocence are basically the same thing. But, there have been so many false portrayals of innocence as a form of denial, or a refusal to grow up and face the actual conditions of civilized reality: that a jaded, numbed outlook of life is considered normal. Innocence is seen as childishness or immaturity simply because most people lose their most of their innocence and wonder in early childhood. There is no sane reason why a human should not be innocent all of their lives. There is no sane reason for a person not to exist in a state of Pure Wonder all of their life.

It is true that you cannot function or succeed within civilization if you remain innocent. In order to succeed; you need to acquire the protective crust of an ego. You cannot allow yourself to remain sensitive to the pain of neglect, or indifference, or unfeeling inhumanity. It is when children become normalized to all of this normal behavior; that they lose their sense of innocence and wonder. It is only then that they can be safely exposed to all of the decrepitudes of adult civilized existence. This is the double standard of civilization. This is the social hypocrisy that splits all human society into two classes: children and adults; the young, and the old. The two-faced hypocritical idea of unacceptable behavior for one group; being completely acceptable for the other. Then; once having become desensitized and numbed enough in the process of growing up: there is the gradual social shift in life-values and beliefs that are considered to be normal. You move from one class to the other and lose your true self and sell your soul for social acceptance, and become corrupted like all the other adults.

Modern Western Society

What about people who say they are happy? Who think they have loving, supportive families, and think they are happily married? People who are well-off. Who experience no poverty, try to live healthily and are not oppressed?

The mere fact of being better off than others; automatically makes you responsible for the misery and unhappiness of those who are not as fortunate as you. You exist because of them. They exist because of you. The only reason you exist is because they exist. The only reason they exist at all is because you exist. If there were no billionaires and millionaires and corporations and governments: to suck up all the money: poverty would not exist. Poor people would not exist.

Whoever is well off carries the burden of this social responsibility; whether they like it or not. But since nobody wishes to look at this too closely; it is carefully brushed aside and ignored. There is simply no way to avoid individual responsibility to the society you benefit from. The sum total of all the evil and corruption on this planet is the sum total of the individual actions of each person on this planet. But nobody wishes to confess their own contribution to all of this corruption. You cannot have rich landowners without poor tenants. You cannot have millionaires without having most people who are not millionaires. You cannot have billion-dollar corporations without hundreds of millions of people buying their products.

Because civilization is so compartmentalized and segmented to the nth degree: it trains people not to act-think-feel connectively. What does that mean? It means that it trains people to keep things isolated and out of context. People never try to trace causal effects to their roots. If you are well off, reasonably happy: that's it, period. You will never bother to find out just why or how you happen to be so lucky. If you have a good paying job: that's it, period. You don't ask how or why you have the job, why the job is there, if it is in some way essential to human happiness, its impact on other people, or if there is any moral and ethical justification for such a livelihood. If you have money: you never stop to ask why or how you get the money or where it came from. You get the money for what reason? Because you could do a job, perform mechanically? Does that justify the money you receive for it? Which jobs are most important? Which are most valuable? Which should be paid more than others? For what reasons? How do people value themselves or their jobs? Simply by any arbitrary arrangement of whatever someone is willing to pay for it?

The problem with market capitalism is once the determination of your values is arbitrary: they become meaningless. Why should a piece of useless crystal like a large diamond be worth millions of dollars, while a glass of water is worth nothing? Why should a few fortunate people possess billions of dollars while billions of poor people starve? Because these lucky few need their billions of dollars more than those who are starving? The myth of supply and demand in any pyramidal structure... especially the lie of supply and demand in Capitalistic economies: is a sick, pathetic, obscenity. The flow of wealth does not follow any rule of supply and demand in Western, Capitalistic civilization. In fact, market capitalism opposes the supply and demand of human needs and resources. It does the exact opposite. It only follows the needs and demands of tools; not of humans. It only supplies the demands of the billionaires and millionaires. Not the demands and needs of four billion poor and impoverished people in the world today. Market capitalism only makes rich people richer and poor people poorer. What good is market capitalism to billions of starving, poor people, who do not have any money in the first place? Who do not have any capital to begin with? Economists don't want to answer that question because they know they can't. In fact those dumb fuckers carefully avoid the question of the completely dispossessed altogether. Because the issue of the poor exposes the bullshit lie of market capitalism too easily. It too obviously exposes them as liars and hypocrites.

The bottom line is: that a few millions of people have money... and literally billions of other people do not. Why? How? Because they were unlucky enough to be born in the wrong country? Or have the wrong job? Or speak the wrong language? Or go to the wrong school? Or pick the wrong career? How much choice is involved in all this? How much is luck? How much is ability, talent? If you have more money than most other people on this planet, do you deserve to have it? For what reasons? Do you think working hard deserves to be rewarded? What is hard work? Who are the people who work the hardest? What is the best reward you can have? What is the most satisfaction you have ever felt? Being paid money? What does money value and what does money not value? What is the value of money?

You get paid. You have money. Where does the money come from? From the employer? From the government? From people? What is money based on? Confidence? Greed? Energy? Life-energy? Machines? Symbols? Abstraction? What does it represent? Why does it fluctuate? How? If all the billions of people on the earth decided to stop working, would there still be such a thing as money? What does money value? Things? Material wealth? Man-hours? Production? What is the difference between a hand-carved cane that takes two weeks to make, and 100,000 machine-made canes that take two weeks to make? How does money work? Flow? Where does it end up? Why? How and why does civilization determine who gets it and who doesn't? Is that an equitable arrangement? Is it fair? Balanced? What is the reason for money? What does it do?

If a factory worker in Bangladesh is paid 12 cents an hour to make a pair of running shoes, and the company ships it to the united states to sell for $200, and an affluent family buys it for their teenager, who goes on a march with union activists demanding a fair living wage of $20 an hour: where is the sense in that? Where do the materials for making that shoe originate from? What are the consequences? Does the shoe industry support the cattle industry? Or the rubber industry? What is the point of lobbying against the destruction of the Amazon rain forest, when the newspapers you buy everyday, and most of your purchases which are packaged in some kind of paper which you promptly throw away, comes from trees cut down in a forest? What sense does it make to scream about the destruction of a faraway tropical jungle, while ignoring all of the other forests being cut down everywhere around the world, including forests only a few miles from where you live?

What are the intrinsic contradictions built into civilization? How did they develop? Where did they originate? How many bother to examine the conflicts and contradictions involved in what people say they believe; and what they actually do? What are the reasons for these contradictions? How did they develop? What are their origins? How can one make sense out of all these disparate aspects?

People do not ask these kinds of questions because their awareness does not exist in a state of Pure Wonder. They go to work, get paid, buy shoes, and that's that: end of story. There is no exploration of causality, no expanding of awareness: only normality, only your own reality: safely insulated from every other human reality. Is that how we should think? Feel? Live? Work? What happens if you try to consider the consequences of every act, thought, feeling you have, or do? What if you try to trace the causality of it all, so you can understand what you are doing in a larger context? But that's impossible. Civilization is much too complex. To trace where that carton of milk came from? Or trace where that gallon of gas came from? To trace everything you consume to its original sources? And try to understand the processes and consequences involved? Ridiculous.

But when people found out that hunters were killing baby seals to make fur coats: they stopped buying the fur coats. When they found out that refrigerators contained ozone destroying chemicals, they made the government change the chemicals being used. They made the fisheries stop killing endangered whales. But they did not stop cutting down whole forests. Nor did they stop the fishing fleets from over fishing. They did not stop pumping oil or driving cars. Where is the logic in all this? Convenience? Expediency?

If you work for a large corporation: how can you make sure that the corporation you work for does not violate your own personal values or ethics? Are your personal values for sale? As long as you get paid: how much concern do you have about any greater impact of the company you work for? None? A little? How are human values and ethics determined? Individually? Collectively? How much are your values merely a way of rationalizing and justifying your own normality? What comes first? Expediency? Or a set of values? Which determines which? The trouble is that all these issues are focused on and dealt with incrementally-segmentally. They are not connected to each other. Meaning we do not perceive them as being connected... While in actuality they are. Why? Because we are simply not trained to make connections. We do not look for them.

How much do people invest in planning for the future? How many decisions are made with any foresight? Or hindsight? How many people ask themselves if what they are doing is good or bad? Without a sense of Pure Wonder, the human species is a lost, blind sheep wandering aimlessly; following the expedient path of its own tools. Without a Sense of Wonder, people can never hope to understand themselves, or the civilization they live in, or the universe they exist in. But who bothers to even try to develop a Sense of Wonder? Without a Sense of Wonder, people stop asking questions.

The Consumer Dynamic

A person in a supermarket has to choose from pre-packaged items. However: no commercial supermarket will give shelf space to any food product unless it is either a nationally recognized brand, or a company is rich enough to pay 50,000-100,000, up to $200,000 in order to rent that shelf-space. This means that no small food company can ever hope to compete against large food corporations like Kraft or General Mills. The instant any small company's product becomes too popular because it is better than the national brand shit: the larger corporation simply buys up the shelf space of the smaller company at a price the smaller company cannot afford to pay; and that is the end of all competition and all quality once found in supermarkets. As a result the choice for most consumers has been narrowed down without them even being aware of it. Larger companies can outsell smaller companies just by simply buying up more shelf-space... so the consumer will not even be able to see the better competing product unless they already know it is there, and search for it. Though consumers may have a choice, they have no understanding of how limited their choices are. They have no understanding of what must happen before any product is placed on a supermarket shelf for them to choose. Consumers have no awareness of what choices are denied them because of the unfair practices of mass marketing and mass production. The result is a stifling of freedom, diversity and creativity throughout society as a whole.

Then there is the product itself. What materials are needed in order to make it. What chemicals and processes are necessary for its production. Where these materials and chemicals are taken from. How many other industries and processes are involved in its production. How many other chemicals and substances are required to be produced for its production. All this is intentionally kept from the consumers in order to keep him as ignorant as possible.

Take all of the consumer products in the world and trace their genesis, production, consumption, and especially their disposal... and you will have exposed the entire process of how and why the human species is destroying ecosystems, killing off species, and polluting the Earth. You will have the process of all human injustice and inhumanity laid bare before you. All of which is being done by separate entities and processes and motives: as each part of this process is separated from the next... While none of this is revealed to the consumer who buys these products. Corporations and businesses do not want the consumer to know where they got their resources from, and precisely how their products are made. The packaged image, advertising, selling, is far more important than connections, contextual, understanding, or truth. All business relies upon advantage and secrecy to succeed in the adversarial system of capitalism. If consumers knew the whole truth of what they were buying, and all the implications and consequences involved; their choices would be radically different. For instance: how many people would eat chocolate if they knew that nearly one half of all the cocoa in the world is produced by plantations that use children as slaves?

What else are consumers unaware of? How much of their unawareness is due to their own indifference, their own comfort addictions? And how much is due to the corrupt complicity of all business practices? If consumerism is a non-ethical lifestyle based only on expediency, convenience and self gratification, if what people buy is only determined by the end-product and not the entire process and all of its ramifications and consequences... then you end up with a capitalistic world economy that is basically not only amoral, but immoral.

The culture of instant self-gratification has taken all common sense out of making choices. It has become so powerful a practice-belief that adults not only practice it, but also allow their children to practice it. They allow children to gratify themselves by buying them whatever they want. Children are given spending money for no other reason except to spend-waste on instant self-gratification; so they can grow up to become good little consumers.

By giving in to the foolish whims of their children, parents give up their own parental control and responsibility; and the result is mass epidemics of malnutrition and mass epidemics of obesity. Children end up eating sweets, sugar, and salt, and candy by the ton... Eating and drinking and buying all kinds of things that are not nutritionally good for them. Children are given too many choices at too early an age; they are given too much freedom without responsibility. They are trained at an early age to become spenders without first learning how to become earners. They are brainwashed into becoming spoiled, profligate, wasteful and irresponsible. Why? Because consumer parents religiously believe in instant self-gratification. They teach this religion to their children by example, by gratifying themselves, and believing their children have a god-given right to gratify themselves also... without giving any example of refusing to gratify themselves.

As a result: their values become one-sided. They become takers, not givers. They become exactly what the corporate mass media wants them to be: mindless, shallow, and greedy... and perpetually dissatisfied and unhappy. So they can buy more, and eat more consumer products.

The consumer and producer disconnect in our capitalistic system, plus the billions of other disconnections in our market driven economy; makes the entire dynamic of Consumer Capitalism: random, unaccountable and irresponsible. Millions of car drivers can be horrified at an Oil Tanker colliding in Alaska: destroying an entire seaboard ecosystem. Yet, they themselves do not claim any responsibility whatsoever for this. Instead, the captain of the vessel is blamed, the oil company is blamed.

‘You’re supposed to drill for millions of barrels of oil without polluting anything. You’re supposed to transport these millions of barrels without spilling a single drop. You’re supposed to refine millions of barrels of oil into gas so we can burn it in our cars and use it to drive around and pollute the entire atmosphere with it. So we can cause air pollution and Global warming. We are allowed to pollute. We are the majority. You are not allowed to pollute one drop of oil. Beside: we want it, we need it: don’t you dare spill one drop of it! We’re not responsible for your tankers existing. It’s all your fault.’

The international foreign policy of the United States Government is based upon safeguarding the oil interests of America regardless of where that oil is. They act as greedy bullies. Wherever any oil is found: they want it. They have to have it and control it. They will stop at nothing to get it. This is a complete hypocrisy of their publicly avowed policies of non-intervention in other Nations affairs. They leave other Nations alone only if the other Nation does not have something they want. If the Nation has something America wants, then the US Government changes its policy towards that Nation until it gets what it wants. This is done behind closed doors without the public knowing about it. Their policy of secret intervention and secret sabotage has spawned puppet regimes in countries all over the world that would never have stood or lasted without US government intervention, support, sabotage, infiltration and funding. Hundreds of millions of people are not allowed to develop their own system of government because of how the US Government pursues its oil policy. The American car driver sees no personal responsibility for these political consequences. The idea of connectiveness, the study of how the producer-consumer process applies to these global political issues, is never undertaken or examined. The oppression of billions of poor, the refusal to allow democracy to spread. None of this has anything to do with an American standing in a store and choosing whichever product is most convenient, or filling up their car with cheap gasoline. Wrong

Now... Multiply that consumer and those products trillions of times, and you have the exact state of the modern world as we see it today: a global consumer economy based upon the shallowest, most superficial, media-advertised motives of temporary fads, gizmos, expediency, technology and instant gratification.

There are reasons for this cultural normality. There are reasons why consumers believe they have a God Given Right to please themselves. The most obvious one is the fact that they are a majority. In fact; they are the most powerful majority on Earth. They are the ones who have money to spend. There are more consumers than non-consumers. All majorities tyrannize minorities.

In all civilized history: no wealthy majority has ever been stopped from doing exactly as it pleased. When it was first created: Civilization was designed precisely for the exclusive benefit of the wealthy. The only difference now is that instead of a handful of elite in a few civilized centers, instead of a few hundred affluent people: you now have almost a billion of them.

During the Middle Ages: the English mob enjoyed their God Given Right to make money and spend it as they pleased. They enjoyed their God Given Right to get as drunk and soused drinking alcoholic spirits and beverages for hundreds of years. Both the middle class and the peasants of Europe enjoyed their God Given Right to make money and spend it as they pleased for over a thousand years. The citizens, the Populi, the population of Rome enjoyed their God Given Right to gratify themselves for 700 years. The right to be fed by the State, and entertained by the State for 1,000 years. Before them, the Greek citizens of Ancient Greek cities enjoyed their God Given Right to public homosexuality, and legalized child sodomy for hundreds of years. Throughout all this time: it was the God Given Right of the rich to be wealthy and spend money... and the God Given Right of the poor to starve and do without. Or.... you could say that it was all normal for them to feel this way, or to think in this way, or to act in this way. What is the difference between a God Given Right, and something that is Normal...or a Normality, or an Assumption, or a Conviction, or a Belief, or a Faith?

Not a fucking thing

Every civilized human society from Egypt, Persia, China... to Russia, and India... has had God Given Rights... which were never spoken of, or ever written into Law, or even noticed. You can call all of these things God Given Rights... or just assumptions. You can call them Normalities. You can call them Realities. You can call them Traditions. You can call them Customs. You can call them Beliefs. You can call them Laws. You can call them whatever the hell you want.

The one thing they all have in common is: no matter how stupid these Normalities are... no matter how out of date these God Given Rights are.... All of them are supposed to be sacred. Every one of them. From the right to stick bones through your nose, to the right to use a paper towels to wipe up your coffee spill with, to the right to drink all the coffee you want or get drunk and throw up.

Today, even the poor have citizenship in industrialized Nations. Even the industrialized poor have God Given Rights. Even the poor have Laws that nominally protect a few of their God Given Rights.... As weakly as possible. Even the poor have free entertainment. Even the poor have alcohol. Even the poor have money. And for once... the poor of rich nations do not have to worry about starving. The poor do not have to worry about being poor. Now they can enjoy themselves as all the rich have done for 12,000 years. Now that they have money to spend. After 12,000 years of being poor. Do you think that you can get them to not exercise their God Given Right to spend it? After watching the rich do as they please for over 12,000 years?

What has ever stopped a civilized human from doing as they please: regardless if it is good or bad for them... never mind good or bad for anyone else? When you train and brainwash billions of people for 12,000 years about the 'God Given Right' of selfishness and self-gratification: what form of education do you need for them to stop doing it? The very definition of a citizen is someone who has been given exclusive rights to do as they please. The very definition of civilization is humans doing as they please. The very definition of power, money, wealth, privilege, status, knowledge is doing what you please with it.

Roman citizens were given sacred rights. The most important one being the sacred right to rape the rest of the civilized world.... But who ever dared mention this in Rome; when Rome was the most powerful Empire on Earth? Nobody.

The Ancient Greek right to public homosexuality, homosexual exhibitionism and sodomizing children and adolescents, was a long-standing tradition that was a part of the fabric of their normal everyday culture. Originally created by male warriors living too long on ships, where they had to sleep ass-to-ass with each other... But who ever dared say this is an evil perversion to a Greek Citizen, when Greece was the ruling Power in the Mediterranean? Nobody.

Europeans enjoyed their God Given Rights to make money and spend it because the first cities that were ever created: changed their barter system to a coin system of abstract greed... cursing the rest of their progeny, and the rest of civilization for 12,000 years with a tokenism that never satisfied anyone and never made anyone happy. Cursing civilized people with the subconscious hunger for love... for the actual thing: instead of cold cash...

So what did civilized people do with their food-substitute for love? They turned their food into cold coins... and turned the cold coins into houses and material objects they could fondle and admire and leer at... creating the worship of dead objects, the Materialism that poisons all civilized humans to this day. But what person ever dared tell a wealthy burgher to their face inside their own sumptuous houses that this is evil? Nobody.

The English God-given right to get drunk any time they pleased came from their maritime history of imported wealth. Sailors arriving home filthy rich, and getting drunk in public and being publicly acclaimed for their drunkenness and wealth. After stealing-robbing-cheating, or pirating from half of the known world at that time. But what person ever dared tell that this was evil? To a drunken English sailor in the grog shops... erected on the wharves, for the express purpose of separating a sailor's wealth as quickly and efficiently as possible? And replacing it with an addiction for alcohol. So all the port towns became rich off getting their own hometown sailors being fleeced. And England has been a land of drunkards ever since for over 500 years. Try going into an English pub and telling them what they are doing is evil. They will laugh in your face. They are bolstered by the comforting authority of English Tradition. They bring their children there so they will grow up to think drinking alcohol is good, and normal and healthy.

Try telling a consumer that their God Given Rights are actually God Given Guarantees of unhappiness and misery. See if they will listen to you, or believe you.

Basically... what 6 billion people consume; is ultimately what happens to the Earth. Only: no single consumer will claim responsibility for this, or attempt to develop any larger awareness of it. Because nobody bothers to connect the entire process into a causal sequence that openly shows how:

$A \rightarrow B \rightarrow C$  ultimately produces  $X \rightarrow Y \rightarrow Z$ .

Why? Because they can get away with it. Because it is normal. Because it is taken for granted. Because it is their God-given right to be consumers.

The semantic meaning of Normality, of Reality, of God Given Rights... and of taking things for granted; are the same. They all mean the same damn thing. The trouble with this is: Whatever you take for granted: you become a victim-of.

And.....

Whatever you preserve... you also become a victim-of.

Whatever you perpetuate... you also become a victim-of.

Whatever you accumulate... you also become a victim-of.

Whatever you segment... you also become a victim-of.

Whatever you worship... you also become a victim-of.

Whatever you revere... you also become a victim-of.

Whatever you specialize in... you also become a victim-of.

Whatever you selectively focus on... you also become a victim-of.

Whatever you abstract... you also become a victim-of.

Whatever you selectively ignore... you also become a victim-of.

Whatever you lie about... you also become a victim-of.

Whatever you are afraid of... you also become a victim-of.

Whatever you take advantage of... you also become a victim-of.

Whatever takes advantage of you... you also become a victim-of.

Whoever takes advantage of you... you also become a victim-of.

Whoever lies to you... you also become a victim-of.

Whoever has power over you... you also become a victim-of.

Whoever has status over you... you also become a victim-of.

Whoever has knowledge over you... you also become a victim-of.

Whoever has wealth over you... you also become a victim-of.

Whatever you are greedy about... you also become a victim-of.

Whatever you are not aware-of... you also become a victim-of.

Etc, etc, etc, ad nauseum.

Accumulation, wealth, power, irresponsibility, ownership, profit, commerce, business, over-intensive tool-use, technology, science; all have been harnessed to develop civilization. But only at the expense of human happiness. In order for this to happen: human awareness had to shrink. Humans had to become more unaware, or less aware... or more selectively and more hypocritically aware. Our critical awareness had to be destroyed by Normality.

Actually: you have only one God-Given right.

That right is: the right to die.

And you have earned that right by how you have not lived. You have earned that right by the death you create when you are alive. By creating death instead of life while you are alive: you have earned the right to die. If you create life instead of death: you will earn the right to live. The concept of individual rights is bullshit. We earn what we get. We earn it as a single species. Not as individuals.

Accumulation, wealth, power, irresponsibility, ownership, profit, commerce, business, over-intensive tool-use, technology, science; all have been harnessed not only to the motive of greed, but for the motives of greater ease... to comfort addictions of all kinds, to normalized comforts... that once they are created: people cannot imagine doing without them: like sliced bread. You mean you cannot even imagine slicing your own bread to the exact thickness or thinness you prefer?... That this is too difficult a physical task for you? The bread industry solved that problem by not even giving you a choice in the matter. Once people became spoiled by pre-sliced bread they took it for granted as normal.

Like paper towels. You mean you cannot imagine using a cloth towel that is reusable thousands of times, and is far, far cheaper in the long run, and does not disintegrate when there is too much scrubbing, or too much liquid to wipe up, and can easily be thrown into your laundry basket because you do not care about its appearance... and can be washed clean easily hundreds of times? Oh. I forgot. Americans are phobic about dirt. They cannot stand to use a freshly washed cloth towel... that once was dirty... The very thought of that clean towel being dirty once sends shudders of dirt-phobia through their psyches.. Better to throw it away. Out of sight, out of mind.

Take cell phones... You mean that you cannot imagine actually enjoying your surroundings and Nature, or being outside; without trying to block out the world around you as much as possible?

This kind of unintelligent, irrational, illogical, spoiled, comfort addiction that is not good for us, is not healthy for us, and fosters countless more, and newer addictions and cravings, and makes us even weaker and lazier, and more stupid, and even more spoiled and less human and more corrupt. This unpleasant truth is never mentioned, or admitted-to by consumers... except in smugness or in jest. It is a totally silent, unspoken assumption of normality.

The only visible aspect of this unseen corruption; is what people call; consumer rights. That is... the worship of the consumer as the final arbiter of morality for the entire human race. Whatever the consumer needs, wants, likes, feels like; instantly becomes an unquestioned moral good... regardless of the motives behind any choice or decision, or wish, or fad. The bottom line is that the customer is always right. As long as someone can make a profit from a customer: it is a morally-ethically unquestioningly; Good and Right. Talk about a self-serving hypocrisy that is totally full of shit.

As far as Capitalism is concerned: the consumer must never be questioned: the customer is always right. The consumer must never be questioned as to his own moral right to consume whenever and whatever they choose. If 1 billion people want to drive cars; then let them drive cars. If 500 million consumers want to buy computers; then let them buy computers. The worship of self-gratification or consumerism is the underlying morality and religion of all modern civilization. Moreover... this way there is no ethical scrutiny of how profiteers monopolize and manipulate markets. This way there is no moral scrutiny of how Capitalists manipulate consumers or why. The majority rules. The rule of the masses.

But nobody has ever tried to analyze these consumer rights; and expose how they trample on the rights of other humans and the rest of the world. Why? Because the economic power of accumulated spenders is a force far greater than the voting power of any one nation. Their numbers and buying power make any opposition completely futile. Their wealth alone makes any equity balancing with non-consumers and poorer people impossible. Their overwhelming political influence makes any responsibility to the billions of politically powerless poor that are exploited, hopelessly one-sided. Plus: all the power of consumers is funneled to the corporations who suck off them. All the billions of dollars consumers spend, ends up in corporate bank accounts, and all those billions of dollars are used to fund legislation that is against the interests of consumers: not for them. Their own money is being used against them. That is how sick and corrupt the capitalist/corporate system is.

How can any capitalistic, consumer model of civilized society; ever balance the huge imbalances and inequities, injustices, oppressions, brutalities, horrors, and insanities of the world we live in today? Give power to the powerless? Give money to the poor? Give up all your wealth, power, affluence and advantages that you have personally slaved all your life to accumulate? Give up the hard-earned expertise that keeps you one step ahead of the other competitors trying to put you out of business? Give up the only things that save you from joining the billions of less fortunate, poor, hungry masses? Are you crazy?

One rationalization is:

‘If you can’t do anything about it: then why question it? Whatever happens is inevitable. Let people buy what they want to. You can’t stop progress. ‘Laissez Faire.’ Let it be. Don’t say anything.

This is how consumer rights and consumer freedom is rationalized. Yet it is the corruption and blindness of this completely unquestioned freedom which is destroying the planet, as well as guaranteeing the suffering and poverty of all the billions of dispossessed and oppressed. The fallacy of consumer rights or freedom is that it exists on a one-sided basis. There may be a bill of consumer rights: but there is no bill of consumer responsibility. You cannot uphold, exercise and sustain any freedom indefinitely without also upholding, exercising and sustaining the responsibilities that go along with those rights. You cannot have freedom without responsibility. Sooner or later the historical bill is paid. Responsibility and Freedom are inseparable from the other. This dynamic has been proven in history, in science, in biology, and in politics.

Rome dominated the Mediterranean World through military conquest for hundreds of years. The energy backlash of that; was to turn the city of Rome into the most repeatedly conquered city on Earth during the Middle Ages... After its demise: it was pillaged and burnt and raped over and over and over. Other nearby cities were not. Why? Because they had not earned the hatred of all the uncivilized tribes who had built-up the myth of Rome into a part of their traditions from the legacy of its famed dominance for hundreds of years. So, when it became a worthless, powerless, empty city... it was still raped over and over by invading tribes who expected to find streets paved in gold. Rome’s military prowess had become so famous that conquering Rome was the litmus test for any dominant military power for hundreds of years. Even Barbarossa the German Holy Roman Emperor conquered it: simply because Rome had once been an Empire... Even though it was already a part of his Empire. And he was supposed to be the Holy Roman Emperor... who conquered and raped his own holy Roman city? Why? Because he was a Germanic King, and the title of Roman Emperor was the highest possible title of status and power. Rather than invent anything new: the Middle Age Kings tried to bring back the past. The dead past was worshipped and glorified. Not the present, or the future. Has it ever been different? This is what a reputation of dominance and superiority does. Every hotshot gunslinger that hears about a famous fast-gun, wants to test his mettle. Every new tough-guy on the block, searches for the toughest-fastest gun in town to measure his ego-against. Even after a famous sheriff retires, they still keep coming for him. What is the usual outcome? Wild Bill Hickock was one of the most renowned gunfighters in the West in his day. He was shot in the back by a dirty back shooter. So was Jesse James. So was Billy the Kid. The same fate awaits America as a Nation. The instant any other Nation sees a chance to shoot the U.S. safely in the back ... they will do so. Simply because of its reputation as being the biggest military Bully-Power... Pushing around: and using Bully-tactics and strong-arming weaker Nations. Why do you think the utterances of the U.S. President come from the Bully Pulpit? Because he is using his power as a Bully. Unfairly. Unethically. Once any political body tries to uphold and exercise its rights without also upholding their responsibilities: they become corrupt, inefficient and blind. Eventually, they are overthrown and perish. That was what happened to Rome. That is what happens to any Nation that gains a temporary historical dominance over others. That is also what will happen to the present Consumer Nations of the World, that have any kind of temporary advantage over all the Non-Consuming Nations of the World.

Unless you understand the inevitability of this historical payback: you will continue to think that most Empires blazed in Glory briefly for a short time... and then faded away. Without a single historical debt, or sin that they ever had to pay for. Unless you understand the actual historical truth about 12,000 years of our civilized past: you will believe that every Empire ever created: got away with it. The actual dynamic of civilized History is no different from the actual dynamic of a see-saw in a playground, or a child's teeter-totter. For every action: there is a reaction. This Law existed long before Newton ever discovered it. This Law existed before our Planet ever existed. This Law existed before our Sun ever existed. To believe that somehow, we humans will be able to avoid this Law of the Universe, and somehow get away with it... is merely short-sighted blindness. Whether you like it or not: everything balances out in the end.

If you believe that you are free to consume anything you personally please: without repercussions of any kind. If you have no children... or do not really care what kind of fate you are dooming them to: you might think that you have escaped this Law, you might think that you have escaped this responsibility. But you are mistaken. Every consumer shares the responsibility of every item they ever bought both collectively as an entire group and individually. No matter how unknowingly they made their purchase. Regardless of how that item was created, manufactured, made, what it was made from, where it came from: each consumer shares the responsibility of the effect of their buying power: along with every other person who was involved in that process. But in the case of the consumer, this ethical responsibility has never been applied to them directly.

Today: there is almost no balance between consumer freedom and consumer responsibility. There are tons of Consumer's rights and privileges... but no consumer responsibilities. Whatever product or service consumers use of buy; they are not seen as being irresponsible-for in any manner whatsoever.. They are never held accountable for the consequences of their actions. If mass consumer demand creates an automotive industry: that is good. If oil corporations destroy ecosystems and create oil spills, if they control the foreign policies of oil consuming nations, if an entire community of third world countries, exploited resources, and poverty stricken populations are created as a result of this industrialized development: none of this is laid at the door of the mass consumer. They remain blameless, they remain free to choose and buy what they wish. Their only responsibility is to themselves; their only ethic is self-gratification.

Why? Because they have found their Power, their Safety and their Freedom from all consumer responsibilities: in the anonymity of numbers. Millions of them. Billions of them. Mass conformity. Mass consumption. Mass production. Masses of people so huge that no government, no army, no religion, no Law, no civilized Power or Force can control them. They epitomize the Power of Pure Accumulation. All the World's Businesses are trying to do two contradictory things to this huge unstoppable Consumer-mass:... please their every whim, and bleed them dry of every cent they earn.

The entire network of global trade and mass production... all the structures of power-wealth created for the sole purpose of pleasing the consumer is not their responsibility or their fault. Why? Because; as long as the individual consumer has no awareness of what responsibility they have in the power of their collective influence, if they are kept ignorant of the larger consequences of the mass production and mass exploitation they create and export and import all over the World; then others can keep profiting from them. So the entire world is sold a bill of goods; everyone is sold on consumerism, everything has to be easier, more convenient, bigger and cheaper. As far as the initial price tag goes, keeping consumers misinformed, prejudiced, ignorant, badly educated, etc: is an ongoing willing collusion of Global proportion between every individual and collective human body on Earth. On the instinctive level, on the subconscious level, and on the conscious level.

If the consumer knows the exact working conditions of the sweatshop their jeans are made in, they might refuse to buy a product that keeps other people in perpetual poverty. They might become uncomfortable with their ease and luxury. But only if the evidence is forced down his throat, and pushed in his face so he cannot avoid it. Only if it touches him on a visceral level.

This is why no sane businessman wants a fully informed consumer. It would force them to drastically change their business practices and production processes. Their profit margins would be reduced. They would not be able to accumulate more money.

And so it goes: humans separating, segmenting accumulating, manipulating, processing, and consuming sugar water, or cars... or oil, or bauxite...or bananas or coffee beans. To feed and fuel the insatiable appetites of greed, comfort, and laziness. All for empty, meaningless, temporary purpose of self-gratification. With consumers viewing themselves as completely blameless and not responsible for any of their own ills, or for the ills of their own society.

Why? Because all of the causal processes of mass manufacturing, distribution, sales and consumption are insulated from each other, so separated, they are impossible to trace, understand or control as a single connected thread of causality: thus destroying all awareness of responsibility and ultimately, all accountability. As we use more tools in more complicated ways, this one-sided disconnection from everything increases until we are not connected or grounded to anything anymore.

Until we no longer know where our food comes from or how it was grown... or where our clothes come from or how they were made... until any curiosity about crucial aspects of our lives disappears and ceases to exist: until any sense of wonder we may have about our artificially formed environment is destroyed, until we lose all wonder about everything... until everything around us becomes normal and dead and boring.

How can you educate the consumer when the very concepts of ethics, honesty, and education; are openly derided and spoofed by the culture in which they live? How can you make them more aware when they don't want to become more aware? Inevitably; the only way advertising can sell the importance of a bottle of sugar water... or anything else for that matter as the most important thing in your life; is by glorifying and celebrating meaningless trivia, and avoiding all truth and all issues that are relevant to your life. No culture, including our consumer culture has ever willingly examined itself critically in perspective; because all cultures are forms of normality which people take for granted.

The bottom line is that no government, no industry, no business, no corporation wants an informed public. Free dissemination of information and knowledge cannot exist inside any hierarchical system that is based upon the accumulation of wealth, power, fame and status. As long as civilization is based upon a need for advantage: civilization will continue to be dominated by secrecy and corruption, and all honesty and truth will be suppressed, repressed, oppressed, hidden, avoided, denied, and ignored.

Consumerism. All mass dynamics. All social systems based upon accumulation: work on the basic principle of mass-ignorance. All mass consumption, all mass existence works by and through mass ignorance. ALL masses only stay together and let themselves be used and manipulated: as long as they are kept ignorant of how they are being used. Once they become educated: they stop staying together. They stop acting as a mass. They stop being predictable. They stop being controllable. The self-indulgent way consumers rationalize what they do is so stupid, so shortsighted, so selfish, so obviously hypocritical that it is insane.

‘I didn’t buy natural peanut butter because it’s too drippy, too oily and you have to mix it up with a knife: that’s too inconvenient. Instead I got you that hydrogenated lard peanut butter that gives you hardening of the arteries and kills you, and makes you die twenty years before your time.’

‘I don’t use cloth towels in the kitchen. They’re too unsanitary. They get all dirty and you have to wash them. I use Kleenex tissues instead. So I can contribute to the world’s forests being raped and cut down and destroyed. Even though I could re-use a cloth towel a thousand times and save myself 100’s of dollars every year. Even though a cloth towel absorbs moisture better and wipes up cleaner than any paper towel ever made.’

Why are consumers this insane? Why are they so stupid? Why are they so impractical and irrational? Why are they so illogical? Why are they so lazy? Why are they so spoiled? Because they have been systematically spoiled and corrupted by manufacturers who will do anything to get rich. They manufacture anything to get rich fast. They do anything to get rich period. The global system of capitalist producer-consumer culture: all of modern civilization is amoral. It is morally-ethically-spiritually-physically-mentally-emotionally corrupt and evil.

Consumers do not of blame producers. Producers do not blame consumers. Because they are both equally guilty of the same sin. Consumers are just as greedy as producers. They just do not have opportunities to get as rich fast; like producers have. How can you ethically blame other people for getting rich; when you are trying to do the same damn thing? Civilized people do not point the finger of blame and responsibility at others because they are all complicit. We are all enablers. We all enable others to commit crimes. We all exist inside the same corrupt system. We all function inside the same system and follow the laws and regulations of the system. If a civilized person tries to point the finger of blame and responsibility too much they are hated for it: they are attacked and blamed even more than they blame others. They are regarded as impractical fanatics.

Consumerism: the culture of pure consumption: is one of the latest, most modern symptoms of civilized selfishness and greed raised to the nth degree. Why do you think the divorce rate had risen? Why do you think there is so much jealousy and envy poisoning all human relationships in consumer societies? Why do you think the emotion of love has turned into a morass of sick, twisted obsessions? ‘He or she is all mine! I will not share you with anyone! I want all of you! I can’t get enough of you! I want you and nobody else!’

If there were no selfishness: there would be no jealousy. Jealousy is stupid. The idea is stupid. The idea of ownership is stupid. The idea of having an exclusive ownership over anyone else’s affections is so stupid: it is not worth laughing at. It is only worth despising. Like you’re some kind of psychic God who can control the heart and mind of someone you love... so they will never ever love anyone else but you? The pure arrogance of jealousy is insane. The pure meanness of it is despicable. Let people love whomever they want to love!

But you can only do that if you have no hate and meanness inside you. You can only do that if you are honest with yourself and others. You can only do that if you are secure inside yourself: and are not obsessively greedy and needy and possessive. You can only do that if you do not need the idea of exclusive ownership to fill up your inner emptiness. You can only do that if you do not define your ego by what you own and what you have.

The sickness of consumerism affects everything in our society. Once you are brainwashed into the idea of selective choice as an unspoken norm, as a god given tight, as a religion: then you start using this idea in everything you do. You start using it in everything you feel and think. Then the choice between honesty and lies is just a matter of consumer convenience. Then lying to yourself becomes merely another convenient consumer addiction. Then all morality, all ethics, all spirituality becomes a matter of consumer choice... Consumers complain and whine about how meaningless their lives are and how meaningless their society is.... But none of them want to admit the truth. Self-gratification is meaningless. Selfishness is meaningless. Dishonesty is meaningless. Advertisements are meaningless. Consumer society is meaningless and so are you because you are a consumer Gosh, what a surprise.

The unspoken religious assumption of consumer choice is that they are only supposed to choose what ‘pleases’ them; they are only supposed to choose something ‘if it pleases them’... ‘if it gratifies them’ meaning whatever makes their egos swell up and feel big and important. By this ancient royal privilege, watered down into mass-manufactured meaninglessness, the elite owners of the western world have managed to fool the lower classes into believing that buying plastic shit at K-mart in some way gives them a special kind of upper class status. The religion of consumer choice is based upon the one-sided principle of pure one-sided selfish self-gratification in order to make consumers not notice that they have no real choice at all, that they have no power over their own lives whatsoever, and no power to choose except which flavor of ice cream they want. They are not allowed to choose anything that does not gratify their lowest most base lusts and appetites. Until the unspoken religion of self-gratification is exposed and challenged and opposed and denounced publicly: consumers will continue to remain brainwashed and convinced that they only doing what is right and good for themselves and for the world. When the exact opposite is true. Once you are brainwashed into the idea that selective choice is only supposed to be used to ‘please’ yourself as corruptly and lazily, and self-indulgently as possible; then idiots buy ‘the clapper’ because they’re too lazy to get off the chair to turn off a light. Then consumers become masses of dead, somnolent rotting flesh with no will of their own, no intelligence, no energy, no health, no brains and no common sense.

The Mythology of Consumer Choice

Has been sold and spread for over 200 years. The myth that it is the consumers of the world who actually control what is manufactured and sold to them is 100% bullshit. What was sold to consumers and what is not sold to consumers is controlled and determined by the richest most powerful oligarchs.

The masses have no real say in the matter. If the corporate elite decide to phase out certain products it does so regardless of what the public wants or likes. If they decide to introduce new chemicals into their products, the masses have no say in the matter. The industrial robber barons of Americas decided to sell cheap steel cars instead of cheap pre-fabricated steel houses to the public after WW2. They could have easily done both but they didn't. The ruling elite sold radios and then TV's to the masses so they could brainwash and control them better so they would not become independent thinkers. The masses are sold ice cream and pizza because it turns them into fat lazy mindless bloated slobs not because the manufacturers care about the health of those they make their money from, but because ice cream is addictive and easy to transport and make a profit from. The masses were sold mass manufactured clothes instead of selling them spinning wheels and looms because the cotton plantation owners and industrial robber barons did not want the masses to be able to make their own clothes and become independently self-sufficient. The masses were sold tinned food because the industrial barons did not want them to grow and can their own food. Having a choice between which tin of beans you want to buy instead of growing and canning your own food is not a choice: it is a reduction of choice and quality. Becoming dependent on mass manufactured products is a loss of freedom, it is not an advantage of choice: it is taking away your ability and choice to be independent and self-sufficient; it is a systematic enslavement of the human masses. Cars and trucks were sold to the American masses not because they are a better form of mass transportation than railways: they are not. In America, the automotive and highway and road building industries were completely unnecessary. There was such a glut of cheap affordable railways and bus lines that the masses could cross the entire continent easily in complete comfort for a pittance and go anywhere they wanted to with a minimum of fuss or expense. One freight train hauling 300 freight cars is an energy saving of millions of dollars compared to trucks. The railroads had already been built, so all they cost of maintenance was minimal and 100's of times cheaper to repair than roads and highways made from concrete and asphalt. The enormous cost of building huge highways made no economic sense except as a military defense plan to make sure the Federal; Govt could transport its troops anywhere quickly if by some stretch of the imagination there happened to be an uprising which needed to be quelled. But even that doesn't make any sense. The already existing railroads could have been used and been much more effective. Actually the highway systems of America that were built after WW2 was in emulation of the autobahns built by Hitler in Germany. It was the worst possible choice they could have made. Germany was a small country with mountains, surrounded by powerful enemies on all sides. America is a continental island with nothing to fear from its neighbors. None of this shit was done because the consumer wanted it. It was forced upon the masses whether they liked it or not and sold to them as 'progress' and 'new' as 'better'. All of it was worse: not better. The rich bought up all the small independent newspaper and put them out of business because they did not want the masses to be well informed about their rampant corruption and sold them a pack of lies instead. The computer is a perfect example of selling people something they don't need and is bad for them. It is an addictive toy that is the biggest time waster in the world. It is an anti-social machine that isolates people and addicts them to abstract distraction. There are billions of other things that humans could be doing instead of sitting on their asses staring at a flat screen which would be better and healthier for them. Like the highway systems of America: it too was originally a military project, and sold to the masses as something 'new' and 'better'. It is not better. It is always worse. Whatever is too good is taken off the shelf and replaced with something that is of poorer quality... while the masses are told that is it 'better'. George Carlin said it best: "You have no choice: it's all a delusion to make you think that you have a choice. Actually you have none." You buy what they decide to sell you. Steve Jobs said it also: "It is not the consumer's job to decide what he wants."

But the consumers: the masses don't want to know the truth, they don't want to know it, they don't want to face it and they don't want to deal with it. They would rather turn on their TV's and watch Walt Disney and Donald Duck cartoons, or whatever crap there is on their TV because they have already been brainwashed into the culture escapism. Now... there is almost no difference between what you are told or what you are sold. All of it is propaganda designed to brainwash you in one way or another.

The Destruction of All Language

The destruction of language began when commercial companies began changing the meaning of words by sticking them onto their commercial products so they could sell better. By calling a soap: 'sunlight' and a detergent: 'tide'. Until children who do not live by the ocean think that the word 'tide' is a detergent: not the rising and falling of the sea due to the gravitational pull of the moon.

At first there were only a handful of commercial mass produced products, that destroyed the meaning of a word; by sticking it onto their product: For instance: Armand Hammer, sold baking soda by a picture on the box showing a burly arm holding a hammer. Instead of selling it under his name: he sold it under the guise of an industrial worker. Which was one of the slickest lies ever invented. He hated all worker, and used them, and put them to work in his factories and paid them starvation wages... and then made money off them by selling them a product that made them believe it came from a strong industrial class company akin to the communist-socialist political movements of that time; when it came from a greedy, cunning robber-baron.

But then there were more commercial products, and more, and more.... Until people were patenting the rights to use certain words to identify their brand or logo... The English language was being bought up and owned by commercial companies who were twisting the meanings of the words they bought for their own commercial gain. Until most of the words were patented. Owned. The English language ceased being a public trust: it became corrupted by capitalistic ownership and the private use of words for profit. And then... enter the modern shopper... walking down a supermarket aisle: glancing across hundreds upon and thousands of words on labels. Words that come from the English dictionary: but are not used as they are defined. Seeing thousands of commercials that twist the defined meanings of words to sell their products... So they choose which product they want to buy... by what words they like, by how the meanings of the words have been twisted. Until they start thinking:

'Hey! If the corporations can do it... why can't I?..'

So... they begin to choose which meaning they like, of whatever words they see.

They begin to re-interpret words, not as they are defined by the English dictionary, but instead: they begin to create their OWN definitions of the words they use and see... to suit their convenience. Just like the Corporations did and are still doing. They begin to invent their own definitions of words. Each person has their own personal definition of every word they use. As a result: language is destroyed. Language: which was originally a common pool of words used by everybody, that held the same meaning for everybody, so people could understand what they were saying to each other: is being destroyed by shoppers creating their own personal definitions and meanings of the words they use.

Why did this happen?

This happened so people could avoid understanding each other. This happened because there was so much information, so many books, so many facts: that if this had not happened: shoppers would have become enlightened. They would have become more aware of what they were doing. They would have become more aware that they were all the same, that there was no differences between them. That they were all buying the same identical crap, and being sold and swallowing the same identical commercial mass-produced culture. They would have become aware that their personal uniqueness and personal identity was being systematically destroyed by buying and identifying-with, and using mass-produced goods, and becoming a single mass-culture of identical consumers.

So in order to create their own uniqueness, to create their own personality, their own personal culture: they created it by destroying the common, identical definitions of the words they use... or rather: by creating their own definitions of words: they became 'unique'. Nobody else used the word in the same way they did. That makes them feel that they have a special 'culture'. They created their own personal culture by the only power that they had left: consumer choice.

Only... the trouble with a personal culture, instead of a culture you share with others... the trouble with inventing definitions and meanings of words to suit your own convenience... the trouble with the belief that you can choose the meaning of a word to mean what you want it to mean.

Is that nobody else will have the faintest fucking clue what you are talking about... Unless their personal definitions of the words you use just happen to be exactly the same as yours: which is mathematically and scientifically impossible. This happened in conjunction with the destruction of the public education system. Children were so badly educated, that they could not read, spell or write the English language correctly. Children became incapable of understanding what they read: because they had not been taught to understand the words of the English language by the definition that was supposed to be common for all English-speaking people.

The definition of a word in English has become meaningless today: because whenever any person actually picks up a dictionary and reads a definition: if they do not like that definition: they ignore it and do not use it. Definitions of words... the meanings of words have become meaningless today: because the how words are used in print, how their meanings are used in books... are no longer based upon a single common understood definition.

The old standard classical English educational system has almost disappeared from the earth. The way people use words is no more based upon their original written definitions. People prefer to misunderstand what words mean. People avoid understanding what words mean. People avoid understanding anything.

Commercial capitalism is based upon the selling of meaninglessness. Only by selling the religious belief that there is NO meaning to life, NO meaning to your own personal existence, NO meaning to anything whatsoever... can Budweiser glorify meaninglessness by selling its beer... as the beer that only the stupidest, redneck, reactionary idiots who hate learning and education drink, by using the logo:

'Why ask why?

In other words: you can only keep on shopping as long as you avoid the understanding that your are being sold lies. That you are being sold crap. That you are being cheated. As long as you avoid understanding the true meanings of words: you can avoid exploring their true meanings. You can avoid asking questions. The avoidance of meaning in modern society is now a mass psychosis. People avoid saying anything meaningful, because they are afraid of stepping on somebody else's convenient misinterpretation of words. It is called political correctness.

And so it goes: words are used as meaningless fodder. They do not mean anything anymore to anybody: except what people want them to mean. And since the meaning of words used by other people does not suit your meanings: you do not listen to them, and they do not listen to you. Modern human society has become the Tower of Babel. The Internet has become the living recreation of the Tower of Babel. Millions of people... all babbling to each other over the Internet. What does this do? Nothing. What does it communicate? Meaninglessness. What worth is it? Zero. What use is it? None.

Consumers and Honesty

There is a very simple way to make consumers honest. Remove all separations from the consumer process. Remove all tools from the process. If they want to eat chicken. Make them kill that chicken with their bare hands. Make them feel the life force ebbing from the dying chicken. Make them feel how strongly the chicken wants to live. Make them feel the chicken in their bare hands struggling and fighting to live while they are killing it. Make them understand how hard it actually is to kill anything when you do not have the mechanical advantage of using a tool to kill it with. Then make them pluck the chicken they killed with their bare hands. Make them try to rip that dead chicken apart with their bare hands. And see how hard it is to eviscerate a dead corpse without the use of a sharp knife. Make them rip out the bloody bleeding guts of the chicken they killed. Then make them cook that dead corpse and eat it. After that they will not want to eat another chicken again for the rest of their lives.

If they want to eat pork. Make them try to kill a live pig with their bare hands. Make them feel and understand how hard it is to kill a living animal that is just as big as you are without the advantage of tools and implements that kill. They will find that they cannot kill the pig: because the pig wants to live. The pig will fight to its dying breath to live. They will also find out that the pig is stronger than they are, and more intelligent than they are. If they still want to eat pork. Give them a knife: and let them try to kill the pig with the knife. They will find that the pig will fight them so hard that they will be injured from trying to kill the pig. If they still want to eat pork: give them an axe. Let them try to kill the pig with an ax. They will find that they cannot run down the pig or corner it. They will find that even if they can corner it: it takes a very determined, very skilled person using an ax to give the right killing blow. They will find that killing a pig with an ax is not only dangerous but extremely difficult and damned-near impossible. If they still want to eat pork. Give them a gun. Let them face the animal they are going to kill face-to-face. See if they have the guts to pull the trigger. 99 out of a hundred will not pull the trigger. Not because they do not have courage: but because they are too humane to kill another animal directly... they need the insulation of not seeing what they eat being killed. When you take away all the separations of consumer society between killing and eating: when you force people to face the truth: people suddenly become human. Killing is ugly. Killing is horrible. Killing another living animal marks you for life. It traumatizes you for life.

Only crazed, insane, unfeeling, numbed, brainwashed, sick, inhuman traumatized, brutalized people can do it.

If they pull the trigger and kill the pig. Make them butcher it with their bare hands. Make them understand that the skin of a pig is so tough and so thick: there is no way in hell they can butcher it without the sharpest knife. Make them butcher that dead pig. Make them rip out the dead pig's entrails and organs and heart and lungs. Make them roast the pig and make them eat it. After that: they will never want to kill another living thing again as long as they live. They will never want to eat pork for the rest of their life.

If they want to eat beef. Let them try to kill a full grown steer with their bare hands. If they cannot kill it with their bare hands or with a knife. Let them try to kill it with a gun. Let them see how hard it is to kill a full-grown steer with a gun. Let them listen to the screams of pain and shock and suffering if their aim is not good. Let them see the animal die slowly... as they desperately try to put it out of its misery. Let them butcher that steer and roast the flesh and eat it. Let them eat fresh raw meat. Let them taste how slimy and nauseating it tastes without turning it into an unrecognizable burnt, brown, decomposed tough fibrous thing that has no taste. All it does is fill up your inner emptiness.

When people face evil directly and honestly: they get sick to their stomach. When they get sick to their stomach: they do not want to eat anything. They just want to face the lies and hypocrisy and destroy evil.

When people are forced to discover that evil exists inside them. They get sick to their stomach. They do not want to eat anything. If consumers are forced to face the fact that eating animal flesh means killing a living animal: then they will stop eating meat.

The same applies to fish. If you bring a consumer to a fishing trawler and make them see how these butchers kill fish, and how they dump the majority of their catch which is already traumatized, near-dead or completely dead back into the ocean. If you make them smell the stink of farmed fish living in cages. If you make them take scuba gear and see the piles of rotting filth under these cages: as the feces of the caged fish and the rotting uneaten fish food rots so badly: they will develop huge pus sores and other ailments from just going near the rotting shit dump that the surface of the ocean hides from the viewers on land. If you make them kill their own caged fish and smell the rotten dead carcass: so they understand how rotten the fish actually is. If you make them see how they have to add all kinds of artificial coloring and taste-deadening chemicals to the fish so it will not smell rotten and taste rotten when it is cooked and eaten. If you make them feel the life force of the fish they killed ebbing out in their hands as they hold it. If you make them gut the fish with their bare hands and cook it and eat it.

They will never want to eat another fish again as long as they live. They will become activists and pass out circulars that inform customers going into a supermarket of the dangers and evils of eating farmed fish. And the evil of eating fish period... when the last fish in the oceans of the world are disappearing so fast: every year there are species that people cannot find anymore in the stores: because they are extinct. They have been killed off.

This is how you force consumers to be honest. Whatever they want to buy. Take them to the factories where it is being made. Show them what the materials are, show them where the chemicals come from, show them how the chemicals are made, show them what corporations do to rip things out of the earth to make their filthy poisonous chemicals. Show them how toxic and poisonous and killing every fucking single part of every fucking process of the consumer-producer capitalist greed business-industrial system they are a part-of actually is. Force them to experience every part of the process they have been conveniently separated from and did not want to know about.

After that... they will not want to buy another fucking thing as long as they live. Because they will be forced to face the fact that all the destruction of the earth that is going on; is being done at their behest, for their pleasure, for their convenience, for their ease.

Then what will they eat?

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

Fruit. Vegetables. Nuts. Berries. Grains. Legumes. Berries Sprouts. Living things that give themselves willingly to be eaten. You do not have to kill a tree to eat a fruit or a nut. You do not have to kill a plant to eat a berry. You do not have to kill a plant to eat a tomato. You are not killing a plant by taking the nodules it grows in its root system. Grains fall from their stem-plant naturally when they are ripe. You do not even have to cut wheat to harvest it. All you have to do is tap the plant gently when it is ripe: and the grains will fall into your basket. Mushrooms that are ripe have no root system to be ripped off-of because they are parasites that only grow when it rains, and die quickly afterwards. Harvesting mushrooms will not harm the ecosystem the mushrooms live-in. There are countless healthy herbs and green things that can be cut because they keep on growing and are not seriously harmed if their tops are harvested. Salad plants are like this. So is wild onion grass. All of this is healthy, cheap, easily available and affordable. And none of it needs any fancy crap processing before you eat it. Except for some root vegetables that need steaming to be more digestible. How can you do this? You have to educate consumers about they use food.

If you use food merely as a source of energy: you will be amazed how little food you need. If you use it as a source of comfort to fill up your life with, to fill your inner emptiness with: you will be amazed at how much food you eat that you do not actually need. If you use food as a drug: you will become a drug addict, you will become a food addict. If you only use it for energy: you will eat so little food, you will become so healthy: that everybody around you will notice it, and envy your health and energy. It is merely a matter of changing the culture you live in by changing your own culture and your own habits you have, and becoming more aware of how you use food and why you use it.

Food is used as an excuse to socialize. Food is used as a substitute for love. Food is used as a substitute for comfort. Food is used for self-gratification.

If people got together without using food as the excuse. If people comforted each other without substituting comfort food for human comfort. If people were honest with each other. Consumer culture would disappear, Comfort food would disappear. McDonald's, Burger King would disappear.

If you force a consumer to actually make what they buy first: they will understand what it is they are buying. If you force them to see the actual process of what they buy: where every single material comes from, and what is done to it, and how it is made and by who, and at what cost to the environment, and Nature and other human beings: they will never buy that product again. It is only through the ignorance of what they are buying, only through the separation of the consumer from the producing process: that consumers can buy anything. As long as consumers are kept ignorant of the process, as long as consumers want to stay ignorant of the process: sellers can sell them lies, and they will continue to buy these lies.

Brainwashing

Media brainwashing, cultural brainwashing, social brainwashing, religious brainwashing, school brainwashing. Peer examples. Conformity. Fear. Weakness. Living in artificial cocoons. No hardship. Spoiled rotten. Getting their way every time. Selfishness.

Consumers cannot be honest. All honesty leads to unpleasant truths they do not want to face or hear. They have nothing in common except self-gratification. Who needs racism or cultural or ethnic discrimination when you can discriminate against anyone as a consumer? Consumers discriminate other people the same way they discriminate the products they buy and use. They throw away people as indifferently as they throw away paper bags. They use other people like paper bags: only once, and then thrown away. They discriminate against other people for the stupidest superficial reasons. What kind of car they drive. What kind of clothes they wear. What kind of shoes they wear. What kind of music they like. How they look. How they walk. How they talk. What they eat.

If they do not like one ingredient in a consumer product: they do not buy it. If it is the wrong color: they do not buy it. Consumerism has created a new kind of inhumane racism: incremental discrimination. Finding a tiny incremental reason for disliking and hating another person: while ignoring everything good about that person. They do not understand that if you accept a person: you have to accept all of them: not just what you like about them.

'Oh... he smokes a pipe. Ugh. He does not eat meat like I do. He does not eat all the unhealthy consumer products I do. He only eats vegetables and fruits and natural peanut butter. Ugh. He does not use pharmaceutical drugs like I do. He exercises and is healthy while I sit on my ass and watch old movies over and over again. Ugh. I hate him. He is not like I am. He is a filthy smoker. He refuses to eat fish. I love eating fish. Even though all the world's oceans are being drained of all living creatures by idiots like me who eat fish every day. He does not buy farm-raised salmon and eat it like I do. He does not contribute to destroying the natural world like I do. I hate him. I don't trust him. He smokes a pipe and doesn't inhale: he says it's for constricting his blood vessels: that is how he manages his psychobiological pain. Because the nicotine enters through his saliva straight into his blood. This way he does not get cancer. Ugh. I don't believe a word of it. He is sick... Ugh. I am in bed with a horrible virus. He walks outside in the open country and is perfectly healthy. I hate him. Why? Because he is too honest about his addictions. He likes to keep healthy food separate from his junk food. This way he knows when he is drugging himself with cookies, or chocolate. He fights his cravings. I give in to all my cravings. I can't stand him. The self-indulgent excuse is that he smokes a pipe. Because she cannot stand people who are not as sick as she is, who are not as addicted to instant self-gratification as she is. This is one example of the emotional dishonesty, and intellectual dishonesty and sick hypocrisy of consumer culture: Tobacco has become demonized. Why has tobacco become such a no-no in society? Not because consumer society is getting healthier. Not because consumers want to become healthier. But because other even worse drugs have taken tobacco's place in the lexicon of new drugs and new additives. Because there are millions of more toxic additives and poisons in what consumers eat, drink, do and think. Consumers cannot abide an honest addiction anymore. Consumers cannot abide intelligent addictions anymore. Consumers have become so unhealthy, so sick, so pale, so wasted, so weak, so filled with tons of poisonous toxic elements and chemicals in their bodies: that they cannot become healthy. Consumers have fallen in love with being sick, spoiled and stupid. There is no such thing as an honest consumer. Honesty does not exist in consumer society. Why?

First: consumers choose their rationalizations as self-indulgently as they choose the crap they buy in supermarkets. Second: consumers are phobic about dirt, about filth, about germs: because their subconscious minds are screaming at them that they are dirty polluting filthy creatures. In order to suppress their own subconscious guilt: each one projects their own self-revulsion outwards, and regards the entire natural world and the entire outer Universe as dirty, filthy and disgusting. When it is actually they who are disgusting in how they indulge their worst vices, and rationalize their sins and crimes away: while carping and criticizing others who have different vices. The entire drug industry of civilization is hypocrisy. What is a legal drug, and a socially accepted drug... and what is an illegal drug and an unaccepted drug: is all a matter of convenience and hypocritical rationalization and profit. Consumers are addicted to pharmaceutical drugs because they are sick and too lazy to make the effort to get healthy.

The sickest, worst, most poisoning, most toxic consumer vices are catered to. The sickest consumers are catered to. Not the healthiest. There is no such thing as a healthy consumer. A healthy person is someone who does not need consumer drugs or products. A healthy person does not want consumer shit. A healthy person can live their lives just fine without consumer products. A healthy person thinks about what they are going to buy, and is informed about what they are buying. Consumer society is based upon not knowing anything. You are not supposed to know where what you bought came from, what is made from, how it was made, what chemicals and poisons were used to make it. You are not supposed to know where it goes after you are finished with it either. You are supposed to know nothing. When you flush your toilet: you do not know where the water goes or what happens to it. When you buy something: you do not know where it came from, how it was made or what was used to make it. When you turn on a light: you do not know where that power came from; or how it was created. When you drink water: you do not know where that water came from; or what is in it. When you buy gas, you don't know where that gas came from; or what other people did to get it and sell it to you, what is in it. When you buy food, you do not know where that food came from, how it was grown, if it was processed, how it was processed, and what is in it. The business corporations do not want you to know how they make anything... And as long as consumers are pampered, and treated like babies: they don't want know how anything is made, or where it came from, or what was done to make it either.

Now corporations have managed to legally do away with the requirement of putting the ingredients, chemicals and additives in the labels of all products that are not foodstuffs... and they are avidly trying to eliminate the necessity of detailing the ingredients in their processed foods also. Neither side of the system wants to know what they are actually consuming, or actually producing... so neither pushes the other to be overly honest about anything. Both sides want to remain as blind as possible to what they are doing. Consumers do not want to know what is inside the products they consume. Producers do not want to know the effect of what they produce on consumers. They do not want to have any responsibility for what they do. Both hands wash the other.

It is purely a dynamic of procurers and addicts pleasing themselves. With everyone trying to be as ignorant about the unpleasant details as possible. Why? As long as you do not know the consequences of your own actions, you are supposed to be innocent of all wrongdoing. You are not supposed to be guilty of any wrongdoing. If you buy chocolate, made from cocoa grown on the Gold Coast in Africa picked by child slaves... you can say: 'Oh. I didn't know that...' And go on buying chocolate without a single feeling of being responsible for letting cocoa plantations profit from child labor.

What's more. All of the details. All of the truth is comfortably removed from your immediate presence. You do not have the slaughterhouse with the screams of the animals ringing in your ears; as you buy your plastic-wrapped meat from your Super market. You do not have the stinking, ugly monstrosities of the oil refineries in your front yard; when you go to buy gas for your car. You do not have to worry about all of the American fleets around the world upholding their orders to support all the dictators in the world and oppress all the billions of powerless dispossessed poor so you can but gas cheaper than anywhere else on Earth. You do not have to see the sweatshops, where children work their fingers bloody, in your front yard when you buy a cheap blouse or shirt at a discount store. You do not have to know about the poverty and slavery involved in the making of anything that you buy. It is all safely removed. So; since you do not see it. Since you know nothing of this inter-linked causality. You are blameless. You are innocent. The three monkeys of legend: Hear-no Evil, See-no Evil, Speak- no Evil: is much more aptly relevant today than it ever was in the past. They represent the modern consumer.

People assume that if they ever attained heights of power and wealth... they would never be as corrupt as those who are in power, and do have wealth. However... only those who want it the most, only those who fight for it the hardest; ever actually attain it. Those who do not want it enough: never attain it. This way: only the most corrupt people get in positions of Power; automatically. Only the greediest people become the wealthiest: automatically. It is an automatic vicious cycle that so far: has never changed, that always filters out the best, and concentrates the worst of humanity into positions of power and wealth. It puts the worst human filth into the highest positions automatically. Power and Wealth corrupts everyone: no matter who you are. You might think that if you were the president of that oil company; you would never do what he does. But you are wrong. In order to become an oil company executive: you have to have his values, his goals, and have the same culture. And you would do exactly as he does. Just as a baby born into a Christian family becomes a Christian, and A baby born in a Mohammedan family becomes a Mohammedan. You may not directly be responsible for his personal actions. But since you are part of the system: you are also part of the problem.

If no consumers bought gas and used bicycles instead: then there would be no oil Companies in the first place. The fact is; that this huge system called Global Capitalism is custom-designed to feed and pander to your specific wants and desires. You the individual consumer are the engine which drives all Global business in the world to commit their crimes in the sanctified names of Capitalism, Greed and Wealth. Power, and Status, etc..

So.... who do you want to selectively blame for the corruption of civilization? The driver, the body of the car? Or the engine? The car will still run even if you kill the driver. There are 7 billion drivers eagerly waiting to take the wheel. If the body is stripped, it will simply be rebuilt. There are 7 billion workers eager to be given that privilege. But if the engine is taken out and not replaced with another engine? Ah.

Then no matter how many billions of people want to drive that car, or how many want to build it: it cannot be driven or built. And that will be the end of the car. All consumers need to do, is stop buying all cars; and you have solved some of the worst Global problems at its grass-root level. The root problem and the root-evil of Capitalism is mass greed, mass ease and mass self-gratification. The root problem and evil of capitalism is the individual consumer. The most effective way of dealing with evil is at the root.

Have all consumers stop eating meat: and you have solved another host of huge world problems at its grass-root level. Have all consumers stop buying chemicals, and you will have solved another host of huge Global world problems at a root level.

But that means you have to raise the awareness of all consumers, and have all of them organize themselves into a single power-group. If you did that: they would become more powerful than all the Oil Companies in the World put together.

Consumers do not understand that they have much more power than producers. But they do not exercise that power. Why? Because they are not aware of themselves and each other as a single class, as a whole, as a Totality.

The higher up the mass of pyramidal hierarchical humanity you go: the more each layer understands itself as a single class, a single clan, a single tribe, a single culture. Simply because of the structural nature of the Pyramidity of civilization. The higher up you go in class, status, wealth, power: the smaller the strata, the smaller the population, the smaller the numbers of privileged elite. By its own

Pyramidal nature of hierarchy: the smaller the class: the more intense the class awareness. The larger the class: the weaker the class awareness. The weakest class awareness is at the bottom: the poorest and most populous classes have the weakest class awareness of themselves: and the worst class understanding of other classes

Producers understand themselves better as a single class than the consumers they sell to because they are a minority dealing with a majority. They band together simply because they are outnumbered. They deal with consumers as an anonymous masse. They deal with them impersonally. Simply because there are too many of them to know personally.

They understand that in order to get rich from making a profit from lower class: they must deal with humans inhumanly... abstractively. They must turn humans into abstractions, into numbers. Simply because there are too many of them.

Every class of minority Elite in the World understands itself better as a class than the majority class of people they oppress. Every elite class understands people below them as a class. Elite human awareness exists on a more abstract, inhuman, desensitized level of stereotyped class-distinction; than the class-distinction awareness of poor people have of themselves and those in power and those who are rich, and those who have privileged knowledge, and those who have status.

The poor, the lower classes; do not see themselves as a single oppressed class. But they are.

They do not understand the ones in power; as a class. Even though the elite in many ways, act in unison as a single class. One advantage the elite has over the lower classes, is their superior awareness of themselves as a class. And the relative non-awareness of the poor, of themselves as a class. Read history; and you will see that every time the lower classes became disgruntled: the upper classes went through hell and high water to find a new way to fool them into the same pyramidal crap-pile they instinctively did not like. No minority has ever overthrown a majority without successfully lying to them, deceiving them and pulling the wool over their eyes . No majority has been oppressed without letting themselves be oppressed. Now this ritual of lies, this ritual of making false promises... has become a thousand-year old tradition. Every promise made before the election, the entire voting public already knows will be broken in some way. And still the masses vote the liars into office. And they do it over, and over, and over again.

Why?

Because that's how we usually do it... because it's normal.

Do you see how stupid, and insane; the idea of any accepted normality is...? Especially when it is based upon the absurd notion that anything a majority does or decides must be right?

Every Media, every politician, every Robber Baron, every Millionaire, every negative government: is terrified of the lower classes developing a class-consciousness and organizing against them. The educated elite at least have read their history. They know what happened when class consciousness developed anywhere in the world amongst the poor. Even the mention of this phrase: class consciousness, is a politically incorrect no-no. People are not allowed to utter it publicly over the media anymore. They are instantly branded as dangerous revolutionaries. The lower classes are not allowed to organize themselves. Because every intelligent elite knows that the most dangerous threat to their well-being is an organized class-consciousness of the lower classes. That they were responsible for the most violent upheavals in history. And this majority is still the most powerful latent class of civilization. What is the sense of Pure Wonder, but an expanding sense of awareness? What is class-consciousness, but an expanded awareness of who you are, and a larger expanded awareness of the society you live-in? In that case: shouldn't all the consumers in the world be held individually, and as a group: more responsible, and more accountable for global pollution than all the Oil Companies of the World?

But the advantage of the consumer is that they can hide behind the anonymity of their purchases. There is no record of who buys what... or for what reason. There is no record of whether your purchases were based upon necessity, or purely for self-gratification. Nobody knows what you bought, or for what reason you bought it; except you. Most consumers do not have the faintest fucking understanding of why they buy anything in the first place. Unless you decide to be critically aware of what you buy; and why you are buying it. There is no such thing as a consumer conscience.

All you need do is read the label: if it is cheap and says Made in China, If it is cheaper after it was shipped seven thousand miles further than what is made here.... Duh. Do the math. You are buying slave goods. You are getting a good deal. You are saving money. You are being frugal. You have a limited budget. You are saving on necessary expenses.

But at whose expense?

At everybody else's expense; except your own..

The consumer attitude towards being informed and enlightened about what they consume is mostly: 'Don't tell me. I'm not listening. I'm not interested. I couldn't care less. I don't want to know about it.'

Why? Because it is easier not to know, it is easier to remain ignorant, it is easier to consume and throw away and consume. It is the religion and worship of ease. Once you make self-gratification not only a religious belief, but a normality taken so for granted; that the assumption of the 'divine right' of all consumers to please themselves becomes an unconscious assumption... then you get arrogance, smugness and stupidity and a 'what-me-worry?' attitude that is rampant throughout all consumer societies. Consumerism makes people stupid, arrogant and smug. The more people consume, the more we wallow in ease... the more smugly we do it, the more arrogantly we do it and the more stupidly we do it.

Until the identity of the consumer depends on their consumption. Until they cannot even tell who they are without identifying themselves by brand labels and preferences. Until whatever you buy defines who you are, and what you are, and in what class you are. Most consumers identify themselves by the relative affluence of their consumption. If you are affluent enough to afford x brand, or this car, or these clothes, or that house... that puts you into a certain class of exclusive consumers. The elite rich are getting richer by managing to sell the lower classes by selling them fake class status. By selling them instant, fake, temporary status symbols like cars or designer jeans, or fancy, overpriced coffee.

For example: the selling-image of the American Coffee house comes from the European Café of the 1800's bourgeoisie. Where elite rich once idled the time away for hours without a care in the world, drinking only one cup of coffee. It is a selling image of leisure, affluence, ease, good-times, socializing and cultured elegance. The upwardly mobile yuppies of America bought into it completely. They wanted to be seen as leisurely cultured, and elegant also. They crowd these places just like they crowd into McDonald's... standing in line just like they do at their Supermarkets. Grabbing their expensive brews and running... not sitting at all, or sitting with a laptop computer on the table as their 'companion'. The American Coffeehouse has become merely another cultural scam selling an elite status symbol to the masses to make them feel they are being upwardly socially mobile. Another franchised business with fancy names, fancy coffee, sold to rushing anonymous crowds, by underpaid serfs. To people who fool themselves into thinking that this fancy coffee puts them one notch above other people. That being selective, being exclusive in what they drink; puts them higher up in social status. As an extra affluent vice they can afford. As a cheap, affordable vice denoting affluence. An affordable addiction denoting upward mobility.

Why is the biggest, most successful coffee franchise called Starbucks? Because drinking expensive coffee makes you feel like a Star. Because drinking expensive coffee makes you feel Rich. Star... Bucks... get it? The message is not subliminal. It's fucking obvious. Its also fucking stupid. The Village people sang this bullshit Myth in their song called: 'Everybody is a Star in Hollywood'. As a spoof, a lampoon. Now: millions of brainwashed consumer addicts drink in this idea every fucking day into their bodies and minds.

But all of these fake class status items and symbols cost money. Now consumers do not even try for the fake status of a Lamborghini, or a huge mansion. Now modern consumers have created a class based upon the anonymous scale of pure money, pure abstract accumulation. The size of your savings. The number of dollars you have accumulated.

It used to be when you became upwardly mobile: you were supposed to move out of your old neighborhood. You were supposed to abandon all your old friends and neighbors. You became too good for them. You were supposed buy a huge mansion. And magically change all your life and become instantly happy. Money was supposed to solve all your problems instantly. Like the old 50's propaganda TV show called; The Millionaire. But at the same time...you were supposed to keep to your old ways. And your old values. Like The Beverly Hillbillies... your money is not supposed to change you. It is not supposed to be important. Happy poor people; who are happy because do not realize they are actually rich. Huh? Then why do all humans waste their lives trying to become rich, if Beverly hillbillies are happier eating hog jowls and corn grits? Why do most lottery winners after they win: still work at their old jobs, and live in the same house? And confess that they are no happier than when they did not have all those millions? The lottery only sells tickets because it is based upon the imagined happiness and ease all that money will buy. The winners run up: overjoyed. Happy. Lucky. Everyone believes that this free money will make them happy. Why is this total bullshit cultural lie of free money buying happiness never challenged or exposed: when most mature adults already know that money does not buy you happiness? Why do Governments around the world now support this continual cultural scam? One measure of public morality and ethics; is the legalization of gambling and lotteries. Gambling was once illegal. Now it is legal. But who profits from it? Oops. The very legal bodies who had made it illegal for hundred of years before they made it legal. The very authorities who push it and advertise it, and sell it now because they found out how to make money from it. Gosh. What a coincidence. And consumers actually believe this shit. They actually think gambling is good for you? That is sick.

What is public morality? Whatever is normal for a majority? Or whatever is legal? Or whatever is publicly normal? Or whatever is normally public? Or whatever was normal thousands of years ago? What does any of this have to do with the truth? Nothing.

Research shows no discernable effect in the lives of lottery winners. What do all those millions of dollars do for them? Except buying a new car, some appliances, and having a larger bank account and having investments they never had before. But the security of wealth. The safety of it. How safe it makes you feel. How invulnerable to everything they feel. No more worrying about being poor. Peace of mind. Now you know you will never have to worry about being poor. Doesn't that make you happier?

No.

On the contrary, if anything happens to your suddenly increased safety cushion. Of wealth. Whether it is hundreds, thousands or millions... the instant anything happens to lessen it: you suddenly become sick with worry. Your confidence wilts. You become afraid, uncertain... timid. Suddenly any change becomes scary, threatening thing. Nowadays people sock away their actual money-wealth and try to hide how much they are really worth into all kinds of businesses, properties and investment portfolios. That is why capitalist investors fear change. The entire world of investors fear change. Nobody dares rock their nice safe investment boats. Which, um, er... just so happens to be slyly and unobtrusively interconnected on every level and imaginable way to all of the oppressors, and enslavers and employers and multi-national corporations in the World... Which the investors themselves purportedly hate... but grudgingly tolerate: as long as their investment in their corporations makes a nice profit.

Has any investor ever gone to the trouble of making sure that their investment dollars are used ethically? Humanely? Sanely? Morally? For the good of other people?

No.

Their money is anonymously filtered into an anonymous system. So mixed up with other dollars, that nobody can point the finger at any other investor. They. We. I. Are all guilty of this. Anyone daring to voice any criticism of the entire system is ignored. They are laughed at as poor losers, or naïve suckers. Convinced that any complaint only stems from losers not being lucky enough to be as rich and well off as the lucky few. Besides... who ever listens to other people who are lower in status, wealth and power than they are?

Nobody.

If someone did try to object to the universal corruption of the entire Capitalistic System: they would need to find a more powerful system to replace it with. Besides: who amongst us is free of guilt?... Who amongst us will cast the first stone? . Why should anyone would ever listen to this book? Civilized adults respect only the highest levels of money, power, status and greed.

Greedy people only respect people who are greedier than they are. Powerful people only respect people who are more powerful than they are. High-status people only respect people who have a higher status than theirs. This is another bunch of idiotic, vicious cycles that humans are too weak, too cowardly, too ignorant, too prejudiced and too stupid to break. One lone individual who is not greedy cannot convince 6 billion greedy people. The six billion people win every time. The majority wins. The masses win.

Actually, we all lose.... Only we do not want to admit this to ourselves. The millions of investors are actually merely suckers sucking wealth from the rest of humanity. While also being fleeced of their own hard-earned money. So the companies and corporations can take this money... and fleece even more millions of consumers from their hard-earned money.... And fleece all the third world countries of their

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

984 resources, and fleece all of their employees, and all the workers in poor Nations of their hard-earned money... and out of all this massive fleecing... give merely a pittance of it back to the investor.

Just enough to keep their hopes of making a profit up.

Just enough to make them addicted to getting more free profits. Just enough to keep them investing all of their hard-earned money in this worldwide scam: while the top heads of the corporations skim off millions and billions, in every possible way they can finagle both legally or illegally. This corporate corruption has risen to such incredible heights of legalized normality, and legalized corrupt laws to allow this illegal skimming to happen more legally: that how Ken Lay bilked an entire Nation, and Government, and half the civilized world of billions of dollars:

Whether he did it illegally, semi-legally, or legally... Does anyone care about how it was done? Does anyone dare to go after those stolen billions? And force the system to cough them back up? ?

No.

Most of those billions have found nice cozy homes in the bank accounts of people who are supposed to police these affairs. While the public lies back on its back and allows it to happen without a whimper. All that is required is for people to do nothing. And the next series of scams and corruptions are even worse. The scamsters watch carefully how far the latest rip-offs were allowed to go... and then they act accordingly... pushing the envelope of illegal profit and corruption as far as possible.

If only one, lone person objects to this? If no governmental body punishes them for it in public? If it all hushed up? Then they know they have been given the green light to infiltrate more corrupt practices into the 'legal' way of how corporate 'business' is run... While the media keeps silent, and the world watches in amazement; at the rising levels of wealth, corruption, and scandal of the richest and wealthiest elite.

The entire capitalistic world and all of its billionaires, and rulers, and elite: run upon one principle:

Have as little Change as Possible.

Trillions of dollars are devoted to stopping all kinds of possible changes in their Status Quo. When you amass enough money; you are shoved into a class where many of your decisions are based upon trying to keep your wealth intact. You find yourself in a class: that wants to control and determine how other people vote, simply because most of these changes threatens to lessen your own privileges, wealth, and power.

\

Why do you think the Republican Party's candidates are more energetic, and aggressive than the Democrats? They have more to lose if the wrong person gets into power. They have more to fight for. More to protect. More to fear. More to hate. More reasons to lie and smear.

Inevitably... in a world population of six-seven billion people... this supposedly non-existent class of rich people, ends up determining, and controlling how the other 6 billion live. All based upon an invisible class system of hidden money... that cannot be identified; except by secret invisible investments and ownerships. A hidden, anonymous class whose identity and fortunes are constantly changing. They would have you believe rich people are like everyone else. Johnny Carson said: 'Rich People are different'. But as the richest entertainer in America in all the 20 years of The Tonight Show: he never cared to explain just how they are different from other people, even though he was one himself.. He never cared to explain himself. He went to his grave a lonely recluse; famous and unloved and filthy rich.

How come tax cuts for the wealthy always pass Congress; but school appropriations and health programs are consistently scrimped-on or sabotaged? This non-existent class somehow magically always seems to mysteriously get together somehow, and have their priorities pass over the concerns of the lower class. Wake up. Every politician ever voted into in office is a full-fledged member of that class. And what is the root of this invisible class? Do they eat the same cereal as poor people? Do they enjoy the same basic creature comforts as poorer people? The outward difference is obvious.

Status. Money: accumulation... The difference between a $3,000 second-hand dependable Honda Accord, and a $120,000 brand-new Hummer. The difference between a $600 per month rented apartment... and three owned mansions worth 200 million dollars each. The difference between a 2,000-dollar bank balance, with a 10,000 dollars credit debt...and NO credit debt, and a net worth ranging from millions to billions of dollars. That is the kind of insane abstract status, which drives the entire civilized world today.

But this has nothing to do with practicality, common sense, health, logic, or anything... except status. Both the rich and poor of an affluent Nation live the same way, in heated house with windows and doors, with the same hot and cold water, the same toilets, the same basic, heating and appliance amenities, and all drive a car, and watch TV, and go to movies. So if there is almost no difference between the actual comfort, and ease of a rich or poor person in America... suddenly there is no more reason to have a visible class structure. Because everyone is hiding how much money they have from everyone else. People in small apartments look at huge mansions in disgust, and would never live in them even if they were given them free. People look at a Rolls Royce in disgust and would never drive one even if given it for free. People look at fancy restaurants in disgust, and would not even go to one if it was free....

So. Where are the class structures today? Where have they burrowed away under the subconscious mind and hidden themselves? People are constantly trying to invent new exclusive consumer class cultures, new cliques and new exclusive new fads like sporting tattoos on your body.

Once, this was a mark of self-degradation. Only the lowest criminals had tattoos. Only the poorest refuse, the poorest most ignorant, most brutalized biker scum and rednecks, only the most crude low-lives, only sailors had tattoos. Now American culture has found a new low. Now this is the only way they can be different from the rest of the faceless masses.

Constantly creating new exclusive consumer products. Because if they do not identify themselves as being upwardly mobile: they become depressed. Their class self-esteem lowers. Their egos become smaller. They become less arrogant. Less smug. More humble.

But social classes still exist in America. Even for people who think they do not even care about it anymore. All Humans living in a mass society hold common attitudes and assumptions and normalities which they share in common as a single mass. For the truly wealthy, who own things. Ownership brings responsibilities. They are given the common shared right to do anything they want to with their wealth and property. For the affluent consumer; they are given the common shared right to buy anything they want, and to do anything they want with their possessions and toys.

Buy a cheap car when you can afford an expensive one? Buy cheap clothes when you can afford expensive ones? Consumers constantly keep themselves in debt-slavery by buying beyond their means... because they all are class conscious, and want to be included in the highest, most exclusive most expensive social class possible. They all want to appear to be upwardly mobile. Especially in America: the fear of not being a member of an affluent class borders on terror...

No consumer wants to even feel poor whether they are poor or not. They lie to themselves, and buy things that they cannot afford, and fall into even worse debt-slavery than before... making the credit card companies obscenely wealthy and rich. Just so they can feel rich: even though they are actually poor. The Capitalist system brainwashes this fear into consumers, and makes its profits from it: very convenient and self-serving... but not for poor consumers, not for the masses: who are in debt and stay in debt because of this.

Then there is the reverse snobbery of the rich buying cheap cars and goods; just to show that they are not elitist, that they are not cultured. And, in most cases they are not. They are simply one of the lucky few, who have managed to make more money. Either way... the level of our affluence, our wealth, what we buy, and consume... destructively defines who we are.

In Western Culture: if you do not run, own, manipulate, drive or run a complicated expensive machine: then you are nothing. If you do not live in a big, expensive, complicated house: then you are nothing. If you do not buy big, complicated, expensive things: then you are nothing. If you do not work for a big, expensive, complicated corporation or government: then you are nothing.

What is there to do in modern consumer society: if you do not want to buy or sell anything? What is there to do; if you do not want to be entertained by others, or distracted, or keep yourself drugged or distracted with some specialized hobby, or interest that requires you to buy things? How can you go skiing, without driving many miles, paying for gas, food, lodgings and an expensive lift ticket so you never have to walk up the hill you just easily skied down from? What can you do, if you do not want to participate in the selling or buying of anything? Very little. Almost nothing. If you do not buy or sell, or consume... then you can't socialize at all. What does that say of the society you are living in?

This is the slow stranglehold going on in all consumer societies. More and more machine contact. More and more machine activities. Less and less human contact. Less and less human activities. More and more superficial distractions. More computer games. More Movies. More videos. Less actual living. More and more spectating. Less and less human participation, less human involvement. More and more selfishness, more boredom, more boring people, less creative people, less fun, less life, less movement.

There are almost no other social avenues left... except dogmatic exclusive cults, religions and cliques that define who they are even more narrowly than a consumer does. Where is there any humanity in all of this? None whatsoever. There is literally almost no humanity left in capitalistic consumer societies: except chattering to each other about trivia... while you are busy working to be able to afford to be a consumer, or being a consumer, or being distracted, or winding down from working too much.

By worshipping our own tools, our technology, by worshipping the God of comfort: we have lost all meaning to our lives. We were meant to be constantly challenged by life; but when our tools became too good, all challenge in living disappeared: so did excitement and fun. In becoming too comfortable, we have become less healthy. Most overeating is due to eating food for comfort... to avoid painful and unpleasant feelings. Everything is supposed to be easier and faster. But fast food is unhealthy. Comfort food is unhealthy. Processed food is unhealthy. What is good for you? Comfort, or hardship? Safety and security, or uncertainty and challenge? Using and developing tools or using and developing your human qualities? Facing your problems or avoiding them?

What we call: Consumer Choice; tries to answer a very limited question. It only asks how you can make your life easier. It does not ask why you want to make your life easier, or if making life easier is good for you. It does not ask how you should breathe, or how you should walk, or how you should think, or how you should feel, or how you should relate to other people. It does not ask what kind of community you want to live in, or should live in. It does not ask how you should live. All consumer societies are societies that do not want to ask themselves any difficult questions. Consumers hate difficult choices. They want society to make their choices for them. The only questions they ask are questions of convenience. They only ask what is most convenient. As a result they have forgotten how to think. They only have one built-in programmed question: Does it gratify me?

In fact; consumers ask almost no intelligent questions at all about what they buy. They are not concerned in the slightest, what the effect of their buying habits may have on the rest of the world. As long as they get a temporary self-gratification fix, that's all that matters. Nothing else. Unless, by chance, they become informed. Then... some may stop buying certain products, because then they know what is bad about a certain product. But does anyone try to become informed about all the consumer goods and services they buy? No. There are too many of them.

Corporations hate it when the consumers become too informed. They hate an intelligent consumer because they ask questions about things they would much rather not talk about. If you ask yourself intelligent questions about why you buy anything, the answer will generally be to make life easier for you. And the more you reflectively ask yourself why you are buying anything, the more you realize that you do not really need it. That you can get along fine without most consumer products. Consumer culture trains people how to lie to each other as much as possible. The most successful people in consumer society are mostly the most artful, convincing liars. Anyone who is too honest is fired. Anyone who is not a coward is fired. Anyone who is not greedy is fired. It is uncomfortable to be around anyone you do not understand. It is uncomfortable to be around people who make you feel ashamed, afraid, and guilty... because you do not measure up to their values and standards. Consumer society trains people to be the most mindless conformists possible. People should not be allowed to always get what they want. But try to tell that to a modern consumer.

Consumerism is basically a hierarchy of possessions and is expressed in the classic line; 'I've got mine.'

How many people who have a house, care one fig about people who do not have one? How many people who have jobs; care about those who do not have a job? How many people who have a TV; give a damn about those who do not have a TV? How many people who have computers; give a damn about all the people who do not have computers? How many people who have cars; give a damn about people who do not have cars? How many people who have a place to live, care about the homeless? How many people who are well-fed; care about the billions who are hungry and starving?

Almost none.

When you are working hard every day trying to make as much money as possible. When you are working hard just to make enough money to pay your rent, and pay off your debts. You do not have the time or energy to worry about anyone, or anything else. You do not have the time, or energy, or interest to worry about anyone else's problems. The Protestant Work Ethic, and the affluence it creates: forces you to not care about anyone else who is less better-off than you are. Possessions, wealth, ease; all create a norm of uncaring, insulated smugness. Even if you yourself have experienced being fired, or not having a car, or starving... once your own hardship ends, once you become affluent again: then everyone else who is in the predicament you once were; has no relevance to your life any longer whatsoever. Upward mobility, or as educated imbeciles call it: Progress: brainwashes you to look forward, never backward. Anything or anyone who is considered backward, is considered to be bad, stupid, wrong, evil, ignorant, misguided and doomed to failure. You are supposed to progress up the shit pile of civilization and never look back, never turn back to lend a helping hand to those beneath you who are less well-off.

The Russians have a saying: 'When you're cold: don't look for sympathy from someone who's warm.' It is a very innocuous saying. But it accurately represents and damns most of the civilized people who ever lived on Earth. It accurately damns and judges every upwardly mobile human society. This observation is so seemingly harmless, that it is easily laughed at, and ignored, and discounted. But it accurately summarizes the complete insular disdainful, uncaring, unfeeling attitude all civilized people who have been brainwashed to be upwardly mobile and despise anyone lower than they are in the shitpile of civilization..

The life-lesson of civilization is that if you want to get ahead: never look back. The exceptions of charity, the attempt to make people feel guilty for their own affluence almost never works. As long as you have yours: that's all that matters. The entire system of civilization tries to wall people off from other people misfortunes and sufferings. The more affluent a society becomes; the more walls, regulations, insulations, denials, deflections have to be worked into the system... so nobody gets close to anyone else. The more affluent a society is: the more insular it becomes. Simply because this system is all based upon pure selfishness. This is developed by layers upon layers of bureaucracy, laws, regulations, regulating authorities, authority figures, propaganda, and legalization of every lie and myth that keeps the masses isolated and alienated. All human values become translated into money.

What has the religion... the value-system, the belief, the practice of the bottom line done to consumers? Once you transfer all of your loyalty to an abstraction instead of to a human. You become an untrustworthy, unpredictable, unreliable, consumer: who will change their mind on a spoiled whim at the drop of a hat, or buy something else that is five cents cheaper.

Corporations spend billions of dollars over decades trying to establish: brand loyalty in their customers. So even if it is more expensive: you will buy their brand of gas, their brand of soft drink. What has the practice of the bottom line done to all buying and selling? It made it completely impersonal. Now: you no longer do business with a neighbor whom you know personally, and like and trust. Before Robber Barons, and their monopolized Corporations: people refused to do business with strangers. They did not like nasty surprises. They did not like to get ripped off by a stranger who could bilk them, cheat them and then flee. Run. And never be found again. Even if their products or services seemed cheaper or better.

People naturally preferred to do business with long-standing friends who they knew and trusted. And if anything did go wrong... later. They could always bring it back... and talk to their neighbor about it. Because they knew where they lived. And they knew that if their neighbor gave them shoddy goods or services... it got around the neighborhood and the reputation of their business reputation would be seriously damaged.

Originally; all small neighborhood businesses depended on their reputations for their existence. And many went bankrupt because they lost the trust of their neighbors. But when huge impersonal companies began killing off the small neighborhood businesses... their business practices became immune to whether they had a good or lousy reputation. They had a virtual monopoly. If one small neighborhood did not do business with them, they simply packed up and moved one of their regional stores or branches somewhere else. Big Business has no loyalty, no morals, no ethics and no principles except making a profit for themselves. The Religion of all big business, big companies and big corporations was, and still is and will always be: the bottom line. The lowest possible common denominator, the crudest possible taste, the stupidest possible level of intelligence... that makes them a profit. Selling fake elite status symbols to the masses. So consumers develop an elite psychology, an elite attitude, elite addictions, needs, norms, etc.

Every rich person who ever made their first million; has been obsessed with The Bottom Line... How they get rich in the first place is by being more stingy, and more selfish, and more fiscally mean and greedy than anyone else.

The exceptions, the rich who became rich by not being in business, and not understanding business and not living in a business culture are not really a cultural force. Actors, and Symphony Conductors and singers becoming millionaires off the sale of mass tickets, and mass adulation, and mass sales... inevitably all stratify themselves into their relative degrees of obscene wealth and starting to gradually think and feel like Robber Barons, or wanna-be Robber Barons.

Once you have the pleasant good fortune of clipping coupons and adding up the ever-increasing net worth of your investment portfolio without lifting a finger. Seeing it grow magically. As if you had planted a tree. Then you instantly become a believer in the idiotic idea of your money working for you. Once you are flooded with recognition and adulation and are worshipped by millions: then the logic of you having millions more dollars than your worshippers becomes completely natural and taken for granted.

The overwhelming fact is: that the origin of nearly all modern business ethics comes from the peer examples of the 19th century robber barons. Every large company obsesses over every 1/100th of a cent they make in profit. They are called: profit margins. Why? Because the 19th century Robber Barons obsessed over them systematically. This is how they got rich in the first place. And now every fucking large company and corporation in the world is obsessed with profit margins.

Who were the robber barons of the 18th and 19th and 20th century?... They were not barons. They were not robbers: they were swindlers. They were professional swindlers who swindled people, and cheated people. They were a bunch of professional criminals who managed to avoid being brought to justice. They were not honest robbers: they were just swindlers. The term 'robber baron' does the word 'baron' a disservice. The term 'robber baron' does the word 'robber' a disservice. They were just a bunch of greedy swindlers, living inside a society of swindlers who worshipped money.

Every Corporation on this Earth is merely imitating what the first Industrial robbing swindlers did to get rich... By constantly, reflectively, selectively and pyramidally: focusing on what poor people never do: money. Numbers. Pure abstractions. Hundredths of a cent. Thousandths of a cent. Poor people without millions, without a constant, seemingly endless flow of profit; do not have the time to think about how to increase their profits. That is because they have no profits to worry about and think of.

But then again: how could they? Poor people do not have enough money to obsess over... The very dynamic of obsession over money comes from its own one-sided accumulation. You cannot obsess over something you do not have. The dynamic is simple: the more you accumulate; the more you have: the more you obsess over what you have; the bigger your accumulation gets; the more you obsess over it, the more it takes over your life, the more you become a slave to your obsessions. The same principle applies to the insane stupidity of collectors who spend and waste their lives collecting specialized dead shit that has no meaning, relevancy or practical use in their actual lives. The more you accumulate of anything: the more you focus on it, the more important it becomes for you; the more time and energy you have already poured into accumulating it, the more of a vicious cycle it becomes, the more inertia is developed, the harder that accumulation is to stop, the more this accumulation develops a life of its own. Accumulation is an addiction. It is a one-sided addiction. The more you accumulate: the more addicted you become to accumulating. The dynamic of Greed is simple. And insane. And sick. There is no fucking difference between the dynamic of one-sided accumulation and the dynamic of greed: they are the same fucking thing. Human greed was created when the first human ape split the first fucking bone with the first fucking rock and huzzah! Inside the two pieces of bone he found rich marrow that he could eat. Whoop-dee-fucking-doo... da great fucking marvel of human intelligence and da great fucking miracle of using a tool to separate things by smashing it with a fucking stone created the evil of human greed. And that fucking stupid ape has still not learned its lesson that greed is not good. Smashing things and separating them is not good: it is destructive and evil.

Pure impersonalized greed. Greed so unemotional. So cold, so unfeeling: that it is no longer even an emotional pleasure to make a financial killing. This is the realm of the inhuman number machine. The accountant. The bookkeeper. The banker. The human computer. They were the forbearers of our modern machine counters we call computers... that can count astronomical numbers of absolute 'on's and 'off's, and arrange them in various code like sequences that can re-translated, and put on a screen. Much like the code sequences of DNA.

Actually it goes back to Robber Barons taking stock of their stock. Counting how many head of cattle they had. As a token symbol of how wealthy and powerful they were. Once America allowed even poor Westerners to own stock. Once America allowed even poor people to own a part of a rich Robber Baron's business. They began calling the pieces of paper 'stocks'. The entire idea of making a killing on the stock market is based upon animal butchery and death. It should be called the sock market... not the stock market. Because that is all it does. That is what people do. They sock their extra money into socks called stocks or stockings... hoping there will be more of it when they pull it out of these socks. Socking away money. Hiding it. Making a killing. Because the only way the earliest Robber Barons could make a profit was by killing someone. By stealing and robbing them and their families of their hard-earned wealth: they were killing them just as surely as if they had slit their throats. They were guaranteeing that they would die of starvation, and lack of food, lack of shelter, lack of firewood and lack of warm clothes.

This goes back to the Robber Barons killing people to make their profit. Making a killing, or a profit from killing another person: and taking all of their victims accumulated, hard-earned goods, and wealth is still the business ethic for all business in the world today. The concept of making a killing on the stock market comes from the cultural roots of killing societies: that depended upon killing other animals to survive. It comes from killing all societies that had to ritualize these acts of killing so they would not vomit up their guts after they ate the killed animals. That is how and why all rituals were born and used. As a mental deflection from all the destructive horror they were perpetrating upon themselves. The ritualization of killing is a deflection from realizing the self-brutalization we are inflicting upon ourselves, and the Earth.

The worship of numbers. The worship of mathematics; is another offshoot of what the accumulation of these unheard-of -before millions of dollars did to modern culture. Today, humans worship anything that can be counted in fantastical numbers like millions, or billions or trillions.

What marked the beginning of the human brain's Big Bang, or the emergence of modern abstract culture 43,000 years ago? The cultural Stone-Age craze of humans making and accumulating thousands of beads 43,000 years ago, is precisely the same thing we have today. Except we no longer use beads. We use dollars and cents. Before bead making: we were never actually cultured or civilized. We lived without culture. All modern human culture was born from the abstraction of translating things into identicalized symbols or numbers.

By using the mass-production methods: the large steel companies of the 19th century put the smaller hand-labor companies all out of business... And then hired back a few of them at lower wages. The first large steel monopolies became rich by reducing the quality of service, and reducing the quality of the products. They reduced the process of making or servicing anything into segments so simple; that all the professional artisans and ironworkers of the 19th century could be replaced by unskilled immigrant labor and child slavery-labor. These huge companies introduced and imported the alien culture, the alien consumer idea... that it is not more important to choose someone you know personally and trust and like because they produced things so identical, that it did not make any difference where you got your product from: they were all the same. Since the consumers found they had no choice. Since most of the big companies products and services were so identical to each other, that it didn't matter which brand' they bought. So faced with carbon copies of the same thing; they naturally, picked the cheapest... because they could save more money that way.

What has evolved out of that? A slow-fast descent into: the cheapest product wins. the cheapest service wins. The cheaper-the-better. The more identical, the better. The more you make; the less it costs. Mass production... mass consumption. Increasing mediocrity. Increasing identicality. Everything looking, tasting-being the same. Dullness. Boredom. Buying and selling in a human culture where interpersonal relationships have now degenerated into pure impersonality. Which created the further travesty of huge impersonalized cities; where people no longer talk to each other, except as buyers and sellers. This new culture turned America into a Nation of impersonal villages, impersonal communities and impersonal neighborhoods, impersonal strangers: communicating on the most impersonal levels of superficiality possible... Simply because people stopped talking about anything except business. The cultural result is: Modern America, Modern Europe, Modern Cities, Modern Towns, Modern Villages, Modern Apartment Buildings, Modern Suburbs, Modern Houses, Modern People. Modern humans. The industrialization of the 19th Century created the cancerous growth of impersonality as a cultural norm in human societies all around the world. The Robber Barons of the 19th century... invented this crazed obsession over money and the bottom line. They made the impersonality of Modern Society inevitable.

Where did the European culture of Capitalist Robber Barons come from?

From ancient Kings. And their counting houses. Believe it or not: ancient Kings once had something called a counting house. They went there to count the wealth they had stored up. This is where accounting originates from.

The counting house was a building where Kings stored all of their wealth and gold, and silver and jewels. They went into these houses. Just so they could count their wealth. They counted their gold coins, and jewels, and fingered them, and pored over them, and obsessed over them, and re-counted them over and over, and over. They spent days, weeks inside their counting houses. This tiny supposedly insignificant fact is hidden, and censored out of every fucking history book that was ever written about Kings, or about European Kings, or about Europe. Read the legends and fairytales of that age that come from the poor. Their tales are full of Kings living inside their counting houses. About how they disappeared into them, and did not want to be disturbed for days, even weeks at a time. And if they were disturbed: if anyone bothered them while they were counting their precious wealth in their counting houses. Whoever bothered them was killed. Regardless of why they interrupted their insane obsessive poring-over of their accumulated wealth.

Their slaves looked at this insane behavior: and came to the conclusion that counting must be sacred. Why else would their master kill a perfectly innocent underling sent to convey a message to him? Medieval counting houses became steeped in mystery. They were hidden high in towers, or buried deep in dungeons. They were kept secret. The mystique of counting and numbers seeped into the lower class. It sanctified the idea of accumulating gold, and by this sanctification, it also sanctified the basic idea of accumulation as an unspoken good: which is insane. Accumulating feces created the Bubonic Plague: that is what happens when insane humans do not recycle their feces and do not allow the regenerative processes of organic life to turn dead rotting things back into healthy living plants and bacteria and worms, etc.

Where else did these modern-day European Robber Barons come from?
They came from the Protestant Work Ethic

The Protestant Work Ethic

For hundreds of years before Luther ever published his criticisms. Europeans of all castes, classes and levels had been protesting against the corruption of the greatest political power in Europe at that time: the Catholic Church. Savonarola had tried to stop the destruction of Christian ethics and morals by ranting against the corrupt Pope of Rome and the corrupt link between wealth, privilege, power and the official religious establishment. Erasmus became famous as an intellectual elite writer by printing scathing ironies that laughed at the idiocies of the corrupt Catholic Church. He became famous because of the printing press. He translated the Bible and many other religious works into the vernacular dialect of his day. The masses became more educated because of this. They did not have to have God's words translated for them from Latin by lying hypocritical priests, Cardinals, bishops and Popes.

But... however... Nobody did anything about it. Nobody had any workable solution to cleanse the Church of its corruptions. The corruption of the Church had been building and accumulating for hundreds of years before Luther. It was all about special privileges being given to certain people, certain castes, certain classes. Whatever people complained about the corruption of the entire system... they did not want to lose their special privileges.

The Catholic Church became a European joke, it became a European travesty. Every moral Catholic pointing their finger at other Catholics, and nobody willing to do anything that might upset their special applecart. Slowly... over hundreds of years: the Catholic Church became a cankerous boil, a pus-filled rotten pimple. Until it became so full of corruption, with a skin so thin: that the slightest criticism could penetrate it and expose its obvious corruption and filth. That slight penetration was Luther.

In the Middle Ages in Europe. When Luther invented the idea of each person having his own personal conscience to answer-to... instead of a centralized church. The centralized Empire-Model of ethical-spiritual-moral religious authority was decentralized and segmented suddenly: all the way down to the individual.

It was as if all the lowest peasants in all the kingdoms were suddenly given a completely equal status to all of the Kings in Europe, all the nobles, all the aristocracy... This kind of religious equality was only supposed to apply to the Church hierarchy and religious Authorities. Only priests and Cardinals, and the Pope was supposed to be able to talk directly to God. This religious exclusivity of the Catholic hierarchy was destroyed by Luther. But as a chain reaction: it threatened every other Authority in European society.. If you think that this was not a shocking cultural catastrophe... look at the reaction of the Catholic church to the emergence of Protestantism. They became fanatical about defending their sacred, beleaguered Church. The result was 90 years of religious Catholic Terrorism called the Spanish Inquisition, the fear of heretics, burning at the stake... mock trials, and the final expression of Catholic Purity in France... Joan of Arc. Who fought like a man; and committed the sin of praying to God directly, and was answered back by him. That was not supposed to happen. She was burned at the stake for not listening to what the Catholic Church told her to do. She was burned for listening to her own God, and not the God of the Catholic Church.

For the Protestants: this religious equality went on to later to segment and break down all other hierarchies of human authority. It segmented power and accountability. Without any religious overseers, without a final religious authority you had to answer-to personally: European morals and ethics became a free-for-all. Nothing was forbidden. Everything was allowed. As long as you could deceive others; by pretending to be outwardly, devoutly spiritual... you could claim that God told you what to do.... This was why Joan of Arc signaled the slow demise of the French Catholic church. That slow demise is still going on today. French Catholic churches have become museums. Haunted only by a few old and dying faithful believers.

Protestantism created not only religious equality. It created cultural equality. Not only that: it blended both together. People began living an inner religious Life not just in Church... but outside of their Church also. Everything became sacred. Not just the wooden statues and carvings and stained glass abstract images of the official Catholic religious icons and myths and tales. Their personal inner life; became a religious experience. They began living religiously every day.

Van der Meer's oil paintings of ordinary everyday scenes in a Dutch household; sanctified the tiniest everyday chores; more beautifully than all of the religious art of 500 years before him that depicted grand mythic scenarios. From pouring milk, to putting on a necklace, to the writing of a letter. His paintings show how lowly servants had an inner moral dignity not only equal to their masters and mistresses; but superior to them.

The idea that your entire Life is your own personal sacred religion... that your entire life is sacred. The idea that every second, every moment of it is sacred. Not just Sunday, and the few hours you spend inside some sanctified church... Is a powerful concept. It revolutionized how the lowlanders of Holland and the Netherlands lived. It revolutionized their awareness. But what did it actually do...? It sanctified their normality. Everything that was normal in their everyday life: suddenly became sacred. Every chair, every table, every house, all material objects... suddenly became as sacred as the sacred chalices in the Catholic church. Suddenly: the religion of materialism was born. It was born in silence. It was an unspoken religion, it became an assumed religion. It became an invisible, intangible attitude that poisoned their spirituality from the start.

Because of Luther's Reformation: Protestant Hollanders and Lowlanders treated everything sacredly. They treated their own houses as sacred churches. They treated everything they made or touched as if it was a sacred religious icon. They lived simple lives. Everything in their houses was immaculate, clean and well-built. Everything they built and made; funneled and focused their burgeoning Sense of Pure Wonder more and more... into material objects. Their Sense of Pure Wonder was polluted with a Sense of Sacredness, and Seriousness. Their artists painted the world around them as it actually was. They saw the world around them more clearly, and more creatively. But they did not know how to have fun. They only knew how to work. So they sanctified work. They made work into a religion. They made a religion out of everything they did.

This made Holland blossom into materialistic affluence; as the first Protestant Nation whose masses were not ignorant, starving and poor. But this did not last long. The poisoning of this idea of leading an inner religious life happened fast. Because they still kept their older religious obsolete, ancient traditions, superstitions, and customs intact; which they loved so much. They did not build their societies anew from scratch. Instead: they tried to religiously purify the culture they were already living in. By changing themselves inwardly: but not changing one fucking thing outwardly.

And so... they came to worship their own creations. They worshipped everything they touched. Rather than looking in Wonder at the beauty of Nature and the beauty of growing flowers bending beautifully in the wind. They cut flowers and took them inside. And placed them into a religious vase: so they could worship the beauty of the dying flower: just as they had been brainwashed to go inside a building to worship a dying Christ. By putting sacred, dead objects called relics into a sacred vessel called a church.

They spent years perfecting the art of making realistic images or icons of what dying flowers actually looked like... and began worshipping the painted image of beauty, instead of their actual living beauty. They came to worship their own chairs and tables and walls and houses... because they had poured all their life-energy into making and maintaining them. Because they had saved thriftily for years to afford a nice, expensive table. That table came to represent years of thrifty, virtuous, religious dedication to hard work. It became a religious icon representing years of hard work and hardship. Out of this came the revolutionary new Dutch art of realism, and the religious worship of material objects. Art that was once reserved only for Kings was made available to rich Dutch middle-class Burghers.

Where did this worshipping of material objects come from? From the Reformation. Martin Luther may have sparked it, but soon everyone from peasants to bishops took up arms against the church and published their criticisms and grievances. John Calvin was one of them. Calvinism and Lutheranism spread through Europe and England and Scotland. The effect of the Reformation was this: the idea that your whole life is religious. The effect of this idea on the working poor of Europe and England and Scotland... was something completely unforeseen but entirely natural and understandable... if your whole life is religious, and if you are a poor lower class peasant and you do nothing but work all your life until you drop dead.... And you know nothing else of high culture or books: then...

Work becomes a religion.

If your whole life is religious: then whatever fills your life: must also be religious. The Dutch became religious fanatics about everything in their life. The Protestant Work Ethic was born as an unspoken religion... from the millions of European poor who had nothing in their lives, but work. Before the Reformation: Religion and work were two completely different things. The idea of getting to heaven by working all your life, the idea of salvation through industry did not exist. But when millions of poor workers, peasants, artisans, servants broke away from the old church founded new churches, and when their ministers and preachers also came from the lower classes. Then the idea of industry and thrift... and the idea that John Calvin put forth... the idea that usury was not such a bad sin after all...why then the idea of profit... instead of being a sin, became a religious virtue. If you worked your entire life to amass as much gold and property and jewels as you could: you could do it religiously by making your wealth a sign of religious virtue.

Then!... the most selfish, the greediest, the most penurious, the most rapacious, the most venal, the most spiritually and morally corrupt human scum of Holland and Scotland and England; could rationalize their avarice and stinginess and craftiness: as being religiously right...even good! Every cunning banker and bourgeoisie, every burgomeister, every trader, every lender of money.. every single one of the millions of Europeans who were involved in the mass movement of European global colonization of the world and the global trade involved in this colonization of the world: found that they could not only get rich: by becoming religiously fanatical about greed. Greed and Industry and Work became the unspoken religion of Europe. Avarice, possessiveness, selfishness, lust for material objects... all became normal.

Why are meat patties in a bun called burgers? Because the first Dutch burghers became so rich: they became addicted to a steady diet of meat and bread. They developed horrible diseases because of it. They died from it. They developed something called gout. They became grossly fat. But they refused to stop eating like this. They refused to stop living richly: even though it was unhealthy for them to do so. They became addicted to material possessions. They began collecting expensive material objects.

Out of this came the Protestant religious insanity of worshipping abstract-dead things as status symbols denoting wealth and privilege, they began collecting objects d'art. Painted images... paintings became a secular form of the worship of abstract beauty. Out of an abstract religion: came the worship of all things that were abstract. Anything and everything that was abstract was worshipped as a status symbol. The reflection of a living scene in Nature... a painted image of Nature: was worshipped more than Nature itself. Dead things were worshipped more than living things.

Just as the dead-dying Christ was worshipped more by Europeans: than the story of his entire living Life. His death-agony was glorified above everything else. All of the lessons and wisdom and meanings and teachings of the living Jesus were completely ignored. Europeans were obsessed and insanely fixated only upon the idea of a living human willingly giving up all his life for them... willingly dying. Because they could not fathom it. Christ was a mystery to them. They were timid, conformist, ignorant, brainwashed cowards: terrified of dying. They could not even imagine the kind of bravery and courage it took for Christ to willingly go to his death.

Is this so surprising? Is it strange that it was the Dutch lowlanders, who first invented the worship and obsession of Art for the Masses? It was a perfectly understandable, organic, logical evolution of the culture they lived-in. Worshipping a dead object for its aesthetic beauty: is merely the ritualization of a Sense of Spiritual Sacredness. They merely ritualized their abstractions, and corrupted their own personal Sense of Pure Wonder into a personal Sense of Sacredness. Then they merely corrupted that Sense of Sacredness; into a Sense of everyday Normality. Simply by boredom. By repetition. By using tools. By doing the same boring chores every day: they lost the sense of sacredness, the sense of pure wonder they originally had: when the wonder of first becoming affluent faded away and became taken for granted. The wonder of when they first owned a physical object. When it was first theirs. They developed a sense of the sacredness of ownership of a dead material object... which became normalized. They developed a unique sense of the sacredness of the ownership of dead objects. Which was no surprise. Since the entire upper class culture of Europe, of the entire human species had been based upon the sacredness of ownership. What surprise is it: that a poor slave who never owned anything, the poor lowlanders who had nothing... should gaze in awe at the first things they actually owned. Gazing in awe at their sacred ritual of exchanging gold-silver-copper coins... for a desired, crafted, wondrous artifact. Made in some far off distant land. Feeling the power, and pride of ownership. Feeling their own self-esteem raised. Their self-esteem became chained to the things they owned. What surprise is it that Dutch lowlanders; who had been the poorest people in Europe, should come to love their material possession more than anyone else? What surprise is it that that they did not take for granted, every single material object they owned and used? The love of the dead things they owned corrupted them. It enslaved them. Why? Because the degree to which people own their possessions: their possessions own them also. The Law of Dynamic Balance is Universal. There are NO exceptions to this Law. Humans are one-sidedly blind to this truth. The warning tale of Midas: has been conveniently ignored by humans for 2,700 years. If you love gold so much: everything you touch will shrivel and die, and turn to gold. If you love dead things so much: everything you touch will become dead.

Every human culture that has ever used tools; has done the same damn stupid thing. Poisoning the Sense of Pure Wonder of every living human: and brainwashing them into worshipping dead things instead of living things. Because the Protestant Lowlander's Sense of Pure Wonder was undeveloped, selective, and limited and already poisoned and distorted. Their secular reflective Sense of Sacredness: was slowly and systematically poisoned and corrupted... until they lost their selective Sense of Wonder about it. They lost their personal religious fervor. Their inner spiritual lives fell back into a boring everyday Normality. They took more and more things for granted. They preserved more and more things. They worshipped more and more dead things. Until the dead things they preserved and worshipped: deadened their Sense of Pure Wonder completely: and killed it dead,

Out of this Protestant secular attempt to live a spiritual life without being beholden to any Church or religious authority except your own conscience: came the reflective worship of materialism. Instead of using the Sense of Pure Wonder as an integral part of their awareness. Instead of wondering about everything. Instead of being aware of everything in a state of Pure Wonder. They used their Sense of Pure Wonder: to selectively focus primarily upon dead, material objects.

Genuflecting over expensive polished tables. The sense of personal possession, the greedy slaving of the sense that you own that table, and that it is all yours, and nobody else's. Hugging your sense of ownership, the sense of selfishness greedily to your bosom. Becoming collectors. Obsessing over dead material objects. Obsessing over the sense of Ownership. Sucking on it. After being denied the privileges of ownership for thousands of destructive years as the lowest slave-class in Europe. The reactionary backlash of the cultural lack of ownership made them become more selfish, more possessive, more materialistic, more miserly than their masters were.

The idea of religious equality and cultural equality was easily poisoned and corrupted in many, many ways by the corruption of the older cultural values which they still kept, still believed-in, and still preserved.

Basically: the effect of the Protestant Revolution on European culture: Was like sprinkling a few years of public protest about one selective corruption in their society; on top of a 12,000 year-deep shitload of corruption, and uncomplaining mindless conformity, that was already accumulated. The idea of personal spirituality was quickly absorbed, and Normalized: into a worse level of mindless uncomplaining conformity, and an even worse level of Normalized corruption.

In Luther's day: the idea of having your own personal God was revolutionary. It was powerful. But just how did they use this concept of personal spiritual power and personal spiritual authority? They used it exactly as they had seen rich Kings and Bishops use it for hundreds and hundreds of years. They used it as their peers had used it for thousands of years: hypocritically. As a statement of hypocrisy. Why? Because hypocrisy is what once distinguished the upper classes from the lower classes. The rich were privileged and spoiled enough to afford hypocrisy. Starving peasants could not afford to be hypocritical about the fact that they were starving and poor. They could not afford to deny the hardships of poverty and starvation. If they did: they died. The rich could afford to be liars and hypocrites. Even if they lied and denied a truth: they were not killed for it. Poor Europeans who became affluent: took on the vices of affluence; simply because they could afford to take them on. The accumulation of vices was, and remains: a sign of upward mobility. The more vices you could afford to accumulate and have: the higher up you are on the social ladder. To this day, this has not changed. The Dutch still have more legalized drugs and vices to choose from than any other country on Earth. Because they were the first to find them and use them and sell them. Today; upwardly mobile people still do the exact same damn thing as the Dutch did after Luther showed them how to do it, and get away with it. Using personal Power to tell others to do what you never did. The personal Power to force another to do; what you never do. The age-old human hypocrisy of every human parent who ever told a child: 'Do as I say: not as I do.'

Religious hypocrisy was no longer practiced exclusively by the elite. Catholic Bishops and Kings were no longer the only ones who practiced religious hypocrisy. Any Protestant who wanted to be a religious hypocrite could now do so; easily. The poorest wood gatherers could claim to have the purest of souls, and gain social stature in the eyes of others; by praying alone by themselves in private for hours... instead of in praying openly in public. You could publicly claim to have prayed for hours in private... for days, weeks, months, even years; even though you did not spend one second of your life in reflection, meditation or prayer.

Instead of having the Catholic Church tell you in detail, exactly what you were supposed to believe: you could literally invent your own personal imaginary religious world and imaginary religious devoutness. And do it in complete secrecy by being a devout Protestant. And no living soul could ever prove you to be a liar, or not spiritual, or not believe in God.

So then... how did an entire population of poor ignorant oppressed serfs and slaves; show how devoutly spiritual they were? While still living under the crushing authority of two masters; instead of one. Their own Protestant Church, and the robber Barons and Princes who ruled them in cycles of starvation and gluttony. They found that the satisfaction of working for themselves was better than the satisfaction of working for their two masters. The tiny increased bit of inner self-esteem and inner status of becoming masters of their own spiritual authority: was poisoned by their need to show their increased self-esteem outwardly. They had moved up in the spiritual hierarchy inwardly. They had to show this upward mobility outwardly. They had to show that they were more spiritually independent of their two masters. So... they ended up working even harder, and more diligently, not only for both of their masters... but also for themselves. They discovered the corrupt elite culture and practice of pure selfishness. That their feudal Barons and feudal Kings and feudal Knights had enjoyed and practiced for thousands of years. They became equal to their masters in their selfishness.

What is Feudalism? It is Feuding with your neighbors. Feuding with your family. Feuding with your father, your mother. Wasting your entire fucking life: by fighting and hating everyone who is closest to you. That is all that European Feudal history consists of.: families, brothers, sisters, relatives, relations, aunts, uncles, cousins, all hating each other and fighting each other. Murdering each other, poisoning each other, plotting against each other, betraying each other, lying to each other, deceiving, each other, etc, etc; ad nauseam.

The spiritual safety-blanket of Mother Church was stripped away by Luther's stripping the Catholic Church naked in public and denouncing its corruptions. As a result of the Protestant Reformation of Northern Europe: devout believers, devout Christians had no more Father confessors: and did not have to confess their sins to any other living soul. No more hierarchy of Spiritual authority. Each person was supposed to be their own confessor. And answer only to their own conscience. Protestants could and did hide their sins in the silent secrecy of their own souls. They still do it.

It became a moral-ethical free-for-all. It became each man for himself, and may the Devil take the hindmost. Before Luther: most people did not dare to be too greedy or too powerful, because if they did, they were crushed by the church and by their masters ... without warning. Luther had done something nobody really noticed until much later. He had given all the poor people of Protestant Religions... The Moral, Ethical Power... and Authority... and Right... to become just as immoral and unethical as the ruling aristocrats and landowners were. He had given all the lower class masses a moral rationalization to be not only just as greedy and as corrupt as their rulers were.... But to become even greedier and more corrupt than their master ever had been.

But this was only the beginning of the corrupting effect that the Protestant Work Ethic had on Europe. The poor had to go through many stages of increasing affluence, and increasing corruption: before they could attain the upper levels of refined, rarified, moral corruption which the elite Robber Barons of Luther's day enjoyed. However: even though the lower classes were miles away from this kind of culture: they tried to practice refined immorality anyways. The poorest peasants began acting like the rich; they began practicing the corrupt values of the truly rich; even before they became truly rich.

One of the first signs of this Protestant spiritual sickness beginning with Lutheranism was a stinginess in giving. Churchgoers began to become thrifty and were praised for not being wasteful. These lower classes and peasants had experienced starvation, poverty, and want for so many thousands of years; that frugality was already firmly implanted in their cultures. With the creation of Protestant Lutheranism: frugality became not only a necessity; it became a cultural tradition... until it became a religious virtue. But when they became wealthy and affluent: then their old frugality born of necessity: became a selfish, stingy, greedy unwillingness to give anything to anyone.

Those who have not experienced and lived both side of the social spectrum: poverty and wealth... do not understand what happens in the evolution of a person's values as they come from poverty into wealth. People do not understand the dynamics of the automatic corruption that wealth and affluence does to you. When you are poor, you are happy. Why? Because you have nothing to lose. When you are poor, you are generous and giving. Why? Because you have almost nothing to give or lose...

BUT... the wealthier you get... the richer you become... the more money you accumulate... the more of anything you accumulate... the more you have to lose... the more the fear of losing what you have increases... the more stingy and selfish you become with what you already have, the more paranoid you become of others trying to take it from you, the more security systems you have to install, the thicker walls you have to build, the bigger army you have to maintain to guard your wealth with. The evolution of poverty to affluence: is also an evolution from generosity to selfishness. It is a universal dynamic. There are no exceptions to this. The richer any culture, any people, any country, any nation becomes... the more meaner, the more inhuman, the more stingy, the more greedy, the more miserable, the more unhappy nice people become: as a norm. The more unhappy and boring and meaningless their lives becomes. Merely from the universal effect of the dynamic of one-sided accumulation.

After Luther's Reformation: All manner of saving and accumulation was suddenly publicly lauded as a spiritual virtue. What was before despised by the rich as meanness, and selfishness; which the poor also practiced, but far more secretly and not so crudely and obviously, and as a matter of necessity that was considered to be evil... was no longer publicly shameful.

Why? Because the rich had become enlightened by legal taxation. They finally realized that if frugality and selfishness was given their stamp of approval, and poor people let their own small wealth become publicly visible... then the rich could tax the poor far more efficiently than ever before. So peasants who hoarded all manner of things; became so insane about saving, that most of what they saved was hidden in caves and buried: rotted into uselessness. Most European folk tales and fairy tales are about buried treasures and hidden wealth, and evil, greedy people being punished. So the peasants began amassing their wealth more publicly because their Protestant religion no longer frowned on selfishness in regard to material possessions. And the rich taxed them even more, and got even richer

Then it was just a hop, skip and a jump to the poorest peasant secretly practicing outright greed by cheating the tax gatherers and hiding their hay bales in the forest. Greed became the silent, unspoken, secret religion of not only the wealthy, but of the poor as well. Everyone practiced stealing, lying and cheating on every level, and in every possible way. It was a badge of honor if other peasants found out that a certain cunning peasant had managed to pull the wool over the eyes of his master and hide some of his wealth, and manage to explain-away how he got it without being taxed or punished, or killed, or tortured for it.

Protestant peasants began complaining loudly to their pastors about the ungodliness of their taxes. Why do you think they were called Protestants? Because they were the only ones who had the guts to protest against the corruptions of the Catholic Church. Originally: they were just called protesters. They started believing that they actually had a right to some small measure of wealth also. Because? Their own church had sanctified the virtues of saving and frugality... and accumulation... purely for the sake of accumulation. Accumulation itself: accumulating for the sake of accumulating became an unspoken religious value. And a symbol of class status. It signified that you were rich enough to waste prodigious amounts of money upon frivolities, upon luxuries, upon fripperies, upon small, intricately carved ivory boxes, shoe buckles made from solid gold, lace handkerchiefs etc.

But... it was an unspoken validation. It was never openly avowed. It was never consciously realized. It was never consciously understood. It was never consciously exposed or admitted-to. It was merely an unspoken normality. It was merely taken for granted. It merely grew out of other changing normalities and customs and traditions and Laws, and norms over the years...

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1000

Except for the fact the Protestant Church had not yet openly sanctified outright greed ... at least not then.... But once Protestant peasants discovered the new-found abstract freedom of creating their own brand of religious beliefs within the secret confines of their own self-rationalizing , self-deluding minds...: this trend caught on. Until the upper class began doing it too... The upper class elite began practicing their own brand of frugality. This was only one small step in the long convoluted hidden cultural conflict and struggle between the distinct classes of the rich and the poor in Medieval Europe, as the worst practices and corruptions of each level and tier of society infected other levels and tiers. Each class affected the other, and stole from the other, and took from the other class its worst practices; and improved them.

Finally: there were a public outcries by the richest lower class; against their rulers about the unfairness of their taxes. This forced the Nobles to try to institute more identically based tax levies. So wealthy burghers could not complain that they were being taxed more than their neighbors. Each class, each Guild was taxed equally according to their station. Once the Nobles managed to convince the poor that they were all being taxed equally according to their class, they effectively saved themselves from being strung up and killed by deflecting the basic unfairness of taxation itself, and instigating class Warfare amongst the lower classes between themselves.

They saved themselves from annihilation by deflecting the envy and hate the poor felt towards them. They saved having any basic, comprehensive tax revolts. They saved themselves from revolutions. Because the only ones who were powerful enough to complain about any unfairness without being ignored or killed outright: were the middle-class Guilds... who were already unfairly getting rich off the ones below them.

The European Upper Classes saved themselves from total annihilation by creating a buffer-class between them and the truly poor, the truly wretched, the truly impoverished and the truly ignorant. By creating for the first time in civilized history: a middle-class strong enough, and pliable enough, and innovative enough to absorb the worst insane fluctuations of both the rich and the poor.

A new class of mediocrity, and compromise was created... from an excess of the huge amounts of new wealth that poured into these Empires from their colonies, and their own new workaholic cultures, and new tools.

That is how powerful the concept of Religious Equality was... even when it is a complete farce. Even if it is a total fiction and a lie. If people believe there a small token of equality in their society: they become pacified, and stop openly rebelling and hating their peers and rulers. They start believing in token equality... not in actual equality... Even if the token does not actually exist except as a hypocritical lie. Even if it is only a token idea that is never put into actual practice.

In effect: European aristocracy managed to pull the wool over their peasant's eyes even better that their peasants had pulled it over their eyes... Before legalized taxation... when they actually knew they were being robbed... and hid as much of their actual wealth as possible, and kept it hidden much more effectively before the token bullshit idea of equalized-legalized taxation was ever invented.

When taxation was legalized: Peasant families that had hidden huge deposits of wealth were ordered to dig all of it up, so their wealth could be counted so they could be taxed more equally, and more 'honestly'.

Nobody bought into this bullshit. But today we do. In the Middle Ages nobody was stupid enough to tell the Aristocracy how much wealth they had accumulated in secret.. But this new form of 'equal'... 'fair'... 'honest'... 'legalized' robbery: made every man in each guild and each lower class believe that nobody in their class or Guild had any right to be richer than they were... This created envy among social equals; who were unequal in wealth, power, status and privileged knowledge. That set off the poorer peasants betraying richer peasants. The elite rich aristocrats merely took each person who was accused of hiding their wealth into their dungeons... and they were never heard from, or seen again. The rich aristocracy of the Middle Ages had managed to make the poor inform on each other! They did not need any secret police to flush out poor people who had money or forty more pigs than they claimed. The rumor mills of each village gave them all the information they needed to rip wealth and livestock and grain from the peasants. Villagers assumed any peasant in their village who was killed and their house ransacked by an aristocrat to be guilty of some heinous crime. It did not even enter into their heads that this systematic terrorization of them was done randomly and on purpose... to keep them conveniently terrified, stupid, obedient, submissive and oppressed. Aristocrats cannot do any wrong. The Church cannot be wrong. The King is always right.

The belief that someone cannot be wrong. The insane belief that any higher authority cannot be wrong. The stupidity of the omnipotence, and infallible wisdom and infallible rightness of hierarchy... is what keeps lower classes oppressed. The poor are kept poor by their own stupidity and their love of hierarchy.

If the emerging Middle class of Europe in the Middle Ages had not submissively been satisfied with the few token scraps the aristocracy had thrown them. If they had allied themselves with the poor instead of with the rich: there could have for once been an honest class war. And every Knight and aristocrat would have had to fight every poor farmer and peasant and guild member. The lower classes could have put the castles of all the Nobles, and all the knights and all the aristocrats under siege and starved them to death, and killed them off for once and for all. So not one filthy rich elite would have remained to spread their filthy elitist lies and propaganda about the advantages of them being better and higher than others. But that did not happen. Instead; the class war between rich and poor was cunningly and cowardly avoided, deflected by both sides... The true issues were submerged deep into the human subconscious. Leaking out of their subconscious... in subterfuge, cunning, betrayal, and underhanded, secret hate and fear. Instead of outright killing, rape, and robbery: Protestants managed to legalize a legalized system of society where everyone robbed everyone else.... until it became normal, until it became the custom the tradition the way people did things, until it replaced other traditions and customs, until there was nothing left but this one unspoken way of 'doing business'.

In the Middle Ages in Europe; when the rich stole from the poor openly. The peasants retaliated back; by trying to steal from the rich at every possible opportunity... as cunningly, and underhandedly, and sneakily and cowardly as possible. It became a normalized lifestyle of mutual robbery and lying, and cheating, and torture, and cruelty, and greed. Cowardice became the unspoken sign of a robber and killer. Cowardice was practiced and refined until it has reached the heights of abstract insanity of today's tokenistic cultures. This was intensified by the corrupt token idea of Luther's religious moral equality of the Protestant Reformation. Because one crucial part of the frozen hierarchy of that time: the religious hierarchy of Northern Europe was destroyed. Because the authority of its religious hierarchy was slowly equalized and destroyed. All other forms of hierarchical authority began to crumble and were desperately reinforced and preserved.

Before Protestantism: people believed religiously that the elite rich were more sanctified, and more religious, and prayed to a higher concept of God. But after Luther: no Protestant noble could openly claim that he was more religiously devout than a peasant. Suddenly... each person had their own personal God. Royal Protestant Kings could not openly claim to be holier than peasants. After that: people began to openly show disrespect for their landed gentry and nobles. If they had done that before Luther: they would have been killed on the spot; or their houses burned down, and them thrown out of the village they lived in. With their own neighbors siding with the nobles...muttering in horror of even the idea that their village had housed a blasphemer against the sacred sanctity of the Nobles.

Protestantism changed everything in Northern Europe. Rich Nobles were no longer revered unquestioningly. They had lost the protective, covering mantle of the sacred superior holiness of the church, which they had enjoyed for hundreds of years. A church that had equated the most powerful armored killers with the highest possible spirituality. A church that had equated the aristocracy as being born more noble and more spiritual than the poor. The sacred, imaginary Divine Right of Kings was slowly killed dead. It took hundreds of years for this dynamic to work itself out through a static, stagnant Medieval society and culture which resisted change as much as possible.

Instead of the unquestioned reverence of nobility and the upper class as being more holy... The old Status of Nobility was supplanted by an unquestioned respect for the riches, money, wealth and power that could obtain this status. Holiness, religious values, noble blood, ancient lineage, peerages: were no longer the basis of social status. Social values became abstracted. It no longer mattered who you were. How rotten your personality was, whether you beat your wife, or raped your female servants and children... As long as you had money and were rich: you were automatically respected by your community and given moral authority over everyone else who was poorer than you. With less religious or spiritual elements of aristocratic superiority.

There were Robber Kingdoms in Protestant Europe even before Lutheranism. There were waves of killing, raiding, murdering, butchering war tribes coming from the center of Asia, pushing all other war-tribes before them in ripple effects... with the weakest-last ripple of nomadic killers crashing against the civilized areas of Babylon, Persia, The Middle East, Greece, Rome, Italy, France, and Germany... for thousands of years before Luther. There were half-Romanized Germanic-Teutonic war tribes from 200 AD-800 AD. There were Northern Viking Raiders from 800 AD-1200 AD.

Finally: when European civilization and culture was no longer nomadic; these settled killers built keeps and began accumulating in earnest. And began killing the poor in the dark at night. That is where the term *Kn*ight comes from. When all living things around these killing zones of the keeps of these knightly killers became known as 'the Killing Barrens'... That is where the term 'King' comes from. King is merely an abbreviation of killing. 'Baron' is merely a misspelling of the word: 'Barren'. Royal Kings Royal Killers Loyal Killers. Except the 'RE' the verb was put at the end of the sentence as in Latin: Kill RE; not Kill ER... S, or X... X being the number Ten in Roman Numerals. Ten killers. Anyone who had ten killers under him was a 'King'

The term: Baron was given to humans who lived inside castle keeps. Why? Because everything around their castles they laid waste. Everything around their castles became barren, bare, dead, destroyed. The lands around these castles were called barren lands. Because they had been so destroyed and poisoned by hate, and bloodshed... nothing green grew there. So when people spoke of those places, they simply referred to them as: 'The Barrens'. Anyone who had built a castle and lived in it long enough to create a dead zone of dead earth around it; was called a Baron for the barren earth he destroyed around his keep to build defensive fortifications.

The rich took the name as a sign of respect. They were far too stupid to realize its actual meaning. Besides: by that time: these castle killers spoke a completely different dialect from the poor they had been robbing and oppressing for centuries. So they never realized the true origin of their own class name... that classified them accurately as a barren people who could not foster healthy children. Rulers; who perennially had trouble finding heirs to their thrones and seats of power because their own seed was barren. Because they had poisoned their own seminal seed with the barrenness of their own evils. With corruptions, diseases, evils and perversions too numerous to list...

There is a reason for everything. Things do make sense: if you read history critically. The Baron's power rested on how many Knights he had; and how good these knights were at fighting and killing for him. The Protestant Nations simply reverted back to an older form of corrupt equality. They reverted back to their older cultural roots; when nearly everybody was a robber. They became pirate-states. Buccaneers. Financial pirates. Financial robbers. All robbing became not only legal; the better a robber you were; the higher your status was, the richer you became, the more you were respected, the higher your status, the more powerful you became. And on. and on... ad nauseam

How far back does Robber Baron culture go? More than one million years ago. When walking apes in Africa watched Lions gorging themselves and getting fat during the worst of the dry season's drought. Lions only grow fat when all the other animals are starving and weak... when the land around them is dead and barren. African predators starve during seasons of plenty, and wax fat when all of the other species around them are starving to death. By taking advantage of the misfortune of other animals, by profiting from the suffering and weakness of other animals: Lions became the top peer species of the African Veldt. They became the most powerful, most feared killers.

When the first peer's o' the realm... were the Lions and Hyenas of Africa. first peered through the tall grasses, at the realm of animals:... as they planned to sneak up on them, and attack them, and take them by surprise... so they could then later rob from each other, and kill each other fighting over the spoils or war and killing. Why are the spoils of war called 'spoils'? Because the fresh meat of a dead animal on the Serengeti Plains in Africa spoils very quickly; and begins stinking and rotting if not eaten right away.

The first Robber Baron cultures came from the early human walkers, thin as walking sticks: These early walking apes came out of Africa and walked the Earth for thousands of years leaving almost no trace of their existence. These were the walking humans who killed any human filth that they found skulking in caves, leading a sedentary life. So in defense: the squatting cave dwellers built fortified places, they built them where the walkers could not take them by surprise anymore.

But as the walkers had raided them; they copied their peers. Who never settled down, but simply passed them by if a squatter's place was too troublesome to attack. All civilized settlements lived in fear of nomadic traveling humans because the nomads killed them every chance they got. But the cave people refused to change... their peers were still the lions of the Serengeti plains. Their ideal living conditions were trying to create the same devastation and famine around them that they once had enjoyed every year as a normal condition of existence they had once enjoyed in Africa.

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1004

This is a condition of normalized existence, which Robber Barons try to create and simulate within their territory. Creating famine for the masses. Only then do they feel like Barons, like Kings, like the King of Beasts, the Lion. Only then do they feel like a dominant killer with nothing else to fear except the barrenness and death and deadness they create around themselves. Only when everyone else is poor; do they feel rich. Only when everyone else is thin; do they get fat.

Stalin dined in supreme fattened comfort; while his entire emaciated Soviet Empire of 350 million terrified humble slaves starved. Mao dined sumptuously every day; as millions starved under his five-year plans, the idea he stole from Stalin. Thousands of Kings and rulers throughout civilized history have grown fat from the poverty of their vassals and subjects. Now the Industrialized West grows fat from the worldwide epidemic of famines, floods and droughts; which their fossil fuel warming of the Earth has sparked off. Only now, this dynamic is global. It is no longer personal. But the Western Robber Baron cultures are still trying to re-create the same conditions they saw their Lion peers do in Africa. As the Lions peered between the dead yellow grass that hid them, peering at the weakest, slowest victims. Singling out the next victims to attack, kill and gorge upon.

Why do you think our ancestors began focusing upon things around them selectively? Where do you think our selective focus, and the selective way we use our awareness came from? From the first walking apes; aping how their peers the Lions peered at them through the tall grass. Intently focusing upon a single prey.

Have rulers yet learned anything better, than this narrow minded, shortsighted stupid tactic? Did they ever learn that during times of plenty for the masses: they will starve? Yes. They instituted their divine right of Kings, and made damn sure that the masses were always poor, always starving. And when that did not work: they re-created the hunt. The gang-war of the lions. Lion Kings attacking the weakest Nation they could find to heal their injured pride. Why did Nations go to war? Because someone encroached upon their boundaries. Because their pride was injured.

When is the earliest evidence of Modern Robber Baron culture? The first known walled city ever to be built in human history was built by Robber Barons. That city was called: Ur Ur had a feudal system.

Ur had a feudal ruler. Ur had a landed aristocracy called a knighthood.

Night... hoods... to cover their faces... doing their dirty deeds in the darkest nighttime, wearing hoods... Get it? How do you think the first gangsters and hoods gained power in the first walled city ever built?

The knights of the city of Ur owned most of the land outside its walls.

By going outside the city walls at nighttime. Wearing hoods. Killing and blackmailing the peasant farmers. Get it?...

Since then: this 9,000 yr-old hierarchical pattern of gangs, gangsterism, hoods, Knights...Killing in the night time., etc; has spread around the planet. The criminal culture of Robber Barons has been perpetuated, preserved, re-discovered, and reinvented over and over... for at least 9,000 years.

The point is; that it the dynamic of human accumulation, which makes the culture of Robber Barons,...

is both inevitable, and unavoidable. Regardless of how it happened in each tribe, or race, or place: the accumulated power of human social hierarchy automatically creates Robber Barons... In every era, in every generation, in every way, on every level, in every society... over, and over again. That was the birth of civilization. That is the dirty secret about the birth of our glorious civilization that Historians do not want you to know about.

One of the best ways to study Robber Baron Cultures is to study the cultures of isolated islands. Where the strains of their criminal culture is not muddied by viruses of other Robber Baron cultures. Like England, and Ireland, and Japan. Where do you think the High Kultur of ritualized politeness that all the lower classes try to mimic comes from? From the legacy of ancient killers visiting other killers. From ancient haters visiting other haters. From liars visiting other liars. From being forced to hide their true feelings from their hosts. Being forced to leave their killing weapons at the door. Because if they did not: vicious quarrels and fights turned their social gatherings into snarling bloodbaths of murder and hate and fear and secret plots and stabbings.

Politeness comes from the ritualization of social intercourse when ones actual feelings and thoughts were not allowed to be expressed; since they were full of hate and fear and evil. It comes from the denial and suppression of human feelings. From moldering, rotting, sick, diseased, fat, gouty, ailing Kings and rulers... who sat glowering at every supplicant that came begging for their favors... Insisting that their subjects grovel before; them to feed their bloated insecure cowardly souls; because they could not abide anyone being equal to them.

]Almost every social ritual and etiquette... almost every form of social politeness: originated from the sick filthy form of social hypocrisy and hidden filth of secret killers and secret haters hiding their true thoughts and feelings from others.. The only reason for being polite at all: is to hide what you actually think and feel from another person because you are a coward. The tradition of politeness and manners, is mostly a legacy of ritualized cowardice, cunning, deception and lies.

Politeness is based upon the fear of honesty. It is based upon the fear of open and honest conflict. It is a ritualized form of social cowardice. It is the pretence, and pretending that you like people whom you actually dislike, hate, despise or look down upon. It is a ritualization of hierarchical power-status-wealth socializing. Without it: human hierarchical society would dissolve and explode into an open conflict of humans fighting each other more honestly.

One of the most powerful, the most deadly viruses of this death-worshipping culture originated in the Middle Ages in Europe. It came out of the beginnings of Christianity itself. From the belief in Judgment Day, when the world would end and all sinners would be punished by God. The belief in Armageddon. The belief that the World would come to an end: and all the sinful would be judged and punished. This came about from the earliest poor communities who practiced voluntary hardship. The worst punishment they could inflict upon people who sinned against their tenets was public ostracism...

But these communities were only a tiny minority inside a huge civilized society that practiced and preached pure greed. So these ostracized sinners who were kicked out simply re-joined the rest of civilized society. They did not suffer any hardship or punishment at all from their being expelled from the poor communities. Rather: they seemed to be rewarded for their sins by becoming even richer than the poor people who kicked them out. So what could these poor communities do to keep their members from straying and leaving them? They invented the idea of being punished after death for your worldly sins. Being punished after you die, for what you did while you were still alive. Since the rich were obviously were not being physically punished while they were alive. The idea of a final judgment day, where all the rich would be punished for their sins by God... This shows, in itself, how naïve and crude the mentality of that propaganda was. But it worked once the majority of the masses were brainwashed into Christianity. The poor did not even begin to understand the true unhappiness of the rich, or the true suffering every human endures when they become corrupted by physical ease. So early Christian teachings included a belief that the end of the world was fast approaching. The earliest known hysteria to reach mass proportions happened only 300 years after the historical Jesus was crucified. Jesus himself never foretold or predicted anything like this while he was alive. HE might have, but the writings of Christianity which have survived, are so full of distortions, and lies, they cannot be relied on. During the Dark Ages: mass panics of religious frenzy and fear ran through Europe. There was no safety and no Law. There was the reactionary backlash of people piling together into towns; seeking safety in numbers from the ravaging bands of robbers and bandits that were terrorizing the land. These Medieval towns, villages and cities: did not have sewage systems. Instead: there was the quaint custom of throwing your own feces; directly out into the street in front of your house each day... This filthy practice finally caught up with them when mass panic sent people flooding into these towns. Where do you think the cultural custom, and the practice of Robber-Barons creating pollution comes from? From the creation of overpopulated cities.

The rotting accumulating human feces in a small town with few inhabitants did not create too much filth. The town streets were blackened, pounded- hard crusts of filthied soil mixed with human feces. The mixture dried quickly; and became known as: ass-phalt.

‘Whose ass did this shit come out of? I just slipped on someone else’s shit.

‘Well. It’s not my phalt. It’s not my phalt you slipped on your ass... so don’t yell at me just because you’re in front of my house, and you slipped on a pile of shit. It’s somebody else’s shit. The shit did not come out of my ass, it’s not my phalt you stepped in it. Can you Prove its my Phalt.. its my Fault? Halt! It’s your Fault! It’s your Phalt!... It’s your Piss! You’re the one who threw this shit on the street!’

This ass-phalt eventually turned hard enough to resist turning into mud when it rained. Which was one reason people preferred it to being mired down in mud so deep: that their carts and wagons could not move through the streets.

But during the religious frenzies of the End of the World approaching: nobody wanted to be left alone to face death and the final Judgment, and Punishment of God. People overcrowded the towns: and started throwing out too much human feces into the street in front of each house. Everyone had a guilty conscience. People tried to repent from a lifetime of sin..

But then... the world did not end. They were not punished. Nothing happened. And every time the prophecy of doom and Judgment was proved to be false: the entire European Continent flung itself into even worse crimes and corruptions. Massacres, sexual orgies, lawlessness. Towns became even more crowded. Both rich and poor sought refuge from wandering gangs of killers, bandits and robbers in towns. Everybody preyed upon everybody else. Corruption exploded onto a mass level. It created epidemics. It created new diseases. It created the Black Death, and the Bubonic Plague.

It also created a huge dichotomy in the Catholic Churches Gospel. They warned and moralized the poor about the sins of greed, avarice and stinginess. They brainwashed the masses through guilt, fear, and the threat of Eternal Damnation. When that Eternal Damnation did not happen: the masses became more and more cynical. They became ripe for Luther's New Gospel. Then the Printing Press was invented. And the duplicated words and ideas of one man changed an entire Continent's Culture. That split Europe in Two. That fostered a whole new series of Black Deaths and Plagues created from battlefields; where Protestant Nations, and Kings fought Catholic Nations and Kings. Where Protestant Knight fought Catholic Knight... both claiming the had God on their right side, not their left. Since most killers use their right hands to kill with. They attributed their killing power to God making their right hands instruments of His Power. The exclusive title that they had their God on the right. Meaning they had their God in their strongest hand. Their right hand, their sword hand, their killing hand. Which created the Myth of might is right. This still works today. All you have to do is convince yourself that your God is more right than other people's Gods: and that gives you the right to kill them.

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

How did the Protestant Church in Medieval Europe react to all these wars and killing? Organized religion no longer cared about how greedy, or how unethical you were, or how rapacious your greed was. Or how piratical you were. Or what your personal ethics and morals were. That was now supposed to be confidential: between you and your own personal God. But if you did not happen to believe in any God: then what? Suddenly there is no higher authority you have to answer to. Suddenly you can do as you please... Suddenly every human being on Earth can be their own God. Gosh. What a convenient way to get rid of the idea of sin completely. What an easy form of hypocrisy that cannot be disproved. Attack someone's self-rationalized religious convictions as being wrong and evil? Everybody claimed the sanctity of holding their own personal religious convictions! If you want to disapprove of someone else's religious ethics or morals: you would have to attack the very idea of religion itself as being evil. And the human race has not become that enlightened yet today: never mind in Luther's time.

The officially centralized Catholic system of robber-Baron kingdoms were no better. Their brand of a duplicated, replicated, licensed identical God-licensing... A God who only spoke to the powerful, who only spoke to the Emperor, the King or the Pope: was no less corrupt. The Catholic Nations became Pirate Nations also. They were just a different flavor. They were more centralized in their power, and less equal in their greed. Their Greed had not become as spiritually equalized as in the Protestant Nations. There was less equal opportunity to be as greedy as possible in the centralized structure of Catholic Nations.

As a result the Principles and Dynamics of Adversarial Competition were intensified. People found that once they were on their own, with no community support, and no community cooperation: they had to work ten times harder just to survive. Then all Protestant nations, and cities and villages: became hives of people working harder, for longer hours. Work. And more work. Competitive work.

Even after Luther's reforms became normalized: religious hatred, bigotry, and racism, bloodshed, war, pillaging, raiding, etc, continued nonstop all over Europe. Every new Protestant sect re-created their own interpretation of Christianity... based loosely upon Luther's ideas, but mostly whatever they wanted to believe-in. The weakest and poorest churches were burned to the ground. The smallest sects were killed, massacred, or they fled for their lives. Where do you think the quaint notion of leaving the land of your birth to go live in an entirely alien culture came from? It came from persecution by the majority against minorities. It came from the culture of cowardice. Bigger gangs ganging up to kill smaller gangs. And smaller gangs fleeing instead of fighting, and killing the bigger gangs. IF persecuted minorities in Europe had refused to run. If every minority in Europe had fought to the death. The majority would have stopped their persecution. Sincere Tolerance could have developed instead of hypocritical tolerance. Racism and bigotry could have been greatly reduced. European colonialism and Empire building would never have become a cesspool of intensified hate and racism and fear, and intensified human filth and corruption..

Until finally: there was so much religious fanaticism, so much bloodshed, so much killing, so much hate: that the Churches themselves came together... trying to establish a vague sort of Ecumenical Peace . This, however; did not stop Kings from going to War and waging War. It merely diverted the burning hatred of some insane, psychotic religious fanatics and killers to travel all the way to Palestine just to kill unbelievers. Because it had become politically incorrect to kill Christians. They did kill Christians also, on the way, and coming back... and were sanctimoniously pardoned as usual, by their respective Churches: because they had gained Glory for their Church's God in killing unbelievers.

Luther's idea of a personal God came from the evil he saw emanating directly from a centralized religious authority. He did not have the brains or the courage, or the audacity; to include all other forms of centralized authority in his condemnation against Rome's centralized corruption. If he had: his slight incremental reform would never have happened. He only succeeded because his criticism was incremental in scope and perspective. He only succeeded because all the combined secular powers of the Kings and Clergy of Northern Europe: held a meeting called; The Meeting of Worms; and publicly supported Luther's right to publish his edicts against the Roman Catholic Church... as a secular right... not a religious one. They instantly saw that it was good policy to reduce the power of the Church: since the less power the Church had over the masses: the more power the secular leaders would have over them. He won his reform against one form of corrupt, centralized power; by siding with, and legitimizing an even worse corruption of centralized secular power. At least the Church did not practice warfare and taxation and oppression as brutally and as often and as effectively Kings did. By siding with the Kings of Europe as being less corrupt: Luther gave them an excuse to systematically destroy the actual power and control that the Church had held over the masses for centuries. He was responsible for destroying forever, the age-old balance of power between Church and State. He was responsible for the birth of Modern European Capitalism. A culture without any ethical, moral, spiritual or religious checks or balances. If it was not for him: the centralization of secular power in the world today could never have been developed to the degree that it has reached. Luther forced the elite to change their age-old tactics. He forced them to create and develop new lies and new false Myths and new false icons and new false Gods... all in order to preserve the privileges and power of the secular elite. All in order to hoodwink the masses into loving them... even as they kept on oppressing them and starving them and destroying them by the millions.

The Reformation was the birth of what the West calls: Modern Progress. The religious worship of work as a sacred religious virtue became the unspoken religion of millions of poor Europeans. This was the birth of Modern Industry. Millions of Protestants becoming more industrious. Loving their work: because it was their own work. Because they were working for themselves: not for a hated master. Millions of people, working harder than they ever had before. What Luther's Reformation did was simple; it made religion personal. It made the life of every Protestant personally religious. The result was. They turned their work into a religion. They turned their hate into a religion. They turned their greed into a religion. They turned their avarice into a religion. They turned their ambition into a religion. They turned everything they touched into a religion. They turned their love of material objects into a religion. They turned their puritanical origins into a religion. They turned their miserly poverty into a religion. They turned their political wars into religious wars. They turned their newfound wealth into a religion. They turned their lust for profit into a religion. They became a wave of righteous fanatics whose personal religiosity, the culture of personal religion... was more powerfully evil, more virulent, than the older cultures of civilized evil. As a mass of people, they spread their personal virulence throughout the world faster, and more effectively because they spread it both individually and as a mass. Even when they lost their individual freedoms and became re-enslaved to Protestant robber barons: they kept their religion of work, their work ethic intact. There is a famous poem about two Scandinavian square heads coming to the New World in search of gold which exemplifies this unspoken religion:

“Me und Mike vee vurk in mine...
“Holy shit vee haff good time!

Because the old rotting model of the community village, had finally been completely destroyed. They ended up competing against each other on an individual level without any centralized legal, moral, ethical or spiritual restrictions or guidelines. Finally, the Churches of northern Europe breathed a sigh of relief. People were too busy working to go to war and kill each other... they also became too busy to go to Church... Luther's new Gospel became normalized, it became an unspoken norm. The normalization of Protestantism, the normalization of having a personal conscience and a personal religion ended up destroying the very idea of a personal God which he had invented. Why? Because Protestants began thinking for themselves: they developed their critical thinking. They began copying Luther's criticisms of religion. They turned criticizing religion into a religion of disbelief. They became religiously critical. They looked at their own religion critically and scoffed at the myths of the Bible as individuals; they developed critical intelligence to such a religious degree of puritanical intensity: that they couldn't stand the hypocrisies of their own Protestant religion. They tried to start all over again afresh, they tried to re-define their religion. Countless new sects sprang up with their own interpretation of Protestantism. The result of Luther's idea of a personal religious conscience were countless new interpretations, new sects, new cults: each new positive concept, each new sprout of positive energy; poisoned from its inception by the surrounding evil negative energy of civilization.

Protestants exported this new religion and belief in the hardships of pure work; as an ethical good. Today we call it: The Protestant Work Ethic. In Protestant communities, it was deemed good if you worked all your life. Because if you did not. You became lazy. And your family would have no wood for their fire, no food on the table, and you starved. And died because you no longer had a community who fed you, or raised you, or helped you, or cared about you. This was the birth of the Nuclear Family. Families that lived by themselves in separate houses, and not together in close-knit social orders.

Before Luther, in Europe... work gave the poor a direct benefit. If you were poor and worked non-stop all of your life... then you did not starve to death when you became old. Family units became completely isolated and alone: because villagers ceased to work cooperatively. Protestant Nations worked longer and harder... and became more well-off. Their societies became more segmented, fragmented, alienated and isolated. Catholic Nations began copying them. Some religious offshoots of the Puritan hardship cultures, that Lutheranism and Calvinism had spawned; became hated cults in Europe. Because they worked too hard. The smarter European Robber Barons and Robber Kings...found a way to profit off their fanatical independence. By exiling them. Sending them across the Oceans. And forcing them when they landed: to instantly start making a profit for them. If they did not, they were brought back, fined, imprisoned and disgraced. So... the ones who could not pay their debts... the lazy ones, the stupider ones, the cheaters and liars and sneaks ran off into the American woods... until the British Empire became tired of searching for them in the trackless forests of a new unexplored Continent.

That was how the American colonies grew faster in size and in population. The Spanish and French colonies did not grow as fast because their European masters would not let them grow. They had kept the culture of pure greed exclusive to only the topmost upper class... while the British finally allowed the lower classes to participate in the middle-class culture of profit. The French and Spanish hunted down their escapee's. They were branded as criminals and outcasts...

Because the British masters were more lenient than the Spanish and French masters; there was very little intermixing of European and North American Indian cultures. The structure of the British Empire was not as rigidly centralized as the French and the Spanish. The British could not keep their indentured servants from fleeing their debt-slavery and refusing to pay back their masters for their investment in bringing them there in the first place, and supplying them with all their tools and wherewithal to live and work. They ran away... but were not actively hunted down. They built their own farms and towns. And did not foster a race of half-breeds mixing with the natives; as the French and Spanish colonies did. Why do you think American plantation, and English plantation owners used slaves from Africa? Because they found that white European indentured servants could not survive under these conditions. And many whites who could: ran away before their time of indentured slavery was finished. The white Europeans could not survive those swamp-infested hell-holes. If their indentured servants had not run away from these plantations: there would not have been any slavery in America in the first place. But more relevantly... if the owners of these plantations had not been so greedy and inhumane towards their own indentured servants in the first place. Then there would have been no American Slave Trade to begin with. Only a short-lived British Slave Trade.... And a short-lived period of servant-slavery. If the English colonial absentee owners had not been so greedy. If their overseers had improved the worker's living quarters, and not forced them to work so long and hard: there would have been no American legacy of Slavery.

If they had abandoned their impractical, idiotic farming ventures for a quick profit: then there would have been no slavery in America at all. Whether their indentured servants ran away or not, American culture would not have become a copy of European culture. The American colonies founded by England was originated because of the stock market scam of the East India trading Company returning nice steady profits to investors who had a share in their stock. These Nobles began to believe that all colonies should be just as profitable. That all colonies should be profit-making ventures.

Before this crazy idea took hold in England... establishing a new colony, was mostly a losing venture. Only one colonizing attempt in a hundred ever paid off. For any colonizing attempt to ever show a profit, usually it took a slow-steady investment of money, ships, men, over a long period of time. Before this: colonies were a symptom of the expanding power and wealth, and technology of institutions such as: Nations, Religions, Empires, Kings and Queens. They were the only ones that held large enough accumulations of wealth and power. Only they could mount such long-term goals and make a few of them pay off. That is... until Spanish conquistadors came back with tons of gold after conquering an empire with a handful of men... Until they did it not just once, but twice. Until Europeans came to believe that there were tons of gold and Empires to be had for the asking. All they had to do was sail out of Europe. So what did they do? They sailed East instead of West and found yet more civilizations to conquer and more riches. Until the British East India Company made their investors nobles filthy rich; just as the Dutch had done before them. This began the crazy idea of colonies being founded strictly as investments; for-profit-only... as get-rich-quick schemes. Instead of waiting for their government to first establish a colony, and corner most of the wealth in royal monopolies and patents: they became impatient, they became even more greedy: they wanted to profit from these colonies by getting in there at the beginning, even before the Crown had a chance to establish itself as in control of the lands they were invading, er robbing, er colonizing, er exploiting...er, profiting from.... The Protestants did it for personal reasons, as a personal religion: not for a centralized Church, or for a King, or a State or a Country.

So: the British Crown gave them Royal Charters. Authorizing them to establish colonies on hostile shores on a new continent:... 'in the name of the Crown'. Thus making the stealing of an entire continent all legal and above-board; without needing to pay one soldier to do it. The British Crown did this because a piece of paper called a Royal Charter cost them almost nothing; except for the parchment it was written on. They did this for a very good reason: if any of these attempts did succeed, the Crown could always step in later, and reap the profits from it without working for it.

One reason why the Americans colonies rebelled; was because the English Government never put a farthing or one soldier at risk in creating them in the first place. And then the English Empire had the arrogance to assume that not only would these New English colonies swear allegiance to Mother England... but pay extra taxes simply because they were becoming too affluent to suit the snobs in England. When England was already profiting from them handsomely enough through ordinary trade... with their usual unfair colonial racket of added tariffs and taxes and Trade Laws. It was a case of the old mother England becoming too greedy, too envious of her offspring. Trying to hang onto the more industrious, coattails of the greedier Americans: who in turn: flung them off in moral outrage, disgust and independence.

Why did this War happen at all? Because the British Empire tried to limit the American greed for free land. The British created a limit to their Westward expansion by instituting a Western Boundary to all the colonies, called: The Proclamation Line. After first wiping out most of the tribes along the East coast: The British Empire actually tried to honor some kind of decent limit to the American rapacity for free land. They instituted an imaginary boundary line beyond which no American settlers could go. There was already so much easily available free land inside the existing colonies already; that it would have taken hundreds of years before they were ever forced to expand merely due to the pressures of population alone.

That is... If they their population had not exploded later on. If they had not allowed millions more Europeans to immigrate into the colonies because of their constant need to fill the slave jobs that no decent American voter, no white man wanted to do. That was, and still is the hypocrisy of American freedom. It cannot survive without fresh waves of slave labor filing its lowest ranks.

Americans had become spoiled. Coming into what they considered to be a virgin continent, with almost no human overpopulation.... Vast tracts of unspoiled Nature... apparently open for anyone who wanted to settle down and live on it. Their greed for land knew no bounds, and recognized no boundaries, no treaties, no agreements... Every new treaty they broke. Every word they gave; they reneged on. Every written document they twisted, or annulled, or forgot, or swept under the carpet. They wanted land not just by the acre. They wanted lands by the thousands of acres. They wanted all of that continent. The British Empire saw no good reason to begin an entire series of new Indian Wars; when they had just finished defending the Americans against the French and Tecumseh and his alliances of Indian Tribes.

The Americans did not give a damn about Indigenous Natives: supposedly living in those unsettled, unoccupied, un-owned lands. They moved out past the Proclamation Line. They were pushed back by English regulars: yelling in fury about all this free land going to waste because of a handful of lousy

Indians. American Colonists never bothered to learn the actual names of the Americans who lived there and called them all Indians. This is still true today. Americans rarely bother to learn how to pronounce names with more than one syllable. The British Empire refused to protect their illegal settlements past the Proclamation Line. The Indians barely tolerated them. But held their growing anger: waiting for the White Father Across the Sea to punish its children. The British never punished the Americans for their repeated violations of treaty breaking and rum running, and whatnot.

Once the American colonists realized that they could get away with anything they wanted to do to these Indians. Their viciousness and hate and racism boiled over into killings and attacks on every Indian they knew-of, or could find. A few tribes retaliated by burning a few settlements to the ground. The Americans were furious that the Empire did not invade the Indian lands and murder all of them en masse. They expected the British Government whom they normally hated and despised: and never paid taxes to...to come in and punish the natives for the audacity and effrontery of defending themselves against their attempts at mass genocide upon them.

The political movement of the American War of Independence was founded on many years of pure racial hatred against the indigenous natives, the rightful 'owners' of America. They hated the Indians with a special hatred... with a special unspoken secret guilt and unspoken secret shame. Most intelligent Colonists knew there was no excuse whatsoever for the practice of stealing their land and killing them, cheating them, corrupting them lying to them, stealing from them, massacring them, raping their women and killing their babies. So they used the racist label of Indian to whitewash their crimes. Even though everybody knew India was another continent and Indians in India were not natives of North America. They created a Bureau of Indian Affairs and hid it under a Bureaucratic carpet so the American public could innocently claim they knew nothing of the systematic genocide of hundreds of North American tribes and cultures. Much like the Germans who created a bureau for the Jewish question and hid it under a bureaucratic carpet; so the German public could innocently claim later that they knew nothing about the mass genocide of one entire culture in their midst. Was there any basic difference between the Government policies of the U.S. from 1776 to 1960 concerning what they did with an unwanted minority? A period of almost 300 years. And the Governmental policy of Germany from 1930 to 1945 concerning what they did with their unwanted minority?

Not much; except in length of time. The U.S. managed to kill off almost all of the original inhabitants of their stolen continent. Germany in the 1940's almost did it to the Jews. But... Germany lost the War. So obviously: everything they did was wrong and bad and evil. As a result of losing the 2nd WW modern History books now conveniently demonize 1940's Germany as being guilty of the most horrible racism and genocide. While not a single modern history books says one word about 300 years of American genocide and racism. Why? Because America did not lose a war? No. Because America never admitted it to ever losing a war. Just like Rome never admitted to losing a war: even after they lost it. Both are prime examples of perception: not facts; or rather: misperception triumphing over the facts.

The Americans committed their genocide of the indigenous tribes of North America slowly. Without any fanfare, or a huge, mass-killing system. But by 1890: only 3% of the original inhabitants of America States were left alive.

After 1890: Americans really had no reason to kill off the remaining 3% because they were simply not enough to be worth bothering about. Besides; Americans are supposed to be the good guys... Americans are supposed to be against evil. They only kill bad Indians, not good Indians who let themselves be rounded up and stuck onto reservations to slowly die of hunger, starvation, degradation, hopelessness and the complete destruction of their way of life and their culture. It just so happened that 98% of them were the bad kind. That is... unless they let themselves be rounded up and put into concentration camps, er I mean reservation camps... Destroying their freedom of movement from traveling hundreds of miles every year: to not allowed to travel at all. As long as the North American natives did not resist: their slow-systematic genocide went on unnoticed by everyone except the few whites who were personally involved in murdering them, cheating them, infecting them with European diseases, selling them rotgut alcohol, and treating them as if they were not human.

But when the news of the battle of Little Bighorn spread: that one tribe of Indians had actually fought back against an American military force and defeated it and almost totally exterminated it. Back in Washington; instantly there was serious talk of the total extermination of all Indians in America.

The fact is: if North American Natives of America had not gone peaceably to their deaths: if all of them had resisted: the entire white Nation of America would have killed every man woman and child of the natives in less than three years. There would have been such a mass rage to kill all Indians: that the hysteria of hate and fear would have swept over the entire Nation like wildfire. All white people whose ancestry was suspect: would have been strung up by bloodthirsty mobs. People would have informed falsely upon each other, that: 'such-and-such' was an Indian lover: and gotten their houses for free by this tactic. Which by the way was precisely what they did to their neighbors in the War of Independence. If given free reign: the potential for mass hate, mass hysteria and mob violence of the human species is infinite.

The only reason the American native genocides were not publicized as a genocide was because they went peaceably to their reservations, er concentration death camps.... where they died and dwindled and went extinct. It was because the whites managed to commit these genocides incrementally. The only two rare instances of resistance that were publicized, was the rebellion of Geronimo and The Battle of the Little Bighorn. Apart from those two episode of active resistance: the North American Indians went to their doom... never understanding the inhumanity of white European culture. They died without understanding why they died. The American Government did not need to carry on a campaign of mass extinction. They let the reservation system, er, I mean the Gulag Archipelago system do it for them. Americans to this day: still loudly deny that they had anything to do with the systematic obliteration of the nearly all the ethnic races they stole a whole continent from. A measly 3% survived this mass genocide of hundreds of tribal nations and ethnic cultures. As far as Americans are concerned: since 3% were still left alive: it wasn't a legal genocide. The Germans tried to obliterate Jews without this self-serving hypocrisy.

Why did Germans hate the Jews so much after going through the worst depression in modern human history... where workers fell dead on the street because they had no food in their bellies. When people slowly starved to death in their houses. Too ashamed to go out and beg for food?

Granted: Europeans had already hated Jews for a thousand years. Granted: Germans were brainwashed by their Teutonic warrior culture: to respect and worship all authority figures unquestioningly and obey them unquestioningly. Granted: German Jews were demonized after the 1st World War as anarchists and communists because many of Russia's Bolshevik Revolutionaries were Jewish. Granted: the German Bolshevik communist party was led by Jews and controlled by Jews. Granted: the Russian revolution was masterminded by middleclass Jews, and Granted after the total breakdown and chaos they had all suffered when the German Weimar Republic collapsed, the Germans were terrified of a civil war breaking out in Germany as it had in Russia,. Granted: Germans used Jews as a scapegoat: blaming them for losing the 1st World War, and for causing their Great Depression.

But Germans knew why they were starving to death during that Great Depression. It was no secret that their entire economy was being destroyed by the War-Indemnities Act which the Allies had saddled them with as part of their unconditional surrender after World War One. Leaving them bankrupt: with no trade, no exports and no imports. They knew perfectly well that all of Europe and England was doing it them. Not mythical evil Jewish conspirators.

But how did Jews fare inside Germany during its Great Depression of the 1930's, and especially right after it?

They came out on top. Smelling like a rose. They shined. They excelled.

They were better educated than most Germans. They had more hidden, secret reserves of wealth. They came from a culture that worshipped frugality, practicality and saving. Jewish culture has worshipped the concept of accumulation and greed as a moral good for more than three thousand years.

They were better businessmen. They were better bargainers. They were and are more cunning than Germans. They were not bothered by silly things like Germanic pride. Compared to the Germany's Jews: the rest of the Germany was stupid. Jews thrived in the black market. They became buyers and sellers. They got rich from bilking millions of poor, starving Germans of their wealth. It was the Jewish middlemen and farmers who knew how to wheel and deal. Once the depression hit; and black markets sprang up all over Germany: honesty and fair dealing went out the window. German shopkeepers went bankrupt. They kept their prices fair. They tried to help other Germans.

The Jews did not.

They changed their prices every day. They fixed their prices as high as they could. But what surprise is it that these German Jews were more cunning at haggling and bartering; when they had been forced into the role of middlemen for hundreds of years as the only professions allowed them? When for thousands of years; they had been forced to live by their wits, and develop the sneakiest forms of survival inside alien cultures, that hated and reviled them?

This is never mentioned by Jews or Germans. Because this kind of profit-practice is now the Global religion of Capitalism. To accuse Jews for making too much of a profit from stupid, gullible, gulled Germans; would not only humiliate the entire modern German Nation. It would also prove that the stereotype of Jews being a race of greedy money-grubbers...was once actually true. Well. In Weimar Germany in the 1920's during the Great Depression: it was true. And not one historian today will touch this era in Germany's past with a ten-foot pole.

Stupid, honest, Lutheran Germans: believed religiously and implicitly in the Protestant Work Ethic. They could not understand why their money had become worthless. They had no understanding of the relative value of money. Compared to the Jews, and to most other European cultures: financially, they were horribly naïve and ignorant. They thought an honest day's work should automatically give them an honest day's pay, which should give them an honest day's bread. Germans had not developed cunning as a cultural asset.

For hundreds of years in Europe: Jews hid their wealth... never knowing when they would be attacked and forced to flee from the lands they lived in.

The German depression revealed the Jews as a separate culture, a separate Nation, a separate people... living invisibly inside Germany.. professing to be German... But when things got hard: they showed they did not give a fuck about Germans. And every German who went through that hell never forgot this. They remembered the Jewish Store owners charging them hundreds of times more for a loaf of bread than they could afford. They saw the food in their village piled high on Jewish tables.

When the entire German Nation was almost destroyed. The German Jews helped each other; before they helped any non-Jewish German. They stuck together as a separate culture through thick and thin. This was why they had survived so long as a separate culture without a homeland in the first place. What surprise is it that they used all the assets of their culture to survive the worst depression ever to hit an industrialized Nation? They lived in their own Jewish neighborhoods and worked cooperatively to help each other. German Jews triumphed in the hardships of the Great Depression of Germany. But... however; their Jewish arrogance was exposed. Their pride in being Jewish was exposed. Their Jewish culture was exposed as being better than German culture in times of crisis.

They were the smart, cunning, wealthy savers. They were the bargainers, the ones who found a way by hook or crook to bring home food... While millions of simple, honest Germans starved and died: not knowing what else to do. The Jews became an intelligent upper class in Germany...Less than 1% of the population; Jews became an elite middle-class of Germany. They held most of the higher status positions in German society. After the Great Depression: they were never poor. When Germany recovered from the Great Depression: everyone was happy... The Jews had adroitly managed to come out on top. After the Depression: Jews owned more shops than ever before. They lived in finer houses. Their children went to better schools. Every German University was Jewish to the bone. Almost every German scientist was a Jew.

And so... when business came back. When prices were regulated. When people could make an honest living and earn an honest income and buy honestly priced food. Germans found that most of the sellers were Jews: happily charging them ordinary prices... instead of gouging them for every penny they could get, as they had done during the Depression. The story of the German Depression in the 1920's and 30's has never been documented or told. The Jews themselves keep their mouths shut about what they did in Germany during that time. Hitler went on a systematic attack against the Jews for years... publicly ranting, and vilifying the Jewish race and culture for years. The German masses grimly shouted themselves hoarse in approval because many of them knew from personal experience, from many painful personal dealings with Jews during the Great Depression; how they had been outsmarted and bilked and fooled by Jews and that was a good enough reason for them to become racists. The memory of what Jews had done in the Great Depression was still fresh in the hearts of Germans. How they had survived better than all the rest of the Nation. After such a depression with an entire class of Jewish profiteers rising suddenly in their midst to such bourgeois heights of affluence: when the Jews showed that when worst came to worst: they cared only for themselves. They did not give a shit about Germany, or Germans. Jewish culture teaches their people to be Jewish first: and whatever Nationality they are second. Jewish racism in Germany in the 1930's was merely an issue of ethical-cultural-religious-National identities and priorities. Germany for the Germans. Germany first. Judaism second. Not Judaism first and Germany second when the Nation's survival depended upon everyone pulling together.

This was one obvious reason why the Germans did not protest when Hitler's began to systematically humiliate and ostracize Jews from German society. There were too many millionaire Jewish families who had gotten rich during the Great Depression. Germans had seen with their own eyes after all wealth was stripped from their towns and villages... how Jews began unearthing the secret wealth which they had hidden for generations... Just for such an eventuality as the Great Depression. Just for such a crisis.

During that horrible Depression when everyone in Germany was starving... Jews in Germany had revealed themselves as hoarders of secret wealth. They had revealed themselves as an alien, parasitic-symbiotic culture hiding within a German culture that was not based upon greed. Rather than demonize Germany for succumbing to Hitler's 20 years of systematic brainwashing... people should wonder why when Germans did not openly hate them before Hitler gained power.

The Germans of the 1920's and 30's were a forgiving people. They were simple, stupid, and not especially inclined towards extreme hatred. It took the mass propaganda of the Nazi war machine years of slowly normalizing Germans to have a blanket racist discrimination against all Jews... not just some in particular.

What actually sparked the German labor camps being re-tooled over into concentration camps: was America entering the War, and the civilian bombing of Hamburg with incendiary bombs... creating a huge firestorm where at least 60,000 German civilians were killed. The Nazis became infuriated at the unfairness of the United States attacking them. They used it as an excuse to deport all Jews from Hamburg to give homeless Germans houses to live-in. And began reworking their plans for 'the Jewish Question' with a vengeance they had not had before.

Under Nazi rule: the removal of civil rights, the systematic discrimination of the Jews, the Slavs, the homosexuals, the mentally ill, the Gypsies, communists, etc: and all other undesirables was merely seen as a purification of the German Race by the German masses. No good Germans had anything to fear from it... as long as they obeyed their Fuhrer that is and joined in the mass demonstrations and did what every other good German did which was agree with everything he was told and repeat Heil Hitler at every chance to make sure everyone knew they were good Germans. The creation of concentration camps was a systematic way of deporting all undesirables out of Germanic societies as humanely as possible. They were built at great expense publicly and openly. They were model camps at first. designed to house undesirables without killing them. The organic, slide of Germany's forced-labor camps into huge industrialized factory labor camps into concentration camps only for Jews is still a mystery. The only explanation is that Hitler and the German Reich wanted to save the Jews from the mass genocide of the German people going on all over Germany. Or use them as a bargaining chip in suing for peace. But Neither of these explanations make any sense. Hitler never intended to surrender to the Allies. He was determined that Germany fight to the death until every last German man woman and child was dead rather than surrender. Nor was he any lover of Jews enough to put them into camps to keep them safe from aerial bombardment, just because he knew the Allies had specifically excluded them from any attack.

And after the World War II... The Americans grabbed every German scientist they could find. Because these German Scientists were so good at the form of insane detachment called: scientific thinking. Americans used German Insanity to invent even worse industrial weapons of mass destruction: nuclear missiles. They created an even more scientifically insane detachment of inventing a weapon of mass murder that could destroy the entire world. The US govt using Jewish scientists invented the Atomic Bomb. If you think German concentration camps are inhuman. The horror of wiping out millions of humans in a few minutes with one bomb instead of a world war... and poisoning the entire world with radioactive death is one million times more inhuman and insane.

Nazi Germany had exposed its anti-Semitic racism by honest actions. But after the war, all of Europe spat on the surviving Jewish refugees freed from the prison camps. After the War... all of Europe was guilty of anti-Semitism. Not only by collaborating with the Nazis, not only by crimes of omission and commission during the war: but by how Europeans treated the Jewish refugees after Nazi Germany was defeated. Did any of these Nations welcome them back? No. Most definitely they did not. Instead: afterwards: almost every European Nation including England and America refused to allow them to stay in their countries. Jewish racism in Europe was pandemic during the 19th Century. Almost every National Government in Europe during the 2nd World War and after the War: was just as guilty of Racism as the Nazis were.

Jewish refugees were forced to look for a new home. Europe herself is directly responsible and guilty of the creation of Israel. Europe forced the dispossessed Jews to colonize a land that did not belong to them.. And the historical legacy of that colonization we are seeing every day in the hate and violence and killing in the Mideast. After WWII: Jewish refugees in Europe became homeless, Nation-less, refugees, Unwanted by all the Nations of Europe including England and America. Has any historian ever blamed the Allied nations for this? No. The Nazis have been demonized and ripped to shreds for killing Jews which never happened; in order to deflect attention away from those who were actually guilty of anti-Semitism.

Ultimately the Jewish Racism in Europe was responsible for creating the Jewish racist Zionist State of Israel. The colonizing of Palestine by Zionist Jews was the final last gasp of the evil called European Colonialism. The Jewish refugees of Europe were offered a place to live by the Zionist Rothschild Jews who had made a secret deal with Churchill, and went looking to establish their own Nation. So they would never become homeless again. So they would never be without a State to protect them again. Instead of destroying the obsolete idea of Nationalism: the 2nd World War legalized Nationalism as the only possible form of human society. The Zionists found a backward people; even more degraded and ignorant, and poorer than they were; and invaded their land and set up their new instant cult-Nation, based upon a three thousand year-old claim that their ancestors had once lived there. This rationale is the most arrogant, example of the racist supremacy that Zionist Jews are guilty of. Zionist Jews do not represent the Jewish people. They are a small rabid, fanatical hate-based power group of Ashkenazi false Jews who use the fictitious lie of the holocaust myth and the myth of anti-Semitism to commit their own brand of racist supremacy, hate and evil. The fact is: the worst racists and anti-Semites in Europe were the Polish people. They had been guilty of massacring innocent people of German descent just before Hitler invaded the land called Poland which was actually the hereditary land of East Prussia , and this was one reason why Hitler had a grudge against the entire Polis nation and treated them more brutally than any of the other regions the Nazis invaded, with the exception of Western Russia. There: Hitler wanted to exterminate the Bolsheviks and empty the land of the peasants so Germans could colonize it. He also used false flag operations: planting corpses and claiming that the Poles had committed atrocities against Germans. But this does not change the fact that the Polish people were a bunch of rabid hate-mongers who killed German soldiers and gouged out their eyes and mutilated their dead bodies during the first weeks of the invasion, before Poland was defeated. No other civilized people did that to prisoners of war.

Between WW War 1, and WW War 11, Nearly all European Jews had raised their standard of living. The Jews were guilty of raising themselves from lower-class ghettos... up into middle, and upper-class levels of wealth, education, and positions of prestige... too fast, and too conspicuously; as an alien culture speaking an alien language, succeeding better than all of the National cultures they lived-in. Every European class, every European race, Nation and religion hated them for that. All the classes of Europe hated them for this unheard of massive move of upward mobility of one alien ethnic race. All the classes that had struggled for hundreds and thousands of years to gain their precious, hard-fought niche in the status quo, were outraged that this one alien culture had managed to move upwards faster than they ever could over a period of centuries... how they had managed to become richer than other people, in a few short years. The universal belief in Europe, was that the only way the Jews did it: was by some kind of foul, secret evil. After all: they were better than Jews: so why weren't they as successful as Jews? These were the racists who stole the homes and property of the Jews who had been deported into concentration camps. And after the war they kicked them out of Europe. And hated them. Secretly. Not openly and honestly like the Nazis did.

Today the historical lesson of Nazi Germany has been taken to heart by the rest of the world. Racism is still rampant all over the world; only now it is kept secret; not blared from the pulpit. Now nobody admits to it. That's the only fucking difference between racism before the 2nd World War and racism after the 2nd World War. Now it is normal to keep your racist hatred secret except on internet forums. Now most haters are such cowards: that will never admit they hate anyone except on an internet forum.

But where did this European racist hate against Jews come from? It came from the Jews themselves. The Jewish culture and race are the worst racists in the world. They discriminate against all the rest of Humanity. Their culture tells them they are the chosen race; better than everyone else. From the belief that Jews were greedier than other races, other cultures. From the historical fact that after the 1st World War: more Jews had profited from the Great Depression. They had become better off, and more upwardly mobile than any other race in Europe. The racist hate of Europe in the 1900's was based upon envy. Not just Germans, but most the Nations and races of Europe hated the Jews for how they had triumphed and come out on top.

The reason the hoax of the holocaust was successfully perpetrated is obvious. Before the Holocaust: Mass Media did not exist. Films did not exist. Movies did not exist. TV did not exist. Before the 2nd World War: Jews had not yet gained control of the mass media. Then between WW1 and the 2nd World War Mass media was invented, developed and peopled and controlled by Jews. None of the other atrocities in human history received as much media attention as the false myth of the Holocaust. Duh. Gosh. What a coincidence.

I myself was a firm believer in the holocaust until I stumbled across a lecture given by David Irving: a noted historian of the 2nd World War. Then I began looking into the matter and found Ernst Zundel and his fight to spread the truth about the holocaust. Then I discovered that Germany, France and England had laws forbidding anyone from printing or saying anything which went against the conventional propaganda of the Holocaust myth. Then I discovered how Jewish hate groups like the Jewish Anti-defamation League and other Jewish racist groups systematically blackball anyone who speaks out in public the truth about the holocaust myth, and uses their influence and political racist clout to make the Australian Govt and other govts around the world ban anyone from entering their country if they are going to speak the truth about the holocaust. Then I found there is a worldwide network of laws and censorship concerning the Holocaust banning free speech and banning anyone from saying anything that went against the conventional version. Then I found out how people had been arrested and jailed in Germany for years...for the supposed crime of scientifically proving that the famous so-called gas chambers of Auschwitz could never have been used as gas chambers since they had no arsenic embedded in the walls which turns the walls blue. However, in the chamber used to fumigate the clothing of the inmates, the walls were blue from the Zyklon gas used to kill pests and lice. Then I discovered that Zyklon B was used as a common pest control agent all over Europe and was as common as DDT was in the 1950's, and there was nothing sinister or special about leftover canisters since it was used to fumigate the buildings of the camp also. In fact, it is still used as a pesticide all over the world. Then I discovered that the famous Auschwitz gas chambers are actually a reconstruction built by the Soviets during their reign in power and were erected by the Soviets as a propaganda tool to demonize the Nazis and the Germans. Then I discovered that there are no holes in the ceilings of the gas chambers where the supposed Zyklon B canisters were supposed to be dropped. Then I discovered the most eminent American specialist in gas chambers; Fred Leuchter had gone to Auschwitz and studied the gas chambers and made his scientific report stating that it was impossible for these rooms to be used as gas chambers. The report is meticulous and damning; leaving no doubt whatsoever that no gas chambers for the extermination of Jews had never been built or run in any of the concentration camps run by the Nazis. Then I discovered the works of Eustace Mullin, Professor Robert Faurisson of France, and Professor Antony C. Sutton a research scholar at Stanford University's Hoover Institution and his research into the secret societies of the robber barons of western civilization and the family dynasties of robber baron power. Then I discovered the worldwide censorship and demonizing of anyone who dares to question the myth of the holocaust. Then I discovered that all the charges of genocide against the Nazis at the famous Nuremberg trials have been discredited and proven to be false. Then I discovered the few documented cases of atrocities of mass graves and mass killings attributed to the Nazis had actually been done by the Soviets by information discovered in their own KGB files which documented how horrible they were and how inhuman they actually were compared to the humanism of the Nazi regime which has been completely covered up and buried. Then I discovered that during WW2: The Nazi regime had a strict policy of punishing anyone: including SS officers and the Wehrmacht for raping or killing Jews or Jewesses: executing them and having them shot... also, the cases where offenders were not punished strictly according to the letter of the Nazi law were rare and far between. The punishment for any such offense was death. Nazi documents prove that this law was enforced throughout the Nazi regime: in Southern France, in Germany, in Poland, and in the Ukraine. Then I discovered that many of the revisionists spreading the truth about the holocaust hoax were Jews.

But the most damning of all is the evidence supplied by the Jewish liars and swindlers themselves who sell the holocaust myth to the whole world. Steven Spielberg: who has turned the Holocaust into a billion dollar industry and made 100's of millions of dollars from selling his movies filled with evil poisonous racist lies about what the Nazis did to the Jews during WW2. Spielberg in his zealous ambition to document the fictitious horrors of Auschwitz created a video library made up of 50,000 interviews with the 'Holocaust survivors' who had actually been in these camps.

In that video library: there is a clear demarcation between the liars and the honest Jews who tell the truth about their experiences in Auschwitz. Spielberg used the small handful of sickest liars in his movies. He carefully did not include the great majority of Jews who told the truth about Auschwitz in his movies.

In that video library... you will find Jews telling of how they went into the forest next to Auschwitz to pick leaves to make tea for the whole camp... a very healthy tasty tea. They could walk straight into the forest any time they wished because there was no fence in that direction. You will find women telling about the gynecological center for women in Auschwitz: for girls with menstrual cramps and other female related health issues. You will find accounts of the soccer field where the camp inmates played soccer. The field is right next to what is supposed to be the gas chambers. You will find accounts of how a child's center better known as a kindergarten was set up for the children of Auschwitz and how it was painted, and how the children took part in making it pretty and gave suggestions of what to put on the walls to make it cheerful, and how it was used to read from books and tell stories to the children. You will find accounts of how there was an orchestra in Auschwitz and how the inmates amused themselves and their jailers playing jazz. You will find accounts of how they built a movie theater in Auschwitz so the inmates could watch movies on the weekend. You will find the swimming pool built for the inmates still there in Auschwitz: only it is not on the guided tour for obvious reasons. But you will not find any honest Jew speaking of any gas chambers they saw because they didn't see any. You can go there now, and hear from a former SS guard how the gas chambers were run, how after the officers locking the doors to the gas chamber, (doors that have no locks) and getting up on a chair and throwing the Zyklon canisters into the chamber through the open windows from outside the building.... I am not kidding. These ridiculous lies are gobbled up by unthinking uncritical tourists without a whimper of dissent or questioning. How anyone could believe this garbage is beyond me. But I believed it all of my adult life, simply because I did not question what was presented on mass media and in books, and I did not dig deeper and do my own research until much later in my life.

If you do your own research; what you will find is that at the end of the war when all Germany was being bombed into rubble and millions of Germans were starving to death: these Jewish inmates were eating better than German civilians. It was only at the end of the war when the transportation systems had been bombed out of existence that the inmates in Auschwitz began to become malnourished and starve. And then the Typhus epidemic hit the camp and thousands of inmates died from it and there was no place to put the bodies because they hadn't designed the camp to be an extermination camp in the first place... It was only then when they didn't know what to do with all the dead bodies from the Typhus epidemic that the plans for crematoriums were drawn up... but they were never built because the war was over before they could build them. All that is left are the blueprints for 4 crematoriums: drawn up in order to get rid of the dead corpse left by the Typhus epidemic. It was these corpses which the Allies found and Allied war propaganda film crews used to demonize the Germans: when in truth, it is and was the Allies who exterminated and killed 8 million Germans during that war. The Germans as a nation were innocent of any attempts at genocide. A small band of fanatical SS did carry out attempts to systematically exterminate Jews on the Eastern front; but they found the psychological effect of their troops carrying out their orders was so psychologically demoralizing they stopped rounding up entire villages where the people were forced to dig their own graves and were then shot in the back of the head. And stopped gassing them in buses with carbon monoxide.

The secret meeting called 'The Final Solution' is a total hoax. The wording of the false documents are obviously from someone who doesn't know how to write German properly. Their fraudulence is easily detectable. Himmler was strangled in his detention cell so he wouldn't be able to testify. Himmler was garroted in a cell after he was discovered trying to escape by the Western forces in order to keep the war propaganda of the Holocaust lie alive. Those who did testify were tortured. Medical records reveal those who did testify had had their testicles crushed. They had been tortured in the most brutal way possible to insure their silence in the witch-hunt propaganda trial assembled by the Allies of Nuremberg which was used to demonize the Nazi regime and all the German people, and thus justify all the atrocities of the allies. Without this myth, the history of WW2 would be completely different. The telling fact is that all the gas chambers in the Russian occupied zone where western journalists and reporters were not allowed. All the supposed extermination camps were in the Russian occupied zone... which was off limits and not allowed to be examined or studied for 40 years, that is until the USSR disintegrated from within and the iron curtain was torn down and westerners could once again visit Eastern European countries. It was simply another invented war propaganda lie which both the Russians and the West used to preserve the myth of the victors always being in the right. 'Might makes right.' 'To the victor goes the spoils.' 'History is written by the victors.'

The hard facts alone tells the true story. There were no depots to store enough coal to cremate 6 million bodies in the camps. This has been proven by aerial photos taken by the allies of Auschwitz and the other camps during the war. The facts is; Germany lost the war because it ran out of oil and coal. It did not have any left to spare from the war effort for the cremation of 6 million corpses. If you speak to any funeral cremationist: they will tell you just how much fuel it takes to cremate one human body... and that still doesn't solve the problem of the bones. Cremation does not get rid of human bones. There is no evidence of any bones being found, or burned, or buried. The human body is made up of 65-55% water. When forced to admit that there was not enough fuel in any of the Nazi camps to incinerate corpses on a mass scale. The court ingeniously used a so-called expert to explain scientifically that the dead bodies were used to burn each other...! That the fat in one burning corpse could be used to burn other corpses so no mountains of coal or fuel was needed. Exactly how the emaciated skeletons of the victims starving to death and dying of Typhus and other diseases at the end of the war in these camps had enough fat in their bodies to burn other corpses without any fuel being needed was carefully and conveniently not brought up.

The entire genocide of the Allies killing 10 million Germans took 4 years to accomplish. It was achieved along two fronts: the western and eastern fronts and in the entire German Reich.. In the mass bombings and rocket attacks and artillery bombardments and machine guns mowing down people and rifles and grenades... after all the killing committed by the Russians and the Western Allies, after bombing hundreds of German cities and towns into rubble and defeating the German armed forces... after all the starvation, disease, epidemics, plagues, they managed to kill 10 million Germans. Eisenhower alone was responsible for killing over 1 million German prisoners of war by letting them starve to death by simply not feeding them In order to kill 10 million Germans, it took the combined military industrial output of Russia and the west, the entire industrial power of the whole industrialized world... plus huge armies made up of millions of men... and that was just the killing... they didn't have to get rid of the bodies. Starvation plus the outbreak of disease and plagues due to the rotting dead corpses not being buried; killed more people than all the bombs and guns combined. Vermin, rats and lice spread more death than all the industrialized weapons of mass destruction.

The idea that the Nazis were able to not only kill 6 million people in a few concentration camps, but get rid of all the bodies, all the evidence of this slaughter; is categorically, physically impossible. The mountains of bones and skull alone would have been larger than the pyramid of Giza and there was no possible way they could have burned the bones or the skulls because that meant they had to have enough fuel to burn them and during that war which was waged on two enormous fronts, Germany had none to spare.

The holocaust began as a war propaganda lie: a publicity stunt which the New York Times refused to print because it knew the sources of the story were false. But then they found the starving inmates of the concentration camps and the piles of corpses left by the Typhus epidemic, and the war propaganda film crews had a field day blaring to the world how inhuman and cruel the Nazis and Germans had been during the war, and everyone swallowed it and believed it just like I had.

Because the hoax of the supposed holocaust was never exposed in the beginning, it grew into a legend, into a myth. It was written into every history book and supported by fraudulent evidence... While this myth was growing in the west after WW2: in the USSR: where the actual camps were situated: Stalin made up his own propaganda lies about the camps, demonizing the Nazis, and rebuilt them as a propaganda tool. During that time of the Iron curtain cutting off the west from the Soviet controlled nations of Europe; no westerners were allowed into these camps to do any independent historical research. Later they became tourist attractions and were used by the Polish govt to make money as part of the Holocaust industry, keeping the myth of Nazis atrocities alive.

The point is...

This is only one example of the lies which all history books are filled with, and which the masses swallow. The point is... if you do any independent research of your own like I have, you will also discover that not only the holocaust, but ALL of written history is filled with countless lies, cover-ups, whitewashed propaganda and hoaxes. Just like the hoax of 9/11. Just like all the other hoaxes perpetrated by those in power. I had to rewrite parts of this book after I learned the truth about the holocaust. Just like I had to rewrite parts of this book after I learned the truth about 9/11. The more you dig for the truth, the more you will find, and the more your understanding of the world will be drastically changed by what you learn. It is brain-dead people who have no Sense of Pure Wonder; who do not want to learn anything new, who are not interested in the truth, who have been programmed to having their facts fed to them by the media and their culture that never learn the truth about anything. Unfortunately, they make up 99.9% of the human population, and unless they wake up and start questioning and searching for the truth: they will remain brainwashed and ignorant and victims of a system which is their enemy, not their friend.

The hoax of the holocaust and the Jews hides the actual truth. The actual truth of WW2 is the exact opposite of the propaganda and historical lies disseminated by the winners . The truth about WW2 is that there was a conscious plan to exterminate the German people; not the Jewish race. It was the Germans who had been slated for slaughter by the Allies and their masters; the Jewish international bankers... not the Jews by the Nazis. The Jews were exempted from this mass ethnic-racial genocide because most of them were not innocent. Only the innocent Jews were slaughtered and sacrificed to the gods of war. Those who are evil are always spared and allowed to live. Only the innocent Jews were killed. The great majority survived because they were all poisoned by the corruption and evil of their own culture. The fact is: it is the Ashkenazi Jews who are the true evil ones of the Jewish world: while the German Nazi's who were the most decent, disciplined, humane industrialized regime that ever held power in the West. The best of humanity was systematically corrupted and destroyed by the worst and most evil humans while the worst of humanity was preserved and the best was destroyed... and the perception of this truth was systematically reversed. This is because the structure of civilization itself is intrinsically evil and reverses the perception of actual truth. You cannot humanize or make more humane, a malevolent system that allows the worst, most foul evil to dominate the highest places of power and systematically crushes and destroys the best of the human species. The truth about the Allies of WW2 is simple and obvious: all of their propaganda was a bunch of lies ALL lies... understand? All the Allies were a bunch of liars. All of their war propaganda was a bunch of lies. Everything they said was a pack of lies. ALL of it. Not just some of it. The entire package of lies, everything printed in their newspapers, everything their govts claimed was all a pack of lies. The truth is right in front you if you bother to look at it with new eyes.

Genocides do exist in history but they are not focused on and they are not called genocide. For instance... before, during, and after the 2nd World War in Russia, then known as the USSR (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics): Stalin's 'Gulag' of concentration death camps existed for fifty years. Stalin's concentration camps ran into the hundreds, not a mere handful. Stalin killed people in these

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

camps by the tens of millions. But... however. Stalin did not lose a war. Hitler did. Stalin did it before, during and after WW2, which he won... and also during peacetime. He did it without any mass media coverage. He did it slyly. He did it secretly. And he did it slowly. And he did not kill all of them outright. He merely slowly worked and starved most of them to death; and brutalized the remaining ones into dying as a way of dehumanizing and terrorizing the entire population of the USSR in order to control them and keep them under control

Read: 'One Day in the Life Of Ivan Denisov' by Alexander Solzhzenitsen. It is a watered-down account, a more humane level of normalized brutality in a Russian death camps than was otherwise normal: thirty years after Stalin had died. There are few living survivors to even begin to tell of the worse horrors that went on in those camps for thirty years while Stalin was still alive. Only after Khrushchev began his anti-Stalin propaganda, were a few lucky survivors allowed to come back to civilization to bear witness; and yet Khrushchev was also a mass murderer as Stalin had been. And then over a period of 50 years... the practice of starvation, killing and sadism and inhumanity began to shrink: as the Camp guards realized that their atrocities might go reported by surviving concentration camp slaves. So the succeeding regimes covered up their tracks by covering up atrocities of the earlier ones.

Has the Western media and culture ever been as horrified by this level of mass butchery and killing as they have been, and still are about the fictitious horrors of Hitler's Nazi regime? No. The Soviet concentration camps were never filmed. No TV cameras ever covered them or exposed them. Stalin's creation: the gulag of mass death and genocide outlived him by thirty years. The system of slave concentration camps in the USSR became a culture, and went on operating; until the country was so poor, they could not be funded anymore by the state. They simply slowly stopped existing. They faded out gradually. By the time the Berlin Wall was pulled down: there were no more concentration slave camps left running in the USSR. There is no dramatic film footage of them being suddenly discovered them with piles of dead bodies. The famous book: 'The Gulag Archipelago' was written by a Russian writer who survived one of those camps. He documented the atrocities in those Siberian camps and published his book. It was a fad best seller. But it was also so boring. It was so full of boring evidence and documentation nobody read it.

So Russia had a huge system of concentration camps... so what? The 60 million who died in these camps were not all one ethnic race. Consequently, legally and semantically: it could not be called racism, or genocide. It was just a systematic way to oppress 330 million people by arresting anyone and everyone for any excuse whatsoever, and putting them into labor camps, and never seeing them again. There was no crisis involved. Solzhenitsyn's book was not exciting. There was no huge war going on. It was a boring read. This is just one more example of how humans are crisis-driven animals. This is just another example of human insanity throughout history. That is how historical facts are twisted and ignored to support whitewashed lies.

Mass killing is easy as long as it is not publicized as such. All you have to do is change one word. Change the term 'concentration camp' to 'labor camp' and suddenly the camps sound fine. Just as the term 'concentration' camp were supposed to be a politically correct phrase for 'concentrating' people into one camp. In Germany, that phrase sounded harmless. Just as the term: 'Gulag' sounds harmless, and 'labor camp' of 'camp for dissidents' sounds innocuous. Even the use of the word 'camp' in this context is a brainwashing obscenity. Camping is supposed to be fun. Only privileged, lucky Children go to 'camp' every summer to have fun. Sending millions of unwanted Jews to a camp? Germans went camping in their beloved woods every chance they got. They wished they could go to a camp; and not be forced to stay in the city and work.

But Stalin's atrocities? No huge drama. No shocking filmed scenes of piles of dead bodies. The concentration camps of the USSR were an organic evolution of the prisoner camps Stalin erected both before and after WWII. They were part of a National Policy, over a period of many regime changes in the USSR... Just like the U.S.'s genocide of their aboriginal natives had been. This way: you can't blame a single ruler, or a single regime, or a single person for it; and demonize them personally. Ergo: the millions Stalin killed and the millions that Khrushchev killed, and the millions all of the Kremlin politicians killed over 50 years; is not a horrible atrocity, or a genocide. Just as the genocide of all the North American Indigenous tribal culture-races and peoples in America is not considered a horrible atrocity.

This is merely one more historical example: demonstrating that the dynamics of all upwardly mobile civilized societies; are based upon human functions of greed, fear, envy, hate and cowardice. Hitler's Germany was the exception to the rule. Even after the mass fire bombing of Dresden: he did not retaliate by killing American prisoners of war. America's Genocide of its Indians succeeded in its objectives. Stalin's genocide succeeded in its objectives. That is the only basic difference between these three attempts. Not what the objectives were. Or how they were done. Or how long it took. Or in just what bullshit category these millions of dead were categorized into. The allies objective was to kill Germans by the millions systematically. Their objectives were obscene and evil and carried out in a completely inhuman detached manner. The bullshit semantic meaning of the word genocide is: it does not matter how many millions you kill: as long as you do not completely wipe out one culture, or race, or religion completely.

Stalin managed to systematically arrest, deport and kill 1/3rd of the Estonian population. Is this called a Genocide? No. Because 2/3rds were left alive. Killing only one third of all the people of one Nation is not a horrible crime like the fictitious genocide of the Jews in Europe by Hitler. Stalin wasn't a racist he was an egalitarian; he killed and deported and assassinated and murdered and sent anyone and everyone... regardless of race, creed or color; into concentration camps. For no reason whatsoever: except to keep the pressure of the pure terror of his oppressive regime in full force while he was alive. Therefore: Stalin was not a racist, and he was not guilty of genocide. Therefore: Stalin cannot be labeled as a genocidal maniac; like Hitler was supposed to be: which is a total lie and complete propaganda. Simply because of how we define modern atrocities in politically correct terms. The American Government and the American White population: killed and shot and raped any and all indigenous North American natives called: Indians... regardless of what race or tribe or culture they were. The American Government cannot be called a bunch of genocidal maniacs either. That makes a lot of sense. They can only be labeled as homicidal maniacs. Not genocidal maniacs. This makes all the difference in the world. Bullshit.

Even more obscene; is the logic that since 3% of America's original inhabitants are still alive today: what America did to the remaining 97% was not genocide....

Hundreds of tribes went extinct during the colonization of America and the expansion into the West. The extermination of each tribe was a separate atrocity. Most of them were never reported or recorded. Each tribe was a separate race, a separate unique religion, and a separate ethnic culture and a separate moral and ethical treasure house of different ways humans could live. But!... since America stereotyped All of these separate cultures into one racist epithet of 'Injun'... None of these atrocities today are considered to be an act of total genocide because 3% survived! How politically correct can you be? How hypocritical can you be?

But now America is paying for leaving this genocide unfinished. Indian Tribes have laid claim to huge areas of land: which they now own like the white man in legal perpetuity. Now they are building gambling casinos to tempt the greedy whites to spend their money. Now they are playing the game of political lobbying and corruption. Now they have been sanctified by the mass culture. Now they cannot be dislodged from their piles of wealth, and are seeking by every means available to increase their own power and wealth.

After one century of a policy of mass genocide, America kept its last remaining token Indians. They found tokenism to be a very good form of acceptable social hypocrisy. As long as 3 % of Indigenous North American Natives were not killed off. As long as they were not completely exterminated. America could not be accused of committing genocide. As long as the slow, gradual genocide of North American natives was not made a major priority: Americans could ignore it, and treat this 97% genocide as merely another minor form of cultural racism and intolerance... Which just happened to be endemic in the particular Government Dept of Indian affairs, and the people who had any power over these matters, and the traders and shop owners who made their money off natives, and the people who lived next to them... er. Not the Americans who had never seen a North American native in their lives..

Oh. Gee. That's just human nature. That's just the exception. I would never do that. Our society never did this on purpose. They just did it as sneakily and underhandedly as possible. It just happened by accident. It was not done directly, or straightforwardly. Only honest, straightforward, truthful killers are evil. Killers and haters who commit evil acts indirectly are not all bad.

As long as Indians went to their concentration camps called reservations peacefully: the American government did not openly attempt to kill all of them off. However the instant Custer lost his battle at Little-Bighorn: there was serious talk of exterminating every North American Native as quickly as possible. However, this one tiny act of resistance turned out to be a flash in the pan. So the talk slowly died down. Americans did not exterminate the last 3% of the Native North Americans.

Because they could afford to ignore them. Because the Indians did not offer any resistance. Because they were winners. Because all Indians were losers. As long as you win: everything you do is all right. Everything you do is rationalized out to be 'good'. Finding an entire continent: and stealing it from its original inhabitants: is perfectly good-right-and-proper. There is nothing wrong about human history. It is what happened. Whatever happened was normal. Whatever happened was perfectly good-right-and-proper. It was meant to happen. It was destiny: manifested as brute force. Manifested in hate fear, racism, killing, butchery, savagery, cowardice and cunning. The Indians lost. The whites won. Any other outcome is unthinkable.

The idea of Indians winning even a single battle: was so unthinkable; that the instant they did win a battle, the whites decided to exterminate them as quickly as possible. The idea of Indians forcing white Americans to go to war against them was unthinkable. Because if White Americans had been forced to go to war against the last surviving members of the Natives who had lived here for thousands of years before they came. They would have been forced to admit to themselves that they were a race of murderers and genocidal maniacs. They would have been forced to admit to themselves that all white Americans were racists. They would have been forced to face the fact that they were stealing the land from the Natives. They would have been forced to face the fact that they were taking the land from its rightful owners. They would have been forced to admit that they were invaders, that they were violators. 100's of years of suppressed guilt and shame, and hate and fear: would have risen up in their gorges, and they would have been forced to choke it all down again. 100's of years of atrocities would have come back to haunt them.

If all the Natives of North America had refused to go to their death willingly. If none of them had allowed themselves to be rounded up. Then America and all white society would have butchered them and killed them so fast: it would have made the insane butchery of Rwanda look like a picnic. The entire series of hundreds of years of genocide: was done as furtively and as cunningly and as sneakily as possible.

The United States never tried to actually consciously exterminate all of its North American indigenous natives. They just achieved it as a convenient side-effect of invading and taking over the entire continent in such huge numbers that they drowned out the native populations by destroying the natural eco-systems they depended on to live and killing them in every sneaky underhanded, secret, undocumented, unrecorded betrayal, murder, ambush they could get away with. The new American brands of racism and hate were much more subtle and abstract than the older, more honest, more direct forms of hatred and racism. America has pioneered the selling of bigotry to the world: wrapped up in so many attractive consumer packages: that they have managed to hide the actual content of their ethics, and bigotry, and racism, and hate: under so many euphemistic, code-words, and semantic distortions: that the English dictionary has become a meaningless thing to them. Simply because the haters and liars have succeeded in changing the definitions of the words and how they are supposed to be used. And forced the entire world to adopt a new politically correct way of speaking. And a new politically correct way of meanings. If you can change the meanings of words as the advertisement industry has learned to do. Then even if people read the truth, and speak the truth: brainwashed people who only speak in politically correct words and phrases, and use these politically correct phrases and words only in politically correct ways: they still succeed in poisoning all truth, all true meanings, all true facts.

How the American government treated their native Indians became normalized. Most people swallowed it, accepted it and never questioned it. They stuck token Wooden Indians in front of every tobacco shop, as a token tribute to the token Myths of their whitewashed, white token white version of history... Er, taken, or stolen history that is... A token is a symbol of something that is taken from something else. If you worship a girl, and she lets you cut off a snip of her hair: you carry the hair next to your heart as a taken token of her love... a gift, a remembrance of the person who you love and hold dear. The wooden Indians represented the extinct red man as it represented the tokens of the tobacco they gave to the first colonists, and taught them how to smoke it, and plant it, and grow it. Tobacco was only one token gift that was given to the white man by American Natives. The token wooden Indian was supposed to be a token of respect and thanks from grateful sellers and buyers of tobacco to the ones who had first given them tobacco. 'The only good Indian is a dead Indian'... Dead wooden Indians in front of tobacco stores; called tokens... holding out their wooden hands for a nickel... because they were only worth a plugged nickel: a wooden nickel made out of cheap wood instead of metal... because by then they had all been plugged, shot in the back; because the only Natives the white colonist Americans ever came into contact with were the ones starving to death standing outside trading posts with their hand out... having been forced to live for a hundred years on Federal handouts... and not understanding how they had been systematically dehumanized and wiped put, or why they were spat on standing there. Americans do not like to be directly reminded of any evil they are actually guilty of.

So the wooden nickels called tokens... created the American phrase: 'Not worth a plugged nickel'. Which symbolized how Americans viewed the original inhabitants of America... as being worthless.

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1027

Plugging them... killing them cost five cents worth of lead; one bullet. The whites despised the Red Indian so much they did not think they were worth five cents. The Wooden Indians stood as Worthless tokens of worthless esteem, standing there as dead spirits in a taken, er, tooken, er, token land... in every town and city... Standing there, and being ignored... Until the gift of Tobacco given to these colonists; became so poisoned by the toxic chemicals they put into it, and by their own greed: that now tobacco has become hated and despised as a cancer-causing addictive drug. When it was once considered to be a healing, sacred plant. Smoked only occasionally to mark sacred and important occasions.

What was given, and what was taken? What was valued, and what became only a worthless token. What was tooken, and what was taken? The word: 'tooken' was widely used by the American colonists. Then it became: taken. The word token was invented. Tokens were used...to hide the truth of a land tooken from others. There is a reason for everything. Now both words: 'tooken', and 'token' are no longer used. Except as tokens of false money. Used in subways and highways for entry into mass transit systems. Only good for one trip. One way. Underground. Hidden.

Who were the first ones to take the land away from other animals? The oldest human ancestors who settled down took it. Read Tolkien's novels. The oldest male hobbit was always called the 'Took;' as a subconscious cultural legacy of the oldest ones of their race who first 'took' the land away from other living things. The habit of living in round rabbit holes... Rabbit-habit-hobbit... took: get it?

What is the American curse? It is the curse of Midas. Everything the Americans touch; becomes worthless. Everything they want: becomes idolized and untouchable. They have a 'golden touch'. Americans have the ability to turn anything they touch into gold. They have the ability to turn anything into an icon. But what does this golden touch do? It turns their music into mediocre garbage. It turns their food into worthless shit. It turns their mass-produced goods into mediocre worthless crap. From a culture of tokenism, it is has now become a cult of pure waste. Everything Americans touch becomes worthless, and is thrown away. For having taken what did not belong to them: they are all being punished by turning their own lives into worthless wastes of energy... ultimately being forced into throwing away everything they work for, and buy.

The American Natives were supposed to walk over the lands they lived-in. They never did. As a result. They never loved the land they lived in. they never loved it enough to fight for it. They had become arrogant, spoiled and lazy and stupid. Originally they had been designed to walk over the most of the land. Their punishment was other walking apes coming in to walk over it. Only the white man did not just walk over the land. He crushed the land, and destroyed it wherever he went. Why is the National passion of Americans the sport of football where teams fight for every yard they gain? Because the free land came too easy. It was stolen too easily. Because Americans never actually fought for their land. Now they symbolically fight for it playing football.

Now these newer walking apes have not only never walked over it: they have laid the land to waste, and destroyed it beyond recognition in a short 300 years... The original American natives paid a heavy historical price for how easily they were conquered and gulled.. What price do you think these new Americans will have to pay?

Or. You can look at it another way. What did the American natives do to America in ten thousand years; before the Europeans came in... compared to what did the European natives did to Europe before they left and came to America? Compare the ecological damage. Then look at what European natives have done to the entire Earth in the last 100 years.

Where do you think the term; 'whitewash' comes from? It comes from washing the white race free of all guilt. Washing all the heirs of white European culture: white. Washing them to be guiltless of the black sins of their past. So it is not their fault that they are born rich, or born into the dominant culture that is the heir of European Colonial Power Prestige and Privilege.

From the hatred of soil. From the hatred of dirt. From the hate of the Red Man. From the hate of the red Army Bolsheviks, the Reds called Communists Hate Red... hatred. From the hatred of reading, the spread of illiteracy, the hatred of books, the love of moving pictures and images. From the phobia for antiseptic dead cleanliness. From the fear of germs. From the belief that all white men are more enlightened than other races. That all other races are dirty, unwashed and full of diseases. That other races are ignorant, barbaric, uneducated and corrupt compared to whites. It comes from the concept of racial enlightenment: or racial enwhitenment. It comes from the idea that nothing any white man does can be wrong, or evil.

That all white cultures, and all white civilizations are good, beneficent, wise, right, etc. The surviving members of this American genocide do not hold any deep racial hatred against being literally wiped off the map. Why? Because the Indians lost. Because whites are still winning. Because the Indian Question is mostly a bureaucratic bother of no interest to most Americans. Majorities quickly get tired of listening to any minority griping and whining about what happened to them in them in the past.

The entire history of the American Colonies, up-to-and-including the War of Independence, was so filled with hate, violence, bloodshed, crimes, atrocities, greed, corruption, and horrible atrocities, that if you read more than one account of the actual facts: you will have to put it down. Because... the individual acts of murder and rape and killing and lying and betrayal are not being committed by some conveniently impersonal Government, or church, or army... they are being committed by the huge majority of American colonist who were alive then. The atrocities and the human ugliness of the War of Independence also happened in America's Westward Expansion. See if you can watch all 6 hours of Ken Burn's docu-drama nonstop: The Winning of the West... without vomiting on what each American actually did. If any of them had done that today: they would be in jail, and sentenced to death.

The basic grudge Americans were in fury over against their Parent: the British Empire: was that they were being refused to go out and settle on land that was only sparsely populated by a bunch of what they considered to be ignorant savages who had no rights to the land they occupied because they had no cultural conception or perception of personal property being more sacred than human life. They did not understand the concept of European ownership, or the idea of European hypocrisy, and the European custom of lying through your teeth to get something you want. These culturally ignorant, uncivilized people had no business even being there since they did not know how to exploit and destroy the land as destructively as the Europeans did.

Every worthless drunkard and fool in the 13 colonies at that time was convinced by greedy racists and hate-mongers such as Samuel Adams that these Indians had no right to the land they had lived on for thousands of years. This was the political propaganda that was used to justify what white European colonists did. It was used as an all-encompassing excuse, for every and any crime the whites decided to do against native North Americans. Adams was a rich Brewer whose father had lost all of his fortune for him. Infuriated that his father had squandered all of the wealth he was supposed to have after his father died: he simply switched his hatred of his own holy father; to the unholy savages that were blocking him, and all other American Colonists from becoming instantly wealthy again. The entire war was fought by less than 5% of its population; only those idiots, the most brainwashed of the brainwashed enlisted. It was not a national uprising: it was the complete opposite; a tiny minority of the wealthiest aristocrats with their rag-tage militia of imbeciles who were duped fools: not paid, used, ignored, treated like dirt; the typical attitude English culture had for centuries transplanted into the New World in order to set up a new tyranny of aristocrats.

Since it was forbidden to hate your elders and parents: he deflected the hatred he felt for his father, and projected his hate onto the Indians. A very convenient way of being righteously angry about the fact that he was not rich. So he sought to reclaim his lost fortune from the Indians, instead of from his dead father. It took years of the landed gentry propping up lower class public figures like Adams, to turn the idea of rebellion into a popular cause. They themselves never entered the filthy swill holes Adams sat in; hatching his plots, and declaiming his hate. They simply saw him as a convenient pawn to be used for their purposes of getting rid of the Proclamation Line. This was how the basic unspoken basis of the American Revolution was finally hatched. The right to be greedy. And only later, was it translated into the token rights of liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. But basically means the right to make money any way you can.

Because there was so much unclaimed land at that time on the continent: that even the rich could not hope to exploit all of it by themselves. So they let even the poorest white male colonist be brainwashed with their own elitist, sick culture of pure greed. For almost the only time in human history... rich and poor had a common cause. Both wanted to become richer. Before the Industrial Revolution: what living examples and role models were there of poor men becoming rich? One in ten million. Once in a century. One man in a city. One conquering army in a land of raped, robbed, burned, sacked cities. One rich elite becoming richer than a handful of a privileged few. But never the poor.

Before the Protestant Reformation... the idea, the concept, the possibility... of a poor white man becoming rich: literally did not exist.

Before the creation of the United States of America... the idea, the notion, the concept... that literally every white man had a God-given right to become rich had never existed in the imagination of any human mind.

The United States of America became united for only one reason... the white colonists became United into a common State of Amalgamated Greed and the ruthless ambitious drive of Upward Mobility.

How can you keep indentured servants slaving for years on your land: when they can run off to live and work their own land? The American aristocracy had no choice, but to let the lower classes have a nominal degree of citizenship. They did not do it out of the largeness of their hearts. They were forced to do it out of the unspoiled vastness of the land they lived-on. How can you control a servant population: when there are millions of untouched acres of land they can disappear into? Answer: make all servants and slaves identifiable by their skin color. You can't tell the difference between a white man that is free and one that is an indentured slave. But you can tell the difference between a white man and a black man when blacks are kept in chains and brutalized and dehumanized and not allowed to earn their freedom; they stick out like sore thumbs and can be tracked by the smell of fear emanating from their sweat.

But... Most English Colonists wanted nothing to do with these extremists. This is conveniently glossed over in every history book today. Most American Colonists considered themselves Loyal English Subjects. And would have hung anyone who spoke publicly of treason. The American War was filled with so much inter-family racial hatred that no historian dares speak of the true vileness of what went on as brothers and sisters, fathers and mothers killed each other, hated each other, and burned each other's houses, and stole each other's properties. Even the Governor of Massachusetts whose wife betrayed the British cause and became a spy for the colonists. He did not kill her for that treason. He sent her to England as punishment: and never spoke to her again.

It was the bloodiest war the Americans ever fought. More people were killed per-capita than during their Civil War later on; and all their other Wars combined. The winners got rich immediately... stealing all of the Loyalists wealth, and sending those not killed to the worst places they could find. The French Loyalists were sent to the most barren reaches of the Spanish Colony, the English Loyalists were sent to the most barren coasts of the French colony... simply out of meanness.

How Was America Born? George Washington was at least honest when he was younger; he openly admitted that he wanted to become the richest person in all the Colonies. He did it by marrying one of the ugliest, wealthiest widows in Virginia, and maneuvering every political and military power he could to fight against the unfair taxation by England. In the end; he succeeded in his goal. Washington after the War of Independence got richer and richer. And more famous, and more famous. It was an uprising of an elite clique of colonial snobs against the worse aristocratic snobs of England. It was one up-and-coming elite snobbery rebelling against another, older, more stupid bunch of prigs and snobs. It was a fought over an excuse. It was fought because the American rich elite snobs were insulted at how the English snobs treated them.

The picayune tax that was the supposed excuse for instigating the entire War did not touch the wealthy at all. But the American Rich had already begun to realize how they could easily get rich quick without lifting a finger... simply by taxing their own poor people into penury. The idea of their Mother Country taxing their American poor was so appalling, and insulting; it struck them at the core of their own avarice. The War of Independence was nakedly fought over the right of taxation... or more accurately: who would get rich off taxation of the poor. The American landed gentry, or the English landed gentry. It was fought because of money and greed: period.

America was created by the greediest, richest people in America coming together with the greediest scum of the lower classes; and won their War of Independence only because they were fighting for slightly more corrupt reasons than the English.

John Adams was a poor Lawyer before the war began. Not to be confused with Samuel Adams the brewer. He was one of the few politicians who refused to fill his pockets while in public office. As a result; he became the most universally maligned and hated politician in the colonies by the rich and powerful planters. Simply because he was not as corrupt and as greedy as others. Benjamin Franklin was just as much of a money-grubber as the others. He even wanted to start his own colony. At that time: he still believed in the old English myth of getting rich by selling shares in an undeveloped colony to investors who were supposed to get rich later, while he walked off with the profits before they could find out it was a scam.

But the Americans were not as stupid as their English Peers were 150 yeas ago. They already knew first-hand how hard it was to begin a colony, and how long it took to make any money from it. So he tried to sell his idea overseas. But the British did not bite. They had learned that lesson over a century before. He left the colonies because he had already made his fortune from printing. He became a rich provincial seeking to move up the social ladder of England's Aristocracy. When the British aristocracy snubbed him and threw him out of England on his ear: he suddenly conveniently became a patriotic colonist again. His entire life was all about the ruthless ambition of upward mobility, status, social advancement and money: nothing else. Conquering the colonies: he became the darling of the scientific elite. After the English aristocrats shunned him: he wooed the French aristocrats and finally gained his ultimate social notoriety. Portraying himself as a 'natural man' from the frontiers of America. One of the biggest, laughable hypocrisies of successful bullshit advertising fads ever invented. The first American fad, the first American pop-star, the first American advertising campaign. The first selling of America as a total lie overseas.

The War of Independence was fought over money. The American Constitution sanctifies property right over human rights. The American civil war was fought over the idea of humans being property. The American English colonies were founded by the motivation of greed. What surprise is it; that the United States of America is now the bastion of money and greed? What surprise is it that America is now largely owned and controlled by absentee-owners called corporations; whose headquarters are somewhere else, or across the sea?

The original owners of these colonies never visited their holdings in America. That was how the colonies were founded in the first place. They had taskmasters and accountants and overseers take that difficult, long voyage for them. Why are the male bastions of power in the boardrooms of American corporations so totally insulated from their own workers and customers? What surprise was it, that the original indentured servants working for their greedy masters in America, quit and ran away? Refusing to pay back their unfair indenture-loan... which was only a crude, obvious form of indentured-wage-slave servitude? So obviously unfair; that the servants knew they were being ripped-off and resented it fiercely. Why do you think the history of owner-worker relations has been so full of hate and selfishness and stupidity and blindness? The causality of history is not hard to understand if you look for the truth and try to connect truths. Read History. Look at all the lessons that were not learned. And you will see the exact same stupidities being committed today.

And you wonder where the tradition of Americans never being fiscally responsible with their personal debts, or national debts comes from? And you wonder where the American tradition of skipping work, and phoning in sick came from?

The original European settlers: these tiny, religious puritanical sects from Europe: had no time for even their own religions; because they were in constant debt to their absentee-owners. Most of the first American colonies were all established as debt colonies... And most of them died, failed or never got out of debt.

Is it any wonder that today, America is the land of debt, and greed, and profit... and toadyism? People toadying up to the highest authority figures in slavish reverence and obedience? Since they all slavishly worshipped and revered their Kings and Mother countries: who had ostracized them, thrown them away. That is, until their King dared to cut too into their own profits. Then they rebelled. The entire American Revolution was a rebellion over profit.. Money. Greed. Read the facts. Read between the lines about what really happened, and not what historians say, or think. Try interpreting what actually happened without anyone else's interpretation fogging up the facts.

Compare the level of human greed historically. Look at the history of gold mining. For ten thousands

1031

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1032

of years: gold mines were controlled and mined only by those in power. Only Kings and rulers had the power and the right to mine gold.

Then America let anyone who wanted to: mine for gold. The lure of instant riches spread like wildfire all over the world. The level of mass-greed rose. The insane frenzy of the Gold Rush happened. Greed swept over the entire world like lightning. The culture of pure greed was no longer reserved for only the rich, and Kings, and rulers. It became acceptable for the poorest, lowest, most ignorant, brutes and ruffians to be as openly greedy as the richest robber Baron. Greed became not only socially acceptable as a norm: people actually became proud of being greedy. The people of America became addicted to this unspoken worship, and became proud of being greediest and richest Nation on Earth.

This created a culture of the lowest, most corrupt human equality possible: the equality of greed, the worship of greed. Greed was openly, publicly, Nationally and Governmentally supported by the American elite. Their highest human public morality became a morality of self-gratification. Self-gratification was openly, publicly and Governmentally supported by the American elite.

When did the American gold rush happen? Right on the heels of the great American land rush. Right on the heels of America allowing their lowest classes to own land. The American West was special in that way. For the first time in human history: the poorest of the poor were able to own land... and become miniature Robber Barons themselves. This was the famous lawlessness of the American. Nowhere in human history was there ever more killing, stealing, murders and atrocities... by individuals. Not by armies.

After that: the greed for land, for gold, for money, for power: hit the human species like a tidal wave. Ever since America's westward expansion: the American West: and its culture of pure greed, has been washing over the Earth and drowning out everything else in its path. The American culture of mass self-gratification, has been washing over the world ever since. Instead of self-gratification being reserved only for the rich elite: it became a god-given right for the poor also,... to pursue, but never reach; to chase after but never attain, to slave for but never achieve, to hope for but be robbed of their hopes to dream for and obsess over, but never to attain it, to envy the few rich billionaires and wish they could be as filthy rich as they are. .

During the 1800's and 1900's: Americans needed drugs. Tobacco, coffee, salt and sugar were not enough. Alcohol. Opium. Cocaine. Benzedrine. Cigarettes. Smelling salts, snuff. Chewing tobacco. Meat by the ton. Corn by the ton. Poisonous Elixirs and Potions filled with mercury and deadly spices; sold by charlatans and quacks... to a Nation that used everything it could swallow as a drug to deaden its awareness. These newer chemical forms of self-gratification were needed as an extra layer of numbness. The masses had become even more corrupt than they were before. The mass-norms of mass-greed and mass-hate and mass-fear and mass-self-gratification had risen. And with it: the norms of mass denial, mass-hypocrisy, mass numbness, mass non-awareness, mass stupidity, mass ignorance, mass-brainwashing, mass-propaganda, mass-culture, mass-addictions, and mass ill-health rose to balance the growing sickness of civilized Americans.

What has American addiction to narcotics done to third world countries that supply America with its legal and illegal drugs? Look at Columbia. An infestation of Robber Baron cultures on all levels of its entire society. Robber Barons attacking Robber Barons, fighting over money. Para-military groups, insurgency groups, Left-Wing groups, the entire National Government: infested with drug money, assassination, violence, killing, greed, treachery, bribery, and mass corruption. Until there are so many Robber Barons killing and fighting each other: that the instant an ordinary citizen raises their voice: they are killed. The instant an honest politician tries to get elected: they are killed. The instant anyone who is not corrupt tries to get into the act: they are killed. The entire Nation has succumbed to a level of corruption reminiscent of the fight for power in the Soviet Union after Lenin was killed. He was healthy as a horse, and was poisoned by his enemies. Something historians still do not suspect even to this day. This is the obvious backlash of positive feedback. You want to kill? You will only get more killing. You want to lie and steal and cheat? You will only get more lying, stealing, and cheating. You want to oppress the drug traffickers? They will only oppress you ten times worse. You want to take over their lands for no reason except to attain power? The drug trade will corrupt you just as badly as it corrupted the traffickers.

Where did American colonists come from? England. Read English literature and history. Read the truth about their vaunted parliamentary system and democracy. Read how English nobles owned entire villages; lock, stock and barrel... including all the human chattel living inside them.

Read how the English Aristocracy left its commoners to rot for four hundred years under the hypocrisy called a democratic representative system. Read the Magna Carta. Where a few rich Burgers gained a few rights. And then read about the Hundred Years War, and the War of the Roses, and all the other wars. As the English elite killed each other, hated each other, raped and stole and connived and lied and did every underhanded trick ever invented, and invented some more evils that never existed. While using their lower classes as fodder and treating them as slaves and material possessions and servants.

But you will only uncover one millionth of the evil and filth that was English culture in those days. History books have whitewashed nearly all of the truth out of their accounting what actually happened, why it happened, and how it actually happened. Merely the litany of wars... the unending killing and hate that is English History, boggles the mind. There are so many racial, religious, ethnic genocides, hatreds, racisms, wars, battles, treacheries, betrayals... Everyone hated them. The Scots, the Welsh, the Irish, the French, the Spanish, the Dutch, the Germans hated them. And they hated everyone else back. They hated each other. There are so many camps of hatred, so many cliques of one group of English elite hating others. They hated each other for the most insane reasons.

But what is covered up, and what is never written of in English history books. Is the hatred each class had for all the other classes. England was a microcosm of European class hatred: only it was a more intense hatred. The castes and classes hated each other. They feared and mistrusted each other. This leaks out from all English personal accounts and fictions and legends. Highwaymen robbing the rich. Farmers poaching noble forests. Smugglers selling forbidden drugs to the rich. The corruptions of the clergy. The corruptions of the landed gentry. The misery of the poor. The drunkenness and squalor of the lower class. The cowering servitude of the peasants. The rapacity of their merchant class. Endlessly fighting and warring with their immediate neighbors: Ireland, Scotland, Wales, and France, and Holland. Their addiction to beef and ale. Their addiction to meat, killing and drunkenness.

Where did Protestant Colonialism come from?

It came from Dutch and Portuguese envy, greed and hate. It came from the poisonous mix of the religious-ethnic-cultural-national racist hatred that all Europeans had for each other. From greedy Protestant countries watching Catholic Portugal and Spain instantly becoming filthy rich from their colonial Empires.... Without working for it.

Where did English Colonialism come from?

It came from watching the Dutch, and other smaller maritime Nations of Europe; becoming filthy rich from their overseas Colonial Empires.

Why do you think we call anything that blocks the natural energy of water, a DAM? Because any blockage of flowing energy is a damnation of pure evil. Because all Nations that create dams are Dammed to Hell for their destructiveness. Because any human who does it, is damned to the hell in being responsible for destroying millions and billions of living things. Humans who dam rivers are damned to witness what they did. Dammed to facing the enormous destruction and death they are guilty of. The Dutch Dammed themselves for stealing land from the ocean, and called their cities and towns 'rotten dams', or 'Rotterdam'.

To this day: the Dutch damn themselves, calling themselves the 'Goddamned Dutch' proudly in public: 'I am a Dammed Dutchman'. They have spewed the word: 'Verdammt' for centuries as a curse, as an obscenity, and finally as a cultural colloquialism. They invented the habit of cursing in public without being hung for it, or put into stocks for using such foul language. And what did they use their hard-earned new lands for? Growing muck potatoes in ocean mud. Selling them to their own starving countrymen, Selling them to the rich burghers, who then ate them and sold the excess to the poorest, lowest, oppressed Dutch rabble. Who had no land, no master and no church to care for them or oppress them. Who simply starved to death as unwanted, excess population. While the Dutch Burgomasters ate fat and became gouty, venal, rosy-cheeked monsters with huge bellies. Smoking the latest drug called tobacco after huge meals of dead meat.

The true origins of European dam building are full of human horror. The true origin of the Protestant middle class in Europe is a hidden obscenity. The Protestants damned themselves for evil reasons. The Dutch Protestants were trying to dam in their own dammed greed for land. Until it burst out into small, dammed colonies... that were flooded later, by starving, poor Europeans: seeking to escape the potato famines. The potato: which Holland and the Netherlands had invented as a staple slave food for the abysmally poor. A starvation food grown originally only for the poorest slaves.

Why were the Dutch damned? They were damned for inventing the worst, most obscene poverty: right in the middle of thousands of the richest burghers in Europe, and the most affluent society ever created. The Dutch were the first rich middle class Nation in the world in its time. They invented new, worse forms of human degradation. They invented a new kind of greed-envy that was so poisonous: people lived their whole lives obsessed that another burgher had more than they had. Or better silver candlesticks, or a nicer piece of mahogany furniture. They ate themselves to death over it. These Dutch filth ate themselves to death. They became as fat as possible. Living in perpetual miserable unhappiness and frustrated rage... eating their hearts out in envy; whenever they saw anyone who had anything better than they had. They became human ants. Driven blindly by chemical signals and chemical drugs. Just like all ants work themselves to death without ever stopping to rest, or relax or have fun; the Dutch worked themselves to death.

They invented greed on an unheard of level of mass normality, as a cultural norm of the masses. Dutch potato farmers worked their own children to death. They sold their own children off as chattel slaves when their potato bins did not have enough extra potatoes to make a profit that year. They preferred profit to their own children. Because their own children would eat their profits away in the winter and leave them poorer than they were the year before. They treated their children like slaves and drove them away. Their own children could not stand their parents any more: even though blindly and stupidly, as poor, ignorant, powerless victims: they were still brainwashed and programmed to 'love' their parents. The Dutch destroyed their own children as cunningly and as secretly and as fast as they could in many ways.

The Dutch invented a new form of starvation. Voluntary Starvation. Starving themselves in the midst of plenty. Just so they would not eat into their own potato profits for the next year. Turning food into money as a vehicle of upward mobility. Ancient Roman senators did this with their slave farms called latifundia. Egyptian Pharaohs did it also. The masters did it: not the slaves. The Dutch were the first to do it as an entire ethnic nation of upwardly rising slaves; and raised this form of greed to a new, higher, worse cultural level of insane, crazed mass psychosis that existed on an unconscious level, a subconscious level... an unspoken level so deep, it is still with us.

They invented a new, higher, worse form of wage slavery. Paying their own servants starvation wages for a years work. So their paid servants could never afford to marry or have a house of their own. Just to make sure people beneath them could never rise above them. This Dutch custom is now spread worldwide as a sanctified form of honorable, just, and fair Capitalistic employment practices.

They invented a new, higher, worse form of obesity. They stuffed themselves with so much food and shit: that they became a huge, rotund, layered, insulated, fat, greedy pigs. They invented new, higher, worse kinds of food addiction and drugs. Salt, sugar, animal fat, tobacco, snuff, coffee, chocolate, alcohol, spices, etc... Which later became the staple drug-foods of all European cultures, and then all America, and then all the world.

They raised the addiction to meat to a new unheard-of level. Starving to death in the middle of plenty in a new bountiful land of the New World; only because they could find no animals to kill... no meat to eat. Meet animal. Kill it. Eat meat. Eat all animals you meet... Get it? Then once the animals realize you are nothing but a dirty meat-eating killer and they all disappear from your area: you starve to death. This was the exact same fate all the native hunting tribes suffered over and over for thousands of years.

Modern American and Europeans still believe that if they do not eat enough dead meat: they will die and become weak and unhealthy. They began the entire worldwide addiction of killing animals for meat, and invented the modern meat based diet; where people eat more dead meat than anything else.

They created this unheard of human degradation; out of the first middle class to attain power over its own elite. The insanity of this new Lutheran upward mobility; drove the entire Dutch Nation into personal acts of greed and selfishness. They became individual Robber Barons: each driven into personal acts of selfishness and greed. Their personal histories are so abysmal and disgusting: that history never speaks of what they did to each other and to their own poor and powerless.

They were only the latest wave of damnation in their time to come out of Europe. They came from the damnation that all Protestant Lutherans had been practicing and developing ever since they got any personal wealth and power. All Christians in Europe during the Dark Ages were Damned to Hell, for the sin of blocking the flow of their own life-energies. And for blocking all healthy energy around them. Humans who dam and block their own energy-flows; are damned and doomed to suffer the consequences of unhappiness and misery. Humans who dam the energy of others are doubly Damned to Hell for their evil. Damming, and Damnation is the same thing. Every dammed Nation that profits from its damming of flowing energy is damned to Damnation for their sins.

Do you think the Myth of the flying Dutchman is a fairytale? Lost Dutchmen, forever lost on a sea that is ripping them so they never come out of the perpetual storm. Crazy by their greed to go sailing across the oceans to find riches, and damned for it by all the forces of Nature. Cursed never to find land. Never to find peace.

Then why in the year 2000: does a 70-year-old modern Dutch sea captain let himself be persuaded by his own company to come out of retirement and keep on sailing his ship until he dies at the helm? Why doesn't that old sea captain want to live on land? Why don't Dutch people want to stay in their own country? Why do you find them wandering all over the world?

Because the Dutch have been cursed with their own greed, their own wanderlust, their own lust for wealth? Or because they are a lost people. Lost. Without any moorings, or culture to tell them what is right and what is wrong. Cursed by their own culture: that does not admit there is such a thing as Good or Evil. In Holland: everything is allowed. Drugs and prostitution are legalized in Antwerp. Morals and ethics are a matter of pure convenience.

Why is the biggest ocean port in the world; the Dutch port of Rotterdam? Because that port was, and still is: the main port from which all rotten European culture was exported out in to the world? Or because it was and still is the main port that sucks in more wealth and riches from all over the world for the benefit of the rich Europeans, and the Dutch make a killing off this trade. It is the biggest most rotten example of exporting and importing Capitalistic trade and greed in Europe. It has exported the rotten ethic of Capitalism more than any other port. Rotterdam is the main dam that dams up all of the wealth of the world and keeps it in Europe. Dammed up and accumulated wealth for centuries... by the Dutch habit of damming and saving and accumulating. The Dutch believe implicitly that accumulation is a good thing: as long as it is good for you personally: not for anyone else.

Today in civilization: dams are considered to be normal; they are not Damned. They are considered not only to be good, but huge, necessary glorified engines; creating the one-sided advantages of power for billions of humans; so we can overpopulate the Earth with more billions of humans, and build more dams, and all be damned to hell for our destruction of Nature and all the Living things on Earth we need... in order to exist at all. Destroying the base of their own survival systems as fast as possible. Destroying the entire Earth as fast as we can. And hiding it as fast as we can from our blind, stupid, brainwashed tool-slaves... whom we hire: to do our dirty work for us.

This is the modern form of slavery. An even sneakier, more cunning form. So human slaves do not even realize they are slaves. And do not want to admit it.

What is a brand? It is a mark of ownership. People walk around with brand names on their clothes: branding them as being owned by named corporations. And the idiots are proud of it. Walking around proudly proclaiming to all the world that they are owned by certain named corporation.

That is how stupid and blind consumers are to how much they have become enslaved by their addiction to the brand-names of consumer products. They become branded cattle: owned by the brands they buy. Once you become addicted to a certain brand name product. Then that product owns you... You don't own it. You do not own that fucking corporation. That fucking corporation owns you. And uses you, and makes a profit from you. You don't make a fucking profit from the corporation whose fucking brand you wear as a mark of shame, as a branded consumer slave.

Read history. Domesticated cattle are branded. As owned meat to be killed and butchered by their owners for a profit in meat packing plants. And you are proud of being branded? Now consumers have so little inner self-identity. Their lives are so empty, and meaningless: the only fucking way they can feel unique is by branding themselves with the labels of branded names on their clothes, and branded tattoos on their skin.

The first European Corporations were Dutch. They branded their caskets and barrels with their Dutch logos. Then they branded their mass-produced products; as being made, and owned by them so these branded products could not be stolen by someone else and sold illegally. Then they branded the buyers of their products: as suckers: with marks of shame. Now billions of humans walk around proudly as branded suckers: owned by the corporations that are milking them dry and using them as consumer sucker-slaves...

Try telling this to an affluent consumer. Their smugness and arrogance will and ignorance will be unshaken, they will laugh at the unpleasant idea that they are actually nothing more than branded slaves and branded suckers, and that they are actually owned by the corporations they think they use to gratify themselves by, and buy from because they believe in the religion of the majority. If everyone does it: it can't be wrong or bad.

However: this is precisely what all these billions of branded suckers are: consumer slaves: addicted and enslaved to the false self-gratification and ego-gratification they get from using and wearing brand-name products. And why do all consumers laugh about this? Because conspicuous excess consumption is the trademark of being a member of an upper class privileged elite.

There are understandable reasons for everything.

What has modern technology made from the Protestant Work Ethic? It has grown it from the root culture of Medieval Europe into an insane monster.

Instead of the Gutenberg Press being one printer who became powerful because it could print the written words clearly.

Everyone has become their own printer, now everyone has their own personal print machine..

Instead of a few shops in France and Holland becoming affluent by the buying and selling goods:

Everyone has become a buyer and seller on E-bay.

Instead of Luther revolutionizing Europe with his 95 criticisms of the church, called thesis, by posting them on the front door of his church:

Everybody today with a computer is posting criticisms called blogs on Internet forums.

What once worked in small exclusive privileged European societies... does not work in a modern mass society made up of millions and billions of people instead of hundreds and thousands of people.

1 billion printers with print machines cannot find 10,000 readers per printer to make that printer famous, well known and a celebrity.

500 million people buying and selling goods on the internet cannot make even 20% of them rich and well off.

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

500 million people posting their personal 'blogs' on the Internet cannot find any readers who agree with them: much less anyone to help turn their criticisms into positive action. Hell: the millions who post their personal blogs and rant on the Internet about personal criticisms don't even have a social conscience. They don't even have the energy to get off their asses and leave their computers: never mind getting up and standing for something actively and becoming actively involved in human society. One billion people sitting at computers: cannot get together en masse and become an interconnected living human society that develops enough energy to change the way its own society is structured. The word itself: 'Internet' is the biggest lie ever invented. The internet had fractionalized and fractured human society beyond recognition. It has done the opposite of connecting humans into a web: it has isolated humans from each other. The Internet has alienated people from their own society faster and more destructively than any other technological brainwashing horror before it.

This is the insanity of human normality: when it is allowed to grow organically, without control, out of control, blindly, mindlessly. This is why human unawareness is evil. This is why Normality is evil: everything you take for granted... you become a victim of.

Western culture has taken for granted the unspoken fact that it grows larger every second. European Western culture has taken this unspoken fact for granted for 500 fucking years. The culture of the Protestant work ethic has taken this fact for granted for 500 fucking years... Now it is drowning in that fact, and even as western affluence is drowning in its own numbers and being destroyed by its own insane growth: it still refuses to even look at the problem of unlimited growth. Even though every intelligent human being on this earth will admit intellectually that you cannot have unlimited growth with a limited amount of natural resources to draw upon.... No human being on this planet wants to face this problem or address it. This false assumption has become too normal, it has become too assumed. too unspoken. it has been pushed under the carpet for too many hundreds of years.

If you read History with a critical awareness. If you read it with a Sense of Pure Wonder. If you try to connect the facts. You will find countless examples of atrocities. Huge massacres, huge injustices; detailed and described in history books and films. And over and over, you will hear thin... venal, weak, excuses trying to explain away why they happened. These attempted explanations simply do not make any sense. Historians will give you some carefully selective facts and details. But they will never connect the actual facts for you. Nor will they publish and list the actual damning facts, which they selectively omit from their whitewashed, homogenized versions of the past.

No historian dares tell of the real reasons for all this inhumanity. No historian dares to say it in public. If they did: they would be blackballed and crucified and attacked. But if you read history for yourself, you will find such a convoluted series of cover-ups and lies and propaganda and misleading interpretations and half-truths... that finding the truth of what actually happened and why; becomes almost impossible.

Unless you try to connect the facts, and not take anyone's word for anything... including any interpretations in this book.

What has this obsession with spending one's life working done to humans? It has created dysfunctional families; where the parents spend more of their time working, rather than looking after and loving their children and helping them to grow up properly. It has turned humans into emotional cripples... love-starved all of their lives... on an instinctual level, a subconscious level, and a conscious level so deep; that most people are not even aware of it.

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

What has that done to Nations that created, and absorbed the modern Protestant Ethic notion of work becoming more sacred than love? It made them industrialized giants of industry... It has turned them into producing a glut of consumer items. It has turned consumerism into a normal way of life... consuming all of the mindless work-glut that the protestant work-ethic spawned. It has created an insane world capitalistic vicious cycle.

Work. Work. Work... Produce. Produce. Produce. Buy. Buy. Buy. More work. More consumer items. Making you happier? Your life easier? More selling. More buying. Basically.... Buying things is a way of replacing all pleasure-ease-love of an empty loveless over-easy, boring civilized lifestyle with material possessions. It has turned spectators into alienated, uninvolved pawns; who are exploited and manipulated on a mass level. Pawns for whom; distraction and entertainment replace love and excitement and living.

What is Modern Western culture, but an amalgamation of the old Robber Baron Culture and the newer Protestant Work Ethic? Now in America: it is not only the Robber Barons who have their castles. Now every man in America wants his own castle, his own home, his own house. 'Every Man's Home is his Castle.' Where he can do as he pleases. Where he is King. Where every man is King in his own owned Home. Where each family living in each castle hides all of the secrets of child abuse and neglect behind closed doors. Where nobody is allowed to tell anyone how to raise their children. Where nobody tells him what to do. That is the cultural idiocy of American token equality. Where every man is supposed to be a King...

Then where are the servants?

Where are the slaves?

Make machines your servants. As long as you have someone or something under you, you deceive yourself into believing you're a master, not a slave; you're a King not a peasant. Every King must have machine slaves to do his bidding. Too many Kings and not enough slaves. Import poor immigrants to work as servants, and wage-slaves. Have machines and poor immigrants and the lower classes; fill the role of that oppressed peasants filled in Europe. Have machines supply them with mass entertainments.

Why is fast food exploding so fast today as a consumer market? Food is replacing love. If a consumer wants to feel good: they do not try to find love. That is difficult, it requires hard challenges and hard choices. Love requires commitment, self-sacrifice, kindness, sensitivity... etc. Fast food does not even require the inconvenience of cooking. So rather than buy your own food and do your own cooking... go to a fast food outlet... eat something that is fattening... That makes you feel glutted with something in your stomach. But how close is a feeling of emptiness in your heart, connected to a feeling of emptiness in your stomach?

Can you separate these two feelings of emptiness inside you? If your entire guts feel empty... if your entire guts are in pain... what are you really hungry for? If you are not connected to the pain in your guts: might you be mistaking a lack of love in your life, and turn it into a feeling of hunger to fill-full-deaden- numb, the sensation of painful emptiness in your stomach instead? By having a temporary feeling of fullness in your stomach: can that temporary feeling of false fullness fool other sensations in your own body into feeling that you are not emotionally, spiritually, ethically and morally empty inside?

Food has been synonymous with hospitality and love ever since humans cared about each other enough to share their food with other's less fortunate than they were. The American tradition of thanksgiving is a good example. Now; it has been commercialized into pure gluttony, with no love or hospitality, except your own exclusive family or friends... and there, what love is shown at all? Seeing each other once or twice a year just to stuff yourselves with food instead of love?

Originally; European holidays were special times of plenty. Before industrialization: most people were hungry more often than they were full. Holidays were a special treat; a chance to eat your fill... only once a year. Not every day of your damn life!

Once: people saved up their food for these special occasions. They killed fatted calves and animals; just so they could gorge themselves only once a year; on dead meat. Now; this tradition has completely lost all of its original slight, spontaneity and slight loving generosity. Gluttony, and the nauseating excess of too much food; is now the standard norm in all rich countries today. Today: food is mixed slightly with love mostly in poor families, poor countries and poor cultures. Once they get too rich... the cultural sacredness of food is automatically lost, and it becomes taken for granted. Then food replaces love completely. Then you get consumers loving their food, and their cars, and their houses: more than they love other people.

To give you an example of how the human subconscious leaks into the conscious mind. What has modern gluttony created? A fast food Industry. For thousands of years...Fasting meant starvation. Now the meaning of this word has been utterly and completely reversed. Now this word means the gluttonous greed of eating grease-filled foods. This is how the conscious mind tries to whitewash the truth leaking from the subconscious: by changing the original meaning of words. By reversing their meanings, and turning white into black, black into white, good into evil, evil into good. By hiding their original truths and meanings. Covering up their sins by forcing others to share in them. Making their sins popular. Making them normal. So the masses get used to it.

‘Hey... If everyone does it... if most people do it... why then it can't be all bad.’

Fasting food was special because after a long fast: people saved up special food to break their fast with. It had more fat. Most people went to bed every night hungry, with empty stomachs. Now people eat fasting food. Without ever fasting. Why? To fill up an inner emptiness. That has nothing to do with food. Food is one replacement civilization has found for Love, Fun, Creativity, Wonder and a Healthy Lifestyle. Because that is what civilization has destroyed. Civilization just filled up the vacuum it created with the worst shit possible. Instead of filling your heart with love: you are supposed to fill up your stomach with food. The worst, most unhealthy food possible. Fast food is the opposite of fasting food. Fasting food was eaten as a sacred ritual of thanks. It was eaten only on special occasions. Now people eat fast food because they are such a rush: they do not give a shit what it is, or how it was prepared, or where it came from. As long as it fills up the gnawing emptiness inside their guts.

The modern semantic meaning of ‘fast’ comes from people fasting for days and weeks... while working and exercising harder than they did before. They found that they lost fat. They became slim, lean, quick, efficient. They did things faster. They could run faster. They were lighter. It was a combination of many kinds of hardship. Not just one aspect. Not just their diet that made them lose weight and become faster.

The Protestant Work Ethic is only one of the most recent cultural developments of civilization. It has successfully turned humans into more dehumanized, abstracted tool-slaves. It has forced humans to live in their minds, and ignore the needs of their bodies... except to grab some fast food when they are too busy to eat. The historical repercussions of the Protestant Work Ethic have now spread out all over the planet. But try and explain this history to a civilized human who thinks working, and eating fast food is normal.

Try and logically explain to any National Government today; that the Ethic and idea of going to work everyday; is evil. Try and explain logically to any corporation or business today; that mindless mechanical work is evil. And see how far you get: before they laugh at you and show you the door.

By destroying all of the older traditions it was once based upon: Modern Global Capitalism is now destroying its own rotten roots. It is consuming itself and destroying itself:. It is even destroying its most basic principle of the old Protestant Work Ethic it was once based on. The religion of people selfishly working only for themselves.. or working only for their own families and not for any greater community.

Now... modern wage slaves are not supposed to work for themselves... they are supposed to work only for corporations that hire them. And Modern Capitalism has fast destroyed even this new temporary religion of corporate selfishness. Corporate Capitalism has managed to destroy nearly all job-security in the labor-pool of employees who work for them.

Meanwhile: Big Government, and Big Business: is trying to kill off all small businesses: by making it increasingly more difficult, and more expensive to start up any small business from scratch. By introducing more and more regulations and controls and costs for anyone trying to start their own business period. By giving nearly all advantages and privileges to Big Business instead of small businesses. While at the same time: Big Business is trying to suppress and poison any and all cultures where people think for themselves, and like being self-sufficient, and independent.

If you do not work for yourself: you cannot think for yourself. If you do not work for yourself: you do not have the time, the energy, the authority or the necessary self-esteem to challenge any other higher authority.

As long as you are a wage slave: you will never be a threat to the Robber Barons of this world. You will work for them. And shut your mouth, and not rock the boat for fear of being fired. Period.

What is this new phenomenon of modern Global Capitalism? It is merely a symptom of the modern elite rich; trying to regain their old Privileges of the Golden Age of Robber Barons. They are merely trying to recoup their losses. They are merely trying to get richer.

That's all.

Whether they are trying to do this blindly, subconsciously, consciously, or instinctively: is totally irrelevant. How they are trying to do it is also totally irrelevant. The fucking fact is that they are doing it. And have been doing it, and will not stop doing it. Until every human on Earth except them is dead, starving, broke or working for them. Period.

The indisputable fact is that they are doing it, and doing it systematically and successfully. They have been doing it for a long time. They have been trying to do it ever since the first big corporation was created. Their modus operandi has not changed in hundreds of years. Robber Capitalism. Big sharks eating smaller ones. Small businesses being swallowed by bigger ones. Until they get too big... and fall apart. Only to keep on gobbling up more small businesses. Ad Nausea.

The dynamic of American Greed, and American Capitalism is based upon one of the oldest living reptile species: the shark. That is how backwards and obsolete and behind the times this culture is. It is based upon the oldest still-living peer example of rapacity, hunger, killing, hate and cold-blooded bold murder of the shark. Corporations only survive as long as they keep on moving forward and killing smaller prey, and growing bigger, killing and eating the smaller sharks and everything else around them. The instant a corporation stops moving forward, the instant it stops getting bigger. The instant it stops eating and killing the smaller corporations around it: it dies. It is eaten by other corporations. It is killed off. Corporate awareness. Corporate intelligence. Corporate tactics. Corporate strategy. Corporate humanity. Exists basically on the level of a shark. Corporations exhibit the awareness level, intelligence level, tactics, strategy and humanity of a shark. Period.

Today; American Capitalism is actively trying to bring back the Gilded Age of Robber Barons of the 1920's. However: they are not trying to do this only in America. They are trying to do it Globally. All around the World. They have a new class: the neo-cons. Much like the neo-Nazis. They evolved out of the subconscious religion of American Republicans.

What is American Republican dogma all about? It is the subconscious attempt to justify the religious belief that:

“I have a god given right to be rich.”

That's all.... Oh, also... “and anyone who tries to takes so much as one penny from me. Anyone who tries to take one bit of power from me... is evil.”

American Republican political dogma is the religious belief that greed is good. It is the religious belief that giving is evil, and that taking is good. This has been sold and translated globally, successfully to the entire fucking world of humans. And every fucking greedy bastard who gets rich fast without working for it instantly takes becomes converted to the religion of greed. That is how republicans are created.

Today: Modern Globalism has already managed to recreate a new Gilded Age of Billionaires... instead of the old millionaires. Big Improvement. Now: one single fucking Billionaire Robber Baron can replace a thousand former millionaire Robber Barons. As a result; there are much less rich people in the world today than there have ever been, and much more poor people.

But... these Robber Barons have not yet managed to lower the masses down to their former levels of ignorance, hate, rapacity, dehumanization and brutalization of the 1900's. When hundreds of thousands of starving immigrants from Europe were flooding the new slave-labor market of the United States. They have not yet managed to turn the historical clock backwards quite that far. But each rich, powerful person in the Capitalist system is trying their Damndest to achieve this. Motivated simply by their own personal greed: and by the their own personal blind urge; to accumulate more power, more social Stature, more wealth, and more knowledge, more expensive machines, more poisonous chemicals, more weapons of mass destruction. Etc, etc.

But they have problems. American taxpayers are up in arms against too many immigrants coming into their country and stealing their jobs. However... they neatly solved this problem; by simply exporting American jobs to 3rd World countries. Now immigrants do not even need to travel across an ocean to steal someone else's job, and do it more cheaply, and save the rich; millions of their dollars. Whew. One less problem to worry about.

Unions sprang up. Sparingly; thank goodness. What could Robber Barons do if literally all workers belonged to only one centralized workers union? Like all rich nation belong to only one centralized World Bank? What? Workers organize themselves as efficiently and as cohesively as the rich elite? Heavens forefend!

They would be destroyed as a class completely. Thankfully, the masses never managed to organize themselves. Now Unions are slowly being systematically squeezed out of existence. Whew. One less problem to worry about.

But... too many people have a good education. Too many are too well informed, to swallow all of their media hype about Big Business being: good for you, good for your community, good for the economy, etc. So they are systematically destroying the educational systems of the world. So children grow up inside a consumer culture. And become so brainwashed, and brain-dead: they are not even capable of asking an intelligent question. Much less want to ask one. Whew. One less problem to worry about.

But there is too much information. Too many newspapers and TV stations. Watching more than one news source might give the masses a wider perspective. They might actually realize what is being done to them by a nickel-and-dime slow erosion of their buying power, voting power, social power, mental power, etc. So...? Merge all of the Media sources into monopolies. Make all of the Media become Corporate controlled, carefully censored outlets: that blare the most mindless meaningless crap possible. Whew. One less problem to worry about.

But people are still too well informed. They are not as ignorant as the immigrants were in the 1900's when they flooded the worker markets and fought amongst themselves in huge racial gang-wars for the privilege of slaving for their Robber Baron Bosses. The Robber Barons still miss that! They want all of their wage slaves to be grateful for the privilege of working for them. They want all of them to be properly submissive and humble.

So they have systematically destroyed all work security. Now skyscrapers in the East are built by day laborers. Hired by the day, and fired by the day. No job security from day-to-day. Wonderful. That raises the level of their insecurity, and destroys their own self-esteem as a human being so devastatingly: that these workers are actually becoming grateful for the privilege of working for their bosses; while being slowly starved and dehumanized. Whew. One less problem to worry about.

Now... if they can only get the rest of all the workers in the world as dehumanized, and as ignorant, and as desperate, and as poor, and as starving as these day-laborers building sky scrapers in India and China: then they finally will have regained their lost status. They will finally regain their lost Glory of the Gilded Age of Robber Barons. They will finally enjoy all of the rights and privileges that were once unfairly stolen from them by the lower classes centuries ago. By hundreds of years of fighting and misery and suffering and bloodshed, and hate and fear by billions of poor people. Now that is a moral, ethical goal; that Global Capitalism can proudly stand for!

And they can do this; by simply using the Protestant Work Ethic against the very people who created that work ethic. They can fool them into working for them: easily. As long as the workers all believe in the unquestioned sanctity of all work, and never question who they are working for, or why they are working, or what the consequences of their work might be. As long as they can preserve, and instill even higher levels of slave-mentality into the minds of the masses: they are safe. As long as they can keep six-seven billion humans; perpetually addicted, and crazed and distracted by work: they will become even richer and more powerful.

Is this a huge, hidden conspiracy? Do rich people get together to plot the downfall of the lower classes all over the World? Conspiracies of Greed, and Power do exist. But as for how the actions and policies of all the elite rich in the World seeming to be meshed together as if it was a Global conspiracy. There isn't any secret cabal of the elite rich and powerful, consciously plotting to take over the entire planet. The rich and privileged are simply basically all the same. They are all universally; greedy, universally blind, universally corrupt and universally stupid. And cunningly so. They are all basically the same. Their corruptions are basically the same. Their motives are basically the same. As a result: their actions produce the same basic results; that make it seem as if they are conspiring together en masse in consciously planned strategies. It seems as if there is a conspiracy going on everywhere.

When the simple truth is: there's just a big fucking bunch corrupt, rich, powerful people in the world; all on the same basic wavelength, all with the same basic goals, all with the same basic corruptions, all with the same basic vices.

The entire logic of the rich. The basic intent and drive and motivation of the rich elite: is trying to force those who are poorer than they are: into a state of abject misery and unhappiness. This comes from their envy and jealousy of seeing poorer people being happier than they are. Look at the famous paintings of the two classes in the Louvre... showing the expensive exclusive pleasures of the rich and the simpler pleasures of the poor. Look at the difference between their facial expressions. Which class is smiling; and which class is not smiling? Now after hundreds of years of brainwashing: the rich have come to a religious belief in the happiness of privileges. Meaning that if you are rich and privileged: not only must you be happy... you must be happier than all those around you who are less fortunate than you... who have smaller fortunes of wealth. If a truly rich person finds one poor person who is truly happier than they are: they suffer huge blind emotional spiritual jealousy, rage, anger, vindictiveness and hatred. They live in their world of an assumed superiority and normality of privilege, which they call happiness. Even as they slowly age, and become leering death's head... with horrid ugly skulls... thin-lipped, unsmiling, pale wraiths, with blotchy skin and a sickly pallor... with the glazed, cold eyes of a half-dead reptile: they continue to go out in public asserting how happy they are.

Why do you think the Robber Barons had torture dungeons under their castles? To make damn sure that other people who were too happy, too well-off: ended up penniless, and screaming in pain. Rich people hate true happiness. They hate anyone who is happier than they are. Has there ever been a rich millionaire, who has admitted being unhappy? Never. It was a well-known fact that J. Paul Getty when he was old was the richest man in the world. Yet he spent the last years of his life as a lonely miserable eccentric: walking around in his huge mansion: turning off all the lights; just to save a few pennies. He was so obsessed with saving money that he became insane.

Just as Howard Hughes became a lonely, miserable eccentric when he became too rich and too old. John D. Rockefeller's token charity of giving out dimes was another despicable hypocrisy: that even the elite newspapers publicly despised him for. His cancerous skin diseases betrayed how uncomfortable he was in his own skin. His habit of doling out dimes and quarters to the poor: spoke volumes of his own personal guilt about his own ill-gotten wealth. Inventing trust funds, which were supposed to help the poor but only helped his own family instead. Reservoirs of permanent invested wealth, with only the interest ever touched; just so his family could be guaranteed to be rich forever in perpetuity, and guaranteed token, do-nothing jobs of high status; managing their father's unearned wealth. So they would always remain rich people; doling out a cheap, meager interest of their huge wealth to the poor. Unfortunately, the truly poor ended up never getting a dime of their obscene hypocritical charity.

But these filthy rich people of the 1900's were naïve fools. They did not have our culture of modern Media and Media doublespeak and self-censorship to hide behind. Now, the myth of happiness being wedded to wealth; is so ingrained into the brainwashed minds of the poor; that nobody even questions it.

What happens when a lower class, that is not a majority of the population becomes too well-off? What happens when they become too happy? Look at what happened to the Mormons of Illinois. Look how Harlem was systematically destroyed when American blacks became too well-off. Look what happened to all the black towns in America after the depression; that became too well-off. Look at what happened to the Mormons in Missouri when they became too well-off.

The American middle class will not abide any alien culture living next to them; if that culture is more well off than they are. The American Middle Class has created its own Robber Baron Culture. The American Middle Class has become a class of pure Robber Barons. They are so brainwashed and stupid: they admire those who are richer than they are. They are so venal, and so well off: they will not lift a finger to change anything to help the poor; for fear of losing their own appointed niches of American affluence. Even as the richer elite are slowly and systematically destroying them as a class day-by-day, and year-by-year. Because the American Middle Class is so stupid, and so smug: they do not even realize they are being robbed, and are being put into in debt up to their asses, and losing their high-paying jobs and losing their nice houses.

Why may you ask? Because they believe that competition is better than cooperation. The American Middle Class that is still left; look at those who are now destitute, and feel uneasy. But do they understand what is happened to others of their class? And how it is happening? And why their wealth is drying up?

Will they ever do something about it?

They haven't been fired yet. They aren't poor yet. So... the elite continue to whittle them down at their leisure. And the idiots stand for it. Why is it so easy for them to do this? Because the unspoken ethic of all American Culture is cutthroat competition: 'Every man for himself: and the Devil take the hindmost.' This is the obscene religion the Americans call: Competition of the Marketplace. Or Consumer Demand... or all the other hundreds of code-words and politically correct doublespeak used to hide their unspoken religious belief in selfish greed, and instantaneous self-gratification.

These are only some of the cultural effects that the prostitution of the Protestant Work Ethic has had upon the Earth. The Protestant concept of work is a modern invention, a distinctly human addiction. It became another vicious cycle. The more people worked: the more people lived emptier, more loveless, more boring lives, and sought to fill up their inner emptiness with yet more work, and more self-gratification, and more distraction, and more money, and more dead things.

This is what humans do not understand. The effect of the Protestant Work Ethic creates one-sided selfishness, one-sided accumulation; creating more inner emptiness... not fullness. More unhappiness, more misery, more starvation, more scarcity, more fear, more boredom, more meaningless trivia, etc. What are a few of the other cultural effects of the Protestant Work Ethic?

A Global culture of pure hypocrisy about the sanctity and holiness of work. The obscene idea that work is supposed to supply you with a basic meaning and usefulness of your life. The idea that work is supremely important. The idea that if you are not working; you become automatically unimportant. In fact if you are not working, you become almost completely worthless. Instantly. Magically. A man who is not actively working like a machine is barely tolerated by others in his society. This is becoming true for all women as well. Anyone who does not have a job and is not working: has a horribly low self-esteem of themselves.

How many times has a baby, or a child been pushed away: crying in shame... hurt, weeping, bawling. Tears streaming down their face. When they were trying only for a little attention, a little love... and their father or mother snapped at them and said:

“Not now. I’m busy.”

“Not now. I’m working.”

“Go away. Can’t you see I’m busy?”

“Go away. I’m busy working.”

Billions of parents... have done this to their children for thousands of years... trying to make it clear to their bewildered, hurt child that: work comes first. Work comes before the needs of your own children.

Until the child finally understands that their parents love work, more than they love them... and the only way to gain their love and respect, is to work... even longer and harder than their parents did. So they grow up to become unhappy, unaware workaholics, and ignore their children even more than their parents ignored them.

How many friendships are destroyed by people simply being too busy to see each other, or talk to each other because they are always working? How many married couples drift apart and divorce each other because both are too busy working too much? How many human relationships are destroyed by the excuse of being too busy working to phone the other person, or see them? It’s not their fault... they have to work!

How do you feed your ego every day? By feeling important. By being driven to feed this craving for self-importance; more and more, every day. By making sure that you are always too busy... By making sure that you are always distracted. By being too busy to see someone, or talk to someone. By pointedly ignoring lesser people around you. By ignoring the problems of lesser people. By ignoring lower classes, and lower status humans. By having waiting rooms... where the supplicants... the lower classes wait... for favors from a prince, or in a doctor’s waiting room, or in a line at a bank, or at a government queue. All a perfectly good way to make you feel important because you are too busy.

What happens when a lower status worker wants to speak to a higher status manager? They have to wait. Humbly. Making the person in authority feel more important... Because they are so busy. Because their work is more important than their underlings work.

Why? Because the manager is more powerful than the lesser worker... his time is more important. He is being more of a machine... he is more impersonal, more mechanical... he deals with other people more mechanically. How do you show that you are powerful? How do you show that you are a ruler? By showing no feelings. By showing no mercy. By showing no kindness or gentleness to those under your power. The more you act like a dead unfeeling cold machine... the more you are feared and recognized by your underlings as being powerful.

How do people try to show how important they are? How do they avoid thinking about their own problems? How do they avoid pain? How do they avoid feelings? How do they avoid each other?

How do they block out the whole world?

By being busy. Being in a rush... being distracted... talking on the phone. By not noticing anything else, or anyone else around them. Except their important selected friends, their exclusive selected buddies, their important selected work, the selected task at hand.

How can you easily destroy your own Sense of Pure Wonder? Distraction. Busyness.

By being too busy to see the Sun come up in the morning.

By being too busy to smell how fresh the flowers are in the morning... or how beautiful the trees are... as you run into your car and rush off to work.

By being too tired to notice how beautiful the sunset is in the evening. Because you have been working all day, and only want to go inside, lie down and stop functioning like a machine. Relaxing. Not having to notice anything. By becoming as unaware as possible.

The importance of work. What kind of work? Are you supposed to find fulfillment in your life as a dentist? As a janitor? You are supposed to find a calling, a career, a profession; this is supposed to give importance to your life. This is supposed to give meaning to your life. You are supposed to choose which is the best calling or job for you... one that fits you best... one that fulfills you best. One that realizes your potential.

However: there are more than six billion people on this Earth; who do not have this luxury of choice. They must be satisfied with any kind of work they can get: and be thankful they are not one of the unemployed starving millions who have no work at all. It does not matter what you work at: as long as you work all your life, until you are too old to work any more. In that case... it must be work itself that valuable. It must be work itself that is satisfying, and fulfilling. Work itself is supposed to have meaning.

Oh?

Pay movie stars five dollars an hour, and pay ditch-diggers a hundred dollars an hour. Then see how many people become actors, and how many become ditch-diggers.

The obscene moral, ethical lie of the sanctity of work is also the obscene lie of all business. The actual truth is that it is not the work that is important, or the calling, or the profession, or the career. It is the money you get for it. It is not important what kind of business you are in. It is the money you make from it. Money has become even more important than work. I challenge any person who professes to love their work. Do your loved work without getting one cent from it. If you can do that for the rest of your life, and still be happy: then you can say that you love your work. All of these jobs and callings people love so much; are merely easier, more pleasant ways to make money. Take away the money, and you will see how quickly they stop loving their work.

Working people live for the weekend. The slogan: 'Thank God It's Friday' is so popular that a restaurant chain has named itself after it.

What is the point to doing a job? What is the point of doing a chore? To get the job done. To finish the job. To get it over with.

But... it takes five days of not working; to wind down from five days of working. And workers only have two days to wind down from working five days. For five days: you are supposed to do a job: just to get it over with.... Supposedly, so you can actually live for two days. But when you are busy five days a week working on a job: Your chores pile up. You have to spend some of your two days of freedom just doing chores.... Which is just more work.

So what happens? You function like a machine for five days: and then you try to wind down from working like a machine for two days. Then you have to wind back up and function as a machine again for five days. What is life for a worker? What is the point in living as a worker? It is to do a job. To get the job done. Finish the job. To get it over with.

If you spend your life working. Just to finish work, to finish the job. What is the point in living then? Just to get it all over with?... Do you realize how sick and insane this kind of attitude actually is? It poisons your attitude towards everything: not just work. It prevents you from enjoying your own life. It keeps you addicted to finding more jobs, more challenges, more obstacles to overcome: just so you can remain distracted from yourself.

This is not living. Work is not life. Work is a boring functional existence: it is mechanical functioning. Functional existence is not life. Functional existence is mechanical. Working 5 days with 2 days off; is an imbalanced winding and unwinding called 'stress'. It is winding your watch five turns every week, while only letting it unwind two turns each week. It is winding yourself up tighter, and tighter; until you develop all kinds of health problems, mental problems, emotional problems from 'stress'... Until you are so wound up all the time; you have forgotten how to relax. Until you have forgotten how to live. Until you have forgotten how to be human. This is what the insane culture of the Protestant Work Ethic has done to almost the entire human species on this Earth. Today: nearly all humans unquestioningly worship the idea of work. It has made nearly all the people on this planet work at jobs they hate. It has made university students go into business as a pure cop-out... as a conscious relinquishing of all their own personal morals, ethics and values

The more you work: the less you live. The less you have to be aware, the more you can function like an unfeeling, unaware tool.

*What does it profit a human soul to work all their life?
What can you say of someone who worked their whole life away?*

Nothing. Except they didn't have to be human. They didn't have to feel human emotions or have human thoughts. They managed to avoid feeling anything. They managed to avoid being human.

Work is an addiction. It is an escape from yourself. It is an escape from your own Inner Self.... Work is a drug. It is a form of drugged-numbness. It is a form of drugged mindlessness. It is a form of human unhappiness. What good does work do? Nothing. Except keeping you busy by distraction, bored by repetitiveness, or active by forced enslavement. It is a form of not being human. It is a form of slavery.

The pathetic thing about the billions of humans working today... is that they are so stupid: they don't know what else to do. As if all there is to human existence is work. As if there is nothing else in the Universe except work. The minute they stop working, they die because they have nothing else to live for. Living just to work is not living!. Living just to work is brainwashed programmed enslavement.

What about living: instead of a sterile existence where you feel nothing, think nothing, and do nothing:

except shit work? Oh. I forgot. You need money to live. That is the biggest lie ever religiously believed. That you should waste most of your life making money.

If you study Business at a collegiate level... the only thing your Diploma is good for, is not for a calling, or career, or profession... but openly and honestly; as a pure statement of your intention to make as much money as possible... either for yourself, or for the company that hires you. A business diploma only signifies that you are more interested in making money than you are in Engineering, or Medicine, or whatever. Business is the Ethic of Pure Greed. Work; is the only a way for poor people to make money. That is all that work is. A way to perpetuate class. A way to oppress the mass. If you think that you working also helps other people: try doing the same work by helping them for no money...

First; if you try that. Nobody will even want you or use you. And if by luck someone does. You will starve and become homeless and unable to work. Because you will have no money to live on.

This is how sick the Protestant Work Ethic has become. It has poisoned the souls of humans so deeply: that we do not know how to live without it. If something does not cost money: it must be worthless. If something costs a lot of money: it must be good. Human values are now determined by dollar values: not the other way around. Air is cheap. It costs nothing. Therefore it is worthless and can be polluted. Diamonds are expensive: therefore they are important; and must be preserved, and never be destroyed.

In today's civilized world; the tool-values of humans have evolved even beyond this corrupt cultural myth and lie of the work ethic. Today, the Protestant Work Ethic is being undermined and supplanted by an Ethic of Pure Greed. Today in affluent countries... work is scorned, despised. Honest sweat is laughed-at, sneered-at. Hard work is a joke. There are so many machines that do our work for us; that many Westerners believe physical labor is stupid, demeaning and meaningless. Today: the highest form of work is making millions of dollars without having to lift a finger to earn it. Today: the most respected people espousing the virtues of work are called Captains Of Industry. Which is merely a thin platitude describing an industrious, greedy pirate. The captain of a pirate ship who can make more profit than all of his crew combined simply by his privileged position of authority and power.

If you want to track the evolution of human tool-stupidity. Go back to when people made their own tools. Go back before civilization. If you do not make your own tool: you become very stupid. If you do not know how your tool was made. That means: you will also not know how to make it any better. If you want to do something, and do not how to make a tool for what you want to do... and ask someone else to make that tool for you... they will never make that tool to fit you as you want it to. That tool will always be a bad fit. And you will never get a better one. You will never understand all of the consequences and processes of making that tool. You will never know if you would have wanted to make that tool using that material, or that process. You will have no control over the tools you use period.

If you do make your own tools... you will at last have control over how to make it. And what kind of tool you want to make. And how much of your life you want to waste making that tool. If that tool will take five years of your life to make... Is it worth it? Or not?

Will it save you five years of your life? Will that tool save you from working for five years? Because if that tool does not save you five years of tool-slavery... Then you are a sucker. Then you are not using that tool. Then that tool is using you....

That is, unless you love making and using tools; more than you love your own family and your own children. If you love making and using tools more than you love laughing, playing, having fun, loving, joking, sports, exercise, sex, creativity, emotions, feelings... then go to it. Make more tools. Use more tools. And to Hell with everything else in your life. If you value tools more than you value Nature, Living Things, Wonder, Courage, Honesty, Love and the Universe combined... then go to it. Make and use more tools. Be a slave to the Protestant Work Ethic. At least then; you will knowingly be an upholder of the Protestant Work Ethic which is a slave ethic. At least you will not be an unconscious victim to it. At least then you will have a human context and perspective to place your love of making and using dead tools into.

The context of tools-use vs. humaneness; includes not just using dead tools... It includes using your hands, and your body like a tool. It includes using other people as tools. It includes using your mind, and your emotions as unfeeling, numb, dead, tools. It includes using your creativity like a tool. It includes using children as tools. Using your family as a tool. Using your Sense of Wonder as a selective tool. Using your Courage as a selective tool. Using your Honesty as a selective tool. This includes using your entire awareness as a tool.

This is one ethical, and moral, and spiritual problem we face. This is what the Protestant Work Ethic has forced us to face...

Was it right to introduce atomic nuclear bombs into the world: just so one army could suffer less casualties? Is it right to for one Nation to have a car for every family, just so their people do not have to walk? Is it right to cut down all the forests of the world: just so humans can have paper to write on? Is it right to fish the oceans of the world empty of all living species in one short century: just so humans can have a wider choice of eating not only the flesh of animals and birds, but the flesh of dead fish?

None of these questions were ever thought out before these decisions were made. None of these questions were even asked or thought-of. Why? One reason is, that the Protestant Work Ethic sanctifies every industrial form of work-slavery-destruction on this planet: as being automatically good for all people... and fuck any other consideration except profit.

The pious lip service excuse of doing anything; 'For the greater good of all Humanity'; is merely another obscene, obvious, selective lie used selectively to selectively avoid certain unpleasant truths. 'The Greater Good of Humanity?' ... Good for whom? Good only for a few rich humans. And bad for everyone else and all the Earth.

Finally now: some neighborhoods in America are slightly waking up to the lie of this 'greater corporate good'. They are refusing to allow Wal-Mart's to be built in their communities. Because the history back-trail of social destruction that Wal-Mart has wreaked is so huge, and such common knowledge: that not even the best spin-doctors can fool them anymore about the bullshit idea of huge monopolizing Corporations being good for small communities.

If you do not understand the Dynamic of the Protestant Work Ethic, and the Dynamics of civilization. Then you will not understand why, and how these things are happening today. You will not have a good perspective on your own use of tools, and the use of tools, and work in general.

What kind of lifestyle have modern industrialized workers developed what kind of culture? A culture that despises all physical work, and only rewards abstractive work. Where people sit on their asses 8 hours a day doing abstract shit, and then they have to go out and exercise physically for more hours... because their work no longer is physical.

One result of the insanity of sitting all the time: is the Global mass epidemic of people in all walks of life: with muscle problems and muscle aches... suffering from physical pain. People in their teens, in their 20's, 30's... people of all ages: suffering from sore backs, sore muscles, muscle problems of all kinds.

Why?

Because the human body was never designed to sit. Your body is designed either to stand: or lie down. Because the 90-degree angle of sitting: shortens your leg muscles. The longer you sit: the more your leg muscles get used to being short. Then, when you stand up: your body balances the increase of muscle tension below your hips by increasing the muscle tension above your hips.

Most people do not feel this increase of muscle tension in their legs because it happens gradually over years of sitting. Increased muscle tension is not painful when muscles fibers run in the same direction. It is only where muscle fibers criss-cross: that most muscle-pain is felt. Your muscles get shorter and shorter over years of sitting and inactivity. Until they get so short: that any motion which stretches them one inch more than they are used-to: can rip them and damage them.

The more repetitive your physical motions are: the more your muscles develop a muscle-memory. Until they train themselves to shorten into being able to only stretch and perform the same identical motion you have been doing for years. Until they become so glued together, and so short... until your tendons become so short: that they can barely stretch far enough to perform that same identical task.

Then; when you over-stretch them: they become injured and inflamed. And if you do not stop using them. If you keep on working your inflamed, injured tendons and muscles: you re-injure them every day. Then they become chronically inflamed. Then you suffer from chronic, continual physical pain. Because you are re-injuring them every day just doing your everyday chores.

One common muscle-tendon injury is carpal tunnel syndrome ... which comes from performing unnatural, identical motions like typing. Another muscle-tendon injury is whiplash from car accidents. In both instances: not only do their muscles get injured: but their tendons also get injured and become inflamed. Tendons receive almost no blood supply. They take ten times longer to heal than muscles. Muscles can heal in 3-7 days: provided they are rested and not re-injured. Tendons take even longer to heal.

To heal from carpal tunnel syndrome: people who type or use computers: have to rest their hands for at least a week. This means they cannot work. Ever hear of a typist or computer worker stopping work for a week: just because their hands hurt? Ever hear of a whiplash sufferer lying down and not using their neck tendons to keep their heads vertical for a week: just because their neck hurts?

Modern people live in their heads. They are not aware of their bodies. They are not aware of their own body pain. They ignore their bodies. They ignore the pain in their bodies. Functioning as a machine is more important than listening to your body and healing your body. What? Stop working just because your body aches or hurts? You're a working machine! Fuck your body. Work is more important than your body.

Your body is made up of millions of threads of muscle  $1/10,000^{\text{th}}$  of an inch thick. Each fiber is encased in a transparent saran wrap covering called fascia. Every 10 fibers are also encased in Saran wrap. Every 100 threads are encased. Every 1,000 threads are encased. Up to the last Saran wrap encasing of one entire muscle.

Every single muscle-fiber is designed to slide independently inside its own casing of Saran wrap called 'Fascia'. Every bundle of 10, or 100, or 10,000 threads are also designed to slide freely and independently inside their respective coatings of Saran wrap. The second you stop using your muscles. Each Saran wrap starts getting glued to the next Saran wrapped muscle fiber. Then; every time you move: your glued-together muscle fibers pull other muscle fibers that you do not need to move...along with the ones you do need. Then every time you move: you end up dragging muscle-fibers you do not need. Because they are all glued together. You end up working ten times harder just to move; because you are using ten times more muscle fibers than you need, and you are using them inefficiently.

Muscle fibers are supposed to be loose if you are not using them.

But if you have any stress in your life that you do not deal with. If any of your stress, if any of your unresolved, unfaced, undealt-with problems-feelings-emotions-thoughts, etc: are repressed, or suppressed. If any unresolved tension in your life is translated into muscle tension in your body... Then each entire muscle becomes tightened. The muscle threads stop moving loosely in their Saran-wrap casings.

If your muscles are loose and you are lying down: then they will slide separately in their casings at the slightest movement, at your every breath. They all will slide separately. But if your muscles are pulled tight 24 hours a day non-stop. The separate threads will no longer slide individually, and remain free of each other. They will get glued to each other. Until they become solid slabs of glued-together muscle. Then you get stiff, sore muscles from doing nothing. Then you get backaches from sitting too much.

The only reason Olympic athletes perform so well: is because their muscles are not glued together. They only use the muscle threads they need. They use 100 times less energy doing the same thing you do; simply because all of their muscle fibers slide easily and independently within each individual Saran wrap encasing.

If you use a muscle that is glued to another muscle that is going in a different direction: it hurts. Because one muscle is ripping-pulling another muscle into a direction that it was never designed to move.

The longer you sit, the less active you are: the more your muscles get glued together, the stiffer they get, the harder they get, the less flexible you become. Until your muscles get hard as rock. Until you can barely move. Until your muscles become so frozen: you can barely walk. Until you are in chronic pain 24 hours a day. Until you get used to being in physical pain all the time. Until being in physical pain every day of your life becomes normal. Until you cannot imagine what it is like to live without your pain.

Because you have a fucking desk job where you spend most of your life sitting. Because you spend the rest of your time sitting in a car. Because when you get home: you sit; instead of lying down, or standing up. Because you do the same identical motions every day of your life. Because you are not physically active. Until you become a physical wreck.

What if the American Medical Association and the AMA; publicly declared that it is a medically proven fact that all sitting is unhealthy for you? What if the unhealthiness of sitting was socially stigmatized, and banned in all public areas of work and play: like smoking is banned in America today?

Oops.

Corporations would lose office workers. People would stop sitting. TV would disappear. No more movies. No more chairs. No tables. No more arenas. No more stadiums. No more professional sports. No more mass media. No more Buses. No Airlines. No bicycles. No Cars. People would only read books while lying down or standing... Millions more people running and walking. People would be more active. People would have more energy. People would be healthier. Oops.

Now... we can't have that now: can we? Why not?

Work has been polarized and specialized into mental or physical aspects. With no heart or emotion. Either you are a mechanical slave to a computer, or a mechanical slave to a machine. Either your mind works and your body rots; or your body works your mind rots. Either way: your emotions and your heart dries up and shrinks and dies: until you have no human feelings whatsoever. Until you cannot remember what feelings are.

How stupid is work? If you have fun by living out in Nature. Then you exercise your body and mind and heart: all at the same time. The idea of specializing your life into only mental, or only physical activities: is the dumbest crap ever invented. Does this mean you have to live three times longer? Just so you can live a full physical, a full mental, and full emotional life? By doing each one separately? In a linear line?

What civilization does to the masses of humanity: is turn them into factory slaves, farm workers and day laborers. Working themselves to death; and dying as mentally dumb and numb as possible. By brainwashing them into being physical slaves. By accountants working themselves to death over numbers, as mental slaves; until they become weak, pale, obese, sickly wizened, wrinkled ugly things who die of heart attacks at 45. With both specialized groups living emotionally dead lives. Feeling nothing. Having no human emotions, no human thoughts, no fun, no joy, no passion, no intensity, no wonder. Only normality, boredom, and a numbed non-awareness.

What is the fucking point in working mentally or physically all your life: if you are already emotionally dead inside: eh? Then your life becomes meaningless. Then your death means nothing. Then both your life, and your death; is not even a tragedy, or a comedy. Then your entire life is just meaningless mechanical functioning. What is the fucking point in functioning only mentally or only physically? What is the point in you living? What is the point in your life? It sure as hell ain't work.

The Protestant Work Ethic is a complete hypocrisy of the idea of the equality of work. Once upon a time; the Myth of an honest day's pay for an honest day's work; was actually honored. Once the work ethic was an ethic of equality. An equal day's pay: for an equal day's labor. Meaning that everyone who worked equally hard at jobs that were more or less equally the same, had the right to an equal wage. They had the right to be paid equally.

This ethic; has since completely disappeared. Yet people are still being suckered into working and slaving for corporations by being brainwashed from birth into believing that if they work hard: they will be fairly and properly and equally rewarded for their hard work. That working harder means you are paid more money.

The actual truth about fucking work is that the harder the work: the less it is valued, and the less you get paid for it. The more successful you are, the more you are admired, and the higher status you have: the less you have to work, the easier your work is, the more pleasant it is. Not the other way around. The more money you make: the less you work. The less money you make: the harder you work. And we are supposed to worship the idea of hard work being sacred?

Sacred for whom? In what context?

In the context of getting a measly few more dollars if you work longer hours... so the company you work for: can make even more money by paying you as little as possible? In the context of a Robber Baron getting thousands of coal miners to work harder for less pay, so he can make hundreds of millions of more dollars, while all of his employees are paid as little as possible? Is there any employee in the fucking world who does not think they should be paid more than they are now?

Which incentive is worse? The Fear of Poverty: that makes wage-slaves work harder for less pay? Or the sick greed of Robber Barons: forcing his wage-slaves to work longer and harder for less pay; so he can make more millions of dollars?

Which incentive drives which? It is a blind, stupid, self-created vicious cycle. Supported and enabled by the human ants who buy into the system and work it, and believe in it, and conform to it.

If there were no bosses, no taskmasters, no Robber Barons, no owners... How hard would anyone work? If your car, and housing, and your living expenses did not cost so much money; how hard would you work? How hard would you need to work? What is the right amount of work? How much work is too much? How much is too little? Is work good or evil? In what context? Do worker ask questions? Do workers think about questions like this? No.

The Protestant Work Ethic became defined by the Robber Barons of Europe. And by the people they enslaved, and by all those who tried to follow the examples of their Protestant masters. The Protestant Work Ethic has a polar reversal. From the love of work: is has become a hatred of work. By people who were forced to do it; and found ways for other people to do their work for them. Who hated it also: and found others to do it, who hated it also, and found others.... Ad nausea.

The Industrial Revolution was born out of the hatred of work itself... It was born out of European Robber Barons; making the de-meaning work of their vassals as disgusting, as boring, as dirty, and as hateful as possible. Trying to make their work as meaningless as possible. Why? Because intrinsically: the actual truth that all elite privileged people hate and cannot stand and try to deny as much as possible: is the fact that people who work are more important than people who do not work. People who suffer hardship; are healthier and more intelligent than people who suffer no hardship whatsoever.

The elite tried to demean the work of the poor: as a way to feel better than them. As a way to define themselves as a superior class of idle rich who did not have to work. As the money-machines, the slave-prisons called: factories kept pouring out more wealth to make them even richer. As they rose in stature and status and influence and respect and power. As they found ways to increase the speed of getting rich. As England became a devastated wasteland of Industrialized pollution and Industrialized mass poverty.

The masses were taken by force. Against their will. They were taken from their comfortable cottages: and put into cattle cars...They were taken from their green countryside's.. and cast into the smog-hells and slag heaps of the industrial prisons they were forced to work in. To create the obscenities called Caste Iron. As a way to finally mark them as a lower caste. Because they had committed the sin of becoming happier and healthier, and more well-off than the Aristocrats.

The poor were forced to work for starvation wages; and died in poverty, misery, squalor, ignorance... polluted by the industrial poisons around them. Dying from them at early ages. Dying from the meaninglessness of their work. The pointlessness of functioning and living like meaningless machines inside the meaningless shit-inventions, the meaningless obscene death-house-prisons called: factories. The first concentration camps were not in Germany: they were in England, in the first Industrial horrors of wage-slavery. The first mass importing of slaves to be killed systematically in poison-filled factories was not in Germany: it happened in England. But this part of England's history is conveniently glossed over today. Nobody ever reads about it. Why do you think work is seen as demeaning by the lower classes?

Instead of working for yourself, and enjoying a sense of Personal accomplishment, and independence and self-esteem. Instead of learning that the value of putting effort and energy into something you love doing is the only kind of work worth doing. Instead of learning how to put energy and effort into everything you do, and enjoy living by being active and positive. The Protestant Work Ethic forced people to work in conflict against each other. It forced them to compete with each other and against each other. It was a total human corruption so deep; that there are no words to describe its accumulative effect on civilized people. Work has become a constant unending conflict, a constant, unnatural stress. It has become a creator of Cancer. Today we have work-created cancers, which never existed before. Work itself has become cancerous and poisonous to people's health.

What did The Protestant Work Ethic create in Europe in the Middle Ages?

Greedy peasants buying up their neighbor's fields. Creating larger farms. Poorer farmers selling out to richer ones. Poor farmers being forced out of their communities, and going somewhere else. The expansion of Europeans being driven out of their own countries: and re-colonizing the rest of the already-populated world all over again. Farmers becoming richer, becoming a separate class of landed gentry. Bigger farms becoming huge estates.

Estate Farming
Industrial Farming.
Plantations
Industrial Slavery

As one example: the Scots when their clans were put under British rule: went on a systematic genocide of their own people... oppressing them and destroying their own culture a thousand times more horribly than the English ever did. But do you ever hear a Scotsman rant against the evils done to them by their own countrymen? Never in your life. They still hold up the English as the ones to hate. Scots were driven from their own land by their own countrymen. Why do you think the first emigrations had such huge Scottish emigrants to the new world? They were fleeing a land of hate and greed and evil. Where do you think the great Scottish estates came from? From the Scots Lairds killing off their own peasants far faster and more effectively than the English ever did.

The same tactic was used in Quebec by the rich French ruling class for over three hundred years. They kept their poor masses starving and ignorant, and robbed them and taxed them into poverty... holding up the English as the root cause of their misery and humiliation.

Try getting any French Canadian to admit that it has been, and still is their own countrymen who keep them down. Not the English. A few may agree in private... but never in public.

It is forbidden to attack your own ethnic robber barons. This is seen as weakening your own ethnic culture. You must circle the wagons and hate other ethnic races and robber barons: but never your own. You must never make the connection that all ethnic races and cultures have Robber Barons. You must never make the connection that all the robber barons of every fucking different race, and ethnicity and culture: stick together and plot and strategize to keep the poor of their own ethnicity down. You must never realize that the culture of the robber baron transcends all other religious-ethnic-racial-national boundaries. You must never be educated enough to see how these scum have done it for ten thousand years, and how they are still doing it.

The culture of the rich and powerful: the culture of money, the culture of greed: transcends and is more powerful than any other human culture. The culture of the rich and powerful hides behind older weaker cultures. It uses these older cultures to avoid being noticed. How rich and powerful you are defines how you live. How poor you are defines how you live. No other culture is strong enough to do that. The use of laborers as pure machine-slaves. The sacredness of work being valued more than human life. So working yourself to death became an admirable virtue. Until work became so brutal, and filthy: owners could only have it done by bandaged, poor work slaves. The creation of the American slave system to attain wealth and status is based upon having someone else work for you and get you rich while they stay poor. . America was and still is: based upon three different types of slavery. The Southern agricultural chained slave. The Northern industrial waged slave... and the machine itself working as a slave: used by human mechanical robots, as extensions of power. Used as mechanical slaves to attain wealth and status for whoever owned them. What did that create? The obsession to own machines that do work for you.

What did European Kings, and the European Middle Class of the Middle Ages, and their Protestant Work Ethic create?

A sanctification of land, property, and ownership that is more sacred than human life. Elite group of owners. Called modern day Robber barons. Who then created the first Industrial Revolution.

In England. Millions of humans enslaved in filthy, dirty, prisons called Estates, Plantations, factories, and jobs, and careers, and professions, etc... With the pyramidal mass of workers who were crushed most at the bottom, and the upper strata above them, less crushed.

What did these new slave factories create?

Industrial Pollution on a new scale of hundreds of millions of tons of pure poison spreading toxic filth into the Atmosphere and into the Waters of the Earth. Slag heaps of poisonous rock heaped ever-higher in huge pyramids around coal mines. Destroying and killing everything it touched. Millions of tons of coal dust spewed into the air, into the Earth, and into the Water. Just so people could buy and use more machines... so they themselves wouldn't have to work as hard at their slave wage jobs as they once used to. So machine slaves coupled with wage slaves could make a select, lucky few Robber Barons, a thousand times... and then a million times richer than ever before, and faster than ever before. The birth of the Industrial Robber Barons. The birth of Industrial Greed. The birth of Industrial Power. A new wealthier class of Industrial elite. A new wealthier class of Industrial Robber Barons. A new richer ruling class was created from the factories where humans worked themselves to death by the millions.

Huh? Is this is intelligent? Make up your mind. If you hate work. Then don't slave your whole life away working for somebody else in a factory, or an office. If you love work: then don't waste your life doing the most boring shit work possible.

What is the supposed reason for all of this work? Building more machines... that are supposed to save you from working?

That is a capitalistic farce. The first Industrial wage-slaves worked a hundred times harder and they became a hundred times poorer than any peasants in the Middle Ages ever were before the Industrial Revolution. The first factory workers worked ten times harder than their parents ever did, and were paid ten times less. The more machines you have: the more time you spend working on them, maintaining them, repairing them, using them. Machines make you work for them. If you don't: they break down and become useless. Machines make you work more whether you like it or not.

Finally in the 1840's, up to the 1900's: European and American workers began rebelling against the ever increasing, dehumanized, insanity of their working conditions. What did the Robber Barons do? They crushed worker revolts ruthlessly. Armies were brought in. Police, firing squads, hired thugs came in by the dozen, and by the thousands. Every popular worker strike, protest and uprising was crushed before it could gain momentum. But still the oppressed masses continued to rise up in revolt against their poverty and oppression.

Finally after decades of successfully crushing all attempts of the poor to better their situation: a few elite radicals managed to join with the bourgeoisie, and middle class elite, and with some enlightened, educated poor, and managed to eke out a few revolutionary improvements. Finally; inventors made the work easier by inventing better tools and machines. They humanized these factories...by bringing in more machines, by using even more machines... Until work slaves came to love the machines that worked for them. Until wage-slaves came to love their slavery... Until work-slaves came to love the human masters and owners... Until it became a normal way to live.

Why? Because human slave being used as a tool by other humans were themselves given tools, and machines... which they could use to feel more powerful. So they could become more powerful tools for their masters. So the slave could feel like a master... by mastering their tools. By telling the tool what to do. Give a slave a powerful machine, and they suddenly become happy. Suddenly they have a kind of power also.

But take away any machines from a slave. Force them to work only with their hands, force them to work only with hand-tools... oops. Suddenly they become total slaves. Suddenly they realize that they are slaves. But if they have any machine power! Then they feel powerful. Force a secretary to handwrite a letter instead of using a typewriter. And she is demeaned down to a lower status. Force a sharecropper to pick cotton by hand instead of with a huge machine combine. And they become total slaves. But give them huge mechanical tractors that are powerful. Hey! They are no longer total slaves. Now they have power. Now they are powerful. Now they have a machine that works for them. Now they do not have to destroy their bodies with the backbreaking menial stoop labor of picking cotton with only their hands.

So what's the difference between a total slave, and an industrialized working wage slave? As long as your slave job is not 100% manual labor, you are not a total menial slave. You are not completely lower class. You are not completely humiliated. You are not completely debased and degraded. So anyone who does not scrub floors on their knees by hand, using only a hand-brush... is not a totally degraded as a slave. If the servant uses a vacuum cleaner, or a mop... so you can stand up instead of having to work on her hands and knees... then you are not as degraded as a slave who has no machine to use as a mechanical slave..

But... in order for one American wage slave to have a machine working for them. There have to be entire factories with other wage slaves working for other owners and Robber Barons. There has to be an American Government that can steal oil from other countries. There has to be an American Military to enforce the oil policies of the U.S. Government; and ram them down the throats of the poor developing Nations where they suck their precious oil from. There has to be an entire world, Global hierarchy of Capitalist rich Nations and Capitalist corporations and monopolies... just so one idiot American can feel powerful driving a car. And be able to ignore how totally powerless they are in every other fucking aspect of their lives. But even that hypocrisy cannot explain the pride of slaves working in coalmines for hundreds of years using only hand tools. They prided themselves on how hard they worked. They prided themselves on how dangerous the work was. They prided themselves on how black their faces became from the cancer-causing black coal-dust they inhaled all of their working days and died early and coughing their black lungs out.

Human Slaves can and do: use any kind of self-delusion and cultural hoax and lie to rationalize what they do, and manufacture any kind of cultural ethos supporting what they do as being right and good and normal.

The pathetic, semantic human hypocrisy of what is considered to be slavery, and what is not considered to be slavery: is so stupid, it is not worth analyzing.

But once the new industrial factories were invented. Once Europe became a continent of people working in industrial machine-driven factories... It created a new level of mass death and killing.

What did the Two World Wars do?

It increased the insanity of mindless, blind, impersonal killing: as a Global Cultural Norm. Killing people in wartime by the millions... because they wear a certain uniform... became Normalized. Killing people in wartime by the millions... because they wear a certain shape helmet. Or belong to a certain Nation... became Normalized. Because humans are only supposed to have an abstract National identity: not a human identity.

White European and American elites put the human populations of entire Nations into enforced National slavery... They brainwashed their entire populations into patriotic National Efforts. Using the propaganda of fear and hate to do it. Everyone madly working, and slaving away... just to make more machines of death... more guns, more bombs, more tanks, more planes, more weapons of mass destruction...creating more death. Hundreds of millions of human ants, working away... slaving away inside death factories; innocuously called: defense plants. Not death factories creating machines of death. Not attack plants creating machines to attack and kill and destroy other human beings. Which is what they actually are.

What did this do to Western Culture?

The culture of industrial mass-manufactured Machines took over human culture. The unquestioned mastery and worship of the machine; became an unspoken, universal religion all over the globe. Industrial mass-manufacturing is an unspoken everyday normality of modern civilization. It is taken for granted. It is considered unthinkable for humans to exist without it. Today: people throw their hands up in horror at even the suggestion that this supposed boon to mankind might be taken away or lessened. People have an unspoken implicit tacit, silent belief-assumption in the unspoken assumption that modern civilization is better and more advanced than all earlier civilizations. They believe implicitly that mass-manufacturing is a labor-saving device that benefits Mankind as a species. They believe that machine mass-manufacturing saves humans from working too much.

The exact opposite is true. Before industrialization: humans worked less, not more. Industrialization was a way to put the masses of the lower class to work as wage slaves: for the sole profit of a few robber barons. It was a way to dehumanize the lower classes and brutalize them into an even worse slavery than their previous oppression and poverty had been. It was a way to normalize them into a condition of slavery so insane: that they actually became addicted to it. It was a way to turn the lower classes into willing machine-slaves, into the slaves of machines. Mass manufacturing has enslaved humans more effectively than all of the slave cultures of Rome and Egypt and China put together. It has created billions of more human machine wage slaves, working harder, longer, for less money, in worse conditions, and being dehumanized in the process worse: than all the systems of enslavement of all the civilizations that existed before industrialization. It did this by poisoning the lowest classes of civilized humans with the corruption of the highest classes: by infecting all the lowest classes with greed and the ambition of upward mobility. By infecting the lowest classes with the worst evil of elite corruption: personal selfishness: egocentricity.

When was the last high-point of human cooperation and self-sacrifice? During the last world war. Global warfare. Mass murder, mass killing. When was the latest, highest, greatest, crisis humans experienced? During Wartime: when we are busy killing each other. When is the closest humans ever become to each other? During times of War and Killing, Dying and Death.

This is the insanity of civilization. The only time you can get humans to cooperate with each other, is when we are all working together in a crisis situation as wage slaves for Robber Barons cooperating with each other... all intent upon killing millions of people of another Nationality... impersonally... merely because our government tells us that it is legal to do so. Working as mindless impersonal detached ants in factories: producing killing weapons of mass destruction for detached armies on other detached continents thousands of miles away.

When billions of humans all faithfully obeyed their robber baron rulers and started killing each other impersonally. Not personally... but on mass levels, using mass-produced killing machines... as masses of faceless ants called Nations; killing other Nations... Total impersonal, detached machine killing. One ant heap of dehumanized humans attacking and killing another. Millions killing millions. Blindly. Mindlessly. Intent on killing each other.

‘Sorry, it’s nothing personal: but you’re a German, you’re an American, you’re Japanese... that’s good enough for me. I obey my country. If a National leader tells me to kill others... I kill people I don’t know and have nothing against.

‘Sorry: you’re not a Chinese communist: I have to kill you. Sorry: nothing personal’.

The more we used tools, the more we crowded together, the more we functioned like machines... the insanity of impersonality, the culture of impersonal human relationships becoming normalized, the culture of impersonal killing: became steadily worse:

When Europeans began colonizing the rest of the world... other cultures did not understand the new level of this insanity of impersonality. Their cultures were more personal. They had to personally hate a person before they could kill them. They had to personally hate a certain tribe before they could go to war against them. Europeans didn’t have this problem. Now: humans ignoring each other, humans not looking at each other, not speaking to each other, not touching each other: is normal.

This is the normal level of civilized detachment we civilized humans live in today now. The global culture of Detachment and impersonality, is an insanity that we humans consider to be normal today. We are now living in the Modern Age of Insane Detachment. Before this: there were Ages of Alienation, and Existentialism, and Angst, and Anxiety, and mass Paranoia. Now there is the Age of Detachment. The new Machine Age, where machines rule humans... and all the rest of this Earth. Detachedly. All the combined mechanical detachments we work to service and maintain: keeps us as one-sided slaves. We slave our whole lives to maintain and love our machines.

Not one fucking machine has ever slaved away its life maintaining and loving humans. And the result? The Atomic Bomb. Oops. Now we can destroy the entire planet. Impersonally... in a detached, scientific way; thanks to the wonders of Science. Thanks Scientists! But that means they’ll die too... darn it. So let’s just stockpile as many atomic bombs as we can... just in case anyone threatens us with their atomic bombs? Nuclear proliferation. Atomic bombs accumulating. The potential for destruction gone rampantly insane... All done by, with, and in: a detached scientific level of abstraction. All perfectly ‘normal’.

If you read history books, or take courses in history. You will find that in almost every course, in every book, almost every History professor and scholar: will have somewhere, at some time of other... written or mentioned the fact that nearly all the improvements of technology come from War.

Technology comes from us trying to find better ways of killing each other and everything else. However. This dry fact. This bland truth. Is never examined morally or ethically. It is never discussed morally or ethically. It is never evaluated morally or ethically. It is never put into perspective morally or ethically.

Until modern scientific technology has now blessed us with the Atomic Bomb.

The Path of Splitness
Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1061

Yeeeeahhh for Science! Science is GOOD! Gee, thanks Science!

Has any human ever held the people responsible for giving us these better ways of killing each other, responsible? Have they ever been punished for the destruction and death and horror they created? Have the invention of better ways of killing ever been discouraged or disliked? Much less made a crime and a sin?

Human civilization has been nothing but 36,000 years of finding better ways to kill.

If you want to blame the scientists who invented the Atom Bomb. You must also blame every human who ever made a better tool to kill with also. Scientists are not blamed for inventing better Atomic bombs and better nuclear missiles for the same reason the person who invented the wheel is not blamed. You cannot differentiate between the destructive effect of an atomic bomb, and the destructive effect of using the wheel. Both are used to kill. Both were invented with an intent to kill.

The wheel was invented so killers on horse-drawn war chariots could kill enemy soldiers better. The first wheels that were made, were made to kill with. Only much later were they used for anything else. Only later were they used as an excuse to make roads... destroying and killing more living things, and more living Earth, than all wars combined.

How many millions of acres of living plants and animals have been killed by building roads that are needed for us to use the wheel on?

More land in the world has been destroyed and covered with concrete and black asphalt by building modern roads: than all the land destroyed by erecting buildings over them.

It's obvious. Roads inside a city destroy roughly 50% of the land area. Roads between cities; destroy hundreds of times more land area than any city. Roads connecting isolated farms and houses in the country; destroy thousands of times more land than the buildings themselves do.

How many hundreds of millions of humans have been killed by humans using the wheel as war chariots, and crossbows, and siege weapons, and water wheels, and clocks, and pulley systems, and tools used by slaves working for their masters?

Oh. You mean if a tool kills a human it is bad. But if it kills any other living organism it is good?

Oh. You mean if a tool is used to kill only certain humans it is bad. But if it is used to kill certain other humans it is good?

Sorry. Universal Logic and Universal Truth does not work that way. A tool designed to kill: kills. Universally. Tools do not discriminate between what or who they kill and do not kill. If you are against the atomic bomb. Then if you are logical., you must be against every tool that was ever invented to kill ANYTHING.

That is: if you are intelligently critical and logical. IF you are not a conformist. If you think for yourself. If you want to be logical. If you want to be honest. If your thinking is not an attempt at rationalizing your own life. If your ego does not control what you think. If you have a mind of your own. If you prefer truths to lies.

Obey your Nation. Don't think for yourself. Obey your ruler. Don't protest. Obey the traffic lights, conform: obey your machines. Do what machines tell you to do. If a machine tells you to do something: it must be right.

‘Oops... what a mess we are in... oh well... darn it: it’s not my fault.... I’m sane. They’re the ones who’re crazy. The whole world is crazy. Civilization is crazy: what can I do about it?’

Humans do not even differentiate Civilization from the Earth. For them: the world IS civilization. Civilization IS the World. There is no difference between the world, and civilization.

Workers do not realize that they are the most powerful class in the world. They do not realize that they hold the key to transform all of their societies to suit them, and not their bosses...

Huh? How?

Decentralized power is always more powerful than centralized power. The base of a pyramid is always stronger than its apex. It is only a question of organization and tactics.

Unions and mass movements of the lower classes have always tried to fight the concentrated wealth and power of the upper classes by mimicking them, by aping them in the stupidest ways possible... by concentrating themselves into huge unarmed crowds: with their leaders exposed and vulnerable.

How stupid can you get? That way: the Chinese army simply encircled Tiananmen Square: and destroyed an entire popular National uprising that had been building for years in one fell swoop. Going out barehanded and unarmed in huge masses is merely begging to be massacred by an armed and the organized ruling class.

If you want to go on strike, or protest: fine. But do it intelligently for shits sake. Organize yourselves before you do it. Plan it ahead of time. And for shits sake: Do not let the other side know what you are planning. Never let your enemy know what you are going to do; or where you are; or who you are. Ruling classes have been using these tactics for thousands of years. But the lower classes are still too fucking stupid to even think of using the same tactics that have been used against them for thousands of years..

Once you organize yourselves in secret: do not go out on the streets as an unruly mob. That will only give the authorities an excuse to demonize you as anarchists. As a lawless mob. As them standing on the side of Law and Order. This hypocrisy gives them an excuse to do anything to you: legal or illegal. Any large public mob is seen as a dangerous threat. They can target you as being a threat to ‘National Security’. (That bullshit phrase has been bandied about and used for every bullshit corruption and crime for so long; that it has no actual meaning to it except as a politically correct excuse to oppress poor people.)

Don’t give your owners or bosses any warning. Keep your activities secret from them. Don’t give any explanations. Don’t make any demands. Don’t give any warning. Just don’t show up for work. But do it intelligently. Do it en masse. As a single population. As a coordinated whole. Make sure that every worker can get by for the allotted, and planned time you intend on being on strike. So no family goes hungry... then just do not show up for work: period.

What are they going to do? Drive to every workers house in the city and try to throw them in jail? Go from door-to-door: shooting and killing every working family in the city? Huh?....

The Path of Splitness
Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1063

What will the media's reaction be: eh? There won't be any Media. The workers that make it work will not show up. Society will come to a crashing halt. The shockwave will be so huge: that later: the strike will be televised and reported-on more than 9:11.

Moreover... if all the workers in the media also do not show up... then you cannot have any mass media brainwashing the masses... with their one-sided lies and distortions and bullshit.

The ones in power will have no choice... but to go door, to, door. To each worker. Personally asking them to come back....

'What's wrong... what did we do? Why aren't you showing up for work? Please tell us... We need you! We can't run the city without you. We can't run the government without you. We can't run the stores and businesses, and buses, and airplanes and machines without you...'

Do you understand this? All you workers... and I mean all of you... You could have the entire upper class; begging on their knees at your doorsteps, for you to come back to work for them. You could have Donald Trump on his knees, dirtying his fancy pants; begging you to come back to work for him. You could have all the movie stars in Hollywood begging at your doors to come back to work for them. You could have all of your bosses on their knees in front of you: begging you to come back to work. That is... if you recognize yourselves as a single class. YOU are the majority! The majority class is the most powerful class there is! Outnumbering all other classes by a hundred-to-one. And yet, you let a minority take advantage of you. As long as you let them do this to you: you deserve it! All of you could easily be in the drivers seat: telling everyone else what to do and how to do it.

If only you had the brains to organize yourselves intelligently, and take back all of the powers you gave to the minorities, the elites, the special interests, the corporations, etc.

You could do it without getting shot, or being jailed, or beaten. Simply by being intelligently nonviolent. An angry mob in the streets is not nonviolent just because they are not carrying guns, or have no tanks. It is a red flag to those in power. It is good excuse to kill and jail, and beat people. It is a good way to terrorize the masses by showing what will happen to them if they dare to rise up.

How can you punish an entire Nation of people for doing nothing. Eh? What has any government done in the face of a National strike when not one single worker showed up for work? Nothing. Period. But workers are so brainwashed and so submissive; that they do not even recognize they can bring their mortal enemies to their knees easily without firing a shot. Because they are too stupid to even realize that there is an enemy, or who the enemy is. Because they have no Sense of Wonder. Because they do not wonder about anything.

Use your brains.

You don't even need a common, single goal, or purpose to do this. Every worker could have their own individual grievances, and demands. And it would still work. All that is needed is that workers organize themselves as a single group of people... and act as one entity, one class.

In other words. All it needs to work is for all the workers in the world to have no egos. And refuse to go back: until all of your demands are met... Not just your own; you selfish idiots. If your own boss agrees to your own personal demands... fine... But make damn sure to tell him: that you will not go back to work for him: until all the demands of all the other workers are met also.

1063

The Path of Splitness
Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1064

And stand by your fucking word; you stupid, unethical idiots. Then your bosses will have no choice: but to jump-on, or beat, or even kill any idiot elite owner, or boss; who refuses to agree to their workers personal demands. Because if they do not. There goes all their power. There goes all their wealth. There goes all their status. There goes all their money. There goes all their upward mobility

You will not need to lift one fucking finger to enforce your own demands. You will not have to break anyone's bones, or kidnap anyone's children, or kill anyone. And what's more... you will not be morally responsible for what your bosses do to violently force their own elite into agreeing to literally all of your demands.

But... if you only ask for peanuts... if you do not demand that all of your own power to be given back to you: they will gladly agree to anything...

Then later ... they will devise, and plan to set about systematically enslaving you all over again even worse. Which is exactly what they have done. As they have been doing and are still doing so for twelve fucking thousand years. They will find all kinds of cunning, sneaky, underhanded ways to kill you, fire you, poison you, or backstab you... as sneakily and as secretly as possible. They will try to destroy your worker organizations as sneakily and underhandedly, and as cowardly as possible...

As they have already done for hundreds of years: you stupid fucking idiots. And then you will have to do it all over again.... You will have to fight for your freedoms all over again. And again.... And again. Until you finally get it through your thick, stupid heads: that the people you work for... are your mortal fucking enemies.

Only when the class lines between workers and employers are clearly defined, and honestly drawn: will you ever understand the true power you have given to them, and the true power all workers have over their employers; as a single class, a united, cooperating class of humans: who care more about each other: than they do about their own greed or money.

But if all you want to do, is go to work, come home, grab a beer, and sit down and watch TV?... then you are fucked. Period. Then you are too stupid, and too lazy to organize or care about anything but your own selfish ass, and you will remain a powerless stilted-stupefied-stupid working idiot who deserves to be stepped-on and used, manipulated, lied-to and brainwashed. And taken advantage of. Then you will let the rulers alienate all of you from each other. You will let them buy you off. You will let them bribe you. You will believe their promises, you will remain addicted to your lifestyle of selfish self-gratification. You will let them divide you, corrupt you, poison you, brainwash you and conquer you. You will become one of them. You will sell yourself to them. You will vent all of your misplaced hate and anger upon each other: instead of upon the ones who are actually responsible for your woes. Caesar's formula for success 2,000 year ago was simple. 'Divide and Conquer' And still you are too stupid to learn that this is exactly how you are being ruled and oppressed, and have been so for thousands of years.

If you care more about money than humans: then you are fucked before you start. Then you belong in the class of wanna-be owners. Wanna-be rich. Wanna-be famous. Wanna-be powerful. Wanna-be upwardly mobile. Wanna-be Robber Barons.

But if you are smart: and organize yourselves like this... so you know beforehand, what your demands will be. If you demand more than 50% of the voting power. More than 50% of the wealth. More than

1064

The Path of Splitness

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

1065

50% of the status, and more than 50% of the knowledge: which your company, or government, or store, or utility, or TV station, or newspaper, or army or farm has...

Then you will find yourselves in the drivers seat in one single nonviolent change of power.

Then the masses can be the ones, who decide which polluting factory to shut down because they are too close to your schools. Then you can decide which stores to shut down because you do not like the shit they sell. Then you can decide a lot of things. Then you can have some actual control and power over your own life, your own community and your own society. Then you can have the power to decide how you want to live, and how you want to work, and what you want to work at.

Is that something worth fighting for; by simply being intelligent enough to organize a Nationwide Strike? By simply not showing up for work as usual... eh?

What the hell can they do about it? Infiltrate your secret meetings with spies and arrest you?
'You're under arrest! Dirty damn workers... Planning not to work?! That's a crime! That's treason! That's... um, er... Well... It's not nice! Workers are supposed to work! You're all a bunch of dirty Communists! ... You're subversives! You're trying to , to... um, er...'

The point is... who will be the ones who think this is a horrible, evil idea? The ones who aren't working. The ones who don't have to work. The ones who pay you shit wages to have their work done for them... by you. Any majority can oust a minority. That is... Provided you organize yourselves first: and do not let your enemies know what you are planning. You the majority: are more powerful than all the corporations of the world. You don't need a strike to gain power. You don't need to stop working. You don't need to stay home.

You can easily take over the world: Just by not paying your bills.

If everyone in the world did not pay their bills: the entire system of corrupt Capitalism would grind to a halt, and disappear in less than a year.

Organize an International Bill-Day. Just like any other protest that boycotts things people are against and do not agree with. Once a year.... Everybody refuses to pay their bills that day. No paid bills are sent through the mail that day. Then if it becomes popular. The next year: make it two days. Then the next year make it three days, then a week, then a month.

Create an International Organization. Get all the people in the world who have financial debts to join. Call it Debtors Anonymous. Organize a National debt day. Where nobody pays their financial debts that day. Hold token burnings of unfair debts and bills. March on your government and force them to legally dissolve all financial debts, so nobody is forced to work like a slave their whole life paying off unfair, exorbitant interest rates, or unfair padded, unnecessary medical bill and fake expenses.

Organize a National Medical Bill day: where people witness how the medical industry foreclosed on their homes; and forced them out on the street. Organize a grass roots movement called: the Slavery of Debt. Have grass roots organizers educate people and show them how they are being cheated by the Oil Companies. How they are being robbed and lied-to by every major corporation on Earth.

Create a political movement to End All Debt. Force legislation through that makes all debt ILLEGAL.

1065

Abolish the electronic system of debt. Make it legal for people to pay only what they can afford for anything.

Create a sliding system of price controls. So a billionaire has to pay 200,000 million dollars for a car. And a poor person only has to pay 100 dollars for the same car.

Make all things more equally affordable for everyone regardless of how little money they have. Stop buying into the insane culture of one-sided accumulation. Stop working your entire life just so you can afford a mortgage on a home. Build decent homes now. So you can have a home when you are young and have energy, and want to have a family. Not when you are too old to marry and have a family. Not when you are too old to enjoy your home.

What do retired people do? They sit in homes that took them 60 years to pay off the mortgage and do mostly nothing in them... except sit in these things and wait to die. Is that a reason to waste your entire life on? All debt is a form of slavery. Fight your debtors. Refuse to pay them. Tell them to go to hell. If everyone did this: the whole world would be five million times better off.

But people do not fight against slavery. They let themselves be enslaved. Slavery would never have been created; it would never have existed if the first people who were enslaved had refused to work for their masters.

What are the masters going to do? Kill the slaves they own? Destroy their own property? Who will do the work of getting rid of all the dead bodies? Who will do the work of these dead slaves? If the first masters went out and enslaved more people and they also refused to work for them: how many times would have they done this; before they gave it up as a stupid, wasteful, pointless, insane idea that can't work?

If all the slaves of the American colonies had refused to work for their masters: America would never have become a slave Nation, whose economy and wealth was based upon human slavery, and then later machine slavery. If all the slaves of Rome had refused to work for their masters: the Roman Empire would never have been born. If all the slaves of the Greek polis's had refused to work for their masters: the Greek Golden Age would never have happened. If all the slaves of the Persian Empire had refused to work for their masters: the Persian Empire would never have been created. If all the slaves of Egyptian civilization had refused to work for their masters: Egyptian civilization would never have been created. The Pyramids of Egypt would never have been built. If all the slave peasants of Europe had refused to work for their masters: Western Civilization would never have happened. If all the slaves of the British Empire had refused to work for their masters: the British Empire would never have been born. If the first slaves had refused to work for their masters: of civilization itself would never have happened. The entire 12,000 years of shit we are so proud of: would never have happened.

The point is: the only reason slavery was invented, the only reason it works. The only reason it has endured for over 12,000 years: is because of human cowardice. Slavery exists because humans would rather live as slaves than die as free people. Slavery exists because civilized humans value machine-functioning existence; more than they value Life, or their own freedom. They value tool-functioning existence over and above living: because functioning like a civilized tool is all they know what to do with themselves.

What surprise is this; when six million years of using tools; has already turned the entire species of humans into a species of machine-functioning cowards... Where the only form of courage in the Human Race; is tool-courage. Where the only form of human existence is the existence of being enslaved by your own tools. There are understandable reasons for everything in human history.

Domestication is Slavery
Slavery is Domestication

To domesticate any living creature: you must break all of their spirit. You must make that creature meek... you must destroy its wildness. You must destroy its ability to live independently. You must make it dependant upon you. You must turn it into a dependant slave. You must not allow that creature any freedom. You must cage it, control it, manipulate it and brainwash it from birth. You must turn it into a domesticated slave

If you do not do these things it will not become domesticated.

Where did the slavery called domestication come from? Why do we enslave children, women, and domesticated animals... treating them like shit? Using them, and then abandoning them when they become too much trouble to look after? What do you expect? We have been using tools as slaves for millions of years. When we do not need a tool. If it breaks, if it gets worn: we throw it away. All Slavery. The civilized slavery called domestication. Child slavery, Female slavery, Human bondage. Sexual slavery. Racial slavery. Wage slavery. Agricultural slavery. Industrial slavery. Military slavery. Soldiers. Armies comes from millions of years of humans using tools as their slaves, and throwing them away when we cannot use as slaves anymore. Work is a form of slavery. Until humans understand what slavery is they will never understand what freedom is.

The Protestant Work Ethic destroyed Luther's Spiritual Reformation by creating the Culture of Materialism. Instead of creating Love between Living people, the Protestant Work Ethic created the Religious Love of Material Objects. Instead of valuing and worshiping Life and Living, Protestants began worshipping dead objects; they worshipped the dying Christ: not the Living Jesus. They had been fooled, swindled, gulled into believing that work is not a form of slavery. They had been suckered into the swallowing the idea that regardless of what work you do: that work itself is a religious virtue, that the intrinsic value of toiling night and day for money is good. They were corrupted by their own Protestant Work Ethic, they were corrupted by their own greed, their own increasing affluence into practicing the exact opposite of what Jesus had taught. This why all Protestant society, homes and families are dead pits of empty, meaningless platitudes and unspoken guilt: they are a loveless, pointless exercise in the worship of material objects. I know because I was raised in one; I saw how Protestants families 'live'... they don't: they're all dead inside.

The question is, after polishing the table and waxing the floors and polishing the silver and crystal until it sparkles; what next? What else are you going to do with your life after toiling and working for hours until your home is immaculately clean? What good does that do you? Does it make you feel any better? For how long? Does this make you a better human being? Does it make you a better Christian? What are you going to do in your immaculately clean middle-class home after you clean it? Watch TV? Read a book? Listen to music? Eat food? Stare outside your window and wonder what your neighbor is doing? They are doing the same thing you are: locking out the Outer World; blocking out the Outside World of Living Nature and hiding inside a dead, antiseptic insulated death zone of boredom and dullness where nothing lives, nothing grows and everything is dead.

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

When are you going to begin the work of cleansing yourself of all your weaknesses, faults, vices and addictions? When are you going to stop your obsession with keeping your home immaculately clean and start learning how to Live and how to Love and how to Play and have Fun with your children instead of working day and night to make money? Protestant families never address this. They are too enslaved to preserving their middle-class status of affluence and keeping their material objects immaculately clean. They are too emotionally and spiritually dead inside to ask questions and learn how to Live and have Fun and enjoy Life. That is what work does to you: it turns you into a dead machine. Their only answer to what to do with the rest of their Lives is keeping busy; distraction; drink coffee! Anything but ask questions.

Once you accept the religious, social; and cultural norms you live in unquestioningly, you stop growing as an individual; you stop learning. Accepting any mass norm is an avoidance of individuality, it is an avoidance of being an individual, an avoidance of individual responsibility, an avoidance of individual morality, an avoidance of individual spirituality, an avoidance of all individual creativity, an avoidance of individual awareness, an avoidance of individual intelligence, an avoidance of looking at the society you live in critically, an avoidance of thinking for yourself, an avoidance of asking questions.

Protestant families do not question themselves or their culture because it gives them status; it defines them. Protestant families believe that as long as they live like other Protestant middle-class families and keep their material objects and their houses and homes immaculately clean like everybody else, as long as they act like everyone else and behave like everybody else and do what everyone else does; as long as they do what they are told, as long as they obey authority: then they do not need to question themselves about anything, that they are doing the right thing. This is the exact opposite of what Luther's Reformation originally started out as. Originally the Protestant Reformation was a protest against the status quo; it challenged authority, it questioned authority, it came up with new ideas and new ways of living and thinking and being. The Protestant Work Ethic destroyed all of that.

The Sale of Indulgences

The de-evolution of spiritual rot and hypocrisy which the Roman Catholic Church descended to; from the time of its creation in Rome as an officially recognized religion amongst hundreds of other officially recognized religions... to the time of Luther: a period of over 1,300 years; spanned the ideas of Christ returning to punish all sinner, to end the temporal world of lust and corruption, the idea of poverty being the greatest virtue, and sinners doing genuine penance for their sins... to the abolishment of the idea of penance, to replacing all forms of punishment and penance with prayer, to the idea of the forgiveness of all sins, to the church granting absolution of especially horrific sins by granting special indulgences... using the idea of Christ's suffering on the cross as a centralized 'bank' of spiritual 'merit'. The Catholic church had become so wealthy, powerful and rich: that its entire dogma and culture had become an exact copy of the rotten Hebrew moneylenders in the Temple of Jerusalem whom Jesus had thrown out of the house of God. Exchanging religious indulgences and favors for money and land became the engine which made it so filthy rich and so powerful; the Roman Catholic church became even more oppressive than the Roman Empire it had replaced.

The huge gaps between what the bible said, and what it actually practiced, and what the church actually preached; had to be hidden by only allowing Catholic clergy to study the scriptures which were printed in Latin, and then 'interpret' their meanings to the secular world. But too many people outside of the church learned to read Latin: too many translations became available. The hypocrisy of the church became a standing joke. All the centuries of religious wars and the pogroms and inquisitions and mass genocides of Christian sects who had a less corrupt interpretation of Christianity could not hide the blatant corruptions and hypocrisies of the Catholic church from European society. So Luther tried to reform the church. And was excommunicated for his audacity, and was forced to create his own Christian church; a Christian religion which did not have any sale of indulgences for the extremely wealthy.

What Luther's Reformation did, was it revolutionized the idea of the Sale of Indulgences. Instead of needing the centralized authority of the Roman Catholic church to officially sanction the forgiveness of sins:... By inventing the idea of a personal conscience, all a Protestant had to do was forgive himself, and hey presto... all of his sins instantly disappeared! Luther has assumed that every good Christian like himself would be tortured by doubt and guilt, and a sense of foreboding evil surrounding him and the world he lived in, and strive to become a better Christian. When striving to be as spiritually pure as possible is your lifelong profession, and you are paid to do it, and given the highest social status and given spiritual authority over others and respected as a leader of your community: this invented idea just might be of use to the rare one-in-a-million exception that Luther was... a free thinker who questioned, a rebel who publicly opposed the status quo of the most powerful church in the world... But giving this conceptual invention to all the Protestants in Europe was the equivalent of Prometheus giving the ability to make fire to a species of naked apes who didn't realize how destructive fire is. The result was a conflagration of total spiritual destruction; leaving nothing but empty spiritual desolation behind. With no higher religious authority to set any public standard of morals and ethics, with no code of conduct, no compass to tell people what was a sin and what wasn't: the fact that sin actually exists: the fact that evil actually exists, was wiped out of the human psyche and out of civilized European society and culture. All religious-spiritual sins and crimes and corruption disappeared from human reality. In fact, this religious-cultural invention of a personal conscience had an opposite effect on people. It hampered and handcuffed the most honest consciences from doing anything except castigating themselves for their own personal failings, vices, and sins, while at the same time: it gave the most cunning liars and self-deceivers: the most rotten evil human scum a leg-up in their upwardly mobile scramble for riches and status and fame and power, because it was they who had no conscience to speak of... They were the ones who could deceive themselves better than any honest conscientious, person who truly believed in the Christian-protestant ethics of hard work and poverty and submitting to the will of God and helping others. They were the ones who could easily commit crimes and atrocities by rationalizing all of it secretly... in their twisted sick minds... convincing themselves that they had a mission from god himself and that whatever they did to make themselves powerful and rich was a sign from God himself that they were on the right track!

Just as Carnegie and Rockefeller justified their amoral illegal tactics to make themselves millions at the expense of others; all the European and English explorers and traders and opportunists who came to the New World, were free to operate without any ethical and moral standards whatsoever. The result was: the discovery of the New World drew the filthiest scum like a magnet to the Americas. The rest is history: the cunning tactics of European Protestant human scum outfoxed, outmaneuvered, out-corrupted the natives at every turn. Every attempt to create a new utopian society of religious fanatics that was less corrupt than the European corruption they had all fled from was watered down and drowned out by the masses of corrupt Europeans who had been raised and shaped by Luther's Reformation to have no personal religious conscience, no religious morals, no religious ethics at all.

As a result, it was the ethics and morals of the majority, the ethics and morals of the masses, the ethics and morals of the lowest, the ethics and morals of the worst, the ethics and morals of the crudest, the ethics and morals of the dirtiest, the ethics and morals of the most evil, the ethics and morals of the most corrupt, the ethics and morals of the most sinful, the ethics and morals of the greediest, the ethics and morals of the most venal, the ethics and morals of the most envious, the ethics and morals of the most cunning, the ethics and morals of the most self-deceiving, the ethics and morals of the most ignorant, the ethics and morals of the most brutal, the ethics and morals of the most cowardly, the ethics and morals of the richest, the ethics and morals of the most powerful, the ethics and morals of the most secular, the ethics and morals of the most non-religious that became the new Protestant culture of the West.

The result was: the only things which were forbidden by civilized society were what was secularly, officially 'illegal... and since Europeans had been circumventing the wishes of their masters and kings in every sneaky underhanded fashion they could dream up, and since the New World was an ocean away from instant retribution, and since the European white man did not even recognize American natives to be even human in the first place: it was open season for all the cultures of evil to flourish and grow like wildfire; even faster and worse than they were growing in Luther's 'reformed' Protestant Europe. And since what is officially 'illegal' by law in any secular society changes with the whims of rulers and the whims of the masses every year... why then: the idea sin is just an outdated, obsolete superstition! The existence of evil is just an outdated, obsolete superstition! Sin and evil does not exist in civilized society. Sure, it existed for thousands of years... sure there's world wars and mass murder and million starve to death, and rich people rob the poor, and women and children are raped and butchered and miners are worked to death, and people work for starvation wages in factories, and live in ghettos, and millions are poor and miserable and dying and disease is rampant and plagues are caused by pollution created by industrialized cities poisoning the world... but that's not a sin. That's not evil... that's just human nature. It's normal for people to act like this.

This is what the idea, the invention, the culture of Luther's Reformation did to Western European civilization when he tried to abolish the Catholic sale of indulgences: and instead: gave every western Protestant the idea of indulging their own conscience.. which gave rise to the idea of all western people indulging themselves in literally every sin, every addicting substance, every form of ease, every luxury known to mankind... which in turn created whole new industries of corruption: from the nickelodeon to walking picture shows, to cars, to free TV shows, to free highways, to free pornography on the internet, to mutual funds, to old age pensions, to Bernie Madoff's 50 billion stolen dollars... Stealing 50 billion dollars isn't much of a crime when everyone in western society envied him his riches. The only crime Bernie Madoff committed was the crime of being caught and losing his case in court. If he had been found not officially guilty like O.J Simpson was found not guilty: then all of western society would have shrugged its shoulders and allowed one more criminal to get away scot-free. But of course... that is not a sin: that's not evil. Murdering your own wife with a knife is legal as long as you can get away with it. Why? Because western civilization became 100% amoral thanks to Luther's Reformation.

The Protestant Psychological Reformation of Slavery from Unwilling to Willing Work Slaves

The Protestant psychological Reformation came from Luther's idea of spiritual-religious equality. The idea that every Christian was equally a sinner in the eyes of the Lord. His idea of spiritual equality filtered down into an idea of social equality. The Protestant psychological Reformation came from the oppression of the lowest poor Protestants of Holland: the Dutch, throwing out the highest Catholic King of Spain from their country, and his Catholic church. It came from the idea of an entire people rising up: not only in religious power and authority... but in secular power, and worldly wealth and worldly status: together as a nation of Protestants, each individual with a personal spiritual conscience, and a personal relationship with God. It came from the Dutch taking back land from the sea: growing as the poorest nation with nowhere to expand but outwards fighting against the elements of Nature. It came from the

Chapter Six B: The Effect of Civilization on Humans

Dutch traders sailing the world for spices and silk and fine china. It came from the Dutch nation becoming more upwardly and laterally mobile than any other nation of ethnic people in the history of all mankind... Because each Dutchman and Dutch girl was proud of being Dutch, and proud of being Protestant, and proud of being a nation of equals with none over them except burghers who were chosen merely to run the everyday affairs of each town and village.

The result was that their secular rise in wealth and power and authority and social status ruined their rise in spiritual authority and power and might and health in less than 20 years. They became too rich, too greedy, too fat, too cunning, too ambitious, too selfish, too inhuman, too calculating; accumulating too many physical objects to bother thinking about their personal god and their immortal souls and all the worldly sins they were committing to enrich themselves at another's expense. They became the envy of all Europe, and every excess, every sin, every new drug, every new spice was bought and consumed and slavishly copied by the richest Europeans and English aristocrats. Their colonial empire disappeared, their trade monopolies were taken over, their naval might was shattered. They were left without no morals, no ethics, no humanity, no honesty, no spiritual life, no code of ethical behavior, only the token gatherings of token Protestant meetings on the weekend to officially mark themselves as card-carrying Protestants. The one thing they didn't lose was their addiction and slavery to their own vices and appetites and greed and ambitions. Instead of being unwilling slaves to a Spanish King: they had become willing slaves to their own ethic of hard work: which had been the original engine that had given them this new unheard-of rise in affluence as a nation of Protestants. The same thing occurred in other Protestant cultures also all over Europe. Cultural equality born of the idea of spiritual equality, made people aspire to the highest religious and secular equality there was. Yet at the same time, the divide between spiritual and secular authority was muddied and disappeared. The power of the Pope and the Cardinals of Rome waned while the power of Secular Kings, Lords and barons and Emperors rose. Rather than aspiring to spiritual purity and obedience: Europeans aspired to mimic the richest most successful aristocrats. What Christianity had preached for centuries: that worldly success was a spiritual sin, and it was better to be poor and good than rich and corrupt was given short shrift. Religious fanaticism, religious cults, religious cultures became a tiny minority in a sea of equals all grubbing to rise in the world as best they could and as fast as they could. Held only in check by mighty armies and the terror of armed might and the eroding worship of the Divinity of Kings. Without an iron fist, without the church's power and the religious brainwashing of Catholic dogma filling their souls, without the almighty church telling them what is good and what is evil, what is Christian and what is an abomination, without the superstitions and taboos and customs and traditions and holy days and saints days and teachings of the Catholic church which had been their peasant culture as obedient feudal slaves, without their illiterate cultures kept alive by close-knit villages preserving the ancient ways, without the Medieval barbarism that had regularly swept through Europe and kept each peasant huddled in their cottage or hovel hoping and praying to God that the murderers and rapists and robbers would not burn down his village this year... gave the lower classes a chance to live in peace as equals..

But, the idea of spiritual and cultural equality made them ambitious to rise up and rebel, it made them rise higher. As the population of the masses grew and grew; as plagues could not keep their growing numbers in check, as warring and rapine and murder could not keep their numbers in check, as the aristocrats withered into indolence with no enemies to fight, no religious power to press against and oppose; as colonies were established where the most ambitious and the outcasts of society could escape to, as maritime trade exploded and the lure of becoming a sailor on a ship promised adventure and riches and freedom. The cultural pressures of overpopulation, along with the disintegration of the old feudal order set every house, every peasant, every village, every town at odds with each other; creating fiercer competition. And the fiercest competition there is, is the competition between equals. Europe sank into another Dark Ages: with the devil take the hindmost as the only code of ethics. Instead of slaving for Kings and Barons. Instead of being dutiful Christian servant of the almighty church... they began working for themselves. For thousands of years they had not known any other kind of culture except that of abject slavery to overlords and to the church and to Christ. Suddenly the hammer of slavery was lifted. What were they to do? What could they do, except continue what they had been doing for all these many centuries. They enslaved themselves. Protestants became their own worst slave-drivers. They drove themselves more mercilessly; they pushed themselves and fought with each other more brutally and inhumanly, they slaved and worked and sweated under the sun and in the cold more fiercely than ever before. They became lazier more indolent than the apoplectic lords of England, they became more daring and adventurous than the bravest Portuguese explorers, they became greedier and more cunning than the most crafty Spanish Conquistadors. They turned all of their labors and their ambitions into a secret, unspoken personal religion of greed. Because Protestant religion became personalized: it became secret. It became a secret unspoken taboo. It became forbidden to ever speak of your personal religion because nobody actually had any fucking personal religion. All they had was a religious respect of money and a religious greed for wealth and status and power. That religion still exists today: the religion of personal ambition. Its holy scripture decrees that you must slave and work yourself to the bone all of your life, until you become a slave to your own labor... until you get so rich, that you don't need to work anymore. Then you retire and sit on your fucking ass, and after 1 or 2 years of that, you either die of boredom, or you become a fat, senile blob and then you die of complication of the liver. This is the unspoken Protestant Dream: the dream of worldly success, of a career, of social respect and status, gaining recognition and fortune and fame by hard work... And it is all a sham: it is a load of utter garbage. Even though anyone who is not completely brain-dead knows this is a crock of shit: everyone still pursues the Protestant Dream of Success through Hard Work and Perseverance. Why? Because it is not only 'the thing to do'... it is the only thing to do. It is the only thing left of Luther's Protestant Reformation that is still alive. Rather than be an unwilling slave to a King: work willingly for an employer and be paid a pittance for all your toil and trouble. Be a humble obedient Cratchet and scrape and bow to the Scrooge you work for... or become a Scrooge yourself and employ wage slaves and pay them almost nothing for their toil.

Why did this idea of willing slavery work? Why is it still working? The answer is simple. It worked because the majority did it, everyone did it. It only works because everyone does it. It works simply because humans have overpopulated themselves to such a degree, they are now all culturally brainwashed to become mindless herd animals; sheep; willing slaves to the system they are enslaved by. With no personal spiritual life left, with no personal ethics left, no personal morals left, no personal religion left, the void of Luther's sale of personal indulgences: giving a mass of lower class slaves a personal god and a personal conscience, left them only the worst of examples to copy and mimic. It left them with an overpopulated majority, copying an overpopulated majority. Everyone doing whatever everyone else was doing. It left them with secular examples of fleeting success, and no examples of spiritual success because spirituality is personal. You can't flaunt your spiritual purity in public like you can a new house or a new car or a raise in pay.

Sharing

The evidence and proof that human civilization needs to be gotten rid of, can be found in what civilized people share, and how they share it. Because the structure and dynamic human civilization is negative: the only things civilized humans share with each others are things which are negative. There is no positive sharing going on inside human civilization. Civilized humans never share positively: they only share negatively: they only share negative things; they never share positive things. They never share humanly: they share mechanically, they share abstractively: they never share directly, they never share honestly.

The reason civilized human only share negative things with each other is because all humans have a deep subconscious universal sense of guilt and fear and knowledge that they are living wrongly, and that they are doing bad things. Because every human being has a guilty conscience about this: they also have a deep subconscious fear of being punished for what they are doing.

How do you escape from being punished for doing what you know and feel is wrong and bad and evil?

Simple: make sure that nobody can point their finger at you; make sure everybody does what you are doing; make sure you corrupt everybody. Make sure there are no exceptions, no people whose lives are freer from evil and sin than yours is. Make sure nobody is allowed to be better than you. Make sure nobody is without sin. Make sure everybody is included. Make sure everyone conforms to the standard normalized crimes and sins of the culture-religion-tribe-village-city-nation you live in. Anyone who stand up and tells you that what you are doing is wrong? Any exception, any one single person who tells you that you should not be unfaithful to your wife? That you should not pollute? That you should not drink alcohol? That you should not do drugs? The answer? Legalize drugs. Become a majority of addicted drug users. Outnumber those who don't use drugs. Laugh at the rare exceptions who tell you drugs are not good for you. Ignore them. They don't count. These rare exceptions to the rule don't matter. Why? Because there are more sinners, more husbands who have been unfaithful to their wives, more people who drink alcohol, more people who use drugs... than the few people who don't do these evil things.

How do civilized humans make sure that nobody, no civilized human has the right to point the finger at them? How do civilized humans make sure that no living human has the moral authority, the ethical authority, the spiritual authority, the emotional authority, the spiritual authority, the physical authority, the human authority to point the finger at them and tell them that what they are doing is wrong and bad and evil and they will be punished for all their sins?

Simple; outnumber the few rare exceptions who are not sinners and laugh at them as a meaningless minority. What is one exception who has not sinned going to do against ten million sinners who have sinned? The majority is always right. The minority is always wrong, correct? No. One person cast out the moneychanger from the temple of Jerusalem. He taught that the love of money is evil. How did the forces of evil counter his truth? Simple: brainwash every baby, and force it to do everything that is evil. Do not share anything that is good and positive with your babies and children: only share what is evil, so you can corrupt them. Babies and children have natural, pure, innocent good urges. They want to share things with each other naturally. Stop them from sharing anything with each other. Isolate them. Put them into prisons, into cage, into beds that have bars, into barred cages called cribs. Don't let them share anything good and positive. Don't let them share each other. Don't let them explore Life and find out the dirty truth about how evil their parents actually are. Don't let them play with each other naturally outdoors. Give them plastic toys: give them dead things to play with. Teach them to treat people like plastic toys. Make them selfish by giving them anything they want without earning it. Spoil them rotten. Don't teach them to stand on their own two feet. Make them as dependant upon you as possible. Feed them the worst poisons you possible can so they become addicted to sugar and salt and soft drinks until their mouths rot before they lose their baby teeth and they become diabetic at an early age and permanently weak and permanently sickly. Force them to eat guck, processed food. Force them to share in the sin and crime of eating dead animals, dead things that were killed in mass factories of death. Don't let them know the horrible truth. Hide the slaughterhouses from them. Don't let them see how the toys and crap you bought for them were made and how all the plastic factories that make these toys are poisoning the entire earth with their toxic effluent waste products and poisoning the ground waters of the earth.

Simple: the negative one-sided dynamic of civilization works as long as that one-sided dynamic is not balanced. The pyramidal structure of civilized artificial accumulation works as long as it keeps on accumulating. It is only when this one-sided, unnatural, imbalanced, artificial accumulation STOPS accumulating...That is when you have to worry: that is when all your sins and crimes will come back to haunt you and kill you and crush you: that is when every artificial thing you have piled up and worked to build will come falling down on your ignorant skull. The civilized answer to sinning is... accumulate more and more sinners.... don't stop accumulating, make sure human civilization keeps on accumulating more shit, more pollution, more poison, more crimes against Nature, more crimes against the Universe, more crimes against Humanity, more crimes against the Earth, more crimes against Life on Earth, more crimes against other living species on earth; never stop the dynamic of one-sided accumulation because if you do then the whole shitpile will fall down and bury you and kill you and destroy all of the artificial indulgences you have become accustomed to... Accumulate more toxic chemicals. Manufacture more poisons chemical that are killing all living species all over the earth. Accumulate more billions of human people...

Oops... This is not an answer. This is just an easy, way of temporarily avoiding the consequences of all this one-sided accumulation. This is only a way of avoiding the actual problems you face NOW: in the present, today. This is only a way of accumulating all the problems that human civilization creates and piling them up... and handing all these accumulated problems to the next generation of civilized humans... who then go about avoiding solving all of the problems they create and accumulate over their life-spans, and handing the greater pile of accumulated unsolved problems over to the next generation of civilized humans... Sooner or later... the consequences of all this civilized artificial separation-segmentation-accumulation-pyramidalization-destruction of Nature- etc. is going to hit the fan. And every civilized person is hoping it will be later rather than sooner... hoping they will be dead and gone from the artificial shitpile called civilization so they won't have to be forced to personally suffer for the consequences of their sins: so they will not be personally punished for their crimes: so they will have gotten away with their evil deeds and left someone else holding the bag; left their sons and daughters, their great-great grandsons and grand-daughters to suffer and die and perish for their sins....

This basic negative dynamic of human civilization is the basic reason why civilized humans never share anything positively, never share positive things with each other. This is the basic reason why civilized people only share negative things with each other. Civilized people share lies with each other: they share religious bullshit and religious dogma with each other; they share hypocrisies and bigotry with each other; they share politically correct bullshit with each other; they share politeness... the policy of always lying to each other politely rather than share any inconvenient, uncomfortable, ugly, stark, raw, brutal painful truth which points the finger of truth directly at them and forces them to become uncomfortable aware of how guilty they are of committing sins and crimes against their own Natures and against all Nature and against everything good on earth.

What do civilized people share? They share gluttony with each other. They share indulgences with each other. They share addictions with each other, they share laziness with each other, they share snobbery with each other, they share exclusionary practices with each other, they share hate with each other, they share fear and terror with each other, they share envy with each other, they share selfishness with each other, they share meanness with each other, they share greed with each other, they share mistrust of each other, they share avarice with each other, they share the lowest lusts of the body with each other, they share pornography with each other, they share filth with each other, they share moral ethical rotten behavior with each other, they share fear with each other, they share dead boxes with each other, they share eating dead animals stuffing their bellies until the intestines inside their bellies become huge fat extended bubbles of rotting stinking accumulations of fecal matter that gives them terminal cancer: terminal colon cancer, intestinal cancer: all kinds of cancers that come from indulging themselves and sharing their indulgences as spoiled consumers.

Do civilized people share love with each other? NO. Do civilized people share kindness and sensitivity with each other? NO. Do civilized people share trust and respect for one another? NO. Do civilized people share happiness with each other? NO. Do civilized people share their lives with each other? NO. Do civilized people share anything that is positive and good with each other at all? The answer is a universal resounding NO. Civilized people give lip-service to these positive good ideas. They do not practice them: they do not share them with each other. What do civilized humans share with each other? They share as little as possible. Their idea of sharing is based upon the idea of exclusion: not inclusion. This in effect reverses the entire dynamic, result and definition and meaning of sharing into being something that is totally opposed to sharing. When you share as little as possible, when you share exclusively: you are actually not sharing: you are excluding more people than you are including. That is the opposite of sharing.

Anything inside human civilization that is positive and good: anything that grows, anything that is healthy: is instantly poisoned and drowned out and outnumbered by the accumulation of negative energy which human civilization has accumulated over thousands of years. For example: every young Indian girl or boy that leave India and falls in love with an American boy or girl and wants to marry them: is instantly attacked by their whole family and forbidden to marry that person because they are not Indian and do not share all the stupid, obsolete, negative superstitious crap called Indian culture, and cannot be brainwashed into believing all their dumb fucking superstitious ancient shit because it is too late to try to brainwash them because they are full grown and they are not the programmable idiots that all human babies are when they are first born into the shitpile of artificial civilization. The evil ancient custom of arranged marriages: has been one way of how human civilization destroys love and forbids young people to fall in love with each other, and tries to turn the positive good of love into a forbidden taboo.

The fact is: ALL human cultures: ALL civilized human cultures are made up of negative bullshit. There are no exceptions to this fact. There is NO exception to this truth. There is no such fucking thing as the idea that any one civilized culture is better than another. They are all bad, they are all wrong. They are all obsolete. They are all negative, one-sided accumulations of the Past. A healthy balanced culture is a culture that is dynamically balanced between the Past and the Future. In order for the Present of any human culture to be dynamically balanced. It has to be balanced between the Past and the Future. The only way the Present of any culture can dynamically balance itself between the Past and the Future is to change continually: not accumulate old shit and try to preserve old accumulated shit as long as possible. What is an obedient worker? An obedient worker is a willing slave who obeys its masters, as opposed to an unwilling slave who is forced to work for its masters. What is the different between a willing and unwilling slave? Brainwashing. If you study history of civilization, you can see how for the great majority of humans; the conditions of their oppression and slavery slowly changed from unwilling to willing through brainwashing, through incentives, through greed, through pandering to their lowest most base corrupt evil urges. That is basically what the history of the Protestant Work Ethic is all about. An obedient worker is just a brainwashed slave who doesn't realized it has been brainwashed into being used, cheated, robbed, swindled, etc.... Or, a corrupt sucker who knows they are being used as a slave, but doesn't have the guts to do anything about it. Besides, civilization is so corrupt that everybody does it, so who cares? Do what everyone else is doing, be a conformist sheep. If everyone uses people; it's normal. Being a slave is normal. Being an obedient worker is normal.

Sharing and Money

There is a difference between helping people and making a profit. You cannot help anyone making a profit. All you can do is get some shit paper and use it to buy some shit product or service. Helping people makes you feel good, both inside yourself and outside yourself. Helping people makes you feel good about being useful. Getting a piece of shit paper only helps you from not being poor and not feeling poor. Helping people does that also, but not as a fear of material physical poverty; it makes you not poor, it makes you not feel poor because being generous of yourself means you are rich enough, and secure enough within yourself to not need a piece of shit paper to not feel poor. The entire motive for making money is negative. Helping people not only makes you not feel poor; it makes you feel good, and it also makes the person you are helping feel good also. Cheating someone else out of some money... do you call that good? Making a profit off someone, do you call that being good? Being cheated out of money which you worked and slaved to get... do call that good? What is good about paper money? All it does is create is greed, all it creates is bad: not good.

One basic evil of all money is that it has destroyed the human emotion of gratitude, it has wiped the human emotion of gratitude, of gratefulness, of appreciating what is given to you from the face of the Earth.

Without money, you can tell a good person from an evil person very easily: good people are grateful for any help given to them. Evil people are not grateful. Evil people do not even know what gratitude is. For them: gratitude is an alien thing which they are convinced doesn't exist. If you ever want to know whether person is good or evil: do them a favor: give them something they like or need. And do not expect anything back in return for it, and do not be in a position where they can take advantage of you in any way, shape or form. If that person shows no gratitude: if that person on the contrary comes to hate you and does you a bad turn, or says something rotten to you in response or later on... then that person is evil.

If on the other hand, if the person you help is instantly grateful to you and wants to do something in return, wants to give or do something in appreciation for what you have given them... and thanks you, and shakes your hand, and becomes a close friend of yours, then you will know that person is a good person. Why is this? Because all good people understand the importance of reciprocity and equality. Good people understand that taking is not the point to Life: that giving is more important than receiving, and that if they do not give back what they have received and more than what they have received... then they are not being good they are being evil and selfish.

Evil selfish people feel no guilt or remorse from using other people and from taking and being given to and accepting every favor and advantage they can get their greedy selfish claws into. Why? Because evil people are empty inside: they have nothing to give. They do not have themselves: they are empty fake shells pretending to be human beings. All they have is an inner vacuum, an inner void which they desperately need to constantly fill and fill, and no matter how much they fill themselves with what they can swindle out of others, they remain empty envious dirty little secret haters.

Why is helping people better than making money, or a profit, and better than getting some shit paper for yourself? Because when people help people without money: both sides feel good. One side feels grateful for the help, and the other side feels appreciated and valued for the help they give... as a human being: not as a machine, not as a wage slave, not as an employee, etc.

This creates a community of generous friendly souls who help each other without wanting to make a fucking dirty profit off you. This creates a larger environment and a larger economy of trust and respect between people who do not use money to live by. Then there is no haggling, then there is no way people can cheat each other and make a fucking profit from each other and take advantage of each other. Then human society will not be based upon the insane sick custom of mutual robbery and profit. Then people will not be looking for the cheapest deals. Then things will not be made as cheaply and as shoddily as possible to make a fucking profit. Then you will no longer have to worry whether you are being undercharged or overcharged for what you are given
