

The Authors

DAKOTA PAWLICKI is president of UNITE (Urban Needs In Teacher Education). The lead author and presenter for UNITE's grant-writing teacher professional development series, Dakota is coauthor of a multimillion-dollar federal Teacher Quality Partnership grant received in 2009. After teaching in Chicago Public Schools, Dakota joined the Chicago Teacher Education Pipeline at Illinois State University, where he currently serves as operations manager, developing and coordinating teacher-preparation programs.

CHASE JAMES, executive director of UNITE, has experience writing and editing grant proposals ranging from small classroom projects to multimillion-dollar programs for schools and nonprofit organizations. In addition to his role at UNITE, Chase is an educator in the Chicago Public Schools, teaching social studies at Collins Academy High School in the city's North Lawndale neighborhood.
